Marcos offered $5 billion for return home

By ROBERT H. REID
Associated Press Writer

MANILA, Philippines (AP)— President Corazon Aquino's executive secretary confirmed today that Ferdinand Marcos offered to pay $5 billion to return home, but said her staff recommended that the offer be rejected.

Executive Secretary Catalino Macaraig told reporters he believed the offer was a ploy by the deposed president to avoid criminal indictment in the United States.

"We saw it for what it was," Macaraig said. "It was just a ploy to get his U.S. indictment against him suspended ... I recommended the rejection of the five billion dollar offer."

Macaraig did not say whether Mrs. Aquino accepted the advice. On Wednesday, she told reporters Marcos should send the money first "and then we'll talk."

Mrs. Aquino has refused to allow Marcos and his family to return from Hawaii, where they fled after a February 1986 popular uprising toppled his 20-year administration.

Her government alleges that he stole about $10 billion from the Philippines' treasury.

In New York, The Village Voice reported this month that U.S. attorney Rudolph Giuliani had recommended that Marcos and his wife Imelda be indicted on fraud and conspiracy charges in connection with acquisition of real estate in New York.

Presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater confirmed later that the White House had asked to be consulted before the Justice Department sought any indictment against Marcos.

In a statement Tuesday from Hawaii, Marcos said "negotiations" about his return were taking place, but denied he had offered to pay the money in exchange for permission to return to the Philippines with immunity from prosecution.

But Macaraig said the offer by the ousted president was relayed earlier this month by Emmanuel Pelaez, Philippine ambassador to Washington.

Macaraig said Pelaez told him he had been approached by two Americans about the Marcos offer and relayed it to Manila. Macaraig identified one of them as James McGregor, a political science professor at the University of California at Los Angeles.

Macaraig said he could not remember the other American's name.

On Wednesday, Boston University professor Allen Weinstein said the $5 billion offer was in a proposal brought to him by a Marcos representative and was part of the "substance" of a letter to him from Marcos.

"I was approached last month in Washington by a representative of former President Marcos with a list of proposed 'agreement points' for an arrangement which would allow his return to the Philippines," said Weinstein.

The points were "conditioned by an offer on his part to accept the legitimacy of the Aquino government, stay out of politics, throw his support behind Aquino and provide her government with $5 billion," Weinstein added.

Weinstein identified the Marcos emissary as Jay Hoffman, a California advertising man.

"I sent President Aquino's letter to Manila, assured that it would reach her, along with the substance, including the $5 billion figure, of what was contained in the letter to me," Weinstein said.

Meeting between city, lot owners takes step toward solving problem

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
Staff Writer

A meeting between city commissioners and four representatives of the Horse Alley lot owners early Wednesday at the controversial site near the southwest edge of Pampa has led to first steps toward resolving the problems that have arisen there.

Pampa city commissioners, Mayor David McDaniel and four representatives of the lot owners met about 9 a.m. Wednesday at Horse Alley to go over the city's concerns about the area, as well as the citizens' concerns.

As a result of the meeting, it was agreed that two or three city staff members along with a representative of the lot owners would survey each lot individually to completely document fire, health or public water supply violations for each lot owner, said City Manager Bob Hart.

The water will be turned on again temporarily so that city officials can see what changes have been made and if there are any other changes necessary.

"The trick is to go over everything and figure out where the problems are," Hart said.

"Once this is completed I think the commission will have a better idea of what's going on," McDaniel said. "I believe everyone was receptive (to the arrangement)."

"I did insist that as the city goes through and documents the lots, someone from that area will be there with them," he said. "That's so everybody understands and knows what's going on, so things beyond the immediate problem won't be entering in this."

"I think it's a step in the right direction," said Lewis James, one of the lot owners, today. He said he and other lot owners signed a form giving city officials permission to enter their property and releasing the city from liability while the officials are on the property.

Identifying the lots and documenting violations began this morning, and is expected to take about a week, James said. A meeting between lot owners and city officials is scheduled after the documentation is completed, he said.

Two months ago, city officials turned off water service to the south end of the seven-block area — located east of Price Road and south of Alcock — because of a massive water leak.

A week ago, water was cut off to the remainder of the area because of violations of city and state water regulations that city officials feared would lead to contamination of the water supply.

While these moves protected the city from a liability standpoint, it brought hardship on the many lot owners who have animal pens, gardens and storage in the area, as well as people who lived there and several businesses located on the water lines.

These lot owners expressed their views on the problems to city commissioners at the meeting Tuesday. Mayor McDaniel said commissioners had discussed Horse Alley in a work session prior to the meeting and suggested that commissioners and lot owners meet at the site Wednesday morning.

Skydivers and barbecue mark opening of White Deer rodeo

By SONNY BOHANAN
Staff Writer

When skydivers descend upon White Deer at 7:45 tonight, rodeo contestants and spectators will take their cue to flock to the arena south of Highway 60.

Fifteen minutes later, the White Deer Amateur Rodeo begins its 29th run. Folks with an appetite and a Thursday rodeo ticket will already be there enjoying a free barbecue, which lasts from 5 to 8 p.m.

The three-day White Deer Rodeo will continue Friday and Saturday, with performances scheduled to begin at 8 p.m. each night.

Competitors will vie for top honors in eight events, including barebacks, saddle broncs, bull riding, team roping, girls' break-away roping, barrel racing, steer wrestling and calf roping.

Each event will feature 12 to 15 contestants per night, and first-place finishers will receive a belt buckle and prize money.

Admission for adults is $5, and children 12 and under pay $3.

An outdoor dance at the rodeo grounds, with musical guests Singletree from Elk City, will follow the rodeo performance all three nights. Amarillo skydivers will parachute into the rodeo arena on Thursday and Saturday at 7:45 p.m.

"They will try to land in the middle of the arena," said Joe Freeman, who is helping to organize the rodeo, "but sometimes the wind takes them a little off-course, like last year."

Area teams will also compete in the popular Double Muggin' event, in which one cowboy on horseback ropes a steer while two others wrestle the steer to the ground and tie it.

On Saturday, a rodeo parade featuring floats sponsored by area riding clubs, the White Deer High School Band, local businesses, organizations and clubs will begin at 4 p.m. The parade also includes antique cars, and, according to Parade Marshal Virgil James, "since this is a politickin' year, there may be some politicians there, too."

The parade will form at White Deer High School and proceed through downtown, led by the riding club queens and Lion's Club sweethearts. No entry sign-up is necessary, and anyone who would like to participate in the parade need only show up at the high school before 4 p.m.

A pioneer wagon train, which leaves Pampa from Price Road between 8 and 9 a.m., will join the parade at White Deer. The wagon train will be met along the way by people in wagons and on horseback. They will stop for lunch in Kingsmill and arrive in White Deer about 3 p.m.

"It's just an old-fashioned, Western parade," said James, "and for the last few years, it's been a big one."

Wheeler-Evans West #2 will serve as rodeo headquarters. Richard Nevells of the Rockin' and Rollin' Rodeo Company, out of Dodge City, Kan., is the stock producer. For more information, call 883-5651.

Not to worry, though; mom came to the rescue. Emily is the daughter of Charles and Claire Blaylock of Pampa.

Pampa United Way president tells 'new philosophy' to agency heads

When its fund campaign drive begins this fall, the Pampa United Way will be operating under some new policies and guidelines.
Rick Smith, president of the Pampa United Way, explained the organization's new philosophy to representatives of the 15 member agencies at a meeting July 18 in the Citizen's Bank Board Room.

In the past, the United Way had set a goal of funds to raise and then forwarded the money to the agencies in increments.

"We don't think we are telling (the public) the whole story if we do it that way," Smith said. "We need to let the community know what the needs are."

United Way workers have determined that the combined needs of the member agencies, which include two new agencies this year, is $336,455.

"This is quite an increase over last year's goal of $296,000," Smith said. "Let me remind you once again that this is a needs campaign — this is what our agencies need — not a goal campaign — what we feel we can collect."

Smith said these changes are not applicable only to the Pampa United Way. "We are taking Pampa's needs into consideration here," he said, "but we are also comparing our operations to that of other Texas United Way agencies and learning what works best."

Agency representatives were encouraged to work with the United Way. "We need your help more than ever this year for the 1989 campaign," Smith said.

Jimmie Clark, campaign chairman, explained the upcoming United Way fundraising drive events, beginning with a Kick-off Breakfast at 6:45 a.m. Sept. 15 in the Pampa Community Building's M.K. Brown Room.

This breakfast is in conjunction with the Pampa Area Chamber of Commerce monthly meeting and will be free to all United Way workers and chamber members.

Carl Clark, the chairman's brother, will be guest speaker and The Harvester Four, local gospel singing group, will provide the entertainment.

Smith also told the agency representatives that policies and procedures were adopted by the budget allocations committee in March.

On May 21, a United Way Board retreat was held with Rowland Todd of the Texas United Way presenting an orientation program. Todd discussed the reserves of the United Way available if anything happened to the community funding, what the board's roll is, the allocations committee's purpose, goal setting and agency fund raising.

"Much of our policy development this year is a result of this meeting we had with Mr. Todd," Smith said.

Two new agencies have been added to those helped by the United Way — Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Pampa and the Gray County Child Protective Services, Smith announced.

Theft suspect's return delayed

By DEE DEE LARAMORE Staff Writer

Gray County Sheriff's officers left at 10 a.m. today for Jay, Okla., to bring back Stanley Roy Pendergrass, 36, wanted in connection with the theft of a murder victim's car.

Pendergrass is wanted here in connection with the alleged theft of a 1977 Oldsmobile belonging to Roy Leon Williams, found murdered in his home July 19.

He was arrested by Delaware County, Okla., Sheriff Bob Hughes in Jay about 9 a.m. Tuesday. He then was arraigned before a local judge there and signed a waiver of extradition.

Local authorities expected to fly to Jay, Okla., early Wednesday but thunderstorms in Oklahoma prevented them. Gray County Sheriff Jordan said late Wednesday that they would pick up the prisoner today no matter what the weather, driving the distance if necessary.

Hughes, county sheriff of the small northeast Oklahoma community, said that Gray County authorities had not arrived by press time.

He said that he was conducting a sheriff's sale of delinquent tax property in front of the Delaware County Courthouse Tuesday morning when he noticed a man at the back of the courthouse.

"He came through the back door and stood there, looking at me funny, just watching me," Hughes said. "Well, I started watching him. It kind of made me feel funny, you know, the way he was watching me."

After the sale, the man asked Hughes if he was the sheriff. He said, yes. The man said, "I want to talk to you."

"Well, I said, 'fine,' come on downstairs," Hughes said. After the two talked, Hughes said he placed the man, who turned out to be Pendergrass, in custody. Then Hughes called and confirmed Pendergrass' story with Gray County officials.

A warrant for Pendergrass on charges of unauthorized use of a motor vehicle was issued July 20, shortly after local sheriff's deputies found Roy Leon Williams' automobile to be missing.

At press time, the automobile had still not been recovered, but was believed by authorities to have been abandoned near Wichita, Kan.

Williams, a truck driver for Bourland & Leverich, was found by a fellow employee at about 9:30 a.m. July 19, seven days before Pendergrass' arrest. Company officials became concerned when Williams, a three-year employee, had not come to work for two days. Earlier attempts to find him at his home had been unsuccessful.

Williams' body was discovered in a hole in the floor of Williams' rented house, 2 1/2 miles south of Pampa on Bowers City Road. An autopsy showed the man had died of two gunshot wounds to the chest and head, fired from two weapons, a shotgun and a small caliber rifle.

About half of the guns known to be stored in the hole where the body was found were missing. None of the remaining weapons were believed to have been used in the murder.

Authorities have yet to name the person suspected of the murder, but say the suspect had been living with Williams and had been asked to leave several hours before the murder.

Cambodia talks unsettled

BOGOR, Indonesia (AP) — Delegates of the Khmer Rouge guerrillas are blocking agreements in talks aimed at ending Cambodia's 9-year-old civil war, the head of Cambodia's Vietnam-installed government was quoted today as saying.

The Jakarta Post also quoted Prime Minister Hun Sen as saying he would hold a third round of separate peace talks with resistance leader Prince Norodom Sihanouk in Paris in October.

Sihanouk's forces are allied with the communist Khmer Rouge and Son Sann's Khmer People's National Liberation Front in a nominal coalition fighting Vietnamese troops that invaded Cambodia in late 1978.

Today, Hun Sen, the guerrilla groups, Vietnam, Laos and the six-member Association of Southeast Asian Nations began a fourth day of informal peace talks.

Sihanouk, a former Cambodian monarch and head of state, resigned as resistance coalition president July 10, but reclaimed center stage in the peace effort Wednesday by holding talks in Jakarta with his guerrilla partners and Hun Sen.

Sihanouk presented yet another peace plan, but like that issued by Hun Sen on Monday, it contained no dramatic new elements.

Khmer Rouge dissension at the talks had been anticipated. Participants said they were nearing agreement that the withdrawal of Vietnamese troops must be linked to steps to ensure the Khmer Rouge does not return to power.

The fanatical group killed at least a million people in its attempt to impose agrarian communism after it took over in 1975. Vietnam invaded in 1978 to put a stop to bloody Khmer Rouge attacks on its western border.

Hun Sen's government has been trying to isolate the Khmer Rouge from the other two guerrilla groups.

city is that garden hoses strung across the lots could create a cross-connection. Cross-connections could cause back flow of contaminated water into the system.

Water from a tank owned by Bill Greer was tested by the state health department and showed no contamination.

Michael Baker, a representative of the Texas Department of Health in Canyon, explained that water tested from the lines could not be contaminated and then a few minutes later would show contamination. "Certain things have to occur for back siphonage," Baker explained.

"As we indicated in the letter, the city has the responsibility to correct situations like that," he said. "We basically say, yes, there's a problem and it needs to be corrected."

At the present, however, city officials are responsible for "insuring the health of the public," Baker said. "It's up to the city just how it's going to be corrected."

Baker said if Horse Alley had been a residential area, "we would have been even more stringent in getting something done. If it had been residential, it never would have gone on this long," he added.

"I sympathize with the inconvenience to the people and all," Baker said. "This has been going on for years and it's not going to be corrected overnight. There's no one to blame, really. It's just no one paid that much attention to it ... you know, out of sight, out of mind."

New computer line features audio recording and playback

FORT WORTH (AP) — A short concert of "New Age" music gave industry representatives a hint of Tandy Corp.'s erasable compact disc technology and helped introduce new computers with advanced sound capabilities.

The 1000 SL and 1000 TL home computers share features that allow users to generate and record speech and music and download with an electronic mail and information service, said John Patterson, senior vice president of Tandy.

Tandy, parent company of about 7,000 Radio Shack stores, in a meeting at its headquarters Wednesday also introduced new software, including an educational supplement to its popular DeskMate package, and a facsimile machine.

The DeskMate software package will be marketed to third parties outside the Radio Shack distribution network, helping distinguish Tandy from "simple clone" manufacturers, said Howard Elias, a Tandy executive.

Still in development is a machine that records onto compact discs.

The playback capability of THOR, a revolutionary new erasable compact disc announced in April, was demonstrated during a break in the meeting. Patterson said Tandy is trying to find more durable plastics for manufacturing the discs, which will be compatible with all standard CD players.

But officials touted the IBM-compatible computers out this fall as the cutting edge of electronic sound.

The 1000 SL shares with its higher-priced cousin, the 1000 TL, "a technological leap forward in user-friendliness," Patterson said.

The two new computers share high-resolution screens that can display 16 colors as well as music and sound generation capabilities.

Analysts say the 1000 SL and 1000 TL computers will have many business applications, including "voice mail," where users can store, send and reply to messages in their own voices.

The recording capability will most likely be achieved using audiotape players since a 20-second message can use up to half the capacity of a single computer diskette.

They will sell for $899 and $1,299, respectively, and share a new Tandy keyboard that is to become standard for all computers the company manufactures.

The 1000 TL performs three times faster than the 1000 SL, the IBM Model 25 and the IBM Model 30, Patterson said.

The 1000 TL, with 512k built-in memory, has a state-of-the-art 80286 Intel microchip, six times faster than the original IBM PC, said Ed Juge, director of Radio Shack market planning.

The 1000 SL, like the IBM Model 25s and Model 30s, uses the 8086 Intel microchip. The SL has 384k built-in memory.

Also built into the models are sound and video hookups and capability to interface with the DeskMate software program, which has been enhanced with a new telecommunications service called PC-Link.

The subscription service for $9.95 a month allows users to shop at home, talk with Tandy service representatives and connect with various informational services.

Both machines will call up menus onto their screens the moment they are turned on, thus eliminating extra steps that discourage many novice users, Patterson said.

Bernard Appel, president of Radio Shack, said the company's new facsimile machine, dubbed Tandyfax 1000, is a Japanese-manufactured machine aimed at the home office market that is estimated to include 24 million households and is expected to grow 10 percent a year. It will sell for $1,299, officials said.

The market for "fax" machines, which send and receive documents over telephone lines, has soared in recent years as prices of the machines have fallen. About 910,000 of the machines will be sold this year, almost twice the number sold in 1987, according to CAP International, a Norwell, Mass., research firm.

Elias, director of computer merchandising for Radio Shack, said the new DeskMate version has "18 different applications doing 18 tasks," with shared commands.

An education program aimed at schools, called SchoolMate, shares DeskMate's ability to create workstations that let separate terminals pool phone lists and copy information back and forth.

"We feel that DeskMate and the ease of use associated with it will broaden this market," said Howard Elias, Radio Shack's director of computer merchandising.

One example of use for the SchoolMate package is a spreadsheet for grades that can replace the common green ledger, Elias said.

Radio Shack's cellular telephone line is basically unchanged, although new models can now accept 832 channels as allowed by the Federal Communications Commission, Juge said.

Tandy President John Roach poses with new computer.

Eight injured in lightning strike at ballfield

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Two youngsters were hospitalized and several others suffered minor injuries when a bolt of lightning from a cloudless sky struck with enough force to melt the tennis shoes of a softball player, witnesses said.

One of the youngsters, Hugo Arauz, 13, was in critical condition at Brooke Army Medical Center today. Kevin Epps, 15, was hospitalized for observation and was in good condition, a hospital spokesman said.

The youngsters were playing softball when the lightning bolt struck Wednesday afternoon.

Paramedics had to revive Arauz, who apparently was hit directly by the bolt, according to Bexar County Sheriff's patrolman Jesse Ambriz, who was nearby in his patrol car at the time of the strike. Arauz' tennis shoes were melted by the lightning's intense heat and electric charge, he said. Epps complained of eye burns, Ambriz added.

"It was just one bolt, but it was so strong and so fierce that it hit those two boys and all the others got the aftershock," said Bexar County Sheriff's patrolman Rick Talamantez.

"The kids were just walking around in a daze, except for the two of them that were unconscious," he said.

"We all got hit," Thomas Brooks Jr., 10, said while being checked at the hospital. "It went all over."

"The bad thing about it was they said it was sunny. No rain, no clouds, no nothing," Thomas Brooks Sr. said. His two sons, Thomas Jr., 10 and Brandon, 8, were playing softball with the group, but were not injured.

"They said they were trying to get a kid out on second base when it (the lightning) hit," the elder Brooks said outside the hospital while bolts of electricity lit up the then-darkened skies.

"All of them hit the ground," Brooks said.

The youngsters ranged in age from 7 to 15.

Ambriz and Talamantez were alerted to the accident by the sister of one of the victims.

"She came and started yelling. She was crying. She pointed over to the middle of the field there and said, 'My brother's been hit by lightning,'" Ambriz said.

Richard de la Fuente, said he heard thunder and lightning and looked out his back window. "It was a lightning sound that I never heard before. It sounded like a high performance rifle," he said.

Scott Buchholz, 12, who lives nearby, said he was washing dishes in his home and looking out the window when he saw the lightning bolt.

Edward Harris, 11, Epps' younger brother said Epps was pitching and Arauz was playing second base when the lightning struck.

"I was behind the backstop and was going to come up to bat when I heard a boom. I put my hands over my head, crouched down and I heard it (the lightning) pass near my ear."

A thunderstorm struck about four miles northeast of the playing field and dumped about one inch of rain and wind gusts of 46 mph were recorded.

White Sands ready for shuttle

WHITE SANDS MISSILE RANGE, N.M. (AP) — Astronauts flying a specially modified jet make a steep 19-degree dive to the desert floor Mondays through Fridays, swooshing at 230 mph 20 feet above the packed gypsum runway.

And every time, they have to deal with a malfunctioning computer, a broken landing gear, a non-working radio or some other problem generated by a sophisticated computer aboard the Grumman Gulfstream II jet.

That's the life of an astronaut training to land a space shuttle.

"It would be terrible if you had a good mission and messed it up with a bad landing," said Alex Paczynski, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's project manager at White Sands Space Harbor.

So week after week, space shuttle commanders like Fred Hauck and shuttle pilots like Dick Covey practice their shuttle landing skills at White Sands.

Although the primary space orbiter landing site is Edwards Air Force Base in California, Hauck and Covey might end up touching down on one of the two dazzling white runways at the space harbor if it rains at Edwards. Hauck and Covey are scheduled to go up on the next shuttle flight in September or October.

If they land at White Sands, they will use a runway that has been leveled out a little better than the one Jack R. Lousma used when he flew space shuttle Columbia to a landing there on March 30, 1982.

Engineers used lasers to check whether they had smoothed out the minor undulations that were present six years ago, Paczynski said Wednesday as he led reporters on a tour of the 100-square-mile complex in the middle of White Sands Missile Range.

The landing strips are on a dry lake bed between the San Andreas Mountains and White Sands National Monument.

The next series of four shuttle missions is scheduled to begin in September or October. The timing excites Ben Mendoza, project engineer for shuttle support at White Sands Missile Range.

"I'm sure one of the four launches will land here," he said, explaining that the shots scheduled for late this year and early next year will coincide with the winter rainy season at Edwards.

July, August and September are the rainy months at White Sands, when half of the annual 12 inches of rain falls. The "dry" lake bed was decided wet Wednesday because three-quarters of an inch of rain had fallen the night before.

"Notice how the bus won't get bogged down when it comes to this wet spot," Paczynski told reporters riding in a tour bus as it approached a 50-yard-long mud puddle. "There's a very hard mantle here 2 inches under the topsoil. That's why you could land an orbiter here even if (the strip) were underwater. They wouldn't, but they could."

The gypsum lake bed is several thousand feet thick in some places. When the shuttle lands on the gypsum flats, it's as if it were landing on a mile-thick, 7-mile-long piece of Sheetrock. The prevailing southwesterly winds carry the gypsum crystals from the dry lake bed to the famous dunes shimmering in the distance.

Those winds and the sharp-edged gypsum crystals it blew created havoc the one time the shuttle landed at White Sands. One of the century's worst sandstorms at White Sands happened the day before the landing. The wind was still blowing hard when the orbiter touched down.

The de-service and mating area, where the astronauts disembark and where the orbiter is cleaned up and hoisted aboard a Boeing 747, was so dusty that officials feared for the vessel's safety. So now they've moved the area to the southwestern edge of the lake bed, adjacent to the rocky terrain leading up to the mountains. The new area has much less of a dust problem than the other had, Paczynski said.

Since the Challenger exploded Jan. 28, 1986, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration has rigorously tested the cross-crossing landing strips at White Sands. A couple of soft spots in a landing strip were packed and hardened, and lasers were used to test whether the strips were smooth and level.

Beggar billboards attract complaints

EL PASO (AP) — Four highway billboards that urge motorists not to give to street beggars have drawn some uncharitable comments from the city's chamber of commerce, which worries the advertisements may hurt El Paso's image.

"I'm concerned (they) may not do good service to the fact that this city is a truly giving city," said John Dugan, president of the El Paso Chamber of Commerce. "It doesn't portray us as the kind of city I know us to be."

An anonymous group paid for four billboards along Interstate 10 that read: "Please don't give to beggars — they cause traffic problems."

The signs are the latest development in a controversy about street beggars who cross the Rio Grande from Ciudad Juarez, Mexico, and panhandle on interstate access roads east of downtown.

City Councilman Robert Candelaria, who participated in several council discussions about the scores of beggars congregating at access road intersections, said people who give encourage panhandlers to return.

"We feel sorry for the people, but they endanger their lives by crossing near I-10," Candelaria said. "Give your charitable dollars to Project Hungry before you give to these beggars."

Instructor convicted of mistreating recruits

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A U.S. Air Force court-martial panel has convicted a training instructor on a charge of mistreating recruits and sentenced him to four months confinement.

The panel convicted Staff Sgt. David O'Neal, 27, Wednesday at Lackland Air Force Base.

The four officers deliberated two hours before announcing the sentence. It also reduced him in rank two pay grades and fined him $200 a month for six months.

He will begin serving the sentence Friday.

"It was fair," O'Neal, who faced a maximum of six months confinement, said. "I have no hard feelings about this."

Other training instructors who attended the proceedings had privately expressed support for O'Neal, a seven-year Air Force veteran with a clean record.

They declined to comment after the sentence was announced.

During the sentencing phase of the proceedings, O'Neal told the officers he was sorry and loved the Air Force. He also said instructors face a lot of pressure and often work from 4 a.m. to 10 p.m., rarely getting home to see their families.

Defense lawyer Capt. Lawrence Middleton argued that regulations governing how training instructors treat recruits are vague and need revising.

"One man's definition of maltreatment could be another man's good, hard training tactics," Middleton said in closing arguments.

The prosecutor, Maj. Mary Boone, said O'Neal knew the regulations and stepped over the line.

"Yes, we tear them down and build them up," Boone said, referring to the process of turning civilians into airmen, "but we don't physically abuse them. Clearly he stepped over that line."

About a dozen airmen testified they were either victims of O'Neal's abuse or witnessed him abusing trainees during incidents between March and May.

One charge accused O'Neal of giving a recruit a bloody nose after banging his nose against a mirror and poking him in the chest with a part of a wooden guidon.

Witnesses also testified that O'Neal cut two recruits by rubbing the brim of his campaign hat against the bridge of their noses while he screamed in their faces.

Witnesses also said O'Neal placed a pen 1 inch up a trainee's nose because recruits are not supposed to have pens or pencils in their pockets.

He also made a recruit eat a piece of paper because the trainee handed it to him folded up, they said.

Mattox opens study of charity hospitals

AUSTIN (AP) — A statewide task force will examine charitable health care provided by non-profit hospitals, a study needed to chart a course for handling a rising tide of patients, Attorney General Jim Mattox says.

"Our public hospitals are facing a crisis because they are being overrun with cases of individuals who cannot afford to fully pay for their care, and in some rural areas public hospitals are closing their doors altogether," Mattox said.

"They are struggling with this very difficult problem. Some of them... even have had to shut their emergency room doors at times trying to solve the problem of too many patients coming in."

Mattox said the task force, which begins meeting Friday, will be co-chaired by Dr. Ron Anderson, chief executive of the Dallas County Hospital District and former chairman of the state Board of Health, and David Hitt, president of the Methodist Hospitals of Dallas.

"We hope the work of this task force will be extremely important in properly responding to the growing problem of people who do not have or cannot afford medical and hospital insurance," Mattox said.

"Although some non-profit hospitals are actively involved in charity care, many others have not been willing to share the burden of care for the uninsured," he said.

The task force will include representatives of tax-supported public hospitals, not-for-profit hospitals, the medical profession, the public and elected officials.

Under state law, the attorney general is responsible for protecting the public's interest in charities.

Several hospitals currently are being investigated by his office, although Mattox declined to identify them.

Mattox said he hoped the new task force would make recommendations to the Legislature and Congress on several issues, including the level of charity care a non-profit hospital should contribute.

Other questions to be examined include:

- How state and federal government can meet the needs of people who aren't eligible for government programs and can't afford health care insurance

- The definition of what constitutes charity care and services that should fall into that category.

Mattox said the issue involves more than just those in poverty.

"You don't have to be a poor person not to be able to provide for medical care these days," he said.

But at least Meese was a loyal servant

Once an independent prosecutor dropped charges against Attorney General Ed Meese, it was almost certain he would resign. His name was cleared, leaving him free to do what he thought right for his office and for his party.

"The fact that these allegations have been proved false and there's no criminal proceedings fully vindicates me," Meese said. By the time Meese's resignation takes effect in late July or early August, little time will be left for the Justice Department to do anything; yet it can now pursue a few avenues that had been closed by the furor over Meese's ethics.

George Bush can now breathe easily. Meese's personal scandals, which involved bad judgment but no breaking of the law, can be brushed off. "Meese is gone, and was cleared anyway," Bush can now say about the "sleaze factor" in the Republican Party. "But what about the ongoing scandal surrounding House Speaker Jim Wright?"

Meese's main legacy is that he was a loyal servant for 20 years of Ronald Reagan, his president and friend. Meese was an example of how Reagan's notoriously lax style could work, if properly implemented. Fellows like David Stockman, Michael Deaver and Larry Speakes — all of whom have written back-stabbing books about their former boss — manipulated Reagan, while pursuing agendas of their own. Lacking his strong conservative convictions and taking advantage of his shadowy directions, they steered his administration toward the sand bar on which it now lies virtually beached.

Meese was different. He took Reagan's lack of direction as a green light to implement Reaganism (that is, Reaganism as it was in 1981). Meese made sure Reagan appointed judges, at all levels of government, with at least some grounding in the Constitution. It's too early to say what final impact these judges will have, but almost all are better than the radicals appointed by Jimmy Carter. And such appointees as Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia and San Diego law professor Bernard Siegan (whose appointment to the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals has been held up in the Senate), could point the way toward reinstating our severely tattered Constitution.

Meese also has redirected his department's civil rights branch back toward preserving those liberties guaranteed by the Constitution, and away from imposing neo-racist schemes like affirmative action. Alas, Meese has also favored new intrusions into citizen's privacy. As part of the anti-immigration hysteria, Meese supported onerous new government controls over the hiring of new employees.

But all in all, Meese has served the country honorably. Meese stayed in power long after such old-time Reagan stalwarts as Judge Clark and Cap Weinberger had ridden off into the sunset. Reagan's autobiography is entitled Where's the Rest of Me? To play on that, the rest of Reagan may have just left town with Meese.

More to it than just junk food

ATLANTA - There are three statements I waited all week to hear from anyone at the Democratic convention.

The first is, "I sure wish there were more speeches, and longer ones." The second is, "Atlanta's weather is so pleasant in July." The third is, "This is a sensible way to choose a president."

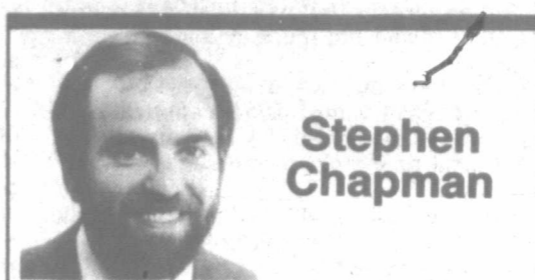

The national convention, we all know, has lost its original function of selecting the nominees for president and vice president. This year, like every other leap year in memory, the outcome was decided long before the delegates arrived. As a result, the Democrats offered less substance than a vegetarian hamburger and less suspense than a professional wrestling match.

The Republican convention, we can be sure, will be no different.

The conventions have the look of a speedy halfback whose knees have gone bad, his best days irrevocably past.

The three main TV networks ended their gavel-to-gavel coverage in 1984, deciding that all the important events and some of the unimportant ones could be fitted into a couple of hours a night. No one who watched the rest of the proceedings on Cable News Network or C-SPAN (or worse, in person) would conclude that the networks have done voters a disservice.

Given its many defects, it's tempting to conclude that the convention ought to be yanked off the life-support systems and given a decent burial. Nicholas von Hoffman, writing in the New Republic magazine, derides it as a hopeless case, an "anachronism living on from the time of the Pullman car and the telegraph key." No doubt plenty of people here this past week would agree.

But the convention has not been a dinosaur freezing in the Ice Age, dumbly unable to change with its environment. It has proven highly adaptable. The result is that while conventions may not be necessary, they are probably indispensable.

They serve at least three critical purposes. The first is to provide a reward and a respite for thousands of people who have worked countless days at unpleasant tasks, from passing out leaflets to begging for donations. Recognition is to politics what salaries are to business: the inducement for needed sacrifices. Being a delegate to a national convention singles one out as special.

Coming to one helps heal wounds and invigorate spirits for the fall campaign. Spending a week with thousands of like-minded people reminds the delegates of why they are Democrats or Republicans, renewing their commitment to a shared purpose.

Second, the convention is a ticket to four nights of free prime time TV coverage, which no political party assembled outside of a psychiatric ward would abandon. The whole affair has the quality of a TV program, with every event scripted and choreographed for the enjoyment of people who aren't present.

The parties, which once ignored the networks, now exploit the coverage for full advantage. Each convention is an opportunity to present the party's best face to the nation, and no amount of skeptical reporters can neutralize the benefit.

Nor are the major networks likely to ever skip the gathering: They're too good a show.

The third function is the least obvious and most vital. Like a wedding ceremony, a political convention lends an appropriate gravity to an event of potentially profound consequences. It is a civic sacrament, a ritual that validates deeply held beliefs and combats cynicism.

The winner of Wednesday night's balloting for the presidential nomination was foreordained, but to be present on the floor nevertheless gave the delegates and reporters a powerful sense of being part of history.

The idea that the national political convention is ready for the scrap heap of history is reminiscent of the predictions of science fiction writers who expected that by 1988 or so, science would allow us to get all our food in the form of pills containing every ingredient the human body needs.

Selecting a presidential nominee is no more the only justification for a convention than nutrition is the only reason for dinner.

Just blame it on the coffee

ATLANTA - This city, which I call home, has been taking it upside the head as the national media covered the Democratic National Convention.

Somebody talked about Atlanta's homeless; another wrote of the fact that the city doesn't have enough hotel rooms, and one fool even said the barbecue isn't any good.

As far as the homeless are concerned, this is a national problem, not one found only in Atlanta.

If delegates or reporters didn't find a hotel room, I could have put two in my spare bedroom, if they wouldn't have minded sharing a bath.

And anybody who says Atlanta doesn't have good barbecue obviously didn't locate Harold's, where the barbecue is wonderful, the service is perfect and there are religious posters on the wall to read during your meal.

My favorite has always been, "Get ready for Jesus, before he's ready for you."

When the convention began, so did such negative looks. Here's what happens:

Some reporter from Chicago or L.A. or New York will get a bad cup of coffee somewhere and he writes a story saying Atlanta is basically uninhabitable and should be razed.

Lewis Grizzard

Another reporter suffers from PMS and blames it on the city's traffic problems, while yet another from Topeka will get a phone call from his wife saying she is leaving him and he'll be in such a bad mood he writes that what Atlanta needs is for Sherman to come back.

The late Norman Van Brocklin, former Atlanta Falcons coach, said it all about the negative leanings of reporters:

"They get up in the morning, hear the birds chirping and it makes them mad."

I've been guilty of this sort of thing. Several years ago I was in Memphis and the police and fire departments were on strike.

The National Guard was called in, there was a 6 p.m. curfew and the bar in my hotel was closed.

I wrote that Memphis was a town that forgot to disappear when the steamboats did.

Later I went back to Memphis, had a great time and wrote an apology for my earlier mistake.

The same thing happened to me in Detroit at the 1980 Republican convention. Everybody likes to cut down Detroit. So I took a couple of nasty licks at the city, but in retrospect, four days in Detroit wasn't all that bad.

I met a lot of nice people, located a great seafood restaurant and saw baseball as it ought to be played in Detroit's grand old ballpark, Tiger Stadium.

I let somebody else deal with the female reporters who were in Atlanta for the convention, but I made a recommendation to the city about what to do with the guys:

"Take 'em to Harold's for barbecue, buy 'em a cold Coke in one of those little bottles and then run them up to all those bistros in Buckhead to mingle with some of our lovely scenery."

If that doesn't make 'em happy, they're a lost cause anyway.

So, tell us — what did Jesse really get?

By WILLIAM A. RUSHER

Jesse Jackson rolled into Atlanta on July 16 at the head of a dramatic bus cavalcade, to be greeted by 1,200 delegates pledged to his presidential candidacy plus several thousand passionately enthusiastic supporters. In public, the media followed his every move. In private, he was advised by some of the toughest and ablest black politicians in the business: men like California Assembly Speaker Willie Brown, Congressman Ron Dellums, and Harlem's own Congressman Charlie Rangel.

On July 18, Jackson went calling on Michael Dukakis, the Democratic Party's presidential nominee-apparent. Two hours later they emerged, together with Lloyd Bentsen. All three were wreathed in smiles, and it was announced that the Jackson campaign staff would be absorbed into the Dukakis campaign organization at all levels.

Is that all? Is the Dukakis campaign really so hard to get into that Jesse Jackson had to bargain away his whole powerful position at the Atlanta convention in return for the privilege of putting his staff to work for Dukakis?

Forgive me for being a bit cynical, but I wonder, I really do. It's true that Jackson could not afford to look like a spoiler, lest he damage whatever prospects he personally may have in future conventions. But politicians as shrewd as Jackson and the men around him could certainly have found some ostensibly high-minded way to put severe pressure on Dukakis, and then use that pressure to extract valuable and very concrete concessions.

They didn't do it — or so we are led to believe. So various commentators are hard at work explaining what they take to be Jackson's intentions. A.M. Rosenthal, in the New York Times, believes that Jackson is maneuvering to "be right there in American politics, more and more prominently, for years and years ... a historic figure and a pride to the 7 million Americans who had voted for him in the primaries — and to their children." Flora Lewis, on the other hand, thinks Jackson is bent on pushing certain policies. She explains that Jackson's "formula has a double strand, not necessarily contradictory but with quite distinct elements, which attract and repel different parts of the electorate ... The two are intertwined through an emphasis on support for those perceived as the underdogs, and on a different allocation of resources, away from the military."

Well, all that may be true, but I would still bet that very specific agreements were reached, in that two-hour conference between Jackson and Dukakis, about which we haven't yet been told.

Meanwhile, July 19 at the convention was Jesse Jackson's big night. His speech was a series of well-tested variations on the themes he has been working for years. Like Mario Cuomo, Jackson is a past master of the politics of envy. He told the convention, in effect, that America is divided between the rich and the poor, and that Ronald Reagan's aim (in which, moreover, he succeeded all too well) was to make the rich richer and the poor poorer.

The interesting thing is how well this brazen lie went over with the delegates and the audience in the Omni Coliseum. It wasn't just the blacks who rose and applauded; the white sections of the crowd roared their approval, too. (The TV camera caught Geraldine Ferraro rising from her seat to applaud one particularly demagogic passage.)

The Atlanta convention, therefore, served to underscore how completely the modern Democratic Party has become the emotional captive of its black-leftist component. Well over 90 percent of black voters vote Democratic anyway; there is simply no need to make further concessions to win their support. But the Democratic convention cheered Jackson's rhetoric anyway. Call it idealism if you wish, but make no mistake: He speaks for the beating heart of the Democratic Party today.

House banking panel votes sweeping new powers for banks

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Banking Committee early today ended a grueling 16½-hour session by approving a far-reaching bill described as the most significant change in banking law since the Depression.

The bill, if adopted by the full Congress and signed into law by President Reagan, would allow bank holding companies to underwrite virtually every type of security except corporate stock.

However, the legislation includes a laundry list of other provisions banks strongly oppose, including new obligations to serve poor people.

And, because of the election-shortened legislative calendar and the jurisdictional rules of the House, the bill faces an uncertain future.

The committee voted for the final measure 30-20, with all but three Democrats in favor and all but three Republicans opposed.

From the banking committee, it goes to the Energy and Commerce Committee, chaired by Rep. John D. Dingell, D-Mich., who has expressed skepticism of banks entering the securities business.

Depending on what kind of deadline House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, sets, Dingell could kill the bill through delay or exact concessions by threatening delay.

After Aug. 12, Congress plans to be in session only from Sept. 6 to Oct. 5, leaving little time for a banking bill to pass the full House and be reconciled with legislation that passed the Senate, 94-2, on March 30.

Banks long have sought to re-enter the securities business, from which they have been barred by the Depression-era Glass-Steagall Act for more than 50 years.

As originally drafted by the committee chairman, Rep. Fernand J. St Germain, D-R.I., the bill would not have permitted bank holding companies to underwrite mutual funds or corporate bonds later convertible to stock.

However, those provisions were added by 35-14 and 27-23 votes, respectively.

Other securities activities permitted by the bill include the underwriting of corporate bonds, commercial paper, municipal revenue bonds and securities backed by mortgages and other consumer debt such as auto loans.

Rep. Chalmers Wylie of Ohio, the ranking Republican on the committee, failed in an attempt to persuade the committee to move more slowly.

"This bill will have a greater impact than any other piece of legislation since the reforms passed nearly 60 years ago," Wylie said. "I believe the changes should be made cautiously and not all at once."

He also sought to kill provisions described as pro-consumer that banks would be required to accept in exchange for the new powers. He argued that the requirements would hurt the soundness of the banking system and ultimately cost consumers.

Republican opposition to the consumer sections threatened committee passage of the bill until an hour-long negotiating session behind closed doors after midnight.

Democrats agreed to accept some watering down of the consumer provisions and, in exchange, three Republicans — Steve Bartlett of Texas, John Hiler of Indiana and Thomas Ridge of Pennsylvania — voted in favor of the bill.

It requires banks to serve poor people by providing low-cost lifeline checking services for accounts between $25 and $1,000. And, it requires banks to open special accounts for the cashing of government checks such as Social Security and welfare checks, with a cashing charge of no more than $2.

It also requires banks to show a good record of serving poor communities in their lending area before getting permission from the Federal Reserve Board to exercise new powers.

However, in an exemption sought by the Republicans, agricultural banks with less than $50 million in assets — about 2,600 of the nation's 14,000 commercial banks — would be exempted from the last requirement.

Hearings to ask if U.S. condoned drug smuggling

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House panel is opening hearings on whether the Reagan administration condoned drug smuggling and other criminal activities to further its Central American policy.

Chairman William J. Hughes said his House Judiciary subcommittee on crime will examine "allegations of drug smuggling, gun running and money laundering between Central American and the U.S. — and the role our government played in ignoring or even encouraging the criminal activities."

Hughes said the series of hearings will "demonstrate there were other motives driving drug law enforcement, like votes on Contra aid."

President Reagan has been a strong opponent of Nicaragua's Sandinista government and steady supporter of the Central American Contra rebels. At various times, both sides in the Nicaraguan conflict have been accused of aiding or taking part in drug smuggling.

Hughes said the first hearing today would examine allegations that members of the Sandinista regime cooperated with the Colombian drug cartel to import cocaine into the United States in 1984.

The committee is to hear testimony on flights to Nicaragua and other locations in South and Central America by convicted drug pilot Barry Seal, who became a government informant in a federal sting operation.

The Seal operation, designed to trap cocaine smugglers, was compromised and ended early because of leaks to the news media from sources familiar with the plan.

Hughes said a CIA witness was invited to testify on the agency's role in the operation, but he notified the committee he would refuse to cooperate on Fifth Amendment grounds of self-incrimination.

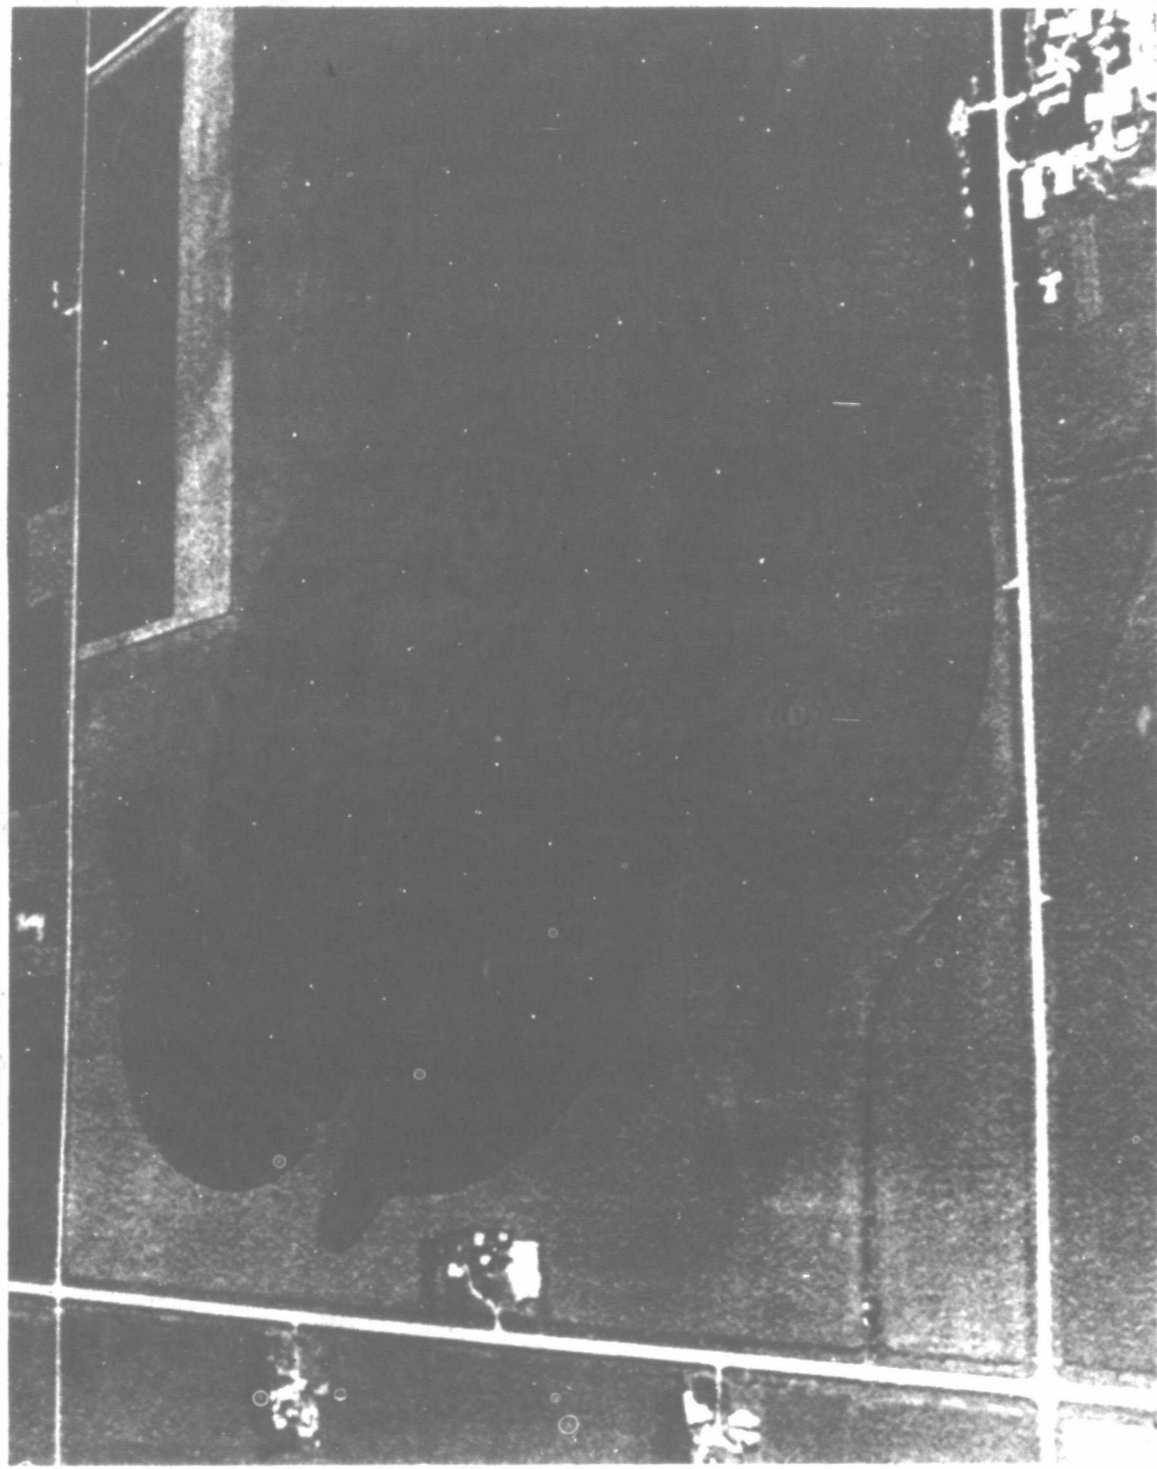

More than 100 subpoenas have been issued for witness testimony and the production of documents, Hughes said. Judicial grants of immunity have been obtained to compel testimony of six persons who refused to cooperate, invoking their Fifth Amendment privilege.

No immunity grant has been issued for the CIA witness, and Hughes said there has been no decision on pursuing the agency's testimony.

Seal in February 1986 was assassinated in a Baton Rouge, La., machine gun attack as he pulled up in his Cadillac at a Salvation Army halfway house. He was confined there part-time on a six-month sentence for narcotics and bank fraud convictions.

In an interview Wednesday, Hughes said, "We're looking at whether ... an obstruction of justice" caused the end of the Seal operation. "The whole operation was aborted because of leaks to the media."

FBI denies knowing how stolen documents showed up at agency

MIAMI (AP) — FBI files have turned up documents stolen from a television reporter who has accused U.S. officials in a Nicaraguan political bombing, but the agency denies knowing the material was taken illegally.

Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif., chairman of the FBI oversight committee in Congress, said he will look promptly into how the agency obtained the stolen documents from Tony Avirgan, a freelance cameraman who worked for CBS-TV.

"We've been looking into over 100 break-ins over a period of several years," Edwards said Wednesday. "They all have a Central American angle, all relating to Salvador, in some cases Nicaragua."

The FBI confirmed a report in The Boston Globe on Wednesday that the agency received memos and notes taken in Costa Rica in 1985 and 1986 from Avirgan, who was investigating a political bombing in Nicaragua that killed eight people and left him slightly injured.

Avirgan and his wife, Martha Honey, later filed a $24 million damage suit in Miami federal court accusing U.S. and Nicaraguan Contra officials of responsibility for the bombing. The suit was dismissed last month for insufficient evidence.

The FBI obtained Avirgan's files from someone reporting on people who allegedly supported "terrorist operations in Central America," according to a statement released through Washington FBI spokeswoman Sue Schnitzer.

"This individual gave no indication that the documents were obtained through illegal means," the statement said.

Schnitzer said the FBI routinely inquires if such material is stolen, but refused to say if that was done in the Avirgan case. She also refused to identify the source.

The FBI will cooperate with an investigation by appropriate oversight committees, Schnitzer said.

The 39 pages stolen from Avirgan included memos to CBS and Avirgan's handwritten notes about the bombing, said Lanny Sinkin, an attorney for the liberal, Washington-based Christie Institute, which represents Avirgan in the Miami lawsuit.

"It suggests that the break-in was targeted to find out what he knew," said Sinkin.

The subject of many of the stolen memos, and later Avirgan's damage lawsuit, was the May 1984 bombing of a news conference held by maverick Contra commander Eden Pastora in La Penca, Nicaragua, just across the Costa Rican border.

Three journalists and five Pastora supporters died in the explosion, although Pastora was only slightly injured. Avirgan and later the Christie Institute blamed it on U.S. and Contra leaders who objected to Pastora's independent stance in the fight against Nicaragua's leftist government.

Edwards said the documents indicate that the FBI "could have been getting the fruits of political burglaries and break-ins."

Also Wednesday, Chris Wood, a Montpelier, Vt., political activist who has been involved in the Vermont Central America Non-Intervention Network, said he has been the target of three break-ins in three weeks that he suspects involved the FBI.

Ray McElhane, another FBI spokesman in Washington, said, "I don't think there have been any break-ins involving the FBI. ... I have no statement regarding the allegations of this person in Montpelier, Vermont."

Last month, the Globe reported that the FBI has conducted at least four investigations of opponents of the Reagan administration's Central American policies, including CISPES, the Committee in Solidarity with the People of El Salvador.

Firefighters protect Old Faithful; arson blamed in S.D. blaze

By MIKE HIRSH
Associated Press Writer

Crews using flame throwers fought fire with fire as a blaze burned within six miles of Old Faithful, and authorities said arson caused a South Dakota wildfire that destroyed 22 buildings and forced 2,000 people to flee.

Wildfires also chased hundreds of people from their homes in Idaho, while in Alaska 1,200 firefighters battled wind-fanned blazes that consumed 1.3 million acres, an area larger than Delaware.

Large fires, many of them kindled in drought conditions aggravated during a hot, dry summer, also blackened regions in Arizona, Oregon, Utah, Washington state and Montana.

Interior Secretary Donald Hodel took a helicopter tour Wednesday through thick smoke to view 10,000 charred acres in the southern areas of Yellowstone National Park, which is suffering its worst forest fire of the century. The blaze has scorched 109,000 of the park's 2.2 million acres.

Firefighters with flame throwers and some in helicopters lit backfires in about 1,000 acres of meadow to burn fuel ahead of the fire and direct it away from Old Faithful, the park's most famous attraction, and nearby structures.

Even so, the usual hundreds of summer visitors gathered every 75 minutes or so Wednesday to watch the famous geyser erupt into the smoky sky.

"Fantastic," said Alain Dukan of France. "We're not afraid of the fires and we're not worried about it. They say fire is part of the forest."

In South Dakota, firefighters worked all day digging a fire line around a 2,000-acre blaze that burned out of control as it drew within two miles of Rapid City. The fire has destroyed 22 buildings, including seven houses, and forced the evacuation of 2,000 people.

Don Kopp, a fire commander, said Wednesday the blaze was the work of an arsonist.

"Whoever's doing it, they could burn down half of the Black Hills if they want," said Kopp, adding that authorities have been investigating a string of about 50 fires dating to May which they suspect were set by the same person.

He said a cigarette with a match inside was used to start the fire that was spotted Tuesday. Such a device would smolder for a time before bursting into flame. "I'm not sure what we need to do to catch them, but we need to catch them," Kopp said. The suspected arsonist has set as many as to eight fires in one day, he said.

In Idaho, a temperature inversion kept winds mercifully light as crews worked to keep a 1,700-acre fire away from about 50 homes in the Boise National Forest, 35 miles north of Boise.

"The fire is pretty active and moving to the southeast," said Karen Palmer, Forest Service fire information officer. "We don't have a big handle on how much it's burned because there's so much smoke."

Winds helped Alaska's largest fire grow to 409,000 acres, said Sue Mitchell, a Bureau of Land Management spokeswoman. Most Alaska fires were in remote areas and were let alone because they don't threaten people or property.

In Washington, more than 350 firefighters battled a fire fanned by 20 mph winds and temperatures near 90, which raced across the ridge of the Cascade Mountains on Wednesday, tripling its size to 3,600 acres within a few hours.

Firefighters in northeastern Utah, meanwhile, used a rainstorm to contain a 5-day-old, fire-works-caused blaze that charred 1,955 acres in the Flaming Gorge National Recreation Area.

Firefighters also contained a lightning-sparked wildfire that burned an estimated 3,400 acres of remote terrain in northwestern

Arizona. About 50 people evacuated because of a 650 acre blaze in Montana expected to go home today.

In Yellowstone, Hodel voiced confidence in the National Park Service's controversial "let it burn" philosophy for wilderness areas in which people, buildings or roads are not endangered. But he said the excessively dry conditions might make a difference.

Ben Clary, Yellowstone assistant superintendent, said park officials largely will follow the existing policy on natural fires.

Missing newlyweds return and apologize

SAN DIEGO (AP) — A newlywed says she and her husband were "blinded by love" 3½ months ago when they disappeared from Chicago, sparking a manhunt after their deserted car was found ransacked with its engine running.

Scott Swanson, 23, and his wife, Carolyn, 22, said they dashed off to San Diego shortly after they eloped because some relatives apparently disapproved of their skipping a traditional marriage ceremony. They also said they just wanted to spend time together.

"Call it shortsighted or call it what you want to, but love is blind and I know that sounds trite," Mrs. Swanson said at a news conference after being reunited with her parents, Jim and Kathy MacLean of Haddonfield, N.J.

"So much has come out of it that has been great, but then to see the look on my mother's face ... and my dad's face. ... I mean, I can't stand the hurt that I've caused," she said tearfully.

The newlyweds vanished April 2 without telling relatives or classmates at a suburban Evangelical college.

During a resulting three-state police investigation, friends at Wheaton College held prayer vigils, put up posters and questioned people at roadside restaurants and gas stations.

"We are tremendously sorry for the hurt and the pain we've caused to our families, to our friends and loved ones and relatives," Swanson said. "We never realized that the story would have the ramifications it has."

The couple left their car near a police station with the keys under the mat and their identification cards, Swanson said. "We didn't want to be traced."

The BMW was found ransacked in an alley, its motor running.

Police eventually determined that the couple had planned to vanish, but families and friends feared foul play.

The MacLeans said they followed the uproar over their disappearance through front-page stories in Chicago newspapers at a university library. Meanwhile, they both got jobs at a suburban La Jolla delicatessen.

They were not seen or heard from until they sent letters to their parents and contacted the MacLeans by telephone Tuesday.

"We hoped to let things die down a bit, to let the investigation settle. Then we could slip in unnoticed," Swanson said.

"We were afraid to come back and we felt we had done the right thing to begin with. We needed to wait on our decision until the right time within ourselves to come back," he said.

Swanson said his family's reaction to the wedding was in part responsible for their decision. He said they eloped "simply for the spiritualness of it and not for the wedding ... the large production of it."

"We weren't clear-minded why we did what we did, but in the time of what we did it seemed the best thing to do."

His wife said, "We're so in love and we wanted to get away from the adornment and the material world and develop our relationship together apart from that. And we did that and we're so much stronger as a result of it."

Her parents arrived in San Diego on Wednesday afternoon. Swanson said he had contacted his parents, who were vacationing.

Chicago Police Cmdr. Ettore DiVito, who headed the investigation, said police may try to recover the costs of their efforts.

In Chicago, news of the couple's reappearance shocked but delighted their friends.

U.S. eating habits leading to early deaths

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans are eating their way to early graves, bite by bite and meal by meal, consuming too much fat, seasoning it with too much salt and washing it down with too much alcohol, according to a report issued Wednesday by the U.S. surgeon general.

"Overconsumption of certain dietary components is now a major concern for Americans," the report said, noting that "diseases of dietary excess and imbalance" are among the leading causes of death in the United States.

Many Americans are overweight, don't eat enough fruit, vegetables and whole grains, and often fail to get required nutrients such as calcium and iron.

Of the 2.1 million Americans who died last year, the surgeon general's study said that nearly 1.5 million succumbed to diseases associated with diet.

"What we eat may affect our risk for several of the leading causes of death for Americans, notably, coronary heart disease, stroke, atherosclerosis, diabetes, and some types of cancer," the report said. "These disorders together now account for more than two-thirds of all deaths in the United States."

Though malnutrition is a problem in several parts of the world and for certain Americans, the report said, "for most of us the more likely problem has become one of overeating — too many calories for our activity levels and an imbalance in the nutrients consumed along with them."

In a forward to the report, Surgeon General C. Everett Koop said that although many foods are involved, the chief factor affecting health "is the disproportionate consumption of foods high in fats, often at the expense of foods high in complex carbohydrates and fiber — such as vegetables, fruits, and whole grain products."

He said he is convinced that through "a concerted effort" by policy makers and the public, "our daily diets can bring a substantial measure of better health to all Americans."

The 712-page report cites more than 2,000 scientific studies from around the world and was compiled with the advice of more than 200 doctors, nutritionists and biochemists.

The report makes recommendations ranging from the amount of fat that should be included in the diet, to the advisability of taking vitamin supplements.

Among the major findings: Most people should reduce the consumption of fat, especially saturated fats, such as from eggs, butter or untrimmed red meat. It suggests more vegetables and fruits, fish, poultry, lean meats and low-fat dairy products.

More whole grain foods, cereal products, vegetables and fruits should be in the diet. The report recommends that dried beans and peas be used as a source of protein to replace some animal products.

Sodium consumption should be reduced by limiting the use of salt in food preparation and at the table.

Alcohol intake should be reduced to two drinks a day "if at all." Pregnant women should avoid any alcohol, it said. The report estimates that about 9 percent of the American population has two or more drinks a day.

Fluoride should be added to community water systems to prevent tooth decay, and that the consumption of sugar be limited to avoid dental cavities.

Children, adolescents and women of childbearing age should consume more iron-rich foods, such as red meat, fish, cereals, beans and whole-grain cereals. "This issue is of special concern for low-income families," the report said.

Soviet reforms cause layoffs

MOSCOW (AP) — Mikhail S. Gorbachev's drive to modernize industry and trim fat from management forced nearly 1 million Soviet factory workers out of work in the first half of the year, Radio Moscow reported.

But those laid off are sure to get other jobs "since the government has undertaken to redistribute the labor force in a planned manner," the state-run radio said.

Gorbachev, named Communist Party chief in March 1985, has waged a campaign to reform the country's economy, increase productivity and prune the size of the state bureaucracy.

In January, the Communist Party daily Pravda estimated that 16 million Soviets would be laid off in the next 12 years as efficiency increases.

Radio Moscow said: "The number of workers in Soviet industries has gone down by almost 1 million in the first half of the year, compared with the same period last year."

Radio Moscow did not provide the size of the labor force in the country's factories last year.

Letters to the editor

He told you so,
he told you so!

To the editor:

I told you so! I told you so! Well, I tried to tell everyone that the public golf course for Pampa was a big hoax and fraud being perpetrated on us by means of empty promises and those who stand to gain most from the course.

Did the public golf course just happen? No, it did not. The plans for this "albatross" were laid years ago. It was not until the "right" people were on our County Commissioners Court and City Commission that this very, very expensive "boondoggle" was forced on us.

Being present at most county meetings when this issue was discussed and forced on us, I can tell you that the ones responsible for this expensive playground were Mr. "conservative" Republican, Gray County Judge Carl Kennedy, who raised our taxes last year so he could up his already very generous pay; and Gerald Wright, another conservative Republican who didn't want to buy the Hughes Building and rent the extra space because it would compete against private enterprise.

What is a "public" golf course going to do with the one we already have, Mr. Wright?

Those people playing at the Country Club do it on their own work and money earned! Unlike these few hundred "beggars" that can't afford or, I believe, don't want to spend their own money to "play" their little game.

And then we have Mr. Simmons, whose voters overwhelmingly voted against the golf course. Yet he states he went the way of the majority. Isn't he also another "conservative" Republican?

Now we come to our city commissioners who, to me, very much resemble the "three stooges." Or were there four? Mr. Peet, Mr. Hupp, Mr. Sutherland and Mr. Reed, who applaud the actions of our, I believe, "arrogant" city manager!

They sit blandly while Mr. Hart proceeds to hock us in debt probably far into the next century. We are going to wake up one day and learn that "our" City Hall and city — us — have been mortgaged, including our homes, cars, kids and their diapers, just so a couple of hundred golfers can attempt to play Arnold Palmer.

What happened to water for the future? Are we going to send our kids and their kids to the number eight hole for water?

And then we have Buddy Epperson, who objected to a list of names and what they were donating to the golf course because possibly he never had all he was promising.

$50,000 was donated to this playground by a local foundation - that is the reason the county held on to this money. So, actually, Buddy and his group raised less than $50,000 - a paltry drop in the bucket compared to the price tag of over $2 million. Add city - $900,000 and still growing; county - $300,000 plus men, equipment, gasoline, oil and God knows what else - and also city men and equipment.

And, remember, folks, they have just started hole #1!

But there is one advantage that all might get from this public golf course! It seems, according to several letter writers, that some of these would-be Arnold Palmers also have doctor's diplomas.

They keep attacking me because I'm disabled. They write that I have two arms-legs and there are others worse off than me who go to work everyday, so why am I crying?

I didn't know that some golfers have apparently a magic crystal ball, or golf ball, and they automatically know about other's medical problems without having taken X-rays, scans, mylograms and other medical tests as do neurosurgeons and orthopedic surgeons.

Next time my doctors seem unsure about what's best for me - I'll have them call the expert medical golfers we have around Pampa! Well, I would, if they are so sure of themselves where they would sign their critical letters as does ...

Ray Velasquez
Pampa

P.S. The idea of not being able to separate the referendum vote by precincts was not by chance. Why do you think only one box was for all of Pampa? What happened to the promise from the city that we would get to vote again if the golf course would cause a tax increase? Promises! Promises! Where is their honor?

Editor's Note: As to some facts, Mr. Velasquez: The voting referendum was held in conjunction with school trustee elections in the county. Since the election was held throughout the county, there was more than only the "one box" some have claimed; balloting was conducted in five locations in the county: Pampa, Lefors, McLean, Alanreed and Grandview-Hopkins. As to there only being one voting location in Pampa — well, talk to the school district about that; it's their decision to vote at only one location, not the county's or the PPGA's. The county chose to use the school elections since they also included the rural residents.

Again you, as do many others, seem to have the mistaken idea that Gray County is divided into four precincts: Pampa, Lefors, McLean and whatever else. That's not accurate. Yes, there are four precincts in the county, but Pampa itself is divided into four portions, with each portion being assigned to one of the precincts. So, again, it's certainly not accurate to claim that three of four precincts voted against the golf course, as some have.

Fine arts association seeks entrants for art competition

AUSTIN — The Texas Fine Arts Association invites artists to enter "At The Edge: A National Print and Drawing Competition." The exhibition will survey contemporary prints and drawings by emerging and established American artists.

Juror Barry Walker, associate curator of prints and drawings at The Brooklyn Museum, will select the exhibition from slide entries, then personally inspect the work in Austin. Walker has organized numerous print and drawing exhibitions at The Brooklyn Museum, and travels throughout the country to keep abreast of new work.

"In most instances," said TFAA Director Sandra Gregor, "chosen artists will be represented by more than one work. The focus will be on new ideas, new processes, new materials and larger scale works, although finely executed work in a more traditional style is welcome."

Deadline for receipt of slides is Sept. 26. Entry fees begin at $15 for three slides. The exhibition will be documented by an illustrated catalog, sent to accepted artists and to museum curators and gallery directors nationwide.

"At the Edge" will be exhibited at Laguna Gloria Art Museum, Austin's museum of 20th century American art, from Feb. 11 to March 12, 1989. Walker will select a traveling exhibition which will tour to museums and university galleries throughout Texas.

To receive a Call-for-Entries, contact Texas Fine Arts Association, 3809-B W. 35th St., Austin, 78703; or phone (512) 453-5312.

TFAA, composed of working artists and supporters of the arts, is the oldest and largest statewide visual arts organization in Texas. Its purpose is to promote the growth, development and appreciation of contemporary visual art in Texas. Programs include organizing annual emerging artist exhibitions for Laguna Gloria Art Museum, touring selections from these exhibitions to Texas museums and university and community art galleries, presenting an annual Artists' Forum, and publication of a quarterly newsletter.

Membership is open to all. For more information, contact the Association at the above address.

New wife tired of husband's tale of devotion to dead mate

DEAR ABBY: I am about to burst. I have been married for almost a year now, and if I hear my husband tell one more person how "good" he was to his wife while she was dying, I will scream!

Yes, he was good to his wife. Yes, he did take her to every specialist in the country. Yes, he did spend lots of money trying to "save" her, but he talks about it endlessly to anyone who will listen.

Today he told me that no one ever had a loss like his. (Of course, I lost my husband, but that doesn't count.)

He doesn't talk about his wife — only the way he took care of her. He keeps saying that he has no regrets; he will never have to say he didn't do everything humanly possible for her. Why does he talk about it all the time?

If he meets anyone whose spouse is sick, as soon as it is mentioned, he takes over the conversation and does a monologue on what he went through with his wife and how he took care of her. I am tired of hearing about it. Some people have asked me to please tell him to lay off the subject. They know what he went through, and they are tired of hearing about it.

He's a good husband, but it's time that he put his tragedy behind him and got on with his life. He acts as if nobody ever lost a spouse but him. What should I do? Ignore it? Let him talk about it, or what?

UP TO HERE

DEAR UP: Your husband desperately needs to talk about his loss, but he should spare you and his friends the repetitious tales in which he is the "hero." (Some people talk more to convince themselves than others.)

The poor man could still be hurting. He needs to unload on a professional who will listen patiently, then guide him through the healing process and put this self-serving need to rest. Do your husband, his friends and yourself an enormous favor and get him into therapy.

DEAR ABBY: I am a female working in a family-owned business. My father and sisters are my bosses. When I was younger, I was a little on the wild side, but since then, I've settled down dramatically. The problem is that I have two tattoos. One is on my left forearm and the other is on my right upper arm.

When I first started working here, they said it was not "ladylike" and I should wear long sleeves in the summer. Abby, I cannot even wear long sleeves in the winter. It's been so hot and humid this summer I want to wear tank tops or sleeveless blouses. They say no!

I always look clean and well-groomed, and I think it's my business if I have tattoos. I'm going to be working here all my life, so don't you think they should accept me this way?

I need your opinion. Are they discriminating against me for showing my tattoos instead of keeping them covered? I do not regret getting the tattoos. I'm a very artistic person, and to me, they are body art.

TATTOOS FOREVER

DEAR FOREVER: Obviously your family does not perceive your "body art" in the same way that you perceive it. You mentioned that in your younger years you had been "a little on the wild side," so you must also realize that your tattoos make a statement.

Your family cannot be faulted for wanting their employees to create the best possible image. And if you feel discriminated against, you are free to find another job.

Redskins' Manley draws 30-day suspension

By DAVID GINSBURG
AP Sports Writer

CARLISLE, Pa. — Washington Redskins defensive end Dexter Manley, suspended for 30 days by NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle for violating the league's substance abuse act, may not miss a football game this season.

"I have instructed Dexter Manley to remain out of the Redskins' training camp until Aug. 26," Rozelle said Wednesday in a statement issued through spokesman Joe Browne. That would make Manley eligible to play Sept. 5 when the Redskins open defense of their Super Bowl championship against the New York Giants.

Manley said "there's no question" he'll be ready by that time, and the Redskins' coaching staff also expressed optimism that he would be ready to go by then.

Manley, 30, missed most of training camp in 1986 as a holdout, but returned shortly before the regular season and went on to notch 18 sacks and earn a trip to the Pro Bowl for the only time in his seven-year career.

But while Redskins officials and Manley's teammates will welcome him back with open arms, they still are anxious for the troubled veteran to get his off-the-field life together.

"My personal hope and the Redskins' hope is that Dexter can get his personal problems and his life straightened out," Washington general manager Bobby Beathard said. "All we'd like to see is for things to turn out well for Dexter."

Defensive tackle Dean Hamel, who has played beside Manley, said, "You only play football for 10 years. When he's out of the public eye, then what's he going to do? He's not going to get pampered... I just hope he gets his life straightened out."

While the league did not characterize the move as a suspension, Browne said that Manley had been notified that he had involuntarily been placed on the team's non-football injury list.

In 1987, Manley underwent treatment for alcohol abuse at the Hazelden Institute in Minnesota. He met with Rozelle last Friday after it was reported that an illegal substance turned up in a drug test. Neither the league nor Manley has been willing to reveal specifics of the test.

"People are going to make rumors, and that's OK with me," Manley told a television station in a paid interview. "But I know what the situation was, and I know that everything is behind me."

Manley's attorney, Bob Woolf, said his client would not have to undergo rehabilitation as part of the condition of the suspension.

"They're not suggesting any rehabilitation," Woolf said. "But he will continue on aftercare (from his stay at Hazelden). He'll be doing that for the rest of his life."

Woolf said Manley would abide by Rozelle's decision, and he said the commissioner probably abstained from dealing with Manley in harsher terms because of the manner in which they responded to the inquiry.

"We gave the commissioner all the facts, and I think he was appreciative that Dexter was so cooperative," Woolf said. "Also, I think he respected the fact that Dexter is a hard-working person who leads a productive life."

On a day when they learned they would soon be getting one defensive end back, the Redskins lost another. Markus Koch, Washington's top draft pick in 1986, voluntarily left the team to work for his uncle as a carpenter in Canada, according to Redskins Coach Joe Gibbs.

"It's a total shock to everybody," Gibbs said. "He said he had been thinking about it for quite a while. He kind of lost his desire to play football."

Koch had been moved to linebacker during the team's minicamp in May. He played the position at training camp until Tuesday, when Gibbs decided to move him back to end pending a decision on Manley.

"He told me he had no complaints about money or the position change," Beathard said. "He just told me he had a change of heart."

Said Hamel, Koch's roommate: "He told me one time, 'Why don't we sell everything, Dean, and go down to Florida and get a charter boat and do that for the rest of our lives. Why do this?'

With Manley out and Koch gone, the Redskins have only five defensive ends in camp: Pro Bowler Charles Mann, a starter on the left side, the oft-injured Steve Hamilton, and three rookies.

NFL camps roundup

As if Karl Nelson hasn't had enough problems, he's now got his coach on his case.

Nelson, a starting tackle for the New York Giants in the team's Super Bowl year, missed last season while battling Hodgkin's Disease. The disease was diagnosed when Nelson was sidelined by shoulder problems that required surgery.

The 28-year-old Nelson has fought his way back from those troubles. But he hasn't impressed Giants coach Bill Parcells during training camp. Parcells has criticized Nelson's performances all week.

"I told him this morning," Parcells said Wednesday, "I'm tired of coaching you. I got this whole team to coach. I'm spending too much time with you."

Irvin involved in brawl

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Dallas wide receiver Michael Irvin and San Diego defensive back Elvis Patterson got into a fight during a scrimmage on Wednesday that had them rolling on the dirt track in a swirl of dust at California Lutheran College.

It was Irvin's second fight in as many scrimmages. Last Thursday he was involved in a brawl with a Los Angeles Raiders' defensive back.

"Irvin's a marked guy," club president Tex Schramm said. "They all want to take a shot at him. He's got to learn not to retaliate."

Irvin, the Cowboys' first round draft pick, was tackled out of bounds by Patterson, who got the short end of the ensuing fisticuffs. Dallas running back Herschel Walker finally broke it up.

"Mike was justified because it wasn't his fault, but he still must learn not to react — because he could break a hand," Schramm said.

Dallas Coach Tom Landry said: "The guy (Patterson) caused it, and I can't blame Mike for it. It was quite a fight going over onto the track like that. Irvin has to be careful. If he breaks a hand, it's the whole season."

Irvin didn't want to comment. "We were just playing football," Irvin said. Patterson said, "It was just guys competing."

Pampa 13-year-olds stay alive

Pampa's 13-year-old all-star team remained alive in the West Texas State Babe Ruth Tournament with a 14-7 win over Denver City Wednesday night.

Pampa advances to the finals tonight against Andrews, a team they lost to 14-3 in the tournament opener. Pampa must beat Andrews twice to win the championship of the tournament, which is being played in Denver City.

Pampa never trailed against Denver City as all the starters made the hit column.

Pampa scored half their runs in the first two innings and led 7-0. Pampa tallied three runs in the first inning on RBIs by Kurt West, Jason Brantley and Brad Smillie. Brantley and Smillie had run-scoring singles while West had an RBI grounder.

Four runs crossed the plate in the second inning, three on a 300-foot home run by West, who had the tournament's first round-tripper.

Pampa stifled a rally by Denver City in the seventh inning. Denver City loaded the bases, but managed to score only one run.

Chris Poole, Smillie and Jeff Tidwell had two hits each to lead Pampa's hitting attack. West had five RBIs on the night while Will Winborne, Brantley, Heath Stevens, Chester Jackson and Dave Davis all had singles.

"All nine batters getting base hits was really a bright spot for us," said Pampa manager Dale West.

Tidwell started on the mound, but West lifted him after the first inning to save him for tonight's game. Poole came in and pitched the last six innings.

Against Andrews in the first game, Pampa had only one hit, a pinch-hit single by Jimmy Fossett.

"We just didn't play well at all. In fact it's the worst I've seen this team play," said West. "They did make a lot of good defensive plays on us, but we're capable of playing much better against them than we did."

The first game will be played at 6 p.m. tonight. If Pampa wins, a second game will follow.

Pampa's 14-15 year-olds will play Leveland at 6 p.m. tonight in the West Texas Babe Ruth state finals at Canyon. Pampa must lose twice to Leveland since they have gone unbeaten in the double-elimination tournament.

Blackie's best columns now available in book form

Taylor Publishing in Dallas has recently released some good collections from three of the country's top veterans of sportswriting.

■ The Blackie Sherrod Collection, by Blackie Sherrod ($14.95). Here the master of intelligence and wit presents some of his best writing culled from his popular newspaper column over the past 12 years. Anyone that reads The Dallas Morning News sports pages is familiar with Blackie. His particular style gained him notoriety at the old Fort Worth Press, and when he later moved to the Dallas Times Herald, so did his readers. Blackie has since settled at the News. He was mentor for such writers as Dan Jenkins, Bud Shrake and Gary Cartwright.

This selection of columns covers everything from "no pass, no play" to the drug problem in sports, all with that certain Sherrod sparkle.

■ The Jim Murray Collection, by Jim Murray ($14.95). Blackie gets some close competition here from Jim Murray, longtime sportswriter and columnist for the Los Angeles Times. In this anthology, Murray serves up nearly 100 columns and articles on various sports that are certain to inform and amuse.

■ The Edwin Pope Collection, by Edwin Pope ($14.95). Looks like the sportswriters have cornered the market in Dallas, a real treat for sports mavens. Here the Miami Herald veteran compiles 100 colorful pieces ranging from baseball to horse racing.

■ Reeves, by Denver Broncos' Coach Dan Reeves with Dick Connor (Bonus Books, $17.95), also hit the bookstores recently. Cowboy fans will enjoy the section describing Reeves' brief but spectacular stint with "America's Team."

All-state linebacker Richard Smith, who graduated from Wheeler High School in May, will walk-on at West Texas State University this fall, according to an article by Jim Lexa of the Amarillo Daily News.

Following the Whataburger North-South All-Star football game Tuesday, however, Smith

(5-11, 205) fears his size may limit his success in college ball. I'll be interested to follow his progress at W.T.

Join the SMU Club? Not too long ago, the NCAA sent a letter to the University of Oklahoma alleging 16 rules violations.

Now the Sooner football program may be facing new allegations concerning car financing and other extra benefits that were reportedly made available to OU players, according to the Dallas Morning News.

If the new infractions are added to the official letter, OU representatives will be forced to address the new charges when they appear before the NCAA's Committee on Infractions.

At least one of the new alleged violations centers on offers of cash or merchandise in 1985 for highly recruited receiver Hart Lee Dykes of Bay City, Texas.

Dykes, according to the Dallas Morning News, which cited an unnamed source, was offered immunity from eligibility suspension for information about recruiting violations.

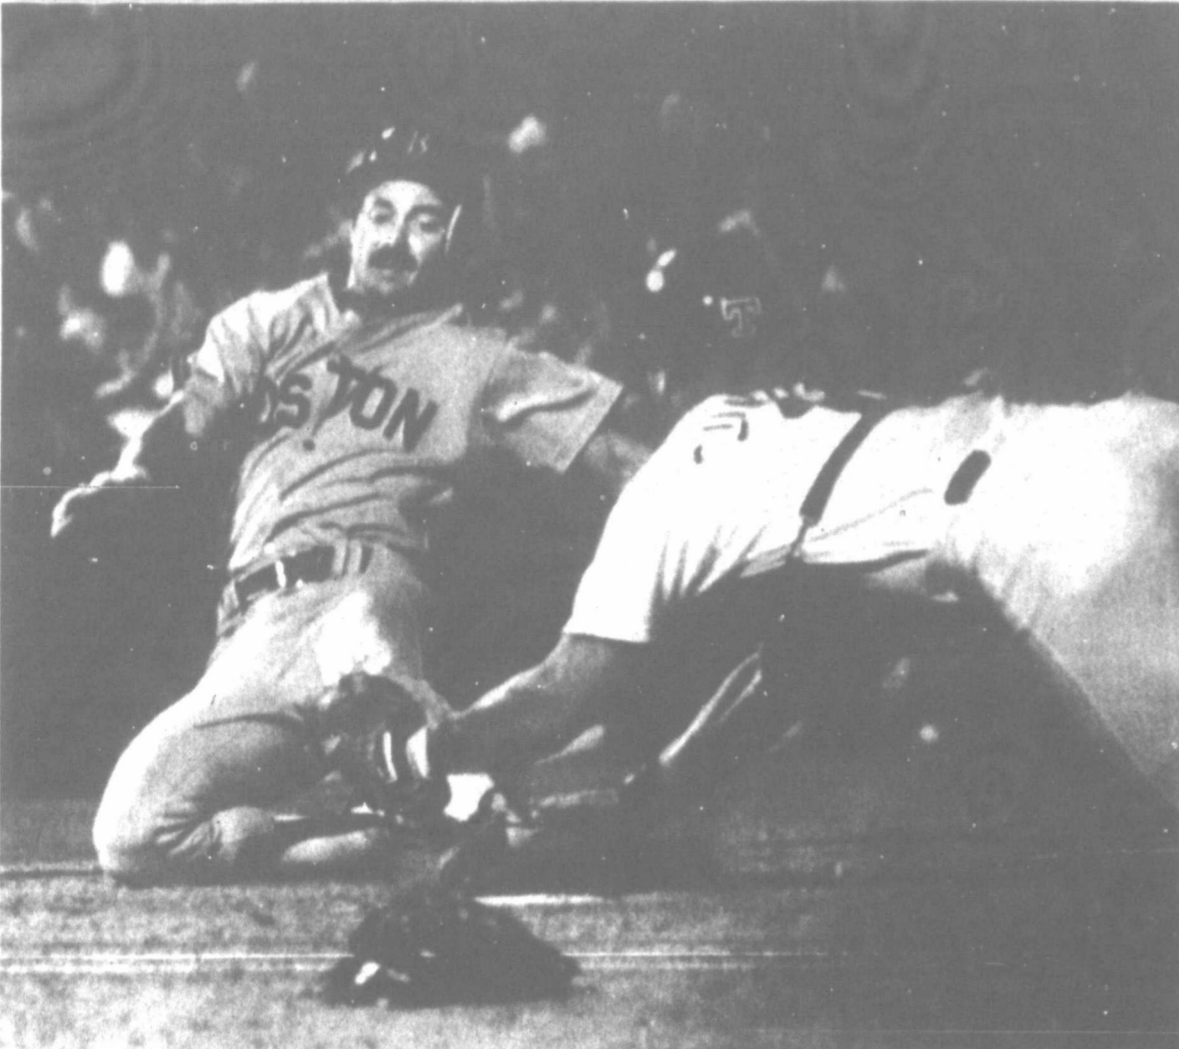

The source also said Dykes told NCAA investigators he was offered $1,000 by OU receivers coach Mike Jones just before the 1985 national signing day, and that OSU assistant coach Willie Anderson offered him a car.

OU and OSU officials are conducting their own internal investigation prior to the appearance of NCAA investigators.

In the ongoing saga of Mike Tyson, the heavyweight champ announced on Tuesday that he won't fight Frank Bruno on Sept. 3 as scheduled, although he did intimate that he might fight Bruno later this year. At the moment, Tyson is occupied by more pressing matters.

Namely his manager Bill Cayton. Still, Tyson and Cayton reached an out-of-court agreement that reduces Cayton's share of the champion's income. However, the agreement allows Cayton to remain as Tyson's manager until Feb. 11, 1992. Stay tuned for more, because you know that if the two are still coupled, can trouble be far behind?

Davis injured in Astros' win

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The Houston Astros ended their 11-game losing streak in San Diego, but there was some mourning in the locker room later.

The reason? Power-hitter Glenn Davis left the game in the second inning with a strained left hamstring. Houston went on to beat San Diego 4-1 Wednesday.

"If you asked who would be the last guy you would want to go down, you would say Glenn Davis," said winning pitcher Nolan Ryan. "He's the only legitimate power hitter we have."

Davis entered the game hitting .270 with 22 home runs and 74 RBI.

"It doesn't look real good," Houston manager Hal Lanier said. "We'll just have to wait until (Thursday) and see how it feels." Ryan, 8-7, gave up one run on six hits in seven innings. He struck out four and walked three. Dave Smith got five outs for his 17th save.

"It's a win we needed for our mental outlook," Ryan said. "We needed it because we hadn't done well here for so long."

Lanier agreed. "It's great to break that streak we were in but you can't really look back at it and worry about it. You just have to go from day to day," he said.

Kevin Bass ended his slump against Ed Whitson, hitting a pair of two-run homers for the second time this season and the fifth time in his career.

Bass connected both times against Whitson, 9-6, against whom he was 3-for-17 in his career. Whitson's career-high winning streak was stopped at six.

"I threw him a palm ball and a slider up and he hit it," Whitson said. "You got to give the hitter credit. He had a good night. Other than that, they didn't hurt me."

Bass said the pitches didn't matter as much as his mental outlook.

"When I stay back and try not to be too anxious, it doesn't matter what pitch it is, I hit it," he said.

Bass connected in the second after a single by Davis, who left for a pinch runner. In the fourth, Whitson walked Buddy Bell with one out and Bass hit his 10th home run.

San Diego scored in the second on Benito Santiago's double and Chris Brown's single.

Landry right on schedule

By FRANK LUKSA
Dallas Times Herald

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — He will be up today at 6 a.m. Read the Bible. Eat breakfast. Hold a staff meeting. Conduct morning practice. Eat lunch. Nap one hour. Watch film. Prepare for afternoon practice.

He will shower after the second workout. Eat dinner. Meet with a specialty unit. Then with the entire team. Then with his staff until 11:15 p.m. He will turn the lights out at midnight. He will be up again at 6 a.m. tomorrow. And the next day, and the day after that.

Such is Tom Landry's training camp schedule. He has held to it for 28 years as the only coach the Dallas Cowboys ever had who is allowed to sleep on the job.

Landry has earned this minor concession. He'll be 64 years old in September, and his dues are overpaid. He has been a willing exile to training camps since his rookie season in 1949. Has it been only 10,000 practices ago that he joined the NFL?

If Landry had never gone to camp, he would be 60 today. These things last five weeks on average. Five weeks times 40 — the number of times he has attended as player and coach — is 200 weeks. That's about four years Landry has spent in college dorms long after he graduated.

Training camps are pure drudgery. They are hot and tiring and repetitious. Time spent in any is as romantic as digging post holes. Work out twice a day. Meet. Watch film. Same campus. Same plays and vet players. Same coaches. All caught in an NFL version of a squirrel run.

"This is the toughest part of pro football. No one likes it," Landry said during a pre-camp chat. "But everyone knows you have to pay that price to get where you want to go. It's acceptable from that standpoint."

Training camps are the reason players retire. They rebel at more sacrifice of mind and body. The thought drove Roger Staubach into real estate, or else he might still be playing. Which proves that Roger didn't quit because of an accumulation of concussions. His beanbag had been bruised, but it still worked.

Freshmen and seventh grade boys and girls, who plan to play sports during the 1988-89 Pampa school year, must have their physicals before school starts.

Physicals will be given at the high school fieldhouse with the following schedule: ninth-grade girls, Thursday, Aug. 4, 1 p.m.; ninth-grade boys and seventh-grade boys, Thursday, Aug. 11, 1 p.m.

New students who did not participate in athletics last year, and who are in the eighth, tenth, eleventh or twelfth grades and plan on participating this year, can get their physicals during one of the above-scheduled dates.

If more information is needed, call Albert Nichols at 665-5491, Dick Dunham at 669-6722, 665-2921, 665-6758 or the athletic office at 669-6722.

Rangers lose

ARLINGTON (AP) — Boston Red Sox centerfielder Ellis Burks demonstrated Wednesday to family and friends why he's one of the most exciting young players in the American League.

Burks blasted a sixth-inning grand slam and started a three-run rally that eventually capped a Boston comeback to lead the Red Sox to their 13th victory in their last 14 starts in a 10-7 win over the Texas Rangers.

"It's nice being in the right place at the right time," Burks said. "We're hitting the ball, we've been getting great starting pitching and great relief pitching. That's what you have to do to win."

Burks had a small but vocal group of supporters Wednesday night. He lives in nearby Fort Worth during the off-season and went to high school in Everman, Texas.

"All of my family was here and all my friends from high school," he said. "I had about 15 on the pass list and 20 to 25 in the stands to see me. It was a great feeling to do well and win."

"Burks is a terrific player," said Rangers manager Bobby Valentine. "He can do everything you have to do in this game."

Kevin Romine, a seventh-inning defensive replacement, drove in the go-head run with an eighth-inning single. Romine has four RBIs this season, three game-winners.

Boston got to Texas bullpen ace Mitch Williams, 1-4, for two consecutive run-scoring hits during a three-run eighth as the Red Sox took the deciding game of the three-game series.

Burks started the two-out rally with a single and Todd Benzing followed with a run-scoring double off Ed Vandenberg.

Marcos in hiding after death threat

HONOLULU (AP) — Ousted Philippines President Ferdinand Marcos and his wife, Imelda, spent Tuesday night in hiding after their security guards reported armed men cruised past the Marcos estate, a spokesman said.

In the Philippines, government spokesman Teodoro Benigno said Wednesday he didn't know anything about the assassination report and didn't want to comment "because one of the world's master illusionists is at work."

Three cars drove slowly past the house at about 5:30 a.m. Tuesday, and security guards stationed at the gate of the sprawling hillside home said they saw guns sticking out the car windows, said Marcos' spokesman Gemmo Trinidad.

The unarmed guards, who were on foot, chased the cars but could not get a good description because it was still dark, he said. No shots were fired and no one was injured.

The Marcoses were awakened shortly after the incident and driven to a site on Oahu, said Trinidad.

"They went to a friend's house," he said. "They're still on Oahu and they'll come back as soon as it's safe."

A Honolulu police dispatcher said the incident was not reported, but top Marcos aide Arturo Aruiza said police were asked Tuesday to patrol the Marcos address regularly.

Trinidad said Marcos' entourage had received a threatening call and letter last month "warning us that something untoward will happen to us."

Aruiza said the Marcos household had been warned Tuesday of a plot to kill Marcos.
