Gorbachev says it's time to have arms treaty

Reagan, left, and Gorbachev chat before session.

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev told President Reagan today it may be "time to bang our fists on the table" to prod negotiators to conclude work on a treaty cutting strategic nuclear arms stockpiles by 50 percent.

"I'll do anything that works," the president told Gorbachev.

The Soviet leader expressed new hopes for completing a major arms treaty, but it was not clear whether he was talking about getting it done by summit's end — or merely before Reagan's term concludes next January. Soviet and American officials have said repeatedly they do not expect a strategic arms pact (START) to be concluded here.

On their third day of talks, Reagan and Gorbachev met in the Soviet leader's Kremlin office, sitting beneath a portrait of Karl Marx. After their discussions, they took an unscheduled stroll on Red Square past the tomb of Lenin and shook hands with surprised tourists.

The leaders also watched and joined in the applause as Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze signed several secondary agreements, including a pair of arms accords. Under one such pact agreed to in Moscow, the superpowers will notify each other of the time, place and intended target of intercontinental-range missiles tests.

At the Kremlin meeting, Reagan appeared to dig in his heels on his Strategic Defense Initiative missile defense plan, one of the key obstacles to agreement on a strategic arms treaty. "It's never been a part of the negotiations," he said in response to a question.

Without addressing Star Wars, Gorbachev said he was confident there would be progress on arms issues.

"And I'm sure that if the president makes good use of his time that we have remaining, I'm sure that we will be able to prepare the treaty," Gorbachev said.

At that point, a reporter asked Reagan if he, too, thought a treaty could be concluded. "Yes, I'm very pleased to hear what they're saying." Asked again if a treaty was possible, Gorbachev stepped in to answer, saying, "If that question is to me, yes I think a START treaty is possible."

The Soviet leader recalled that he and Reagan, at their first summit in Geneva in 1985, had reached an impasse at one point. He said that at that point, "the president said, 'Well, let's stamp our fists on the table.' 'I said all right,' and by morning everything was agreed, the Geneva negotiations were successfully completed."

"Maybe now it is again a time to bang our

Citizens to meet with sheriff about joining drug task force

By PAUL PINKHAM
Senior Staff Writer

A group of Pampa citizens hopes to persuade Sheriff Rufe Jordan to join them in saying no to drugs Wednesday when they meet with the sheriff and county commissioners to discuss a regional undercover narcotics effort.

The 2 p.m. meeting will follow county commissioners' regular meeting, scheduled for 9:30 a.m. Wednesday. During the morning meeting, commissioners will once again consider closing a deal with the city of Pampa for a public golf course.

About 35 citizens showed up at the commissioners' May 13 meeting to ask why Gray County is the only county in the Panhandle not participating in an Amarillo-based task force designed to battle drug trafficking in the Panhandle. The undercover task force is funded by a grant channeled through the Special Crimes Unit of the Amarillo Police Department.

Police Lt. Robert Francis of Amarillo, who heads the special unit, said contracts were sent to all 25 Panhandle sheriffs to be presented to commissioners in each county.

Sheriff Jordan hasn't presented Gray County commissioners with a copy of the agreement. Commissioners in all other Panhandle counties have passed resolutions expressing support for the program, which has already led to several busts.

Jordan has said that while he considers illegal narcotics a serious problem, he is reluctant to join the task force because he:

- worries about a potential lawsuit if undercover agents err while in Gray County;
- wants to be made aware when outside undercover agents are operating in the county;
- fears the county will have to pay to remain part of the task force if grant money dries up; and
- doesn't want to contribute to the federal budget deficit by accepting grant funds.

During the May 13 meeting, citizens asked commissioners to summon Sheriff Jordan, but the meeting was delayed until Wednesday because of commissioners' crowded agenda May 13.

Citizens at the May 13 meeting included parents, teachers, business people, retirees and church officials.

In other action Wednesday, commissioners will again consider amending their contract with the city of Pampa for a public golf course to be located north of Pampa on Texas Highway 70.

A previous agreement was questioned by a Texas Legislative Council attorney earlier this month. The attorney, Mark Brown, claimed the agreement might be unconstitutional unless the county plays a continuing role in the golf course after construction.

Commissioners had previously answered critics who said the county shouldn't be involved by stipulating in the initial agreement that, once constructed, the course would be the city's respon-

Heavy rains cause flood threat in portions of Texas Panhandle

From Staff and Wire Reports

Heavy rains drenched Pampa today as residents returned to work following the long Memorial Day weekend. Weather forecasters reported more than an inch of rain had fallen by 9:30 a.m. today and more was expected.

"We had received .55 of an inch by 6 a.m. today, and when I measured again about 9:30, we had received an additional .48 inch, making a total of 1.03 inches," said Darrell Sehorn, meteorologist for KGRO-KOMX radio in Pampa.

Though storms are heavy, no tornado activity has been associated with the thunderstorms passing through the Pampa area, Sehorn said. However, some weather watches may be posted later in the day, he said.

Today's precipitation has boosted May's total to two inches, which is 1.35 inches below normal for the month, Sehorn said. However, the yearly total of 8.88 is more than two inches above normal for the year, he added. The heavy rain expected today should put May back in the normal range, he said.

Slow-moving storms crossing the area should deposit rain throughout the day and into the night, Sehorn said, causing problems with flooding.

Strong thunderstorms roared across the Texas Panhandle early today and forecasters warned of flash flooding, high winds, dangerous lightning and hail.

Interstate 40 along the western section of Amarillo was closed because of submerged underpasses, where some vehicles were stalled, a spokeswoman for the Texas Department of Public Safety said. Some city streets also were reported to be underwater. Amarillo had received at least 4 inches of rain this morning.

The thunderstorms, being triggered by a low pressure system, followed a series of thunderstorms that spawned funnel clouds and baseball-size hail in the Panhandle Monday night.

A flash flood warning was in effect early today for Carson, Roberts, Deaf Smith, Hansford, Hutchinson, Moore, Oldham, Potter, Randall and Palmer counties in the Panhandle.

In addition to the strong thunderstorms in the Panhandle early today, scattered showers were reported in South Texas from the middle Rio Grande plains to the Coastal Bend.

At 10 a.m. forecasters said there were strong thunderstorms indicated on radar along a line from just northeast of Skellytown to Amarillo to East of Clovis, N.M. The strongest thunderstorms, moving east, were located near Skellytown, just west of Dimmitt and southeast of Muleshoe.

"It's lightning pretty bad right now and it's been raining cats and dogs," said Sherry Daves, Skellytown city secretary. She said the storm appeared to be intensifying at about 9:30 a.m., but reported no hail.

While heavy rain and flooding plagued the western Panhandle, residents of the eastern Panhandle reported clear skies. Doyle Smith, superintendent of Wheeler Independent School district, said it was clear in Wheeler early

New immigration employment law earns mixed reviews

By RICK GLADSTONE
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Hyatt Hotel Corp. executives are basking in government praise for compliance with the new immigration law, which makes it illegal to knowingly hire undocumented aliens.

But with Wednesday's enforcement deadline looming, a Mexican fast-food chain in Texas fears raids by the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

And in Southern California, a waterbed-frame factory is challenging what it calls abusive and arbitrary INS inspection tactics, in the first significant court test of the law's sweeping employer-sanction provisions.

Some say the agency has shown extraordinary tolerance and the new documentation requirements for employees are only a minor nuisance. Others contend immigration officers have failed to educate businesses, and the paperwork is horrendously confusing.

"My sense is that many employers aren't complying with the law," said Ilene F. Lainer, an immigration specialist at a Roseland, N.J., law firm. Stuart H. Bompey, an immigration lawyer here, said large employers are complying because they have the resources to efficiently keep records.

"The little guy who runs the small garment shop or something like that, probably isn't in compliance and won't be in compliance," he said.

Some like Ronald Klasko, president-elect of the American Immigration Lawyers Association, predict the INS will stage zealous enforcement raids after Wednesday's expiration of the 11-month phase-in, during which it only issued warnings to first offenders and stressed voluntary compliance.

The November 1986 Immigration Reform and Control Act requires the nation's 8 million employers to document the legal status of employees hired after the law was signed, with a form called the I-9. Employers must fire those who cannot prove work eligibility.

Employer penalties range from $250 to $2,000 per worker for first offenses, to $10,000 per worker and 6 months in prison for repeated violations. Failure to do the paperwork can result in $100 to $1,000 fines per violation.

INS spokesman Duke Austin said visits to employers nationwide suggest that about 90 percent are in compliance or nearly so.

"We're encouraged by that, because we know the only way this law is going to work will be to have compliance," Austin said. "We don't have the resources to visit 8 million employers."

Despite earlier grumblings about an additional bureaucratic nuisance, some large employers are now praising the INS for explaining how the law works.

The INS, in turn, has sought to establish good relationships with many businesses and publicly compliments model followers of the law.

For example Chicago-based Hyatt lost its initial fear about its ability to employ qualified workers after it asked for INS assistance. Hyatt, which like other big hotel chains historically has attracted undocumented aliens for low-pay positions, even received an award from the agency.

Some smaller businesses also have found it relatively easy to comply after initial complaints.

Murray Rosenzweig, president of Linden Maintenance Corp., a New York taxi company, once said the law would be a nightmare because of his constantly changing work force.

"It hasn't developed into a major problem anymore," he said recently. "It's become more of a routine, not a burden as I see it."

At El Pato Mexican Food Enterprises in McAllen, Texas, manager Ralph Nunez worries about surprise inspections at the fast food chain.

"We've been trying our darndest to comply," he said. "But what if they come in unannounced while a recently hired person is working for us and we still don't have the proper documentation in our office? If they're going to pounce on us, then we're in trouble."

INS tactics have been the focus of a court case in which Mester Manufacturing, a 70-worker waterbed-frame maker in El Cajon, Calif., challenged the agency's determination that it knowingly and repeatedly hired illegals.

Arguments before an administrative law judge revealed that INS officers who searched the factory might have abused their authority and ignored earlier company requests for help in complying with the law.

"The judge was pretty disgusted with a lot of this stuff," said attorney Peter Larrabee. "They're trying to stick it to employers."

War dead are remembered across Texas

By The Associated Press

As Texans gathered to honor the nation's war dead, there was talk in Austin about how attitudes have changed towards the Vietnam war and criticism that Memorial Day has been turned into a day for department store sales and not for recalling the sacrifices from past conflicts.

Texans paid tribute to the state's war dead Monday with ceremonies at various locations around the state.

At Austin, attendance was good during a ceremony at Austin's first Vietnam Veterans' monument, a sharp contrast to the day in 1971 when it was dedicated at a time when anti-war feelings were at a fever pitch. Only a handful of people attended the dedication.

"When we first put up the monument, the war was unpopular, so hardly anyone attended the ceremony," said Nash Martinez, president of the East Austin Lion's Club, which sponsored Monday's observance. "No one had done anything to honor the Vietnam War veterans."

"Now, with all the movies about Vietnam, it is a much more popular subject," Martinez said. "People have changed their attitudes about what Vietnam was all about."

Representatives of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Catholic War Veterans and the Texas Association of Vietnam Veterans were on hand in East Austin.

Guests of honor at the observance were Alfonso and Petra Garcia, who laid a wreath in front of the granite monument in memory of their son, Joe Robert Garcia, who was killed in Vietnam in 1969.

Relatives of Garcia recalled that the young man attended Travis High School and worked at a gas station to help his family make ends meet. He enlisted in the Army as a medic in June 1968.

On June 4, 1969, while helping a wounded buddy under fire, Joe Garcia was killed. He was 22.

"He was a very conscientious person who believed in everything that is good," said Carmen Bustamante, a sister of the dead soldier. "That's what is so hard to accept, even today. It seems like yesterday. He is still a part of our family. We think about him often."

"He was always a very good person who never gave our family any trouble," she said. "We miss him so much."

Samuel Bier of the Disabled American Veterans and the American EX-POW's, told a crowd at the Capitol that Memorial Day has lost meaning for many people, who know the day for department stores' end-of-spring sales rather than its intended purpose.

"I see in the paper that the day is being used for marketing purposes," he said. "It's hard to determine that this is a day to honor our veterans."

In Dallas, nine-year-old Randi Wheeler came with her family to pay tribute to an uncle she never met, Danny Curry, who died in a helicopter crash in Japan during the Vietnam War.

But when she laid a poem at her uncle's grave Monday during a Memorial Day service at Restland Memorial Park, Randi left a message louder than the 21-gun salute or fly-over by Air Force jets.

"I love you very much. I'm sorry you had to die. I hope God takes care of you," read part of the poem that was written on cardboard and surrounded by a dozen small U.S. flags. "I really don't know you, but I wish I did. I wish you were alive standing next to me right now so I could see you."

As speakers made their patriotic speeches at Restland, Mary Smith of Dallas stood silently against a tree, away from the crowd.

Her husband, Earl, was in the Army in France when a war wound left him nearly crippled until his death two years ago.

"He never regretted being in the Army," said Mrs. Smith. "It was something that had to be done, and you do what you have to."

Mrs. Smith said she had not attended the ceremonies until her husband's death but said it was "real nice that at least they remember (veterans) sometimes. Sometimes I don't think we remember things when we should."

While many gathered at cemeteries and monuments around the state, other Texans took advantage of the long holiday weekend to visit parks and beaches.

In central Texas a flash flood prompted the evacuation of 3,000 campers. No injuries were reported.

No fatalities were reported following a flood in Comal County Sunday night, although officials had to evacuate about 3,000 campers at a park below Canyon Lake.

"We had kind of a flash flood up there around the lake. It has caused the river to come on a 12 to 15 foot rise," said Sheriff Walter Sellers.

No trouble was reported on heavily populated Galveston beaches.

Vietnamese refugees looking past high school graduation

FORT WORTH (AP) — Hiep Pham, 19, and his sister, Huong Pham, 18, left Saigon by boat on Nov. 26, 1983, with their uncle.

The next year, they spent shuffling from refugee camps in Malaysia to the Philippines.

They eventually arrived in the United States, settling in Fort Worth, and are among 373 scheduled to graduate Thursday from Fort Worth Paschal High School.

Like many high school students, they are eagerly anticipating graduation and planning their future.

But unlike other students, the Pham siblings received a very different education in war-torn Vietnam, where they learned first-hand of the tragedy of leaving their family to escape to the United States, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported.

Both recalled their life and family in Vietnam. They remembered family picnics on the sugar-white beach of Nha Trang, the lush vegetation of Vietnam and their mother's face.

They also remembered the fall of Saigon in 1975.

"Airplanes came right across my house, bombs all around," Hiep said. "Noise, a lot, shooting guns. And cannons, big cannons."

When they left Vietnam, "I didn't know anything ... about America," Huong said. "My mother asked if I wanted to go ... I have never seen my mother and father again."

"My father is a gemologist," Hiep said. "We had a jewelry store. My mother and one of my brothers have a business distributing meat. Our family has seven boys and four girls. Huong and I are the only ones here."

The Pham children are now young adults who have worked hard to earn the diplomas they will receive. Since late 1985, Hiep has worked 45 to 60 hours a week at three convenience store-gas stations.

"I get off from school at 2 and go directly to work," he said. "I do my homework while I work, usually. I get off at 11 p.m., get home at 11:30 and eat dinner. If I need, I study for one or two hours more."

Dolores Archie, who heads the Paschal language center, said Hiep is an excellent student who will graduate with honors. He is considering entering a predoctoral program at the University of Texas at Arlington this fall. He may take his studies to Kilgore Junior College in East Texas to become a gemologist, like his father.

Huong is a shy student who excels in math. She plans to attend Tarrant County Junior College to become a business major, possibly to pursue a career in accounting.

Adjusting to their new life was not as easy as their present success might indicate.

"When we first came to Fort Worth, we lived in a duplex and people kept breaking in and stealing. I was afraid for my sister," Hiep said.

Today, they live in an apartment with their uncle. Hiep has managed to save enough money to vacation this summer in California, Minnesota and Canada. "Huong is going, too," he said.

While the brother and sister are happy with present life, they still hope they will return to Vietnam someday.

"If the communists leave, we will go home," Hiep said.

Just a few feet would have made a difference for pilot

HORIZON CITY (AP) — Many in a crowd of thousands were unaware when a plane disappeared during an aerobatic performance at a Memorial Day weekend air show that it had crashed, killing the pilot.

But Jerry Lynn Fowler, 29, of Pecos, Texas, was killed Sunday morning when his Pitts S25 biplane missed pulling out of a loop, crashed into the ground and skidded into a lake, said Bob Newman of the Department of Public Safety.

Just a few feet could have made the difference between life and death for Fowler, a stunt pilot with the Bob Sears Air Show of Sweetwater, Texas, officials said.

At least 2,000 people at Mountain Shadow Lakes witnessed the accident, which occurred about a mile on the other side of the man-made, private reservoir from where the spectators were assembled for a balloon festival and air show. The park is near Horizon City, about 20 miles east of El Paso.

Hundreds of people gathered at water's edge to try to see what happened, but all that could be seen was a cloud of dust where the airplane had hit the ground and skidded into the water across the lake. The crowds dispersed in about five minutes.

The lake's public address system was silent on the subject of the crash, and spectators did not know what happened to the pilot.

"He just went too low and made contact with the ground, then all you saw was dust flying everywhere," said Juan Rodriguez of El Paso.

Fowler, 29, of Pecos, Texas, had been performing stunts for about 10 minutes before the crash. He performed several loops, coming closer and closer to the water each time. Once he pulled out of a loop about 10 feet above the water, then executed a barrel roll in which the wings almost touched the lake's surface.

On the last maneuver, he tried pulling out of a loop over the ground. The plane hit the desert floor about 250 feet from the lake's bank, then skidded about 110 feet into about 18 feet of water, Newman said.

"He nearly pulled out of it, from what I understand," he said. "He was sliding in just like if he had come in for a landing, like he didn't have any landing gear. In other words, he nearly made it. It was a case of a split-second of timing or something just went wrong. ... Probably if he hadn't skidded off into the water, he might have survived."

Fowler's body was recovered about noon, 90 minutes after the accident. Officials said rescuers reported a gasoline spill, and the lake was closed to swimming the rest of the afternoon.

Medical examiner Manny Diaz pronounced Fowler dead at 1:27 p.m.

Trial begins for youth in officer's death

WAXAHACHIE (AP) — After a long jury-selection process, the trial of a teen-ager accused of killing an undercover Midlothian police officer was scheduled to begin today.

Greg Knighten, 17, a Midlothian High School student, is charged in the shooting death of 21-year-old George Raffield. Raffield was shot in a rural area south of Midlothian on Oct. 23.

Raffield was an undercover officer assigned to pose as a high school student to investigate drug deals within the school.

Three other Midlothian residents have been charged in Raffield's death in what police said was a conspiracy.

Richard Goeglein and Jonathon Jobe, both 17, face capital murder charges. Cynthia Fedrick, 23, is charged with solicitation of capital murder.

Midlothian is about 25 miles southwest of Dallas. District Judge Gene Knize twice denied motions by defense attorney Joe Grubbs to move Knighten's trial out of Ellis County because of widespread publicity.

Meet the burro — the pet rock of the late '80s

DALLAS (AP) — One woman calls it "the Pet Rock of the 80s," but this latest is a furry fad that's a little more animated when burrowing its way into trendy hearts.

"There's lots of emotional attachment," says DeeDee King, who handles federal burro adoptions from her Liberty Hill ranch in the Hill Country. "They're an integral part of our Western heritage."

Ms. King says she has a waiting list for burros — smallish relatives of donkeys that stand less than 4 feet high at the shoulders — of 300 people willing to pay $75 for one of the animals.

Not that burros are a whole lot smarter than the pet rocks that snagged the nation's eye in the 1970s: "There's not much you can do with them besides love them and let them love you," says Roy Gregory of Dallas, who keeps eight burros on his ranch south of Cleburne.

Ms. King has nevertheless placed about 700 burros in three years through the American Mustang and Burro Association, a private adoption agency, and another 300 through a program run by a division of the Department of the Interior.

The federal government's "adopt-a-burro" program was started in 1976.

Memorial Day weekend brings traffic fatalities

By The Associated Press

Traffic accidents had claimed at least 21 lives as Texans returned home from outings during the long Memorial Day holiday weekend, authorities said.

The toll had reached 21 by late Monday as the weekend drew to a close.

The deaths include three people thrown from the back of a pickup while the driver was drag racing on a Dallas street. The 14-year-old driver in that wreck had taken his parents' car without permission, Dallas police Lt. Willie Craven said Sunday.

In the drag racing accident, 15 people ranging in age from 12 to 22 had climbed into the vehicles before the race along Maple Avenue in central Dallas, including seven who were riding in the bed of the pickup, Craven said.

The car and truck bumped and both went out of control, each striking telephone poles on opposite sides of the roadway, Craven said.

Killed in the wreck shortly after midnight were Jose Vital, 17, and Cerillo Hernandez, 21, who were both pronounced dead at the scene, he said. Elpidio Perez, 19, died about 1 a.m. at Parkland Memorial Hospital, a spokeswoman said.

"People wouldn't put their fine china in the back of a truck, and yet they would put the most precious possession, which is another human life," Craven said.

Guadalupe Cruz, 13, was the only one of the injured to remain at Parkland and was in serious condition Monday, a spokeswoman said.

Also on Sunday evening, Thomas Edward Robinson, 26, died when his motorcycle slid under a pickup truck on a farm-to-market road south of Waco, authorities said.

A 23-month-old girl, Adel Munoz, was killed when a car driven by her 13-year-old brother stuck her in the driveway at their Houston home Sunday afternoon.

A 16-year-old Lampasas high school sophomore was killed in a one-car accident Sunday. Phillip Aaron McCarthy apparently fell asleep at the wheel and his car ran off the State Highway 281 about 10 miles north of Burnet, law officials said.

Earlier in the weekend, 15 people died in traffic accidents across the state.

Search begins for new Southwest Texas president

SAN-MARCOS (AP) — The faculty, deans and students will have a say in who is selected as the new president of Southwest Texas State University, the chairman of the Texas State University System regents said.

Jack Martin, an Austin businessman, said he canvassed other regents last week about how to choose a successor to Robert L. Hardesty, who was fired by the board May 19 on a 5-4 vote.

"The consensus was that we need to have a selection process that includes representatives of the faculty, deans and students, alumni and the local community," Martin said.

Martin was in San Marcos to address the university Instructional Council, a 40-member group of academic department chairpersons and co-chairs. Some of the university deans also attended.

Martin said a committee of 10 to 15 members will be asked to nominate some candidates for a final decision by the regents, who govern Southwest Texas and three other state universities.

The search committee will include "three or four regents" and two representatives of "the local community," Martin said. Deans and faculty will choose their own representatives on the committee, and students will probably be represented by student body president Lee Brandt, Martin said.

The firing of Hardesty, 56, after 6½ years as SWT president was denounced by state and local elected officials and by student and faculty groups at the university.

Martin voted against the motion to fire Hardesty and took over as regents chairman the next day.

Former Chairman Ruben Escobedo of San Antonio said Hardesty was fired because of "philosophical differences" with the board majority. None of the regents who voted to fire Hardesty, including Escobedo, have said what the differences were.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

It's time to start working on SDI

House Democrats are skewing figures to limit the amount of Pentagon spending for Strategic Defense Initiative. The Reagan administration, which requested the larger amount, pretty much asked for it. The overall size of the Pentagon budget is not at issue. Last November's budget agreement between Reagan and congressional leaders stipulated that defense spending would be $299 billion. That amounts to a 0.6 percent cut (factoring in inflation) from last year's budget, and a 10 percent cut from the 1985 defense budget.

In its defense budget bill passed this month, the House approved only $3.5 billion for SDI, a $500 million cut from last year's budget, and $1.4 billion below the $4.9 billion requested. The request is even $1.1 billion below the $4.6 billion the Senate approved. "Numbers that low could be crippling" to the SDI program, commented National Security Adviser Colin Powell. "It is an outcome the president cannot accept."

Yet the president is partly at fault. His current pursuit of a new detente with Moscow generates a climate of illusion about our defense needs. Suspicions continue that the summit might result in a trade of SDI for his START arms control pact. Reagan has tried to scotch those suspicions. Yet they remain because he refuses to order that the simpler parts of SDI, using already developed technology, be constructed immediately. Given this vacillation, it's not surprising that the House has taken matters into its own hands.

Yet the House, as well as the more realistic Senate, should be taking the opposite tack. They should vote to begin building parts of SDI. Indeed, Senate Armed Services Committee Chairman Sam Nunn has more or less suggested this. He has many disagreements about the SDI. But Nunn points out that, since later amendments to the 1972 ABM treaty allow each side to build one ABM system, and the Soviets have built theirs, we should build the one allowed us.

This is wise and prudent. Evidence keeps piling up of Soviet violations of the ABM treaty. Sooner or later even liberals and Reaganites mesmerized by the new detente will recognize that the treaty has become worthless, and that the Soviets are pursuing their own Red Star Wars system at breakneck speed. America will be better able to respond to that reality by expanding SDI research and constructing Nunn's proposed ABM system.

Despite the cooings between Reagan and Gorbachev, the reality remains that the Soviets cannot be trusted. For defending our country, we should depend on American enterprise and know-how, not on the Kremlin's always-broken promises.

Of Bush, beer and ex-wives

Stephen Chapman

An old country-western song suggested, "If you want to keep the beer real cold, put it next to my ex-wife's heart." To George Bush, looking at the latest polls, the whole electorate seems to be composed of ex-wives.

Despite a smoothly running economy, an outwardly unimposing rival and his association with a popular two-term president, the Vice President goes down with voters like yesterday's coffee. A New York Times-CBS News poll found Michael Dukakis with 49 percent of the vote and Bush with just 39.

The ethnic Northeasterner, who was not supposed to travel well, leads in every region. In vote-rich California, which the GOP has carried in eight of the last nine presidential elections, a Los Angeles Times poll shows Dukakis with a 52-36 lead. One-third of voters who approve of President Reagan's performance nonetheless reject his appointed heir.

The reason isn't infatuation with Dukakis but distaste for Bush. Candidates normally count it a plus merely to be known by the voters. Bush, however, has the problem once ascribed to California Gov. Jerry Brown: Every voter he meets, said his opponent in one election, is two votes for me. More than one of every three voters reports an "unfavorable" opinion of Bush, compared with one in seven who feels that way about Dukakis. That's a bad omen for Bush. It's easier to persuade voters to vote for someone they're indifferent to than someone they already dislike.

His experience in foreign affairs, which his campaign sees as a great advantage over his opponent, has proven to be nothing of the sort. Despite his stints as ambassador to China and the United Nations and his service as CIA director, a formidable 55 percent of Americans say they are uneasy about how Bush would handle an international crisis. When the words "Bush" and "foreign affairs" appear in the same sentence, they remind voters of arms for hostages.

Bush has undoubtedly suffered from the declining fortunes of the President. But for the last two months, he has been spared the daily battering of the campaign trail, which can debilitate even a victorious candidate. Dukakis only recently achieved the status of inevitability, and he still has to contend with Jesse Jackson.

Jackson's criticism probably does Dukakis more good than harm, by making him look sensibly moderate. Upon hearing Jackson chastise the Massachusetts governor for not challenging Reaganomics, no liberal critic of Reaganomics is going to rise up in fury and mail a check to Bush. But partial admirers of Reaganomics may decide Dukakis is safe. Bush would like to paint Dukakis as a McGovernite. The longer the real McGovernite stays in the race, the harder that will be.

The danger to Dukakis lies in what price Jackson puts on his vigorous support. NAACP executive director Benjamin Hooks warns darkly of what may happen "if Jesse should be mistreated, maltreated, ignored, overlooked, or treated contemptuously by the party in Atlanta."

Not much chance of that. Unfortunately for Dukakis, his rival probably expects more than mere civility. Dukakis has to find a way to convince those who voted for Jackson that he shares Jesse's goals, while assuring those who voted against Jackson that he doesn't.

The dilemma severely complicates the selection of a running mate. Georgia Sen. Sam Nunn is the logical choice for a nominee who needs help with moderate and conservative voters — particularly in the South, which has become the foundation of GOP presidential success. But will Jackson stand for it? And if he won't, will it matter?

Once the convention is over, Bush will find it easier to get across his message: If you think I'm bad, wait till you get to know the other guy. One reason for Dukakis' strength is his centrist image. Only 27 percent of the voters regard him as a liberal. As his policies gain more attention, that figure will rise, and his support may drop.

Still, Bush is not running only against Dukakis. His more formidable enemy is a widespread disenchantment with the policies of the Reagan era, which may overwhelm any doubts about the Democratic nominee.

A shrewd and imaginative candidate might find a way to satisfy the desire for change even while occupying the office of vice president. Bush is like a restaurant waiter who responds to complaints about the food by offering free seconds.

Front porches ease tensions

I was driving through the outskirts of the city the other day and I saw a man sitting on a front porch.

It was an older house and he was an older man. Modern houses don't have front porches anymore and even if they did, younger men have far too much to do than sit on them.

I'm not certain when the front porch all but disappeared from American life, but it probably was about the same time television and air conditioning were being installed in most every home.

Why sit out on the porch where it's hot and you can get mosquito-bit when you can sit inside where it's comfort-cooled and watch Ozzie and Harriet?

Even if an architect designs a porch today, it's usually placed in the back of the house where the hot tub is.

If we do venture out of our houses today, it's usually to get in the hot tub.

If Americans continue to spend all that time in their hot tubs, we may all eventually shrink down like the Lilliputians and become prunelike from boiling ourselves one too many times.

Lewis Grizzard

I grew up in my grandparents' home. They had a front porch, we spent a lot of time sitting on it.

My grandmother would shell butter beans. My grandfather would listen for trains.

"There comes the mail train to Montgomery," he'd say, pulling his watch out of his watch pocket. "She's running four minutes late."

I learned a lot sitting on the front porch with my grandparents. How to shell butter beans. How to find the Big Dipper. How to wait for a mosquito to alight and then slap that sucker dead. What a pleasure it is to listen for trains.

Our neighbors often dropped by and sat on the porch with us.

"It was awful what happened to Norvell Tenny, wasn't it?" a neighbor would say. "What happened to him?" my grandmother would ask, looking up from her butter beans. "Got three fingers cut clean off down at the sawmill."

Something else I learned on the front porch — not to include sawmilling in my future.

But even my grandparents eventually moved inside. They bought a television and enclosed the front porch and made it a den.

My grandfather enjoyed westerns. My grandmother never missed a Billy Graham sermon or a televised wrestling match. The mail train to Montgomery had to get along by itself after that.

Perhaps if front porches came back and people started sitting on them again, we'd learn to relax more and talk to one another more and being bitten by a mosquito would at least be some contact with nature.

I probably should have stopped and talked to the old man on the porch and gotten his opinion on all of this.

I would have, too, but I was late for my tee time.

Southern hospitality really isn't that easy

By SARAH OVERSTREET

Summertime, and the livin' is easy. Fish are jumpin', and the cotton is high. Your cousin's rich, and her guest room's good-lookin'. So, hush, little relative, don't you cry.

My best friend comes in the morning, for three days, with her one-year-old. I'm trying to work up a gracious greeting, the one my mom used for summer visitors where she smiled so hard it made her eyes squinch up and you couldn't see the terror in them. But I'm having a harder time than usual, because I just waved good-bye to an older brother who lived here on his spring "few days off" like a kid at camp. Only this time, the counselor in charge of Recreation was me, and he wouldn't cooperate. He wouldn't tool a leather billfold, grill eggs on a tin can or go on a nature hike. He would, however, follow me around like a dog, watch the clock until I got off work, and wait for the dinner bell down at the camp kitchen.

And I have reason to be apprehensive. My friend tells me her baby is walking everywhere, likes to chew on electrical cords and will probably wait a lot for his daddy, who's staying home. "Oh, but don't worry, he's the best baby, otherwise," she says. "Just make sure you don't leave anything plugged in."

Maybe being on the scenic vacation route wouldn't be so bad, but I am employed by a television station that allows no days off in either May or July, those being "sweeps" months as well as prime vacation-travel months. The management has explained "sweeps" to me as being times that people with viewer diaries in their homes either watch Us or Them, so Us have to really scramble so that They don't watch Them. What it means to me personally is that if I die, the management sends a car around for the body and props me up on the set anyway.

There's no time for entertaining guests who have nothing but time. I think I might be able to take summer company in stride, even while I'm working a 60-hour week, if my mother hadn't been from the South. There, hospitality is a birthright, something to be more proud of than straight teeth. I've seen her work all night at the railroad station, then come home to the visiting kin and cook up apple pie, mashed potatoes and pan-fried pork chops. At the end of the week, too tired to wash her face, I've still seen her hang on their car as they leave, gasping out, "What's your hurry? No need to rush off!"

My relatives and friends know I am her daughter. They can't imagine such a sparkling hostess with a slovenly kid who can't stock the freezer or put clean sheets on the guest bed before they pull up in the drive. They don't understand why I wouldn't want to, once again, park 3,000-automobiles-away from the entrance to our nearby theme park, plow through a sea of sweaty, whining bodies, and see it for the 429th time. They can't comprehend the mentality of someone who saves every Saturday just to wash underwear, whose idea of a pleasant Sunday is a four-hour nap. So they come, and I try.

Which brings me to the subject of where I will spend my own vacation. My brother ought to be just about in full-swing down at his job by the time I roll into town wondering when dinner is. At least with him, I can use the Mom guilt. "Remember the time Mom cocked supper for all the folks after the car ran over her and the stray dogs ate her groceries?"

Or perhaps it will be the bevy of cousins, all from the South with the same dreaded legacy to uphold, who don't have any better sense than to come home from work, fix me pan-fried pork chops, and hang on the car when I leave.

One thing about vacations, and guests. When you're from the South, paybacks are murder.

Organ donations down, doctors and consent laws blamed

CHICAGO (AP) — With organ donations declining and more Americans than ever awaiting transplants, specialists are begging doctors to make better use of consent laws designed to persuade families to consider donations.

"There is a large faction of the profession that has never wanted to have anything to do with this (transplant) business," said Dr. Lawrence G. Hunsicker, president of the American Society of Transplant Physicians, whose annual meeting begins today.

"Over and over again, we hear from a donor's family that they are glad they gave and others say they wish they had had the chance," he said. "And yet the profession is not responding."

Federal law requires hospitals to have a protocol for approaching the families of brain-dead patients about the possibility of organ donation. Forty-four states also have versions of the statute.

The overall results are not impressive.

Fewer kidney and heart-lung transplants were performed nationwide in 1987 than in 1986, according to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. And although there were a record number of heart, liver and pancreas transplants in 1987, the increase did not keep pace with previous years.

Figures for 1988 are not yet available, but organ donations appear to be down by up to 10 percent, said Dr. John McDonald, president of the American Society of Transplant Surgeons and the United Network for Organ Sharing.

"The problem is that they (hospitals) often have the wrong people asking in order to comply with the law," said Roger Evans, senior research scientist at the Battelle Seattle Research Center.

Doctors are big offenders, experts say.

"They've got to be the hardest group in the world to educate. Once they're out of medical school, it's like they're on remote control," said Faye Davis, executive director of the New York Regional Transplant Program.

"You cannot make a doctor do something he doesn't want to do... and there are lots of reasons why he doesn't think it's appropriate to ask Mrs. Jones for her husband's organs," Hunsicker said. "They think it takes a lot of time, that it will be a nuisance and they don't get anything out of it."

Some physicians tell patients' next of kin, "I know you don't want to do this, but the law says I have to ask you if you want to be a donor," Ms. Davis said.

Others approach distraught families too quickly. About 20 percent of the California Transplant Donor Network's calls about potential donors, for instance, come from emergency rooms.

"That's awfully early to make a decision about a person being brain-dead," a condition in which the brain no longer functions but the body is sustained by machine, said Phyllis Weber, executive director of the San Francisco-based network.

Part of the problem, in general, is that "dying and death are taboo subjects" among health-care professionals, said John Kiernan, administrator of the organ recovery program for the Presbyterian Hospital in New York City.

"It seems to me we might do a better job of requesting donations if these requests are made within the context of an effective bereavement program," he said.

In addition to poorly implemented consent laws, experts say, the supply of healthy organs has been reduced as recent safety measures — including seat belt and motorcycle helmet laws — have cut down on the number of premature deaths. The pool of potential organ donors also has been reduced in places by the growing number of people testing positive for the AIDS virus.

Only about 4,000 of the estimated 22,000 to 25,000 potential organ donors actually become donors each year, Evans said.

A record 14,720 people, meanwhile, are awaiting transplants in the United States, said William Vaughn, technical services director for the United Network for Organ Sharing.

Meese denies that he's a campaign liability; Demos weigh Jackson role

By The Associated Press

Attorney General Edwin Meese III, whose legal troubles have provided the Democrats with ready ammunition against George Bush, says he believes his Justice Department record will be an asset to the Republicans this fall. Bush, meanwhile, says Meese has promised not to do anything to jeopardize his campaign.

Democrats Michael Dukakis and Jesse Jackson, for their part, agreed that Jackson would play a major part in Dukakis' expected fall campaign against Bush. But both said the nature of that role hadn't yet been worked out.

The three candidates were bracing for the last big test of the long primary season — the round of contests one week from today in California, New Jersey, Montana and New Mexico.

The two Democrats both campaigned over Memorial Day weekend in New Jersey, and both prepared to head for California later in the week. Bush was at his summer home in Kennebunkport, Maine, where he has been holding meetings with advisers and mulling over strategy for the fall campaign.

Bush has been taking a beating in recent public opinion surveys matching him against Dukakis. He has said Reagan administration controversies were probably partly to blame for his showing.

Bush hasn't singled out Meese as one of those sore points, but both Jackson and Dukakis have harshly criticized the attorney general, who is under criminal investigation, and urged him to quit.

The vice president, who has refused to call for Meese's resignation, confirmed Monday that the two recently met privately.

Bush declined to detail what was discussed, but when asked if Meese had promised to keep from hurting his campaign, he told reporters: "Yes, yes, I think it's fair to say that."

Meese, in an interview on CNN on Monday night, said he and Bush had "talked frankly about the campaign," and said he believed it would harm Bush if he were to step down at this time.

"If I were to quit now, for example, it would be a real liability because people would say there was something wrong," said the attorney general. "I think it's important to George Bush... as well as myself that the record be set straight."

However, in the interview on the "Larry King Live" show, Meese left open the possibility that he might leave office by the end of the summer.

Bush says he doesn't want to comment on the Meese matter until after an independent counsel's report is issued.

The mania for state symbols

By The Associated Press

The nation's legislators are having their usual headaches over budgets and taxes, but they've also found time this year to debate the merits of key lime pie in Florida, banana slugs in California and gold in them thar Black Hills.

It's all part of the perennial mania for naming official state symbols for just about everything under the sun, from state song to state insect.

Supporters say the custom can boost tourism, get young people involved in the political process and provide harmless comic relief for lawmakers.

Opponents say it wastes time and money and makes legislators look foolish.

"It gets so tense in there sometimes. It's just too much," said Rep. Mary Vanderlinde in South Dakota, where this year's Legislature designated the triceratops, a plant-eating dinosaur, as the official fossil and Black Hills gold as the official jewelry.

"This livens it up, and then people will relax and get back to work."

Black Hills gold was honored for its economic importance to South Dakota. The mining industry employs about 500 people.

Minutes after the gold measure was passed by the House in January, lawmakers adopted a second, tongue-in-cheek resolution naming Vanderlinde the state's official jewel because she takes gold shots for arthritis.

"Everybody's human, they enjoy a little touch of lightheartedness like anyone else," said Elaine Knapp, an editor who helps keep track of official state symbols for the Council of State Governments in Lexington, Ky.

"Sometimes it becomes a tool for schoolkids to become involved in state government and lobby the legislature," Mrs. Knapp said. "It can also be a recognition of certain things that are indigenous to the state."

The latter was the case in Rhode Island, where the Legislature voted last year to designate the quahog, the Narragansett Indian name for clam, as the state shellfish. The idea was pushed by a junior high school shell club.

"We are a tourist state... and we are an ocean state and if for no other reason, we should recognize our fishing industry," said Sen. Jennie D. Day, the bill's sponsor. "It's quite serious. It wasn't done in jest."

The measure has stalled in the Senate, where Rules Chairman Dempsey Barron favors sweet potato pie more common to the Panhandle.

Gray raises money to campaign for House leadership position

WASHINGTON (AP) — The big money from special interest groups that has caused Congress to flirt with campaign finance reform is openly making its appearance in the three-way race for a House Democratic leadership position.

Rep. William Gray, D-Pa., is soliciting money to bankroll his candidacy for the chairmanship of the Democratic caucus — an unpaid insider's job with a principal duty of conducting closed-door meetings on party strategy and policy.

Gray, chairman of the Budget Committee, is the first person to openly bring active fund-raising and spending into a race for a leadership post, according to House members and veteran Capitol Hill staffers.

The money provided by political action committees, Washington lobbyists and other contributors will be given to Democrats to help their campaigns for election to the House, according to Gray.

In contrast, his caucus chair rivals — Reps. Mary Rose Oaker, D-Ohio, and Mike Synar, D-Okla. — say they are running low-key and low-budget campaigns for the job, which ranks just behind speaker and majority leader in the Democratic hierarchy and is now filled by Rep. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo.

"I'm not raising money for my caucus chair race," says Oaker. "I've been going to (House) members, just like I go door to door at home... I don't think winning the job or any office in the House is dependent on how much money we pass out."

"We are running on our own merits," Synar says. "The major expense for us will be coffee and donuts."

It is not unusual for representatives and senators seeking leadership jobs to make contributions to the political campaigns of colleagues, either from their own campaign funds or from their own "leadership" PACs.

But until now, all of them, including Gray, have insisted that their giving had nothing to do with their leadership candidacies. Critics say the tactic amounts to attempted vote-buying.

In February, Gray hosted a dinner for House Democrats from Pennsylvania, who each got a $1,000 campaign contribution just for showing up. Gray said he wanted to share his money because he was facing no serious challenge to his re-election to the House this year. Jon Plebani, his administrative assistant, said the dinner was unrelated to the caucus chair race.

Since 1983, Gray has given out at least $72,400 to Democratic incumbents and challengers, according to the Washington newsletter, Campaign Industry News.

Despite his staff's denial, Gray cited the caucus chair campaign in at least two recent mailings sent out under the letterhead of the Committee for Democratic Opportunity, the political action committee he formed last December.

The open solicitation of money for an in-House election comes as some lawmakers are trying to put brakes on the escalating cost of getting elected to Congress itself.

SHOOTING PAINS

If you're a victim of sciatica, you know what "shooting pains" are all about. The sometimes excruciating pain of sciatica frequently affects the hip, thigh and back of the leg. The ankle and foot are sometimes affected, too. But that's not where the problem is.

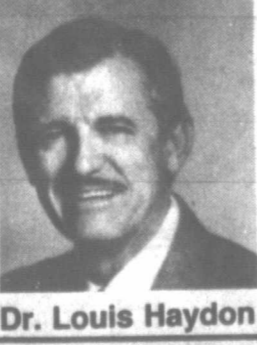

The sciatic nerve, the largest nerve in the body, extends from the lower spine to the back of the thigh and knee. Then it divides. One nerve goes down the front of the lower leg, and other goes down the back of the leg.

It's the inflammation of the sciatic nerve that causes the pain. This can be triggered by an irritated nerve root. What causes the irritation? The cause may be traced to a misalignment of the spinal column that's putting abnormal pressure on the roots of the sciatic nerves as they pass between the vertebrae.

Through x-rays and other procedures the doctor of chiropractic can locate the misaligned vertebrae. Using a gentle adjustment, he can align it properly again to help eliminate the cause and the pain.

Ousted Moscow party chief calls on Communist Party's no. 2 man to quit

MOSCOW (AP) — Boris N. Yeltsin, the ousted capital Communist Party chief, took the unprecedented step of using Western news media to insist that the party's No. 2 man, Yegor K. Ligachev, resign because he is blocking reform.

Never before has a fallen Soviet leader so sharply and publicly criticized a high-level party official still in power.

In interviews Monday with CBS News and the British Broadcasting Corp., Yeltsin said it was a mistake to say Mikhail S. Gorbachev's efforts to remake Soviet society are going according to plan.

"This is a dangerous thing to say," said Yeltsin, an outspoken advocate of reform.

He told the BBC that Ligachev should resign because he is the main impediment to "perestroika," the Russian word for Gorbachev's restructuring.

Yeltsin also said he was upset that Gorbachev did not rally to his defense when he was shunted aside.

The interviews shed light on Yeltsin's fall from power that culminated in his removal Feb. 18 as a candidate, or non-voting, member of the ruling Politburo. They also were the most extensive he has granted the Western media since he was ousted as Moscow party leader in November 1987.

In addition, Yeltsin chose to speak out as Gorbachev seeks to boost his standing at home through his five-day summit with President Reagan.

Yeltsin told the BBC that Ligachev should go "because processes in the party are too slow, because the party is still lagging behind, because the process of democratization in the party is not developing ... and Comrade Ligachev is the main person responsible for this."

Ligachev, 67, formally oversees Communist Party ideology. In an interview published in Paris last year, he said he presides over the meetings of the Central Committee Secretariat, which runs this vast country from day-to-day.

Yeltsin, 57, told CBS the style of Ligachev's leadership "contradicts the spirit of perestroika."

"He's one of the opponents when it comes to questions of social justice," Yeltsin told the BBC. Pressed by the interviewer, he said he thought Ligachev should resign.

Yeltsin said Gorbachev's reforms have met stiff resistance.

"In the first period of perestroika, there was an excessive euphoria about how quickly change would come," he said. "But three years have passed and there have been no basic changes. If there haven't been any changes in another three years, then people's faith in perestroika will decline."

The stunning statements came as the Communist Party is embroiled in fierce struggles between conservatives and reform advocates in preparation for a party conference that opens June 28, the first such session since 1941.

Israeli leaders say failed Arab general strike is evidence of a waning uprising

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israeli's three top leaders, buoyed by a drop in violence in the occupied lands and the first failed general strike of the nearly six-month-old Palestinian uprising, say the unrest is on the wane.

Thousands of Palestinians ignored orders by underground leaders to stay away from their jobs in Israel on Monday to attract attention during the Moscow summit to their struggle against the Israeli occupation of their land.

But Jewish settlers told Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir that their security in the occupied territories is deteriorating despite the apparent calm.

They said the disturbances will enter a more violent phase unless Israel cracks down more firmly on Palestinian protesters.

Also Monday, a left-wing legislator asked Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin to investigate charges that prison guards brutally beat Palestinian suspects including a 12-year-old boy.

The Israeli-owned newsagency

Itim quoted Shamir as saying Monday that the end of the Palestinian uprising is in sight: "The dying down of the violence is clear and certain ... That time is already in sight."

Estimates by Arabs of how many Palestinians went to work in Israel ranged from 10 percent in some areas to 50 percent in others. The army said more than half the 110,000 Palestinians who work in Israel showed up at their jobs.

Some Palestinians said the fizzle of the strike showed support for the underground leadership was waning. Others said a leaflet ordering the protest was not widely distributed.

In a talk with soldiers, Foreign Minister Shimon Peres said the Palestinians had failed to make any political headway in the uprising that began Dec. 8 in the lands Israel seized in the 1967 Middle East war.

Israel radio said Rabin met Monday with four prominent Jordanian Palestinians from the occupied West Bank, including Othman Halak, editor of the An Nahar newspaper, and Yasser Obeid, head of health services in the West Bank.

It was Rabin's second meeting with Palestinian leaders in five days.

Itim said the talks indicated Rabin believes the uprising is dying down. At the height of the disturbances, he had said he would only talk with Palestinians after the violence stopped, Itim reported.

But Jews who have settled in the occupied lands told Shamir the army is painting a misleading picture by describing the situation as relatively calm.

A delegation presented Shamir with a list of recent incidents involving Palestinians, including attacks against Jewish settlers on West Bank roads.

The settlers accused the army of not reporting to the government all that is happening in the occupied lands, Israel radio reported.

The army command said troops clashed with Palestinian protesters in the West Bank town of Nablius on Monday, injuring one man. No other details were provided.

Earlier, in the occupied Gaza Strip, a protest broke out in the Jabaliya refugee camp after a 28-year-old Palestinian woman was shot and her 9-month-old daughter lost an eye when Israeli troops fired rubber bullets during a clash.

Hospital officials said the woman, Najah Ahmed Masoub, was shot in the left arm and her daughter, Huda, lost her left eye.

Three are arrested in investigation into Asian criminal organization

DALLAS (AP) — A major offensive has been launched against an Asian criminal organization involved in gambling, prostitution, extortion and murder, sources say.

The Dallas Times Herald reported today that the arrests come after more than a year of overt and covert investigation into the local operations of the Hip Sing Tong, a Hong Kong-based crime syndicate that federal authorities say has exported its violent activities to Asian communities across the United States.

The Dallas area investigation has been directed by a task force of agents from the FBI and officers from the Dallas, Addison, Richardson, Garland and Arlington police departments.

Arrested on charges contained in sealed indictments returned by a federal grand jury were Le Tho Duong of Rowlett, 29, his common-law wife, Debra Harsha, 34, and Arlington restaurant owner Wai Man Lam, 41.

The newspaper reported that the arrests came in a sweep that began Friday night. All three were being held in the Lew Sterrett Justice Center on unspecified federal charges without bail. They were to appear before a federal magistrate today.

County jail officials said that Lam, who also is known in Dallas' Asian community as Raymond Lam, is charged with making a false credit application.

Sources told the newspaper that the arrests signal the beginning of an action phase in which the seven-member task force will seek criminal charges against more than two dozen people suspected either of being directly involved or having aided the Tong.

The list of targets, the sources say, include some well-known members of the Asian community, people who reportedly operated prostitution rings, extortion rackets and gambling houses, principally in Richardson, Garland, Addison, Arlington and in area known as "Little Asia" in east Dallas.

"Organized crime hasn't become institutionalized here yet, but this is certainly the time to get involved in breaking it up," said Bobby Gillham, director of the FBI regional office in Dallas. "It could become entrenched very quickly. This is a big city here, the problem is not isolated to any one suburb."

New Yorker marvels over his role in comptroller's scandal

HOUSTON (AP) — Before last fall, Wade Bartlett had never heard of former Houston City Comptroller Lance Lalor.

But Bartlett thinks it was last Oct. 30 that he left his gold American Express card at a midtown New York delicatessen or else dropped it at a Central Park hotel.

The card soon bound the two men.

Days later, Lalor used the card to purchase British travel books in a New York store, then again two months later for meals in London.

He was arrested at the airport as he tried to leave England, and he quickly confessed to forging Bartlett's name. He was fined $250, but faces a clean record if he completes a one-year probation.

For Lalor, who had stepped down just weeks earlier as Houston's city comptroller, the arrest marred the end of a long career in state and local politics.

For Bartlett, a former college linebacker now working in Manhattan as a sales representative, it was the culmination of a two-month headache.

"I didn't know Lance Lalor," he told the Houston Chronicle, mispronouncing the name as Law-ler. "What a wild thing."

The weekend Bartlett lost his card, Lalor was in New York City to run in the New York Marathon.

Bartlett had been staying at nearby St. Moritz On-the-Park. The hotel is a favorite of Lalor's, friends say, but hotel records are inconclusive as to whether he was registered at the same time as Bartlett.

Bartlett, 26, said he discovered the card had been used when he got his next month's bill, with its $40 in travel books and a poorly forged signature.

Bartlett was first notified about the bizarre case by federal authorities, and then by Houston friends.

"I had some friends who called up and said, 'Did you lose your credit card?'" Bartlett said. "I said, 'How did you know?'"

"They said, 'You're on the front page.'"

At the time, Lalor blamed the incidents on his traveling companion and then-girlfriend, Kathy Cole of Houston. Lalor said she found the card in New York.

But Ms. Cole denies ever going to New York with Lalor and says she first saw the card when he tried to use it in London. She reported him to British authorities.

Lalor has since reimbursed American Express for the purchases, and is back in Houston, reportedly working as a consultant for an international aid organization.

Memorial service honors Dallas AIDS dead

DALLAS (AP) — Through songs, speeches and quiet conversation, an estimated 200 people gathered in a park to remember the family and friends lost to the AIDS disease.

They also became involved in unscheduled activity when they marched to a field two blocks away and discovered that 793 white crosses, planted to honor Dallas-area residents who died from the disease, had been scattered.

"We're going to put the crosses back up, making them stronger than before," said Bill Hunt, vice president of the Dallas Gay Alliance. "Our hope must always exceed our grief."

In response, those in the candle-light procession Sunday night waded quietly into waist-high weeds, picking up the markers.

Using hammers, rocks and bare hands, the group quickly replaced the simple markers into the soft ground. The tapping grew steadily louder, and passing motorists slowed to watch the impromptu cemetery take shape about one mile north of downtown Dallas.

The mock grave markers were erected three days earlier to protest the city of Dallas' expenditure of $500,000 to clean up an abandoned construction site at the location. By comparison, organizers said, the city spends just over $50,000 each year on AIDS.

Later, people knelt beside the nameless markers and remembered those they knew who had died.

Some laid carnations and flower-shaped candles at the base of the crosses. Others prayed silently before wandering off. In a distant corner, three people sang songs of hope.

It was the third year that the Dallas Gay Alliance has held the memorial service, but the first time it was held over the Memorial Day weekend, Hunt said. The date was changed to coincide with similar services elsewhere in the United States.

Under a banner proclaiming "Silence

Death," several speakers urged the crowd to remain devoted to fighting AIDS and helping those who are battling the disease.

New Super "FatBuster" Lose Weight - No Dieting

SALT LAKE CITY, UT - An amazing new super "FatBuster" diet pill trademarked Cal-Stop has recently been perfected that reportedly "guarantees" weight losses of 10, 20, 50 pounds or more while allowing you to "eat as much as you want of your favorite foods until you achieve your ideal weight and figure!"

Absolutely safe with no reported side effects, the FatBuster does all the work with NO starvation "diet menus" to follow, NO calorie counting, NO exercise and NO hunger pangs.

In a carefully controlled "double-blind" clinical study, doctors found that every single person who took the FatBuster formulation lost a substantial amount of weight without changing their ordinary eating patterns. These scientifically verified results have been published in the prestigious British Journal of Nutrition as follows: "Bodyweight was significantly reduced during the study even though patients were specifically asked not to alter their dietary habits."

Dr. J.B. Dorius, a public health M.D., states: "The FatBuster bonds with food preventing absorption of a substantial portion of the calories, forcing the body to burn fat, flab and cellulite for energy."

Here is what some of FatBuster's delighted customers have to say:

"Your product is the only one that's worked for me. And believe me I've tried many. With the Fatbuster, I lost 32 pounds without dieting!"

Mrs. E.C., Lauderdale, MS

"The FatBuster is terrific! I've lost 51 lbs. and I'm still losing. Mr. R.G., Long Beach, CA

"I lost 12 lbs. in 12 days." Mrs. M.L.W., Jacksonville, TX

Another banner listed the number of people in Dallas who have died from the disease: 793.

But Bill Hess, voluntary services coordinator at the AIDS Resources Center, told the crowd that since the banner was printed, two more had died in Dallas from AIDS, including his roommate.

Paid Adv.

"They said I was too fat to be a flight attendant, but with the FatBuster I've lost 42 lbs. and achieved my goal!"

Ms. R.V., Las Vegas, NV

"I lost 60 lbs. with the FatBuster. You are the greatest."

Mrs. J.C.A., Los Angeles, CA

"I lost 29 lbs. with the FatBuster. Now my husband doesn't want me out of his sight."

Mrs. C.H., Carmel, IL

Join the group of happy weight losers. Call and order FatBuster 24 hours a day 7 days a week TOLL FREE: 1-800-453-4811 and use your VISA, MasterCard or American Express. Progressive Extension Homemakers Progressive Extension Homemakers Club met at 11 a.m. May 5 at Furr's Cafeteria for a Dutch treat luncheon, with six members and one guest, Mary Symonds, attending.

After lunch, President Marilyn Butler opened the meeting with the importance of each individual's vote. She gave the Council report, stating Jeff Lane received the 1988-89 4-H scholarship.

The District I TEHA spring meeting at Boys Ranch was attended by 10 Gray County members.

Butler was elected nominee for delegate to the state meeting Sept. 27-28 in Abilene. Fay Harvey was elected nominee for 1989 TEHA chairman.

Belle Golden won the door prize.

The next meeting will be in June, with time and place to be announced.

Deaf, hearing kids to share camp

NEW YORK (AP)— Deaf and hearing children will share a day-camp experience this summer at 15 YM-YWHA and community centers, according to the UJA-Federation of New York. A grant from the federation will pay for deafness resource consultants at the camp sites.

The program is good for both sets of campers, notes Lynn Weintraub, a Lexington School for the Deaf teacher who coordinates the sessions.

The children with good hearing learn the language of signs, and they find out first-hand that deaf people have the same abilities for learning, friendship and fun as they do, she points out. The hearing-impaired youngsters learn to work and play with children who do not share their impairment.

The children without hearing difficulties will learn through stories and books what it means to be deaf, what sounds deaf people may actually hear and why people may sound different when they speak.

Since deaf children cannot wear their hearing aids while swimming, lifeguards and counselors will get special instruction in how to make the activities safe.

Brother would like to keep long-lost family at a distance

DEAR ABBY: My husband (I'll call him George) is 52. He learned four years ago after his "father" died that he had been adopted when he was 3 years old. It was a shock to us, and it took us several years to decide whether we wanted to find his biological parents. Curiosity about his "roots" won out, and we finally found his family in Illinois. George was the youngest of 11 siblings who had been placed in an orphanage, but he was the only one who was legally adopted. The other 10 grew up in the orphanage. They all said they had been looking for George all these years, as he was the "baby" of the family.

None of his siblings have had any education or opportunities. My husband's adoptive parents were upper-middle-class people who gave George a wonderful life, college education, etc.

Our problem: After a huge family reunion, his relatives have inundated us with love letters, and there are so many of them we don't know what to do.

We are satisfied to know my husband's roots now, but our lives have taken different paths; we don't want an intimate involvement with them. We attended a reunion with hundreds of shirttail relatives. We were overwhelmed, and are now sorry we pursued this.

I have subtly indicated in our thank-you letters to all nine of his living siblings that we have our own family — children, grandchildren, etc., but the letters keep coming, inviting us to weddings, graduations, christenings, birthdays, anniversaries, etc.

What should we do? How obligated are we? They all want to come to visit us. We do not have guest accommodations, as my elderly mother lives with us.

Please help us handle this "relatively" large problem.

OVERWHELMED
IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR OVERWHELMED: You are as "obligated" as your

Dear Abby

conscience allows you to be. Obviously you're not able to send gifts to hundreds of relatives, but congratulatory cards for weddings, engagements, graduations, christenings and anniversaries are definitely in order if you receive invitations or announcements.

Also let them know why you are unable to accommodate guests, and hope they'll understand.

DEAR ABBY: My parents divorced when I was 9. In the years that followed, I lived with my mother for the most part, but the time I spent with my father was wonderful. My mother had a lot of ill feelings toward my father. She put him down constantly and told me some very personal things about their love life. I didn't want to hear these intimate details, but more important, I didn't want to hear negative things about my father.

All this time, he never said a negative word about my mother. He never failed to pay child support, and was far more generous to me and Mother than he had to be.

As a father, he did not fall short. Aside from meeting his financial obligations, he was kind, gentle, supportive and just strict enough for my own good. He still is. My mother continues to bad-mouth him, which leaves me feeling angry and sad.

Why am I writing you all this, Abby? Because I want you to tell other divorced parents that if a parent has faults, the kids will notice them — they do not need to be pointed out.

Thanks for letting me get this off my chest.

A DAUGHTER

DEAR DAUGHTER: I'm glad you wrote. Perhaps those who need to be reminded of your message will read it, and heed it.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Don't do things for the sake of expediency today. A task ahead of you requires definite methods and procedures, so don't use short-cuts.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Spend your leisure time today with friends who know how to enjoy themselves on their own. Don't seek out people who feel you must entertain them every minute.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Protect your flanks in career situations today. If you fail to do so, you might be tagged the fall guy if anything goes wrong.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Because you fail to listen attentively, you might have trouble keeping facts straight. Sit up and take notice.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Try not to be careless today when working with or near your prized possessions. If your mind isn't on your work, you might dust some delicate items off the shelf.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Don't be insensitive to the thoughtfulness of your companions today. A lack of appreciation on your part will lessen their inclinations to favor you in the future.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You may have trouble keeping secrets today. This might cause you to talk to the wrong audience about something that should be kept confidential.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Someone may carry tales to you today about a friend of long standing. Weigh this person's words carefully, keeping in mind that he/she could have an axe to grind.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) You should do well in competitive situations today, provided you don't see yourself as the underdog. Don't award success to another before the contest begins.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Plans that you are presently developing could be thrown out of kilter at this time. Don't let an associate whose ideas don't jibe with yours in on the happenings.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Business conditions are extremely tricky today, and you must be on guard at all times. If you're not, something that's going your way could turn in the opposite direction.

Celtics, Pistons even

By HARRY ATKINS
AP Sports Writer

PONTIAC, Mich. — The Boston Celtics and Detroit Pistons played like the holiday was meant for them.

Most working Americans were off on Memorial Day and so were the Celtics and Pistons who turned in the lowest-scoring first quarter in NBA playoff history.

But Boston's Dennis Johnson, making one of two free throws with eight seconds remaining, gave the Celtics a 79-78 lead that held up as Detroit's Joe Dumars' 12-foot jumper was short at the buzzer.

The victory evened the Eastern Conference finals at 2-2 and returned the home-court advantage to the Celtics who have won 16 titles and gone to the NBA finals each of the past four seasons.

"They have survived another scare just like they did against Atlanta (in the semifinals)," Detroit coach Chuck Daly said. "They are in position to hold home-court advantage. We've got a chance, but they've got the home court. This is what it comes down to."

Game 5 will be played Wednesday night at Boston Garden and Game 6 will be Friday night back in the Silverdome. Game 7, if needed, will be played Sunday in Boston.

"We'll come to battle them," Daly said. "We're going to fight and scrap. At least I am. I'm going to drive these players right into the ground and see if we can respond. You can only worry about the next game."

Larry Bird, who led Boston with 20 points on Monday despite missing most of the third quarter with foul trouble, said the Celtics were confident of winning the series.

"Now we've got the opportunity to go home, win and come back here and close it out," Bird said.

Both teams seemed tight in the first half, although Daly and Boston coach K.C. Jones preferred to credit the low-scoring affair to tight defensive pressure at both ends.

Boston led 16-10 after the first quarter, making it the lowest-scoring start in NBA playoff history. The previous low first quarter, 30 points, also involved the Pistons who led Chicago 17-13 in 1974.

The Pistons missed 20 consecutive shots in a 10:11 span of the first half, but the Celtics couldn't cash in, leading only 46-36 at halftime.

"They didn't handle the ball very well in the first half," Jones said. "The second half, we didn't handle it at all."

"It was one of the wierdest games, wierdest turnarounds, I've ever been in."

The Celtics shot only 40 percent, but that was better than the Pistons' woeful 33 percent.

"It was a hard game," said Boston's Danny Ainge, whose 12 points included 3-of-6 shooting from 3-point range.

Laimbeer, who scored half of Detroit's first-half points, scored seven more as Detroit opened the second half with a 17-6 run. Isiah Thomas, with six points during the spurt, finished it with a steal and layup, giving the Pistons a 53-52 lead with 6:13 left in the period.

Laimbeer finished with 29 points, while Thomas had 12 and Adrian Dantley 13 for the Pistons.

Detroit scored the last eight points of the third quarter, the first six on free throws, to lead 68-60 going into the final 12 minutes.

Bird, refreshed from his long rest in the third quarter, scored the first seven points of the fourth period, narrowing the deficit to 68-67. But Dennis Rodman scored on a fast-break layup, drew Bird's fifth foul and converted the free throw for a four-point lead.

Boston responded with six consecutive points for a 73-71 edge before both teams went into another scoring drought. Neither team scored for three minutes until a dunk by John Salley tied the score 73-73 with 4:25 left.

Johnson, who finished with 18 points, tied it for the last time, 78-78, on a jumper with 1:13 remaining.

Mavs' Mark Aguirre (above) has hurt Lakers with his scoring.

Mavs in position of knocking off favored Lakers

By KEN PETERS
AP Sports Writer

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — About the only running the Los Angeles Lakers have done in the NBA playoffs is hot and cold.

The Lakers' flashy run-and-dunk offense and their fastbreak has been mysteriously missing as they first struggled to a seven-game series victory over Utah in the second round of the playoffs, and now have found themselves tied 2-2 with Dallas in the Western Conference finals.

The best-of-seven series resumes tonight at the Forum, with the reigning NBA champion Lakers just two victories away from the league championship round — or two defeats away becoming yet another in the long list of champions who failed to successfully defend the NBA title.

No team has won consecutive NBA crowns since the Boston Celtics in 1969.

The sixth game is in Dallas on Thursday night and a seventh game, if necessary, will be played at the Forum either Saturday or Sunday.

Despite the fact their fastbreak has been sputtering since their playoffs-opening sweep of San Antonio, the Lakers still have played well at times during the ensuing two series — and quite poorly at others.

They opened the conference showdown against Dallas with two easy victories at the Forum, but then lost both games by wide margins in Texas.

The Mavericks suddenly find themselves, as had the Jazz before them, in position to knock off the favored Lakers.

"God didn't make anyone invincible," Dallas forward Mark Aguirre said of the Lakers. "We came to play well and LA came to play well. The color of the uniform does not have anything to do with it. It is whoever plays well."

"The attitude on the team right now is great," Dallas center James Donaldson said. "We came home and accomplished what we had to accomplish. But we still have to win a game in LA."

"I think we can take this intensity into LA," Dallas forward Sam Perkins said. "It looked dismal after Game 2. I think the attitude is different now. We'll have to try to do the same things even though we won't be at home."

The Mavericks won the fourth game 118-104 on Sunday after taking the third 106-94. The Lakers opened the series with a 113-98 triumph, then won Game 2 in a 123-101 runaway.

"We knew this series would be a dogfight just like Utah," Lakers guard Byron Scott said.

Lakers coach Pat Riley, who a year ago guaranteed that Los Angeles would repeat as NBA champion, said the Utah series even looked more frightening for a time.

Doke inks letter

Pampa High athlete David Doke, flanked by his parents, Gary and Shirley Doke, signs a letter of intent to attend Southwestern College of Winfield, Kansas on a basketball and track scholarship. Also looking on are (l-r) Robert Hale, Harvester basketball coach; Dennis Cavalier, PHS athletic director-football coach; and Mike Shklar, Harvester boys' track coach. Doke was a playmaking guard for the Harvesters, averaging 3.8 points per game and leading the team in assists with 130 this season. He was the District 14A champion in the high jump this year. Southwestern, a four-year, NAAIA school, is Cavalier's college alma mater.

Rangers end Twins' streak

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Jeff Russell saved his best pitches for the most critical situations, and it was enough to make an impression on Minnesota Twins manager Tom Kelly.

"The guy was a good pitcher. He really battled out there. He made a couple of good pitches the only times we got something going," Kelly said Monday after Russell pitched the Texas Rangers to a 6-1 victory over Minnesota, ending the Twins' winning streak at eight.

Making his third start of the season, Russell, 4-0, yielded six hits in eight innings. He walked three and struck out five before Dale Mohorcic came in to pitch the ninth.

One of the situations Kelly had in mind came in the sixth inning. Minnesota had runners on first and third with one out when Russell got Gary Gaetti to hit into a double play.

"He made a great pitch to Gaetti," Texas manager Bobby Valentine said, "and that wasn't the only great pitch he made."

Bert Blyleven, 8-5, lasted only 4 1-3 innings but struck out five to move past Phil Niekro into seventh place on the all-time strikeout list with 3,343.

In his last three starts, Russell has allowed five earned runs in 23 1-3 innings to lower his earned run average for the season to 2.37.

Russell has started only five games in his last 101 appearances.

"I'm just concerned with pitching a solid six or seven innings and turning it over to the bullpen," said Russell. "I'm trying to gain confidence, that's all."

In March of 1987, he had a bone spur removed from his pitching elbow.

"I think he played catchup most of last year," Texas manager Bobby Valentine said. "By the end of last year he was throwing very well."

"Russell's coming of age. He's got his life together and knows what he wants. He's always had the good stuff, he's just had trouble maintaining it from game to game."

The Rangers took a 3-0 lead in the first inning. Scott Fletcher singled and went to second one out later on Pete Incaviglia's single. Pete O'Brien singled to score Fletcher before Larry Parrish, who entered the game in a 2-for-21 slump, doubled home two more runs.
