Arizona bank takes control of First Financial

From staff and wire reports

With a little help from Uncle Sam, an Arizona bank has bailed out two ailing savings institutions in West Texas, including one with a branch in Pampa.

Federal Home Loan Bank Board officials in Dallas said Wednesday they are providing government assistance of $83.9 million to MeraBank Federal Savings Bank of Phoenix to take over First Financial, a savings association based in El Paso, and Brownfield Federal Savings and Loan Association.

First Financial has a branch at 520 Cook Ave. in Pampa in addition to its branches in Amarillo, Canyon, Lubbock and El Paso. It was the third transaction under terms of the bank board's "Southwest Plan," designed to consolidate and recapitalize Texas' savings and loan industry.

With $6.4 billion in assets, MeraBank, which already has seven branches in Texas, is contributing $8.8 million in capital to the deal. First Financial is a $330 million institution. Brownfield has assets of $40 million.

As part of the transaction, MeraBank agreed to acquire a third major insolvent Texas thrift later this year. It is forming a separate subsidiary to hold the three Texas institutions, and the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp., which insures savings and loan deposits up to $100,000, will hold warrants for 20 percent of the subsidiary's stock.

First Financial and Brownfield are the ninth and 10th savings and loan cases resolved by federal regulators in Texas this year. Federal regulators had determined that the two thrifts were insolvent, MeraBank spokeswoman Margaret Kirch said Wednesday.

Officials said that the sluggish real estate market and bad loans led to First Financial's demise.

It was pretty much business as usual Wednesday at First Financial offices in Pampa. Branch Manager Eldon Reed said he

"My job is to welcome (employees) here to the MeraBank family," McKelvy said. He predicted no major changes in personnel at the acquired institutions.

Noting that MeraBank acquired all assets and deposits of both thrifts, Arthur L. Gonzales, president of MeraBank's Texas division, said business will be transacted as usual. MeraBank had seven branch offices in Texas prior to Wednesday's transactions.

"Their deposits, of course, will remain insured by the FSLIC, and no immediate changes will affect check writing, credit cards and other services," Gonzales said.

Texas savings and loans, hard hit by slumps in the oil industry and real estate valuations, accounted for $3 billion of the industry's $3.8 billion loss in the first three months of this year.

Regulators say 133 of Texas' 279 savings and loans are insolvent under generally accepted accounting rules. The bank board hopes to reduce the number of savings and loans in Texas by about 150 this year.

Bank board officials were enthusiastic about Wednesday's transaction.

"MeraBank is a financially strong, well-managed institution, and we believe its expansion in Texas through this acquisition will benefit Texas, the thrift industry and FSLIC," said board chairman M. Danny Wall.

MeraBank is the largest thrift institution in Arizona and the 25th largest in the United States.

Gene Rice, MeraBank chief executive officer, said the institution will also form a subsidiary thrift, MeraBank Texas, to be based in Texas.

"We had to diversify ourselves," said Rice. "Any time a bank has all its eggs in one basket, it can get in trouble. Our long-term objective is to have 20 percent of our bank in Arizona, 20 percent in Texas and the balance in other places."

Rice called the transaction "a tremendous time-consuming process."

"They (FHLB) didn't just walk out there with a tray full of fruit and let us pick our fruit," said Rice. "We had to work together."

'We believe its expansion in Texas through this acquisition will benefit Texas, the thrift industry and FSLIC.'

Wall

The third thrift to be acquired by MeraBank, which is based in Phoenix, Ariz., would create a deal worth about $1 billion, he said.

The FHLB board said a $1.2 billion loss at Sunbelt Savings Association of Dallas boosted losses by Texas' 279 savings and loans to $3.5 billion during the first three months of 1988.

Analysts and industry officials said the losses were not unexpected. But House Banking, Fi-

Appeals court gives Grimes a new trial

By PAUL PINKHAM
Senior Staff Writer

AMARILLO — Pampa's chief felony prosecutor says he will challenge an appeals court order of a new trial for a man sentenced to life in prison last year for raping a 10-year-old Pampa girl.

Meanwhile, the young victim's grandmother said today she doesn't "know how we could cope" with the prospect of reliving the experience a third time.

In a ruling released Wednesday, the 7th Court of Appeals ordered a new trial for Troy Lee Grimes, 29, formerly of 1013 Huff Road. Grimes currently is serving a life sentence for the November 1986 abduction and child rape near Bowers City.

The appellate court overturned its own May opinion ordering a resentencing for Grimes at the request of Grimes' court-appointed attorneys, Pink Dickens of Plainview and Clyde Hudson of Amarillo.

In the May opinion, the court had ruled that certain facts surrounding Grimes' prior rape conviction — involving a 9-year-old girl in 1977 — shouldn't have been admitted into evidence during the punishment phase of his second sexual assault trial. Because of the error, justices said Grimes should be resentenced.

But Grimes' lawyers argued successfully in a rehearing that the law allowing the appeals court to order that only the punishment phase of the trial be retried didn't take effect until Aug. 1, 1987, three months after the trial concluded, and therefore didn't apply to the case.

"Under the prior statute, we should have remanded the cause for a complete new trial," Appeals Justice Carlton B. Dodson wrote in his three-page opinion for the court.

Grimes remains in Huntsville pending a new trial date. Defense attorney Hudson said Wednesday that he was pleased with the court's reconsideration of the case.

But Assistant District Attorney Harold Comer — who admitted

Committee OKs AIDS confidentiality bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Expanded AIDS testing, mandatory counseling and tough punishment for violations of patient confidentiality are prescribed in a bill that won House committee approval after a year of negotiation and compromise.

"We're going to move it as quickly as possible. The chances of it passing are very, very bright. I expect it to become law this year," Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., said Wednesday after the Energy and Commerce Committee sent the measure to the House floor by voice vote.

The bill authorizes $400 million to expand testing and counseling activities for each of the next three years. Half the money would go to states and the other half would go directly to clinics, health centers and hospitals.

Counseling would be required for anyone taking a test, whether the results were positive or negative. Anyone who intentionally or negligently breached the confidentiality of test results could be charged a fine of up to $10,000. An intentional violation could also bring up to a year in jail.

The bill bans use of federal funds for counseling "that promotes or encourages homosexual sexual activity or unsafe heterosexual sexual activity or intravenous drug abuse." But it also says counselors must provide the best information available on how to avoid getting or transmitting AIDS, "provided that any informational materials used are not obscene."

The major casualty of the many controversies stirred by the bill was a section banning private-sector discrimination against people with AIDS or the AIDS virus. The federal government already has a ban. Waxman, chairman of the Energy and Commerce health subcommittee, called the omission unfortunate but said it would have been impossible to pass such a policy in the current political climate.

Getting rid of the discrimination provision also makes it much less likely the bill will be blocked in the Senate, Waxman said, because it "removes the biggest objection that some of the right-wingers have." The counseling and testing bill is pending in the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee.

Rep. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., said he may attempt to restore the anti-discrimination provision on the House floor. He called its deletion "a terrible public health mistake" because the most likely AIDS victims, without protection against losing their jobs, insurance or housing, would not volunteer for tests.

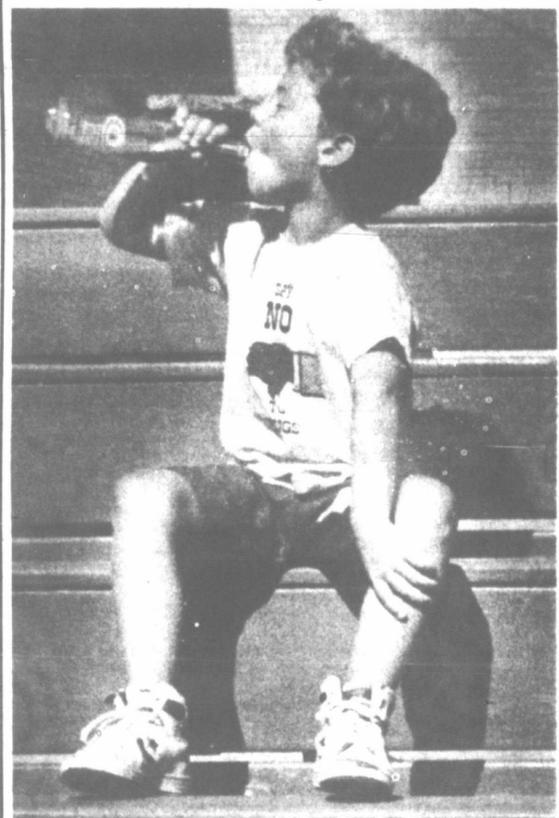

Wyden said he would try to build bipartisan support for the discrimination ban on the grounds that the president's commission on AIDS recently recommended precisely such a federal policy.

But Waxman said the commission view is useless without President Reagan's backing. "Without it I can't see that members are going to be willing to vote for it, have the courage to vote for it, in an election year," he said. "If the president will stand behind his commission's recommendations, we will join him in sponsoring an amendment."

Before approving the AIDS testing bill, the committee rejected a series of amendments

Auto worker dies in heat; crews dredge Mississippi River

By MIKE HIRSH
Associated Press Writer

Crews dredged the drought-shrunken Mississippi River around the clock today to free hundreds of backed-up barges, while triple-digit temperatures prompted autoworkers to walk off the job after a co-worker collapsed and died.

Sprinklings of rain Wednesday succeeded only in frustrating farm-belt growers, many of whom urged federal action and said two more weeks without a drenching could plunge them into disaster.

"With the searing heat we've had, the situation has become very, very serious as our crops begin to deteriorate," said Iowa's secretary of agriculture, Dale Cochran. "In the next 10 days, if we don't get rain we could lose 50 percent of our corn crop."

In Fenton, Mo., a Chrysler Corp. autoworker died after collapsing Wednesday night in what co-workers said was unbearable heat in a paint shop, as temperatures in the St. Louis area topped 100 degrees.

"It's so hot, you can hardly breathe in there. It's like you're smothering — like you're inside an oven," said one worker, Bertha Saxton. "Your skin is like someone poured baby oil on you."

An autopsy on Willie Benton, 54, was to be performed today, said Suzanne Campbell, spokeswoman for St. Joseph Hospital, where Benton died. Shortly after he collapsed, hundreds of paintshop workers at Chrysler's No. 1 and 2 plants walked off their jobs because of the heat. The walk-out, the second in two days, forced the assembly lines at both plants to shut down.

Doug Nicoll, a Chrysler spokesman, said the buildings have no air conditioning but are ventilated and workers are given ice.

Also Wednesday, the Coast Guard for the first time limited the number of barges towboats can push in a major portion of the Mississippi. The limits were sought by barge companies that want to prevent towboat operators from running their loads aground in record-low water.

"There's got to be a doomsday point out there somewhere. Right now, I don't know anybody that I've talked to who can give me any idea where that is," said Brig. Gen. Thomas Sands, president of the Mississippi River Commission. "Right now, we are not on the brink of disaster."

Under the limits, southbound towboats must have no more than 20 barges while northbound boats will be limited to 25, only 16 of which can be loaded, said Cmdr. Michael Donohoe.

Authorities said the 24-hour dredging of the river near Memphis, Tenn., would take until Friday afternoon, and more than 1,200 barges, many recently freed from other backlogs, were expected to stack up. Crews on the Ohio River also worked to break bottlenecks.

U.S. Agriculture Secretary Richard Lyng planned to meet in Chicago today with representatives of drought-stricken states to advise a committee of the National Governors' Association on the crisis and the outlook for the nation.

The day before, Lyng met in Washington with a congressional drought task force.

Rep. David Nagle, D-Iowa, said the focus of immediate efforts is on assuring feed for livestock and that legislative action to deal with crop losses would be delayed until officials determine the extent of the damage.

The record-setting heat wave continued to quicken the evaporation of moisture from the soil, but temperatures began to drop and the National Weather Service predicted some temporary relief today.

A cold front moved through the Great Lakes region and the upper Mississippi Valley early today and shoved southward and toward the Northeast, dropping temperatures into the 80s and 70s.

The front was expected to bring scattered showers, but "it doesn't look like too much change in the situation or perhaps none at all," said Hugh Crowther of the weather service in Kansas City, Mo.

By midafternoon Wednesday, two dozen cities had set high-temperature records. In Philadelphia, the temperature reached 100 degrees for the first time in more than 10 years.

In Arizona, the Tucson Electric Power Co. reported record usage Wednesday as an all-time high of 114 degrees was recorded.

In Charles City, Iowa, radio station KCHA awarded a water hose and sprinkler to Vicky Vorpahl for providing the best answer to a contest that asked listeners to complete the sentence, "It's so dry that ..."

Her response: "It's so dry that cows are giving powdered milk."

Bank

nance and Urban Affairs Committee Chairman Fernand J. St Germain, D-R.I., said Tuesday the report raises "extremely serious questions about the rosy scenarios being peddled by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board."

Operating losses for the 477 institutions in the five states served by the Dallas office of the bank board widened during the first quarter of 1988 to $1.1 billion from $623 million in 1987.

Non-operating losses, primarily funds set aside to cover non-performing assets, increased to $2.8 billion from $609 million.

Much of the Sunbelt loss, first speculated about in May, involved reserves set aside for writedowns for loans, repossessed assets and investments, Sunbelt's chairman and chief executive officer, Thomas J. Wageman, said.

"Magnitude and size is the direct result of the collapse of the real estate market in Texas, where most of these assets are located," said Wageman, who along with other officials of the thrift filed a $630 million damage suit last month against former management.

Grimes

that facts about the age of Grimes' first victim and the day of the week the offense occurred shouldn't have been admitted into evidence — said he plans to seek a review of the case by the Court of Criminal Appeals in Austin, the state's highest criminal court.

Comer said the errors had nothing to do with Grimes' guilt or innocence because the jury didn't hear the forbidden testimony until after it found Grimes guilty.

"The jury didn't even consider that in determining guilt or innocence," Comer said. "It didn't have anything to do with whether he was guilty."

The rape victim's grandmother and legal guardian, whose name is being withheld to protect the girl's identity, said today that she, too, has a hard time accepting the ruling.

"I don't think it's fair," the woman said. "I just don't understand it why they have to stir things up that are already settled."

"We tried to get that out of our lives and get on ... the best we can. That's just a hassle for me and my little grandbaby."

The grandmother, who said she suffered a heart attack after the first trial, added: "I just don't know how we could cope with that, but if that's the law, we'll try to get along the best we can."

Comer said that, if the high court turns down his request, he will attempt to retry the case.

"It's too serious not to," he said.

Evidence in the trial in 223rd District Court indicated that Grimes abducted the girl in Marcus Sanders Park while she walked home from Sunday school in November 1986 and drove her to the Bowers City area, where he raped and sodomized her and threatened her with a knife. He then drove her back to the park and gave her $2, she told jurors.

Defense attorney Dickens tried to pin the rape on the girl's father, who also testified during the trial.

Attempting to impress upon jurors that the offense was not Grimes' first, Comer brought up testimony about the rapist's first victim, who also was assaulted on a Sunday.

Drought could affect U.S. exports

WASHINGTON (AP) — The drought that threatens U.S. crop production also is sending shock waves through world markets and prospects for exports, according to Agriculture Department analysts.

But it could be one of those "good news, bad news" situations, says Tom Kay, administrator of the department's Foreign Agricultural Service.

"There's no question that the higher commodity prices we see today will likely raise the value of U.S. exports," Kay said. "On the other hand, you have to recognize that higher prices might reduce the total quantity traded."

In other words, one bushel of wheat selling for $3 is worth as much as three bushels selling for $1 each.

Kay and other USDA and farm officials contacted Wednesday agreed that it is too early for a realistic appraisal of the export situation. No one can be sure what this year's harvests of corn, wheat and soybeans will be, and until that is known, the global supply and price situation is mostly guesswork.

The department's first overall crop production estimates of the season, including total wheat, corn and soybeans, will be released on Aug. 11.

Kay said there "could be a tendency for foreign buyers to want to increase nearby purchases to cover their future needs."

And that could cause even further upward pressure on commodity prices.

Are there indications now that foreign buyers might be getting leery of higher prices for U.S. grain?

"No, there hasn't been much activity of late in the international market," Kay said. "Not much is being sold anywhere. There seems to be a general lull all over."

So it's wait-and-see what the drought will do, at least for many foreign buyers. Meanwhile, the USDA has not revised its latest export forecast, which showed the value of shipments in the fiscal year that began last Oct. 1 could rise to $33.5 billion from $27.9 billion last season.

The actual volume of products in the month-old forecast is expected to rise to 145.5 million metric tons from 129.2 million tons in 1986-87.

Except for soybeans, which are in relatively scant supply, the inventories of U.S. wheat and corn are more than ample to take care of foreseeable export needs. The big question, which officials say can't be answered now, is how much 1988 crop production will be reduced and how far prices will increase.

Paul Drazek of the American Farm Bureau Federation's Washington office agreed that export prospects are undecipherable at this point.

"Any time you have a drought of the apparent magnitude that this is, you have to start to be concerned about what it will do to our export volume," he said. "My guess is that nobody quite knows what the effect will be on production, so it's going to be difficult to attach some kind of an estimate to the effect on exports."

"But with the price going up the way it is," Drazek continued, "that alone will have a depressing effect on our ability to move products."

Although there is a "one-world market" for some commodities, he said, "our prices are going to be less competitive ... and that could have an effect on where people buy."

Bob Denman of the National Farmers Union said, "The next couple of weeks are going to really make the determination as to what starts to happen in that export market."

Denman said that he "wouldn't be surprised" to see some foreign buyers come back into the U.S. market for corn and other feed grains to protect themselves against further crop deterioration and even higher prices.

Regarding wheat, Denman said that a lot will depend on the quality of this year's European harvest and also on Canada's production.

"It's not just in the United States," he said. "That Canadian crop, as I understand it, is really being hurt pretty bad, too."

sponsored by Rep. William Dannemeyer, R-Calif. Among them were attempts to require testing of all prisoners, marriage license applicants and hospital admittees.

Dannemeyer also failed to win approval of a requirement that people with AIDS or the AIDS virus be reported to authorities by name; the bill requires instead that cases be reported with statistical and demographic information.

Another unsuccessful Dannemeyer amendment would have required doctors to notify spouses, sex partners or IV needle partners if the patient didn't notify them within a reasonable period. Members of both parties said the bill permits doctors to make such notifications but shouldn't require them to do so.

Consultant, firm convicted in petition forgery

SAN MARCOS (AP) — Jurors who convicted political consultant Rocky Mountain and his company of forging signatures on a presidential ballot petition now must decide how much to make the defendants pay.

Mountain and Southern Political Consulting Inc., of Houston each were convicted Wednesday on 38 counts of misdemeanor forgery for directing workers to put phony signatures on the petitions that qualified Pete du Pont for the March GOP presidential primary in Texas.

Mountain, 27, faces fines of up to $2,000 for each count, and up to one year in jail. Southern Political Consulting faces fines of up to $10,000 per count for a potential total of $380,000.

The punishment phase was set for today.

Prosecutors said Mountain staged a

Dec. 19 "forgery party" at his Houston office, complete with beer for underage drinkers, to get the signatures needed for du Pont.

Jurors deliberated for three hours, 47 minutes Wednesday before reaching the verdict. Mountain said he was "disappointed," but reserved further comment for after the punishment phase.

He stood motionless as Harris County Court-at-Law Judge Sherman Ross read the long series of guilty verdicts. Kevin Burnette, president of Southern Political Consulting, stood with his arms folded and eyes looking down as Ross read the potentially expensive guilty verdicts against the firm.

Mountain is a vice president of the company, which was hired by the du Pont campaign to gather the 5,000 signatures the former Delaware governor needed to get on the Texas primary ballot.

In convicting Mountain, jurors rejected the defense argument that he ordered temporary workers to sign the phony signatures only because he had been goaded by a du Pont official for being unable to collect legitimate signatures.

Mountain testified he never intended for the du Pont campaign to submit the phony petitions.

In convicting the company, the six-member jury rejected the defense argument that Mountain was working as a du Pont volunteer, not a company employee, when he ordered the forgeries. Du Pont and his campaign officials have denied any knowledge of the forgeries. No one from the du Pont campaign testified here.

"Was there an intent to defraud or harm? I don't think so," Joe Bailey, Mountain's lawyer, said in Wednesday's closing argument.

"Rocky Mountain (was) hacked off and he (did) something stupid," Bailey said.

Prosecutor Casey O'Brien told jurors, "There was harm, folks."

"He lied to you. He lied," O'Brien said of Mountain's claim that he did not intend to deceive anyone.

The defense tried to show that supporters of Vice President George Bush's presidential campaign were upset because Mountain's firm helped organize a 1987 Houston presidential debate in which Bush did not want to participate.

"This corporation is looking at hundreds of thousands of dollars in fines because they are visible and they made some of the big boys mad," said Charles Soechting, the firm's defense lawyer. Seven people testified Mountain bought them beer and showed them how to forge signatures on the petitions.

Thirty-five witnesses, whose names appeared on the petitions, testified they had not signed the petitions. Another witness said the signature of his mother, a nursing home resident, looked phony.

Testimony also showed that the signatures of two dead people were on the du Pont petitions.

Mountain and the company also were implicated in possible forgeries on petitions submitted for GOP presidential candidates Robert Dole and Alexander Haig. But no indictments were returned in those cases.

Seven workers hired through a temporary employment agency testified that Mountain went to what he called "Plan B" after efforts to collect valid signatures failed miserably.

Report: Mauro hires lawyer

AUSTIN (AP) — The lawyer hired by Land Commissioner Gary Mauro after agency records were subpoenaed by the FBI says he believes Mauro's political foes are behind the investigation.

The Austin American-Statesman reported Wednesday that lawyer Gerald Goldstein of San Antonio was retained by Mauro after the subpoena was served at the land office about two weeks ago.

The lawyer said he hadn't represented Mauro previously.

Goldstein said Mauro has "nothing to hide" and added his belief that political foes of the Democrat were using federal investigators to smear him.

The lawyer and another Mauro spokesman also criticized the FBI for not asking for the records of contributions to Mauro's political campaigns until Monday.

Both said they would have expected the FBI to review his records well before now because agents have said the inquiry began months ago.

"Surely, they would have compared those before now," Goldstein said.

Andrew Mangan, Mauro's press secretary, said he thinks the request by FBI agent Greg Rampton indicated that investigators "hadn't done their homework."

The subpoena sought records concerning any tracts of land sold or marketed by nine individuals through the Texas Veterans Land Board from 1983 to the present, including information on appraisals and whether they were altered after an appeal by the developer.

The land program provides low-interest loans of up to $20,000 to veterans buying tracts of at least five acres. Mauro, as land commissioner, also heads the Veterans Land Board.

At least seven of the nine developers and real estate agents named in the subpoena have donated money to Mauro's campaigns.

On Monday, the FBI requested from the secretary of state's office all records of campaign contributions from 1984 and later. Rampton on Tuesday said the request was made in connection with the veterans land investigation, the American-Statesman reported.

Jurors set life in prison as punishment for Callaway

AMARILLO (AP) — Jurors who selected life in prison as punishment for a Houston woman convicted of arranging the murder of her boss' wife because they didn't think she would commit any violent acts in the future, a juror says.

Jurors set the punishment Wednesday, a day after they convicted Jane Ada Callaway, 36, of capital murder in the contract killing of Judy Saragusa, 39, last September. She could have gotten death by injection.

Ms. Callaway must serve a minimum of 15 years in prison before becoming eligible for parole, State District Judge Michael McSpadden said.

The former Houston secretary was convicted of hiring Leon Hawkins Jr. to shoot Judy Saragusa, 39, on Sept. 2. Mrs. Saragusa was the wife of Michael Saragusa, Ms. Callaway's employer and former lover.

Juror Debra Farmer said jurors had problems understanding what was meant by the phrase "continuing violent behavior." If they had decided Ms. Callaway was capable of continuing violent behavior, they could have sentenced her to death.

Farmer said the many of the jurors felt that Callaway might manipulate someone into doing violent acts, but 10 of the 12 believed she wouldn't commit any herself, and that's why they had to say "no."

Ms. Callaway smiled and nodded to her parents when she heard the punishment verdict.

The judge then allowed her to see her family for about half an hour before she was taken to the Potter County Corrections Center where she'll stay until she's taken to the Texas Department of Corrections' prison in Gatesville.

Defense and prosecutors said they were pleased with the result. Assistant Harris County District Attorney Chuck Rosenthal didn't ask the jurors for the death sentence in his arguments for punishment, and Dan Cogdell, Callaway's attorney, said that he'd consider a life sentence a win.

Because her $50,000 bond was revoked following Tuesday night's guilty verdict, Ms. Callaway spent Tuesday night in jail.

Prosecutor Rosenthal noted that defense lawyers had mentioned that their client had spent the night in jail, saying, "Jane Callaway woke up in jail this morning. Judy Saragusa will never wake up again."

From a back row, the husband of the victim and former boss and lover of Callaway, said softly, "That's right."

Saragusa later told the Houston Chronicle that the verdict was his vindication from innuendos and suspicions.

Cogdell in his closing argument urged jurors to give Ms. Call-away a chance to change.

"Decide whether you have a preference for rehabilitation or retribution for Jane Ada Callaway," he said.

Defense lawyer Richard "Racehorse" Haynes had returned to the scene of one his greatest legal triumphs when the Callaway case was moved from Houston to Amarillo, but he couldn't get another dramatic victory.

In 1977, Haynes won a stunning acquittal for former millionaire T. Cullen Davis, on trial for the murder of his 12-year-old step-daughter.

Therapy for wife of former minister will include music

DALLAS (AP) — Doctors report slight improvement in the condition of the wife of a former minister who has been in a coma since she was nearly choked to death last year, but they do not know if she will ever communicate.

Margaret "Peggy" Railey, who was choked nearly to death in the garage of her Dallas home, entered Baylor Institute for Rehabilitation under tightened security Tuesday for a comprehensive recovery program.

"There has been what looks like some slight improvement in her condition" over months, said Dr. William L. Parker said, adding her eyes sometimes focus and follow movement. Mrs. Railey can turn her head and hear, but doesn't process what she hears.

Her therapy at Baylor will include musical stimulation, Parker said. Mrs. Railey was a talented organist and her parents have been concerned that dexterity be maintained in her fingers and hands.

"If we can establish anything that seems to stimulate a response that could be interpreted as functional, then we would continue to try, through repetition, to improve on that and then other responses would follow," Parker said at a news conference Wednesday.

Mrs. Railey is the wife of a former prominent Methodist minister, Walker Railey, who resigned his ministerial credentials and moved to California after the April 21, 1987, attack.

No criminal charges have been filed, but Railey's attorney has characterized him as the prime suspect in the attack. Authorities say their investigation is at a standstill.

Doctors will try both to bring Mrs. Railey out of the coma and develop therapies to improve her long term comfort and care during the program, which could last two months.

Mrs. Railey, 39, was taken to a Tyler nursing home last fall after months of care at another Dallas hospital. Parker said his team is making the first comprehensive evaluation of Mrs. Railey's injuries at the request of her parents.

He said he didn't think his team of 12 specialists and therapists would be able to completely determine whether Mrs. Railey will communicate again.

"There's no total way to tell," Parker said. "I can't say that she will never, no. I think the odds are probably going to be against it, but time is the only thing that's going to tell."

"If there's any indication at all that we can pick up in all of our treatment that's going to be helpful to her to help bring any, slight even, communication effect for the family's sake and for her sake, the whole psychological aspect of her care is going to be changed."

Railey, former senior pastor at the First United Methodist Church in Dallas, said he found his wife unconscious on the garage floor of their home the night of the attack.

Not long afterward, Railey attempted suicide. Later, he moved to San Francisco with a Dallas psychologist, Lucy Papillon, who admitted a romantic relationship with Railey dating back to 1986.

Mrs. Railey's parents filed a civil lawsuit that accused their son-in-law in the attack. Railey failed to respond to the suit and a judge in April found him financially liable in the incident.

Parker said he did not know if police would visit Mrs. Railey while she was in Dallas, but said the hospital had taken "extra security" measures for her.

The Railey's two pre-school age children, who have been living with friends since the attack, will not see their mother, he said.

Insurance is paying for the rehabilitation program, Parker said, but he would not estimate the cost beyond the $350 per day room expense.

Vaccinations may indicate Sabat is American

EL PASO (AP) — A hearing-impaired boy found wandering last year in Mexico has vaccination marks on the left arm, though most Mexican children get their shots on the right arm.

The difference adds to speculation that the boy, nicknamed Sabat, is an American, said Juanita McCray, a caseworker for the Texas Department of Human Services.

Sabat, who appears to be 7 or 8 years old, was found wandering the streets of Ciudad Juarez, Mexico, last Nov. 7. He is staying at a child welfare center in that city.

The boy is deaf in the right ear and has 25 percent hearing in the left. He communicates mainly through gestures and drawings. Some of his pictures seem to indicate he survived a small-plane crash that killed his parents and sister.

Authorities in the United States and Mexico have tried unsuccessfully to find Sabat's family or to establish his identity — but no one is even sure what country he comes from.

After Sabat's caretakers noticed that he prefers hamburgers over Mexican food and that he seems more familiar with U.S. currency and cartoon characters, they notified their counterparts at the DHS and the FBI, who have been trying to track down the boy's origins.

Recently, Dr. Estela Palma at the Juarez Center for the Integrated Family noticed that Sabat's immunization shots were all on his left arm.

She said she wants to find a doctor to test whether Sabat has antibodies to the viruses that cause mumps and rubella. If he does, it would mean either that he has been vaccinated for those diseases or that he has had them.

If doctors determine that Sabat was immunized against those diseases, it could be a sign that he's American because few Mexican children are given mumps and rubella shots.

Speculation has been mounting that Sabat is just a street urchin from Juarez, possibly one of hundreds of children who work for networks of professional beggars.

Until someone proves Sabat is not American, Ms. McCray plans to work on the assumption that he is.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

OPEC's bad times good for consumer

Remember the energy crisis? As recently as eight years ago, many politicians warned of an impending shortage of monumental proportions.

In 1978, Secretary of Energy James Schlesinger warned, "What we face in the middle 1980s is a worldwide shortage of about 5 million barrels of oil a day." In March 1979, President Jimmy Carter lamented, "There is a dwindling supply of energy sources. The prices are going to rise in the future, no matter who is president, no matter which party occupies the administration in Washington, no matter what we do."

Yet today the world is awash in oil. And discoveries of new oil fields continue to be made. Most recently, a gigantic oil pool in the Amazon River delta in Brazil was found. Moreover, new technological advances have sharply reduced the cost of pumping oil. Reuters reports that these advances have reduced the estimated cost of a proposed pipeline from Alaska's Prudhoe Bay, across Canada to the lower 48 states, by $11.5 billion.

For this reason, despite recent increases in pump prices for American gasoline, gas still costs less than when President Reagan removed oil price controls in 1981.

These facts mean heads were bowed in sorrow during the mid-year meeting of OPEC oil ministers earlier this month. As is now commonly accepted, the key to the oil-price drop is that America, the world's largest oil consumer, has removed most of its controls on the oil industry.

Contrary to popular perception, price controls don't really "control" prices; instead, they eliminate profits from production, inducing companies to produce less of the "controlled" product. This reduced production, in turn, makes the produce more scarce; and scarcity drives up a product's price.

Another factor is that OPEC continues to be challenged by new oil producers. "The number of non-OPEC producers is expanding," Alirio A. Parra, managing director of the London office of the state oil company Petroleos de Venezuela and a senior member of Venezuela's OPEC delegation, told The New York Times. He added: "In the past 10 years some 37 non-OPEC producers either expanded output or saw their first commercial production. Production may well continue to increase beyond the beginning of the next decade."

All this spells bad times for OPEC, but good times for oil consumers, including American citizens and businesses.

Congress' virtue is dangerous

Henry Adams said that though Harvard students have many bad habits, their vices are less harmful than their virtues. The same could be said of Congress, which is most dangerous when it claims to be public-spirited.

The latest illustration is this month's vote by the House of Representatives to impose new rules on children's television program. It starts from the premise that parents can't be trusted to look after their children's welfare, even in their own living rooms.

Like most broadcast regulations, this measure takes the position that the First Amendment, which guarantees freedom of the press, doesn't mean what it says.

A TV station that violates the new rules may find a multi-million dollar investment destroyed overnight at the whim of a few Washington bureaucrats. That risk will inhibit free expression far more potently than most of the abuses the Constitution's framers were trying to prevent.

The measure burdens broadcasters with two new obligations, one specific and one ingeniously vague. The specific one forbids more than 12 minutes of advertising per hour of children's programs on weekdays and 10% on weekends. The point is mostly symbolic, since the average now is 8 minutes and 38 seconds.

But useless is not the same as harmless. Some stations which are able to make money on kid's shows only by running 13 minutes of ads every hour will decide to run old Clint Eastwood movies instead.

As Northwestern University law professor Dan Polsby points out, the rule will make it harder for small, struggling stations to compete with big, profitable ones since the big ones can comply without any real damage to the bottom line.

The vague obligation is for broadcasters to "serve the educational and informational needs of children" or else lose their licenses. What this consists of is left to the imagination. But there is no point carping that if Congress doesn't know what it wants, it shouldn't expect broadcasters to figure it out. Imprecision is the whole point, since it gives regulators maximum power over broadcasters.

Said Massachusetts Democrat Edward Markey, who sponsored the bill, "I think that broadcasters generally will take an attitude of 'better safe than sorry,' of erring on the side of caution and assuring that they had in fact properly discharged their responsibility toward the child population."

This is the authoritarian mind at work: Everything is forbidden except what's permitted, and what's permitted is not spelled out.

Markey sounds eerily like President Nixon's aide T. Clay Whitehead, who explained how the FCC's licensing power keeps broadcasters in line: "The value of the sword of Damocles is that it hangs, not falls."

Are these rules the sort of power the federal government ought to be granted? I suspect Markey wouldn't be happy if the FCC were to promote a different vision of children's programs than his own. He thinks it could play a vital role in stamping out excessive commercialism.

But how would he like it if a Republican were to name Pat Robertson head of the FCC and tell him to get rid of programs that undermine "traditional values"? Not much, you can be sure. But if it's legitimate for the FCC to advance a liberal agenda, why is it illegitimate for it to advance a conservative one?

In fact, neither camp ought to be able to force its ideological or aesthetic preferences on unwilling viewers. What should determine the content of TV programs is what people choose to watch. If parents are appalled at commercial-heavy cartoons that fuel incessant childish demands for more toys, they can change the channel.

It's not like they have no alternatives: Sesame Street and Mister Rogers are available almost everywhere. Cable subscribers can get Nickelodeon, a high-minded children's network, or the Disney Channel. Anyone with a VCR can find an endless supply of wholesome, commercial-free fare at the corner video store.

Of course, truly radical parents can resort to extreme measures, like turning off the TV and sending the kids outside to discover the uses of their muscles and motor skills.

But the House apparently believes that America's parents are under the ruthless dominance of 5-year-olds, whose addiction to the Gummi Bears and He-Man can be curbed only by vigilant custodians of the public interest.

The House members who supported the bill may be forgiven for treating adult citizens as hopeless incompetents incapable of making important judgments. We elected them, didn't we?

"I'LL BE THE LAST ONE TO LOCK THE DOOR AND TURN OFF THE LIGHTS." —HOWARD BAKER, 1987

He's carping about bigger fish

As far as I know, my late grandfather never read The New York Times. He read the Bible, The Market Bulletin and a Sears and Roebuck catalog, but I just can't picture him dealing with the likes of R. W. Apple Jr., William Safire and Flora Lewis.

I think he would have been astounded if he had ever picked up a Times as I did the other day and read a front-page story about how scientists have been fooling around with his most unfavorite fish, the carp.

The Times story, displayed at the bottom left of page one opposite a George Bush campaign yawner, explained how scientists have taken a growth gene out of trout and have implanted it in carp, thus making it possible to grow bigger carp.

"Who in the devil," my grandfather would have said, peering over the top of the Times, "would want a bigger carp?"

My grandfather was a kind and gentle man but there were a few things he hated.

Among these were opera singers on The Ed Sullivan Show, Jehovah's Witnesses and carp. "Sorriest fish there's ever been, the carp," my grandfather would say. "It's too hard to clean and too bony to eat."

Lewis Grizzard

On one of our fishing trips to Sibley's Pond something grabbed my hook and down went my cork.

I ran backwards with my cane pole in order to pull my fish out of the water. But when I landed my catch on the bank, my grandfather took one look at it and growled, "All you got is a carp. Throw it back."

With that background, then, it should come as no surprise that when I read the Times story I too reacted, "Who in the devil would want a bigger carp?"

I talked to several fishing experts to find out.

One, Charles Salter, fishing writer of The Journal-Constitution in Atlanta, told me Orientals treat carp as a delicacy.

He even said that during the Vietnam war, Lyndon Johnson sent fish experts to that country to help natives produce more carp.

Mr. Salter did, however, agree there has been some hostility toward the carp in this country, and he also said the carp was difficult to clean. ("You have to bleed 'em," he said. Ugh.)

I also read a piece by veteran outdoor writer Charlie Elliott, who defended the carp, saying that if prepared correctly it makes a delicious meal and that carp are fun to fish for because they will bite anything, such as doughballs made of everything from cornmeal to powdered crackers, peanut butter, onions and Jello.

Perhaps I could have changed my grandfather's mind about the carp had the Times story broken while he was still alive.

"You know the Times," I could have said to him. "All the news that's fit to print."

"That's one thing," my grandfather likely would have said, "but 'all the fish that's fit to eat,' is quite another."

World-cleansers want a perfect world!

By WILLIAM A. RUSHER

Over the decades and the centuries, it has been the United States' attitude (most of the time) that the kind of government other countries have is their own business.

There have been, however, notable exceptions to this rule. One spectacular example was our military intervention in Guatemala in 1954 to overthrow the Communist regime of Jacobo Arbenz. Another, much more recent, was our invasion of Communist-dominated Grenada in 1983, partly to protect American students enrolled in a medical school there. And there are plenty of other cases.

As the two cited instances suggest, the exceptions have usually involved situations in which what we deemed vital U.S. interests were threatened. There are indications, however, that this policy of what might be called "preemptive overthrow" is getting out of hand.

The current rash of overthrows began two and a half years ago with the Philippines, which arguably presented a strong case for one of those "exceptions" to the rule. The Philippines are strategically located, and the site of two vital U.S. bases. The president, Ferdinand Marcos, was a notoriously corrupt old autocrat, in failing health and in some danger of being toppled by the Communist guerrilla forces infesting the islands.

So, when Marcos called a snap election and Corazon Aquino (the widow of a popular anti-Marcos politician who had been assassinated) claimed victory, the United States threw its weight behind her and her military backers, and Marcos was ousted.

This outcome was almost universally hailed as a triumph for democracy and for U.S. policy. When, almost simultaneously, the United States engineered the ouster of Jean-Claude "Baby Doc" Duvalier — the equally corrupt despot who ran Haiti (but whose existence certainly posed no problems for us) — admiration for the State Department's brio was widespread. Even Capitol Hill liberals joined in the chorus of acclaim.

Looking around for new worlds to conquer, the reformers' eyes next lit on South Korea, where a military junta was about to seek legitimation in free elections. As in the case of Haiti, a vital U.S. interest was difficult to see. Nonetheless, Washington leaned on the South Korean government to insure that the elections would be really free, and that the junta's severest critics would be allowed to run for office. Divisions in the ranks of the opposition resulted in less than total victory for it, but South Korea too can now be counted among the born-again nations.

Then it was Panama's turn. Its de facto boss, General Noriega, is probably no more corrupt, and no more deeply involved in drug-running, than three-quarters of the dime-store dictators in that neck of the woods, and certainly his country, where American troops are permanently stationed to protect the Canal, constitutes no more of a threat to us than Manhattan's Central Park.

But once the furor deposendi takes hold, it's hard to shake. Noriega was ordered to quit, and indicted for drug-running for good measure. When he stubbornly refused to leave, his country was put through a financial wringer and various strikes and riots were incited. At this writing, the Colonel is still hanging tough, but I doubt that Lloyd's of London would offer very long odds on his lengthy survival in power.

Once the State Department has disengaged itself from this Panamanian tar-baby and succeeded in sacking him, it may want to rest for a while — at least until it can discover how our new president feels about this exhilarating policy of preemptive overthrows. But down the road, if the world-cleansers have their way, one can foresee rough days for President Lee Kwan Yew of Singapore, and the newly elected conservative government of El Salvador — not to mention South Africa.

We want a perfect world, and, by golly, we're going to get it!

Expansion still robust though down slightly from estimate

WASHINGTON (AP)—The U.S. economy, fueled by an export-driven manufacturing boom, expanded at a robust 3.6 percent in the first three months of this year, slightly less than previously thought, the government said today.

The Commerce Department said the gross national product, the broadest measure of economic health, grew to a seasonally adjusted annual level of $3.915 trillion in the January-March period, a $34.6 billion increase from three months earlier.

It was a modest downward revision of a previous estimate of GNP growth in the first quarter. A month ago, the government put GNP growth at 3.9 percent. However, in April, the initial estimate was a much lower 2.3 percent.

Analysts were expecting the slight retreat.

Today's revisions show that non-military spending by the federal government was $3.8 billion less than previously thought. Most of that was accounted for by a dip in purchases of surplus farm commodities.

Consumer spending, although up a moderately strong 3.8 percent, was weaker than the previously estimated 4.3 percent growth. Much of that was due to somewhat less automobile buying than first thought.

Immediately after the October stock market crash, many economists feared the shock to consumer confidence would topple the country into a recession.

Consumer spending did post a rare 2.5 percent decline in the fourth quarter, but it has come back in the first three months of this year.

The engines driving the six-year-old economic expansion now, even more than consumer spending, are rising export sales spurred by the cheaper dollar and the consequent surge in modernization and expansion spending by businesses.

Exports of goods and services were up a strong 22.8 percent in the first quarter. Business investment in capital equipment shot up 33.1 percent, the fastest rise since the first year of the recovery from the 1981-82 recession.

The growth has buried recession fears, but now financial markets have become concerned that the economy is expanding so rapidly that it will rekindle inflation.

First quarter growth was occurring with little pickup in inflation, however. A price index tied to the GNP rose at an annual rate of 1.4 percent, slightly lower than the previously estimated 1.7 percent and well below the 2.7 percent pace of the fourth quarter.

However, some analysts say inflationary pressures have begun to surface in the quarter ending this month.

In a second report, the Commerce Department said U.S. corporations' after-tax profits fell 1.0 percent in the first quarter, the poorest showing since profits dipped 3.7 percent in the first quarter of 1987.

Last month, the government, in a preliminary estimate, said profits eased up a slight 0.5 percent in the January-March period. Profits were up a moderate 2.6 percent in the fourth quarter.

Economists say lagging profits could put pressure on businesses to raise prices.

The GNP in the fourth quarter of 1987 was even stronger, growing at a 4.8 percent annual rate. However, much of that production went into a rapid buildup in businesses inventories of goods held on shelves and back lots.

The mix of growth in the January-March period is considered better, but the worry now is that too much demand—from American consumers as well as from overseas buyers—will strain factory capacity, causing shortages and driving up prices.

With the second quarter of 1988 drawing to a close, the signals are mixed.

Inflation, as measured by the Consumer Price Index, is running at a 4.4 percent annual rate through May, the same as last year. But drought-sparked food price increases have yet to show up at the retail level.

And factory operating rates have risen from 82.4 percent of capacity in March to 82.9 percent in May, creeping closer to the 85 percent level.

Weeks before farm drought aid ready

WASHINGTON (AP)—Congressional advocates of providing income guarantees for America's drought-plagued farmers concede that it will take weeks just to fashion a bill, let alone push it through Congress.

"This is an ongoing process; nothing is set in stone," House Agriculture Committee Chairman E. "Kika" de la Garza, D-Texas, said Wednesday after a congressional task force approved broad outlines of a drought-relief package.

The blueprint is short on specifics and bound to come in for changes in weeks ahead. In fact, one feature—to allow growing oats on idled acreage—was approved as part of the plan, then quietly scuttled within the hour to keep peace with a skeptical Agriculture Secretary Richard E. Lyng.

The general proposal calls for guaranteeing farm incomes but leaves the contentious task of developing a formula for later.

Senate Agriculture Committee Chairman Patrick J. Leahy, D-Vt., had said earlier that task force members should sit down and stay in session until they worked out a blueprint for providing assistance.

He told the task force that at least some document was needed as a sign to farmers that Congress means business about providing help.

Navy official reportedly cooperating in probe

WASHINGTON (AP)—A top Navy official whose phone was tapped in the massive Pentagon bribery probe has begun cooperating with prosecutors, and a published report today says his former boss allegedly had secret defense documents smuggled out of the Pentagon.

Deputy Assistant Navy Secretary James Gaines, whose office was searched last week, has begun telling prosecutors what he knows, sources familiar with the investigation said Wednesday evening.

The Los Angeles Times reported today that investigators believe Gaines was a principal supplier of Pentagon documents to defense consultant Melvyn R. Paisley, who was assistant secretary of the Navy and Gaines' boss until April 1987.

The Times, quoting government sources, said Paisley allegedly arranged an elaborate scheme under which high-level Pentagon officials smuggled classified documents out of the Pentagon and allowed him to copy them with the aid of his wife.

The newspaper said Paisley allegedly passed the sensitive information to McDonnell Douglas Corp., which had retained him as a consultant shortly after he left his Pentagon post. One source told the Times that Paisley received "staggering fees" from the company.

The 2-year-old investigation focuses on allegations that private consultants, many of them former Pentagon employees, paid bribes to obtain Defense Department secrets about upcoming contracts.

Gaines made an appointment to hire a Washington-area defense lawyer, but then abruptly canceled the meeting after getting a call from a federal investigator who told him that "you have until 9 a.m. tomorrow to decide whose side you're on," according to one source. Gaines decided several days ago to cooperate, said the sources.

While Gaines is talking with prosecutors, another Pentagon official whose office was searched, Victor Cohen, is negotiating with the government on whether to do the same, said the sources, speaking on condition of anonymity.

After a meeting with the chief prosecutor in the probe, one of the Pentagon's strongest supporters in the Senate said "people will really be shocked" by the scale of wrongdoing involved.

"It appears they have very good evidence," Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., said after being briefed by Henry Hudson, the U.S. attorney for eastern Virginia.

Both Gaines and Cohen had key procurement jobs in the Pentagon. Gaines was deputy assistant Navy secretary for acquisition management while Cohen was deputy assistant Air Force secretary in charge of buying tactical command, control, communications and computer systems. Both men have been reassigned since the investigation became public.

While Hudson was describing the case to congressional leaders on Wednesday, former Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger was defending his Pentagon management style and warning against public and congressional overreaction to the disclosures.

"No matter how careful you are, you're not going to be able to eliminate dishonesty," Weinberger said in an interview with The Associated Press.

Hudson told congressional leaders in closed meetings that 75 to 100 contracts worth "tens of billions of dollars" are under scrutiny, according to Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich.

Sen. John Warner, R-Va., ranking Republican on the Armed Services Committee, said after hearing Hudson that "these contracts may have to be examined to determine if they were in fact tainted by these allegations."

Hudson told reporters that there may not be any indictments until after the Nov. 8 election.

"I'm hopeful that if indictments are appropriate in the case, they will be secured by the end of the year," the prosecutor said.

Irish eyes are cryin' for tenor Dennis Day

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Dennis Day, a golden-voiced Irish balladeer whose career as a foil for comedian Jack Benny spanned decades of radio, television and film, has died after a long battle with Lou Gehrig's disease. He was 71.

Day died at his Bel Air home late Wednesday, surrounded by his 10 children and 13 grandchildren, said his publicist, Kitty Davis.

"Everyone is taking it very hard," she said.

His wife, Peggy Margaret McNulty was admitted to St. John's Hospital and Health Center earlier in the day for cardiac tests and was in stable condition, said nursing supervisor Nancy Gauthier. Doctors have not confirmed whether she suffered a heart attack, Ms. Gauthier said.

The cause of death was not determined, but Day was diagnosed last year as suffering from amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, a progressive muscular ailment that killed Lou Gehrig.

He had undergone brain surgery in March after suffering a fall, and was readmitted to St. John's on June 5. He was released from the hospital Monday.

"I'm very, very saddened by Dennis' death," said comedian Jerry Lewis, national chairman of the Muscular Dystrophy Association, which Day supported.

"Dennis Day was a brave, kind, talented man who showed his love by giving. All you had to do was ask."

Day's career spanned decades in radio, television and movies, and he was rated as one of the shrewdest talents in the business.

Born Eugene Denis McNulty to Irish parents in New York City on May 21, 1917, he was graduated from St. Patrick's Cathedral High School and attended Manhattan College with plans to enter Fordham's law school.

His plans changed when Jack Benny was hunting for a singer to replace Kenny Baker. A recording Day had made earned him an audition, and an off-the-cuff wisecrack helped land him the job, according to a studio biography.

With all the applicants gathered in an audition room, Benny called out, "Oh Dennis!" Young McNulty replied, "Yes, please."

"That's it!" Benny whooped.

He assumed the name Dennis Day when he joined Benny's radio show as a singer in 1939, and quickly matured into a comic target for the host. One of Day's trademark lines was a sprightly, "Gee, Mr. Benny!"

With a nationwide audience on radio, Day gained popularity with his renditions of "Danny Boy," "Clancy Lowered the Boom," and other ballads. Another Day favorite, "Peg of my Heart" was a ballad he sang for his wife, said Ms. Davis.

In 1952, Day disclosed that Irish authorities had banned his RCA recording of "The St. Patrick's Day Parade."

"The Irish didn't object to the song or to my singing," Day said, but to shouted exclamations such as "How are ye, Paddy, me boy!" as if he were marching in a parade.

"They said (it) sounded like stage Irish," Day said at the time, with some bemusement.

Day moved to television with Benny's show in 1950, making irregular appearances.

In 1951, Day demonstrated his business acumen by landing a movie contract with 20th-Century Fox. At the time, he was the only Fox contract player with television rights. He also signed a contract with NBC, after allowing weeks of bidding between the network and competitor CBS.

Day became a regular on such TV variety shows as "All Star Revue," "Hour Glass," "The RCA Victor Show," "Max Liebman Presents" and his own "Dennis Day Show."

He also appeared in several films, including "Buck Benny Rides Again," "Music in Manhattan," "One Sunday Afternoon" and "The Girl Next Door."

Funeral arrangements were not announced.

We cut back food but plant trees?

To the editor:
I am a resident of McLean and love our town.
I am all for making the United States more beautiful, but not at the expense of less fortunate ones. I get real angry when I watch the news and see a family without a place to live, and children and elderly hungry. But you drive along I-40 and see trees being planted.
Is this the reason the Food Assistance Program is being cut back — so there will be no more cheese and butter? Maybe to the ones in Washington and to Mrs. Johnson, cheese and butter is not a big deal. But to the elderly and less fortunate, it is.
I am proud of Texas and proud to be a Texan, but am concerned about the people. Couldn't there be a better way to spend the hundreds of thousands of dollars that is being spent on these trees?

What's happened to good drivers?

To the editor:
Is driver courtesy a thing of the past??? How many times have you waited to park only to have someone whip in front of you?
I actually believe some people would run a pedestrian down if the pedestrian didn't run to get out of the way.
People never look behind themselves to back, just start up and floorboard the gas. You can either dodge or be hit.
I've very careful to park straight and have a parking place with plenty of room on each side. Yet my car has had the rear fender caved in four times. You guessed it: "Who-done-it" never confessed.
How about the people who park in front of a store in no-parking zones or handicapped zones, or take up two parking places? Not to mention the light zoomers who take off before the intersection is clear. Or the bumper riders.
Merchants, how about getting some "safe driver" awards and let's see if we can stop some of this unsafe foolishness? Maybe an award for the best safety tip or telling the worst hazard seen for the week?
People, wake up! The car doesn't drive itself — or does it?

Ruling could affect alcoholics treatment

To the editor:
The recent Supreme Court decision that all "primary" alcoholics' condition is due to "willful misconduct" could adversely affect current treatment programs of those attempting to recover from alcohol and other chemical dependencies.

The American Medical Association for 20 years has defined alcoholism as a disease, but this recent decision may start a reversal of positive gains made in the treatment of alcoholism.
In our prisons, jails and mental institutions, over 80 percent of the inmates are there because of alcohol/drug related problems. Nationally, the Veterans Administration Medical Centers are helping to return thousands of recovering alcoholics to responsible tax-paying roles in our society.
The VAMC Waco, for example, has 1,000 beds for psychiatric patients, but only 30 beds for treatment of recovering alcoholics. This very successful recovery program holds an annual reunion each August attended by more than 200 sober ex-patients each year.
Budget cuts by Congress are already eroding the alcohol treatment programs in VA Medical Centers. The length of stay in the Waco ARU program has been cut from 63 days to 28 days. Additional cuts to 21 days are expected in the near future. The length of stay in a protected environment has a direct bearing on the success ratio of recovery.
We have two choices — pay for treatment or pay for incarceration. It is hoped Congress will continue to appropriate enough funds for these life-saving recovery programs that help those who are a burden on their families and society to again be responsible tax-paying citizens.

Veterans have new inpatient guidelines

To the editor:
Of all the concerns we face daily, as individuals and as a country, the availability of health care ranks near the top. That's why it's important that your readers be made aware of recent changes in the eligibility requirements for Veterans Administration (VA) inpatient care which could affect access to medical services for those in your community who are veterans of military service.
Public Law 99-272, sometimes called the "Means Test," has established new guidelines to ensure that veterans with a service-connected disability and eligible veterans with lower incomes are assured VA hospital care, while those with nonservice-connected disabilities and higher incomes might receive care on a space-available basis — in some cases with co-payments or deductibles.
It is vitally important that each veteran and his or her family understand these new eligibility guidelines and where he or she fits in the overall picture.
We at the Paralyzed Veterans of America urge your readers to contact the Veterans Administration to determine their own accessibility to VA health care.
Or, for a free brochure on this subject, contact the Paralyzed Veterans of America at 801 18th St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. We have printed materials and a service department of more than 100 professionals nationwide who would be happy to assist any veteran in obtaining all the VA services and entitlements which are rightfully due as a result of military service to the United States.

Transitional class needs our support

To the editor:
At this time last year, I sat in a chair in my son's kindergarten classroom, reviewing his scores on the 1987 Metropolitan Readiness tests and was told my son, B.J., was not prepared to go into first grade, that they wanted to place him in a new class, a transitional program.
I was unsure about the program, and I was offended that the school would suggest that he was too immature, or unable to comprehend what he'd learned. But, trying to be a good parent, I agreed to the class.
Now, a year later, I sat in a very similar chair and reviewed B.J.'s scores on the exact same test. Last year, he missed 39 questions out of 73. This year he missed 5.
Last year, I had to drag him to school every day. This year, he went happily! The difference? Because he's learning, and succeeding. The accomplishments he's made, in my opinion, are the direct result of his excellent teacher, Mrs. Sarah Garton, and this program, along with the support of Mr. Timothy Powers and the school board.
Had I fought the educators and put him into first grade this year, he probably would have failed. Instead, I was told my son is smart. He simply needed the extra time to catch up and understand.

From what I understand, this program is very versatile. Some children are not ready for school at age 5 and may not fully understand what they are taught. Some children aren't mature enough, and some simply need the additional time to review and catch up. Kindergarten and first grade is very possibly the two most important school years for our children, as this is when they learn the basic steps for reading. And if they can't read well, they won't do anything well.

Parents, our children are learning a lot more earlier than they used to. Are you aware of what is taught in kindergarten? They teach them the alphabet, counting, colors, shapes, addition and subtraction, and many other skills. If your child was not able to keep up, or is still a little immature to handle the next grade, this program may very well save their academic lives!

So, if your educator suggests this program for your child, please put your own feelings aside; this is not a sign of failure, it is simply insuring your child of a good education.

I don't know all the benefits of this program, but I do know what it did for B.J. and the results are wonderful. Next year I'll send him into first grade with encouragement, because now he's proud of himself and has self-confidence.

Thank you, school board, for your continued support of this program!

Flattering swimwear makes a big splash

By HELEN BURGGRAP
Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

Back in the 1960s, when the oldest baby boomers were still in their muscle-toned teens and 20s, pop culture was preoccupied with the bikini.

From the modest versions worn by Annette Funicello to the "itsy-bitsy teeny-weeny yellow polka-dot" number whose owner was afraid to leave the water, bikinis were, well, hip.

But now even the youngest baby boomers are 24. And when it comes to bathing suits, they and their fellow boomers have become more concerned with their hips than with being hip.

And with their tummies: With a "baby boomlet" underway, more babies were born last year than any year since 1964. Consequently, there are also more flabby midriffs to be hidden—or at least helped—at beaches and pools this summer.

According to DuPont, women between the ages of 23 and 49 account for approximately 57 percent of all swimwear sales. Since no manufacturer has ever gone broke catering to the baby boom's latest whims, savvy swimwear makers have responded with an ocean of specially designed, figure-flattering suits.

From left: floral sweetheart bandeau ($48), tiger-print surplice ($48), tiger-print tank with inset leg ($48), and V-front suspender-back tank ($44), all from Christina of Canada's Simply Slim collection; high-waisted two-piece suit ($38) and high-neck suit with waist-slimming stripes ($46), both from Jantzen, Inc.

These bathing beauties are a far cry from the matronly, orthopedic-looking suits that have always existed for full-figured women. The designers of the new generation of swimwear utilize styling tricks, colors, prints and only the gentlest, most invisible fabric supports. Most of these suits are indistinguishable from regular women's swimwear except by their hang tags.

Not everyone between the ages of 24 and 42 is fat. But, according to swimwear manufacturers, virtually every woman in her mid-to late 20s or older has one or more figure flaws that she must consider when choosing her bathing suit.

Fashion

"We operate on the assumption that there is no perfect figure out there," says Catherine Hansen, merchandise manager for women's swimwear at Jantzen, Inc.

Four years ago, Jantzen became one of the first swimwear companies to make flattering bathing suits a priority with its "5 Lbs. Less" collection. Since then, other manufacturers have introduced slimming lines of their own.

"It doesn't take five pounds off you, but it does give you a nice feeling of control that you don't often have in a swimsuit," says Hansen of 5 Lbs. Less. "That psychological feeling of control is as important as what the suit itself does for the wearer."

Jantzen uses a "power net lining" in the front of its suits to lightly control errant stomachs—"kind of like control-top panty hose," explains Hansen. Jantzen also allows for extra length to prevent women's "most common complaint": fanny creep.

Eye-catching graphics add punch to sleek one-piece swimsuits. Little girls love to dress up like mom, and this season designers are showing their true colors with high-impact prints. (Harbour Casual's mother and daughter "Sea Horse" print is made from Vivana nylon by BASF Fibers.)

Christina of Canada targets 25- to 44-year-old women with its high-fashion Simply Slim collection, debuting in U.S. stores this year. Each suit contains a lightly supportive Lycra lining.

Two years ago, Wior Corp., a Los Angeles-based lingerie manufacturer, entered the business with a collection of figure-enhancing swimwear it dubbed the Slimsuit. Today, swimwear is the company's largest division, with sales around $12 million.

"The response nationwide has just been phenomenal," says merchandise manager Jerry Kenton. All Slimsuits come with tape measures affixed to hang tags, according to Kenton, so that the suits live up to their promise to "take an inch off the waist."

Choose the right swimsuit

One way to lessen the agony of choosing a swimsuit is to give yourself plenty of time and be willing to try on lots of suits, say experts. Be open-minded about trying new styles.

"Never go when you're feeling down," advises Christine Balit, vice president of merchandising for Christina of Canada, "and don't be shy to ask for help. Go for a color you like—don't feel you have to stick to black. If you have an area you're unhappy with, such as your tummy, try to forget about it and work on enhancing the positive—your legs, shoulders, back."

In general, the experts suggest you look for prints and textured fabrics, and stay away from flat, pale colors.

- For flabby or thick waists: Look for V-shaped or diagonal stripes; surplice or wrap-styled one-piece suits are also generally flattering. Blouson styles are also good, as is any tank or maillot with shirring or cutouts on the sides. Look into the new tummy-control versions in both one- and two-piece styles. Don't choose a two-piece unless it's high-waisted, or you're apt to hang out. Avoid tight belts.

- For heavy thighs: A high-cut leg creates a long, lean look. If your legs aren't quite firm enough for that, experiment with a sarong, tutu or similar skirted style. Look for darker colors, which won't draw attention to this area. A dark bottom with a striped top works well.

- For big hips: Again, consider skirted suits and darker colors. Avoid low-rise bikinis.

- For big bosoms: Underwire bras are a stylish way to obtain support, as are the new halter, "sweetheart" or Marilyn Monroe-styled tops, which tend to have wide straps. Try surplice wraps and V-neck tanks. Avoid suits that lack inner supports, especially racing-style tanks, and string bikinis.

Ideal bodies don't quite match up to reality for Americans

NEW YORK (AP)—The average American man is 5-foot-10, 172 pounds, with a lean build. He wants to be an inch taller, a pound lighter, more muscular, and thinks a great deal about the body shape of the average American woman.

The average American man thinks women want a man who's 6 feet, 173 pounds and muscular. In fact, they want men the way men want themselves: 5'11", 171, muscular. Men think women like them to have hairy chests, and they're right.

So says the Gallup Organization's "national body image survey," which was commissioned by, and described in, American Health magazine.

Now, as for the average American woman:

The average American woman wears a size 10 to 12 dress, stands

5-foot-3½ and weighs 134 pounds. She has a soft body tone, short, straight, brown hair and imperfect, untanned skin.

The average American woman wants to wear a dress two to four sizes smaller, stand an inch taller and weigh 11 pounds less. She would like more muscles, wavy or curly brown hair and smooth, tanned skin.

The average American woman thinks men want a woman who wears a size 8 dress, stands 5-foot-4 and weighs 118 pounds. She thinks they want a woman with a thin, soft body, long, wavy, blond hair and tanned, smooth skin.

The average American man doesn't think much about dress sizes, but apparently speculates a great deal about the body shape of the average American woman. He wants one with a full rear-end, medium-width hips, a small-to-medium waist and medium-sized breasts. He wants an average body type (not thin), soft body tone (not muscular), long wavy hair and smooth, tanned skin.

The average American woman wants a man to have medium to broad shoulders and a medium to broad chest. In addition, he should have brown or blue eyes, short, curly dark hair and be tanned and clean-shaven.

The poll also found the American woman's zest for thinness is on the wane. Only 35 percent of women say they'd like a thin body; about half are satisfied to be of "average" weight.

But Gallup found women still are more weight conscious than men: while they would like to lose about 10 pounds each, men on balance are satisfied with their weight.

The Gallup Organization said Monday it used a representative national cross-section of 1,037 adults who were interviewed in person.

Father's ashes thrown out with trash

DEAR ABBY: The letter in your column about the cremated remains showing up in a regular box reminded me of this story. Nobody (outside our family) will believe this, but it's true: Our father requested cremation, so we followed his wishes. The urn we ordered did not arrive in time for the funeral service, so we brought a lovely container from home. Actually, it was a Chinese rice bowl. (We had service for 12.) We had Father's remains placed in that bowl temporarily until the urn arrived.

After the service, we brought the bowl home and placed it in the cupboard. That very day, we had a new cleaning lady who spoke very little English.

You guessed it: When we went to get the bowl, she had already cleaned the kitchen and thrown the contents in the garbage can! My brother and I ran out to the alley behind our house, but it was too late. The garbage man had already collected our garbage, and hauled "Dad" away.

ASHES TO ASHES

DEAR ABBY: I am writing after reading the letter in your column about the woman's aunt's remains arriving by regular mail. It wasn't funny at the time, but I had to chuckle when I recalled the memories of my father's cremation a few years ago.

After his death, my two sisters and I decided to have Dad cremated and bury his remains in the Veterans Cemetery. The funeral director asked if we would like to carry the remains or have them transported (for an additional fee) to the cemetery. We immediately said, "Have them transported!"

We then proceeded to make arrangements for the time and date of the funeral service, which was to take place the following week.

Imagine our surprise when we arrived the day of the service only to discover that the mail was running late, and our "father" had not arrived in that day's mail—and would probably arrive on the following day. We had no choice but to proceed with the funeral service

Favorites avoid upsets at Wimbledon

Navratilova seeks singles record

By ANDREW WARSHAW
AP Sports Writer

WIMBLEDON, England — Javier Frana struck a blow for the underdogs of men's tennis. Sort of.

Frana, a 21-year-old Argentine playing in his first Wimbledon, took defending champion Pat Cash to five sets Wednesday and nearly eliminated the head-banded Australian on the third day of the tournament.

Cash prevailed in the sun to win 6-2, 4-6, 3-6, 6-1, 6-4 but it was Frana who received a standing ovation from the Court No. 1 crowd. "In the end, he took advantage of my lack of experience," Frana said.

Two other underdogs briefly had the thrill of an upset in their grasp.

Australia's Darren Cahill won the first set from top-ranked Ivan Lendl but couldn't handle his opponent's power and went down 5-7, 6-2, 6-4, 6-4.

And Michael Chang, the youngest male player in 61 years to compete on the Centre Court, had his time, too.

The American, who turned 16 four months ago, gave seventh-seeded Henri Leconte of France a big fright for two sets before losing 2-6, 7-6, 6-2, 6-3. Chang missed four set points in the second set.

"I'm not disappointed. It's not hard for me to take this loss," Chang said. "This year was just an experience year. It's been a great experience."

Cash, Lendl and Leconte all had today to draw a breath while other top contenders took over the spotlight on the show courts.

In second-round play on Centre Court was two-time titlist Jimmy Connors, up against Australia's Jay Stoltenberg. They were being followed by Gabriela Sabatini against Radka Zrubakova, with John McEnroe, safely over the first hurdle in his Wimbledon comeback, up next against Wally Masur.

On Court No. 1, Martina Navratilova continued her quest for a place in history against Japan's Ely Hakami. Navratilova, the defending women's champion, seeks a record ninth singles title at Wimbledon.

Mats Wilander, on the third leg of his bid for the Grand Slam, was due up next against Glenn Michibata of Canada.

Cash was pushed to the brink by Frana, ranked only sixth in his country and 80th in the world.

Glo-Valve, Dyer's avoid elimination in city tourney

Quality pitching by David Potter and a strong team effort lifted Glo-Valve past Cabot Corporation 13-7 in the Major Bambino League City Tournament Wednesday at Optimist Park.

Potter allowed three hits and two runs in the five innings he pitched to even his season record at 5-5. He struck out 10 and walked only two. Dale Noble worked one inning for Glo-Valve, allowing five runs and five hits. Noble struck out two and walked two. Glo-Valve had eight different players credited with hits and had nine different players score runs.

Chris Gilbert was charged with the loss for Cabot. He gave up eight runs on six hits while striking out three and walking one in the two innings he pitched. He was relieved in the third inning by Tracy Peet, who allowed five runs on three hits. Peet struck out one and walked one.

Andy Sutton, with a home run and double, and Chad Parks, with a double and a single, were the leading hitters for Cabot.

Cabot jumped out in front in the first inning when Gilbert reached base on an error to lead off the game and Andy Sutton followed with a home run.

Glo-Valve came back with seven runs in the bottom of the first on singles by Noble, Potter, Keith Stewart and David Loyd, followed by a double by Chad Dunnam. Cabot made four errors in the inning, which saw 11 batters go to the plate for Glo-Valve.

The score was even after Cabot batted in the second on singles by Brandon Lee, Chad Parks and Mike Foote to go with a double by Sutton and a three-run homer by Peet.

Glo-Valve took the lead to stay in the bottom of the second when Rodney Scott, who singled, scooted home when J.B. Horton reached base on an error.

Glo-Valve scored two more runs in the fifth inning, thanks to three Cabot errors.

Chris Shouse singled for Glo-Valve in the third and was cut down while attempting to steal second. Gilbert had a double in the Cabot third and Parks had a double in the Cabot fourth, but both were left stranded when Potter stiffened to strike out the remaining batters in the innings.

Dream becomes real for White Deer athlete

I think the thing that is most striking about Monica Vigil is her enthusiasm.

The first time I met her, I was doing an advance story about area tracksters who were to compete in the state meet in May. Monica, then a senior at White Deer High School, had qualified to run the 2A 800-meter dash in Austin.

When I spoke to her then, she was excited about going to state for the first time. She would conclude her high school track career with a race that had been a year-long dream.

The state meet advance story was my first assignment upon moving to Pampa, and I was happy to encounter someone who was so excited and who spoke so openly as Monica did. She made my job easy.

Anyway, I predicted that the 2A 800 would be a rematch between Ginger Hoots of Brazos and Kim McEntire of Canadian, as they had finished 1,2 at the '87 state meet. What I didn't take into account was Monica Vigil's determination.

She took control of the race from the starting gun, and she never relinquished that control, capturing the gold medal in her first appearance in Austin. After the race, she was perfectly willing to discuss the race for a few minutes, despite the fact that she was probably ready to drop.

She was again very excited, but she spoke humbly and intelligently, citing Kim McEntire as her role model. Again, she made my job easy. It can be difficult to hit someone with a barrage of questions following a grueling contest, especially if you don't know them well. No problem here; she was perfectly obliging.

I spoke to Monica again Wednesday, and she was full of her usual excitement. She had just that morning signed a letter-of-intent to run track at Texas Tech in the fall. She spoke fondly of her soon-to-be coach, Jarvis Scott, her high school coach, Deryll Friday, and the classes she would be taking at Tech.

In Stride

By Sonny Bohanan

As a recent college graduate, I began reflecting upon the things that she might experience and accomplish in the next few years. For someone as enthusiastic and unjaded as Monica, just leaving home for the first time, entering the university of her choice on a track scholarship, with life stretched out before her, the possibilities are limitless. Congratulations, Monica, and good luck. ●●● Although you may have seen game seven between the Lakers and Pistons Tuesday night, if you didn't see it on my television set, then you missed some of the most stimulating viewing in the history of professional basketball.

Certainly NBA Basketball is exciting in and of itself. Don't get me wrong there.

But there's something inherently more worthwhile in watching a national sports showdown when the element of incomprehensibility is introduced.

Perhaps an example will illustrate my point more clearly. Let's pick up the action near the end of the fourth quarter.

"It seems the blobs in the light-colored jerseys are scrambling across the court toward the blobs in the dark-colored jerseys. We've been waiting all night for this, John (John is my fellow commentator. It adds color.). If the dark blobs are going to pull this one off, they're going to have to play the sort of defense we saw in game five.

"Both teams have crowded around the basket in a gray blur. Something's happening! The crowd broke up, and both the light and dark blobs are charging to the other side of the court! What a play!

"The blobs are again gathered around the basket, and it looks like... Wait! They're running across the court. Something's happened again, something big, I bet!"

As it turned out, it was something big. The blobs in the light-colored jerseys had just won the game to become NBA champions for the second consecutive year. Although I had been hoping for an upset by the dark blobs, the fact that I didn't know which team was which kept me from being too disappointed. What a game!

Indians' Jones ties save mark

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

Doug Jones, who was invited to the Cleveland Indians' spring training camp as a non-roster player, may also be invited to pitch for the American League in the All-Star Game.

Jones pitched one scoreless inning Wednesday night — one hit, two strikeouts — to protect Cleveland's 3-1 victory over the Boston Red Sox and tie a major-league record with his 13th save in his last 13 opportunities. He has come through 17 times in 19 save situations.

"I guess they keep records for everything. I had no idea about it until I read it a week or two ago," said Jones, who turns 31 on Friday. "We needed to win more than I needed this record."

Jones, who has a 1.87 ERA and has yielded only 19 hits in 33 2-3 innings while striking out 37, tied the record last year by the Phillies' Steve Bedrosian. He broke the AL mark of 12 straight set in 1973 by the Yankees' Sparky Lyle.

The third-place Indians are one game behind New York, which lost to Detroit 3-2 in 10 innings and trails the first-place Tigers by 2½ games. Elsewhere, it was Oakland 6, Milwaukee 2; Minnesota 3, California 1; Chicago 5, Kansas City 4; Seattle 3, Texas 2 in 10 innings; Toronto 4, Baltimore 2.

Jones is not only a savior, he's also a prophet.

"(Pitching coach) Mark Wiley called down after the top of the eighth and said if we scored a run I was in the ballgame," Jones said. "I went in and got my glove and told (backup catcher) Chris Bando, 'Let's go,' and he said we had to score a run first. I told him we were going to get a leadoff dinger. And I have witnesses."

Julio Franco opened the bottom of the eighth, against Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd with his sixth home run of the season. Brook Jacoby, who homered in the fourth inning, singled home an insurance run.

The Red Sox were held to four hits in eight innings by John Farrell, including Rich Gedman's seventh-inning homer. Tigers 3, Yankees 2

Luis Salazar's RBI single with one out in the 10th inning scored Tom Brookens from second base and gave Detroit a sweep of the three-game series.

Relief ace Mike Henneman pitched the last three innings, allowing one hit, striking out five and lowering his ERA to 1.67.

Brookens started the 10th with a single off reliever Charles Hudson and was sacrificed to second by Jim Walewander. Salazar lined a 2-2 pitch up the gap in left-center.

Athletics 6, Brewers 2

Mark McGwire hit a three-run homer and Dave Stewart continued his mastery of Milwaukee with a six-hitter. The 400-foot shot in the fourth inning and gave Oakland a 4-0 lead. Stewart, 10-5, ran his career record to 6-0 against the Brewers.

Twins 3, Angels 1

Frank Viola pitched a three-hitter to become the AL's first 11-game winner and John Moses had three hits.

Viola, 11-2 overall and 8-0 at home, has lost only once since opening day. He allowed one walk, struck out six and the only run he allowed was unearned as a result of his own throwing error.

Mariners 3, Rangers 2

Mickey Brantley's 11th home run of the season leading off the 10th inning enabled Seattle to snap a nine-game losing streak during which the Mariners scored only 12 runs.

Brantley's homer off starter Jose Guzman also snapped the Mariners' club-record 14-game road losing streak.

Mike Schooler pitched three innings of scoreless three-hit relief.

Up and down

Money dealers point their fingers this way and that way, up and down, as the U.S. dollar jumps more than two yen during morning trading on the Tokyo foreign exchange market Thursday. The dollar opened at a surprising 129.80 yen, up 2.20 yen from the previous day's close.

U.S. firm's electronics subsidiary a reported target of Soviet spying

OTTAWA (AP) — A Soviet spy ring exposed by Canadian authorities tried to infiltrate a U.S.-owned military contractor that has access to highly classified American naval technology, news reports said.

The Canadian Broadcast Co. reported late Wednesday that the ring was after sophisticated warship electronics slated for a new generation of Canadian naval frigates. It said the sonar, radar and communications equipment is made by Paramax Electronics of Montreal, a subsidiary of Unisys Corp. of Detroit.

The New York Times today quoted unidentified Canadian officials as saying Paramax had access to classified technology including equipment that controls weapons systems aboard U.S. Navy ships.

Foreign Minister Joe Clark told Parliament Wednesday that the eight Soviets expelled last week and nine others formerly stationed in Canada and now barred from re-entry were after sensitive military and commercial secrets.

He said Canadian authorities had prevented any severe security breach.

In retaliation, the Soviet government expelled two Canadian diplomats Wednesday and said three others currently out of the country would not be allowed back.

Spokesman Viatcheslav Bogdanov of the Soviet embassy in Ottawa termed the expulsions from Canada "a provocation."

"These people were not doing anything wrong," he said.

Clark and other government officials declined to provide details of the Soviets' activities, though Clark said they included attempts to infiltrate national security intelligence agencies.

The CBC said one of the Soviets expelled was a naval attaché at the Soviet embassy in Ottawa and was "caught red-handed in a sting" operation.

It connected his expulsion to the arrest earlier this month of a Canadian of Hungarian descent, Stephen Ratkai, who was charged with attempting to obtain classified U.S. military documents from the Argentina U.S. naval base in Newfoundland. The base monitors Soviet submarine movements in the Atlantic.

The CBC also said parts for the new Canadian frigates were once shipped on a Soviet freighter, and Soviet agents took the opportunity to examine them.

Sea still beckons to rescued fishermen

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — The song of the sea is still music to the ears of five fishermen now home to family and friends after 144 days adrift in the Pacific Ocean on a disabled boat.

"We're sea dogs. The sea calls to us," said one, 27-year-old Joel Omar Gonzalez. "The sea is the source of life for us and our families."

The five, headed by skipper Gerardo Obregon, 33, received a hero's welcome Wednesday from dozens of people including first lady Margarita de Arias when they flew in from Honolulu by way of Los Angeles.

Relatives, friends, neighbors and fellow "pescadores" flocked in from Puntarenas, their home port 95 miles away, to welcome them at San Jose's Santamaria Airport.

The engine of their 33-foot fishing vessel, the Cairo III, was knocked out beyond repair during a storm Jan. 24, five days after they sailed out of Puntarenas, leaving them adrift in the Pacific.

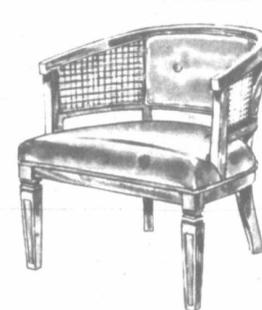

What was to have been an eight-day fishing trip turned into a nearly five-month quest for survival. Gonzalez, his eyes moist as he hugged his wife, Edith, told reporters ships passed them twice but did not see them.

A Japanese tuna boat finally ran into them about 700 miles southeast of Hawaii on June 15 and took them to Honolulu.
