By DEE DEE LARAMORE Staff Writer

Almost a year has passed since Pampa was rocked, literally, by a series of explosions that destroyed one-third of the Hoechst Celanese Chemical Plant, six miles west of the city, on Nov. 14. Three men died and 37 others were injured.

In the aftermath of the explosions — after the first shock and grief began to wear off and as Thanksgiving and Christmas neared - more than 600 employees of the plant and its maintenance contractor, Arthur Brothers Inc., wondered how they were going to provide for their families.

Hoechst Celanese, an impressive plant with its towers, tanks and domes standing against the southern horizon like a cityscape, stood dark and forlorn. Piles of huge, twisted metal silently testified to the terrific forces that had shattered the calm of that crisp November afternoon

Pampa had relied heavily on the plant — for employment, for a dependable payroll that fattened the economy, for large amounts of tax money paid to Gray County and Pampa Independent School District.

In recent years, Pampa has struggled to hold its head above economic waters, buffeted by the recession and the loss of its oncebooming oil and gas industry. Three industries helped keep the city, whose population had already shrunk from approximately 27,000 to 22,000 or less, from becoming more troubled economically — Hoechst Celanese, IRI International and

Cabot Carbon Black And now one of these three important industries stood dark and lifeless. For a time, the holiday season looming ahead, no one really knew whether Pampa's Hoechst Celanese plant would ever come to life again.

About a month later, Pampans were told that Hoechst Celanese planned to rebuild the plant. There was a collective sigh of relief that could probably have been heard at the plant six miles

Fluor-Daniel, a building contractor in Houston, had been chosen to rebuild the plant. Officials were estimating that as many as 500 temporary workers, in addition to the plant and Arthur Brothers employees, would be hired to assist in the re-

Seven months after the rebuilding began, The Pampa News toured the plant. Judging from the numbers of employed and money spent, economic aid to the community from the rebuilding has far surpassed the cautious optimism of plant officials and the less-reserved expectations of local residents.

Fluor-Daniel has hired not 500 temporary workers, but 2,500 to rebuild the plant, according to Jane McBunch, Hoechst Celanese spokesman. Arthur Brothers Inc. employment has risen from less than 200 before the explosion to 350. Also, 150 subcontractors, many of which are local businesses, are working on the massive construction project, she said 'We have well over 3,000 people inside the gate at any one time," McBunch said.

These people are working 60 hours a week, six days a week added Ron Guard, plant manager. Construction work continues in shifts for 20 hours a day, he

Gorbachev takes post of president in Soviet shakeup

By MARK J. PORUBCANSKY Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) - The Supreme Soviet Saturday elected Communist Party chief Mikhail S. Gorbachev president, replacing Andrei Gromyko who retired a day after stepping down from the ruling Communist Party Polit-

The election of Gorbachev Saturday allowed him to unify the top Communist Party and government jobs, increasing his power to reform the top-heavy Soviet political system.

Moscow Communist Party leader Lev N. Zaikov said Gorbachev had been endorsed by the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, and the Central Committee of the Communist Party.

He was elected unanimously by the 1.500-member Supreme Soviet.

Gromyko, a Communist Party and government stalwart from the time of Stalin through the first several years of Gorbachev's reforms, retired from the ruling party Politburo on Friday during a hastily called meeting of the 300-member Communist Party Central Committee

That meeting also approved wide-ranging changes in the party bureaucracy destined to strengthen Gorbachev's hand.

After retiring from the Politburo, Gromyko's resignation from the presidency had been expected. He became president in July 1985 after serving 28 years as foreign minister.

His five-minute farewell address was greeted with thunderous applause.

'The star of socialism since October 1917 has constantly shined and given light," he said. "Thank you, comrade deputies, for the trust you've granted me in the past and now. I have very deep respect for it," he

He then returned to his seat on the dias facing the deputies of the nation's parliament.

The 57-year-old Gorbachev, who took the floor after his election, said his campaign to restructure Soviet society had won the support of Soviet working people, and that the time had come to push it more actively.

He told the Supreme Soviet that the soviets, or local government bodies, would take on a more important roll under his reform efforts.

"The Soviets will take on their shoulders the major burden of state work," he said. "As the situation changes, we must change accordingly.

Acting on Gorbachev's recommendation, the Supreme Soviet named Anatoly Lukyanov vice president. He replaced Pyotor Demichev, who was stripped of his candidate membership on the Politburo in Friday's Central Committee meeting.

Lukyanov was named a candidate member of the Politburo at that meeting.

The Supreme Soviet also named Vladimir A. Kryuchkov to be the new head of the KGB secret police. He replaced Viktor M. Chebrikov, who was named a secretary of the party Central Committee in charge of legal and judiciary affairs.

In an earlier report on the Supreme Soviet's meeting, Tass, the official Soviet news agency, said 'a few personnel questions" were on the agenda for the meeting of the country's top governmental organization. In a sign that indicated that Gromyko was likely to retire from the presidency Saturday, Tass said a visit to North Korea by the Soviet president, scheduled for the middle of October, had been put off.

On Friday, Gorbachev, the 57year-old party general secretary, also obtained the resignations of three Brezhnev-era holdovers full Politburo member Mikhail S. Solomentsev, and candidate members Demichev and Vladimir Dolgikh. He streamlined the apparatus and put staunch sup porters in key positions in the party, which exercises sole control over the subordinate government bureaucracy.

The decision to cut the number of departments from about 20 to six means hundreds, perhaps thousands, of the Soviet Union's top party bureaucrats will lose their jobs.

In other moves. Yegor K Ligachev, considered the Kremlin's No. 2 leader, apparently was demoted in taking on the Central Committee's agriculture portfolio. A member of the ruling Politburo who earlier had been replaced as Communist Party chief for ideology, Ligachev had widely been seen as a potential conservative rival to the Soviet

County commissioners review dispute with insurance

By DEE DEE LARAMORE Staff Writer

Gray County commissioners learned more about a dispute between the county and CIGNA insurance company over general liability premiums at their meeting Friday in the county courthouse.

In brief, Gray County commissioners say they want to remain within the law, but they don't want to give away $7,000 to $9,000 without reason.

County Judge Carl Kennedy read a letter from a collection agency hired by the insurance company demanding immediate payment of a $9,105 balance. This amount stemmed from an insurance company audit of the 1987 fiscal year, Kennedy said, which indicated the county owed that much in insurance premiums over what was already paid.

County commissioners had awarded a bid for general liability and workmen's compensation insurance based on the proposed expenditures for 1987, Judge Kennedy said. Working with Ray Duncan, a local insurance agent, Kennedy had submitted an estimated expenditure of $2.09 million, which included all of the county's expenditures except for road and bridge.

"The controversy comes from whether or not we should have been rated based on the miles of roads in the county," Kennedy said.

'It's a friendly misunderstanding," he said. 'We'd all like to know the right thing to do." Initially, the insurance company had asked for an additional premium of approximately $11,000 for the year. Bill Bridges of Panhandle Insurance Agency said his office had gone over the figures with CIGNA and pointed out several errors in their calculations which the local agency said should have lowered the amount to around $7,000. However, CIGNA only adjusted the amount to $9,105, Bridges said.

PIA has asked for an opinion on the matter from the State Board of Insurance. 'Until you get an opinion, we're not going to know the right thing to do," said Ted Simmons, Precinct 4 commissioner. 'Well, we know they're not going to file suit until they at least get their numbers corrected," Kennedy said. "All we want to do is what's right and what the law says, but we don't wnat to give $7,000 to $9,000 away when we don't need to," Simmons added.

While past insurance problems remained unresolved, commissioners still had to provide insurance for the future. Bids were taken on heavy equipment insurance from five local agencies.

After some discussion, commissioners agreed to accept a low bid provided by PIA from Aetna Life and Casualty at a rate of 36.6¢ on $100 valuation for a total premium of $3,971. Under this policy, the maximum payable on one occurence will be $650,000, rather than the total value of the county's heavy equipment of $1.085 million.

Commissioners decided to take the lower premium and risk having a loss greater than $650,000 since both equipment and materials in Precincts 2 and 4 would have to be completely destroyed to equal a loss of that amount.

Simmons presented the Commissioner's Court with a copy of the mechanics and law on forming a fire protection district for study. Commissioners plan to meet with Rudy Devala of the Texas Department of Community Affairs in a special meeting concerning fire protection services set for 9:30 a.m. Tuesday in the County Courtroom.

A fire protection district would set up another taxing entity, Simmons said, but could be designed so the County Commission would remain the governing board over the entity.

"I'd like to give a copy to the volunteer fire departments and let them look at it," commented O.L. Presley, Precinct 1 commissioner.

In August, Gray County had declined to renew its contract with the city of Pampa Fire Department for county-wide fire protection after the Fire Department had asked for a $40,000 increase from $85,000 to $125,000 per year. The current contract remains in effect until midnight, Dec. 31.

Kennedy reminded commissioners that action on fire protection services needed to be taken soon. "(Pampa Fire Chief) Bob Young has had four people retire and leave the department and he needs to know whether or not he needs to hire any more. And J.D. Ray (former Pampa fire chief) needs to know what the county plans to do about his proposal. He's got a life to live and he needs to get on with it," Kennedy explained. Also in Friday's meeting, commissioners took the following actions:

■ Agreed to a proposal to include 20 acres of the Perry Lefors Air Field in the Panhandle Ground Water District.

OK'd a lease transfer of hangar space at the county air field from Dale Greenhouse to E.E. McDonald.

Passed a resolution supporting Proposition 1, the "Good Roads Amendment" which would ensure that highway dedicated funds be used for highway improvement in the state.

■ Agreed to send a request to the State Highway Department asking for a study of the intersection of Price Road and U.S. 60 and the feasibility of installing a traffic light at the intersection.

Approved requests by Simmons and Precinct 3 Commissioner Gerald Wright to transfer funds within their respective budgets.

Approved Simmons' request to attend a state county commissioners conference in Lubbock,

Agreed to share the county's tax-exempt status by receiving donations for the Veteran's War

OK'd advertising for bids to renew all county insurance policies which will lapse at the end of the

Also approved by the commission was payment of $251,249.66 in salaries and bills, placing $150,000 from Highland General Hospital Fund and $80,000 from the general fund into time deposits, and transfers of $25,000 each from the FLMR fund to Road and Bridge 1 and Road and Bridge 2 funds.

Canadian prime minister calls

OTTAWA (AP) - Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, placing his free-trade agreement with the United States on the line and inviting "the people to judge us." Saturday called a federal election for Nov. 21.

Speaking to reporters outside Government House, where Gov. Gen. Jeanne Sauve had just dissolved Parliament, Mulroney promised the Progressive Conservatives will offer "an agenda of confidence for Canada," with the free-trade pact "very much a centrepiece" of his party's cam-

He pointed to the creation of jobs in Canada — more than 1,000 each day he has been in power, he said. He also promised increased social aid to those who need it, a national commitment to "a pollution-free Canada," and an agreement with the United States to cut emissions believed to cause acid

The election call came two days after a poll indicating that the Conservatives have a substantial lead over the main opposition Liberal Party and the socialist New Democratic Party Despite presiding over a healthy economy and negotiating an accord to bring Quebec back into the Constitution, Mulroney has struggled with a credibility problem referred to in the press as the

"sleaze factor." He has lost eight Cabinet members in scandals ranging from tainted tuna to criminal charges

The Democrats and Liberals oppose the free-trade deal, which would eliminate tariffs over 10 years between the United States and Canada and dismantle barriers to investment and competi-

The agreement has been blocked in the unelected Senate by the Liberal majority. Liberal Party leader John Turner has promised the Senate blockade will be lifted if Mulroney wins a majority in the election for the 295 seats in the House the Commons, which has approved the free-trade agree-

The deal must be passed by the Senate to become law Turner and New Deomcratic

Party leader Ed Broadbent claim the free-trade agreement jeopardizes Canadian sovereignty.

When the Commons was dissolved, the Conservatives held 204 seats, the Liberals had 38, the Democrats 32, independents 3, independent Liberals 1, and four seats were vacant. Because of redistribution, 13 seats will be added to the Commons for the November election.

Mulroney, 49, hopes the Conservatives will be the first majority government returned with a majority since the Liberals under Louis St. Laurent in 1953.

Although the constitution allowed Mulroney to serve a fivevear term, he chose to follow the lead of other Candadian prime ministers and call the election after governing about four years.

He began his fourth year in office on Sept. 17.

An Angus Reid poll released Thursday indicated Mulroney's party had support from 40 percent of respondents, compared with 31 percent for the New Democratic Party and 26 percent for the Liberals

Mulroney, who became leader of his party in 1983 and scored a landslide victory a year later, had been waiting for such encouraging signs before calling an election.

If he wins, the world's two largest trading partners will proceed with plans to create a North American free trade zone on Jan.

If he loses, both the main opposition Liberal Party and the socialist New Democratic Party say they will tear up the complex trade deal, hailed by President Reagan as "only a beginning" in a global free flow of trade.

Hostage may be released soon

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - Kidnappers holding three American educators and an Indian instructor said Saturday they will release one hostage to prove their good intentions.

The announcement came in a handwritten statement in Arabic from a group calling itself Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine delivered to a western news agency in Beirut.

The 22-line statement was accompanied by an authenticating photograph showing U.S. hostages Alann Steen and Jesse Turner with their arms around each other and both holding cigarettes.

The statement did not identify the hostage to be freed nor set a specific deadline for his release.

'We shall free one of the hostages. It's a difficult decision for us, but we shall ascertain our good intentions and our seriousness in this matter," the statement said.

'This should be a clear signal for Washington to carry out what it should do in the area" to support the 10-month Palestinian uprising against the Israeli military occupation of the West Bank and Gaza Strip, the statement added.

It was the fourth statement on the four hostages since Sept. 15 from the group, which is believed made up of Shiite Moslem zealots loyal to Iran and sympathetic to Yasser Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization.

The first statement said the kidnappers were willing to free the four hostages if the United States undertook an initiative in support of the Palestinian uprising

The following two expressed dismay at the U.S. failure to declare outright support for the Palestinian right to selfdetermination.

Besides Steen, 49, and Turner 41, being held were Robert Polhill and Mithileshwar Singh. All were instructors at Beirut University College when they were kidnapped on Jan. 24, 1987. There are 17 foreigners believed held in Lebanon, including nine Americans. Longest held is American Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press. He was kidnapped March 16, 1985.

Public schools want students in classrooms during October

Staff Writer

State officials will be monitoring the daily attendance of public schools in Pampa during the month of October. The attendance figures will directly effect how much state funding the district receives during the 1989-90 school year.

"For each 1 percent of attendance, we gain or lose $88,000," said Lynda Queen, director of public relations. "Last year we had 92 percent (attendance) and we are striving to improve on that.'

Queen said the district loses $120 per day for each time a child is absent this month. To increase the incentive to attend classes, the district will be offering perks to students. Among the prizes are popsicles, pencils, ice cream and pizza parties on the elementary level. At the middle school plans are for classes with 98 percent attendance to get Coke parties. Pampa High School Principal

Daniel Coward said if 95 percent of the student body had no more than one excused absence, every student who was part of the 95 percent would be admitted free to the homecoming dance. The dance will feature music videos. Sally Griffith, district At-Risk coodinator, stressed the importance of good attendance.

"There is a direct correlation between attendance and learning," Griffith said. "We've organized a district-wide group of parents to visit those homes where children are having attendance problems.'

Griffith said the visits are aimed at letting parents show their concern for other parents with problems getting children to school.

"No one has ever been rude to any of the parents who make the visits. It's parent-to-parent, not truant officers," she said.

Griffith added that, on occasion, the parents will discover problems like children without clothes to wear or minors who must take care of a sick parent. "We can take care of those problems. Sometimes they will find that the parent didn't get their child signed up for free lunches," Griffith said. She pointed to the problems a child can face without at least a high school diploma. "Back in the '60s, you could do all right without a diploma. Some of these kids' parents dropped out and did OK for themselves. That's just not the case anymore," Griffith said.

Queen said that Taco Villa is joining in the attendance push by offering certificates and coupons for a burrito and Coke on some campuses.

"The booster clubs are heading most of this up. At the high school, they will be awarded longer lunch periods for perfect attendance," Queen said. By Sta

After the October parental visits to the households of ongoing truancy, Griffith said, the program may be extended. Parents seem to really appreciate the concern these other parents are showing. They show that we ae concerned with getting the kids back in school. We may end up extending this throughout the school year. That will be something we look into,' Griffith said.

She and Queen both said that the problem with drop-outs begins at the earliest levels.

"If you don't get the kids to school, the teachers can't teach them," Queen said.

She said that while the prizes might appear to be bribes, she had other ideas. "We want to encourage attendance. These things have been worked out between the faculty, parents and some of the students. It is a way to show how important coming to school is," Queen said.

She also said that the more money the schools are able to gain through the state, the more programs the district will be able to offer next year.

Discovery astronauts rehearse new emergency escape system

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Discovery's astronauts rehearsed a new emergency escape system Saturday after reassuring a worried 14-year-old that America's space program is "back on track.

The crew of the first shuttle flight in 32 months also tested an infrared communications system designed to keep space snoops from eavesdropping. Mission specialist George "Pinky" Nelson conducted radio checks with the device throughout one orbit and his voice was clearly heard in Mission Control.

Earlier, Nelson and commander Frederick H. Hauck wormed their way into bulky orange pressure suits designed to protect shuttle astronauts who are forced to bail out of a disabled spacecraft. "It's a struggle to get into these things," said Nelson after he had donned his suit. "It doesn't take very long. And they are warm. No doubt about that. On a televised view of the rehearsal, Nelson's face was streaked with perspiration Nelson also helped Hauck into his suit, while their crewmates, pilot Richard Covey and mission

John M. Lounge, watched and timed their progress.

In the television view, Hauck was seen to put on the bottom of the suit both legs at a time, causing Covey to note, "Oh, the wonders of zero G (gravity).'

Although the astronauts spent hours on Earth practicing with the equipment, the suits had never been donned in the weightlessness of space.

Nelson also practiced installing a long, bulky pole that would be used as a kind of fireman's slide to speed the crew's exit from a disabled shuttle. The equipment was designed in the aftermath of the Challenger explosion, although it would not have helped the seven crew members who died when that shuttle blew up on Jan. 28, 1986. The system, which includes explosives to blow open a hatch, was developed to give astronauts an escape if the craft is in stable, gliding flight but unable to make a runway landing.

Mission Control reported that Discovery continued to function smoothly as it flashed past the halfway mark of a four-day flight. The first shuttle mission since Challenger is to end on Monday at 11:33 a.m. CDT when Discovery touches down at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif.

Flight controller Milton Heflin said experts were studying a balky cabin cooling system that iced up shortly after launch. Mssion Control turned on heaters to thaw the ice away, but Heflin said even if the problem persisted there was another system that could keep Discovery's cabin cool during its return to Earth.

Cabin temperatures have hovered in the 80s while the ice has been thawing, but Heflin said the crew appeared to be comfort-Earlier, Hauck took television

While Hoechst Celanese's insurance company agreed to pay enough to build the chemical plant to its pre-explosion state, company officials decided to take this opportunity to not only rebuild the plant, but also to extensively modernize the facility.

"We're doing more than damage repair," explained Ron Guard, plant manager. "We're looking 30 years ahead. The way we're rebuilding the plant should extend its life 20 to 30 years."

Hoechst Celanese's chemical plant had celebrated its 35th anniversary here only weeks before a third of the plant was destroyed in a series of explosions on Nov. 14, 1987

Friday, one-third of the plant was manufacturing its products 24 hours a day, while the remaining two-thirds is approaching the commission and start-up stage.

Almost 3,000 people are working 20 hours a day to reach the company's goal to have the plant operating at full capacity as quickly as possible.

"Realistically, by the end of the first quarter (of 1989), we hope to have the plant up to capacity and running smoothly," Guard said.

The plant manager compared the rebuilding and modernization to a home struck by a tornado. "Say you have one-third of your house destroyed by a tornado and the insurance company pays for the part that was destroyed," Guard explained. "But while you're repairing that part, you decide to get new carpet, a new refrigerator and a stove.

Hoechst Celanese has spent roughly $20 million a year on maintenance and modernization, Guard said. However, having the plant down because of the explosions has given the company the opportunity to do some "across the board" renovations that would have taken years to accomplish through the normal modernization program, he said.

A highly sophisticated computer system by Honeywell is being installed that gives operators finger-tip control over a large part of the plant's operations. Almost instantly, they are able to determine immediate conditions at whatever system they choose to view. Two operators constantly monitor the plant's status through 21 detail screens. These detail screens reproduce color schematic drawings of various plant operations and were designed by company engineers with input from the operators and mechanics. A touch of the finger can give instant readings, change the process, start up an operation or shut it down. An interface computer ties this system in with the company's Digital business system, giving managers access to all parts of the Hoechst Celanese colors. These buildings are constructed to withstand blasts "at least as big as the one we had,"

'We're looking 30 vears ahead. The way we're rebuilding the plant should extend its life 20 to 30 years.'

"We used to have a lot of small control rooms," Guard said. 'Now we'll have one major control room which will house the computers, operators, engineers and management. There isn't an executive-washroom (type atmosphere). This goes with our emphasis that we're all in this together.'

Besides the main control room, several smaller control rooms will be situated around the plant. Instead of the 11 the plant had before the explosion, there will now be five, he said.

A laboratory building, also constructed of the blast resistant concrete, is designed for the plant's process developments and process support labor-

Like the control rooms, the laboratory is decorated with the slashes of blue. Inside, the bluegray color scheme continues accented with light and dark shades of mauve.

Outside, where the chemical manufacturing takes place, one can see that most of the large pieces of equipment are in place.

'A lot of what has to be done now is piping work and installing the

All electrical wiring will run through tunnels underneath the plant, he said, accessible by manholes. Roads through the plant have been built atop the tunnels.

instrumentation," Guard said.

The plant manager points to an explosion-scarred tower surrounded by gleaming new pipe. "That was in the explosion, but we left it there so the new piping to it could be installed while we wait for the new tower to come in." he explained.

When the tower arrives, one of the five huge cranes that are in use night and day will lift the old tower straight up and away from its place, then lower the new tower into position.

Re-construction has stayed close to schedule, Guard said. "Fluor-Daniel (a construction company hired to rebuild the plant) is doing an outstanding job for us," said Jane McBunch, human resources manager.

Few reminders remain of the massive explosion that occurred almost a year ago. Some of the tanks show traces of the damage. Part of the rubble left from the clean-up still sits near the plant entrance on U.S. 60, six miles west of Pampa.

It's strange to see cars parked on the foundation of the old administration building, and mobile housing occupying the place where PamCel Hall once stood.

Nearby a 30,000 square foot building houses the temporary administrative offices. Guard's office consists of a tiny room bounded by unadorned drywall. Most of the building is divided into areas for the different teams: demolition, engineering, construction, procuring.

Some of the teams, which often change as new needs arise, have taken up quarters in smaller mobile buildings set up nearby.

Guard said the new administration building will be one of the last projects in the reconstruction of the plant. Bringing the plant up to capacity far outweighs the inconveniences faced by administrative personnel, he said.

Almost a year ago, the future of Pampa's Hoechst Celanese chemical plant appeared quite bleak. Today, new hope arises along with the gleaming new towers. This plant just may be celebrating another anniversary, 30 years from now.

Celanese

(Hoechst Celanese) operators are right there with the Fluor-Daniel people directing the construction," Guard said. "Our people are not only quality control inspectors, but they are also resource people, there to inspect and answer questions.

And Hoechst Celanese employees are taking an active part in re-designing the new plant, Guard said. For example, the plant's systems operations will be monitored by computers guided by software designed by plant employees.

Bobby Nowell, a plant operator recently promoted as supervisor in Area 2, demonstrated how two operators in the computer room will monitor plant operations on 21 detail screens.

A touch of a finger on certain areas of the screen, he said, can lower a temperature, turn on a fan, check whether a pump is 'up'' or "down." A microphone links the inside operators with an outside counterpart if any work needs to be performed at the site. Nowell explained. "It's a nice system, easy to use," he said.

Software for the computers was designed by a committee of operators, engineers and management, Guard said. Such committees, where the plant operators' and mechanics' hands-on knowledge is used, have given input to most of the rebuilding project, he said.

So it appears that not only have plant employees received the benefit of an assured employment. they have also had the opportunity to be actively involved designing their workplace.

Like a phoenix rising from the ashes, Hoechst Celanese has risen from the rubble of the explosion. A tragedy that could have led to economic disaster for this community has instead benefited

Pampa businesses have received $6 million for goods and services from the rebuilding project so far, McBunch said. Another $30 million has been spent in the Panhandle, also for goods and services, she said, adding that $8 million a month goes out in contracted labor payroll for approximately 2,900

"Don't think this isn't spent in Pampa," Guard said. "Just try to buy groceries at the Food Emporium on Thursday evenings. My wife sent me to buy something on a Thursday recently, and I thought I'd never get out of there!'

Officials estimate about half of the skilled temporary labor has come from the Panhandle area. Eighty percent of the semiskilled labor has come from the Panhandle also.

"We absorbed skilled crafts people in this area very early," Guard said. So, Hoechst Celanese people have been going throughout Texas and to nearby states on recruiting trips trying to find qualified electricians, certified welders, iron workers and heavy equipment operators, he said.

'We are probably at our peak right now, through the next week, although it's a constantly changing mix of people," McBunch

A visitor to the plant sees an almost unbelievable amount of activity going on. Many ride bicycles through the construction to limit the number of vehicles on the site. Workers climb around the towers like monkeys in the zoo. More workers stay closer to the ground, building, stringing wires, transporting supplies.

The noise of construction fills: the air. Outside, people mustalmost shout to be heard above; the cacophony of sound phuematic drills whining, heavy machinery chugging, hammers, pounding, steel ringing.

Work is going so quickly that each day changes the face of the plant. "I'll be gone a couple of days, and when I come back everything is totally different," Guard said.

As McBunch said, the rebuilding is at its height right now. As the construction nears completion, the sounds will lessen, the conjestion decrease as Fluor-Daniel begins to cut back on the work force.

"De-staffing will begin in Octo-ber and November," McBunch; said. "It will continue through the end of the year, ending with around 200 (extra employees) who will stay for the remainder of '89 and '90.'

These temporary employees will stay at the plant to complete the plant's modernization project, Guard said.

Erosion and development choke access to beaches

combining to choke off public access to Texas beaches, and current state law isn't strong enough to reverse the trend, officials say.

'There is water invading from the seaward side of our beaches and the shoreline is moving inland," said Ken Cross, the Texas assistant attorney general responsible for enforcing the state's Open Beaches Act.

"It doesn't take a geologist or a mathematician, but just common sense, to know that the public beach is getting squeezed out between development on the landward side and water on the seaward side," Cross said.

They can't forget Savimbi in Angola

Watching the reputed peace negotiations over Angola is a little like watching several casual acquantances having a calm conversation about the long-term problems of the greenhouse effect while ignoring the hurricane outside that has broken the windows, soaked all the books in the bookcase and left the room a shambles. The most important factor in the equation is utterly ignored, and everybody is too polite to mention it.

A little history: Jonas Savimbi formed UNITA to oppose Portuguese colonialism in Angola in the late 1960s, and for many years it was the only one of several anti-colonial groups to have guerrillas in the field in Angola rather than operate from exile. If fair elections had been held when the Portuguese withdrew in 1974, Savimbi almost certainly would have been elected president. Instead, with the help of the Soviets and Cubans, the MPLA seized power and established a one-party dictatorship.

Most experts thought Savimbi was through. But after a Long March that rivaled Mao's for suffering and fortitude, he re-established UNITA and rededicated himself to ridding Angola of foreign domination, this time by Cubans and Soviets. Over the years his control of territory has waxed and waned, and he has taken help wherever he can find it, including South Africa, Arab states, several black African countries and the United States. Most of his backers have abandoned him at least once, some several times. Yet he has persevered and now controls roughly a third of Angola.

In light of this history, it is almost surrealistic to suppose that the current Angolan government can sit down with South Africa, the United States and the Soviet Union to cut a deal to bring peace to the region. The key to peace in Angola is Savimbi and his followers, and they will not be content until the Cuban troops and Soviet advisors leave.

The Angolan regime and its apologists would like people to believe that Savimbi is simply a puppet of South Africa and the United States, that when South African troops withdraw from southern Angola Savimbi will wither up and blow away. Deep down, they must know better.

The U.S. role in these negotiations is schizophrenic. On the one hand, we promise that we'll support Savimbi until the 50,000 or so Cuban troops leave the country — a promise Savimbi probably takes with several tons of salt. On the other hand, we partake in the pretense that the big powers and the local governments can sit down and impose a nice, neat regional settlement tied up in a colorful bow, with Savimbi dealt out.

Whether or not he continues getting U.S. aid, Savimbi and UNITA will be a factor — perhaps the most important factor — in Angola. Any agreement that doesn't recognize this will be written on water.

Hey! Doesn't anybody care?

American immorality just can't be swept under the rug anymore. "OK, Williams," you ask, "what is it this time?"

The Bush/Dukakis campaign is warming up. Both candidates are promising Americans this or that if elected. Both are doing a good job of living up to H.L. Mencken's definition of an election: "... government is a broker in pillage, every election is a sort of advance auction sale or stolen goods.

We get promises of government-sponsored child care programs, more federal funding of education, and job retraining programs. Neither candidate dares mention cutting any handout programs such as agricultural subsidies, business subsidies and other social programs like food stamps, Social Security and welfare.

In my opinion the average American is decent, moral and law-abiding. I may be wrong, but if you went up to him and said, "I have some money I got through threats and intimidation, would you like to have it?" I believe the average American would try to have you arrested.

On the other hand, that same law-abiding American becomes a willing accessory and receiver of stolen goods when it comes to legalized threats, intimidation and coercion.

"Hey, Williams, that's a serious charge; could you take us through that?" OK, you tell me if I'm wrong. When Congress approves a subsidy, the legislators aren't doling out their own money. There's no Santa Claus or Tooth

Walter Williams

Fairy who gives them money Here's the bitter truth that may be hard to swallow: In order for Congress to give one American one dollar, it must, through intimidation, threats and coercion, confiscate that dollar from another tax-paying American.

Here's the essence of the process: A group of farmers, welfare recipients or businessmen tells Congress, "We need a handout." In turn Congress tells you, through its tax code (enforced by IRS agents), the pot's big enough, we'll dole it out to handout recipients Suppose you say, "No, it's my earnings, and I'm going to keep it!" Then Congress says, "Fine. We'll send IRS agents around to take your house and car." Then you reply, "No you won't; when your agents come, I'll defend what I worked for. It's rightfully mine." Congress will merely say, "Go ahead; we outnumber you.

Dead or alive, we'll get your money and give it to a handout recipient."

I can't understand how any moral person can accept money he knows was obtained through a process of threats, intimidation and coercion. Taking money obtained that way makes him no less than an accessory to theft and a receiver of stolen goods.

Government is necessary. It must perform its constitutional functions — providing for national defense, enforcing contracts and adjudicating disputes. And financing these functions requires taxes.

I'm not arguing against taxes as such. However, there is no moral case to be made for the government taking one person's earnings and giving them to another. Nor is there constitutional authority for most of what Congress does. That, by the way, is why Congressmen, and others with a redistribution agenda, do not like Supreme Court justices who support strict interpretation of the U.S. Constitution.

Frederic Bastiat, a great French philosopher. said, "Government is the great fiction through which everybody endeavors to live at the expense of everybody else." But unless decent Americans reject that kind of immorality, we're heading towards the fulfillment of Benjamin Franklin's prediction, "When the people find they can vote themselves money, that will herald the end of the republic.'

Doesn't anybody care?

aying letter games in ads

I was glancing through the paper the other day and I came across personal ads in the classified section.

Ever read those ads? They're much more interesting than reading the soybean futures on the financial pages, and I lost interest in Dick Tracy years ago.

One ad read, "GWM wants to meet GWM for travel and intimate relationship. Must be nons-

After some thinking (I'm also brilliant on the Jumble word game, having gotten "UTIGRA" - guitar - in 15 seconds), I figured out what the capital letters in the ads stood for

'GWM," of course, is a "gay white male," and I'm thinking there's this gay guy who wants to travel and become intimate with another gay guy and he's got to know the facts about AIDS, but what he's concerned about is breathing secondhand smoke from his lover's cigarette.

Another ad read, "SWF wants SWM who's into jazz, the classics, vintage wines and

"SWF" and "SWM," I figure, have to stand for "single white female" and "single white

Lewis Grizzard

"Straight" is possible, too, but let's not get overly immersed in detail, and just who does this SWF think she is kidding here? Any single white female who has to resort to taking out an ad to find a boyfriend would take a SWM who's into yodeling, Hustler magazine, Ripple and robbing convenience stores. Still another ad read: "SBM, handsome, athletic, financially secure, wants SBF, 20s, who will be his princess."

If I were a SBF (single black female) I would want to know how this narcissist got his money and if being his princess meant I'd have to get tied up or do anything involving live animals.

I'm afraid I'd have a difficult time getting all I wanted to say about myself in a few capital I'm a "DWM," a divorced white male (OK, an section, but if I ever did resort to such a thing, oft-DWM). On top of that I'm a "MAODWM," a "Middle-aged-oft-divorced-white-male," and I don't smoke, which makes me a "MAODWMNS.

I'd also like for prospective companions to know I'm a Protestant, a college graduate, a 14-handicap golfer and I snore, which now has me up to being a "MAODWMNSPCG14HGWS."

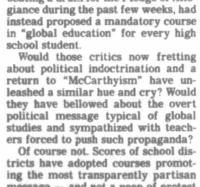

Naturally I'd also want to point out I'm a dog lover who brushes his teeth regularly, still has his hair, loves egg sandwiches and often entertains friends by doing a simply marvelous impression of FDR declaring war on the Japanese Now, how are you going to get all that in a classified ad?

If my social life reaches the desperate point, I can always go after the "SWHWs."

Single Waffle House waitresses. They're around 24 hours a day and make the best egg I don't think I'd ever put an ad in the personal sandwiches in town.

They're really just hedging on pledging

Suppose George Bush, rather than beating a drum for the Pledge of Alletricts have adopted courses promoting the most transparently partisan message — and not a peep of protest has sounded from the legion of critics now bashing Bush. It is bald hypocrisy at this late date for them to make a principled case against forcing political curriculum down the craw of Perhaps you're unfamiliar with global education. In theory, it intro-duces students to cultural, political and economic distinctions among societies - not a bad thing, obviously, in our interdependent world.

In practice, alas, most global-studies textbooks (and I have reviewed several) downplay the moral differ-invariably endorse the position that other nations must be understood on their own terms, that there are no rights or wrongs but mainly misunderstandings.

Just one example: A text entitled "Teaching about Conflict, Nuclear War and the Future" presents the Soviet Union and the United States as the equivalents of global gang leaders vying for raw power. No doubt this view is shared by many people in the Jesse Jackson wing of the Democratic Vincent Carroll ences between free and unfree societies, refuse to suggest which economic system is best at spreading prosperity, and blame the most successful countries for many of the world's

Party. To the rest of us, though, it should be no less obnoxious than Kurt Waldheim's attempt to equate Nazi with the Yugoslav

Has Michael Dukakis ever spoken out against the spread of similar curriculum in his state's schools? Yet this is the man who objects to requiring teachers to lead the Pledge.

Yes, his apologists reply, but only for legal reasons — by which they mean the courts have deemed a man-

Not quite. The U.S. Supreme Court has quite properly decreed that stu-dents who object to the Pledge on religious grounds cannot be forced to say it. But the court has yet to rule on whether teachers can be directed to lead the Pledge. In fact, the court refused to review a 1979 decision by the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals upholding a law requiring teachers to do precisely that.

Surely the difference between students and teachers is obvious. By law, students have no choice but to attend school. Teachers, meanwhile, agree when seeking employment to follow curriculum chosen by the district and reflecting that community's educational goals. Often those goals include instilling pride of nation and values needed for democratic citizenship which is where the Pledge enters the picture.

If a teacher objects, he or she can move on, just as editorial writers who find themselves at odds with a publisher can take a hike. There's no constitutional right to teach whatever one likes at public expense.

It's true that the Republican Party's obsession with the Pledge has grown tiresome. At times, indeed, it's self-righteously irritating. But no less irritating is the bleating of critics who for years have indulged every effort the left to politicize public education.

Aunt has problem getting her checks

To the editor:

I am writing in regard to the Pampa Post Office. My aunt receives a veteran's check on the first of every month. In the last weeks of April she had her check delivery changed to a post office box from a route number.

On the first of May she received it in the box. Then June came and she didn't receive a check. The Veterans Administration said the post office sent it back to the Waco VA office because her name wasn't on the post office box. (It was in her mother's name.)

So she paid a year's fee for the box and the Post Office said both names would appear on the box. So in July she received two checks in the box, one for June and one for July. Then when August rolled around — no check again.

She asked the Post Office why. They said they sent the check back because her name wasn't on the box. Well, the last week of August she finally got her check. Now September is almost over and the same thing is happening again. She still hasn't received a check.

This woman has nothing except her check She has had to beg to keep her utilities on until she gets her check each month.

What is the Post Office's problem? Why do they keep sending her check back? She paid for the post office box and should receive her mail

Why doesn't speed limit go for them?

To the editor:

Recently, on Sept. 15, a friend and I went to Amarillo to purchase a reloading machine for shotgun shells. The purpose of the trip is unimportant. What's important to me is what we both observed on our way to Amarillo.

Between White Deer and Panhandle we were passed by a city of Pampa car (license #457-919, unit #0005) occupied by four males. What department they work in I don't know as I didn't recognize any of them. What I did recognize and commented on to my passenger was the fact I had my cruise-control set on 55 mph and they overtook and passed me easily.

Then on the west edge of Panhandle, the city of Pampa vehicle stopped and changed drivers. I passed them while this was happening. I commented to my passenger, as I reset my cruise to 55 mph, that they would catch and pass me before we got to Amarillo.

Sure enough, I looked in my rearview mirror and observed them passing several cars behind me. Before we got to 1912 on the east side of Amarillo, they passed me again. I checked my speed and had my passenger check it also - it was a steady 55 mph.

The point of this letter is to help me find out what the speed limit really is in the state of Texas. Is it different for exempt city vehicles? Or perhaps that vehicle gets better mileage at 65 or 70 mph?

As a citizen and taxpayer of the city of Pampa whose tax dollars paid for the car and the gas and the salaries of the people in that vehicle, I would like to know why they feel the speed limit doesn't pertain to them. Or if it does pertain to them, who would pay the fine for a ticket, who would pay the increase in auto insurance if the city has to have insurance?

If this letter is printed, don't use my name, because I would hate to have the water to my lot in Horse Alley turned off again for violations that are rampant all over the city but only observed and enforced against the owners of lots in Horse Alley; i.e., meter boxes below ground level, weeds and trash in alleyways and on private property.

Concerned, curious but cautious

Thanks volunteers who drive patients

To the editor:

With the cooperation of the Pampa Ministerial Alliance, Salvation Army; Bob Keagy, manager of the Cabot Co. van; Elena Donald and myself, we coordinated 533 rides for cancer patients to the Harrington Cancer Center in Amarillo for treatments for the fiscal year ending Sept. 1, 1988.

I want to THANK all these organizations and the drivers for volunteering to drive so freely. I am thankful I live in a community so thoughtful of their fellow man.

If any cancer patient needs a ride to the Harrington Center, please call the Salvation Army and they will arrange a ride for you. If a cancer patient needs a hospital bed, wheel chair and other hospital equipment, call Nellie Norman at 665-5427, Gray-Roberts service chairman, American Cancer Society. Nellie Norman

Fumes from truck makes the air foul

I do not live in your town, and I'm not one to complain; however, if I shouted this complaint I have from the house top, I think it would be legitimate.

I'm here caring for a little lady who is nearing the century mark. A few weeks ago, when the weather was so hot, we had to turn the air conditioner off, couldn't even have the doors and windows open due to exhaust fumes from a truck (18 wheeler) which was sitting next to the alley down from this lady's house.

This week (about two weeks ago) she had eye surgery. Yesterday (Sept. 22) the bandages were removed and we brought her home. In the afternoon she laid down and I myself dozed, only to be startled by her coughing and sneezing, which she definitely does not need to do with the eye surgery she had just had, plus her heart condition. My own eyes, nose and throat were burning and stinging terribly due to this same truck sitting with its motor running.

Now I ask you, do we not have enough foul air without adding to it? Why should these people in the 1300 block of North Russell have to tolerate this? In many towns there are restrictions against this. M.M. Shaw

Temporarily of Pampa P.S. This time the truck was in the street!

They should reach out and touch Bell

In the Sept. 7 Pampa News it was reported that a group of auditors for the city claimed Southwestern Bell Telephone is $155,000 behind in its payments of the city franchise fees. Other businesses assessed this franchise tax, i.e., Sammons, Energas, Southwestern Public Service, continue to make payments on their assessment and, relatively, owe only a small amount to the city.

The gist of the news story on comments of city officials indicated that SWBell was "too big" to be able to go to the courts and get this claimed franchise tax paid. If this is true, it seems like a sad day in our government when someone or some company gets so big they do not pay their just debts, since no one can 'afford" to take them to court.

If the Texas Public Utilities Commission does not have the authority to force payment, then the Legislature should enact laws protecting the smaller communities in the state. According to this news story, there are over 165 communities in the state allegedly having a similar problem with Bell. This could amount to over $25 million that SWBell is getting to use "free."

The Public Utilities Commission periodically 'gives' (at the consumers' expense) authorization for SWBell to increase its rates, sometimes amounting to several hundred MILLIONS of dollars. Why cannot this same commission require a utility to pay its due debts?

Perhaps the city should consider contacting the ACLU or the Texas Rural Legal Aid groups?

Bentsen's keeping 'Golden Parachute'

To the editor: I have seen several TV spots by Senator

Bentsen the past few weeks trying to explain to the voters of Texas why his name will appear on the ballot twice this November.

raised in a barn.'

He gives the example of winning the vice president's race under his leader Governor Dukakis from Masschusetts. He said, in this case, he would resign his senate seat and let "The People" decide who the next senator from Texas would be. Governor Clements would appoint a temporary senator until a special election could be held. This special election would be open to all, Democrats and Republicans alike, to see which candidate would win Bentsen's old senate seat. Sounds like typical political reasoning, doesn't it?

My question, and I am sure many other Texas voters have the same question, is: What if Governor Dukakis does not win? What does Senator Bentsen do then? Does he resign his senate seat and go through the procedure he described on his TV spot? Or does he keep his senate seat for six more years? Provided, of course, that he wins that race.

It doesn't take a very sharp mind to figure that out, does it? He is still running for two races on the same ballot at the same time, no matter how he rationalizes it. If he wins both races, he will take the higher position of vice president and let "The People" decide who gets his old seat. If Governor Dukakis and he are defeated by George Bush and Dan Quayle and he wins the senate race, he will still be our senator. What a deal! This is known as having a "Golden Parachute" just in case. Lyndon Johnson tried this same "trick" on Texans when he started the Boston to Austin connection in the Sixties. It did not work then; the Republicans still hold that senate seat today, and it won't work now.

How many other politicians would like to run for two offices at the same time and have a choice, or at least a backup, in case one didn't pan out. We are supposed to have a fair, equal opportunity election system. It would seem that some are more equal than others. They can manipulate the system.

Tell it to readers

Something on your chest? Like or dislike something you saw in your newspaper?

Then write a letter to the editor and tell your neighbors about it.

Rules are simple. Letters must be neat, typed if possible, or at least written legibly. Try to limit your letter to a maximum of two pages, double-spaced if typed, or no more than 1,000 words. Letters may be edited for length, taste, clarity, spelling, grammar and any potentially libelous statements.

Letters must be signed and include the writer's ADDRESS and TELEPHONE NUMBER. Addresses and phone numbers are not published, unless requested, but are needed for verification. Names will be withheld and kept confidential upon request but must be included for verification.

Write to The Pampa News, Letters to the Editor, P.O. Box 2198, Pampa, Texas, 79066. Because of space and time limitations, we cannot guarantee that all letters will be published the week it is received, nor does submis-

Emmylou Posthole gives etiquette rules for Texas NEW LOCATION

By KEN BRODNAX

The Odessa American

ODESSA (AP) - Although some observers of the mannerly arts would contend that rules of social conduct generally are ignored in Texas, certain behavioral patterns are accepted and encouraged.

So, in an attempt to further inform transplanted Texans and re-educate some of the natives, Emmylou Posthole has agreed to serve as guardian of the state's manners

Posthole, author of If It Itches, Scratch, has long been the authority when disputes about proper conduct have arisen in the Lone Star State. She will be available to answer questions about situations that arise in everyday Emmylou will go right to work. A confused former Yankee writes, "I'm confused about which foods can be eaten with the hands in Texas.

Ms. Posthole cleared all the confusion by replying, "As a general rule, nearly anything can be eaten with the fingers. Tacos, burritos, fried chicken and jalapenos definitely fall into that category. We, however, usually draw the line at scrambled eggs and English peas. Those normally are shoved into the mouth on a wide-blade knife, sharp side out, of course.

A native Texan wrote to ask what he should do when he is sitting indoors, has a mouthful of tobacco juice and suddenly gets the urge to sneeze. The Posthole solution is simple: "You have two options - heading for the nearest door or swallowing. If, however, the sneeze comes on too quickly for a decision, try to direct the flow at the person who is the smallest, wearing the darkest

A man who signed himself as "Tall Texan" asked Emmylou when it was apporopriate to remove his cowboy hat. She had a quick answer: "At funerals, when they play the National Anthem and anytime you're getting your hair cut."

A recent transplant of the feminine persuasion inquired as to why chicken fried steak has such a fowl name. Then she wanted to know what wine goes best with that typical Texas meal.

Emmylou got a bit testy. "Because it does. Why not ask why hamburger has ham in its name? As for the wine question, wine does not go with chicken-fried steak. Cheap beer goes with it. Iced tea goes with it. But you wouldn't want the sharp taste of a wine ruining the hearty flavor of the breading and that wonderful lumpy cream gravy.

place settings. The woman wanted to know why so many restaurants in this area put only one fork beside the plate. "Don't Texans know what salad forks are?

The Posthole explanation was simple. "My dear, Texans aren't excited about salads. And most of them are hungry enough that they keep a tight grip on their utensils, eliminating the need for more than one fork.

A common problem was addressed by a man who recently moved here from North Dakota. "Suppose I'm unfortunate enough to burp in public. What should I do?"

Emmylou obviously had addressed the situation before. "First of all, burping in public in the company of other men does not require an apology. In fact, most Texas men consider belching a point of honor and, therefore, try to be louder than their companions. If, however, a

The exhibit is a "Traveling Jobs Laboratory" sponsored by Texas Association of Business (TAB) and co-sponsored by Texas Safety Association Inc., Texas State Chamber of Commerce, Texans for Equity in Workers' Compensation and the Texas Chapter of National Federation of Independent

TAB has worked closely with the Select Committee on Workers' Compensation in supplying information and recommendations for changes in Texas' workers' compensation law.

The association has explored and documented the correlation between relaxed workplace safety rules and the increasing workers' compensation premium rates.

The Traveling Jobs Laboratory will illustrate how Texas employers pay relatively high premiums in workers' compensation, yet Texas employees receive relatively low benefits. As recent as 1987, Texas ranked 10th highest of the 50 states in premiums paid and 40th in benefits paid to injured workers.

WASHINGTON (AP) - The landmark welfare overhaul bill awaiting President Reagan's signature has been strongly cheered by most lawmakers, denounced as unfair by a handful and compared to a coin flip by one who wondered if it would work.

"It's strictly marginal, a coin flip," said Rep. Bill Frenzel, R-Minn., shortly before the House's 347-53 vote Friday completing congressional action on the Family Support Act. It's a five-year, $3.3 billion chance, but Frenzel declared it "worth the investment."

The work-oriented welfare bill, the first fundamental overhaul of the system since it was established in 1935, has engendered great expectations among many. Its aim: transform the system from a long-term trap to a short-term boost, a gateway to mainstream economic America for poor parents ill-prepared for the workplace. Its major tool: a broad new program called Job Opportunities and Basic Skills (JOBS) designed to equip young parents and long-term recipients with the education, training and job experience they need to become responsi-

Reagan has expressed satisfaction with the bill, which sailed through the Senate 96-1 on Thursday.

Liberals complained that the bill, which contains work requirements, is unfair to welfare recipients; conservatives charged that it won't cut people off the rolls or save tax-they're also told to expand cash benefits to two-parent unemployed families, a group only 27 states now serve.

To the extent resources are available, ablebodied parents with children over 3 must participate in JOBS. But they'll get help with child care and transportation costs, and a 12-month extension of child care and Medicaid to help ease them into the private workforce. And those with younger children will only have to participate part-time.

Rostenkowski said 65,000 new families -285,000 people - will receive welfare and Medicaid benefits when the rest of the country adds two-parent households to the rolls. He said up to 400,000 people a year would benefit from JOBS and up to 475,000 people would continue working as a result of the child care and Medicaid transition benefits.

The most popular aspects of the bill are child-support provisions aimed at snaring more money from non-custodial parents. States would receive money to identify more fathers and to set up a computerized tracking and monitoring system to enforce support

Reagan said he had signed the six remaining appropriations measures early Saturday. He received a bill for the Commerce, Justice and State departments on Tuesday and signed a seventh spending bill, a $10.8 billion measure for transportation, earlier

Two minutes later, a puffing House clerk ran into the Senate chamber carrying the House legislation, technically sealing the agreement reached by the vote minutes earlier.

Budget fights between Congress and the president have been the rule since 1976, resulting in some or all of the spending measures being wrapped together. Presidents object to that because as the bills grow to cover more and more federal agencies, the political consequences of a veto become more serious.

Last year saw Reagan sign a single bill covering all federal agencies worth more than $600 billion. He promised to veto anything ressembling it this year and lawmakers strove from the beginning of the year to avoid a replay.

There would have been little discernible immediate impact if the spending bills were not completed Friday. Few federal employees work on weekends, and essential workers like air traffic controllers and soldiers are required to report anyway.

Had Reagan signed all the bills before midnight, it would have been the first time since 1948 that all appropriations bills were enacted before the start of the new fiscal year.

But they were not ready when the president shortly before 11 p.m. returned to the White House where a formal signing ceremony had been scheduled for the Oval Office but then canceled.

Reagan decided to criticize the lawmakers, instead.

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) - Cornerback Alex Morris recovered two fumbles, one for a touchdown and the other setting up a score, as Texas A&M defeated Texas Tech 50-15 Saturday in Southwest Conference football.

Second-team running back Larry Horton scored once and blocked the punt that Morris recovered in the end zone.

A&M, winning its first game at home after going 0-3 on the road against three Top 20 teams, overpowered Tech, 1-3, with a relentless rushing offense keyed by running backs Darren Lewis and Robert Wilson and a blitzing de-

Lewis ran 27 times for 177 yards and scored on a 1-yard dive. Wilson, a fresaman fullback, had 71 yards, with 2- and 9-yard touchdown runs, on nine carries.

Tech quarterback Billy Joe Tolliver, who threw four touchdown passes against SWC foe Baylor last Saturday, had only one scoring toss against A&M and was intercepted twice.

A fumble recovery by Morris after a Tech pass completion at the Tech 42 set up A&M's first touchdown on a 2-yard run by the 235-pound Wilson with 31 seconds remaining in the first quarter.

Horton also scored from the Tech 2, with 7:29 to go in the second quarter, capping a 56yard, 15-play drive that was kept alive on a 5-yard gain on a fake punt by quarterback Bucky Richardson to the Tech 45.

The score rose to 36-0 before Tolliver threw a short pass to 130pound Tyrone Thurman, who completed a 27-yard scoring play

almost solid go

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) -Forget that she was sterling in the end. Flo Jo was solid gold at a Summer Games that needed a dash of 24-karat style.

Florence Griffith Joyner won three gold medals and, when she went for a fourth, just ran out of Flo go. No more gold for the flashy lady in the red tights and painted talons.

But she has graced these Games with astonishing speed, as though she would run away from her shadow, and that was enough to forget the drugs, the disgrace and the fist fights that took their toll in Seoul.

"I can't even find the words," she said. "I'm just so happy."

Three more American boxers go for gold, and the U.S. men's volleyball team plays the Soviet Union in the title game Sunday, the final day of history's most grandiose Summer Games.

Two U.S. boxers - Kennedy McKinney and Ray Mercer won their fights Saturday, giving the team two gold, a silver and two bronze. Three more go Sunday: Riddick Bowe, Roy Jones and Andrew Maynard.

Evelyn Ashford ran down the Soviet bloc, helping Griffith Joyner win her third gold medal in the 400-meter relay, but, even with Flo Jo at anchor, the women could do no better than second in the 1,600-meter relay.

The U.S. men, on the other hand, tied the 20-year-old world record in their 1,600 relay for another gold, anchored by 400meter world record-holder Butch Reynolds.

"I broke a 20-year-old record,"

Reynolds said, "and I wanted the team to be part of breaking another 20-year-old world record. We came up just on the right time.

Mary Decker Slaney, America's best middle-distance runner for more than a decade, came up empty at the Olympics again. She was 10th in the 3,000 meters and eighth in the 1,500 on Saturday. No falls, like 1984. No controversy. She was just slow.

"All in all, from past Olympics to now, this one was pretty good," said the 30-year-old Slaney. How could she complain after "actually finishing a race.'

Greg Barton gave America its first kayak gold medals ever, winning two, and U.S. wrestlers finished with five medals, two of them gold.

But U.S. water polo fell short to Yugoslavia 9-7 in Saturday night's gold-medal game, just the way it fell short to the same team in 1984.

Steffi Graf of West Germany crowned her Grand Slam season with gold in the women's tennis singles, beating Gabriela Sabatini of Argentina 6-3, 6-3. And Ken Flach and Robert Seguso of the United States won the men's doubles tennis gold in a five-set marathon.

With only nine gold medals left for Sunday, the Soviets had 127 medals, 54 gold. East Germany had 101, and 37 gold, while the United States had 89 and 34 gold.

Griffith Joyner, the world record-holder, won the 100 meters, then broke the world record twice in winning the 200, too. On Saturday, she ran the third 100-meter leg of the 400 relay.

A bit of a sloppy baton pass cost the Americans some time, and Ashford, the world's secondfastest woman, took off on the anchor leg with both Natalia Pomochtchnikova of the Soviet Union and Marlies Gohr of East Germany ahead of her.

Ashford turned on the speed and, about halfway through the last 100 meters, began to overtake the two. She passed the Soviet, then blazed past Gohr, flashing home in 41.98. East Germany was second in 42.09, the Soviets third in 42.75.

That's what Flo Jo had to do in her next and final race, the 1,600meter relay 40 minutes later. She was two or three strides behind Olga Bryzgina of the Soviet Union when she took the baton from Valerie Brisco for the final 400 meters.

"I thought she was going to be a little stronger," Brisco said of Griffith Joyner, "but I knew she was a little bit fatigued, and she's kind of nervous before.

Griffith Joyner crossed the finish line, still two or three strides behind the Soviet, and she added a silver to her three gold.

It was no disgrace. The 400 meters is twice as long as anything she trains for, and she didn't ask for a spot on the team.

Barton, of Homer, Mich., won the 1,000-meter singles kayak by one hundredth of a second over Grant Davies of Australia in a photo finish. Then, he and Norman Bellingham of Rockville, Md., combined in the 1,000 doubles to beat a New Zealand pair by more than a second.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Philadelphia Eagles-Houston Oilers game Sunday could become a family affair — Zendejas vs. Zendeias.

The Oilers' kicker is Luis' cousin, Tony Zendejas.

Neither has set any worlds afire this season.

Tony, a 77 percent kicker (20-26) last year, has made only 4 of 10 this season. He blames part of the problem on breaking in a new holder.

Houston ceach Jerry Glanville admits a new holder takes getting used to, but insists that a kicker can't be alllowed to think that's a problem.

"Our kicker's unusual. He's almost human. He's not one of those squirrelly types here on a Green Card. He's a normal guy. He'll just work his way through this and come out and be a good

It's been one of those terrible weeks

"People have been scoring on us for two years on their first possession," he said. "We usually get behind right away. Then, we start to play. If Buddy finds the answer tell him to call me."

Houston again will be without starting quarterback Warren Moon, who suffered a shoulder injury in the season opener and hasn't played since. Backup Cody Carlson directs the Oilers' offense.

The Eagles depend on the passing and running of quarterback Randall Cunningham. He's a 56.6 percent passer, with 60 for 106, 840 yards and six touchdowns. His top receivers are tight end Keith Jackson (21-182-3) and wide receiver Mike Quick (13-349-3). Cunningham also leads the rushers (24-164).

On defense, end Reggie White, who snapped out of a sack slump with four against Minnesota, leads the Eagles' charge.

The Oilers are run-oriented with Moon out of action. Allen Pinkett with 252 yards on 54 carries leads a trio of rushers. Mike Rozier (55-207) and Alonzo Highsmith (25-88) are the others.

Carlson has completed 41 of 82 for 609 yards and four TDs, throwing mostly to wide receivers Ernest Givens (16-219-1) and Drew Hill (14-226-1).

Miami's Steven Anderson tries to drag down Groom's Kevin Kerlee.

By SONNY BOHANAN Sports Writer

MIAMI - What had been a high-scoring game was brought to a virtual standstill when heavy rains greeted fans and players alike at halftime here Friday night.

Then after trailing 24-22 for almost two complete quarters. the Miami Warriors capitalized on a penalty against Groom to get within field goal range and punch it through, downing the Tigers 26-

"I was really pleased," Miami coach Bob Loy said. "I knew we had the capability — it was just a matter of when we were gonna produce it."

The Tiger offense had dominated the first half, scoring on four of their first five possessions. But then disaster struck.

"It just came a downpour and shut both offenses down," said Groom coach Jimmy Branch. "With 3:33 left in the game, they lined up and kicked a 30-yard field goal in a heavy rain. We had every opportunity to win the ball game and we didn't do it."

Miami managed only 162 total yards on offense, all of it on the ground. But the real story for the Warriors was the 196 yards on kickoff returns.

Shane Fields, who led all Miami rushers with 78 yards and three touchdowns on 15 carries, gave the Warriors a quick 6-0 lead when he returned the opening kickoff 76 yards for a touchdown. Groom retaliated with an opening drive that culminated in Richard Koetting's 3-yard dive into the end zone, knotting the Fields promptly returned the following kickoff 77 yards for another touchdown and kicked the extra two points.

Groom again marched all the way down the field where Stoney Crump scored from six yards out. A failed kick left the Tigers in a 14-12 deficit.

Fields opened the scoring in the second quarter with a one-yard run and a point-after kick. For the third time of the night, Groom drove the length of the field, landing this time at the four-yard line, where Stoney Crump pulled down a TD pass from Michael Rose.

Just before halftime, Rose launched another six-pointer, this one for 45 yards to Kevin Kerlee, giving Groom the lead for the first time of the night.

Next came the rain and Fields' 30-yard field goal, and the rest is history.

"At the half, we knew we had the game well in hand," said Branch. "But when the opportunity came for them, they did what they had to do."

For Loy, the high point of the game was the Miami defense in the second half. "Our defense did so well," he said. "We were really consistent. We played errorless ball, and that was surprising in those conditions. In the second half, we really locked everything

Rhett Daugherty had 10 tackles for Miami, followed by Clay Mercer with 9 and Steve Anderson with 8.

On offense, Anderson carried 7 times for 58 yards, while Brock Thompson was nine for 26.

The Tigers dropped to 1-4 in non-district play. "It's been a long, frustrating pre-district." Branch said. "Hopefully we can get things turned around before district rolls around. Right now, we're a product of our own mis-

Wheeler unleashes lightning offensive attack on Claude

By SONNY BOHANAN Sports Writer

CLAUDE — After falling to 2-2 in non-district play, the Wheeler Mustangs regained their footing and rolled to a 55-6 victory over Claude in Friday's district opener. Wheeler unleashed a lightning 554-yard offensive attack that sank Claude to a 5-0 record overall, 0-1 in district. Three Mustang rushers added more than 100 yards apiece to the largest margin of victory Wheeler has recorded this season.

Running back Shane Guest, playing in his first game since suffering two broken ribs against Shamrock three weeks ago, was once again Wheeler's ground leader, picking up 107 yards and one touchdown on six carries.

Shawn Bradstreet, who has moved from quarterback to running back since Guest's exit, traveled 100 yards on six tries, also scoring one touch-

Michael Kenney's eight attempts netted him 101 yards and a two-yard touchdown The Wheeler defense, led by Chad Bentley, Tommy Velasquez and Sammy Zepeda, limited Claude to 140 yards rushing and 11 passing while forcing seven punts.

For this game, Bentley was moved from middle linebacker to two technique. Zepeda moved to the MLB slot from his tackle position.

Despite making nine first downs, Claude managed to penetrate Wheeler territory only once throughout the game. Wheeler pierced the 50yard line on 11 occasions and scored eight touchdowns.

Bradstreet struck first for Wheeler on a 12-yard run. Sammy Zepeda's PAT put the Mustangs ahead to stay.

Claude responded with a 20yard run that prevented a shutout. The conversion run was called back on a penalty and the following kick attempt Quarterback Jason Wood scampered into the end zone from five yards out to give Wheeler a 14-0 lead at the end of the first period.

After Michael Kenney dashed for six points from two yards out, Wood joined forces with Kelly Aderholt and Kyle Sword for consecutive touchdown aerials of 47 and 35 yards respectively. With Sammy Zepeda's point-after kicks, Wheeler owned a 35-6 lead at the half.

Shane Guest made it 41-6 with a 40-yard slash in the third quarter. Sword's oneyard skip followed by a threeyard run by Ronnie Hungate finalized the scoring at 55-6.

"We did all right," Wheeler coach Ronnie Karcher said, 'although they're not a very strong team. But it was good to get back and score." Wheeler, 1-0 in district play, is idle next week before facing Gruver in another conference matchup Oct. 14.

Bovina catches Pirates by surprise

By SONNY BOHANAN Sports Writer

BOVINA — The Bovina Mustangs unveiled 290 yards worth of passing to take the Lefors Pirates by surprise, ending the six-man contest by the 45-point rule midway through the fourth quarter.

'We prepared for two weeks for the run, and they came out passing," Lefors coach Dale Means said after the Pirates 76-27 loss to the Mustangs Friday night.

The Pirates amassed 244 yards on offense, 105 of them in the passing lanes. Jared Slatten was the leading receiver, pulling down three aerials for 97 yards and two touchdowns

Heath Keelin completed two of two passes for 44 yards, including one TD, while pacing the ground game with 59 yards on only two carries.

"Heath Keelin played a super game and was by far the outstanding player for us," Means said. "He accounted for most of our tackles on defense, ran a reverse 64 yards for a touchdown, and completed a 50-vard TD. "Jared Slatten played well far outweighed Bovina's rushing offensively, but he had a hurt thumb, so he wasn't playing up to his full ability."

The Mustangs got things going early with a 36-point scoring spree in the first period. Sudderth accounted for three touchdowns on pass completions.

Lefors responded with 13 points, but still trailed by 23 entering the second quarter. Both teams scored two more touchdowns before halftime, bringing Bovina's lead to 50-27

Unfortunately for the Pirates, that was all the scoring they could muster for the remainder of the game, as Bovina held them scoreless in the second half.

The Mustangs went on to post 26 additional points in the third and fourth quarters, boosting them above the required 45-point margin and halting the contest with five minutes still on the clock. "We met our goals for the preseason by being 3-2," Means said, "so we've just got to put this one behind us. The kids could have given up the ship, but they stayed in there. We'll just be ready to come back next week.'

Perryton romps work with a passing game un-

Sports Writer

CANADIAN - The Perryton Rangers halted a three-game Canadian winning streak with a 35-0 romp over the Wildcats before 2,500 rain-soaked fans here Friday night.

The Rangers, ranked 13th in the Class 3A Harris poll, improved to 4-1 and ended nondistrict play with their second shutout of the season.

"I'm not all that disappointed," Canadian coach Paul Wilson said. "They're a great ball club. They had more mental toughness in this weather, catching passes with that rain in their face. We didn't go fight for the football like they did."

A cold steel rain that lasted three and one-half quarters chased fans away in droves but failed to divert Perryton's attention from the task at hand. The Rangers converted their first three possessions of the game into touchdowns and owned a 22-0 lead at the end of the first period.

Canadian received the opening kickoff and quarterback Shane Lloyd quickly lofted a 20-yard pass to Colby Butcher for the initial first down of the game. The Wildcats were unable to move the ball on the next three plays and had to punt it away.

Perryton immediately went to daunted by the weather that netted the Rangers 97 yards in the first half.

On a drive that lasted 11-plays and encompassed 63 yards, Michael Splawn completed four of seven aerials, the final one a three-yarder to Kirk Hargrove for a touchdown with 6:33 remaining in the first quarter.

A pass interference call against Canadian kept Perryton's second possession alive as third and 10 approached. Four plays later, Splawn hurled a pass 25 yards downfield to Terry Wright, who scooted into the end zone. Splawn's impromptu conversion run, facilitated by a bobbled PAT snap, put the Rangers

On the following kickoff, Canadian fumbled the ball and Perryton recovered it at the Wildcats' 20. Splawn called the same play that had scored three downs earlier and found Wright in the flat for a 14-yard reception.

Heath Rigdon, a former Canadian native, showed no mercy for his alma mater and punched it in from the four-yard line on the next play. Wright's PAT increased the Ranger lead to 22 as the first quarter expired. Perryton mounted three more drives in the second period. The first two resulted in failed field goal attempts, and the third forced the first Perryton punt of the night.

By halftime, Perryton had amassed 218 yards offensively and earned 12 first downs. The Ranger defense limited Canadian to 37 total yards and two first downs, while forcing one fumble. The previously-dominant Canadian passing attack was reduced to a nine-yard offering.

They hit us on a few early passes," Wilson said, "and we had practiced on that all week. We knew we were going to have to play exceptionally well to keep from getting embarrassed."

The Rangers unleashed some powerful rushing in the second half. On the first play from scrimmage, Rigdon slashed for 37 yards and was finally brought down by Brent Shields, the last available defender.

William Sintas was one yard shy of matching Rigdon on the following play, although he did tally six points as he ripped for 36 yards with only 42 seconds elapsed in the third quarter. Wright's kick put Perryton at 29.

On the next series, Canadian's Shane Lloyd went to the air on a third and six situation. Perryton's Scott Way came down with it and footed a 40-yard return that set up the Rangers' final score. On first and ten from the four,

Rigdon dashed across the goal line with 9:19 remaining in the third period. A failed PAT left the final score at 35-0.

All told, the Rangers slogged across the rain-drenched field for 364 total yards, 260 of them via a formidable passing game.

Rigdon riddled his old teammates to the tune of 139 yards on 16 carries, including two touchdowns. Quarterback Michael Splawn completed 7 of 25 passes for 104 yards and two sixpointers, while rushing for 18 yards.

"We couldn't do it without our linemen," Splawn said. "I couldn't pass, and we couldn't catch the ball. Without them, we couldn't have a balanced offense.

For Wilson and the Wildcats, the night was not a total loss. "I was fairly pleased with our defense, and we'll be a better team for this," he said. PERRYTON CANADIAN.

Land needed for cross-country meet

Pampa coach Mark Elms is looking for available land so the Harvesters can hold a crosscountry meet here next fall. It's been at least eight years since the local team has hosted a crosscountry meet. The land would have to be large enough for a 3mile course to be laid out. "One school has a course about a quarter of a mile long and 300-feet wide and the runners end up doing wind sprints back and forth. We want something that's a little more spread out," says Elms. A landowner who would be willing to donate some property for one Saturday meet can contact Elms at Pampa High School-. Move over shuffleboard, bowl-

Red Sox lose, but still clinch East title

By BEN WALKER AP Baseball Writer

The Boston Red Sox lost and were happy. They won the American League East.

Toronto's Dave Stieb won but was sad. For the second time in a week, he lost a no-hit bid with two outs in the ninth inning.

The Red Sox clinched their second division title in three years Friday night with help from their challengers. Boston lost 4-2 in Cleveland, but Milwaukee and New York eliminated themselves with losses.

"It would've been nice to do it on our own, but basically we did it on our own, anyway,'' Boston's Rich Gedman said. "We built up a lead and they had to chase us. They had to win, not us."

The Red Sox wanted to clinch with a victory. But Roger Clemens lost to the Indians for the first time in 10 career decisions as Boston fell for the fourth time in five games.

Earlier in the evening, Detroit knocked out New York 6-2. That left only Milwaukee, and in Oakland consecutive home runs by Jose Canseco and Mark McGwire plus strong pitching by Dave Stewart led the Athletics over the Brewers 7-1.

The best-of-7 AL playoffs open Wednesday at Fenway Park. The Athletics went 9-3 against Boston this season, including 6-0 in Oakland.

"Most baseball people are going to say it's going to be a tossup," Oakland manager Tony La Russa said. "We match up in many ways."

Boston manager Joe Morgan said he was just happy to win the division. Morgan took over when John McNamara was fired at the All-Star break and the Red Sox went 47-29 under their new man-

"This is the ultimate. I was in the right place at the right time," Morgan said.

Stieb, meanwhile, was again in the wrong place at the wrong

Last Saturday, Stieb lost his nohitter after 8 2-3 innings when Cleveland's Julio Franco got a bad-hop single on a 2-2 pitch. This time, Stieb was ruined when Baltimore pinch-hitter Jim Traber lofted a single to right field on a

"It's a heartbreaker," Stieb said. "It's hard to put it into words."

Elsewhere, Minnesota beat California 8-5, Kansas City defeated Chicago 4-2 and Texas downed Seattle 11-6.

Blue Jays 4, Orioles 0 Dave Stieb pitched his third career one-hitter - all this season - and his third straight shutout. He extended his scoreless inning streak to a team-record 31.

Stieb tied an AL record held by Whitey Ford and Sam McDowell with his second consecutive one-

Jeff Ballard, 8-12, took the loss. Kelly Gruber drove in three runs for host Toronto.

Athletics 7, Brewers 1 Jose Canseco hit his 42nd home run and Mark McGwire followed with 32nd homer in the third inning, leading Dave Stewart and the Athletics over Milwaukee. Canseco leads the majors in homers and with 124 RBI

Bill Wegman, 13-13, took the loss. Terry Steinbach also homered for the Athletics.

Tigers 6, Yankees 2 Chet Lemon hit two home runs as Detroit eliminated visiting Lemon put the Tigers ahead 3-2 with a solo homer in the sixth inning. Jack Morris, 15-13, gave up five hits in seven innings. Rick Rhoden, 12-12, took the loss. Twins 8, Angels 5

Frank Viola won his major league-leading 24th game as Minnesota sent California to its 10th straight loss.

Viola, 24-7, surpassed the 23 victories by Los Angeles' Orel Hershiser and Cincinnati's Danny Jackson. Viola, the MVP in last year's World Series, is the top Twins winner since Jim Perry had 24 in 1970.

Mike Witt, 13-16, took the loss.

Dodgers squeeze by Giants 2-1

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Fernando Valenzuela pitched four strong innings in his first relief appearance in eight years, preserving the Los Angeles Dodgers' 2-1 victory over the San Francisco Giants Saturday.

Tim Belcher, 12-6, shut out the Giants on two hits for five innings. Rick Reuschel, 19-11, failed in his bid to become a 20game winner for the first time since 1977.

Valenzuela, in his second appearance since July 30, gave up an unearned run on two hits

INTERFAITH WEDDINGS Marrying someone from another culture or another faith can be trying, but joyous. Here are some tips for seeing that your plans go smoothly.

Many clergy are now accustomed to participating in interfaith weddings. If you encounter difficulties, you might seek advice from those who often deal with many faiths: college chaplains, hospitals, and regional offices of reli-

If the site for the wedding matters in only one religion, that should take precedence. If, on the other hand, there is a feeling that the religious set-ting of one faith may make the other family uncomfortable, you might pre-fer to choose a non-denominational chapel or neutral setting such as a bome or garden.

Look toward what the faiths hold in common. Mutual symbols such as wine and candles may be used in ways that will be meaningful for both of you.

DeVry Institute to award scholarships to '89 grads

stitute will offer 40 full-tuition and 80 half-tuition scholarships at a total value of $1.42 million to 1989 high school graduates throughout the United States.

According to DeVry Chairman Dennis J. Keller, each full-tuition scholarship, valued between $18,544 and $19,905, and each halftuition scholarship, valued between $9,270 and $9,952, may be used for application fees and tuition toward a bachelor's degree program in electronics engineering technology, computer information systems, business operations, telecommunications management or accounting. The scholarship can be applied at any of the nine DeVry Institutes in the U.S.; not all programs of study are offered at each institute.

Finalists will be determined on the basis of SAT, ACT or WPCT scores and will be announced in April of 1989. Scholarship recipients will be chosen on the basis of those scores, high school academic achievement, extracurricular activities and an essay. Announcement of winners will be made shortly thereafter.

Scholarship recipients will receive a plaque to commemorate the honor, and a similar plaque will be presented to the students' high schools for permanent display

The number of scholarships granted to each DeVry Institute will be determined by the number of applications received by that school. Each campus will have the opportunity to award at least one scholarship to an outstanding student from the area. COMMENDED STUDENTS Pampa High School has been notified by National Merit Scholarship Corporation (NMSC) that John Cooley, Amy Heard, Dale Sanders and Jason Utzman have been designated Commended Students in the 1989 National Merit Scholarship Program.

PHS principal Daniel Coward announced that these seniors placed in the top 50,000 of more than one million participants in the 34th annual Merit Program and will receive a Letter of Commendation in recognition of outstanding 'academic promise.

An official of NMSC stated, Being named a Commended Student in the extremely competitive Merit Program is a credit to these young men and women and the schools which play a key role in the development of academically talented youths. We hope the recognition these students have earned will increase their motivation to use their abilities to the fullest, for they represent an important intellectual resource which our nation needs."

The over one million participants in the current Merit Program entered the competition by taking the PSAT/NMSQT in October 1987 as high school iuniors. Although their qualifying test scores are very high, the 35,000 young people throughout the nation who are Commended Students scored slightly below the level required for Semifinalist standing in their respective states.

Mountain Man Rendezvous to benefit Canyon museum

CANYON — A trip back in time awaits visitors to the Mountain Man Rendezvous on Saturday, Oct. 8 at the WTSU Cottonwood Grove, located between the West Texas State University football stadium and the WTSU Horse Center on Interstate 27 south of Amarillo.

The Rendezvous will be a living history re-enactment of mountain men from the mid-1840s. The event is modeled after legendary rendezvous from the days when the Rockies and other Western ranges were home to widely scattered mountain men.

This will be a rare opportunity to witness mountain men in their environment, toting authentic weapons, fingering long beards and offering racks of goods for sale. Demonstrations in beaver trapping, black powder shooting, blacksmithing and tomahawk throwing will be included in the day-long activities. Freight wagons will be on hand to take families to the camp ares

Members of the Plumcreek Brigade are setting up camps in the Grove area to benefit Panhandle-Plains Historical Museum. Several other mountain men and traders from New Mexico and Oklahoma have also been invited to attend.

Among participants will be Jeff Hengesbaugh from Glorieta, N.M. Hengesbaugh left his Scottsdale, Ariz. upbringing, a degree in zoology and the 20th century in order to live a raw existence in a kerosene-lighted hut. He takes time off frequently to embark on month-long cross-country journeys, living off the land. This spirit of adventure has led Hegensbaugh over more than 10,000 miles on horseback.

In addition to the campsites, the Rendezvous will include a children's game area. Here, children can enjoy many free activities as well as pony rides, canoe rides and fishing.

Concessions offering genuine 'mountain man' wares will be an added treat for children. Genuine "buffalo burgers" will be available at lunchtime, along with more familiar beef burgers.

The colorful event is being sponsored by Panhandle-Plains Historical Museum and funded by Southwestern Bell Mobile Systems of Amarillo.

Visitors may enter the Rendezvous area between 9 a.m. and 6 p.m. Admission will be $3 for adults and $1 for children under the soil, apply only superphosphate at the rate of one-half pound per 100 square feet of bed area. Also add 2 to 4 inches of organic matter over the soil surface and till in.

To obtain a good display of iris color, use at least three rhizomes of the same variety in a triange or pattern. Point each fan of leaves away from other plants within

Plant rhizomes about 18 inches apart unless you want to provide masses of flowers the year after planting. In this event, space plants 8 to 10 inches apart.

In heavier soil, plant rhizomes by forming a mound of soil parallel with the ground surface. Carefully place the rhizome on top of the mound with the roots spreading outward. Do not wad roots together.

Press the rhizome into the soil mound until it is below the soil level, then finish filling the hole so the roots are covered and the rhizome is just barely showing. Mulch around new plantings to protect them from freezing

After planting, water the bed thoroughly to settle the soil around the roots. Usually no additional moisture is required unless a prolonged drought occurs.

BEST FOR HEATING It's time to start thinking about

Divide, replant iris now; stock up on firewood firewood for those cold winter nights that are sure to come before long. Although green wood will burn, seasoned dry wood has more heat value and will not deposit excessive creosote in chimneys and stovepipes.

Any moisture in wood reduces the recoverable heat. The heat must first dry the wood so it will burn. So wood cut in late fall or winter doesn't have time to dry adequately. Thus, we recommend cutting firewood in spring

Split wood will dry faster than wood that has not been split. Stack wood loosely in piles on a couple of rows of bricks. This keeps wood off the ground and prevents decay while at the same time allowing faster drying.

Stacking firewood in a sunny location and covering it with clear plastic also helps moisture to evaporate, thus speeding up drying and seasoning.

Since water vapor will condense on the plastic, adequate ventilation is necessary. Keep plastic off the ends of the firewood to allow air to flow and to keep condensation from wetting the wood.

If trees are cut for firewood in the summer, you may want to leave tops and limbs on for a week or more. Leaves draw moisture from wood and help it to dry more quickly.

Oak, hickory and mesquite make the best firewood. They produce a high amount of available heat per pound, but oak is easier to split.

There are many other trees that can be used for firewood, including pine. Past reports that pine causes creosote buildup in chimneys and stovepipes have not been substantiated by re-

TRI-STATE FAIR RESULTS The Tri-State Fair which was held Sept. 19-24 in Amarillo gave 23 Gray County 4-H'ers a chance to exhibit their projects.

Some of the projects entered by the young men and women included rabbits, jelly, pigs, clothing, lambs, woodworking and ceramics. All of these young people did an outstanding job in preparing for the fair, and results were very good.

The highest award won by a Gray County 4-H'er went to Alicia Lee. Alicia, who is 8 years old, showed her first hog in her 4-H career at the fair. Alicia's 265 hamp barrow won its class and went on to be named as Reserve Grand Champion Barrow of the Tri-State Fair.

Melanie Lee also had a very sucessful day in that she showed a second place heavyweight, and a 10th place lightweight barrow in the fair.

Our congratulations go out to these two young ladies for a job well done in the selecting, feeding and showing of their barrows.

Gray County 4-H was also represented by nine lamb exhibitors. These lamb exhibitors did an excellent job in the show ring, with four exhibitors placing in the top

Chris Dark had a first place with his middleweight lamb. In the lightweight class, Tracy Tucker had a fourth place, Jennifer Williams had a fifth place and Dennis Williams had an eighth place lightweight lamb.

Other lamb exhibitors included Chris Fox, Lanisa Toper, Renee Dark, Robyn Dark and Mark Tucker. All of those who showed lambs did an excellent job of representing Gray County and are to be commended for a job well other category of teen-age sewing, and Kirk McDonald won first place in the junior sewing division with his suit. Kirk also won the title of "best of show" with his suit. Mindy Randall won first place in junior ceramics, and Tamara Lane won second in teenage sewing

Other entrants in the project show at the fair included Laura Williams, Ryan Davis, Dave Davis and Angie Underwood.

In the Tri-State Fair Rabbit Show, Gray County 4-H had four exhibitors who did an outstanding job. Jason Bliss earned a third place ribbon with his New Zealand White, and a first place with his Havana. Nathan Dawes won three second-place ribbons with his Californian and New Zealand Whites.

Jessica Dawes had the best of breed and a first place with her Californian. Jessica's Silver Martin also won first, and her New Zealand cinched second. Shawn Dawes took two first places and a fifth with his Califor-

The stellar event of the year in the Alice and Vic Raymond household was the marriage of their daughter Cindy last Saturday night to William Keith Newton. Vic proudly referred to the wedding as "the coronation," as in the word "queen."

Gave Nell Fraser, Cynthia West, Pat Kennedy, Katy Hupp, Flo Quattlebaum and Puz McFatridge hosted a general bridal shower in the Fraser home earlier in September.

Four of Cindy's close friends since early elementary school days and whose close friendship continues today in the Dallas area, participated in the wedding: Angela West and Alissa Kirksey, bridesmaids; Jana Linville Callan, at the registry; Elizabeth Fraser Mince poured punch.

Alice and Vic opted to host the rehearsal dinner in their home as a family-get-acquainted opportunity. Alice prepared a scrumptious buffet for the 30 guests. The coronation concluded with a beautiful reception at Pampa Country Club.

Some of the out-of-town wedding guests included Vic's sister and her husband, Donna and Roger Burrows of Alabama, and his brother and wife, Frank and Joan Raymond of Pittsburgh, Pa.

Sybil Harrell of Groom has the family history recorded in a quilt. Through some fairly new process, photographs of the children, family groups around the piano and the old Harrell house were transferred onto cloth. What else is new?

Pampa Junior Service League held its annual invitational in the home of Julia Sparkman recently. Cars were parked up one side of the street and down the other while 45 members and 25 guests listened to an explanation of the work and responsibilities of members.

Dana Terry was in charge of hospitality. The serving table featured a garland of greenery and loose flowers woven together.

Deck and Eloise Woldt are home after a wide circling trip that took them to California to visit their daughter and to Wisconsin to visit Deck's family. ****

DIABETES IN PETS

by Ron Hendrick, D.V.M.

QUESTION: I have an older, spayed dog who seems to drink a lot of water. Consequently, she also urinates frequently, often in the house. When I clean it up it seems sticky, almost "sugary". Is it possible she might have diabetes? She also seems to be eating more than before, but not gaining weight. In fact, I think she's losing weight. What do you think?

ANSWER: Dogs and cats do, indeed, develop diabeties. I have clients who give their pets insulin injections daily. (It is not as difficult as one might think.) Hopefully, one day we'll have the patches they can however do. Dishete as wear, as humans do. Diabetes in seen most frequently in females, usually over the age of 4 years. We also see it in males and in both dogs and cats. Frequently, if detected early, it can be controlled with diet. However, if left to progress, in must be handled with insulin injections. A word of caution: the symptoms you have mentioned may be those of other diseases, e.g. kids disease, heartworms, or heart disease. A trip to your veterinarian is in order. He will need to do some blood work, including a heartworm test. I'm sure your dog does not enjoy making the mess which I know you don't enjoy cleaning up. Your veterinarian can prescribe treatment which will help make your life and that of your pet more

For a music, movie or art critic, one issue is constantly being considered: do I review things I hate so I appear professional, or things I like so I don't appear too negative?

The extremes are as clear as movie critics Bill Harris and Rex Reed. Harris seems such a fan of what he reviews, you sometimes wonder if he's getting a stipend from the studio. Reed, on the other hand, seems to enjoy hating movies. It seems like he must sit through most movies dreaming up snotty things to say about it.

al responses by going to the soul rather than straight to the tear ducts.

It can best be compared to Bob Seger's "Night Moves" for capturing one summer in the life of a teen-ager and the reflection of looking back at that summer after years of living.

'The Courthouse' reviews the life of a rural American through the records that are kept at the local county clerk's office. Among the certificates are those denoting his birth, his graduation from high school, his time in the

The Bellamy Brothers ... in concert at Amarillo

For what it's worth, these inches are primarily directed toward helping the potential buyer find the best music available. We also occasionally attempt to steer country music fans away from some obvious dogs, but those times are rare.

With that said, this week we dive into one of the best new albums of this or any year.

Rebels Without a Clue from the Bellamy Brothers is an inviting mix of lyrics and delivery seldom matched by any but the best.

Over the last 13 years the Bellamy Brothers have evolved from a cutesy-pie duo know for their pseudo-novelty pop songs to a dynamite singer-songwriter

Rebels Without a Clue affirms what Howard and David Bellamy told me last Monday night after their Tri-State Fair Show.

'We have finally gained a level of acceptance that allows us to really do music we believe in. For a long time we had to do what was expected if we wanted to keep recording," Howard said.

To say that songs like "Get Into Reggae Cowboy" and "Dancin" Cowboys" are not quality work is wrong. But at least six of the 10 cuts on this new album are as good as anything the Floridabased duo has ever done.

The title track again displays David Bellamy's ability to write songs ("Old Hippie," "Kids of the Baby Boom") that draw emotion-service, marriage and title to the

Also among those records is the documentation of his wife's recent death and when the county reposessed his farm shortly thereafter.

Like a musical Kurt Vonnegut, David Bellamy captures those small moments in life that signify a greater truth. "The Fountain of Middle Age" is a telling commentary on that point in time when a person realizes that they are more than halfway through the journey to the grave. Suddenly they are faced with the proposition of fighting for lost youth or simply giving in to the inevitable. On a lighter note, the Brothers take us away to a place where "nobody says the 'F' word" in a delightful tale called "The Andy Griffith Show." In a little over three minutes they recap several hundred episodes of charming memories from a more genteel

Longingly they ponder the idea of escaping the hustle and bustle of life in the '80s and steering the car toward Mayberry.

They also recognize that although Mayberry never was, it symbolized a spirit that was once in so many of us, but has been replaced by a new, more cynical approach to life.

This is quality work from a pair who have more than paid their dues to reach this point in their

Palmer: The Cary Grant of pop music

O'CALLAGHAN For The Associated Press

Robert Palmer may be the Cary Grant of the music business. Like Grant, he has an elegant manner, look and delivery.

His music intrigues the listener with its seeming simplicity and pulsating rhythms. Palmer has managed to mix the new with old standards, creating a sound that's all his own and successful. His Riptide album was a No. 1 hit. It contained several hits including Addicted to Love and I Didn't Mean to Turn You On.

He is currently on tour across the country in support of his first album for EMI-Manhattan Records, Heavy Nova. The new release shows every indication of following the success of Riptide. with "Simply Irresistible" already a top three hit on the bestselling singles chart.

The tour, which will take Palmer to 60 cities, is a mix of old and new, with an incredible light show added. Palmer insists on a tour of one-nighters.

"I prefer it," says the 39-yearold singer by telephone from his Massachusetts hotel room. "When you have a night off, you lose momentum. We (the band) enjoy playing together and it takes a couple of weeks before the show starts to jell. The dynamics of any show don't really start to pick up until you're out three or four weeks. The songs convey a mood, so the first few weeks you're just learning a part."

Palmer has been married 18 years. The family, which includes two children, lives in Lugano, Switzerland, after living 10 years in the Bahamas.

Heavy Nova combines heavy

metal with bossa nova. Palmer's music reflects his interest in different rhythms from all over the world. That interest was cultivated while growing up on the island of Malta in the Mediterranean. There he was exposed to sounds from Africa and the Middle East.

"I collect music from all over the world," Palmer says. "I have for 18 years. It helps in the real drought periods like Christmas when the music is not very interesting.'

The different sounds of his childhood blended with the records from his parents' collection such as Nat "King" Cole, Lena

Horne and Peggy Lee. Songs they sang sometimes have a strange way of reappearing.

Palmer says, "I had written this song and my mother called, so I played it for her. She said, 'That's another song.' I said, 'It can't be because I just wrote it.' A couple of days later she called back and played me 'It Could Happen to You' by Peggy Lee. It was my song." He laughs, "I decided to record it."

Palmer continues, "I don't sit down at my typewriter with an empty piece of paper and say, 'I'm going to write a hit.' I just get an idea. Songs are floating around in the air and I write them down. If there isn't any inspiration, the song doesn't get written.

"I don't tailor my music to a certain market. You want to write a song that you'll enjoy performing. It would be horrible to write a song that you hated, only to have it become a hit and you had to play it all the time."

In addition to "It Could Happen to You" on the album, he has also recorded "Tell Me I'm Not Dreaming," which was originally done by the Jacksons. Palmer's version is a duet with his backup singer B.J. Nelson.

'We'd been doing it in the show for some time. It was a good vehicle for B.J. and I to sing. Then, I saw a video of us doing it and I thought, 'That's great,' so we re-

Palmer's career has been one of steady gain since he launched his solo career on Island Records in 1974. He has had several hits including "Every Kind of People," "Bad Case of Loving You" and "You Are in My System."

It was Palmer's voice that combined with John Taylor and Andy Taylor from Duran Duran in Power Station — which had three huge hits in the summer of 1986. Palmer opted not to tour with Power Station but instead recorded Riptide.

His catalog of albums reflects his diversity. However, he doesn't indulge that interest just to have a different sound.

"I've some tapes and they would be considered weird but I wouldn't put them on a record. Nobody would play them. If a song doesn't communicate. what's the point? I want a song to say something to the audience, not just be weird to be weird."

Almost as much attention is paid to the way Palmer dresses as to his music. He has even appeared on the cover of Gentleman's Quarterly. His image has become linked with his suits. Does that bother him?

He laughs, "No, I've learned to deal with it. I've such a broad range of music styles that it's hard to categorize me or compare me to other people. So they hooked on to the way I dress. I think I dress very conservatively.

He isn't daunted by being on the edge of "superstardom."

The whole concept is bizarre. It's the cart before the horse. I don't want to be famous for being famous. If I'm famous for my music because people like it and buy it - that's fine. It's a side effect of your job."

At the movies

By BOB THOMAS Associated Press Writer

Stealing Home

From Elia Kazan's America. America to John Boorman's Hope and Glory, remembrance of childhood has made stirring films. They require selective memory and an artistic soul. Those factors, unfortunately, are missing in Stealing Home.

Steven Kaupmann and Will Addis, sitcom writers who graduated to such features as Back to School and The Couch Trip. thought it would be a dandy idea to write a movie script based on their experiences of growing up in the 1960s. Not only write it, but ct it. Together

Despite good performances and one that is exceptional, Stealing Home becomes a mishmash chaotic in structure and full of momentous scenes that don't

The title itself is a misguided attempt at allegory. The biggest moment in Billy Bryant's young life was stealing home during a crucial baseball game. The moment is replayed at the end of the film to illustrate the regeneration of the adult Billy, now trying for a minor league comeback. Even with all the slo-mo effects and the portentous music, the scene has no more impact than a third-base

The film opens with Mark Harmon, the adult Billy Bryant, on the skids. We know he is on the skids because he is swilling booze with a bimbo in a third-rate motel and sports a Don Johnson stubble. He learns that his boyhood friend and lover, Katie Chandler (Jodie Foster), has committed suicide and has designated him to dispose of her ashes.

Thus begins Billy Bryant's pilgrimage to his old home grounds and into his past. This requires a procession of flashbacks to Billy's happy family, his baseball prowess, his father's untimely death, the strong friendship with the eccentric Katie.

There might have been a heartwarming film in these reminiscences, but the time frames are juxtaposed confusingly, and there are even flashbacks within flashbacks. The star of the film, Mark Harmon, appears in about a half-hour of footage, the teenage Billy being played quite effectively by William McNamara

Jodie Foster has the role of her life, and she plays it brilliantly. She captures the quicksilver qualities of Katie, dominating the screen whenever she appears. Within the constraints of his role, Harmon performs ably, but the reasons for his torment are never made clear,

The Warner Bros. release was produced by Thom Mount and Hank Moonjean. The rating is PG-13 for language and sexual

Hanna-Barbera marks 50th anniversary

By JERRY BUCK AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A cat and a mouse first brought Bill Hanna and Joe Barbera together 50 years ago, and a whole menagerie helped them become television's foremost cartoon ani-

"We did every frame of the first Tom and Jerry in 1939," said Barbera. "Then MGM decided we had exhausted all the story ideas about a cat and mouse. So for the next 20 years, all we did was turn out Tom and Jerry cartoons.

The Tom and Jerry cartoons won seven Academy Awards. more than any other series with the same characters. Jerry's dance with Gene Kelly in Anchors Aweigh has become a screen classic

"Then they folded the animation department, and Joe and I were out of work," said Hanna. 'We set up our own studio at our homes and went to work. The first thing we did was Ruff and Reddy.

In the 30 years since, Hanna Barbera has filled the television screen with such animated series as The Flintstones, Yogi Bear, Huckleberry Hound and Friends, Top Cat, Scooby-Doo, Johnny Quest, The Jetsons and Animal Follies. Fred Flintstone's "yabba dabba doo" and Yogi's "smarter than the average bear" entered the language.

Hanna-Barbera has received eight Emmys, including the Governors Award of the Academy of Television Arts & Sciences presented in August. They were awarded a "Just Say No" commendation from first lady Nancy Reagan for an ABC special in mid September.

Their first effort for television was shown to Harry Cohn, then the head of Columbia Pictures.

"We did a pencil test of Ruff and Reddy," said Barbera. "We photographed the pencil sketches and screened it for Cohn. He didn't know what a pencil test was. He walked out and told an assistant to get rid of us. Fortunately, the assistant ignored the order, and we did 52 shorts for a Saturday morning show."

They knew the times had changed when the budget for their first television show was $2,800. The Tom and Jerry cartoons had cost $50,000 each.

Neither the white-haired Hanna nor the dark-haired Barbera had set out to be cartoonists. Hanna studied engineering and journalism in his native New Mexico. He got into animation in 1931 when he needed work. Barbera. who grew up in Brooklyn, first entered banking but soon turned his and then into a job as an animator.

Their most widely accepted cartoon series has been The Flintstones, which Hanna readily admits was a pre-historic parody of Jackie Gleason and Art Carney in The Honeymooners, just as Yogi Bear resembled Phil Silvers as Sgt. Bilko in You'll Never Get Hanna and Barbera have selected their personal favorites and will release six 90-minute videocassettes.

Tom and Jerry will not be on the videos because the rights are owned by Turner Broadcasting System. However, the cartoon is coming full circle. Hanna-Barbera will do a full-length motion picture cartoon of Tom and Jerry. The script has been completed and it will go into production in a few years, after the studio completes a feature film of The Jetsons.

Yogi Bear is now a daily show being syndicated to about 80 per-

WASHINGTON (AP) - One of Henry B. Gonzalez's first memories, growing up on the west side of San Antonio during the Great Depression, is of carrying a pint of milk to a cousin dying of tuberculosis.

The cousin lived in the shadow of the charity hospital, her family crowded into a tiny shack with dirt floors, an outdoor privy and no running water, sharing a common drinking fountain with 10 other families.

"That poverty was taken for granted. The tuberculosis was from overcrowding, malnutrition, poverty," says Gonzalez, who in decades of public service since the days that TB gripped San Antonio, has fought on the side of issues "born from my experiences."

"I came up to (Washington) to legislate, not to jockey or politick for power," Gonzalez said. The Democrat was elected to Congress in 1961 from San Antonio, after serving in the state Senate. on the city council, as a juvenile probation officer and a staff member of the local housing authority.

Since he took over as chairman of the House Subcommittee on Henry B. Gonzalez Housing and Community Development in 1981, the same time Ronald Reagan became president, Gonzalez said he has had to fend off the administration's attempts to cut federal housing programs.

"The Reagan administration declared war and asked for abolition of every single one of the housing programs and policies Congress put in place 51 years ago," when it passed the first national housing program under President Franklin D. Roosevelt, Gonzalez said.

"I've prevented them from killing the programs that work. They wanted to kill public housing they debilitated it. But at least we've kept it on life support."

(AP Laserphoto)

Gonzalez's priorities, his efforts have earned him special recognition from the National Association of Housing and Redevelopment Officials. The organization represents 2,400 housing and community development agencies nationwide.

NAHRO presented Gonzalez with its annual M. Justin Herman Memorial Award Sept. 25 in New York. He said he is the first member of Congress so honored since the award was first given in 1975.

It is named after M. Justin Herman, who was the executive director of San Francisco's Redevelopment Agency and regional administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency, prede-Although housing is just one of cessor to the Department of Housing and Urban Develop-

NAHRO president Helen L. Sause said in a statement that Gonzalez was singled out "based upon the contributions and service he has made, and continues to make, in the field of housing and community development. He has served in elected public office for more than 35 years, and housing and community development have been a prime interest throughout his career.'

"It's been a lonely fight, a lonely fight," said Gonzalez. "I've had to fight my fellow Democrats who succumbed to Reagan setting the terms of the debate."

Gonzalez said his chairmanship has taken him into "every single rural area of consequence" to view housing conditions as well as to the inner city of Philadelphia, New York, and every housing project in the District of Columbia.

Less than 100 miles south of Washington, where Virginia and Maryland meet, he was amazed by the way some farmworkers live, Gonzalez said.

"I haven't seen those conditions since the Depression," he said. "There was a sign that said boiling the water does no good and to go to the next town 10 miles away for water - right here an hour and 15 minutes' drive from the nation's capital."

He said the country is facing a severe housing crisis. He worries violent protests will result as more people become homeless. In Washington, workers have been priced out of the rental market and live in tents or campers at campgrounds around the city.

David Autry, editor of the NAHRO newsletter, said there are claims that as many as 3 million people are homeless. Others put the estimate in the hundreds of thousands. While 4.4 million households qualify for federal housing assistance, only onefourth of eligible families actually receive aid.

Gonzalez said only about 6.5 percent of American families have the finances to afford a brand-new single family home. The country, he said, has reached the "absurd point in urban areas where the average family has to pay, monthly, 45 percent of its income on housing.

Moderate and low income families are being priced out of adequate housing, he said, because housing prices have risen far faster than wages.

The results include the crowding of several families into single homes and a resurgence in TB and other diseases due to overcrowding and poverty.

"It's the rag in the bottle of gasoline waiting to be ignited," Gonzalez said.

boy from his bowling one hole to accomodate the

By HARRIETTE GRAVES

BROWNWOOD (AP) -Shane Wood is 10 years old. He's in the fifth grade, does well in his studies - and what's more, he's learning to Ordinarily, neither is a big deal - that is, unless you have no hands.

Shane was born without hands. He has learned to live without them, with the help of protheses provided for him by physicians at Scottish Rite Hospital in Dallas. With that help, Shanc has always mastered what his peers have done.

Dana Perry, Shane's mother, says her son is independent and has never complained or considered himself 'different.'

He has been going to Scottish Rite since he was two months old, being fitted with various types of prostheses as he grew. "He's not dependent on them, but uses them when it becomes necessary," Mrs. Perry said. But when Shane wanted to learn to bowl, he found none of the prostheses he had were suitable for bowling. With painstaking care, he wrote to his physician, Dr. Tony Herring at Scottish Rite, asking if he could get a prostethic attachment that would enable him to bowl.

The hand-written letter itself was a triumph for Herring, who has worked with

Shane and delighted in his progress ever since the boy began treatment at Scottish Rite. Two months after Shane wrote the doctor, his bowling prothesis was ready for fitting in Dallas. Shane has already tried it out with some success.

The bowling ball he uses has prosthesis. "When he went to the bowling alley without his prosthesis he put his arm in the hole and knocked over several pins," Mrs. Perry said. "Physicians and staff at Scottish Rite are always looking for ways to make things easier for Shane," Mrs. Perry said. "When he started the first grade, the physical therapy department made him a special pair of scissors that he could use. Now he doesn't need them because he can use a scissors like anyone else," she

Before he started kindergarten, Shane spent a week at Scottish Rite so staff members could train him to hold pencils, cut, color, and anything he needed to do in a regular classroom.

"Whenever I have a problem with just anything, I can tell them at Scottish Rite and they will find a way to solve it," Mrs. Perry said. There is never a charge to parents or guardians at any Shrine or Scottish Rite hospital.

"Dr. Herring fights for the kids. He told me once that anytime I needed him he would be there 'tomorrow.'

Shane has another special physician friend. Dr. Ned Snyder has been his doctor all his life. "Shane adores Dr. Snyder," Mrs. Perry said.

Shane is especially sportsminded and during his visits to the hospital he has met such sports figures as Texas Rangers first baseman Pete O'Brien and the Boston Celtics' Larry Bird, who have volunteered their time to the hospital.

Shane plays soccer, football and basketball. He even attended a basketball camp operated by the Dallas Mavericks' Brad Davis.

Arizona Indians face death by diabetes

By MAUREEN O'CONNELL Casa Grande Dispatch

SACATON, Ariz. (AP) — Many Gila River Reservation residents feel bound to a destiny.

They foresee themselves rising on a silent morning, shrouded in the warm desert sun, yawning and stretching their arms - with the understanding that they must sink an insulin-filled hypodermic needle into their veins to stay

More than half of the reservation's residents over the age of 35 have been diagnosed as having diabetes, according to Dr. Kermit Smith, coordinator of the Sacaton diabetes program.

"Diabetes has been a part of my family for many years, so I anticipated it in my future," said Ardell Ruiz, a 40-year-old Pima Indian.

For those diagnosed as having diabetes, the usual prescription is for drastic changes in diet, exercise and medications designed to maintain acceptable blood sugar levels.

"If approached with an optimistic fighter's attitude, sometimes patients can fend off deterioration for more than a decade," said Dorinda James, a licensed practical nurse, who cares for more than 800 diabetics on the reservation.

But ignoring the advice of the health professionals can lead to tragic consequences. Not only are diabetics susceptible to a shorter life span, they may also acquire both acute and chronic physiological problems.

Diabetics across the nation now account for approximately 5.800 cases of blindness a year, 30 percent of all new cases of endstage renal disease and 50 percent of all non-traumatic amputations, Smith said. In 1984, diabetes directly caused 35,500 deaths and contributed to another 95,000

About 4 percent of the United States' population has been diagnosed as diabetic, compred with 56 percent on the reserva-

"It's an epidemic here, and get-ting worse," Smith said. Fifty years ago, diabetes was unheard of among the Indians living on the reservation. Ruiz blames changes in the Indians' lifestyle for their heart problems. "We are influenced by a society that encourages us with commercials to drink ... beer and eat pizza," he said Dr. Peter Bennett, chief of the Phoenix research branch of the National Institute of Diabetes, conceded that 20th century lifestyles are in part, responsible for "Activities such as hunting, the problem. gathering and marginal farming have given way to a sedentary lifestyle here," he said. Also, traditional foods have been replaced by processed meals, rich in refined carbohydrates.

One theory suggests these desert-dwelling Indians possess "hyper insulinemia," a gene that promotes fat storage, Bennett

His research, he added, indicated that tribes with a high prevalence for obesity, such as those on the Gila River Indian Reservation, also have the highest rates of diabetes anywhere.

CHINA, Texas (AP) - If you want to learn a lot about rice you don't have to go to the nation of

You can visit here, a small farm community just west of Beaumont, where scientists clad in mud-caked bluejeans and sweat-soaked bandanas till the soil on experimental plots.

For years, foreign ambassadors, agricultural ministers, scientists and other visitors with an agricultural bent have come to the 910-acre Texas A&M University Agricultural and Extension Center to learn from the work being done in rice research.

In turn, scientists from the center have visited every major riceproducing country in the world, bringing back ideas to improve the production of Texas rice.

"Some of our staff members were among the first people to travel to China when it opened up (in the early 1970s)," said James W. Stansel, the center's director.

Stansel, a third generation member of a rice-producing family and second generation extension service scientist, oversees the operations at the center.

The walls of his office are covered with plaques and pictures, each highlighting a different agricultural achievement, either personal or part of the center's accomplishments.

In the center's main office, glass-enclosed cases along hallway walls are filled with baby food jars, pancake mix boxes, beer cans and other consumer products all made with rice.

Pamphlets on microwave cooking with rice litter the coffee tables, along with new rice recipes. "If you don't eat rice, you might as well drink it," Stansel said, explaining that some beer brewers use broken grains of rice to create a smoother taste.

Scientists at the center concentrate on developing new rice and soybean varieties, but they are also investigating the adaptablility of crops such as sorghum, kenaf and wheat to the Texas Gulf Coast climate. Each day, scientists and researchers are out in the fields or in their laboratories searching for clues on how to solve the latest disease problem or get a higher crop

And at this research center, tools such as dirt-covered tractors and plows are used along with sterilized test tubes and beakers.

Outside his air conditioned office, a scientist hoes an experimental weed control plot about as big as a family garden in 90 degree heat. He walks up and down the neat rows, carefully maneuvering his hoe so as not to disturb the seedlings like a mother tip-toeing through a nursery while her baby sleeps.

Further down a dirt road, Charles Bollich, a renowned rice authority, is in the field scribbling notations into one of his leather-bound journals. The journals contain detailed information on each row of his 20,000 experimental rice plots

It's harvest time and combines are threshing some field, while workers pick other plots by hand to keep the experimental varieties separate from one another. Bollich drives down the dirt pathways alongside the rice paddies in a 1970s faded-green Ford station wagon encased in a dusty film. He stops the car in a deep rut, gets out and walks into a flooded rice plot where the metal sign marking the section reads: 'Regenerated.

He knows what the code stands for and he can also tell how well the crop is doing by the plant's coloring, height and husks.

Eighteen rice varieties have been released from the Texas A&M center. The varieties now make up 98 percent of the varieties grown in Texas and more than 50 percent of those grown nationally. Bollich has played a part in developing Bollich inspects a field of wind-damaged rice.

almost all of them. He developed Lemont (the "mont" is taken from Beaumont), a high-yield semi-drawf strain of long-grain rice that was released in 1983. Lemont stalks are about 10 to 12 inches shorter than traditional rice so they can withstand high winds typical of Southeast Texas summers. "Lodging," the term for rice being blown down in the field, was a major problem for Texas farmers until Lemont was developed, Stansel said.

Currently, Bollich is working on developing specialty rices to capture some of the import market. About 80,000 tons of specialty rices are imported from Thailand annually to satisfy the tastes of Asian immigrants.

About two acres of "Jasmine," a rice with a natural aroma and flavor similar to that of roasted popcorn or nuts, is being harvested for the first time. If taste tests prove acceptable to Southeast Asians, scientists will release the rice to interested producers next year, Bollich said.

Ironically, although the station's scientists now are trying to please the Asian palate, about two decades ago scientists at the center participated in U.S. military experiments designed to kill Asian rice crops.

In the late 1960s, the China center was one of 19 different germ warfare sites where secret research was done on ways to kill rice crops in Asian countries, according to an Army report.

But germ warfare was never the main focus of the center vice of the U.S. Department of where Texas rice research began. In 1909, the state Legislature established an experimental station at Amelia on 100 acres donated by the Beaumont Chamber of Commerce.

In 1945, the center relocated to its present site on Imes Road off Highway west of Beaumont. Today, the center's $3 million annual operating budget and 70 employees, including 14 scientists, are funded by Texas A&M. the Agricultural Research Ser-

Agriculture and the Texas Rice Improvement Association, an organization of rice producers who have donated land as well as money to the project.

Technology developed at the center since 1983 has contributed $1.5 billion to the Texas economy and $2.5 billion to the U.S. ecnonomy, Stansel said. Texas rice and soybean crops have a $2 billion annual economic impact which includes production, processing, milling and packaging, he said

Currently, a $3.2 million expansion project is under way at the center to add dormitories and laboratories and upgrade existing research facilities. In addition to rice experiments, scientists at the center research soil and plant nutrition, irrigation and water management, weed and insect control and other areas to develop heartier crop varieties that require less water, herbicides and fertilizer, lowering the farmer's production

Pleasing consumers with easier cooking rice products is another aim of the center's research, Stansel said.

Rice is nutritionally sound and complex carbohydrate that is low in fat, contains no cholesterol and is sodium-free, he said. Rice's nutritional value is evident by its extensive use as the main staple in the diet for half the world's

Runaway slave's farm stays in hands of his descendants

By REBECCA MABRY Champaign-Urbana News Gazette

BROADLANDS, Ill. (AP) — Like most settlers more than 100 years ago, George W. Smith came to Champaign County with all his possessions piled in the back of a wagon.

But Smith had a different history than most of his neighbors in the early spring of 1876 — he had been a slave in Tennessee who escaped to freeedom during the Civil War.

Smith was one of the first black landowners in Illinois. And he was the only black land-owning farmer in the area for many years, eventually increasing his holdings to 437 acres.

An 1887 Champaign County history called Smith 'a Republican in politics, and a citizen held in high respect for his intelligence as a farmer and his worthiness as a member of the community." A 1912 newspaper report of his death referred to "the well-known colored man of Broadlands."

farmed with horses and mules, and they speak proudly of their heritage.

"We all think we have the best roots in the world," said his granddaughter, Rosetta Smith Williams of Elgin.

'My grandson even knows about the farm, and he's only 5 years old," Mrs. Williams said. "He can tell you all about my father and grandfather." City directories show that the local black population in 1880 — which numbered about 460 — was at the University of Illinois and an expert on local But nothing was ever made of the racial differ-up." Cable said. "Around here, nobody paid any attention to it. They went to the same churches and the same schools that we did. "I never ever thought anything of it. They were very, very well respected. There were considered to be A-No.1 citizens," Cable added. George Smith was one of seven children born to slave Amy Smith in southern Tennessee in 1835. He was sold away from his family at a young age, and when he was 27, he escaped to freedeom. According to legend, Smith's father was a white slaveowner, and because of that parentage, he was allowed to live in the house with white children and to attend school, rendering him "too smart for his race" in some eyes.

When a group of men planned to lynch him for fear he would start trouble among fellow slaves, he escaped in 1862, joined the Union Army and became a guide for several generals before meeting his wife and moving to the Broadlands area.

When Smith died, his youngest son, John M. Smith, took over the farm and expanded it, while gaining a reputation at state and county fairs as a fine horseman. He held a horse show each August at his farm, an event that drew 2,000 horse lovers in 1954, when Smith donated proceeds to the Boy tax over the past several years. It allows farmers to cash in unused invetment tax credit for a onetime 1987 tax refund.

Eligible farmers must have earned at least half their gross income from farming in 1984, 1985 and 1986 to qualify. Also, their good stands and needs to be credit carry-over must have come from the farming business.

The refund is limited to the smallest of these amounts: $750. one-half the investment tax credit carried into 1987, or the farmer's total tax liability for 15 years preceding 1987.

Farmers who wish to claim their refund, but have already filed a 1987 tax return, should file an amended return on IRS Form 1040X. Farmers should confer with a competent tax advisor about the best use of investment tax credit carry-overs before filing an amended return.

Some of the yellow flowering weeds on rangeland is the broom snakeweed or perennial broomweed. This is one of several range weeds that is increasing a lot on range land. It is a low-growing, multi-stemmed woody type of

Since this is a perennial plant, it is increasing at alarming rates on lots of rangeland.

This is the best time of the year to control it. Recommended herbicides at this time include 1 pint. of Grazon PC or 1 quart of Weedmaster. These would need to be applied in an oil-in-water emulsion of 2 to 4 gallons per acre.

I certainly recommend that ranchers with Broom Snakeweed start work on spraying and controlling it before it completely takes over our rangeland like have seen it in Eastern New Mexico. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure.

If you noticed some wooly locoweed this past year, now is also a good time to control that with some of the above herbicides I would encourage you to come by for a visit as these herbicides and their method of application need to be thoroughly understood. These are expensive treatments and the right combinations are needed for good control.

As I inspected our Goldaster demonstrations recently, a tremendous grass growth response is really apparent. A lot of rangeland is heavily infested with weeds - both annuals and perennials. Good rainfall can be wasted on a lot of weeds.

We did grow a lot of grass, but I feel confident that when grass clippings are made in the next few weeks, we'll see grass production doubled and tripled where herbicides were applied to control weed growth.

I'll keep you posted on these re-

klahoma Indians refute stories of Tonkawa tribe's demise

By ROBERT MEDLEY Wichita Falls Times Record News

GRAHAM, Texas (AP) — Tonk Valley, named for the Tonkawa Indian tribe, is a small community that was once the home of Indians whose eating habits and very existence are still debated.

Some say the Tonkawas practiced ritualistic cannibalism. Some historians believe the tribe is now extinct. And that belief has Tonkawa tribal members enraged.

The Tonkawas were in Young County southwest of Graham, Texas, for four years from 1855-59, historians say. Stories of cannibalism are known to Tonk Valley residents, a part of the past Tonkawas do not deny

But, in Tonkawa, Okla., Don Patterson, vice president of the Tonkawa Indian Agency and a Tonkawa Indian, is disgusted that the tribal enrollment of 280 is not recognized by historians. He said he has two books published by Texas authors that state the tribe is gone.

'That is like me sitting in my own little shell and saying there are no Texans," Patterson said.

Patterson says that Tonkawas did consume human flesh as a part of a ritual. Tonkawas believed in "associative magic" - that tribesmen could gain a dead person's powers by consuming his flesh. For the same reason, Indians wore eagle feathers to gain the keen senses of an eagle, Patter-

"Cannibalism among native people was common all across the world. The trouble today is people conjure up images of Robinson Crusoe and Tarzan," Patterson said.

Tonkawa warriors cerved as scouts for the Army. Tonkawas once proclaimed that "Comanche meat is better than bear meat," according to the book Indian Tribes of Texas. The book also claims the Tonkawas have vanished.

'Tonkawas do exist as a tribal entity. An Indian is a cultural definition not a blood definition," Pat-

In July 1855, the Tonkawas set up five different villages on the Brazos Reservation in what is now Tonk Valley, historians said.

An archivist at the Fort Belknap Archives, Barbara Ledbetter, said cannibalism cases were few and isolated and only the results of starvation that the tribe faced from being forced by the Army to walk from Young County to a reservation near present-day Anadarko, Okla.

According to settlers' descriptions of a Tonkawa camp, the men sat around in fine jewelry while the wemen, who wore body tattoos, went about their work topless. The Tonkawas decorated their faces by painting or tattooing black lines from their foreheads to their nostrils.

They did not like farming and were nomadic hunters who often starved during winter on re-

The most drastic decline of the tribe began after 1859, when the tribe of 258 was forced to walk to Indian Territory. Shawnee, Caddoes and Delaware Indians, along with other tribes, massacred most of the remaining Tonkawas in 1862, the historian said. After the 1862 massacre, survivors returned to Texas and lived around Fort Griffin until 1885, Ledbetter said.

Patterson said the mixture of rival Indians in Indian Territory had the same effect as if a cat were thrown into a cage at a dog kennel. He said his people were enemies of the tribes sent there and the massacre was invevitable.

A Tonk Valley historical marker near Texas 67 is partly the work of Thomas M. Choate, who was born west of the Brazos Reservation site. He made the draft of the marker.

Living in the area all his life, he has found arrowheads and spear points, and at one time he knew where a secret grave of an Indian chief was buried before it was plundered by grave robbers. He believes the Tonkawas ate pumpkins, not people, when they were at the reservation.

Tonkawa comes from a Waco word meaning "they all stay together." Historians claim that when hunger struck, the Tonkawas often tied belts around their waists and tightened them until they found something to eat.

One Texan, Noah Smithwick, claimed he once witnessed a Tonkawa meal. He followed Tonkawas as a scout. After a band of Comanches reportedly stole a herd of horses and the Tonkawas pursued them, the Tonkawas stopped after killing only one Comanche, failing to bring back the stolen horses.

He claimed the Tonkawas cut off the Comanche's scalp and put it on a tall pole, dismembered the body and prepared it in a kettle with potatoes and vegetables. As members of the tribe danced around the scalp pole, they drank cups of

Cigarette sleuth identifies ashes to locate sources of forest fires

By BARNES C. ELLIS The Oregonian

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) - Bob Bourhill is an adamant nonsmoker. But he spends much of his life with cigarette butts.

White butts, cork-colored butts, blackened butts — Bourhill has devoted himself to the study of their subtle nuances, often with the aid of a powerful magnifying

"I dream about butts sometimes," conceded the balding scientist, his eyes twinkling through a pair of black-framed bifocals.

As well he should. During the course of a 30-year career in Oregon's Forestry Department, Bourhill has devoted himself to identifying and recovering what is left of cigarettes that have caused forest fires.

Sifting through the ashes of the most massive catastrophes, he can sniff straight to the "area of confusion" where a blaze began. pinpoint the remains of a cigarette and delicately remove it to his laboratory for analysis.

With the aid of a personally authored, 325-page manual on cigarette identification, he never has failed to isolate the butt by brand, style and even whether it came from a hard or soft pack.

As corroborating evidence, his findings may help the Forestry Department recover firefighting costs from a negligent smoker or arsonist. Last year, the department investigated 147 cigarettecaused fires on state-protected lands, including 35 that were determined to have been started de-

Finding a tiny cigarette butt that started a large fire is a challenge in itself. While he now prefers to remain in the office, the 54-year-old Bourhill has spent years on his hands and knees, combing points of origin that may be as large as five rooms.

"Twig at a time," he is fond of saying. Armed with tweezers and a tiny bellows similar to a perfine layers of ash in search of his

"You might be down there several hours or five minutes," Bourhill said.

A good "butt" might be identified on the spot. More frequently a blackened filter or mere worm of ash defies easy analysis.

Bourhill got his start in his unlikely specialty when he took such a charred specimen to the state crime lab for analysis.

There he was surprised to learn that the lab was unable to tell him what kind of smoke he had. It had no system for analyzing burned cigarettes, he was told. Nor did any other facility in the country.

Armed with tweezers and a tiny bellows similar to a perfume atomizer, he sifts through fine layers of ash in search of his

In the ensuing months, Bourhill filled the front room of his house with hundreds of brands of cigarettes, purchased at his own expense. After coming home from work, he measured, picked and poked at them with tweezers and a magnifying lens.

Filtered cigarettes have a characteristic combination of tiny holes in their filters. Nonfiltered cigarettes come in unique sizes and coloring schemes, sometimes with cryptic designs, all of which still may be visible in carefully preserved ashes.

Bourhill isolated eight categories of features that distinguish cigarettes and experimented with various methods of identifying them. Ultimately he settled on a numerical system in which the investigator assigns a series of numbers to the specimen based on responses to specific questions.

The numbers are then crossreferenced with a list of 300 types of cigarettes to complete the identification.

That's a sore point with Bourhill, who knows from carefully cultivated industry sources that 309 kinds of cigarettes are manufactured in the country leaving nine out of his otherwise comprehensive manual.

But some brands are distributed only in small areas, and two cigarette companies - Phillip Morris Co. and Brown and Williamson Tobacco Corp. — have refused to provide even a list of the brands they manufacture.

VATICAN CITY (AP) - Pope John Paul II late last week issued a major document on women that condemns discrimination, reaffirms a ban on female priests and says women's personalities are formed essentially by maternal characteristics.

The 120-page document touches only briefly on the institutional role of women in the Roman Catholic Church — a controversial issue in Western countries, particularly the United States.
But it will likely have a significant effect, since it provides the theoretical framework for decisions on women during the rest of John Paul's papacy. Released Friday, "Mulieris Dignitatem," Latin apostolic letter, meaning that it is intended as church teaching but is not considered infallible.

for "On the Dignity of Women," is in the form of an

In the introduction, the pope said he is responding to a call by a bishops' synod last year for further theological and anthropological study of what it means to be a man or woman.

"It is only by beginning from these bases ... that one is able to speak of their (women's) active presence in the Church and in society," he wrote

John Paul concluded that the sexes are equal but fundamentally different, and that women are distinguished by such "feminine" characteristics as sensitivity to other people.

He says women particularly fulfill their vocation through motherhood — either actual child-rearing or "spiritual motherhood," in which some women, such as nuns, remain celibate and devote themselves to other people.

Vatican officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the pope regarded the document as a "very personal" statement and apparently did not consult outside experts on it.

It came as the Vatican is facing increasing pressure from women for a greater role in the

The women's issue dominated the 1987 synod and has arisen recently with the ordination of a woman bishop in the Episcopal Church in the United States, a move the Vatican has described as a roadblock to Christian unity

In the document, the pope emphasizes repeatedly that men and women are equal and sexual discrimination is a sin.

The revealed truth concerning the creation of the human being as male and female constitutes the principal argument against all the objectively injurious and unjust situations which contain and express the inheritance of the sin which all human beings bear within themselves," he wrote.

But he said that women's struggle for equality 'must not under any condition lead to the 'masculinization' of women.'

"The personal resources of femininity are certainly no less than the resources of masculinity:

who do not take responsibility for their sexual acts. "How often is she abandoned with her pregnanaccept responsibility for it?" the pope wrote.

John Paul said women are more sensitive than However, he said the very difference between femininity and masculinity means women should not be priests. Christ, he says, only chose men to be his Apostles and to consecrate the Eucharist — the ceremony that celebrates Christ's sacrifice of his life for the church. "Since Christ, in instituting the Eucharist, linked it in such an explicit way to the priestly service of the Apostles, it is legitimate to conclude that he thereby wished to express the relationship between man and woman, between what is 'feminine' and what is 'masculine,' " the document said.

The pope rejected the argument that Jesus chose men as followers because of sociological factors of his day, saying that Christ had a highly unusual rapport with women that did not conform to

By JOEL WILLIAMS Associated Press Writer

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) -More than half the defendants in the alleged gang rape of a San Diego woman are not interested in plea bargains despite a conviction and maximum sentence recommended for the first man to face trial, lawyers said.

"They won't ask their attorneys to seek plea bargains that would require them to plead guilty," said attorney Albert A. Pena III of Corpus Christi, who with San Diego attorney Nago Alaniz represents five of the 10 men indicted.

One client, Orlando Garza, 24, of San Diego, was convicted of sexual assault Tuesday. A jury recommended the maximum 20-year prison sentence for Garza. After the conviction, Assistant District Attorney Rodolfo Gutierrez, chief prosecutor in the Garza case, said he expected a "long line" of defendants seeking plea bargains. "My response is that the line is not going to be as long as he thinks," Pena said. Since Tuesday, he said he and Alaniz have spoken with Garza and the four other indicted men they represent, and none of them wants to plead out.

Pena said the same holds true for the 14-year-old youth Pena and Alaniz represent on a sexual assault charge in the case.

Garza still faces an aggravated kidnapping charge in the case. On Wednesday, the prosecutor told the San Antonio Light that gang-rape defendants seeking plea bargains could expect at least 10-year sentences and more if kidnapping charges are involved.

"We'll definitely be seeking hard time for all of them,' Gutierrez told the newspaper.

Prosecutor Gutierrez

Sam Fugate, a Kingsville attorney representing 22-year-old Ruben Vela Jr., said his client earlier this month turned down an offer of immunity from prosecution in exchange for testimony for the state.

"He said it didn't happen like the girl said it happened and he couldn't testify that it did, that he couldn't perjure himself," Fugate said of Vela, who is charged only with sexual assault and not kidnapping.

"We're going to trial," said Fugate, adding that he probably will advise his client to seek a venue change because of the publicity.

The married 19-year-old mother of two claimed she was abducted next to her San Diego house the night of March 26 and taken to a ranch north of town where a cockfight was being held, then raped repeatedly by as many as 23 men there and at two other locations.

Jose Carlos Briones, 29, of San Diego, was offered a recommendation of probation in exchange for his prosecution testimony. Briones, who was indicted on a sexual assault charge, testified against Garza.

Pena said he will seek a new trial for Garza, and if that failed he would appeal in part on the grounds that the attorneys were too tired to represent him effectively because District Judge Ricardo Garcia kept the jury up all night before the verdict in Duval County's 229th District Court.

"Just the fact that we were required to stay there all night like a bunch of pack mules is one of the points we're going to raise,' said Pena

Six men were indicted on sexual assault and aggravated kidnapping charges. Three were indicted only on sexual assault charges and one was indicted only on a kidnapping charge.

Aides to Quayle quickly hustled the Republican vice presidential nominee away before the matter could be pursued further.

They concede privately that there are areas where he needs to bone up, namely on agricultural and economic issues But they point out that on defense and national security, Quayle considers himself an expert, not without reason. His Democratic counterpart, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, has spent 18 years in the Senate and is considered quite knowledgeable on a number of issues, particularly in his work on the Senate Finance Committee he chairs. But both vice presidential nominees need - and get - extensive briefings as they stump throughout the country, not only on regional issues but also on positions enunciated by their respective running mates. The briefings have intensified as the two candidates prepare for their debate Wednesday in Oma-

Quayle devoted last Thursday to debate preparation and looked ahead to a weekend of tutelage from Roger Ailes, the Bush campaign's media adviser. Bentsen snatched time to study during a light campaign schedule before returning to Washington late Friday for two days of meetings and briefings with top Democratic advisers.

Quayle has been studying briefing papers on various issues prepared for him under the supervision of Jim Ciccone, a former aide to Bush campaign chairman James A. Baker III. Ciccone is Quayle's issues and research director.

The day on the road begins with a meeting of Quayle's senior staff and consultation with campaign headquarters in Washington. The staff then briefs the senator on the day's schedule and current news.

Quayle himself reads some newspapers, but mostly relies on oral staff briefings for information. Throughout the day, aides keep in touch with the Washington office or with Quayle's Senate office to research anything new that may come up. Papers or speeches are transmitted via fax machine at the hotel where the campaign stays each night or are reviewed by the respective presidential campaigns by telephone, a system Bentsen's staff also uses.

Bentsen receives extensive briefings by a group of people mostly from the Dukakis campaign when he's in Washington, usually on Monday before he heads out.

Each morning on the road, he's briefed again. Victoria Radd, who worked with Michael Dukakis campaign chairman Paul Brountas on the team that picked Bentsen for the ticket, outlines for the senator Dukakis' positions on the issues.

The campaign brings in specialists for whatever issue or political situation is developing that day. For example, Bentsen's Finance Committee expert on health programs was on board on a recent trip in which Bentsen announced a rural health program. Larry Harrington, the Dukakis-Bentsen southern coordinator, travels with Bentsen when he's in the South. Both senators often pick up a Senate colleague when they're in a particular area to fill them in on important local issues. Sen. David Boren, D-Okla., rode the plane with Bentsen on the way to Oklahoma City, for example, and Sen. Bob Kasten, R-Wis., traveled with Quayle to Milwaukee area

HOUSTON (AP) — A tall, redhaired woman with a slight Scottish accent has used bogus credentials to get jobs as a registered nurse in at least nine Houston-area medical facilities in the past 10 years, authorities

State nursing regulators have known of her activities since 1984. the Houston Chronicle reported.

Ray Toburen, director of investigations for the Texas State Board of Nurse Examiners, said she has been known as Gloria Lampl, Gloria Livsey and Gloria Pirello in jobs she obtained after presenting altered copies of Texas nursing licenses.

Toburen said the woman made a big mistake when she obtained a job using the name and license of Ann L. McClain, a real nurse living in Houston.

McClain said she and the woman, known then as Gloria Pirello, obtained a copy of McClain's license when both worked at the same health care institution during 1987.

The woman then used McClain's license to find another A friend of McClain saw the care facility and told McClain, "Gloria Pirello is using your name and working some where else."

"I was furious," McClain said. "If she had given the wrong medication or killed someone, my license would have been suspended."

McClain, who said she saw the woman only occasionally in the halls of the hospital, described her as about 5 feet, 10 inches tall, 145 pounds with red hair and a Scottish accent.

The woman is white, was born April 26, 1938 and told at least one person she had some nursing training in Scotland, Toburen

The Houston newspaper reported that they were unable to reach the woman for comment.

A recorded message answers the telephone at a number the woman provided in court files on the case obtained by McClain. However, the woman did not respond to a message left on the answering machine.

State board officials said the woman has worked at Westbury Hospital, Cypress-Lakewood Emergency Treatment Center, Omni Hospital, Hermann Hospital, Day Surgery Center in Humble (which has since changed its name), Casa de Ninos, Northeast Medical Center Hospital in Humble, Gulf Pines Hospital and Creative Living Center in Hum-

He suggested in a meeting last week with Perez de Cuellar, Shevardnadze and the foreign ministers of Britain, China and France that the U.N. observers were the appropriate mechanism to conduct an investigation.

A further irony is that the Soviets do not contribute financially to the peacekeeping operation.

Gerasimov accused the U.N. observers of an inadequate job on the very day the 9,991 U.N. peacekeepers operating in seven regional hot spots around the world had been awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in celebration of their global mission.

A further irony is that the Soviets do not contribute financially to the peacekeeping opera-

Shultz and Shevardnadze have worked hard and successfully to repair U.S.-Soviet relations over the last three years.

The Geneva accords, providing for the withdrawal of the more than 100,000 Soviet troops in Afghanistan, were the product of a U.S.-Soviet reconciliation.

Gerasimov said Pakistan armed the Afghan guerrillas and was allowing at least two training camps to operate on its territory for about 3,400 fighters.

He said 2,500 Afghan fighters were in training near Islamabad, the Pakistani capital, and 900 others at a base near the Afghan border with the assistance of Chinese, American and Pakistani advisers. With both the Soviets and the Americans looking to the United Nations for a solution, the dispute is shaping up as an acid test of the TAMPA, Fla. (AP) -Twenty-seven pilots who allegedly lied about drug or alcohol-related convictions to get their dicenses have been indicted for making false statements to the Federal Aviation Administra-'tion, officials said.

"These indictments are the first in a special nationwide project ... to vigorously pursue this abuse in a critical sector of the nation's transportation system," interim U.S. Attorney Robert Genzman said.

The 27 could face five years in prison and up to $250,000 each in fines.

Ben Lorigo of the Department of Transportation inspector general's office in Washington said the crackdown came after painstaking computer checks of 711,000 pilots around the country

He said investigations were in progress elsewhere around the country and more indictments were expected.

Among those indicted are 12 current or former commercial pilets, including one for Delta Air and within the time prescribed by law. My residence is: Pam-pa, Gray County, Texas. The correct post office address by Lines: two student pilots; 10 private pilots and three others, Lorigo said.

Fred Kopec, 27, of Orlando, the Delta pilot, was charged with failing to reveal a drunken driving arrest in Lee County, Ala., in January 1984.

Delta spokeswoman Jackie Pate in Atlanta confirmed Kopec worked for the airline.

Garrido adds touches to a landscape painting.

Elderly man waits a lifetime to become painter at age 90

By MICHELE SALCEDO San Antonio Light

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Ramon Garrido waited a lifetime to paint. Now, at age 90, after building two fortunes and losing one to the Cuban revolution, he is able to fulfill his dream.

'I loved art since I was born," Garrido said, "but I was told all painters die of hunger."

The threat of hunger drove him from his native Orense, Galicia, Spain, at age 14 to financially help his parents and nine brothers and sisters.

My father discouraged me from studying art, because I had to do my part to support the family,' Garrido said.

He traveled to Argentina, where he befriended an army colonel who helped him open a tobacco and stationery store. Even then, he would draw pictures for the schoolchildren on the front of their Garrido brought his father from Spain to help with the shop, but after a few years, the senior Garrido wanted to return to Spain. They sold the store and father and son returned together.

In the early 1920s, Garrido returned to the new world, this time to Cuba, where he amassed money in real estate and building construction.

The triumph of Fidel Castro's revolution brought the nationalization of all income property and many private land holdings in its wake. Garrido estimates he lost a half-million dollars in holdings. He and his wife were allowed to stay in their house in fashionable Almendares Marianao until his wife died in 1970.

After his wife died, he said, "I wasn't interested in anything there."

His son, Dr. Jose Ramon, then brought him to live in San Antonio and renewed his father's interest in painting.

"He never had the opportunity to paint before he came to San Antonio," the son said. "I started giving him some paints for Christmas on his birthday. He started painting to kill the time.

The senior Garrido's fascination with buildings and land can be seen in his impressionistic landscapes, most often of structures surrounded by lush gardens, that evoke the verdant mountains of Garrido never studied theory of painting. "I believe study is in the practice," he said. "My style is to paint whatever there is from here and there in my life. I combine images in my imagination."

Portraits, however, are too limited in their appeal, he said. "If you paint a person, the only one who is interested is the subject of the painting," he explained.

Garrido said he paints what interests him and only when he is inspired.

'Sometimes I do four, five, six paintings a week. Some weeks I do none. Sometimes the ideas engrave themselves in my mind when I'm in bed, a part of a house from here, a garden from there. The whole thing comes from my imagination." he said. While waiting for the muse to light, Garrido reads newspapers in English and Spanish. "I can read in Spanish without glasses, but I need to wear my glasses to distinguish the little letters in English," he said. The nonagenarian said he also likes to read biog-

Garrido says that when he dies he may be famous, but not before. He says he plans to leave his paintings to his children.

"I can't take them with me," he quipped.

Bush, Dukakis would join other presidents who expressed faith

By GEORGE W. CORNELL AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - If George Bush becomes president, he would be the 12th Episcopalian to hold that office, more than of any other denomination. If Michael Dukakis wins, he would be the first Greek Orthodox in the Oval

Both are lifelong members of their faiths.

A regular church-goer, Bush is a member of St. Martin's Episcopal Church in Houston.

He also is a close friend of evangelist Billy Graham, who spends time with Bush each year at his summer home in Kennebunkport, Maine.

There, Bush is a vestrymen at St. Anne's Episcopal Church, as well as maintaining active participation in the Houston congregation. In Washington, he attends various Episcopal churches, including the National Cathedral.

In his family, faith was a "given," he writes. "God just was, there was no debate about

In (Bush's) family, faith was a 'given,' he writes. 'God just was, there was no debate about it.'

Dukakis is a lifelong member of Annunication Cathedral in Boston, a regular contributor and frequent worshipper there. attending on major holidays and sometimes on Sundays.

'He comes as often or more often than some other members," says the cathedral dean, the Rev. Athanasian Demos. "It's not as often as I wish. I'd like everyone to be here every Sunday.'

Under church rules, Dukakis is formally barred from taking Communion because of his marriage to a non-Christian — his wife Kitty is a Jew --- but this is regarded as a pastoral issue between worshipper and priest.

George Stephanopoulos, a Boston spokesman for Dukakis, says, "The governor considers himself a religious man and close to the church. Religion is not something he takes lightly."

He is a personal friend of Archbishop Iakovos, primate of Greek Orthodoxy in the Americas. Iakovos had been pastor of the Boston cathedral when Dukakis was a lad in Sunday school and his parents were active

The archbishop, whom Dukakis calls his "spiritual father," has often counseled with him over the years and since he began his campaign for the presidency.

Dukakis 'considers himself a religious man and close to the church. Religion is not something he takes lightly.'

His wife, who does not attend services with him, recently told the Atlanta Jewish Times:

"We have mutual respect for the other in terms of the right and privilege to practice their religion as they see fit, and we've done that.

"I think I'm a stronger Jew for having married out of my religion. I feel very strongly about my ethnic and religious background, and that has not dimi-

"Michael feels very strongly about his religious background, and we made a decision before we were married that we would raise our children with both." They "have shared in the richness of both our heritages."

Dukakis has drawn occasional jabs from within Orthodoxy for not condemning abortion and for his marriage to a Jew. He was called an "apostate" by Republican policy analyst James G. Jatras, a Greek Orthodox.

However, the Greek Orthodox community generally has seemed widely supportive of Dukakis. The archbishop, while refraining from political endorsements, has strongly affirmed Dukakis' steady churchmanship. The candidate has encountered opposition and frequent picking by anti-abortion forces. Like many other politicians, he says he personally opposes abortion but doesn't want to impose that position on others. He also has opposed tuition tax credits for students in private or religious schools, and is against capital punishment. Bush, on the other hand, favors capital punishment and tuition tax credits, and would outlaw abortion except to save the life of the mother or in cases of rape or

He also wants daily prayer in the public schools, and required recital of the Pledge of Alle-

These positions have gained. him strong support from some evangelicals including Moral Majority chairman Jerry Fal-

After a meeting with a group of evangelical leaders in July, former Southern Baptist President Adrian Rogers of Memphis, Tenn., said, "I appreciate very much the Bush campaign reaching out to evangelicals.

However, prior to the current campaign, Bush at times has criticized some fundamentalists for trying to "impose their will and dictate their own interpretation of morality on the rest of society.

Two, including one of the most deeply religious presidents of American history, Abraham Lincoln ... never affiliated with any denomination.

Once, when pressed by an evangelical interviewer about whether he has had a "bornagain" conversion experience, he said, "Yes, I believe in Jesus and I have accepted him as my personal savior."

However, he expressed annoyance at those who demand that all Christians must know the exact day and hour their conversion occurred.

Of the nation's 38 presidents to date, 11 have been Episcopalians, six Presbyterians, four Methodists, three Congregationalists (now United Church of Christ), two Unitarians, two Dutch Reformed, two Baptists, two Quak; ers, two of the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ), and one Roman Catholic.

Two, including one of the most deeply religious presidents of American history, Abraham Lincoln, and the man who succeeded him after his assassination. Andrew Johnson, never affiliated with any denomination.
