A painted silhouette on a wall seems to be offering an umbrella to a passerby in the pouring rain in Dallas. A lingering weather system continues to spread rain across the state, with possibility of snow showers for the Panhandle through Tuesday.

Scattered snow showers possible

From Staff and Wire Reports

Snow showers or rain showers are possible in the Texas Panhandle and South Plains tonight.

With early morning fog and drizzle greeting residents today, Pampa's forecast calls for mostly cloudy tonight and colder with a 20 percent chance of precipitation. Scattered snow showers are possible, with a low tonight in the mid 20s.

Tuesday will be partly cloudy and cool with a high of 45 and north winds at 10 to 20 mph.

The rest of the state will have mostly cloudy skies except in extreme West Texas where skies will be clear through Tuesday. Scattered showers are possible tonight in North Texas, South Texas, East Texas and Southeast Texas tonight and Tuesday.

The National Weather Service at Austin reported that between Feb. 11 and Feb. 19 there were only seven minutes of sunshine recorded at Austin. That was recorded on Feb. 12.

Lows tonight will be mostly in the 30s and 40s, ranging from the 20s in the Panhandle to the 60s in the Lower Rio Grande Valley.

Highs Tuesday will be in the lower 40s in Northwest Texas and in the 50s and 60s over the rest of West Texas, ranging upward to near 70 in the Big Bend area, in the 40s and 50s across North Texas and in the 50s and 60s in South Texas.

A dense fog advisory was in effect early today for South Central Texas and the coastal plains. Isolated showers and patches of drizzle dampened much of North Texas and South Texas as well as the Panhandle and South Plains early today.

The rain was occasionally mixed with sleet in northwest sections of the Panhandle.

Early morning temperatures were mostly in the 40s and 50s, ranging from the 30s in the Panhandle to the 60s along the coast and in extreme South Texas. Extremes ranged from 32 at Dalhart to 66 at Houston and Brownsville.

Other early morning temperatures around the state include 48 at Wichita Falls, 50 at Fort Worth and Waco, 51 at Austin, 52 at San Antonio, 60 at Corpus Christi, 50 at San Angelo, 40 at Lubbock, 44 at Midland and 56 at El Paso.

150 show up for auction of Howard Hughes items

HOUSTON (AP)— Retired airline captain Ernie Saviano says he always regarded Howard Hughes as one of his greatest heroes so it was no wonder that he was an enthusiastic bidder at an auction of Hughes memorabilia.

Saviano, 63, of Arlington, Sunday submitted winning bids for two of the most notable items at the auction, a shotgun the reclusive billionaire carried with him on his record-setting, round-the-world flight in 1938 and a gold pocket watch he gave the president of Hughes Tool Co.

Saviano, who was on a business trip in Portage, Wis., and telephoned his bids in, will pay $3,100 for the shotgun and $4,250 for the watch.

Asked why did he want these items associated with Hughes, who died in 1976 while on a flight here from Acapulco, Mexico, Saviano responded, "What a question."

"This is Howard Hughes we're talking about. He was one of the greatest figures of this century in aviation, in movie-making and in the business world," Saviano said. "I've always admired him."

"As a kid I made a current events report about his round-the-world flight. I wanted something personally his. This is the greatest thing that could have happened to me this year."

Saviano also bid on a scarf Hughes wore during a record-setting Los Angeles-to-New York flight and a felt hat, made in England, that had belonged to Hughes, but the winning bidder on those was Neal Witwer of Houston, a male nurse and professional photographer.

Witwer will pay $2,100 for the scarf and $3,000 for the hat.

"I'm doing it because of a long interest in Howard Hughes, and with a little help from a friend," Witwer explained.

Houston antique dealer Ray Simpson, who conducted the auction, the first major public sale of Hughes items, said about 150 people attended and bids totaled about $35,000 for 74 items, individually or in lots.

"We went in not knowing what these things would go for," Simpson said, but the auction has set values.

"The market set the values," interjected Jerald Broussard, an investment and marketing consultant, who paid $90 for a 1919 Hughes Tool Co. telegram.

"I bought this for my son, who's only 13 months," said Broussard. "Someday I want to explain to him the importance of keeping things in balance."

"Even though Hughes had great wealth, what good did it do him?" Broussard asked. "He lost his perspective on life."

Most of the items auctioned came from a collection belonging to Robert Kuldell, son of the late R.C. Kuldell, who became president of Hughes Tool after the death of Hughes' father in 1924 and remained a close associate of the younger Hughes.

The watch Saviano purchased had belonged to R.C. Kuldell.

Six items from Hughes' grade school days in Houston were furnished by Lynn Burling, owner of a printing and graphics company here.

Burling's father, Roy, found them in old belongings cleared from a River Oaks home attic about 40 years ago.

Sirhan: Kennedy was threat to Arabs

By GARY LANGER
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP)— Sirhan Sirhan, in his first television interview, called Sen. Robert F. Kennedy his hero, but said he killed the presidential candidate more than 20 years ago because he felt betrayed by Kennedy's support for Israel.

"I was not doing it out of personal malice towards the man but out of concern for other people," said Sirhan, who likened Kennedy's assassination to a Jew killing Adolf Hitler. "Robert Kennedy represented a threat to Arabs by his support of the Arabs' enemies."

Sirhan, 44, is serving a life sentence in state prison at Soledad, Calif., and comes up for parole in May.

The hourlong interview at the prison with David Frost for the syndicated program Inside Edition was shown to reporters Sunday, and is to be broadcast in segments tonight, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Sirhan apologized repeatedly for killing Kennedy, then the front-runner for the Democratic presidential nomination. "He was my hero," Sirhan said. "He was my champion. He was the protector and the defender of the downtrodden and the disadvantaged. I can't say anything except that I am totally sorry and feel nothing but remorse for having caused that tragic death."

But when Kennedy gave a speech favoring the provision of U.S. fighter jets to Israel, "that seemed as though it were a betrayal," said Sirhan, a Jordanian immigrant. He said Kennedy exercised a "double standard" by favoring peace in Vietnam and the sale of arms to Israel at the same time.

Sirhan said murder is not an accepted way to settle political differences. But he added: "Imagine if you were a German or a Jew in Hitler's Germany and if you had the opportunity to assassinate Hitler. I'm sure that you would have tried to do that."

Sirhan's death sentence was changed to life imprisonment when the state Supreme Court outlawed the death penalty in 1972, and he became eligible for parole in 1975. He has been turned down for release nine times.

Ayatollah renews call for death of Rushdie

By JEFF DONN
Associated Press Writer

Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini has spurned British author Salman Rushdie's apology for offending Moslems with his novel The Satanic Verses and declared it every Moslem's duty to "send him to hell."

Iran's fundamentalist patriarch's statement Sunday appeared to exclude the possibility that the dispute over the book many consider to blaspheme Islam can be settled through negotiation.

Khomeini's death decree Tuesday compelled the novelist to go in hiding under police guard in Britain — a $5.2 million bounty placed on his head by Iranian clerics — and has threatened to sour improving relations between Iran and some Western governments.

The death decree also named Rushdie's publishers, and copies of the novel have been removed from some bookstores' shelves in the United States and Japan. Fearing attacks, some Western publishers have decided not to print the book.

In Washington on Sunday, Secretary of State James A. Baker III called the death threat "intolerable" and an obstacle to Iran "rejoining the community of civilized nations."

In New York, Roman Catholic Cardinal John J. O'Connor implied that Catholics should shun the work because it offends Moslems.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency (IRNA) quoted Khomeini as saying: "Even if Salman Rushdie repents and becomes the most pious man of all time it is incumbent on every Moslem to employ everything he's got, his life and wealth, to send him to hell."

He said the "imperialist foreign mass media are falsely alleging that officials of the Islamic Republic said that if the author of The Satanic Verses repents, the execution order against him would be abolished. This is denied, 100 percent."

President Ali Khamenei of Iran, a political pragmatist, had sought to defuse the crisis over Khomeini's death decree by saying Friday that Rushdie's life might be spared if he apologized and repented.

Rushdie, who has not been seen in public since Thursday, issued an apology Saturday through an agent.

"I recognize that Moslems in many parts of the world are genuinely distressed by the publication of my novel. I profoundly regret the distress that publication has occasioned to sincere followers of Islam."

IRNA said at one point Saturday that the apology from the 41-year-old writer was probably sufficient to warrant a pardon, but it later retracted the NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP)— The furor in Iran over Salman Rushdie's The Satanic Verses probably stems more from the Machiavellian machinations between political rivals in the Tehran hierarchy than from religious outrage.

The Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's death sentence against the British author reflects an intensifying power struggle between so-called pragmatists who seek better relations with the West and fundamentalist hardliners.

Behind the bizarre declaration, diplomats and analysts see the hand of Moslem radicals led by the increasingly powerful interior minister, Ali Akbar Mohtashemi, and Intelligence Minister Mohammad Mohammadi Rey-Shahri.

Their aim is to undercut efforts by Parliament Speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani and his allies to shed Iran's image of a nation of Islamic fanatics who sponsor terrorism and end its self-imposed isolation by restoring relations with the rest of the world.

The Rushdie affair has severely jolted Iran's improving relations with Britain, a country the hardliners consider second only to the United States as an enemy of their decade-old Islamic revolution.

London suspended plans to boost its representation in Tehran, only recently restored after a diplomatic dispute. Other

AP News Analysis

Western countries angrily condemned Khomeini for giving Moslem fanatics licence to kill a foreign national.

The timing of Khomeini's angry outburst last week over The Satanic Verses, first published in Britain in September, seems odd.

The novel has inflamed Moslems around the world who think it blasphemes Islam and has triggered Moslem protests in Saudi Arabia, India and Pakistan. Yet it barely raised a ripple of outrage in Iran, which considers itself the beacon of fundamentalism among the world's estimated 800 million Moslems.

Some analysts see Khomeini's dramatic call for Rushdie's head as a bid to reassert himself as the preeminent leader in the Islamic world following his humiliating acceptance in July of a U.N.-sponsored truce in the war with Iraq.

The 88-year-old revolutionary patriarch has admitted publicly that his agreement — at Rafsanjani's urging — to end the grueling Iran-Iraq conflict was "more deadly than drinking poison."

Khomeini had turned the war into an Islamic crusade against Iraqi President Saddam Hussein, one prong in his drive to export his Islamic revolution through subversion and covert action.

The cease-fire, after a string of Iranian defeats on the battlefield, badly undermined the credibility of that campaign and marked a

EEC nations recall envoys from Tehran

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP)— The 12 EEC nations agreed today to recall their ambassadors from Iran to protest Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's order that author Salman Rushdie be killed for writing a novel considered blasphemous by many Moslems.

The decision by the European Economic Community foreign ministers came a day after the Iranian leader said Rushdie "could not be forgiven even if he repents" for having written The Satanic Verses.

West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher said EEC nations also will hold off on sending any high-level delegations to Iran and limit the freedom of movement of Iranian diplomats in Europe to within 40 miles of where they are stationed.

Rushdie, born in India to a Moslem family, is a British citizen and lives in London.

Genscher called the EEC action a sign of solidarity with Britain.

"But it is also a signal to assure the preservation of civilization and human values, the preservation of freedom of speech and expression," he told reporters.

Moslems object to passages in Rushdie's novel such as a scene where prostitutes adopt the names of the wives of the prophet Mohammed.

Rushdie, 41, has not been seen in public since Tuesday, when Khomeini ordered that he and the publishers of The Satanic Verses be put to death. A bounty of $5.2 million later was put on Rushdie's head by other Iranian religious leaders.

The novelist has apologized for the controversy his book has stirred, Khomeini has declined to withdraw the death "sentence."

statement as only the opinion of one of its writers. Khomeini called on non-Muslims to help carry out the death sentence against Rushdie: "If a non-Muslim becomes aware of his whereabouts and has the ability to execute him quicker than a Moslem, it is incumbent on Moslems to pay a reward or a fee in return for this action." Neither Khomeini's statement nor IRNA in any of its reports Sunday referred to Khomeini's suggestion of a reprieve, reflecting a widening rift in the Iranian hierarchy over the affair and their country's relations with the West. Pragmatists in Iran have been pursuing closer ties with the West and help in rebuilding an economy wracked by its war with Iraq. Baker's comments on the NBC-TV program

Meet the Press Sunday indicated that events were favoring Iranian hardliners who oppose re-establishing diplomatic ties with Washington. "The United States continues to oppose terrorism in all of its forms, in particular state-sponsored terrorism," he said. A British diplomatic source in London said Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe would try today at a meeting of the 12-nation European Economic Community in Brussels, Belgium, to convince colleagues to issue a joint statement condemning Iran's actions.

The threat against Rushdie, who was born to a Moslem family in India, has chilled Anglo-Iranian relations, which were restored in November after a 17-month break. Britain has now ceased to send diplomats to build up its staff in Tehran.

Threat

major setback for hardliners like Mohtashemi. The explanation for Khomeini's death decree that diplomats and analysts consider most likely is that it is an attempt to discredit Rafsanjani, whose faction has been gaining the upper hand in the power struggle in Tehran. Rafsanjani, while criticizing Rushdie's book, did not publicly endorse the death sentence. His ally, President Ali Khamenei, sought to defuse the tension by saying that if Rushdie publicly apologized, the death sentence might be dropped. Rafsanjani, named acting commander-in-chief of Iran's armed forces by Khomeini last June, holds several key political positions and is considered the most powerful figure in Tehran after the aging Khomeini. Convinced that Iran's isolation cost it dearly in the war with Iraq and that it cannot afford to be at odds with the rest of the world while it rebuilds, he has stressed that Tehran no longer seeks to export its revolution by militant means.

To the radicals, that is anathema and violates the principles of the revolution. The clamor over Rushdie's book has the hallmarks of earlier efforts by Rafsanjani's rivals to thwart his policies.

In November 1986, hardliners leaked word of Rafsanjani's clandestine dealings with the United States to trade hostages held by pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem extremists in Lebanon for badly needed military hardware. Rafsanjani wriggled out of that by admitting it in parliament, plunging the Reagan administration into a major crisis and claiming it as a political victory over "the Great Satan."

Arab sources with some knowledge of later dealings by Iranian moderates to free Western hostages in Lebanon have said that hardliners like Mohtashemi, who has long had close links with the kidnapers, blocked efforts by the pragmatists to free the captives and gain friends in the West.

Rodeo returns to Astrodome

HOUSTON (AP) — The city's multimillion-dollar Astrodome party has begun, and officials are banking that the jingle of spurs and the stomping of hooves draws a stampede of money-spending spectators for the Houston Livestock Show and Rodeo. "New Orleans has its Mardi Gras, San Antonio has its Battle of Flowers. Houston has the Houston Livestock Show and Rodeo, which is the largest social and charitable event in Houston each year," said Hal Hillman, show president.

Hillman and other officials hope that this year's event will surpass the $175 million economic boost from last year's show, a figure more than 2½ times higher than the much-lamented Democratic National Convention would have generated.

The massive Houston event, which began with the arrival of thousands of trail riders and a downtown parade Saturday, also generates more than $1 million in scholarships for Texas agriculture students and provides a showplace for top breeders.

And it draws thousands of tourists anxious to see first-class rodeo action and a host of country music stars including Crystal Gayle, Kenny Rogers and George Strait.

Its profits are spread throughout the state, ranging from endowments to colleges and universities to contributions toward research and other agricultural programs, as well as junior livestock shows and scholarships and graduate assistantships.

The 57-year-old show is "the largest donor of agricultural scholarships in the world," said Leroy Shafer, the show's assistant general manager.

Four-year, $8,000 scholarships are awarded each year to 50 Texas FFA and 50 Texas 4-H members who want to major in agriculture or life sciences at a Texas college or university. Another 24 scholarships are awarded with no restriction on academic majors.

The show, with revenues last year of about $12.8 million and expenses of $8.7 million, made contributions of more than $3.3 mil-

Hillman says the awards are "a goodwill gesture to the community which supports our show."

Support for the annual show is widespread, with about 18,000 show members and 6,000 committee volunteers, the majority of whom are in the 60 counties comprising the show's "Go Texan" promotional area, Shafer said.

"Bank presidents and CEOs of major corporations sit right beside pipe fitters, school teachers and homemakers," he said.

In return, the rodeo and livestock show provide a significant economic boost each year to an area still struggling through a downturn in the oil industry.

Dallas students protect drugs with guns

DALLAS (AP) — More weapons are turning up in Dallas schools, and the head of security said that's because guns and drugs go together.

Students are arming themselves to protect their illegal drugs, he said.

Students apparently have little problem finding weapons at home or buying them from pawn shops, said Eldridge Fisher, director of security for the Dallas Independent School District.

"We'd like to have gun-free schools, but first we have to have drug-free schools," Fisher said.

From September through January, officials confiscated at least 63 guns and 16 other weapons from DISD students, The Dallas Morning News reported. There were 74 weapons confiscated during a similar period a year earlier.

Mary Rutledge, president of the Dallas school board, said the school board must give serious consideration to a proposal that would equip the district's teachers with beeper-like devices for their own protection.

With such devices, teachers would be able to signal the principal's office for help upon encountering armed students or intruders.

Mrs. Rutledge said school board members have spent a great deal of time discussing the growing security problem over the past three years.

Efforts are being made in Dallas to have neighborhood crime watch groups help secure school buildings and parking lots. Additionally, each school campus is required to have a security plan.

One southeast Dallas teacher told the newspaper that twice in the last two years he has feared students might take his life.

On one occasion, a 12-year-old showed him a hand grenade upon being asked to produce a hall pass. In the other incident, a teenage student pointed a pistol at him as he called roll in class.

Officials later determined the grenade was not live and the gun was a toy, but the teacher said that should not diminish the seriousness of the two incidents.

"The whole class saw (the gun) and they were all nervous about it," the teacher said. "I was standing there shaking, holding a chair and wondering if I was going to have to hit him with it."

Texas congressman wants to streamline meat inspections

By JENNIFER DIXON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Charlie Stenholm says he's been the target of a "vendetta" by some opponents who say his drive to streamline federal inspections at thousands of meat-processing plants will undermine consumer safety and confidence.

But Stenholm, a West Texas farmer, says he's not backing away from the simmering controversy involving labor groups, consumer advocates, meat industry officials and the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

At issue are proposed USDA regulations implementing a law Stenholm helped push through Congress two years ago that would permit less than daily inspections in processing plants with good compliance records.

The rules would cut the meat inspection force in half, eliminating about 1,000 inspectors at a savings of $27 million over several years, a USDA official said.

Consumer groups say the proposal would give company employees the responsibility for policing potential health violations. The meat industry has not proven itself worthy of that kind of trust, he said.

Consumer advocates said the new rules come at a time when the incidence and impact of food-borne illnesses are increasing.

They point to the doubling of salmonellosis cases in the last 16 years to about 40,000 annually, with more than half of the outbreaks reported to the Centers for Disease Control traced to meat and poultry.

Some experts say there could be as many as 2 million cases of illness caused by the salmonella bacteria a year, contributing to 2,000 deaths, the consumer advocates said.

The American Meat Institute, while it agrees with the concept of the law, says the USDA's proposed rules should be withdrawn because they are "overly complex, cumbersome and burdensome to the regulated industry."

Said Manly Molpus, president of the AMI, the largest trade group for meat processors and packers: "This law will make the most significant change in meat inspection since the turn of the century. Rather than moving too quickly, we must develop a program that will benefit the public, the industry and the government."

A coalition of consumer groups appealed to President Bush to pull the rules, saying no amount of tinkering would increase food safety for consumers. Enclosed in the letter was a copy of The Jungle, Upton Sinclair's 1906 classic about horrendous meat packing conditions that became the genesis for government's role in assuring the safety of food products.

But Stenholm contends today's health threats — bacteria such as salmonella, residues from antibiotics used in excess, and pesticides — can be detected through the traditional inspection methods of sight and touch at the nation's 6,000-plus meat processing plants.

Stenholm, a Democrat and chairman of the House Livestock, Dairy and Poultry subcommittee, contends the answer is new diagnostic technology that would detect those threats in meat.

Stenholm hopes to pass legislation this year that would establish a research agenda to improve and enhance and meat processing techniques by awarding research grants for a variety of studies. The goal is to help USDA develop a more scientifically based inspection system.

An aide said Stenholm decided to pursue the issue as a result of two National Academy of Sciences reports in which scientists said "this is the way you need to go... that the traditional form of inspection is outmoded and tremendously antiquated. It's nothing less than what the scientific minds want us to do."

Results of a pilot project at a Colorado plant using the new inspection system indicate there is "no question it's working," Stenholm said.

Stenholm's subcommittee, however, now plans hearings this spring to consider the comments received on USDA's proposed regulations and the agency's response to those comments, the aide said.

"The subcommittee will decide if there is a need to modify the law or whether the proposed rules are adequate," the aide said.

The decision to hold the hearings comes after opponents of the streamlined inspections have sought support in the press, Stenholm said.

"I do think there has been a vendetta by certain groups, moving in a different direction, to gain media support," Stenholm said. Critical articles and television reports on the inspection process have appeared across the country, some of them mentioning Stenholm and his role.

Ellen Haas, executive director of Public Voice for Food & Health Policy, one of the consumer groups opposed to the rules, said Stenholm streamlined the system without building in health protections, the first such reversal in meat inspection regulation in years.

"He was fair and open in the discussions, but the legislation speaks for itself," Haas said.

The AMI wants an "inspection program that people have confidence in," said spokesman Rich Parker. It is asking the USDA's Food Safety and Inspection Service to add safeguards to the rules and "buttress" its standards.

Lobbyists spend nearly $250,000 on entertaining legislators

By SCOTT ROTHSCHILD
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — For January — a month when the Legislature was in session for three weeks — lobbyists reported spending about $244,940 on entertaining legislators and other state officials, according to records filed with the secretary of state's office.

If divided equally among the 181 members of the state House and Senate, that comes out to about $1,353 spent on each legislator for entertainment.

The reports come at a time when there is a push among some legislators for a constitutional amendment to raise their pay from $7,200 annually to about $23,000.

Entertainment expenses include funds spent on food, beverages, hospitality rooms, sporting events, theatrical and music events, transportation and lodging.

In these reports, called "activity reports," lobbyists must say how much they spent on entertainment, in addition to gifts, awards and loans, "to communicate directly with a member of the legislative or executive branch to influence legislation or administrative action."

The amount of money spent and the issues of interest to lobbyists representing their clients provides a view of the major political battles occurring in the Legislature.

Some of the major issues lobbyists are focusing on include proposed changes to the workers' compensation system, the regulation of utilities and legislation pertaining to the chemical industry.

Workers' compensation has become a major battleground, with lobbyists for insurance, doctors, trial lawyers, business, and labor jockeying for position over a proposed overhaul of the system to compensate workers injured on the job.

Lobbyists for tobacco and alcoholic beverage companies are making themselves known, as some lawmakers have considered raising so-called sin taxes to help cover a revenue shortfall in the budget.

And lobbyists for the old standbys — oil and gas, banks, trucking, railroads — are spending thousands of dollars to preserve, protect and expand their turf.

There are about 750 lobbyists registered with the Secretary of State, or more than four for each member of the state House and Senate. For the month of January, about 280 lobbyists reported spending money, ranging from $5 to more than $12,000.

The body of lobbyists, who often mill around outside the House and Senate chambers to confer with legislators, is often referred to as Texas' "Third House."

Under state law, lobbyists must file monthly expense reports when the Legislature is in session.

The lobbyists also are required to note what legislative or administrative matters they are trying to influence.

The top spending individual lobbyist in January was Neal T. "Buddy" Jones who spent $12,366 representing a clientele of business giants, including Enserch Inc., Ebasco Engineering and Development, Bass Brothers Enterprises Inc., Texas Air Corp., Continental Airlines, Texas Bankers Association, Anhuesser-Busch Cos., Perot Systems, and Farmers Insurance Group, among others.

Kenneth Tooley, a lobbyist for the Texas Association of Life Underwriters, spent $11,690, and Bill Messer, whose clients include among others IBM, trucking companies, the Texas Chemical Council, and the Texas Bankers Association, spent $8,448.

But lobbyists are not required to submit an itemized list on what they spend funds on, or what specific legislation they are trying to affect.

Many lobbyists simply report they are interested in matters affecting their clients, without naming specific proposals, although some attach long lists of House and Senate bill numbers they are monitoring.

B. J. Durham, a lobbyist for Central Power and Light Co., reported spending $2,907 on entertainment in January, and in the space reserved for listing what matters he spoke with officials about, is typed "None."

Some of the expenditures were for one-time meetings with legislators, such as a $10,000 legislative reception paid for by the Texas Society of Certified Public Accountants.

In one of the most specific entertainment expenditure reports, Anne Crews, representing Mary Kay Cosmetics, reported spending $45.29 for lunch with Sen. Cyndi Taylor Krier, R-San Antonio, her husband and two other business associates. What did they talk about? "Re: 71st Legislature legislation."

Libraries finding reading machine expensive to use

AUSTIN (AP) — It is so expensive to maintain machines that can read books to the visually impaired that many libraries have been discouraged from using them, even though a state program provides them at no cost, The Dallas Morning News reported.

The state has spent $1.9 million to purchase 70 Kurzweil Reading Machines and about 20 are in Dallas-Fort Worth libraries, officials said. The machines have been available for about 10 years, officials said.

However, officials at some smaller institutions said their budgets simply cannot handle the cost of keeping their Kurzweils in top working order, the newspaper reported Sunday.

An optical scanner in the machine converts the printed words into synthesized speech. The machine's scanner works with most books.

Although the state absorbs the $25,000 cost per machine, each library must set aside several thousand dollars each year to pay for maintenance.

"We're lucky it's just been working really well," said Greg Thomas, assistant director of library services at the Amarillo Public Library, of a reading machine there.

"We're just barely hanging in there and that maintenance is in the thousands of dollars," Thomas told the Morning News. "It's possible we couldn't get it repaired."

Sue Currey, 40, who lost her sight 13 years ago because of complications from diabetes, was taught to use the machines at Kurzweil Computer Products in Cambridge, Mass.

"It was like somebody had reopened a door to me that I thought had been closed to me for the rest of my life," she told the newspaper. "I just grinned."

Currey and others say the money for maintenance would be well spent if more people would use the machines.

"They're not being used and therefore the libraries aren't wanting to pay the maintenance," said Currey, who thinks that many visually impaired people are unaware that the machines are available for use at many public libraries and colleges.

"What we need to be doing now in this program is to educate the blind population about what is going on," she said.

Cynthia Dickinson, a library associate at the Dallas Public Library, said she knows of only one patron who currently is using the library's 5-year-old Kurzweil consistently. She agreed that a low user rate and costly maintenance cause some libraries to shy away from the machines.

Currey, who works for the Texas State Library supervising the installation of the reading machines in libraries throughout the state, suggested the libraries' problems could be remedied through appropriations from the Legislature or some sort of arrangement through a cost-share maintenance plan.

Policeman charged with rape, kidnapping

HOUSTON (AP) — A Houston police officer has been accused of robbing a man and locking him in the trunk of his car, then kidnapping the man's girlfriend and sexually assaulting her.

Officer Harold Ingram Burkett, 27, was arrested at work early Saturday and charged with aggravated robbery, kidnapping and aggravated sexual assault, police spokesman Dan Turner said.

The woman reportedly memorized the license plate number of the car in which she was abducted after midnight Feb. 12, and it was that of a police department vehicle, the Houston Chronicle quoted unidentified police sources as saying.

Burkett, who was working a special assignment in plain clothes when the attack allegedly occurred, was released late Saturday on $40,000 bond and has been relieved of duty with pay, Turner said.

The woman said after she and her boyfriend were stopped, her boyfriend was forced into the trunk of his car, and she was then driven to an unknown location and sexually assaulted. She said she called police immediately after she was released on a Houston street.

Department spokesmen released few details of the allegations against Burkett, who lives in the Houston suburb of Tomball.

However, police sources told the Houston Chronicle that the assailant wore a mask during the attack and confronted the couple with a gun.

After the license tag number provided by the woman was traced to a department vehicle, the Internal Affairs division conducted a weeklong investigation, the sources said. Evidence was uncovered that departmental automobile logs had been altered, the sources said.

Turner said only that Internal Affairs investigators received information that led to an "intensive investigation," resulting in Burkett's arrest.

He described the attack as an isolated incident and said Houston residents should not be fearful of the city's police officers.

Turner said he did not have access to information on Burkett's service record with the department because the police personnel office is closed on weekends.

Dallas becoming center for organ transplants

DALLAS (AP) — At the start of the decade, most transplant efforts were concentrated in a few major medical institutions in cities such as Pittsburgh and Houston, medical authorities say.

Suddenly, however, Dallas appears ready to join the exclusive club as a major regional organ transplant center with a strong national reputation for giving new life to people.

Across the nation this year, more than 12,000 people will have transplant operations to replace failing hearts, livers, kidneys and other organs, according to the Dallas Times Herald.

"Dallas is gaining ground and becoming nationally known," says Eric Sutton, president of the Virginia-based American Council on Transplantation.

"Dallas is in contention and has a good reputation. There's no doubt about the competence of expertise there — you can't beat the kinds of individuals involved in transplantation there. What Dallas is going to have to do is make sure it wants to stay a center of excellence."

Dallas is developing a diversified organ transplant industry that involves several medical institutions and covers virtually every major transplantable organ.

"In some areas, Dallas is well recognized nationally in terms of transplants," says Dr. W. Steves Ring, director of the University of Texas Southwestern Heart Transplant Program. "The liver program at Children's (Medical Center) is among the top, the adult liver program at Baylor is one of the top and the Southwest Organ Bank is one of the top in the country."

Surpassed only by the University of Pittsburgh, Children's has the second largest pediatric liver and pediatric kidney transplant programs in the country, according to the Times Herald. Baylor University Medical Center ranks behind only Pittsburgh in adult liver transplants.

Methodist Medical Center has the country's sixth largest kidney transplant program.

Methodist and Baylor last year launched the Transplant Alliance of the Southwest, a first-of-its-kind cooperative organ transplant program melding the staff, facilities and training of the two hospitals.

Last year, the establishment of The University of Texas Southwestern Heart Transplant Program has Dallas striving to be recognized for heart transplants, too.

Copies of H.B. 1 available

A copy of H.B. 1, the proposed workman's compensation reform bill, is available through Rep. Warren Chisum's office, Chisum, a co-sponsor of the bill, announced.

"Employers in Texas pay the highest premiums in the United States for workman's comp, but employees receive the lowest payments," Chisum said. "This bill will address those problems and totally reform compensation in the state."

Rep. Chisum said he is making a copy of the bill available to his constituents because of the importance of the bill.

"The bill is 190 pages long," Chisum said. "I'll be happy to be sent that to anyone who is interested, or we can send them a two-page summary."

Anyone wishing to obtain a copy of the full bill or the summary can call Rep. Chisum's office in Pampa at 665-3653 or in Austin at (512) 462-0736.

Local medical community members say Dallas is building its reputation on success, not volume.

Nationally, the one-year survival rate for kidney transplant patients is about 85 percent; for heart transplant patients, about 82 percent; for liver transplant patients, about 70 percent.

Although barely 5 years old, the Children's pediatric liver program has a 76 percent success rate, one of the highest in the country, hospital officials say. Methodist Medical Center's kidney transplant program, just 8

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Missile crisis left us lingering legacy

America was to blame for the Cuban Missile Crisis of October 1962. That's what several Americans involved in the affair said this month in Moscow, where Cuban, Soviet and U.S. participants met for a "class reunion." Robert S. McNamara, secretary of defense under President Kennedy in 1962, said, "I could understand, it is perfectly clear now, that Cuban leader and Soviet leaders at that time believed the U.S. was intending to invade Cuba ... We're all to blame for the missile crisis."

But this simply was not the case. The Soviets caused the crisis by putting the missiles in Cuba. And just a year before the crisis, in 1961, the United States had sabotaged its own effort to liberate Cuba, leading to the Bay of Pigs fiasco.

The Moscow "reunion" also brought something new to light. According to Sergei Krushchev, son of Nikita Krushchev, Soviet boss in 1962, at the time Fidel Castro called for a nuclear attack on the United States. He apparently feared another U.S. invasion. But Nikita Krushchev rejected Castro's idea. According to Sergei, his father never intended to mount the nuclear warheads on the missiles, let alone fire them at the United States.

Common sense shows why. In 1962 the United States held a 10-1 advantage over the Soviets in nuclear arms. A nuclear attack on the United States would have led to instant retaliation against the Soviet Union, incinerating most of the country's people. Krushchev wasn't about to sacrifice his empire, and his dreams of building a socialist paradise, for Cuba.

We should remember that McNamara, back in October 1962, counseled Kennedy not to worry at all about the missiles. Others argued for an air strike to destroy the missiles on the ground. Kennedy chose a middle path, a blockade against Soviet ships traveling to Cuba, and an insistence that Krushchev remove the missiles. In return, Kennedy promised not to invade Cuba, and to pull U.S. missiles from Turkey.

What should have been done? It's hard to second-guess decisions that, at the time, avoided a widening conflict. But we can see some things. McNamara was dead wrong about leaving the Soviet missiles in Cuba. They would have turned the island into a Soviet outpost even stronger than it became, spreading terror throughout our hemisphere. Letting Krushchev get away with such a provocation would have encouraged him to even more adventurism.

Kennedy could have gotten away with destroying the missiles. They clearly violated the Monroe Doctrine. But this might have led to a crisis in Europe, perhaps including a Soviet invasion of West Berlin. On the other hand, by partially backing down over the missiles, Kennedy continued his pattern of weakness toward Soviet expansionism, encouraging the Soviets to expand the war in Southeast Asia. In that area McNamara's advice was heeded. The result: a decade of war, 50,000 Americans dead, Communist genocide and a sub-continent in slavery. Some legacy.

Even sincerity has its limits

WASHINGTON — It has been a long time since a story came along in the news as ugly as the story of John Short and John Broderick, the two vultures who swooped down upon the helpless body of Nancy Klein. But they are zealots, and zealotry is always ugly. Nothing more could have been expected of them.

The story began nine years ago when Nancy Zusselman married Martin Klein. She was 23, he 25. A photograph of her, taken at the time of their wedding, depicts an attractive, vivacious young woman with a smile as warm as sunshine.

The upwardly bound couple lived on Long Island. Three years ago they had their first child, a daughter. This past October she became pregnant again. They looked forward happily to the summer.

On Dec. 13 the happiness abruptly vanished. Gravely injured in an automobile accident, Nancy was unconscious when she arrived at North Shore University Hospital in Manhasset. She remains in a coma — in what one doctor describes as "a vegetative state." Her prospects of eventual recovery are uncertain, but her attending physician last month advised her husband that "the chances of her survival will be diminished unless the pregnancy is terminated immediately."

Pursuant to New York law, Martin Klein went to the clerk's office for the state Supreme Court for Nassau County. This was on Jan. 26. He filed a petition to be named his wife's guardian, a necessary procedure before he could ask that an abortion be performed.

At this point John Short of Farmingdale, N.Y., a retired accountant, gratuitously intervened. A day or so later he was joined by John Broderick, a Syosset attorney.

James J. Kilpatrick

The two are identified in the press as "anti-abortion activists," but the description is incomplete. They are meddlers, interlopers, busybodies. They thrust themselves brutally into the most private concerns of the Klein family.

To shorten a long and almost incredible story, Short asked the court to name him as Nancy's guardian, and Broderick asked for appointment as guardian to the fetus. Kept in mind that the two intervenors were utterly unknown to either of the Kleins. After two weeks of desperate litigation, the Appellate Division would describe Short and Broderick as "these absolute strangers."

Can their actions be matched anywhere for arrogance? For effrontery? For gall? Nancy Klein's pregnancy and Martin Klein's painful decision were none of their business. They simply made it their business, and by delaying the abortion for two weeks they added to the risks to Nancy's life.

Their contemptible tactics didn't work. On Feb. 9, the Appellate Division unanimously ruled against Short and Broderick. The state Court of Appeals the next day refused to hear an appeal. A few hours later, U.S. Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall turned down a further request for a stay.

On Sunday, Feb. 12, the abortion at last was successfully performed. Perhaps the operation will save Nancy's life. Perhaps not. But if the abortion contributes to her chances, surely Martin Klein's decision must be defended.

It is the shameful conduct of the two "activists" that demands the strongest possible condemnation. Those who oppose abortion on principle surely have every right to press their point of view. They have done so in legislative chambers across the land.

They have won the support of both Ronald Reagan and George Bush, who have asked for constitutional amendments to make all but a few abortions unlawful. They are urging the U.S. Supreme Court to overrule Roe v. Wade, the famous permissive decision of 1973. All that is well and good.

But zealotry of the kind exhibited by Short and Broderick has no place in American life. The anti-abortionists who block access to hospitals are violating the rights of law-abiding people. Awesomely complex issues of law, theology and morality are tangled in the abortion question. These cannot be resolved when "these absolute strangers" intrude upon the private lives of unoffending men and women.

Does the Klein affair help the anti-abortion cause? I cannot believe that it does. Fair-minded observers everywhere are bound to be repelled by the fanaticism the two men displayed.

Granted that Short and Broderick sincerely believed in their cause. Their dedication to the unborn child cannot be doubted. But sincerity and dedication have their limits, and in the sad story of Nancy and Martin Klein those limits were ruthlessly trampled.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Monday, Feb. 20, the 51st day of 1989. There are 314 days left in the year. This is federal holiday in observance of George Washington's birthday.

Today's highlight in history: On Feb. 20, 1962, astronaut John Glenn became the first American to orbit the Earth after blasting off aboard the Friendship 7 Mercury capsule.

On this date: In 1792, President George Washington signed an act creating the U.S. Post Office.

In 1809, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that the power of the federal government is greater than that of any individual state.

In 1839, Congress prohibited dueling in the District of Columbia.

In 1895, American abolitionist Frederick Douglass died in Washington.

In 1933, the House of Representatives completed congressional action on an amendment to repeal Prohibition.

In 1938, Anthony Eden resigned as British foreign secretary in a dispute with Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain.

More than just prettier picture

What's next: high definition television — HDTV.

Presently the picture on your TV screen is created by a mass of tiny lines.

High definition television would double the number of those lines.

So what?

Your TV picture would be infinitely clearer and more precise. The comparison is as though you put a fine-grain photograph alongside a coarse-grain newspaper picture; that much difference.

But HDTV is something more than just a pretty picture.

Our hospitals need this new technology for clearer, bolder reproduction of surgical procedures and tissue examination.

Industrial designers and military command and control systems require the best possible reproduction. The stakes are high.

If we get left behind in this HDTV race, our American semiconductor industry also gets left behind — unable to compete in the world marketplace.

And an adequate supply of semiconductors would be unavailable to our military should the foreign supply ever be interrupted.

Other nations are leaving us behind.

British televiewers are already enjoying 625-line clarity on their TV sets. Your present TV set in the United States has a lesser "visibility" of only some 420 lines.

The Japanese have invested $700 million in HDTV which will transmit 1,125 lines.

The Japanese system would NOT be adaptable to your present TV set; you'd have to buy a new one.

Ideally, we may be able to develop a transmitter of 1,025 to 1,125 lines that would be adaptable to your present set.

Some American companies got their heads together recently — IBM and Apple, Hewlett-Packard and Zenith and Motorola — and pooled $100,000 to "study the subject."

Our Pentagon, more anxious and less patient, has earmarked $30 million for research.

A European consortium expects to have something "at least as good as what Japan has" within three years.

Meanwhile, it appears that the United States may be left at the starting gate.

Rep. Mel Levine (D-Calif.) has formed a congressional task force on HDTV. He is convinced that government and industry must share the billion-dollar cost of getting HDTV off the ground in the United States.

He calls it the "greatest challenge this country has faced since Sputnik."

Stated from another perspective: Somewhere in our country — in a corporate lab, a school lab or a backyard garage — some fertile intellect may be prepared to shortcut our research and endow our country with the most dramatic new TV technology since color.

Reading between the lines in Marxism

By WILLIAM A. RUSHER

Ever since the 1954 censure of Joe McCarthy, it has been substantially impossible in this country to argue that there is such a thing as a "secret communist": a dedicated supporter of the communist cause who conceals his true allegiance but quietly promotes communist ends nevertheless. To suspect that such people exist is regarded as clinical evidence of paranoia, to be laughed at or, if it proves troublesome, denounced savagely.

So I have always been grateful for the occasional communist who, for whatever reason of his own, decides to come out of the closet. A few years ago, for example, John Womack, chairman of the history department at Harvard, casually mentioned that he is a communist in the course of a short autobiographical contribution to the 25th reunion volume published by his own Harvard class. There was nothing anybody could do about this, though, since, of course, Womack enjoys academic tenure; and the disclosure generated minimum excitement anyway, suggesting that Womack hadn't really told the world anything it didn't already suspect about the situation at Harvard.

But A. Kent MacDougall made a considerably bigger splash recently when he too strode out of the closet and acknowledged his own lifetime allegiance to "Marxism." (He avoided the word "communism," but it is impossible to believe he would be very outraged by its application to him — he has written, pseudonymously, for The Worker.) For MacDougall, you see, is a lifelong professional journalist who spent 10 years with The Wall Street Journal and 10 more with the Los Angeles Times before accepting a professorship of journalism at Berkeley — from which vantage-point, like Professor Womack, he can safely "fess up."

We are indebted to MacDougall for two confessional articles he wrote in the November and December 1988 issues of an obscure Marxist publication called Monthly Review. In them, MacDougall brags with considerable justification about how he planted subtly Marxist analyses of all sorts of "capitalist" misdeeds in these two pillars of the bourgeois establishment.

At the Journal, for example, he states that the paper's staunchly conservative editorial page "helped me gain cooperation and candor from corporate executives who assumed — wrongly in most cases — that Journal reporters were as soft on big business as the paper's editorial writers.... I learned how to disarm sources and extract damaging admissions from them.... I sought out mainstream authorities to confer recognition and respectability on radical views I sought to popularize."

Moving on to the Los Angeles Times, MacDougall says he took advantage of the desire of young Otis Chandler, who had inherited the paper, to rid it of its stuffy, conservative image. "Of the first down stories I wrote for the Los Angeles Times," he asserts, "one profiled the leftist magazine Mother Jones and two others profiled Marxist economists Paul Sweezy of Monthly Review and John Gurley of Stanford University." MacDougall also got quite a kick out of "exposing some of capitalism's wasteful, anti-competitive aspects in the pages of a capitalist enterprise."

Now that MacDougall has helpfully (albeit belatedly) identified himself, may we assume that there are no more concealed "Marxists" in the higher reaches of American journalism, serving the cause as diligently as MacDougall now boasts he did? That, surely, would be rash. MacDougall, just for one thing, discreetly doesn't name anyone who helped him on his upward path, although presumably he wasn't the only "Marxist" thus planted where he could be useful.

Why, do you suppose, did MacDougall choose this particular time to "tell all"? Vanity, no doubt, played a part; and perhaps also a need to release the tensions of two decades of deception. But he may also sense that it simply no longer matters very much. His Marxist god has failed for good, and they probably know it even at Berkeley.

Former Klan leader wins state rep seat

By LINDA ASHTON
Associated Press Writer

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Former Klan leader David Duke, who won election as a state representative even though President Bush and former President Reagan endorsed his rival, denounces a threat to banish him from the GOP as "un-American."

Duke says blacks and Jews have nothing to fear from him. And he's urging the Louisiana Legislature and the Republican Party to accept that he has changed since his days as grand wizard of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan in the 1970s.

"I repudiate any racial or religious intolerance. Any group — racial or religious — has nothing to fear from David Duke," Duke told a news conference Sunday following his narrow victory over homebuilder John Treen on Saturday.

Still, Duke did not mince words on where he stands on civil rights.

"I'm for getting the government out of our personal lives. I'm not for any law for segregation or integration," he said. "The right not to associate is just as precious as the right to associate."

Duke, 38, edged the 63-year-old Treen for the House seat from the nearly all-white district in Metairie, a New Orleans suburb. Duke got 8,459 votes, or 50.7 percent, and Treen 8,232, or 49.3 percent.

Duke registered as a Republican two days before qualifying for the race. After his stunning success in beating six other candidates in the Jan. 21 primary, the national party sent three advisers to help his opponent and persuaded Bush and Reagan to endorse Treen.

U.S. senators, the governor and other community leaders of both parties warned that a Duke victory would ruin the state's reputation and harm already tenuous race relations.

Jewish organizations decried his candidacy, and the archbishop of New Orleans warned voters to choose cautiously.

Shortly after Duke was declared the winner Saturday night, National Republican Chairman Lee Atwater denounced the outcome and vowed to have him censured and barred from using the GOP name, an unprecedented step.

"David Duke is not a Republican," Atwater said in a statement. "He's a pretender, a charlatan and a political opportunist who is looking for any organization he can find to try to legitimize his views of racial and religious bigotry and intolerance."

Duke responded, "Is he going to censure me for my past? How many Republicans, how many Democrats have done controversial things in the past? The actions of Mr. Atwater are really un-American."

Duke's election also was condemned by civil rights leader Jesse Jackson. He called it a symptom of a national problem of racism that "the entire nation has to deal with."

Several state lawmakers said they expect an attempt in the Legislature to refuse to seat Duke by challenging his residency, but he dismissed allegations that he hadn't resided in the district for the required one year as "frivolous."

It would be the first time the House has ever taken such action. The Legislature convenes for a special tax session Wednesday.

"The political process must remain inviolate," Duke said. "The men and women of good will in the Legislature will not tolerate any challenge of this nature."

"It all depends on what the majority of the House wants to do," said House Speaker Jim Dimos of Monroe. "Unless someone makes a motion to disqualify him, then he will be sworn in. I know the people in his district elected him by a small margin, but he still was elected and has to be treated as a member."

Duke waves to supporters after his election victory Saturday night.

Jewish learning academy to be opened in Moscow

NEW YORK (AP) — The first school of Jewish studies in the Soviet Union since the time of Stalin will open officially in Moscow this Wednesday, says a professor who plans to lecture there.

The opening of the yeshiva, which will train rabbis and scholars, represents a historic event, said David Berger, a history professor at Brooklyn College here. It marks the first time in 60 years that the Soviet government has allowed the study of Jewish law.

Berger said anyone who might have suggested an academy of Jewish studies in the Soviet Union five years ago "would have been locked up."

He said the yeshiva will be independent of the government.

"They are not controlling the faculty at all," the professor said. "All of us are completely independent. They are not, as far as I know, controlling the student body either."

The Judaic Studies Center, which will occupy an apartment complex owned by the Soviet Academy of Sciences, is a joint project of the academy and Rabbi Adin Steinsaltz, a noted Israeli scholar.

The Soviet government will provide stipends for the students. Financial support will also come from the Aleph Society, a group of philanthropists that supports Steinsaltz in his other work, Berger said.

Between 75 and 80 students will study at the center. The course of instruction will include the Bible, Jewish law and Jewish history. The first semester will last seven weeks; future semesters will last four months.

Berger said that some of the students, many of whom are in university or have graduated, "have managed to get a substantial quantity of Jewish knowledge." He suggested that some of the students may have studied or taught Hebrew in clandestine classes.

The availability of books may present a problem, according to Berger.

U.S. terminates Liberian economic project

By RUTH SINAI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A highly unusual project in which U.S. economic experts tried to help Liberia straighten out its chaotic governmental finances has ended abruptly, reportedly scuttled by Liberian President Samuel Doe.

One frustrated American participant said Doe could not be persuaded to abandon his practice of maintaining an extracurricular budget outside the government's control.

The premature termination roughly halfway into the two-year project, coming as it does on the heels of a congressional freeze on aid to Liberia, may be prompting Doe into action.

Doe, a former army sergeant who took power in a bloody 1980 coup, is considering a trip to the funeral of Japan's Emperor Hirohito in hopes of meeting President Bush, Liberian officials and dissidents say.

Although the evolving situation remains in flux, analysts are concerned it could prompt a renewal of threats against U.S. interests in the coastal African nation, which is supported largely by U.S. foreign aid and investment.

The project, which stemmed from Doe's efforts to boost U.S. support and introduce some order into his government finances, was billed as a $15.5 million program when it was signed in 1987.

The team was frustrated by lack of support from Doe and by his practice of maintaining a budget outside the government's control, Berger said.

The unusual arrangement, which gave American experts the right to cosign Liberian government checks, was made possible by the historic links between the United States and Liberia, a country of 2.3 million residents that was founded in the 19th century by freed slaves.

All but one or two of the 17 experts, who have stayed behind to complete computerization programs, are now back in the United States, said Fred Berger, Vice President of Lewis Berger International, which conducted the project under contract to the U.S. government.

The team was frustrated by lack of support from Doe and by his practice of maintaining a budget outside the government's control, Berger said.

A statement by the Agency for International Development said the project achieved progress in getting the government to meet its payroll on time, pay pensions and increase tax receipts.

"Unfortunately, progress was not uniform and some serious problems could not be resolved," said the statement.

Dissidents and congressional staffers said the team discovered that Doe manages part of the government budget like a discretionary slush fund which was outside the purview of the American experts.

A spokesman at the Liberian

Embassy, Paul Yarl, declined to discuss the project, saying only that it had been completed in a satisfactory manner.

Specifically, revenues from the government-owned corporations for forestry and petroleum products — which account for about 40 percent of the state's income — were handled directly by Doe, said Amos Sawyer, an exiled Liberian political scientist who heads a dissident organization in the United States.

Doe uses these funds to cater to various whims, Sawyer said.

For example, when Liberia's soccer team beat Ghana last year, Doe declared a national holiday and gave the team $1 million.

But Berger said Doe also used the money for public works projects and to pay back official bank loans.

Doe has not protested the recent setbacks in relations with Washington, said U.S. Embassy spokesman David Krecke in a telephone conversation from Monrovia.

It's here — book of quotations on Congress

By LAWRENCE KNUTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Quotations are the salt and pepper of political speeches, and members of Congress have long had their own wit and wisdom enlivened by them.

As often as not those quotes have come from the quote files maintained for the last 50 years by the Congressional Research Service of the Library of Congress.

Now, 2,100 of the best have been gleaned from those files and put between the covers of a book, Respectfully Quoted, in time for the celebration this year of the 200th anniversary of the convening of the 1st Congress in 1789.

While the range is wide, many of the quotations requested by congressmen concern Congress itself, even quotes which are less than flattering to the institution and its members.

"Congress is so strange," a Russian visitor observed. "A man gets up to speak and says nothing. Nobody listens. And then everybody disagrees."

American humorist Will Rogers: "With Congress — every time they make a joke, it's a law. And every time they make a law it's a joke."

Or the opening line from the actor playing John Adams in the musical, 1776 — "I have come to the conclusion that one useless man is called a disgrace, that two are called a law firm and that three or more become a congress."

Or this, from Mark Twain: "It could probably be shown by facts or figures that there is no distinctly American criminal class except Congress."

Someone once asked the Rev. Edward Everett Hale, then chaplain of the Senate, "Do you pray for the senators, Dr. Hale?"

The quoted reply: "No, I look at the senators and pray for the country."

From Sen. John Sharp Williams, D-Miss., at a 1923 farewell dinner: "I sometimes think I'd rather be a dog and bay at the moon than stay in the Senate another six years and listen to it."

Members of Congress, like other politicians, obtain office through elections and the new volume has quotations to offer on that subject.

Such as: "An election is coming. Universal peace is declared, and the foxes have a sincere interest in prolonging the lives of the poultry" — George Eliot, the English author, in 1866.

There is much advice on how to govern: "The great art of governing consists of not letting men grow old in their jobs" — Napoleon Bonaparte.

"A government which robs Peter to pay Paul can always depend on the support of Paul." — George Bernard Shaw.

"There is no Democratic or Republican way of cleaning the streets" — Fiorello La Guardia.

'It could probably be shown by facts or figures that there is no distinctly American criminal class except Congress.'

— Mark Twain

Politicians of course make promises. Abraham Lincoln is alleged to have once said: "We must not promise what we ought not, lest we be called on to perform what we cannot." The Congressional Reference Service says the accuracy of the quote cannot be verified.

It does vouch, however, for the authenticity of Jonathan Swift's declaration that: "Promises and pie-crusts ... are made to be broken."

TREATMENT FOR STIFF NECK

If you're suffering from a stiff neck, don't wait for it to take care of itself when treatment is available to correct it.

Of all the bones in the spinal column, none are more easily injured or more vulnerable than the seven vertebrae in the neck. None are moved more often. We are constantly turning our heads to look at people and things.

Neck stiffness can have many causes, from sudden and violent accidents to such simple activities as painting a ceiling or just sitting reading a book for a long time. But there's nothing simple about the pain.

A careful examination will reveal the source of the pain and how best to treat it. Any misaligned vertebrae in the spinal column should be properly adjusted so there will be no abnormal pressure on your nervous system. Treatment may also include exercises for the cervical muscles such as gently rotating your head in all directions. This can help restore muscle strength and tone.

Author of murder book finds he's lost capacity for empathy

EDITOR'S NOTE — After his first book about a sensational murder case, Joe McGinniss was deluged with letters from people wanting him to look into other killings. Most of the letters he didn't read. But he did read one that led him to write Blind Faith. For McGinniss, there will be no more books about murders.

By KAY BARTLETT
AP Newsfeatures Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Joe McGinniss says his new book, Blind Faith, is the last one he will write about a murder case. He's running out of empathy.

"I think my capacity for empathy is over. There is nothing worse than a writer not feeling as sorry as he should for the people who are hurting," says McGinniss, author of the best-selling Fatal Vision, about Jeffrey MacDonald, a Green Beret officer convicted of killing his pregnant wife and two small children.

Blind Faith examines the case of a Toms River, N.J., insurance salesman, Robert O. Marshall, deeply in debt from gambling losses and enamored of the town Jezebel.

So Marshall decides to hire a hit man to kill his wife, "the beautiful Maria" as he always called her, collect the $1.5 million in life insurance he had bought for her, then convince his three teen-age sons that they, too, could learn to love their new "mother."

The book, already bought as a miniseries, is a compelling yarn that involves hints of corruption in New Jersey, two imported hit men from Louisiana, forged insurance policies and a town that within 24 hours after the murder turns its back on a pillar of the community, a leader in the country club set, chairman of United Way.

"It was just the opposite of the MacDonald case," McGinniss says. "All of MacDonald's friends rallied around, convinced he was innocent."

The MacDonald case proved a legal nightmare for McGinniss. MacDonald sued and McGinniss agreed to pay $325,000 in an out-of-court settlement. However, following complicated litigation, MacDonald collected only $50,000 for himself, plus $92,000 in legal fees. A judge ordered that some of the money should go to the mother of his murdered wife as well as MacDonald's mother.

McGinniss maintains that he, too, believed the Green Beret innocent until he started to examine the evidence. He then concluded, and let his book reflect, that MacDonald was indeed the man who wiped out his family.

Except for the principals, McGinniss uses pseudonyms in Blind Faith for the other characters, although the real names are all part of the public record.

Considered an ideal couple with three blond sons, the Marshalls were teasingly called Ken and Barbie by their friends.

McGinniss says he sort of stumbled onto the book when a Toms River woman, a stranger to him, wrote him a long letter shortly after the murder.

"She had about 90 percent of it right two months after the murder," he says. "The letter was very compelling."

McGinniss says he doesn't know why he even read the letter. After Fatal Vision went on the air in 1984 as a two-part miniseries, he was deluged with letters from people asking him to write a book about some murder or the other.

"I got hundreds of letters from people whose second cousin was murdered or from someone who was beaten up in a barroom brawl and they wanted me to write a book about it," he says. "I was just throwing them away."

"What first interested me about the Marshall case was what kind of a place was this where a guy who had lived there 20 years, this pillar of the community, was automatically presumed guilty by his friends within 24 hours of the murder."

"I was also interested in doing something about the social mores of a town in the '80s, particularly a town that didn't have any kind of distinctive identity. It seemed to be a town transformed by materialism."

"It was also a book about these three boys and how they coped when they learned their mother, truly beloved by them, was dead and then they heard their father is a suspect and then they see him convicted."

McGinniss' first book, The Selling of the President, became a best seller 20 years ago when he was 26. The book chronicled how Richard Nixon defeated the late Hubert H. Humphrey.

"The difference between illusion and reality has always been a theme of mine," McGinniss says. "Here the illusion was Good Housekeeping come to life. Maria bought that whole ideal, that she was an ornament attached to the husband, that her job was to give them a happy home. For that, she paid with her life."

For the children — 13, 16 and 17 at the time of the murder — it was a fairy-tale life of Mustangs and Jeeps, swim meets and country club lunches with Mom and Dad.

"This is not a story about their father," McGinniss says. "I'm not interested in exploring the recesses of his mind like I was with MacDonald. I'm interested in the story of how these kids grappled with the worst sort of shock. There was a monster under their bed and it was their father. And they had to look him in the eye and not blink. It stripped them of every illusion they ever had."

The youngest boy, John, still does not believe his father is guilty.

"When I talked to them John was still desperately clinging like a little boy lost at sea to the only thing he had left," McGinniss says.

The other two, Chris and Roby, believe their father had their mother killed, a mother who put notes in their lunches, always kissed them goodbye, and fixed them pancakes for breakfast even when they got up at 11 a.m. She was Super Mom. They will not answer their father's letters nor speak to him.

"They feel their father is already dead," says McGinniss.

The father is on death row in Trenton, N.J., awaiting the outcome of appeals. He still proclaims his innocence, clinging to a story that he pulled into a secluded rest stop on the Jersey State Parkway to check on a leaking tire and someone hit him over the head and then shot Maria, leaving two bullet holes so close you could cover them with a 50-cent coin. Marshall claims he was robbed of his Atlantic City winnings and then staggered onto the highway to get help.

The tire, which was slashed after it was parked, showed no evidence of a slow leak and there were brightly lit places within a few miles he could have stopped.

Then there was the mistress he planned to marry. He had bought yet another life insurance policy, this one for $100,000, that very day. Maria's signature had been forged on various documents to raise cash.

Prosecutors presented evidence linking him to the Louisiana hired guns. One of them was granted immunity to testify. The other, accused of being the actual shooter, was acquitted by the jury that found Marshall guilty. Another man, who acted as go-between during the negotiations, received a life sentence for conspiracy to commit murder.

McGinniss hints in the book that the prosecutor's office could have taken another tack which would have involved more people, but he won't say much more about it.

"If I wanted to write a book about organized crime in New Jersey, I could have, but I think it would have been less interesting than what these boys are going through," he says. "Political corruption is everywhere. What is unique is the situation these three kids find themselves in. Their love has kept them very close even though they all viewed the case differently at first."

Lubbock historic park to showcase repository of man's past

By WENDY E. LANE
Associated Press Writer

LUBBOCK (AP) — Like most West Texas towns, Lubbock's history as a white settlement dates only to the mid-1800s, but archaeologists say the city might be among the oldest in the New World.

The arid, wind-swept plains scarcely seem like an environment attractive to early man, but decades of research at the site of Lubbock Lake have unearthed evidence that Lubbock has been continuously inhabited by man for at least 11,000 years.

An array of spear points and bones of such extinct animals as the giant armadillo and giant short-faced bear have been recovered from the site and will be showcased as part of the creation of the state's newest historical park.

The Lubbock Lake Landmark State Historic Site is scheduled to open next October.

"It's unique in having such a continuous history of occupation that could be documented," says parks director Wilson Dolman of the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department.

Although Lubbock Lake today is little more than a stream, the 300-acre site drew man and animals in an uninterrupted span of more than 11,000 years because it was one of the few places in the region that always had abundant water, says Eileen Johnson.

Johnson, a Texas Tech University museum anthropology curator, has been director of the Lubbock Lake excavations and research since 1972.

"It's one of the largest hunter-gatherer complexes we know of in the New World," she says. "You can study man's entire existence in the New World in one spot instead of having to go to 100 different sites."

Unlike a similar early-man site

This lake bed in Lubbock is the center of the state's newest historic site where artifacts dating back 11,000 years will be displayed.

at Clovis, N.M., the Lubbock Lake site hasn't been ravaged by time, man or nature. Layers of sediment 24-30 feet deep, each containing a record of that time period, have accumulated over thousands of years undisturbed by erosion, Johnson says.

"We have these little packages of time stacked one on top of the other," she says.

Preserving as much of the entire site as possible is important because Lubbock Lake's archaeological significance lies in Amazon affairs.

Sting said he would travel to France, Italy, West Germany, Spain, England, the United States, Japan and China to raise funds for the proposed 129,000-square-mile reservation and other Amazonian ecological projects.

Sting is in Brazil for a weeklong meeting with Indians from 28 Brazilian tribes and international ecologists.

BRASILIA, Brazil (AP) — British rock star Sting, meeting with President Jose Sarney, proposed a worldwide campaign to raise funds to save the Amazon jungle and create a massive Indian reservation.

"We would like to help Brazil create South America's largest Indian reservation, and I am sure we could make lots of money in the United States, Japan and Europe for this project," Sting told journalists outside the presidential palace after his two-hour meeting with Sarney on Sunday.

"We need the permission of the Brazilian people for this," the singer-songwriter said. "We want to help Brazil save the Amazon."

The Brazilian government has made it clear it won't accept what it sees as recent foreign meddling in its continuous record of man's past, rather than any one archaeological find, Johnson says.

However, the legions of volunteers and students who have aided Johnson in excavating the site, discovered in 1936, for the past 17 years have turned up important discoveries, such as remains of extinct animals from about 11,000 years ago.

"The giant armadillo was truly Texas-sized," she says. "It was 3 feet tall and 6 feet long. It was no small animal lumbering down the draw." Bones of a giant short-faced bear show the animal to be about three times the size of a grizzly in mass, Johnson says.

"It's been considered to be the most predacious carnivore of the Pleistocene," she says. "We know that man utilized the meat and bones from this bear but how man hunted it, we don't know."

Finding remains of these types of animals along with evidence of human presence has shown archaeologists that early man depended on other animals besides the giant mammoth for food and bones to make tools, according to Johnson.

Excavations at Lubbock Lake also have yielded what she believes is a new spear-point design from the Plainview period of about 10,000 years ago.

These points were made of obsidian from New Mexico and were joined to the spear shaft in a way that differs from other contemporary points, Johnson says.

"We think that Plainview points and Lubbock points were made by the same people of the Plainview culture," she says. "It's like having a Ford and a Chevrolet."

"Many of the cultures have been looked at as making only one kind of design in their projectiles. We think the same people are doing something different."

Public Notice

On December 22, 1988 Southwestern Bell Telephone Company filed with the Public Utility Commission of Texas several proposed changes in its Universal Emergency Number Service (911) Tariff. These proposals include:

- a. deletion of the current regulation which restricts E911 Service to a single exchange area which has 50,000 exchange access arrangements or more;
- b. revising the tariff text to clarify that costs associated with network rearrangements required to accommodate the 911 code may result in additional charges to be determined on an individual case basis;
- c. a text addition to clarify that telephone company provided Public Safety Answering Equipment is required when a service includes Automatic Location Identification (ALI); and
- d. a text addition to explain emergency ringback.

The application is styled Docket No. 8565, Application of Southwestern Bell Telephone Company for Approval of Amendment of Universal Emergency Number Service (911) Tariff. It is anticipated that Docket No. 8565 will be evidentiary in nature.

The public may intervene or participate in this docket but it is not required to do so. Western film wins top award

OKLAHOMA CITY — The motion picture Young Guns, starring Emilio Estevez, Kiefer Sutherland, Lou Diamond Phillips and Charlie Sheen, is the winner of the National Cowboy Hall of Fame's Western Heritage Award in the theatrical motion picture category, officials at the western museum announced recently.

The directors, producers and principal actors will receive bronze Wrangler awards at a banquet emceed by recording artist Michael Martin Murphy on March 18 at the Hall.

Winners in five other categories also were announced, along with the names of two men who will be honored by induction into the Great Westerners Hall of Fame.

Winner of the award in Factual Television is Cowboy Poets, a 53-minute production by Kim Shelton of San Rafael, Calif., featuring cowboy poets Wally McRae, Waddie Mitchell and Slim Kite. McRae is scheduled to perform at the Hall on April 1 during the "Oklahoma Cowboy Poetry Gathering."

The Fictional Television winner is "The Stray Bullet" episode of the CBS series Paradise, which airs Wednesday evenings at 8 p.m. Central Standard Time. The hour-long program stars Lee Horsley and is produced by Lorimar Television of Culver City, Calif.

Indians, Outlaws and Angie Debo won the award for best Western documentary. Produced by Barbara Abrash and Martha Sandlin and aired over PBS stations, the film documents the life and distinguished writings of Debo in her own words. Funding for the film was provided by the Oklahoma Foundation for the Humanities and the National Endowment for the Humanities, and by Consolidated Natural Gas, along with other donors. The program was sponsored by Oklahoma State University and the Institute for Research in History in Boston.

Alamo: The Price of Freedom, a 45-minute docudrama produced in the "image maximization" or IMAX format, will receive a special award for outstanding achievement in a new format. This will be the second Wrangler award for producer/director Keith Merrill of Los Altos Hills, Calif., who won in 1974 for the documentary The Great American Cowboy.

Although leading figures in the Alamo story were portrayed by professional actors, all other cast members were reenactors, history buffs whose hobby is the authentic re-creation of historical events in authentic period costumes. The film currently plays on a special six-story screen at the River Center theatre near the Alamo in San Antonio.

Winner in the music category is "Celebrate the Century," composed and performed by South Dakotan Kyle Evans and produced by Gene Breeden of Nashville. The album is a salute to the statehood centennial of South Dakota and includes "South Dakota You've Been Good to Me" and "This Land I Call My Own" in addition to the title song.

Montana cattleman Conrad Kohrs Warren and the late South Dakota cowboy poet Badger

Clark will be honored with induction into the Great Westerners Hall of Fame.

Warren, grandson of pioneer cattle baron Conrad Kohrs, was born in Butte, Mont. in 1907. After high school, he took a job on the 2-A-Bar Ranch, where he learned to break horses and work cattle.

Following a brief term at the University of Virginia and a year traveling overseas, Warren returned to Deer Lodge to work for the Kohrs Company, assuming its management in 1932. He assembled an unmatched herd of Belgian mares and raised registered Hereford bulls.

Warren served many years as president of the Montana Livestock Commission and the Montana Stockgrowers Association, and initiated the preservation of the Grant-Kohrs Ranch National Historic Site, where thousands of visitors each year now view a complete history of the cattle industry.

South Dakota's first poet laureate, Badger Clark, was born in Iowa but moved to Dakota Territory shortly after his birth in 1883. From his Methodist minister father, Badger inherited a wholesome sense of humor and the ability to find good in all men.

Following a period of odd jobs and travel, Badger returned to South Dakota to settle down, only to learn he had contracted tuberculosis. Under doctor's orders, he headed for the dry air of Arizona and hired on as a ranch hand. Here he began to write poems about the cowboy characters and the freedom of the open range he came to love. His step-mother, Anna Morris Clark, sent one of his efforts to Pacific Monthly magazine, where it was published and brought the astonished author $10. Thus began his remarkable career as a cowboy poet.

A confirmed bachelor, Clark

continued to write and work on the ranch, publishing three volumes of poetry and touring the country to give readings and lectures he dubbed "hot air raids." In the 1920s he built his four-room "Badger Hole" near Legion Lake, S.D., where he lived until his death in 1937. His best-known work is a 32-line poem titled "The Cowboy's Prayer."

Family members of both honorees are expected to attend the awards presentations. Also included on the program are the presentation of bronze Wrangler Awards in 12 categories of western literature, film and music; and a salute to four western states who celebrate statehood centennials in 1989: Washington, Montana, North Dakota and South Dakota.

Film and television entries were judged by Dr. Clif Warren, film critic and dean of liberal arts at Central State University; Ken Meyer, independent filmmaker from Tulsa, Okla.; and Jon Ford, film critic for KAMR-TV of Amarillo.

Music entries were judged by University of Oklahoma music professor Jim Faulconer; Dr. Dennis Jowaisas, a musician with the Friends of Tradition band; and Dr. Guy Logsdon, an expert on western music and folklore formerly with the University of Tulsa.

Winners in literary categories of western novel, nonfiction book, art book, juvenile book, magazine article and poetry will be announced on Feb. 17.

Tickets for the awards banquet are $50 per person and include a private cocktail reception in the museum galleries for the opening of an exhibition of Native American pottery, titled "Vessels of Grace."

Twentieth Century Club
Twentieth Century Club met at 1:30 p.m. Feb. 14 at the home of Betty Johnston, 2400 Mary Ellen.

Adelaide Colwell, president, led 10 members in reciting the club collect and the American Creed. Correspondence was read from club member Dorothy Neslage, who is attending a school for the blind in Austin. Committee reports were discussed and members were reminded of various activities in Pampa.

Colwell introduced Mary Wilson, who presented a program from the book, An Agenda of the 21st Century, by Rushworth M. Kidder, based on 22 interviews with teachers, philosophers, engineers, diplomats, economists and a past U.S. president. Some of the topics were threat of nuclear annihilation, danger of overpopulation, global environment, gaps between developing and industrial north and south, education and breakdown in public morality as outward effects the individual must face in maintaining inward effects of trust, dignity, compassion and obedience.

Valentine table decorations were used to serve red hot cider and sweet rolls.

Next meeting will be at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday, Feb. 28, at Myrna Orr's home.

Pampa teachers attend state meeting

AUSTIN — Six teachers from the Pampa Independent School District were part of the annual state convention of the Texas Classroom Teachers Association (TCTA) last weekend in Austin.

Eight-hundred teachers were at the convention to represent the 25,000 public school teachers who are members of the association.

Organizers of the event said the annual convention provides delegates an opportunity to become better informed on current education issues and make policy decisions for the Association.

Attending the convention from Pampa were Betty Beyer, Ann Watson and Jana Manning from Wilson Elementary; Connie Holland and Martha Porter from Austin Elementary; and Cheryl Free from Pampa Middle School.

The teachers took part in conferences covering a variety of topics, including the Texas

Teacher Appraisal System, student performance accountability, tax equity and key issues in education facing the 71st State Legislature.

San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros delivered the keynote address to the educators. His topic was "The Future of Education in Texas."

The teachers also had the opportunity to see a new off-Broadway production that is touring the nation entitled Let Me Teach. The play, written by former Texas drama teacher David Marshall Marquis, attempts to share with the public what it is like to be a teacher.

One of the primary themes of the convention was a call for all teachers to get more involved in education issues and to take a hand in shaping the future of education and education legislation in the state.

It's better to get along than it is to get even

DEAR ABBY: I must respond to your column on forgiveness: Forgiveness is a gift to the giver. I speak from personal experience.

Years ago, I took legal action against my ex-husband for payment of back child support. I had a good job with an adequate salary, but I could have used some financial help, as I was raising our two sons alone. "Rob" had a drinking problem, which was one of the reasons we parted, but I was determined to get what he owed me — regardless.

Then suddenly, I asked myself: What am I doing? Our sons had always had a very good relationship with their father, and my taking Rob to court would only alienate him from his family.

I made up my mind that I would forgive Rob and forget the money he owed me, so I called my attorney and told him to withdraw the legal action — that I was letting Rob off the hook.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

As it turned out, that was the wisest decision I ever made. Seven years later Rob was dead of a massive heart attack. He was 48.

During the final seven years of his life, our relationship was very cordial, and he was able to establish good communication with his sons.

I am glad I let Rob off the hook. If I had taken him to court, I always would have felt guilty, wondering if I had caused him stress and hastened his death. GLAD I FORGAVE.

DEAR GLAD: Many people could learn from you. Read on for more on the joy of forgiving: DEAR ABBY: Your wonderful column on the subject of forgiveness reminded me of a phrase I copied some years ago and have shared with many. I do not know who wrote it, but I hope you think it's worth sharing with your readers.

M. BELL, CASSVILLE, MO.

DEAR M. BELL: I do, and thank you for the following: "To forgive is to set a prisoner free and discovering that prisoner was YOU."

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I went out to eat breakfast at a nice cafe the other morning. On the plate was an orange slice for garnish.

After finishing my meal, I ate the orange slice. My husband said, "You aren't supposed to eat the orange slice — it's for decorating, not for eating."

I said, "Oh, bull!" Then I picked the orange slice off his plate and ate it. He gave me a rather disgusted look.

I noticed a well-dressed man seated near us eating his orange slice, so I pointed it out to my husband. He said, "Well, that man apparently doesn't know better either."

When we got outside, I told my husband that I was going to write to Dear Abby and get the facts. He said, "Go ahead." So here I am. What are the facts, Abby?

PHOENIX ORANGE LOVER

DEAR ORANGE LOVER: The orange slice was placed on the plate for garnish — or "decorating," as your husband put it. However, when the decoration is edible, it's proper to eat it.

Lakers hand Celtics fourth straight road loss

By BERNIE WILSON
AP Sports Writer

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — The Boston Celtics are sinking in the West.

Following Sunday's 119-110 loss to the Los Angeles Lakers, the Celtics are 0-4 on their longest road trip of the season, which still has two more games to go.

But the Celtics say the problems go beyond the absence of Larry Bird, who has missed 44 games since undergoing surgery to remove bone spurs from both heels.

"We aren't waiting for Larry's return, we are trying to survive and become a better team," said first-year head coach Jimmy Rodgers, whose club has fallen four games below .500 since the All-Star break.

The Lakers played without Magic Johnson, but Byron Scott showed he has recovered from a urological disorder by scoring a season-high 35 points, including 14 in a span of less than eight minutes to put the Los Angeles in control.

Elsewhere in the NBA Sunday, Chicago edged Milwaukee 108-106 and expansion Miami defeated Atlanta 124-115.

Johnson has missed three games with a partially torn left hamstring, making Sunday's game the first between the Lakers and Celtics that both Bird and Johnson have missed since coming into the NBA in 1979.

"It was just one of those games; I felt it was time for me to get it going," Scott said. "Anytime you miss two weeks of basketball, it takes four or five games to get it back. I pretty much figured by looking at the schedule that for the Boston game I'd be 100 percent, both physically and in my timing. It was the first game I really felt that I could get it going, and I was looking forward to it."

Sunday's game, which broke the Lakers' two-game home losing streak, was Scott's fourth game back.

James Worthy added 28 points as the Lakers earned a split of the season series with Boston.

Kevin McHale scored 26 points, Reggie Lewis 25 and Robert Parish had 20 points and 15 rebounds for the Celtics.

Bulls 108, Bucks 106
Chicago beat Milwaukee for the fourth time without a loss this season as Michael Jordan scored 23 points and Brad Sellers had six in the final 2:40.

The Bulls, who have beaten the Bucks 11 times in their last 12 meetings, also got 22 points from Scottie Pippen. Jordan, who scored 50 points against Milwaukee on Thursday, avoided double- and triple-teaming by passing for nine assists.

Chicago never trailed after Jordan's two free throws with 5:24 left gave the Bulls a 96-95 lead.

Terry Cummings had 27 points and 13 rebounds for the Bucks and Ricky Pierce had 18 points.

Heat 124, Hawks 115

Expansion Miami won its second straight game and set team records for points in a game, a half and a quarter, field-goal percentage, field goals and assists in an impressive victory over Atlanta.

The Heat, whose previous high in a regulation game was 111 points, led by 20 on four occasions early in the second half, but a 20-6 Hawks run sparked by Doc Rivers' seven points cut the lead to 113-109 with four minutes left.

Rony Seikaly then scored five points in a little more than two minutes, helping the Heat rebuild its lead to 120-111 with 1:42 left.

Miami's top rookies had big games as Grant Long had 30 points and 10 rebounds, Kevin Edwards added 21 points and Seikaly 14.

The Hawks were led by Dominique Wilkins with 25 points and Rivers with 21.

Boston's Robert Parish (00) and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar of Los Angeles use fingertip precision in trying to control a loose ball Sunday.

Mavs expect Dantley to join team tonight

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas Mavericks owner Donald Carter is "optimistic" that Adrian Dantley will join the team in time for tonight's NBA game against the San Antonio Spurs, a team spokesman says.

Carter made the remark to team officials after meeting late Sunday in Washington with Dantley and his agent, David Falk, Mavericks spokesman Kevin Sullivan said early today.

Sullivan said Carter called Mavericks General Manager Norm Sonju early today after meeting with Dantley and Falk, saying he was "optimistic" that Dantley will join the team in time for the Spurs game.

Carter told Sonju that Dantley does want to play for the Mavericks, but added that Dantley did not agree to return to Dallas in Carter's private plane. Carter had earlier expressed optimism that he could bring Dantley back to Dallas with him.

A Dallas television station, WFAA-TV, reported that Carter and Dantley, met late Sunday at the Marriott Hotel, where Carter went after flying in his private plane to the nation's capital.

Earlier, Carter said that he wasn't upset yet that Dantley failed to report for the Mavericks' game against the Houston Rockets on Saturday, which cost Dantley 1-82nd of his salary, or about $15,000.

Dantley, angered when Detroit traded him to the Mavericks for Mark Aguirre and a 1991 draft pick, has missed two games since the trade last Wednesday.

The Mavs, who are battling for the eighth-place playoff spot in the Western Conference, were in seventh place, just a game ahead of Portland and a game and a half ahead of Denver.

"We're his sixth team in the NBA and I can understand why he would want to meet with the owner of the new team he is going to play for," Carter said Saturday.

Not only are the Mavericks missing Aguirre's scoring output, they have had serious injury problems.

Guard Derek Harper has a knee injury and will not play in tonight's game at San Antonio. Center Bill Wennington has a sprained ankle and did not play in Saturday night's 105-94 loss to the Houston Rockets.

Forward Sam Perkins is bothered by a sore kneecap and Brad Davis played against the Rockets with a broken finger.

"We are hurting right now," said Dallas coach John MacLeod. "We need Dantley bad. I hope he gets here soon."

Oklahoma remains atop poll with victory over Colorado

By The Associated Press

Who's No. 1? Surprise! — it'll probably be Oklahoma.

That's the same team that was No. 1 last week. That hasn't happened in five weeks, since before Duke was knocked off and the top spot became a seven-day honor.

"In my book, they're the toughest team in the country, Colorado coach Tom Miller said Saturday after the Sooners beat Colorado 106-88.

No. 2 Arizona also didn't lose this week. But No. 3 Missouri lost to Iowa State, No. 5 Illinois lost, No. 6 Syracuse lost to Georgetown and No. 7 Florida State lost to 10th-ranked Louisville and to Memphis State. So when the new Associated Press poll is released tonight, there will be a lot of changes.

On Sunday there were no upsets. No. 3 Missouri beat Nebraska 79-63, No. 8 North Carolina beat Maryland 86-75, No. 9 Indiana edged No. 13 Michigan 76-75, No. 14 West Virginia beat Rhode Island 90-66 and No. 18 Nevada-Las Vegas defeated Temple 62-60.

On Saturday, Oklahoma beat Colorado 106-88, No. 2 Arizona beat UCLA 102-64, No. 4 Georgetown beat Boston College 80-69, Wisconsin beat No. 5 Illinois 72-52, No. 6 Syracuse beat Providence 87-80, Memphis State beat No. 7 Florida State 89-78, No. 11 Duke beat Kansas 102-77, Pittsburgh beat No. 12 Seton Hall 82-76, No. 15 Iowa beat Minnesota 99-61, Northwestern beat No. 16 Ohio State 70-69, No. 19 North Carolina State beat Georgia Tech 71-69 and Vanderbilt beat No. 20 Louisiana State 108-74.

No. 9 Indiana 76, No. 13 Michigan 75.

Jay Edwards made a 3-pointer at the buzzer to lift the Hoosiers to their 15th consecutive victory at home.

The Hoosiers, 21-5, are 11-1 in the Big 10 lead with six games remaining. Illinois is second at 8-4. Michigan, 19-6, fell into a tie with Iowa for third at 7-5.

Edwards finished with 23 points, including 13 in the game's final 8:48 after getting just four in the first half.

No. 3 Missouri 79, Nebraska 63 Gary Leonard scored 11 of Missouri's first 17 points. The Tigers, 2-2 under interim head coach Rich Daly, went ahead 19-6 and extended it to 38-21 at halftime.

Nebraska, 14-12 and 2-8 in the Big Eight, shot 8-for-31 in the first half.

Leonard scored 23 points and Anthony Peeler 22 for Missouri, 22-5 and 8-2. Rich King scored a career-high 22 points for Nebraska.

No. 8 North Carolina 86, Maryland 75

Steve Bucknall scored 14 of his 16 points in the second half, including a 3-pointer with three seconds left on the shot clock that gave the Tar Heels a 73-66 lead with 1:50 remaining.

King Rice sank two free throws and converted a three-point play, and Jeff Lebo added four more points in the final 90 seconds for the Tar Heels, 22-5 overall and 8-3 in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

J.R. Reid scored 17 points for the Tar Heels. John Johnson scored 24 points for Maryland, 8-16 and 1-10.

College roundup

No. 14 West Virginia 90, Rhode Island 66

Chris Brooks scored 22 points and Ray Foster 17 as the Mountaineers, 22-2 and 15-0 in the Atlantic 10, extended the nation's longest winning streak to 21 games.

John Evans scored 23 points for Rhode Island, 11-13 and 7-8.

Chris Brooks scored seven of his points during a 17-8 Mountaineers run that made it 57-40 with just over 10 minutes remaining.

No. 18 Nevada-Las Vegas 62, Temple 60

Greg Anthony made a game-winning, off-balance jumper with 28 seconds left as the Runnin' Rebels rallied in the final four minutes.

Temple, 15-9, led 56-53 before Anthony tied it on a 3-pointer with four minutes remaining. Anderson Hunt's 3-pointer with 3:31 left gave Nevada-Las Vegas a 59-56 lead.

Mark Macon, who scored 17 of his 27 points in the second half, made a jumper with 2:10 left, pulling Temple within one. He was fouled by Stacey Augman with 1:05 to go and made both free throws, giving Temple a 60-59 lead.

David Butler's shot was blocked in the lane, Anthony grabbed the ball, and spun around for eight-footer as he was fouled by Macon. Anthony made the free throw for a two-point lead.

Saturday's Games

No. 1 Oklahoma 106, Colorado 88 Stacy King scored 28 points, including 23 in the second half, and Mookie Blaylock had 17 for the Sooners.

With King scoring four points and Blaylock seven, the Sooners took a 24-8 lead and never trailed.

Dan Becker and Rodell Guest scored 15 each for Colorado, 7-16, 2-6.

No. 2 Arizona 102, UCLA 64

Sean Elliott set the Pacific-10 career scoring record as the Wildcats, 20-3 and 14-1 in the Pac-10, sent UCLA to its worst loss ever.

Elliott scored 35 points for a total of 2,327. He surpassed the mark set by Lew Alcindor, now Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, in 88 games at UCLA. Elliott has played 123 games.

Jerome Richardson scored 16 points for UCLA, 16-7 and 10-4.

No. 4 Georgetown 80, Boston College 60

Alonzo Mourning scored 19 points and Georgetown, 20-3 and 10-2 in the Big East, held Boston College to one field goal in the last 5½ minutes.

Dana Barros scored 23 for the Eagles, 9-13 and 1-10.

Wisconsin 72, No. 5 Illinois Trent Jackson scored 27 points, including five 3-pointers, for Wisconsin, 15-7 and 7-6 in the Big Ten.

Wisconsin led 32-18 at halftime. Illinois, 21-4 and 8-4, never got closer than 12 points in the second half.

Lowell Hamilton scored 13 points for the Illini.

No. 6 Syracuse 87, Providence 89

Derrick Coleman scored 22 points as the Orangemen won their 20th straight over the Friars.

Syracuse, 22-5 and 8-5 in the Big East, has never lost a conference game against Providence, 17-6 and 6-6.

Marty Conlon, who scored a career-high 29 points for Providence.

Memphis St. 89, No. 7 Florida St. 78

Elliot Perry scored 24 points and Ernest Smith added 22 for Memphis State, 19-8 and 6-3 in the Metro Conference.

George McCloud scored 21 points for Florida State, 19-4 and 7-3, which trailed 71-49 with 8:13 left.

No. 11 Duke 102, Kansas 77

Danny Ferry had his jersey retired in pregame ceremonies, then scored 20 of his 26 points in the first half as Duke, 19-4, extended its winning streak to five and sent Kansas, 16-10, to its seventh straight loss.

Kansas beat the Blue Devils in last year's NCAA semifinals.

Pittsburgh 82, No. 14 Seton Hall 76

Brian Shorter scored 26 points and Jason Matthews had 22 as the Panthers, 14-10 and 7-6 in the Big East, beat Seton Hall.

Matthews made six consecutive free throws down the stretch as Pittsburgh made 12 in a row in the final 2:14.

Andrew Gaze scored 18 points for Seton Hall, 21-5 and 8-5.

No. 15 Iowa 99, Minnesota 61

Matt Bullard scored 20 points and Roy Marble 19 as the Hawkeys, 19-6 and 7-5 in the Big 10, avenged their 80-78 loss at Minnesota last month.

Minnesota, 14-8 and 6-6, has lost 12 straight conference road games. Kevin Lynch scored 21 points for the Gophers.

Iowa led 45-33 at halftime and outscored the Gophers 16-6 at the start of the second half.

Northwestern 70, No. 16 Ohio St. 69

Brian Schwabe made a free throw with four seconds left to lift Northwestern, 9-14 and 2-11 in the Big Ten. The Wildcats rallied from a 16-point deficit in the final eight minutes.

Walker Lambiotte scored 23 points for Northwestern. Perry Carter scored 25 for the Buckeyes, 17-8 and 6-6.

No. 19 N. Carolina St. 71, Georgia Tech 69

Rodney Monroe made two free throws with 14 seconds left to lift North Carolina State, 17-5, and 8-2 in the ACC. Monroe scored 20 points for the Wolfpack.

Dennis Scott scored 20 points for Georgia Tech, 17-8 and 6-4.

Vanderbilt 106, No. 20 Louisiana St. 74

Barry Goheen scored 23 points and Barry Booker added 21 for Vanderbilt, 16-10 and 10-4 in the Southeastern Conference.

Chris Jackson scored 38 points for Louisiana State, 18-7 and 10-4, which took its worst loss of the season.

Houston's Craig Upchurch, left, drives past Notre Dame's Jamere Jackson during Notre Dame's 80-80 victory Sunday. Houston's uniforms didn't show up until the second half, so they wore Notre Dame's road uniforms in the first half.

Twiggs captures first PGA victory

By MARK EVJE
Associated Press Writer

SAN DIEGO — Greg Twiggs earned spending money in college by playing skins games several times a week at Torrey Pines Golf Course, betting $5 and $10 per hole against other amateurs.

The course knowledge that helped support Twiggs then paid off in a big way Sunday as he won the $700,000 San Diego Open, his first victory in five years on the PGA Tour.

"I know the course and the greens so well because I played here so much in college (at San Diego State) ... and it made it a lot easier to play because I know where (the trouble) is," said Twiggs, who collected $126,000.

"There isn't a putt on these greens that I don't know where it's breaking. It's just (a matter of judging) the speed. If I didn't know the greens like I do it would have been a lot harder to hit my putts the right speed. It takes a lot of pressure off when you can do that."

Twiggs' final round of 3-under-par 69 gave him a 72-hole score of 17-under-par 271 and a two-shot victory.

Third-round leader Steve Elkington of Australia struggled to a 73 Sunday to finish in a second-place tie at 273 with Mark Wiebe, Brad Faxon and Mark O'Meara, who matched the day's best round with a 66. Twiggs, whose previous best finish was a tie for third in the 1985 Greater Milwaukee Open, carded five birdies against just two bogeys on the 7,021-yard, par-72 Torrey Pines South course.

"It's a course that everybody knows you have to shoot a low score to win," Twiggs said.

Twiggs, who played at Torrey Pines "at least three times a week" during college, also displayed his course knowledge from tee to green by teeing off with an iron on several of the par-4s.

"The key to Torrey is not putting (tee shots) in the trees," he said.

Arkansas, Texas tied for SWC lead

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

The Arkansas Razorbacks turned into road wimps again to allow the Texas A&M Aggies to spring an upset that put the arch-rival Texas Longhorns back into the Southwest Conference championship basketball race.

The Aggies' 82-71 victory at College Station coupled with Texas' vital 84-82 victory over Texas Tech in Lubbock locked Arkansas and Texas in a 10-3 tie atop the SWC standings.

Arkansas would be the No. 1 seed in the post-season classic in Dallas if it is tied with Texas at the end of the regular season by virtue of two victories over the Longhorns.

The Hogs have lost only six games this year and five of them have been on the road.

Here's the schedule for Arkansas and Texas the rest of the way:

ARKANSAS — Baylor Feb. 22 (home), Tulsa (non-conference) Feb. 25 (home), Rice March 1 (away), Houston March 5 (home).

TEXAS — Miami Feb. 22 (home), TCU Feb. 25 (home), SMU Feb. 28 (away), Texas A&M (away) March 4.

Texas definitely has the toughest of the schedule with road games to SMU and Texas A&M.

In other games on Saturday, Rice beat SMU 67-65 behind freshman Dana Hardy's 35 points and Texas Christian regained its grip on third place with an 82-66 victory over Houston.

TCU is 8-5 while Houston and Tech are tied for fourth with 6-6 records. Texas A&M and SMU are each 5-7 while Rice is 5-8. Baylor, now 1-11, as the last-place team will be the only SWC club not in the post-season tournament.

A&M's resurgence has been one of the big surprises of the season.

"(Coach) Shelby Metcalf told me at the beginning of the year he had his best team as far as quickness," said Arkansas coach Nolan Richardson. "I could tell it was just a matter of time before A&M got it going. They are playing very well."

Arkansas center Oliver Miller played only nine minutes because of the flu.

"Miller's not being able to play really hurt us," Richardson said.

Texas coach Tom Penders said his team's victory over Tech helped the 'Horns' NCAA tournament chances.

"It was a crucial game and I told them if we lost it we can start playing for an NIT spot," Penders said. "Tech is a real tough place to play and the NCAA looks at that closely. Winning a game like this on the road is twice as important as winning at home."

Texas has a 19-6 overall record in Penders' first year at the helm.

Penders figures it will take 22 wins to get Texas into the NCAA tournament if the 'Horns don't win the post-season classic to earn an automatic berth.

Police detain four at Mandela home, say bloodstains found

By LAURINDA KEYS
Associated Press Writer

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Just days after anti-apartheid leaders disowned Winnie Mandela over allegations her bodyguards killed a young black, police raided her home, arrested four men and reportedly found bloodstains.

State-run Radio South Africa said the four men arrested in Sunday's pre-dawn raid were bodyguards of the wife of jailed African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela.

"We have found fingerprints and blood samples which will be sorted out in the laboratory," said Maj. Gen. Jaap Joubert, who is leading the investigation into the murder of 14-year-old black activist Stompie Seipei.

He said police would try to prove in court that some young men belonging to the so-called Mandela United Football Club, whose members live at Mrs. Mandela's home and act as her bodyguards, had assaulted the boy who died.

Three Soweto men who are represented by an anti-apartheid attorney have said club members abducted them and Seipei and beat the four at the Mandela house.

They claim Mrs. Mandela "was involved" but have not elaborated.

Speaking of the raid, Joubert said, "This is a thorough search of the premises where the alleged attacks and assaults took place, according to witnesses."

Seipei's body was found last month with a slit throat, dumped in Soweto, the sprawling black township outside Johannesburg.

The scandal over Mrs. Mandela's bodyguards has seriously damaged the credibility of a woman who had been at the forefront of the fight to end white minority rule in South Africa.

years, is the country's most revered black nationalist leader. On Thursday, major anti-apartheid leaders repudiated Mrs. Mandela because of her association with the soccer club.

The president of the exiled African National Congress also publicly criticized her.

The Rev. Frank Chikane, general secretary of the South African Council of Churches, told a news conference Saturday that Mrs. Mandela had decided to remove the bodyguards from her home at her husband's instruction.

Police released a videotape of their raid on the Mandela house. It showed officers, without gloves, searching trunks of clothing, leafing through photograph albums and collections of ANC literature, and lifting up what appeared to be blood-soaked sneakers, a knife and a pair of gardening shears.

The camera focused on spots on the walls of rooms where the detained men lived. Radio South Africa said the spots were bloodstains.

Mrs. Mandela, 54, has denied being at home when the three men and Seipei were brought there.

But she has defended their abduction and said they probably were slapped to get them to talk about alleged homosexual activities at the Methodist Church residence where they lived. The church denies her allegations.

Joubert said one of those detained during the 4 a.m. raid was Jerry Richardson, identified as the club's coach. Others arrested at the house were not named, but Radio South Africa said they were Mrs. Mandela's bodyguards.

The policeman said authorities also arrested two other men elsewhere in Soweto, who will be charged with murdering Soweto's Dr. Abu Baker Asvat.

Community leaders have told newspapers that Asvat examined Seipei after he was beaten. Mrs. Mandela said Asvat was a witness to her charges of sexual abuse.

Blasts hit British barracks

LONDON (AP) — A series of explosions rocked a British army barracks before dawn today after intruders were spotted, the buildings evacuated and a sentry fired shots at two fleeing suspects, authorities said.

An army spokesman said no one was injured by the three or four blasts that shook the Terhill barracks near Shrewsbury, 160 miles northwest of London. Police said, however, that one soldier was slightly injured by flying glass.

The explosions occurred about a half hour after sentries saw two suspicious intruders and sounded an alarm, the army spokesman said.

Witnesses said the wall of one block was blown out and the roof of the second was burned away in the fire that ensued.

There was no immediate indication of who planted the explosives, but suspicion fell on the outlawed Irish Republican Army, which has been attacking British soldiers for nearly 20 years.

The barracks that were hit house the 2nd Parachute Regiment, whose colonel-in-chief is Prince Charles, heir to the British throne.

The army spokesman said sentries spotted the intruders, one armed with a handgun, inside the camp's perimeter fence shortly after 3 a.m. and ordered the barracks evacuated as a precaution.

"It would seem that the swift evacuation saved many injuries," the army spokesman said. The Defense Ministry could not say how many soldiers usually sleep in the barracks or how many were there this morning.

The local fire brigade said 20 firefighters remained on the scene six hours later, although the fire was under control.

Soviets conduct Mid East peace mission

By DALIA BALIGH
Associated Press Writer

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Eduard Shevardnadze, the first Soviet foreign minister to visit Egypt in 15 years, met with President Hosni Mubarak today as part of a peace mission that is to include a meeting with his Israeli counterpart.

Shevardnadze arrived late Sunday from Jordan, where he said he hoped to persuade Israel to abandon its "stubborn" stand on regional peace when he meets with Foreign Minister Moshe Arens in Cairo on Wednesday.

The Soviet envoy's tour bolsters his country's role in Middle East peace efforts at a time when U.S. action is hampered by the change of administrations in Washington.

In Jordan, Shevardnadze gave King Hussein a letter from Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev on "important international issues." The content was not disclosed.

In Israel, Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir said Sunday he would wholeheartedly welcome direct peace talks with the Arabs under U.S. and Soviet sponsorship. However, the Soviets insist on a role for the PLO, which Israel views as a terrorist group and says it will not meet.

Shevardnadze said he would also hold talks with Palestine Liberation Organization Chairman Yasser Arafat in Cairo, despite earlier reports the meeting would be held in the Iraqi capital, Baghdad.

"I hope progress can be made in the Middle East problem, which needs joint efforts by the (U.N.) Security Council and other concerned parties," he told reporters at Cairo airport Sunday night.

On Saturday in Damascus, the first stop on his Middle East tour, Shevardnadze called for a U.N.-sponsored international Middle East peace conference, including the PLO, within six to nine months.

He suggested the foreign ministers of the five permanent U.N. Security Council states — Britain, China, France, the Soviet Union and United States — begin preparation for such a conference.

But he told reporters in Amman that "no country can come up with a proposal acceptable to all parties from the beginning."

"Therefore, I say I do not have a special proposal in my pocket," he said.

Shevardnadze is scheduled to visit Iraq and Iran before returning home next Monday. "Only through dialogue and convincing can one overcome the stubborn Israeli stand," Shevardnadze said in Syria. "I hope I can convince him (Arens)."

Shevardnadze said in Jordan that the PLO and Arabs had made great efforts toward an international conference: "The rest now awaits the Israeli position."

Shevardnadze was the first Soviet foreign minister ever to visit Jordan, a country historically leaning to the West.

He became the first Soviet official of his rank to visit Cairo since President Anwar Sadat expelled Moscow's military advisers in 1972. Egypt has since become Washington's closest Arab ally.

Asked as he left leaving Jordan about resuming relations with Israel, which were broken during the 1967 Arab-Israeli war, the Soviet minister said: "First let us convene the conference, and then there will be no problems on diplomatic issues."

Restoration of relations is an Israeli condition for a Soviet role in peace talks. The two nations recently began consular contacts.

Shamir told Israel Radio on Sunday that the planned meeting between Shevardnadze and Arens would be a "positive phenomenon."
