Exxon chief defends oil spill cleanup action

By MICHAEL GRACZYK
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Exxon responded quickly to the Alaskan oil spill and is committed to cleaning it up although at least two government agencies should share with the company some of the blame for what's become the nation's biggest oil accident, Exxon U.S.A. President William D. Stevens says.

"We cannot undo what happened," Stevens said. "However, we can, and we are, taking every possible action to limit the damage, clean up the mess and otherwise mitigate the impacts."

Stevens, in an address Tuesday to the Offshore Technology Conference and in remarks to reporters afterwards, cited a contingency plan in place for a decade and updated early this year that called for use of dispersants and the open burning of oil in hopes of containing an oil spill more quickly.

But he said Exxon, the Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation and the Coast Guard could not agree on implementing the plan soon enough after the tanker Exxon Valdez hit a reef March 24 in Prince William Sound off the Alaska coast, eventually spilling 10 million gallons of crude.

The plan was not approved for use until two days after the accident, he said.

"What was set out in the approved contingency plan, if followed, would certainly have mitigated the damage," Stevens said. "It was not. All we have to do is make what already is in place work right. People who are in charge should be allowed to make decisions.

"It was extremely unfortunate that delays were experienced in obtaining such approval from the authorities."

Nevertheless, Stevens said that since the accident, he believed the company had shown its commitment and determination to deal with the spill and its effects.

"We're going to get the job done," he said. "If the job takes longer or if we have to come back, that's what we'll do. Or we'll stay and do it as long as we can."

"We have apologized, accepted responsibility and are turning heaven and earth to set things right."

According to Stevens, Exxon had investigated the accident but "at this point we do not have an explanation."

"The weather was clear, there is no apparent indication of mechanical or electrical failure. Therefore, we are left with only one conclusion but we don't know that at this point."

It has been alleged the captain of the ship was drunk and the ship was under direction of a third mate, but Stevens said the mate was authorized and licensed to drive the vessel.

Within 24 hours of the spill, he said, 35 Exxon employees were at the scene and 200 had been hired. A week later, the force had grown to 800 and after a month, 3,000 people were involved.

So far, he said 4.7 million pounds of material and equipment had been airlifted to the area, with 465 vessels used, more than 65 miles of containment boom, 54 skimmers and 26 aircraft.

No estimate of the cost to the company had yet been determined, he said.

"A fundamental lesson relearned is that no business activity is ever totally free of risk where human factors are involved," Stevens said. "There is no question that the petroleum industry must act decisively and responsibly to respond to the many lessons growing out of the Alaska accident. Equally important, the industry must be perceived by the public as responding meaningfully."

He said calls for a boycott of Exxon products would only hurt independent Exxon dealers, and he said he was shocked that some would consider Exxon solely responsible for the recent rise in gasoline prices.

"It shows a shocking naivete about the wisdom of the American consumer and about the way the marketplace works," he said. "As you know, the market for petroleum products is set by thousands of markets, thousands of independent dealers across the nation."

On Monday, just hours before a deadline expired, Exxon submitted its cleanup and disposal strategy to the Coast Guard and Alaska state officials.

Under proposals from the oil giant, sludge recovered from the cleanup of the spill would be burned or buried and environmental laws might have to be bypassed.

The plan also makes no provisions for continuing the cleanup beyond mid-September, when poor weather and logistical problems will hamper any work.

Coast Guard officials said they would decide within a week whether to approve the plan.

Mayoral candidates discuss their views on election issues

Pampa News: Your opponent Richard Peet has suggested a county style of government, where the department heads would come and get approval from the commission before they make a purchase, might be good for the city.

McDaniel: It's very obvious that city government by and large is a lot more efficient way of doing business with a city manager. One of the most obvious situations is our turn-around between the time somebody does a service and they bill; we pay the bill within 30 days. In the county, somebody performs a service, they send the bill the pen and pencil sets.

McDaniel: Maybe Richard ought to consider what economic development is all about and what we are really trying to do. Those pen and pencil sets — I can't believe this man is really playing that point up on a regular basis. Those pen and pencil sets are nothing more than a show of appreciation to certain individuals for what they have done for Pampa ... those went to the head of Hoechst AG, a $28 billion corporation, to show our appreciation for what they have done.

PN: The argument is that those kind of perks are not available to common people for what they have done for Pampa, though.

McDaniel: Let me say that I don't think that giving three pen and pencil sets bought Hoechst Celanese, although that's been implied by my dear opponent several times. It's the most ridiculous thing I have ever heard.

PN: If this issue is not valid, why does it keep coming up?

McDaniel: I don't understand where he (Peet) is coming from. The only reason I can see is the continuing effort by my opponent to do some witch-hunting. He instigated the attorney general's investigation, which came up to this community and said there is nothing wrong with this town. We are running a good ship. I really think it's time the witch hunt be over with ...

Pampa News: You have talked about this being a clean campaign instead of a dirty one. Yet, there have been some charges leveled. What's your impression?

Peet: If you compare it with Amarillo or some of the local races, I think it's been a relatively clean campaign. Certainly there are differences of philosophy and differences of approach between Mayor McDaniel and myself. But just because there are differences doesn't mean it's a slanderous thing.

PN: You spoke at the VFW last Friday night about all the 4-1 votes in the City Commission meetings. Are you suggesting the other four commissioners are not as conscientious as they should be?

Peet: I'm not saying that. As I alluded to in a speech today (Tuesday) to the Realtors, in checking with the Finance Department just to see if I'm the only one who has gone to ask questions in person and look at invoices. I see expenditures in person ones may not see ... I have questions on some of them so I go personally to look at them. I've asked how many times commissioners come to look at things and ask what these expenditures are. What I'm hearing is that no one has come other than myself ... There was one (expenditure) last summer that said it was used for travel, but it was not used for travel.

PN: Tell me about that.

Peet: What it was used for was drug money for a bust, but the invoice showed travel to Oklahoma City.

PN: You said you believe the city is working under an illegal budget. If you believe that, why didn't you go to the attorney general or do something to attack that situation?

Peet: When I say illegal budget, I'm saying the current budget we're working under is not the budget that we voted on in September. In talking with management before he left — that's Mr. Hart — at his farewell coffee, he said yes, I was correct to have questions on it. He said I did have legitimate questions and that it does a year there have been changes made. But there really haven't been changes made, the current budget is just not the one that we approved. He explained to me the one we voted on was not the master copy and that he intended for it to be, but it wasn't. So consequently we voted on it and then got the printed budget and I've got page upon pages of various figures that are not the same as the one which we approved ... that doesn't mean there's a great, overwhelming illegality here. All it constitutes is for the commission to make an amendment to accept the printed budget and operate under it.

PN: Are you suggesting that before an expense is made it should be approved, rather than afterward, much like the county operates?

Peet: The county does this. I've even checked with the people in Randall County and they do this.

PN: But that's a style of operating county government, not city, and traditionally they are run differently.

Peet: It all depends on what your interpretation of running differently is. I do believe we should be approving of these expenditures before they are spent.

PN: Several weeks ago you mentioned returning your rodeo tickets each year and also about the mayor taking trips to the northeast. You said free rodeo tickets and such travel is not fair because it's not open to all the citizens. All citizens can't carry concealed weapons, only policemen. Doesn't the job justify what is appropriate in behavior and travel and aren't there special needs for travel for training and education for city employees and elected officials?

Peet: I think there are, but I think as a commission you evaluate them. You don't just say, "We've

Annual report card paints gloomy picture of U.S. schools

By JILL LAWRENCE
AP Education Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — American education is stagnating by nearly every measure in a new comparison of school performance across the country, Education Secretary Lauro Cavazos said today in releasing the discouraging report card.

The sixth annual State Education Performance Chart shows a decline in the national high school graduation rate and falling scores on college entrance exams in half the states.

"We must do better," Cavazos said in a statement accompanying the report. "We must revitalize education in America. I am challenging states and districts to establish education improvement targets."

Cavazos said he would write every governor, state schools chief and school board president in the country to urge them to adopt his targets, which include boosting high school graduation rates to 90 percent and cutting in half the number of children who fail a grade.

"These goals are doable," he said. "We must focus not on the minimum, but on the best."

The controversial performance chart, known as the wall chart, shows a general lack of progress despite the continuing spate of reform efforts and ever-rising education spending — up to $3,977 per student on this year's chart compared to $3,756 last year.

National scores on the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) fell from 906 to 904 (on a scale of 400 to 1,600) from 1987 to 1988. Fully 14 of the 22 states in which the SAT is the dominant college entrance exam registered declines.

Cavazos

Scores on the American College Testing Program (ACT), on a scale of 1 to 36, showed a scant .1-point gain. And 11 of the 28 states in which the ACT dominates posted decreases.

Looking at trends since the first wall chart was issued in 1982, one bright note was a continuous rise in the percentage of students taking the Advanced Placement test qualifying them for college credit, from 5 to 11 percent. The department attributed the climb largely to doubled Hispanic involvement and an 83 percent increase in participation by blacks.

The high school graduation rate rose from 69.5 percent in the first chart to 71.7 percent in 1985. But it fell slightly in 1986 to 71.6 percent and dropped to 71.1 percent in 1987, the latest year for which statistics could be calculated.

Minnesota ranked first with a high school completion rate of 90.6 percent, while the District of Columbia was last at 55.5 percent. Wyoming showed the most improvement, zooming from 25th in 1982 to second in 1987. Michigan did the worst, falling from 28th to 48th.

The department noted that Alabama, Mississippi, South Carolina and the District, all with relatively high poverty rates, have registered some of the largest increases in college entrance test scores since 1982. It said this shows that states with large proportions of disadvantaged students can make great progress.

However, while South Carolina showed the most improvement of any state, with a 48-point gain in SAT scores since 1982, it still ranked dead last this year among the 22 states in which the SAT is the dominant test, with a score of 838. The District was second from the bottom despite healthy gains. Alabama tied for the top in ACT improvement, up nine-tenths of a point since 1982, but was ranked 21st of the 28 states this year where most students take the ACT. Mississippi was came up 28th or last, with an average score of 16.2.

Mississippi also ranked last — this time among all the states — in per-pupil spending. The state spent $2,350 per student in 1988. Alaska was the highest at $8,010, followed by New York at $6,497.

The wall chart also compares states on teacher salaries, pupil-teacher ratios and education reform efforts. Alaskan teachers were paid the highest in 1988, $40,424, while South Dakotans were at the bottom with $19,758. The national average last year was $28,008, up from $19,274 in 1982.

North jury deliberations in 11th day

By PETE YOST Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The jury in Oliver North's trial adopted a more rigorous work schedule before entering an 11th day of deliberations today on criminal charges against the former White House aide.

The panel of nine women and three men deliberated 7½ hours Tuesday, bringing the total spent since April 21 contemplating North's fate to 53.

The jurors have put in six-hour workdays on three occasions since that time, but hadn't gone longer than that until Tuesday.

The panel has moved from the courtroom of U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell, where it had been poring over 1,300 pages of exhibits, into a jury room, presumably to consider North's guilt or innocence.

There has been no word from the jury since April 24, when the last of eight notes was sent to Gesell. The notes ranged from requests for paper clips to a plea for a nurse to monitor the high blood pressure of a juror.

Meanwhile, 10 news organizations including The Associated Press said in a court filing they should be allowed to seek disclosure of a document in the case.

Gesell said in an April 22 ruling that the document is classified. It summarizes highly sensitive intelligence on a CIA-assisted shipment of Hawk missiles from Israel to Iran in November 1985.

The document is being shown to the jury, but withheld from the public at the request of the National Security Agency, the super secret agency which collected the intelligence intercepts.

Numerous court decisions "have recognized that the press has standing to assert rights of public access to proceedings and records in criminal cases," said the court filing.

Gesell has been directed by an appeals court to compile a record spelling out national security concerns over possible disclosure of the document. North's lawyers referred to the stipulation in closing arguments, but the NSA says the document itself must remain under seal.

North used the stipulation to show CIA director William Casey and deputy national security adviser John Poindexter knew at the time that missiles were aboard the flight, yet agreed to cover up their knowledge from Congress.

The other news organizations seeking disclosure are Cable News Network Inc.; Capital Cities-ABC Inc.; CBS Inc.; Dow Jones & Co. Inc.; National Broadcasting Co. Inc.; National Public Radio; the New York Times Co.; the Times Mirror Co. and The Washington Post.

State Senate OKs $500 million to equalize funding in education

By SCOTT ROTHSCHILD Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — Lawmakers and education officials said more money is needed to equalize funding between rich and poor school districts, but the $500 million increase in public education funding is all the state can afford.

"I think it's as much as can be done under the circumstances," said Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby on Tuesday after the Senate sent the funding bill to the House on a 31-0 vote.

State Board of Education Chairman Monte Hasie of Lubbock said, "We understand the state's economic difficulties, but we believe that this is a great step forward in an effort to improve adequacy and equity in the school finance system."

But representatives of poor school districts said the $500 million over the next two years was only a Band-Aid.

"It's like you're dying of hunger and you get another meal, so you're going to live another day," said Craig Foster, executive director of the Equity Center, an association comprised of poor schools.

Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, said his funding bill represented the first outlay of a $2 billion state commitment over the next five years to try to erase the disparity between schools in poor and rich areas of the state.

"The longest journey begins with the first step. This puts us on the road to equity," said Parker, who is chairman of the Senate Education Committee.

In addition to the school funding increase, the Senate passed measures that would provide state support for the construction of school buildings and reward school districts that improve student academic performance.

Sen. Carlos Truan, D-Corpus Christi, voted for the increase, but said, "obviously we need to do more than $500 million."

McLean youth going on U.S.S.R. trip

McLEAN — Dollie Haynes from the United Methodist Church in McLean has been selected a citizen diplomat of peace to the U.S.S.R. this summer.

Haynes is to represent the Northwest Texas Conference on the Mission of Peace sponsored by the South Central Jurisdiction of the United Methodist Church.

Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Haynes of McLean, Dollie is recently named as the valedictorian, best leader, and best all

He and other members of the Senate Hispanic Caucus issued a statement saying their support for the increase "should not be misconstrued as support for the proposition that this bill will bring the Legislature within its constitutional mandate."

The state is the target of a lawsuit by poor school districts who claim Texas' method of funding public schools discriminates against them because they are unable to raise as much in local tax dollars to supplement their schools as wealthy school districts can.

In 1987, a state district court judge agreed with the poor districts and declared the state's financing system unconstitutional. An appeals court, however, said it was up to state lawmakers to correct the problem. The case is pending before the Texas Supreme Court.

"I am also persuaded that if we do nothing this session that the Supreme Court will uphold the state district court's decision in some form," Parker said. Lt. Gov. Hobby said he hoped the Senate action would halt legal action against the state on school finances. "I think that suit has very little merit anyway, but what little merit it may ever have had would certainly be removed by this bill," he said.

Parker said more education funds are needed, but that only $500 million was available without a tax increase. Gov. Bill Clinton has said he will veto any tax increase this session.

He said he hoped districts receiving more money would use the funds to increase teacher salaries.

The Senate also approved a proposed constitutional amendment by Sen. Bill Haley, D-Center, that would help local school districts receive a lower interest rate on school bonds. Under the amendment, the bonds would be backed by the state's nearly $8 billion Permanent School Fund.

Rogers, Parton, Nelson perform at space center

HOUSTON (AP) — Singer Kenny Rogers boosted the spirits of 15,000 NASA employees, their families and friends and introduced a pair of new songs in a free, open-air concert at the Johnson Space Center.

Rogers, the product of a Houston housing project, was joined Tuesday evening by country singers Dolly Parton and Willie Nelson on the stage erected beside the space center's rocket park.

The concert was taped and will be shown as a one-hour special May 20 on NBC.

The special will include the premiere of Rogers' new song and video, "Planet Texas," a tale of a Texas cowboy who encounters three horsemen from outer space. Rogers described "Planet Texas" as a "high-tech Western" that includes a fantasy about time travel.

Although his concert brought a message of hope, Rogers said its aim was broader than the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, which the singer said has been revitalized since the Challenger disaster.

Rogers said his show also was dedicated to native Americans and "oppressed people" — citing those who have climbed the Berlin Wall, who must cope with apartheid in South Africa.

Rogers also performed for the first time Tuesday night another new song, "Something Inside So Strong."

China's government rejects student ultimatum

Student leader Wang Dan, right, of Beijing University presents list of demands Tuesday to government representative Li Zh-tian.

BEIJING (AP) — China's Communist leaders today rejected student protesters' ultimatum for recognition of their new independent unions, setting the stage for yet another pro-democracy demonstration on Thursday.

They also claimed unidentified non-students who oppose Communist rule have been advising student protesters from behind the scenes and suggested leading dissident Fang Lizhi might be one of them.

The accusation seemed to herald government action against liberal thinkers admired by the students, similar to the attacks on Fang and other leading independent intellectuals that followed student protests in 1987.

Meanwhile, Beijing police announced they would close central Tiananmen Square on Thursday, the 70th anniversary of China's first student protests, apparently to try to head off a new student march.

The student protesters' United Association of Beijing Universities had said it would call a demonstration on Thursday if the government refused to recognize it and hold talks on student demands for a free press, an end to official corruption and other reforms.

The protests, which began April 15, have been the largest in China's 40 years of Communist rule.

Tens of thousands of Beijing students have joined in marches, sit-ins, pamphleteering and a class boycott to press their demands. Students in a half-dozen other cities have held smaller marches; some students in Tianjin and Shanghai have boycotted class.

"Behind the students are a very few people ... trying to create social disturbances," government spokesman Yuan Mu told a news conference, excerpts of which were broadcast on television and radio.

Yuan stopped short of directly accusing Fang, an internationally renowned astrophysicist, of advising the protesters. But he questioned Fang's patriotism and said, "The role Mr. Fang wants to play in the current disturbances will be decided by his words and deeds."

Fang, who previously has called Marxism a failure and proposed multi-party democracy, has not taken part in any of this spring's student protests. Speeches he made on campuses were blamed for stirring up 1986-87 pro-democracy marches, and he was ousted from the party.

Yuan said he "cannot discount the possibility" that some students also will be accused of illegal actions. However, he said the government believes most of the students are patriotic.

Yuan said he hoped there would be no demonstration Thursday. "But I hope and sincerely trust that if a demonstration takes place those students will take precautions to ensure public order."

He rejected the ultimatum the students delivered by bicycle Tuesday to government officials: "How can a dialogue take place if even before the dialogue one party sets the do's and don'ts that the other side must obey?"

Two groups of student representatives from the independent association met with government officials today to receive the response.

"I'm not satisfied with this because they didn't recognize us," said one student leader who met with the officials. "I believe that it's the Chinese people who are 'manipulating' us and the Chinese people who are 'using' us," he said sarcastically.

South Korean radicals set riot police on fire

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Six riot troopers were killed and 10 critically injured when they were set on fire by radical students today while trying to rescue five police officers being held hostage at a college, police said.

The militants had set fire to a barricade drenched with paint thinner as the troopers were climbing over it, police said. Several officers, wrapped in flames, leaped out of windows while others were burned or asphyxiated, said police officials, who declined to be identified.

The troopers were killed during a dawn raid on Dongui University in the southern port of Pusan as they attempted to break into a room on the seventh floor of the school library to free the hostages, the officials said.

National police headquarters in Seoul said it was the worst loss of police life in recent years; officers were unable to recall any comparable incident.

Police said more riot troopers were expected to die. One student was critically injured and about 10 troopers and students received minor wounds, officials said.

All the hostages were later released unharmed after professors at the private college pleaded with the students, police said, adding that 88 students were arrested and held for questioning. Students had seized the five police officers Tuesday after staging a violent demonstration to protest the firing of warning shots by police at attackers who menaced a police station on Monday, police said. The students demanded police exchange the hostages for a student held by authorities.

National Police Chief Jo Jong-suk resigned to accept responsibility for the deaths. In Korea, senior officials traditionally resign to atone for a disaster even if it is not their fault.

President Roh Tae-woo and top ministers condemned the incident at an emergency meeting and warned they would crack down on militants to halt a wave of violent protests that has hit South Korea in recent weeks.

Opposition parties also denounced the deaths today and called for an end to political violence.

"Radical student demonstrations have reached the stage of armed struggle in which murder and arson are committed to achieve their goal of revolution," the government said in a statement.

Roh was to go on national television to announce new measures to try and halt violent protests. Hundreds of radical students calling for Roh's overthrow battled riot police around at least two campuses today in Seoul. Protesters cheered at Sungkyunkwan University when several troopers were set ablaze by firebombs, but other police quickly doused the flames and the officers were not hurt.

Protests in South Korea rarely result in deaths in spite of the intense violence of street clashes in which protesters pelt riot police with firebombs and rocks. Riot police are normally armed only with tear gas and batons.

Riot police are engulfed in flames.

Space shuttle countdown advances toward launch

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The countdown advanced smoothly today toward Thursday's scheduled launch of Atlantis with five astronauts and a robot probe to Venus.

"This time we're going to see if we can get it right," astronaut David Walker, who will command the flight, said Tuesday. Four days earlier, a launch attempt was called off just 31 seconds before the planned liftoff.

"Looks like the vehicle's been turned around real well," Walker told reporters. "We're extremely pleased the folks here at the cape were able to do such a good and quick job getting it ready to go again."

The other crew members are pilot Ronald Grabe and mission specialists Mary Cleave, Mark Lee and Norman Thagard.

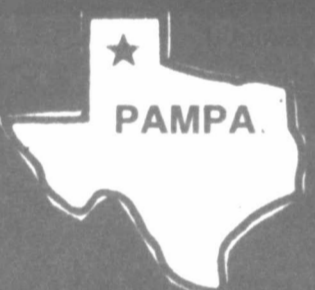

Liftoff is scheduled for 1:48 p.m. Thursday.

"There are no major issues in sight," Robert Crippen, NASA's deputy director of operations, said after a mission management meeting Tuesday. "We're pressing on."

Shuttle weather forecasters said there was a 70 percent chance conditions would be favorable. The only concern was a threat of crosswinds greater than 17 mph that could be dangerous if the shuttle had to make an emergency landing on a runway near the launch pad.

Atlantis will carry into space the $550 million Magellan probe, which the astronauts are to dispatch on a 15-month journey to Venus. The probe is to orbit the planet and map its cloud-shrouded surface with a high-resolution radar system.

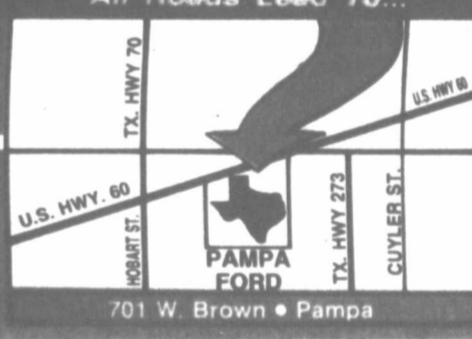

The launch attempt was halted on Friday because of a short circuit in a fuel pump.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Opinion

Feds can interfere with local efforts

President Bush campaigned last year promising to be an "education president." The country does need better education, surely — especially at the pre-college level. Some schools perform admirably, but many schools, particularly in poor areas, are little more than violent factories of illiteracy. We need something better, both to do justice to our children and to provide the brains we'll need to compete with the Asian and European nations whose children routinely excel.

Our "education president" outlined his plans recently, but they involve little more than throwing more taxpayers' dollars at the problems. The Department of Education already is spending $21.9 billion in tax dollars for fiscal year 1989. Bush proposed another $441 million for a hodge-podge of new programs.

Some of the programs he proposed seem commendable enough. But, under the glossy surface, they involve the federal government further in an area in which it already has done enough damage. Student test scores have fallen sharply the past 30 years, precisely the time federal funding and meddling have increased.

Bush's proposal largely involves rewards for good teachers and schools. He wants to give $250 million in merit grants to top schools and $100 million for a magnet-school program. Much as we might want to encourage good schools, the main problem now is transforming the worst schools — many no more than juvenile combat zones — into places of learning.

Preferably, this must be accomplished by encouraging a free-market school system. Private schools have worked miracles with supposedly "un-educable" ghetto children. But Bush recently backed off his campaign position of giving tax credits to parents who send their children to private schools. For many poor children this will mean suffering even more uninspirational pedagogy from the public schools; it will mean being dreadfully handicapped in their future careers.

In the public schools, discipline itself is in short stock. If we are to have public schools, students and teachers need a place of study free of violence. This requires not more money, but a new spirit. Joe Clark, the celebrated club-wielding high school principal in New Jersey, showed how one determined man can drive the hoodlums from a school and provide the good students with a place to learn.

But this is a local problem, involving the support of local parents and school officials. Federal education bureaucrats can only interfere with local efforts. The president himself can help only as a cheerleader. Anything else is folly.

The war ends with a sellout

WASHINGTON — The Capitol nights, to paraphrase the poet of the Yukon, have seen queer sights, but the queerest they ever did see was the night on the Hill when they passed a bill that butchers democracy.

The bill, of course, was an act that should have been titled "An Act to Sell Out the Freedom Fighters of Nicaragua," for that is what this infamous piece of legislation involves. Sen. Bill Armstrong of Colorado called it a "betrayal," and he had it exactly right.

By one count, this is the 63rd piece of legislation since 1981 relating to the communist takeover of Nicaragua. In this period the Congress has breathed hot and breathed cold; it has advanced, it has retreated; it has extended aid — aid amounting to $311 million — and it has denied aid.

Under the bill that cleared the Senate on the night of April 13, another $66 million would be authorized in non-military "humanitarian" aid. This will salve consciences; it will buy no resistance.

While the Congress has backed and filled, and shilled and shallied, the Marxist Sandinistas have clenched their hold on this pathetic country. They have trampled upon civil rights, harassed both press and church, raised the largest standing army in Central America and armed it with $500 million in Soviet weapons.

With the act of April 13, the Sandinistas no longer have anything to fear from the Contras, for the Contras will cease to exist as a viable military force. The civil war has ended, not with a bang but a sellout.

Perhaps this was to be expected. Members of Congress, bitterly divided on the whole issue of supporting resistance to Soviet adventures, wanted nothing so much as to get the Contras out of their hair. What was not expected was the astonishing, jaw-dropping "side argument" that became an implicit part of the bill.

James J. Kilpatrick

The thing is incredible. The deal that was reached between Secretary of State Jim Baker and five members of Congress cannot withstand the first breeze that blows off the Constitution. The Supreme Court emphatically has rejected the idea of a one-house veto. This deal apparently would permit a one-man veto.

"Apparently," because the weasel words of this extralegal accord defy easy understanding. The aid is to continue through Feb. 28, 1990, unless ... Unless what? Unless any one of eight men (or perhaps 13 men) decides the aid should stop on Nov. 30. The deal repudiates the very essence of representative government.

Secretary Baker has written a letter to confirm the deal. This is the language. It has the clarity of crude oil. The assistance will not be obligated beyond Nov. 30 "except in the context of consultation among the executive, the Senate majority and minority leaders, the speaker of the House of Representatives and the minority leader, and the relevant authorization and appropriations committees ..."

Pause for breath. Ponder, if you please, what exactly is meant by the "context of consultation." Now let us continue, for this is the unbelievable part. Aid will continue after Nov. 30 "only if affirmed via letters from the bipartisan leadership of Congress and relevant House and Senate authorization committees and appropriations subcommittees."

The Democratic leadership has put its own interpretation on the language. Aid will cease in November unless eight men write letters of affirmation. These eight are Sens. Claiborne Pell of Rhode Island, Jesse Helms of North Carolina, Daniel Inouye of Hawaii and Bob Kasten of Wisconsin; and Reps. Jamie Whitten of Mississippi, Silvio Conte of Massachusetts, David Obey of Wisconsin and Mickey Edwards of Oklahoma. Collectively they lead the House and Senate committees on foreign relations and the subcommittees on foreign operations within the two appropriations committees.

It is possible, as seen through the gauzy veil of this "side argument," that five others may also have veto power. These are George Mitchell of Maine, majority leader of the Senate; Bob Dole of Kansas, Senate minority leader; House Speaker Jim Wright of Texas, House majority leader Tom Foley of Washington and House minority leader Bob Michel of Illinois.

What arrogance! What consummate gall! How in the name of the Constitution can a legislative veto be vetoed in any one of these distinguished gentlemen? During Senate debate, Helms denounced the deal as unconstitutional. Not a single member arose to dispute him or to defend the scheme. This was a done deal, and a shameful deal it was — shameful in every way.

What good is newborn babe?

Fifty years ago, Jan. 26, 1939, before two dozen people at George Washington University, Danish scientist Niels Bohr announced, "We've done it!"

Niels Bohr and his colleagues had split the uranium atom.

In the half century since, harnessed nuclear energy has healed the sick, brightened our nights and enforced world peace.

Now it's 50 years later.

March 23, 1989, Dr. Stanley Pons of the University of Utah announced, "We've done it!"

Dr. Pons and his colleagues had achieved cold fusion in a desk-top laboratory jar.

What might that accomplish?

An electricity generator no larger than a cigarette lighter adequate to power a city.

Cars that would run for years on a thimble full of water.

The limitless clean energy of fusion would be "cheap enough" to desalinate seawater and turn the world's deserts green.

The accomplishment of fusion could be as significant and as beneficial as the discovery of fire.

Now it has become a race for the potentially astronomical rewards; a race among individuals and universities and laboratories and nations wanting patents.

And there is another factor creating skepticism. There is as much jealousy among scientists as among Hollywood starlets. For half a century, physics has been the "dominant" science. This discovery — assuming verification — involves a process related to the science of physics. The discovery, however, was not made by a physicist — but by a chemist. "Little Chemistry" has a chance to rub the nose of "Big Physics" in its own arrogance.

Many of the "go-slow" voices we are hearing are the voices of physicists. They will yield this breakthrough to another discipline only grudgingly.

And, too, they can recall scientific "alerts" deriving from nothing more than a laboratory fluke or somebody's false reading of an experiment.

Nonetheless, the potential prize justifies excitement: a small device that produces four times as much energy as it consumes. The hydrogen bomb is uncontrolled fusion; this promises to control that energy.

And it's so simple: A thin rod of palladium surrounded by a spiral of platinum wire, immersed in heavy water and powered by an electric battery.

Our planet's lakes and oceans contain enough heavy water — easily extracted — to meet all the world's energy needs for millions of years.

Dr. Gary Sandquist, director of nuclear engineering, University of Utah, expects you will be driving a hydrogen-powered automobile within 10 years.

And fusion has applications in medicine, food preservation and space propulsion beyond the limits of our imagining.

When Michael Faraday produced electricity from a small box in the 1800s, he was asked, "But what's it good for?" He replied, "What good is any newborn babe?"

And what has Tony Coelho been up to?

By WILLIAM A. RUSHER

Another pillar of House Speaker Jim Wright's political empire is showing distinct signs of crumbling under stress.

California Rep. Tony Coelho is the Democratic whip of the House and thus its third-ranking Democratic member. Coelho has always been one of Wright's noisiest supporters, and for that matter one of the House's most vocal and combative members. Though neither man will thank me for the analogy, Coelho is in some ways a sort of Democratic Newt Gingrich.

So I was more than ordinarily interested the other day when New York Times reporter Robert D. Hershey Jr. disclosed that Coelho had "profited handsomely from junk bonds bought in 1986 from Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. and recorded as a purchase of his campaign committee." Hershey was following up a story that had originated in The Washington Post the preceding day.

The fly in this particular ointment is that House rules forbid members to convert campaign funds to their personal use. A further significant aspect of this transaction (on which Coelho made a nifty profit of $13,000 on a $100,000 investment) is that, according to Hershey, "Drexel in most cases confines" these lucrative investment opportunities "to institutions or long-standing private customers."

Coelho himself thus wouldn't qualify, not having a personal account at Drexel. But Drexel's political action committee had made contributions both to Coelho's own campaign committee and to the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee when Coelho was its chairman. And it was the former which Drexel first listed as the purchaser of the investment.

Nevertheless Coelho, while refusing to answer questions about the matter, issued a statement through his office insisting that the transaction was strictly a personal one: "I borrowed the money, made the investment, sold it, made a profit and reported the transaction on my financial disclosure statement for 1986, as I am required to do."

If this is true, it would be helpful to know: (1) from whom Coelho borrowed the money; (2) why the purchase was carried on Drexel's books as having been made by Coelho's campaign committee, "Coelho for Congress," and (3) why Drexel's check for the sale proceeds was likewise made out to "Coelho for Congress." Neither Coelho's office nor a Drexel spokesman would comment when Hershey asked for an explanation of these anomalies. The statement from Coelho's office blames the whole thing on a "computer error made by Drexel."

The Post's story points out a further anomaly. The debentures bought by Coelho (or whoever) were ordered on April 10, 1986, and in the ordinary course payment would have been required within five days. But the Post quoted Coelho as saying his accountant had sent the payment on May 1. Was there, then, in effect a no-interest loan by Drexel to the congressman, to cover the interval? Or were modifications in the form or record of the transaction made during that period? Hershey reported that Coelho's accountant could not be reached for comment.

Well, he'd better turn up and start commenting soon — and Coelho too, and the embattled firm of Drexel Burnham Lambert. The liberal media normally prefer chewing on Republicans, and above all conservative Republicans like (for example) Ed Meese. But it's no skin off their noses if an arrogant cabal of rapacious Democrats like Wright, Coelho & Co. is toppled and/or jailed and replaced by some such likable and honorable man as majority leader Tom Foley. Given the kind of fumes that are emanating from the Wright camp these days, the press can probably be counted on to hang in there.

And when they notice the damage Wright and Coelho are doing to their party, the House Democrats will probably draw the inevitable conclusion.

Peet

gone there and gone there and gone there," and sit down and pay the bill. Let's sit down and prioritize what travel we have to take.

PN: The city manager has come under fire recently with the Chief Eberz situation. Are you basically pleased with the job he (Jack Chaney) has done?

Peet: I want to clarify he (Eberz) was not fired. He quit. I am in agreement with management, and I think it's a step forward in his selection process to follow what the charter outlines.

PN: Jack Chaney is a hands-on city manager. You talk about a hands-on City Commission. Does that mean you don't care what the department head says and someone else can even make a move when the department head is out of town?

Peet: In talking with management he has related to me, and said so in the press, there have been discussions of changes with the chief. We hired a manager to run the day-to-day and I have to give him that freedom.

PN: There was criticism at the Pampa Board of Realtors meeting that while you are saying 'shop Pampa,' your wife is operating a business in Borger.

Peet: First of all my wife is not me. What she does with her business is her business. As I related today, a couple of factors related to her getting involved in this. First, it's a very personal friend of hers who lives in Borger who owns the building. There is an existing business here in Pampa of a similar nature that, if she had opened here, would have certainly put a burden on both.

PN: When talking about filling up the mall, as you have, obviously you are going to be bringing in businesses to compete with the ones here. The argument could be made that the business people of Pampa might not want any new businesses to compete with them.

Peet: I agree with you there. Probably there will be competing businesses, not that that should be our aim. Our aim should be to get a variety of businesses. That's one of the complaints I hear is that we don't have enough kinds of different businesses.

PN: Are you going to push a tax break? Peet: If that's what it's going to take. This is a commission, but the role of the mayor is to sit down and generate those kinds of discussions. That's for the commission to decide. I'd like to call in business people and see what their desires are.

PN: Are you concerned that you are campaigning on tax breaks or cuts and then saying you're not guaranteeing them? Every politician on earth would agree that tax cuts would be nice if it could be worked out.

Peet: Absolutely. It's not to be political rhetoric, but something I'd like to see and work toward. When I say tax break, we're also talking about the idea of utility breaks. I'm asking, what can we do to enhance management in the mall to enhance businesses to come to the mall?

PN: Are you suggesting tax breaks to retail businesses that pay $3.35 an hour? Most economic development experts would counter that those kinds of jobs won't support an economy. Don't you need industry jobs that pay eight or nine dollars an hour?

Peet: They go hand and hand. We can't do one without the other. The primary goal of the chamber and industrial foundation is to do that and I commend them.

PN: Have you criticized the city paying the chamber of commerce $30,000 to $35,000 to operate?

Peet: My concern is that I hear tell of a potential business coming to Pampa. However, the information I'm receiving is coming from voters calling to ask if what they were hearing was true. I have not been informed by the mayor or commission what's going on.

PN: Mayor McDaniel said he couldn't discuss it with you because you left the meeting but that every other commissioner was briefed.

Peet: I think that's the role of the mayor, to take that initiative in an executive session and brief us.

PN: What are your political aspirations? Peet: There's no telling. I would short-change myself if I didn't have a goal of serving in Congress. I don't see this as a stepping stone, but as training.

SUMMARY OF MAJOR ISSUES

Here are six major issues in the Pampa mayoral race and summaries of how incumbent David McDaniel and Commissioner Richard Peet line up on them.

Economic development
Peet: It is time to see results from the investments the city has made or reassess the success of some very expensive economic development policies.

McDaniel: Progress has been good, as evidenced by efforts to get Hoechst Celanese to stay in the area and the number of inquiries made into locating businesses in the city.

New industry
Peet: Upset he has not been kept informed of potential businesses which have looked into Pampa. Believes in "looking a business prospect in the eye across the table" and negotiating openly.

McDaniel: Suggests that Peet has been in the classroom too long and does not know how business operates in the real world. The city must continue to plant economic seeds and nurture them to possible fruition.

Training and travel
Peet: City must re-evaluate travel expenses and the necessity of all training and travel.

McDaniel: Critical of Peet for being the only commissioner to not be trained in emergency management and city administration and says

Peet has not been to the training and is in no position to judge its worth.

Tax breaks
Peet: Discussions must start after the elections on ways to reduce the local tax burden.

McDaniel: To reduce business taxes will move the burden onto the private citizen or force the city to live off fund reserves in lieu of regular tax dollar income.

Dealing with the public
Peet: Criticizes McDaniel for not being a good listener to public concerns and says elected officials must set aside their personal prejudices regarding public policy and heed the desires of their constituents.

McDaniel: An elected official must listen to the public, but also keep in mind that representing all the people does not mean just representing the ones who make the most noise. An elected official must also call on expert advice to weigh the potential worth of the many ideas that are presented to them.

City government
Peet: Accuses the city of "Lone Ranger" politics that have excluded the will and voice of most citizens.

McDaniel: Points to the number of 4-1 votes in which Peet was the dissenting opinion and says it is not hard to figure out who the "Lone Ranger" is.

error, and on the recommendation of professional people he took it to the AG.

McDaniel: He supposedly did that. Those are the figures he gave the CPA firm. Our city expenses are audited every year. A CPA has to place his stamp on that audit every year and says he is liable for any mistakes or problems... the city staff has to also look at this whole process. They talked to him and he didn't believe them. The City Commission had to look at it. We talked to him and he didn't believe us. The attorney general's office came in and investigated this whole process and gave everyone a clean bill of health, yet Richard would not accept any of those.

PN: Peet said that the city is operating under an illegal budget. Comment on that.

McDaniel: Here again we're back to this phantom Peet budgetary process that I don't know where he's even coming from. Keep in mind this is the same individual who did call on an attorney general's investigation... This is just another push by Richard — I don't know what he wants to do now. Does he want to have an attorney general's investigation of me? Is that what he's trying to do?

PN: On the issue of streets, does the city need to be doing more than seal coating?

McDaniel: It's interesting that this has just recently evolved, primarily because some people started asking me what we can do with our streets, primarily the concrete streets that are deteriorating... Let's go back to when the seal coating process was suspended for a while. The streets started deteriorating, we had all kinds of problems and it took us several years to catch up... The city is attempting to get our streets back in shape.

PN: It can't be denied we have terrible problems with our streets...

McDaniel: Yes, the streets you are referring to

Soviet wheat sale plan praised

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush's announced plan to sell 1.5 million metric tons of subsidized wheat to the Soviet Union was praised in Congress, but didn't settle concerns about the future of the export bonus program. Senate Republican leader Bob Dole, who had pressed the president to use export subsidies in the Soviet sale, said Bush's decision Tuesday sends "a strong signal America is playing to win in the international marketplace."

"I applaud it," said Rep. Dan Glickman, a Kansas Democrat who chairs the House subcommittee on wheat, soybeans and feed grain. "But in announcing this deal the administration did not quell the concern about the future of the Export Enhancement Program."

Senate Agriculture Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., said he talked to the president by telephone Monday night and urged him to approve the deal.

"There should be grain sales to the Soviets," he said. "I'm a strong supporter of using the Export Enhancement Program when it makes sense."

Competition in the international wheat market is strong, with many other countries using heavy subsidies to lure buyers. The Export Enhancement Program has been the U.S. response to the competition, but its future has been in doubt.

The Bush administration, following the lead of the Reagan administration, has called for eventual elimination of all export subsidies worldwide, though the president has said he would not do away with EEP unless other countries did likewise.

Nevertheless, no EEP sales have been processed since the end of February and Congress has been after the administration to start moving.

are bucking. They are going to have to be replaced one of these days. The question is how do we do that. We've done several things already. The most obvious is Somerville. We did that as part of our '87 street improvement program. A lot of the bumps were taken out last year in the downtown area. If you drive downtown, you can see where asphalt has been filled in to take out some bumps. A lot of the streets will have to be dug up and relaid. There is no question about that. It's just a matter of when.

PN: One of the campaign platforms of your opponent is the possibility of reducing taxes or giving utility breaks. Why haven't you suggested the same kinds of breaks?

McDaniel: If you drop a tax on one side, somebody else on the other side has got to pick it up. Are we going to ask the home owners to subsidize the small businesses? I think this goes back to that I don't think my opponent really understands what economic development is all about. Apparently he is trying to develop only the retail part... honestly, retail follows industry, industry does not follow retail. If Celanese were to pull up, you'd see Hi-Land Fashions wondering if we ought to stay here. If Hi-Land Fashions pulled up, I don't think Celanese is going to wonder about whether to stay or not. I know where my opponent is coming from. He's now going to say he can cut out of the budget two or three hundred thousand dollars to pay the difference. I say to him, how much dog food can we cut? He has arbitrarily cut across the line without giving any thought to what he is doing. He did it last year...

PN: He denies that is true.
McDaniel: I saw the document. You saw the document. And when you look at it, apparently he went through and just started cutting items. Some of the things he's pulling out will totally eliminate our whole thrust of economic development. I really think that what he would prefer to do is pull us out of the TEXCEL program.

PN: What are your long-term political goals?
McDaniel: To get re-elected Saturday.

Officials clear explosives from interstate

By WENDY E. LANE
Associated Press Writer
SWEETWATER (AP)—An all-terrain forklift was used by military authorities to remove explosives from an interstate highway after a truck loaded with explosives overturned when the driver swerved to miss a deer. Authorities closed a seven-mile section of Interstate 20 around Sweetwater for more than 14 hours Tuesday after the truck carrying eight rocket pods, each consisting of six rockets, ran off the road and overturned. The driver and a passenger sustained minor injuries. Military explosives experts from Fort Hood in Killeen and Fort Sill in Oklahoma worked for more than three hours to remove the rockets, each of which carried 644 M-77 grenades, according to the Texas Department of Public Safety.

The military cargo was being taken to Dyess Air Force Base in Abilene, about 40 miles east of the spill, where it is to be inspected by the Army and LTV Corp., which manufactured the weapons, said Dyess public affairs officer Master Sgt. Al Dostal. Hours after the 12:05 a.m. accident, explosives experts inspected the scene and told state officials there was no danger.

Harvesters rout Dumas

DUMAS.— Matt Brock and James Bybee hit home runs to power Pampa past Dumas 16-6 Tuesday in a District 1-4A baseball game.

Bybee and Brock accounted for seven runs batted in for the Harvesters, who hang onto third place in the district standings with a 9-5 record.

Sophomore righthander Quincy Williams survived a shaky start to pick up his fifth mound win without a setback.

Bybee's three-run homer in the third inning gave Pampa a comfortable 11-4 lead. Brock's two-run clout came in the seventh inning.

Dumas scored four runs in the first inning off Williams, who settled down and allowed only two hits the rest of the way. Williams allowed four hits altogether while striking out nine and walking three, one intentionally.

Williams also helped his own cause with a two-run single as the Harvesters launched 16 hits against three Dumas pitchers. Bybee also had a single and a sacrifice fly while Brock had a run-scoring single.

Billy Wortham had a two-run double and Brandon Knutson knocked in two runs with a base hit. Mark Aderholt had a double.

Pampa plays at Levelland Saturday with the game starting at 2 p.m.

Optimist baseball roundup

Sullins Plumbing opened the season with a 14-4 win over Triangle Well Service in a Babe Ruth 13-year-old game Tuesday night at Optimist Park.

Greg Moore and Andy Elsheimer pitched for Sullins with Moore posting the win. Moore started and went four innings, allowing two runs while striking out eight and giving up three hits. Elsheimer gave up two runs on three hits while striking out six in the last three innings.

Mike Foote had a single and double and Rodney Scott had two singles to lead Sullins in hitting. Others with one hit each were Moore, T.J. Crawford, Cory Davis, Colby Walters and Chris Brawley.

Jeremiah Downs was the leading hitter for Triangle with three singles. Devin King, Justin Long and Greg McDaniel each had a single.

Williams was the starter and losing pitcher. Downs relieved and pitched most of the game.

Glo-Valve 7, Dean's Pharmacy 1

Glo-Valve Service ended Dean's Pharmacy's 17-game win streak with a 7-1 victory in Bambino play last night.

Todd Finney pitched a three-hitter for Glo-Valve. He threw only 88 pitches, striking out 11 and walking only two.

Brad Baldrige broke up Finney's bid for a shutout with a sixth inning triple scoring Jeremy Morris, who had walked. Baldrige and Morris had the only other hits for Dean's.

Albert Solis was the leading hitter for Glo-Valve with two hits, including a double and two runs batted in. Dale Noble, Derrick Archer, Clay Schick, Rayford Young and Finney also had hits for Glo-Valve. Pete Jiminez scored two runs and made a fine running catch in the first inning to save a run.

Solis robbed two Dean's players of hits with outstanding catches. Clint Cox and Young also had defensive gems for Glo-Valve.

Losing pitcher was Justin Westbrook, who gave up only three earned runs on seven hits while striking out five and walking two. Four costly errors led to four unearned Glo-Valve runs.

Glo-Valve is tied for first place with Dixie Parts, 15-12 winners over Holmes Gift Shoppe in Monday's game.

Pistons sweep over Celtics

BOSTON (AP) — The Detroit Pistons outscored Boston 27-8 in the last 9:17 and, behind Vinnie Johnson's 25 points, completed a 3-0 sweep with a 100-85 victory Tuesday night that ended the Celtics' shortest playoff season in 33 years.

Detroit held Boston under 100 points for the third straight game and limited the Celtics to 30 points after they led 55-51 at half-time. They had just 12 in the fourth quarter after leading 73-71 entering the period.

After Kevin McHale's short shot gave the Celtics a 77-73 lead with 9:42 left, they went scoreless for 4:18 until Reggie Lewis, who led Boston with 20 points, ended a 10-0 Detroit run with a three-point play that made the score 83-80.

With Detroit leading 88-83 with 3:27 to go, Johnson's basket started a 12-2 surge that ended the game.

The last time the Celtics failed to survive the first round was in 1956 when they lost 2-1 to Syracuse. They were swept for the first time since a 4-0 loss to Milwaukee in the Eastern Conference semifinals in 1983 and the fourth time in the franchise's '82 playoff series.

It was only the second time in 36 playoff seasons that the Celtics, who have an NBA high 16 titles, failed to win a postseason game. And it's the first time Boston has lost five consecutive playoff games, dating back to last year's Eastern Conference finals against the Pistons.

Detroit, which had the NBA's best overall and road records this season, swept its opening series for the third time in five years.

Joe Dumars added 24 points for Detroit. McHale had 17 and Brian Shaw 15 for Boston. Larry Bird, who played just the first six games this season because of heel surgery, didn't appear after pregame speculation that he might play. Dennis Rodman's layup began the 10-0 run with 9:17 to go. Johnson's basket tied the game and Salley's layup put Detroit ahead to stay, 79-77.

Cougars, Raiders meet

HOUSTON (AP)—Houston and Texas Tech have arrived at a final scheduling for their three-game series to determine the fourth and final representative to the Southwest Conference tournament.

The two teams will meet May 12 in Houston to play a doubleheader and square off in a single game the next day.

Originally scheduled for May 5-6, the series was moved because Texas Tech students take final examinations that weekend. The schools originally settled on March 11-12 for the games, but then decided on the May 12-13 dates.

Texas Tech, 31-20 overall and 8-10 in the SWC, are currently fourth in the league and hold a one-game edge over the Cougars. Houston must win two of the three games to advance to the league tourney.

Arkansas, Texas and Texas A&M have already qualified for the tournament, scheduled for May 17-19 in College Station.

Briscoe drops district baseball opener

The Briscoe Broncos opened the district baseball season with a 12-7 loss to the Higgins Coyotes Tuesday afternoon.

Higgins exploded for a 7-0 lead in the first two innings before Briscoe's Shawn Zyback cracked a two-run homer in the third to make it 7-2.

Then, trailing 8-2 after four frames, the Broncos rallied for four runs in the fifth and another in the sixth to move within one, 8-7.

Higgins' Valenzuela, who lasted four innings on the hill to pick up the win, pounded a two-run homer in the bottom of the sixth to cap a four-run inning that finished up the scoring.

Shawn Zybach (1-1) went five innings for Briscoe and was credited with the loss. He was relieved by David Gilmer in the sixth frame.

Briscoe now stands at 2-1 on the season and 0-1 in district play. The Broncos will travel to Kellon Friday for a non-district game scheduled to begin at 3:30.

In other area baseball action, Lepors improved its undefeated streak to four games with an 11-8 victory over Hedley in a non-district contest Tuesday.

Lefors defeated Kellon, 5-4, a week ago to clinch the District 4-1A championship. The Pirates will host Briscoe on Friday, May 12.

Shockers have winning season

The Pampa junior varsity baseball team finished the season with a 13-11 record, defeating Randall JV 9-8 in the final game.

Brent Skaggs knocked in four runs and his squeeze bunt in the sixth inning tallied the winning run.

Chris Archibald had a home run and two RBI for the Shockers. Others with hits were Brian Bullard and Brian Ellis, two hits each, and Tarin Peet, one.

Winning pitcher was Brandon Knutson, who gave up eight hits while striking out nine in going the distance.

The Shockers' leading hitter for the season was Chris Archibald, who batted .517 with four homers, two triples and six doubles.

Ellis was the top pitcher with a 7-5 record and 81 strikeouts in 74 innings.

Barry Coffee (.407) and Chris Dark (.449) were other Shockers who hit over .400. Coffee had three homers, two triples and three doubles. Dark also had 31 stolen bases.

Library staff recommend books for May reading

By Ellen Malone and Janet Quarles
Library Staff

Thomas Locker has been chosen as author of the month by the Library staff because of the his text and beautiful artwork. They are children's books with appeal to all ages.

Locker is a painter who wanted to reach a larger audience than one-man exhibitions of his work generated. He finds it a real challenge to paint a series of paintings (15 in each of his books) that tell a story so that the effect of the whole book is greater than the sum of its parts. Now he is both author and illustrator.

Mare on the Hill traces the gradual transformation of a mare, made wary by the abuse of an earlier owner, into a trusting friend of two boys who love her. The magnificent paintings establish setting, action and characters.

Where the River Begins presents spectacular paintings reminiscent of nineteenth-century landscape art and are a unique anchor for a simple story of two boys who hike with their grandfather to the mountain source of the river that flows past their house.

Sailing with the Wind is an evocative story of a young person's first venture into adulthood, full of unstated threats and promises.

Family Farm tells how a family must use all their resources to save the family farm from low prices and competitors.

New additions to the library this month recommended by the library staff include The Day Before Midnight by Stephen Hunter. Haggood knew he was going to die. He could hear them coming down the corridor, the swift slapping pound of their boots, driven on by the shouts of their officer. They're coming for the bird, he thought. And at that moment he remembered procedure. He turned and sprinted for the far wall. His one advantage came from Romano. "Take your key off, Donny" Romano had said. It was a small thing. That was all, but it was enough.

For as Haggood dashed to the wall, the major ducked forward into the capsule and put three Silvertips from a range of ten feet through the young officer's lungs, but the impact of the bullets only hurried him that last few feet. Before him he saw the black window set in the wall, the one that admitted no light and was the latest wrinkle in installation security: KEY VAULT.

And because Haggood did not have to get the key off his neck, because he had it in his hand he was able to punch through the glass—

"No!" screamed the major, firing twice more, the bullets slamming into Haggood, who slid in bloody splendor down the wall. But he had already dropped the key into the key vault and one second later a half-ton titanium block slammed down scaling the key off from reach. From that moment the clock begins to tick away the minutes and the hours of The Day Before Midnight.

Shake Down the Stars by Francis Donnelly is the story of three young women, their family and friends in England during the turbulent time from 1939 to 1945.

We first meet the women at a village garden party, on a summer afternoon when war is a distant gray on the horizon. From the noisy chatter of a country tea-shop, to the surreal calm of a bombed-out London street, to the supercharged hours of love with airmen who fly each night to confront death, scene after scene is brought before us with powerful clarity.

The Courage To Heal by Ellen Bass is an inspiring comprehensive guide and offers hope and encouragement to every woman who was sexually abused as a child and to those who care about her. The author provides clear explanations, specific practical suggestions, a map of the healing journey, and many moving first-person examples of the recovery process drawn from interviews with hundreds of survivors. It speaks to the survivor in a warm and personal way.

Coolley-Jones debate team go to state meet in Austin

After winning first place at the district level, John Cooley and Jeff Jones won first in cross-examination debate at the Regional contest and have qualified for the UIL State Meet to be held May 5-6 at the University of Texas.

This is the fourth state tournament Cooley and Jones have attended in two years. The pair have attended the Texas Forensic Association state tournament and UIL for both years.

Most of the year's practice tournaments have pitted the team against teams from 5A schools. This experience has prepared them for competition at state.

The teams from Gregory/Portland were last year's state winners and will be the main competition for the pair this year because of the strength of their speech program.

In pre-UIL tournaments Cooley and Jones advanced to the elimination rounds. They placed third at Dumas and second at Friona and Tascosa. At TFA state, they ranked 34th out of 91 teams.

In addition to debate the boys have also competed in duet acting taking fifth at Dumas, solo improvisation, and impromptu speaking where Cooley placed first at Dumas. At student congress Jones was named Outstanding Speaker in the House. Cooley was named Outstanding Speaker in the Senate and was elected as delegate to the National Forensic League contest June 11-17 at Colorado School of Mines in Golden, Colo.

Mom wants to pull plug on son's high electric bills

DEAR ABBY: I am a divorced woman living on a very low disability income. My grown son lives with me. I try to conserve on everything I can, but he uses water and gas to heat the water for the 20-minute shower he takes every morning. He works 40 hours a week, goes to the YMCA to work out, and he's with his girlfriend the rest of the time. He eats all his meals out, but he comes home to sleep. The minute he gets home, he turns the TV on, and leaves it on while he sleeps! He often falls asleep with the lights on.

He runs up my electric bill with his radio, electric hair blower and his electric shaver. And he can't take a drink of water without letting the water run for five minutes. He's too lazy to look up telephone numbers, so he calls information, which is charged to my bill. (Can't he add?)

He gives me a lousy $20 a week out of the $160 take-home pay he gets, and he complains yet. I think he's getting a good deal. If you agree with me, please print this so I can show it to my son.

FED UP
DEAR FED UP: Here's your letter. Clip it and pin it on your son's pillow. Or tape it to his shower curtain, his hair blower, his television set, his light switch or his telephone. Your son should not complain. You should. I think you're entitled to more.

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I have a disagreement that perhaps you can resolve.

Our disagreement comes about because when we are watching TV, I regularly use the mute button to tune out the commercials. My wife says this is wrong — that if I watch the programs, I ought to listen to the sponsor's commercials.

Dear Abby

My attitude is that the companies that control television programming abuse the airwaves by using an inordinate number of commercials, most of which are inherently deceptive, and that I am under no obligation to listen to this trash.

Which one of us is right?
"THE CLICKER"
DEAR CLICKER: Whether or not one chooses to listen to the TV commercials is a personal decision. You are entitled to your opinion and your wife is entitled to hers. And if this is the most serious disagreement you ever have, count yourselves lucky.

DEAR ABBY: I was the "pen pal czar" for Operation Dear Abby while I was command chaplain for USS Coral Sea, and I shall always remember with fondness the excitement created by the thousands of letters we received daily after you launched your letter-writing campaign in 1987. What a terrific morale booster that was!

Numerous servicemen (and women) developed romances through those letters that ended in marriage. May 6 will mark nearly one and a half years since John Frakes answered a letter from Kathy McQuiston of New Castle, Pa. And by the time you read this, they will be married. Keep up the good work, Abby!

Mix chopped, peeled tart apple into the batter to add a taste of apple to your morning bran muffin. The muffins can be frozen, then reheated in the microwave when you're ready to eat.

Bran muffins add fiber, but not fat

By NANCY BYAL
Better Homes and Gardens Magazine
Food Editor

Not all bran muffins are created equal. Many commercially baked muffins contain high amounts of saturated fat and cholesterol, erasing the benefits of the fiber in the bran.

These muffins have no cholesterol and little saturated fat. You get the benefits of both insoluble fiber from bran flakes and soluble fiber from the apples.

You can have a muffin for breakfast any morning by baking a batch ahead and freezing them. To defrost muffins in the microwave, cook one muffin, uncovered, on 100 percent power (high) for 30 to 45 seconds, 2 muffins for 45 seconds to one minute.

APPLE-BRAN STREUSEL MUFFINS

- 1 1/2 cups all-purpose flour
- 1 cup bran flakes
- 1-3rd cup packed brown sugar

- 1 tablespoon baking powder
- 3/4 teaspoon ground allspice
- 1/4 teaspoon salt
- 2 slightly beaten egg whites
- 1/2 cup skim milk
- 1-3rd cup cooking oil
- 1 1/2 cups chopped peeled tart apples

Streusel Topping (recipe follows)

In a large bowl combine flour, cereal, sugar, baking powder, allspice and salt. In a small bowl combine egg whites, milk and oil. Add to flour mixture and stir just until moistened. Fold in apples. Spoon into 12 greased muffin cups. Sprinkle with Streusel Topping. Bake in 400-degree F oven about 20 minutes. Let stand 5 minutes. Serve warm. Makes 12 muffins.

Streusel Topping: In a small bowl combine 1/2 cup bran flakes, lightly crushed, and 2 tablespoons brown sugar. Drizzle 1 tablespoon cooking oil over mixture; stir with fork until crumbly.

Homemade snacks make healthy treats

By Aileen Claire
NEA Food Editor

Snacking has become a way of life in most families. Active youngsters especially like special treats to help keep up their energy levels.

Not all snack foods are bad for you. Fresh fruit and vegetable strips fill empty tummies until supper time. And special dessert-type foods for after-school may include brownies, cookies or frozen-fruit slushes, all made with an eye toward nutrition but low in fat, cholesterol and sodium. These do contain sugar for quick energy, but it is held to a minimum when spread over several servings.

CHOCOLATE-NUT CHEWIES

- 1/2 cup margarine, softened
- 2/3 cup packed dark brown sugar
- 1 egg, beaten
- 1 teaspoon vanilla extract
- 1 1/4 cups old-fashioned uncooked oats
- 1/2 cup all-purpose flour
- 2/3 cup raisins
- 2/3 cup chopped walnuts
- 2/3 cup semi-sweet chocolate chips

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. In a medium mixing bowl, cream together margarine and brown sugar. Add egg and vanilla; beat until well blended. Stir in oats and flour; mix well. Stir in raisins, walnuts and chocolate chips.

Spread butter in a lightly buttered 8-inch square baking pan. Bake for 25 minutes. Cool, then cut into squares.

This kitchen-tested recipe makes 25 small squares, 133 calories each.

STRAWBERRY SNACKIN' SLUSH

- 2 cups fresh or frozen strawberries
- 2 cups hot water
- 1/2 cup sugar
- Juice of one lemon (about 3 tablespoons)

Wash and hull fresh strawberries. Place in a blender (if using frozen berries, place frozen berries in blender jar without rinsing).

In a bowl, combine hot water and sugar, stirring until sugar is dissolved; add lemon juice. Pour juice mixture into blender jar; puree until smooth.

Pour mixture into six 8-ounce durable plastic cups or margarine containers. (Do not use plastic cold cups.) Freeze for 1 hour. Remove and break up mixture with a spoon until slushy. Return to freezer for 45 to 60 more minutes, or until desired firmness is reached. Break up mixture with a spoon and serve immediately. Fruit slush cups can be thoroughly frozen. At serving time, microwave each cup 20 to 30 seconds to soften, if desired. This kitchen-tested recipe makes 6 servings, 70 calories each.

VARIATION: Substitute fresh or frozen blueberries or raspberries for strawberries. Blueberry and raspberry slushes are best if fruit puree is strained before freezing.

Japanese foods bring new flavor to the American table

NEW YORK (AP) — Shiitake mushrooms from the forests of Japan and nutrient-rich nori from the depths of the sea are two exotic foods that can be used in many interesting ways.

Shiitake and nori are flavorful — and healthful — additions to the American diet. Shiitake is an excellent source of vitamin D. Nori provides 23 important minerals and significant amounts of vitamin A, vitamin C and the B-complex vitamins.

Nori (pronounced noh-ree) is a sea vegetable that has been a delicacy in the Orient since at least 800 B.C. Nori is harvested from the sea during the cold months, after which it is dried, processed into thin sheets, cut and packaged.

Americans are most familiar with the paper-thin sheets of dried nori that are used as the outside wrappers of sushi. But nori can also be used as a garnish on salads or soups, in omelets, or as a seasoning sprinkled over rice. (It can even be sprinkled over spaghetti.)

Shiitake (pronounced shiitakay) are large cap mushrooms found on trees in Japan's moist, shady forests. Dried shiitake is more flavorful and aromatic than the fresh varieties, and is the most available form from Japan.

Meaty and rich in flavor, shiitake is used in sushi, in chawan-mushi (a popular, custard-like dish in Japan), in suimono (a clear soup) and stews. It can also be served with steaks, chicken and pasta, as well as in salads, soups and casseroles.

Shiitake has become more readily available in the United States in recent years.

Several New York City restaurants, including Nippon, Kyotan Nippon, Nakagawa, Fujiyama Mama and Quilted Giraffe, recently featured recipes with shiitake and nori in a week-long salute to these Japanese foods. The following are recipes developed by the restaurants.

CHICKEN ROLL WITH SHIITAKE AND MUSTARD SAUCE

- (Fujiyama Mama restaurant)
- 4 pieces boneless chicken breasts
- 16 thin asparagus stalks
- 8 strips nori, 2- by 6-inches long
- 2 cups vegetable oil
- 1 cup string beans

- 5 large shiitake mushrooms, thinly julienned
- 1/2 medium onion, chopped
- 2 ounces butter
- 4 cups chicken stock
- 1/2 cup of saikyo miso paste
- 5 tablespoons Pommery mustard

2 tablespoons lemon juice

Salt and pepper

Separate chicken breasts and cut away skin and fat. Pound each breast with a mallet until it is thin and quite flat. Set aside.

Cut asparagus from the tip to a length of 6 inches. Boil in salted water for 1-2 minutes.

Roll 4 asparagus in each breast. Seal each roll around the center with a strip of water-moistened nori. Powder with cornstarch and deep fry rolls in hot oil for 5-6 minutes. Rolls should turn a golden brown. Set aside.

Boil string beans in salted water for 3-4 minutes. Set aside.

Saute mushrooms and onions in 1 ounce butter in a medium saucepan. Pour in chicken stock and mix in miso paste, mustard, the remaining 1 ounce butter and lemon juice. Cook over medium heat for 5-7 minutes until mixture thickens. Salt and pepper to taste.

Pour the shiitake sauce in a serving dish first. Then cut chicken rolls in half and place on top of sauce. Garnish sides of the serving dish with whole cooked string beans. Serves 2.

SHIITAKE AND SOUR CHERRY RAVIOLI

(The Quilted Giraffe restaurant)

- Ravioli dough:
- 1/2 tablespoon butter
- 1/2 tablespoon white wine vinegar

- 1 cup flour
- 2 whole eggs
- 1/4 cup julienned nori
- 1/2 teaspoon salt

Melt butter and add vinegar. Combine flour and butter mixture in electric mixer with paddle attachment and mix at medium speed. Add eggs one at a time and continue mixing until dough appears as coarse meal.

Spray dough lightly with water and turn dough out of bowl. Knead by hand until smooth and allow the dough to rest for 15 minutes.

Roll out dough into a sheet as thin as paper and divide in half. Lay julienned nori on top of the first sheet of dough taking care not to clump nori strips upon each other. Spray the sheet with water and gently place the second sheet of dough over the first and press gently. Again roll the two combined sheets into one very thin sheet.

Cut the sheet into 4-inch squares. Place 2-3 tablespoons of filling into each square, wet the edges with water, and fold over each square into a triangle.

Cook 3-4 minutes in salted water and garnish with roasted shiitake mushrooms.

Shiitake and Sour Cherry Filling:

- 2 ounces dry shiitake mushrooms
- 4 cups warm water
- 3 tablespoons butter
- 1/4 cup fresh ginger, minced
- 4 medium shallots, chopped
- 2 tablespoons garlic, minced
- Salt and pepper
- 1 cup dried sour cherries
- 1 bunch spinach, chopped

Soak the dry shiitake mushrooms in 4 cups of warm water for at least 30 minutes. Squeeze excess water from mushrooms and save 1 cup of the soaking liquid.

Cut off stems and finely chop shiitake, and saute in butter until mushrooms are golden brown. Add ginger, shallots and garlic and cook over medium heat for 1-2 minutes. Season to taste with salt and pepper.

Remove mixture from pan. Add sour cherries to pan and deglaze with soaking liquid. Cook until all the water is absorbed and add to the shiitake mixture. Saute spinach very quickly and add to the shiitake mixture. Season to taste with salt and pepper.

- Roasted Shiitake:
- 10 dry shiitake mushrooms
- 4 cups warm water
- 3 tablespoons extra virgin olive oil
- 1/4 tablespoon salt
- 1/4 tablespoon pepper

Soak the dry shiitake mushrooms in 4 cups of warm water for at least 30 minutes. Squeeze excess water from mushrooms, cut off stems, and toss mushrooms in olive oil with salt and pepper. Roast in 350-degree F oven for 20 minutes or until crispy. Use to garnish finished ravioli. Serves 4.

For a taste of Japan, asparagus is wrapped in chicken and nori, and served with a shiitake mushroom and Pommery mustard sauce. String beans and rice complete the meal.

MIT study suggests grassroots changes

By PETER COY
AP Business Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Restoring U.S. competitiveness demands grassroots changes by companies, labor unions, schools and workers, concludes a two-year MIT study released Tuesday.

While government has a role to play, changes that come from the bottom up are essential to improving the nation's lagging rate of productivity growth, says the study by scientists, engineers and economists at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

The report, called Made in America, pegs weakness in American industry as the biggest threat to the nation's standard of living and security.

"To live well, a nation must produce well," said the study, which is being released as a 344-page hardcover book.

Among the three principal authors is Robert Solow, who won the 1987 Nobel Memorial Prize in Economic Science and is vice chairman of MIT's Commission on Industrial Productivity.

The others are Michael L. Dertouzos, chairman of the commission and a professor of electrical engineering and computer science, and Richard K. Lester, executive director of the commission and an associate professor of nuclear engineering.

In an optimistic conclusion, the study says that if the right steps are taken, "this nation has every chance of entering the 21st century displaying the same dynamism that characterized its industrial performance throughout much of the present century."

The study differs from many others in that it does not focus on such economic issues as the high cost of capital in the United States and the shortage of national savings.

Instead, it focuses on what it calls an excessive concern with short-term profits; outdated corporate strategies that focus too much on mass production and the domestic American market; and lack of cooperation within and among U.S. companies.

It also blames neglect of people, technological failures in translating discoveries into products, and unwise public policies.

For industry, the main recommendation is to focus on steady, continuous improvements in the production process. That involves meeting customers' demands for higher quality, faster delivery and more custom-tailoring.

To hurry things along, companies should go to work on designing products and the processes for making them before the research and development is even complete, the study says.

Suppliers should be treated as allies rather than adversaries, the study says. Since the economy is becoming global, managers should know more about foreign cultures and ways of doing business, it says.

Companies should cultivate a work force that is more involved in the company's welfare, less specialized, and continuously learning, the study says.

Labor representatives should be accepted as "legitimate and valued partners in the innovation process," the report asserts.

But it also says traditional labor-union stands on work rules, job security and compensation "need to be revised to fit a world of changing technologies, international competition and a more educated work force."

For government, it recommends taking steps to raise private savings and cut the federal budget deficit; opening foreign markets; making labor laws more flexible; supporting research and development; and making military spending more efficient.

It also recommends using tax and credit legislation to make it harder and more expensive to raise large sums of money for corporate takeovers and buyouts.

On education, it says government should get schools to promote "technological literacy" and encourage companies to do more on-the-job education and training.

Golden face

Archaeologists from Brigham Young University in Provo, Utah, recently discovered this gold-masked dummy in an undisturbed grave at Fayoum Oasis southwest of Cairo, Egypt. Expedition leader C. Wilfred Griggs said in Provo that the mummy, dating from about 100 B.C., is in better condition than any ever found from so late in Egyptian history.

Neighbors skeptical of kidnapping report

By LORI DODGE
Associated Press Writer

ALTON, Ill. (AP) — For the second time in three years, Robert and Paula Sims say someone has swiped their infant daughter, but few neighbors are rushing to their defense.

"It just seems too strange," said Carol Hailer, who lives across the street. "We don't have kidnappings here — and not two in one family."

The Simses said 6-week-old Heather was abducted Saturday night under circumstances almost identical to the disappearance of their 13-day-old daughter, Lorelei, three years ago.

Lorelei's body was found five days later, about 150 feet from the Simses' home in Brighton, 10 miles from this town of 40,000 residents. No cause of death was determined and no arrest was made in that case, although authorities said the parents were suspects.

Police in this Mississippi River town across from St. Louis, said they were treating Heather's disappearance as a kidnapping reported by the parents.

"But we're not ruling anything out," said Sgt. Rick McCain, chief of detectives.

"They said they feel someone is out to get them," McCain said. "But they don't have anyone specific ... and haven't given us any names."

Robert Sims was approached by reporters as he arrived at his home Monday night.

"I can't say anything," he said, citing the advice of police. "I don't mean to be rude, I just can't say anything."

A steady stream of cars drove past the house Monday night, with most motorists slowing long enough to get a good look. Neighbors were peering out of windows and doors.

Mrs. Sims said she was approached by a gunman outside their home Saturday night while her husband was at work at a steel plant, said Sgt. Bud Pyatt.

Mrs. Sims told police she was forced back into the house and knocked unconscious. An hour later, she told authorities, her husband returned home and revived her, but Heather was gone.

A hospital found no evidence of injury when they checked Mrs. Sims — "no bruises or anything," McCain said.

"There is nothing that disproves their allegations," he said. "But we are not discounting the information from the other case."

Even the times of the reported abductions are similar.

In 1986, Mrs. Sims said she was attacked about 10:20 p.m. And on Saturday, she told police the assailant struck at 10:30 p.m., after she returned from taking out the trash.

Neighbors said the couple, who also have a 15-month-old son, have kept to themselves since they moved from Brighton to their two-story home in Alton about two years ago.

"All I can tell you is I never saw them," Mrs. Hailer said. "I saw her once in two years. I didn't even know she had children. They put up the fence when they first moved in and that's the last anybody ever saw of them."

Police said the couple's young son was sleeping in the house at the time but was not disturbed. No valuables were reported missing from the house.

In Jersey County, where the Simses lived in 1986 when they reported the first abduction, Sheriff Frank Yocom said they were suspects in Lorelei's death.

Pulpit politics intrude into Dallas campaigns

DALLAS (AP) — In the wake of a prominent minister's first-ever endorsements in a local election, the current campaign's intrusion into Dallas churches has become more pronounced than any other this decade, political consultants say.

"You can't knock on doors on Sunday morning, and that's because people are gone," said Lisa LeMaster, a Dallas political consultant. "So you go where they are."

The pastor of First Baptist Church of Dallas, the Rev. W.A. Criswell, earlier this year endorsed three city council candidates who were members of his church. Criswell said he made the move because "the Christian people ought to enter into civic service."

Religious observers say it was the first time the pastor of the largest Baptist congregation in America made public endorsements in a local political contest.

The Catholic Diocese of Dallas created the Justice and Peace Commission in an attempt to gauge grassroots opinions among parishioners.

When the panel asked parishioners about problems, issues like crime and school drop-out rates were mentioned, said Tony Mansueto, commission director for the Catholic Diocese of Dallas.

"As we began to analyze behind that, some of the causes of those problems related to the lack of adequate representation," Mansueto told The Dallas Morning News.

He said single-member council districts were envisioned as a method to provide better representation for Hispanics, along with blacks, poor Anglos and other disenfranchised groups.

Bishop Thomas Tschoepe has urged parishioners in a letter to "work actively" to restructure city council districts so that minorities will have a larger role in Dallas government.

A 14-member charter review committee is now considering reshaping the city charter.

Tschoepe said the current configuration of eight single-member council districts and three at-large seats discriminates against minorities. He said racism is a sin that "offends the fundamental dignity of the human person."

The bishop did not endorse a "particular solution" for a single-member district structure but a "tough criterion by which any solution should be judged" was identified, to maximize political representation.

Church officials do not endorse any candidate but "I try to encourage the people to vote, look at the issues, study the issues and vote according to their conscience," said Tschoepe.

The Catholic Church, which nationally has spoken out against apartheid and aid to the Contras, fights oppression, said Mansueto.

"One of the main forms of oppression in Dallas today is racism," he said.

A Jewish and a Methodist congregation have launched a joint project to foster strong ties among Jewish and black youths.

Island missionary beatified by pope

ST. DENIS, Reunion (AP) — Pope John Paul II Tuesday beatified a 19th century French missionary considered the apostle of the slaves brought to this island, saying he should inspire islanders to fight today to keep their freedom.

The pope arrived on the island Monday night after a three-day visit to the African island of Madagascar, the first stop of his nine-day pilgrimage. He headed later Tuesday to Zambia, traveling for the first time on the Concorde.

The pope arrived on the island Monday night after a three-day visit to the African island of Madagascar, the first stop of his nine-day pilgrimage. He headed later Tuesday to Zambia, traveling for the first time on the Concorde.

He is to visit Malawi later in the week and return to Rome Saturday.

The beatification represented a first step towards possible sainthood for Jean-Bernard Rousseau, known as Brother Scubillon, who died in 1867 at the age of 70. Born in Burgundy and baptized secretly during the French Revolution, Rousseau joined the Brother of the Christian Schools and moved to this island, then known as Bourbon, in 1833.

He remained 34 years until his death, devoting himself to teaching catechism to the African slaves brought to the island by the French colonists to work the coffee plantations.

Denver abolishes living-in-sin law

DENVER (AP) — City Council ended 15 years of wrangling this week by revoking Denver's living-in-sin law, which made it illegal for unrelated people to live together in certain zoning districts.

The 13-member council voted 7-6 Monday night to abolish the law following weeks of hearings.

"There are no longer any zoning districts where two people cannot live together," said Councilwoman Cathy Reynolds, who began working to change the ordinance when she was first elected to the council in 1975.

"I'm delighted," Mary DeGroot, another councilwoman, also voted in favor of abolishing the law.

"Zoning, I believe, should be used to determine land use and density but not relationships," she said.

"After reviewing the sales prices and the square footage of the homes, there did not appear to be a significant difference between an R-1 and an R-0 in my district."

Under the R-0 zoning, neither boarders nor unrelated people were allowed to live in the same house.

Under R-1 zoning, a homeowner was required to obtain a $20 boarder's permit to cover a non-relative.

About 60 percent of the area of Denver, which has a population of about 505,000 people, came under the restrictive zoning.

Councilwoman Cathy Donohue, another supporter of change, said under the old zoning regulations, people had to carry their marriage certificate in their pocket. Zoning inspectors complained about having to count toothbrushes in homes to make sure people were complying with the law.

Donohue said some neighborhood arguments turned nasty, and people were forced to move as a result after being turned in to authorities.

The penalty for violating the ordinance was $999 a day. People had six months to appeal, but when they were told they faced a fine for every day of violation, most of them sold their houses, often at a considerable loss because of Denver's soft housing market, Donohue said.

Several churches turned out previously to oppose any change to the law, but most opposition this time came from families and a real estate agent, who sold houses based on the zoning restrictions.

Shrimp fishermen leader says TEDs will help industry to die

By ALBERTO FRANCO
Associated Press Writer

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A spokesman for shrimp fishermen predicts the industry will die because of a judge's refusal to block a federal requirement that shrimpers use a device designed to help turtles escape from their nets.

"It's not going to save the sea turtles, but its definitely going to put the shrimp industry out of business," Tee John Mialjevich, president of Concerned Shrimpers of America, said.

However, an environmentalist hailed the ruling as a victory in the ongoing battle over Turtle Excluder Devices, or TEDs, designed to keep Kemp's Ridley sea turtles and other endangered or threatened species from drowning in shrimp nets.

"I think May 1st is a banner day in sea turtle conservation," said Mike Weber, president of the Center for Marine Conservation in Washington. "With the increasing use of turtle excluder devices, we are going to see an increase in sea turtle populations in the United States. It will allow us to address the other problems such as habitat loss, beach loss, et cetera."

Louisiana Attorney General William Guste had asked U.S. District Judge Patrick Carr on Friday to issue an order blocking the regulations. Carr refused Monday, saying Congress, not the courts, has the power to suspend enforcement.

Shrimpers claim the devices are costly, ineffective and dangerous to haul. Members of Congress from coastal states have joined them in fighting TED requirements, which went into effect this week in most places on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts.

Louisiana shrimpers claim the state's coastal waters have unique natural and manmade obstructions, making the TEDs impractical and dangerous to use.

Weber said the National Marine Fisheries Service estimates that 11,000 sea turtles are drowned in shrimp nets each year, including 3,000 in the Gulf of Mexico.

TEDs are usually cage-like devices sewn into cone-shaped nets. The TEDs have slats designed to let shrimp pass through to the back of the net while deflecting larger animals, such as turtles, through a flap or trapdoor at the bottom of the net. Shrimpers argue that TEDs are easily clogged with debris and allow a significant portion of their catch to escape.

Shrimpers in offshore waters had to begin using the TEDs on Monday, while shrimpers in inshore waters must use them by May 1, 1990. Boats over 25 feet long must use the TEDs. Boats under 25 feet in length can either use the devices or limit towing time to 90 minutes.

Mialjevich said his group's 2,000 shrimpers from North Carolina to Brownsville, Texas, would continue a legal and orderly fight against the regulation.

"I think for 60 days you're not going to see TEDs in the water because they (shrimpers) don't have any money to buy them," he said. "We have never said we won't pull TEDs because we don't want to. We have said we can't pull them because of economics."

Fines of up to $10,000 that were to have gone into effect Monday for TED-less boats. However, Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher last week told the Coast Guard to issue only warnings through June 30.

Corporate raider Pickens says trade barriers may be needed

AUSTIN (AP) — Takeover strategist T. Boone Pickens says he has been preaching free enterprise for years, but now that he is involved in a dispute with a Japanese company that he's invested in, he thinks trade barriers may be needed.

"Something now has to be done, and if necessary I think you ought to put up some barriers temporarily until we get a level playing field," Pickens said.

Pickens, an Amarillo oilman known worldwide for his corporate raids, has purchased 20.2 percent of Koito Manufacturing Co. to become the largest stockholder of the Japanese automobile parts manufacturer.

He has been rebuffed by Koito Manufacturing in trying to seat his representatives on the board, he said.

Pickens said he spoke recently with Secretary of Commerce Robert Mosbacher and about a dozen members of Congress concerning his Japanese business venture.

"I found a very sympathetic ear to what I was saying," Pickens said of his meetings with key trade legislators in Washington.

"At the same time I told them I'm not asking for any help. I just think that here in America, we have been way too lax and too easy on letting the Japanese come," into U.S. markets, he said.

Pickens said he told Koito representatives that he wants to be a long-term stockholder and his stock purchase is not part of a hostile takeover attempt.

"Still the attitude is one that we don't want you in Japan. And this is what kind of got my back up in the whole affair. I just said to hell with this. It's got to be different than this," he said.

Pickens, who is considering a bid for the Republican Party gubernatorial nomination, said he has always supported foreign companies investing in the U.S., but that his experience with Koito convinced him more needs to be done to open foreign markets to U.S. businesses.

But Pickens said he is not seeking any federal help in his struggle with Koito.

"I've drilled dry holes before, and this may be one of them," he said.

EPA puts new limits on pollutants in water

By H. JOSEF HEBERT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Thousands of public water systems across the country will have to improve their purification equipment to reduce chemical contamination and comply with new Environmental Protection Agency standards.

The EPA on Tuesday proposed federally required ceilings on the maximum amounts of 38 types of cancer-causing chemicals and other pollutants allowed in drinking water.

Michael Cook, director of the EPA office which deals with drinking water contaminants, said most public water systems already meet the proposed requirements, but additional purification equipment will probably be needed in about 2,500 public systems, serving about 2 million people, mostly in rural areas.

In some cases households will be paying higher water bills — anywhere from $10 to $460 more a year — as a result, officials said, although the new requirements in many cases are unlikely to go into effect until 1991.

EPA said the size of consumer cost increases will depend on the size of the water system and the contaminant and treatment technology involved.

Affected systems account for about 3 percent of all the public water systems in the country, according to the EPA. Private well water is not covered by the regulations.

In addition, officials operating about 80,000 water systems likely will have to increase monitoring activities to comply with the new rules.

The new regulations require that local water officials regularly monitor the level of pollutants and make public whenever the levels exceed the federal standard.

The proposed regulations will not go into effect until a routine comment period, likely about 90 days, and then the EPA will give local water officials another 18 months before the tighter requirements take effect.

The federal standards on the 38 chemicals, including many widely used pesticides and other highly toxic carcinogens, would bring the number of chemicals on which federal standards have either been proposed or are in effect to 55.

Three years ago Congress directed EPA to set maximum allowable levels on 83 chemicals and other toxic pollutants, but agency officials said Tuesday they will not be able to meet the congressionally imposed June 1 deadline on 28 of them.

Cook said development of federal standards on the remaining 28 is likely to take another year as maximum safe levels and water treatment techniques are worked out.

The proposed standards announced Tuesday cover 17 pesticides including alachlor, aldicarb and atrazine, which are widely used in agriculture; 11 synthetic organic chemicals that have been found to cause cancer or damage to the nervous system; and eight inorganic chemicals, including asbestos, mercury, cadmium, nitrates and nitrites; and two chemicals used to treat drinking water.

The requirements "are important steps in the continuing effort to assure that Americans have the safest drinking water in the world," said Cook.

But some EPA critics maintained that the regulations, while slow in coming, are also too weak.

Jacqueline Warren, an attorney for the Natural Resources Defense Council, said the maximum levels required by the EPA are significantly higher than ceilings already required by a number of states.

Rains lobbies against election law reforms

By JENNIFER DIXON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Texas' top election official is asking members of Congress to turn down several election reform proposals, including a uniform poll closing time and same-day voter registration.

Meeting Tuesday with Sens. Lloyd Bentsen and Phil Gramm, Secretary of State Jack M. Rains told the Texans he is against the House-passed plan to close polls at the same time nationwide, except in Hawaii and Alaska, during presidential elections.

Rains, a Republican, said he is also opposed to legislation sponsored by Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., which requires states to enact reforms to increase voter registration if restrictions have kept minorities from the polls.

Rains said Cranston's bill would result in states having to meet quotas for the voter registration of minority groups, based on population.

In a statement announcing the bill's introduction, Cranston said the Equal Access to Voting Act of 1989 was needed because millions fail to register to vote because the process is so difficult, and in some cases is "deliberately made burdensome to keep certain people from voting."

Under his bill, the attorney general would review voter registration requirements in the 50 states and District of Columbia, and "require such reforms as shall be necessary to increase voter registration where barriers to registration have had a discriminatory impact or operated to deny individuals the opportunity to exercise their fundamental right to vote."

If the percentage of minority registration falls below a certain percentage of non-minority voter registration, under ratios set for each state by the attorney general, a state would have to adopt such remedies as election-day registration, registration by mail, registration at all government agencies, or registration when people apply for a driver's license.

Rains argues the bill sends one more "layer of federal bureaucracy down to the states." He said his office already mounts a massive campaign every time a constitutional amendment is on the ballot to encourage minorities to register and vote.

Rains said the Texas County Clerks Association opposes the uniform poll closing bill because it would add two hours to the time polls are open in Texas — keeping the polls open from 7 a.m. to 9 p.m., rather than the current 7 a.m. to 7 p.m.

"To the extent it adds a couple of hours cavalierly just adds a great burden to an already burdensome task," Rains said.

Rains said his "justice nerve" is bothered by the fact that polls would remain open longer on the East Coast than in Texas.

"It is inherently unfair to say the people on the East Coast have a longer period to cast their ballots than in any other part of the country," Rains said.

Rains said he opposes a third bill calling for same-day registration, arguing Texas already complies with many provisions of the legislation, including registration by mail.
