Pampa man says he's lucky to survive strike by lightning

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

A Pampa man says he is lucky to be alive today after he was struck by lightning in his kitchen Thursday evening.

Dan Cathey, 32, 1923 N. Nelson, was leaning his arm against a metal vent-a-hood, making notes on a pad that was lying on the stove, at about 6 p.m. when lightning reportedly struck the vent's air duct on the roof.

Cathey said the lightning apparently traveled down through the vent and knocked him to the floor as his wife watched in horror.

"I had my arm on the vent-a-hood and my head leaning on my arm," Cathey said. "It just zapped me. My wife said she could see the flash when it hit me. The next thing I knew I was lying on the floor."

Cathey's wife Bonita called the 911 emergency dispatcher, who sent a Rural/Metro ambulance team to the home. Cathey was transported to Coronado Hospital for treatment.

Miraculously, in spite of being struck hard enough to be thrown to the floor, Cathey was not seriously injured.

"The doctor that treated me said it either went in through my head and out my feet or it just hovered around me. I was in shock," Cathey said. He was later released from the hospital and is recuperating at home today.

Cathey said he feels "weird" both physically and emotionally after his brush with the deadly situation.

"I was kind of in shock," he said. "Today I'm real tired and kind of nervous. I realized how fast it hit me and that it could have killed me. I wouldn't have even known what happened. It really makes you think."

Steven Cooper of the National Weather Service in Amarillo said about six people are killed in Texas each year from contact with lightning.

"If you are directly struck, your chances of survival are almost nonexistent," Cooper said. "The only people who survive are ones like this where they are indirectly hit." He said even indirect contact can be deadly, however.

Cooper said the number of lightning bolts that actually make contact with an object on the ground, as the one at Cathey's home did, is now being used by the Weather Service to gauge the potential severity of storms.

He also said the old wives' tale regarding how to tell how far lightning is from you is surprisingly accurate.

"You count the seconds from seeing the lightning to hearing the thunder. The number of seconds is how many thousands of feet away the lightning is," Stevens said. "Five seconds is five thousand feet, or about a mile."

For Cathey, Thursday night's experience was a short count, but he said it will make him more eager to count his blessings of just being alive from this moment forward.

Troops sent to Panama

By TERENCE HUNT
AP White House Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush is following his order to send more troops into Panama with an effort to mobilize diplomatic pressure for the ouster of Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, while remaining open to a negotiated departure for the military ruler.

The diplomatic moves included a meeting today in Washington of the Organization of American States to consider a proposal by Venezuela for OAS foreign ministers to discuss the Panama situation next Tuesday, diplomatic sources said.

Reacting to post-election violence including bloody assaults against political leaders opposed to Noriega, Bush announced Thursday he was sending 2,000 combat troops to Panama to augment the 10,000 servicemen stationed there.

"I will do what is necessary to protect the lives of American citizens and we will not be intimidated by the bullying tactics, brutal though they may be, of the dictator, Noriega," Bush said.

At the same time, Bush's national security adviser questioned both the likelihood of a real confrontation with Noriega and the efficacy of the president's action in forcing Panama's de facto ruler from power.

"He is a thug but he clearly operates with some prudence when he has to," said Brent Scowcroft, the president's national security adviser. He called the troop buildup "precautionary as much as anything else," although Bush had said in his news conference, "I'm worried about the lives of American citizens."

The deployment of two Army battalions, one Marine company and dozens of armored personnel carriers began late Thursday, and the Pentagon said it likely will take a week or more to complete.

For 15 months, the United States has been frustrated in its efforts to force Noriega from power following his indictment in Florida on drug-trafficking charges.

The latest steps, containing no new economic sanctions or orders for direct military action, drew bipartisan praise in a joint statement from congressional leaders as "measured and deliberate steps to assist the Panamanian people in restoring democracy to Panama."

However, some lawmakers grumbled Bush did not go far enough and said tougher action was needed to drive out Noriega.

A number of lawmakers had urged Bush "to invade Panama or to break the treaty with Panama" which commits the United States to turn over control of the Panama Canal at the end of the century, said Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., the Senate's deputy Democratic leader. Cranston was among those to support Bush.

Unlike former President Ronald Reagan, Bush said he would not consider dropping the drug charges to get Noriega to go. "But look, I will be open-minded about seeing what it might take to see him leave," Bush said in a brief news conference.

The president made a direct appeal to Latin America in general — and Panamanians in particular — to move against Noriega in the wake of Sunday's presidential election, which was widely denounced as fraudulent and was followed by violence.

"The crisis in Panama is a conflict between Noriega and the people of Panama," Bush said.

Hospice of Pampa names Barton new executive director

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
Staff Writer

Pam Barton, a registered nurse with an extensive background in geriatric and hospice care, has been named executive director of Hospice of Pampa.

"We're fortunate to have such talent in Pampa, someone who attacks a job with such enthusiasm," said Chuck White, chairman of the Hospice of Pampa board of directors.

"Pam brings a lot of background to the job. She's worked in nursing homes and hospitals and knows how to deal with people in trial and in pain," he said. "We're delighted to have her."

Barton will be succeeding Hazel Barthel as executive director. Barthel had agreed to serve in the position during the organizational phase of the program, and has ably handled the executive duties for more than a year.

"I see Hospice of Pampa as being in an organization period up until this time," Barton said. "Now that we're in full swing we can focus on community awareness and education."

"We have this service and I want to find the people who need this service," she said.

Although many people still see Hospice of Pampa as a place to take a person who is dying, Barton said she wants to help the community realize that hospice is a way of caring for people who are dying and that the care usually takes place in the patient's home.

"Hospice strives to provide a life-affirming approach to dying," Barton said. "We want to provide an environment in which the patient and family can experience the highest quality of life possible."

"We want (the patients) to be all they can be," she said. "We don't want to just put them to bed. We've had several go out-of-town with relatives, to do whatever they feel like doing."

Barton's interest in helping others surfaced when she was 12 years old, she remembered.

"I always wanted to be a nurse," she said. "But I realized I especially wanted to help older people after I was a hospital volunteer when I was 12."

During that time Barton became fast friends with an elderly patient at the hospital.

"When I was 14 she moved to a nursing home close to my house and I would go there to feed her," Barton recalled. This act of kindness led to a seven-day-a-week job feeding nursing home patients for two hours a day at the minimum wage of $1.30 an hour, she said.

At 16, Barton took a nurses aid course and as soon as she finished high school she entered Mary Hardin and Baylor College at Belton, where she fulfilled her dream by earning a bachelor's degree in nursing.

Her first job was at Scott and White Hospital in Temple, Barton said. "But I had in my mind that I wanted to go back to the nursing homes to change what I didn't like," she said.

That opportunity came when she was accepted as director of nurses at a skilled nursing home in Temple, a "very rewarding" position she held for two years.

Later she worked in obstetrics and home health, she said, but "still a nursing home was in my mind."

A move to Austin gave her the chance to attend a 200-hour nursing home administrators course before entering graduate school at the University of Texas.

Five years later she had earned her master's degree in science degree in nursing, majoring in nursing services administration and minor in gerontology. She performed graduate work in hospice care and administration.

As Barton was completing her master's degree in Austin, her husband Bruce, now executive director of the Pampa Area Chamber of Commerce, told her about the work being done to form Hospice of Pampa.

When she arrived in Pampa, she saw an article about a hospice volunteer training class which she enrolled in. It was the second volunteer training class in Pampa.

After completing the class Barton joined Hospice's general board and soon began filling in as secretary of the executive board, in addition to volunteering her nursing services to hospice patients on weekends.

Barton's interest in hospice care is related in some ways to the death of her father and her mother-in-law of cancer years ago.

Pampan leaves on 5,000-mile bicycle trek

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
Staff Writer

Early today under cloudy and rainy skies, Gail Davis took to the road, embarking on the first leg of a 5,000-mile, four-month bicycle trek around the western half of the United States.

"I decided I'd hate to come to retirement with all these things in the back of my mind and I didn't do any of them," Davis, 51, said of his reasons for planning such a journey.

"You could say I'm living out a few of my fantasies," he said with a laugh. "I've still never done deep sea diving or sky diving. They're some of the things in the back of my mind too."

Wearing spandex clothing and riding a bicycle packed with 35-pounds of equipment, Davis first plans to cycle to his daughter's college graduation in Omaha, Neb.

Next he plans to travel across the Dakotas and turn west across the northwest half of the United States to Seattle, he said.

'I've still never done deep sea diving or sky diving. They're some of the things in the back of my mind too.'

Then he'll pedal down the west coast to Los Angeles and then to the Toastmasters annual convention in southern California Aug. 16, said Davis, a member of the Pampa Toastmasters Club.

Taking the southern route across the U.S., Davis' course will bring him through El Paso to Austin, where he'll visit his brother before heading back north to Pampa.

"It's going to take all summer," Davis said, adding that he plans to return to Pampa in September.

In preparation for his journey, Davis sold his car and rode his bicycle to his job at Hoechst Celanese all through the winter.

"I rode 175 miles a week last

'Most hamburger places have salad bars and I'll be eating at those most of the time.'

summer and fall, but then it got to busy at Celanese," he said. Davis also took a week-long bicycle tour of the Texas Hill Country through the Easter holidays, he added.

Davis' traveling equipment includes a specially-made tent and sleeping bag, cold weather gear, clothing, a small camp stove and a half gallon of water, he said.

"I suspect my eating habits will evolve along the way," he said, adding that he'll need to eat approximately 5,000 calories of high-carbohydrate foods each day to meet his body's needs.

"I'll eat a lot of breads, vegetables and pastas," he said. "Most hamburger places have salad bars and I'll be eating at those most of the time."

He'll use his camp stove to cook packaged pasta dinners when a restaurant isn't available, Davis said.

While riding through the desert, his half gallon of water will increase to a gallon every two hours, Davis said.

"I hope this won't be an exceptionally hot year," the bicyclist said. "If it's 120 degrees in the desert, I'll have serious second thoughts. No, if it gets that bad, I'll just have to pack the bicycle up and send it home."

Davis began seriously riding bicycles after he was laid off his job in Omaha, Neb.

"I got a sizeable check along with it, so I got a bicycle and drifted around for about a year," he recalled. "I was going to do it last year, too, but then Celanese blew up and nobody took vacations," he said. "I was still going to do it, but they asked me not to."

'I hope this won't be an exceptionally hot year. If it's 120 degrees in the desert, I'll have serious second thoughts.'

During his four-month trek, Davis plans to keep a diary, write poetry and take photographs of the places he sees.

"I'm something of an amateur poet, so I'd like to see what kind of poems I can write along the way," he said. "And I fancy myself as a neophyte writer. I'm hoping I can get my story printed some place, even if it's a bicycle riders' magazine."

Map shows general route of trek.

Bush proposes 'open skies' policy with the Soviet Union

By RITA BEAMISH Associated Press Writer

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — President Bush today proposed an "open skies" policy with the Soviet Union, under which each nation would be permitted to overfly the other's territory to monitor military activities.

In a major speech outlining his goal to "welcome the Soviet Union back into the world order," Bush also said he would be willing to ease the Jackson-Vanik amendment, a 17-year-old law that ties trade concessions to with East bloc nations with those countries' emigration policies.

"The United States now has as its goal much more than simply containing Soviet expansionism — we seek the integration of the Soviet Union into the community of nations," the president said in the text of a speech announcing his administration's policy principles for relations with Moscow.

Bush took a carrot-and-stick approach to the Soviet Union in his address to a commencement audience at Texas A&M University, saying he wanted the two superpowers to enjoy "a friendship that knows no season of suspicion, no chill of distrust."

"As the Soviet Union moves toward greater openness and democratization, as they meet the challenge of responsible international behavior, we will match their steps with steps of our own," he said.

"Ultimately our objective is to welcome the Soviet Union back into the world order."

Bush called for revival of a 1950s proposal by President Eisenhower that would have allowed each nation to fly unarmed inspection aircraft over the other's territory, which "would open up military activities to regular scrutiny."

Bush proposed that this never-implemented "open skies" policy be expanded to include all nations in the East and West.

"Such unprecedented territorial access would show the world the meaning of the concept of openness," he said. "The very Soviet willingness to embrace such a concept would reveal their commitment to change."

As for the Jackson-Vanik law, Bush said he would work with Congress for a "temporary waiver" of the restrictions on Soviet trade status, if the Kremlin would codify a liberalization of emigration laws.

He said his administration would respond positively if the Soviets also "take positive steps."

These, he said, include reducing their military forces abroad, tearing down barriers between Eastern and Western Europe, improving their human rights commitment and working with the West "in positive, practical — not merely rhetorical steps" to solving international regional disputes.

"Where there is cooperation, there can be a broader economic relationship ...," the president said. "Ending discriminatory treatment of U.S. firms would be a helpful step. Trade and financial transactions should take place on a normal commercial basis."

As he has in the past, Bush said he welcomed the Soviet moves toward glasnost, or openness, and economic restructuring.

But he sounded a skeptical note, saying these "hopeful — should be remarkable — signs" indeed be viewed in the vein that Western security "is not predicated on hope. It must be based on deeds. We look for enduring, ingrained economic and political change."

"Make no mistake, a new breeze is blowing across the steps and cities of the Soviet Union. Why not, then, let this spirit of openness grow, let more barriers come down," Bush said.

He called for "open emigration; open debate, open airwaves," and said: "Let the 19,000 Soviet Jews who emigrated last year be followed by any number who wish to emigrate this year."

The Jackson-Vanik measure, named for the late Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., and former Rep. Charles Vanik, R-Ohio, denies the Soviets a host of trade advantages, including reduced tariffs, unless they relax their restrictions on emigration of Jews and others wishing to leave. It was included in a 1972 trade law.

Hospice

"Looking back, I can see a burden that could have been lifted on my mother, especially, and on Bruce's family, too, if they had had hospice then," she commented.

"The neat thing about this job is instead of coming in thinking, 'Oh, what am I going to do?,' I think, 'Gee, there's so many things I can do,'" Barton said.

"I'm so excited and anxious to start visiting with people and talk to them about hospice," she said, adding that one of her main goals will be to promote physician and public involvement in the program.

Barton and her husband Bruce are the parents of two children, Courtney, 9, and Stacy, 3. They are members of First United Methodist Church, where Barton serves as a member of the Council on Ministries.

Barton's outside activities include leading Brownie Troop 20 and serving on the Pampa Junior Service League.

Legal Hotline offers free advice for Texans over 60

Texans age 60 and older can now obtain free legal advice by calling a toll-free number.

This service is provided through a new program cosponsored by the Texas Legal Services Center and the Legal Counsel for the Elderly, a division of the American Association of Retired Persons (AARP).

The Legal Hotline is answered from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. Attorneys answer questions at no cost. Callers may receive assistance with problems such as wills, health care, consumer issues, landlord/tenant disputes, Social Security, and financial and physical abuse.

Older persons with more complex problems will be referred to attorneys in their area who have agreed to provide service on a reduced fee basis. Low income callers will be referred to a Legal Services (Legal Aid) program or to an appropriate pro bono program when needing individual help with problems.

"Providing information quickly to older adults can prevent legal problems from developing," says Mrs. Jippie Tolbert, AARP state director and chief volunteer in Texas. "We are encouraging agency social workers to use the Hotline on behalf of their elderly clients."

Persons age 60 and older in Texas needing information on their legal rights may call toll-free 1-800-444-9114. Austin residents may call 477-3950 since attorneys answering the telephone are located in Austin.

American zoos being plagued by string of rare bird thefts

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — A string of rare bird thefts at several zoos around the country have prompted more stringent security, and even led some zoos to pull the valuable animals from exhibits.

On May 2, a thief broke into the parrot cage at the Rio Grande Zoological Park here and took an Australian king parrot, a sulphur-crested cockatoo and a dusky lory.

The crimson and green parrot — one of only 12 such birds in captivity — was found dead on the zoo grounds. The lory, a short-tailed parrot, flew back to the zoo. The white cockatoo with a pale yellow crest is missing.

"I'm hopeful that whoever did it got chewed up sufficiently," said zoo Director John Moore.

These birds are not real kind. The global destruction of rain forests, the birds' natural habitat, and export restrictions imposed by foreign countries have driven up the value of rare birds and encouraged thefts, officials say.

Zoos in Los Angeles and San Diego, Calif.; El Paso, Texas; Columbia, S.C.; and elsewhere have been hit in recent years.

There are people willing to pay, just like art collectors I suppose, without asking questions," said Mike Cunningham, associate curator of birds at the Los Angeles Zoo.

"If the birds are really rare, it's hard to find out where they go. It's like somebody stealing a work of art. They don't take it to the corner store and sell it."

Zoos are prime targets because they often hold rare species that aren't available to the pet trade, he says.

The lucrative black market also attracts smugglers.

"A lot of the same people that smuggle narcotics are smuggling birds. The return is just as great," said John Cross, assistant regional director of law enforcement for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in Albuquerque.

The U.S. Customs Service seizes rare birds almost daily along the border with Mexico.

which outlaws commercial exports, said Charles Conroy, a Customs spokesman in Houston.

"Large cages are strapped to wooden rafts, floated across the Rio Grande," Conroy said. "We even had one case where a woman who had an artificial leg brought six birds across in this artificial leg that has been hollowed out."

Zoo officials would not put a price on the birds.

"In one respect they're priceless," said San Diego Zoo spokesman Jeff Jouett. "In another respect, I don't want to give an incentive to anyone that would endanger the lives of these birds."

The zoo lost a pair of Australian cockatoos, which are gray with red markings, about a year ago.

Zoos that have been hit by thieves have beefed up security, and some no longer exhibit their rarest birds.

Hahn attends conference

COLLEGE STATION — Scott B. Hahn, Gray County treasurer, joined some 200 other elected officials for the 17th Annual County Treasurers' Continuing Education Seminar at Texas A&M University recently.

The seminar provides county treasurers training on a wide range of responsibilities, including investments, cash management, record keeping, reporting and disbursements of county funds. Participation in the seminar applies toward certification as required by state law.

Hahn also received updates on the 71st Legislative Session and new computer software applications for county treasurers. He also was one of the instructors, teaching three classes on "Personal Practices — Primer."

"County treasurers have the major responsibility for handling and investing county funds," said Hahn. "It's an ever-changing business that requires staying up on the latest in money management and legal requirements for government fiscal accountability."

Concurrent sessions at the April 17-20 seminar provided customized training based on population and government structure of the counties where the treasurers serve.

The annual conference is one of the educational programs sponsored by the V.G. Young Institute of County Government, a part of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Pampa police are investigating the burglary of the Salvation Army Thrift Store, 406 S. Cuyler. The crime happened sometime after 8 p.m. on Saturday, April 15, or early the next morning.

Taken in the burglary was $40 cash and a Sanyo portable cassette player with AM/FM radio.

Crime Stoppers will pay up to $500 for information leading to the arrest and indictment of the person or persons responsible for this crime. If you have information about this or any crime, you can report it and remain anonymous by calling 669-2222.

Rewards are also available for other crimes not in this announcement.

Evangelist to speak here

Evangelist Ron Barnard of Lubbock will be the guest speaker at Calvary Assembly of God, 1030 Love, beginning Sunday and continuing through Wednesday.

Services will begin nightly at 7 p.m.

Rev. Barnard is an ordained minister with the Assemblies of God, having served four years as an associate pastor in Illinois and Colorado. As an evangelist, he has traveled throughout the continental United States and Alaska, as well as overseas ministry in West Africa.

"Come and enjoy the inspirational singing and be blessed and stirred by the messages from God's Holy Word," said Rev. R.G. Tyler, pastor.

OPEC secretary stresses environmental implications of oil

By EVAN RAMSTAD
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — The leader of the world's largest oil cartel, borrowing a phrase from President Bush, said the path to a "kindler and gentler" world involves clean energy and urged Texas energy leaders to consider the environmental implications of their actions.

Dr. Subroto, making his first U.S. speech since becoming OPEC's secretary general last July, said Thursday the cartel is trying to do its part by creating a stable oil market.

Subroto echoed the stability theme throughout his three-day visit to Dallas, seeking to reassure independent Texas oil producers who were battered by the industry's upheaval in 1986.

He said OPEC's rise in prominence should not be feared by U.S. producers and consumers, despite the group's history of instability.

"OPEC now is a different OPEC," Subroto said. "The composition of oil ministers is different... more technocratic, more businesslike."

The members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries do not want to see another "trauma" like the price collapse in 1986, he said, but seek cooperation from consumers by keeping up demand for their product.

"In return for OPEC's commitment to security of supply... our organization is entitled to expect from consumers, policies which promote an orderly transition from finite oil reserves to other energy resources — policies which do not seek, at any cost, to throttle oil demand."

During a luncheon speech to about 1,600 Texas energy and business figures, Subroto warned the cartel has trouble understanding the "confrontational attitudes of certain countries" that have trade barriers and oil import fees.

"Such taxes serve only to increase inflation and slow economic growth," he said.

Referring to the hoopla surrounding the discovery of so-called "cold fusion," Subroto said there are environmental consequences to every source of energy.

"Some argue that the prospects of energy from fusion hold untold promise for mankind," he said. "At the same time, no one knows the incalculable harm it may also portend."

He said most of the member countries of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, which he has led since last July, have shown concern about the environment. In 1980, Iran, Iraq, Kuwait, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates joined with Oman and Bahrain to form the Regional Organization for the Protection of the Marine Environment, he said.

"Just like anybody else, we wish to breathe fresh, clean air, and we want our children and grandchildren to do so, too."

Subroto is credited with developing a production agreement signed by OPEC members. The agreement has boosted oil prices since November.

The agreement set a target price of $18 per barrel but Subroto has acknowledged during his visit that worldwide demand is strong and could support a higher per-barrel price. OPEC leaders meet again in June in Vienna, Austria.

While saying OPEC is striving for stability, Subroto pointed to several "inherent" factors that make the task difficult. Those include the different levels of oil reserves in OPEC member countries and the consequently varying views leaders of those countries have on long-term pricing.

He also pointed to regionalization of the world oil market. "Because of the dispersal of these regional markets, our member countries' crudes are either long-haul or short-haul, which implies certain market disadvantages based on the relative costs of moving them to the market."

Subroto said situations when a member country is dissatisfied with its quota assignment, increases production and causes an over-supply of the market, are also destabilizing.

"OPEC, in a way, is a rather unique organization, consisting of 13 sovereign nations," Subroto said. "And the problem in OPEC is that some countries are more sovereign than the others."

Subroto is the former minister of mines and energy in Indonesia. His visit to Dallas was sponsored by the Institute for the Study of Man and Earth at Southern Methodist University.

Texas judicial system still feeling backlash of Adams case

By SUE FAHLGREN
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — The widely publicized vindication of former death row inmate Randall Adams has created public mistrust of Texas prosecutors and is forcing them to think about fair play, local attorneys say.

The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals threw out Adams' capital murder conviction March 1 and he walked from prison March 22 after an appeals process that stemmed from a documentary film saying Adams had been unfairly convicted.

Since then, a prosecutor involved in the case has been fired, two others have resigned, a former Dallas detective has been investigated — and cleared — on perjury allegations, and the State Bar of Texas has begun a review of claims that a former prosecutor suppressed evidence in Adams' 1977 trial.

In April, 17 potential jurors had to be stricken from a Dallas murder case panel after saying they distrusted prosecutors.

One said he could not believe anything presented by Assistant District Attorney Winfield Scott, who led a last-minute rally to keep Adams behind bars. Scott since has been fired.

"I think it's too early to tell whether anything positive will come out of this," said Adams' attorney, Randy Schaffer of Houston. "They terminated Winfield Scott — that's a start."

"This case might have brought home what happens when you don't play fair — in a real dramatic way," said Leslie McFarlane, who represented the state when Adams was arguing for a new trial, then resigned shortly after the case was dropped.

"It might have cost the district attorney a credibility price in the short term, but I don't think so, in the long term," he said.

McFarlane said she believes it was right to drop the charge.

Adams, 40, was convicted for the 1976 shooting death of Dallas policeman Robert Wood and came within three days of execution before his sentence was commuted to life.

Public awareness of the case was revived last year by the Errol Morris documentary The Thin

Blue Line, which questioned the truthfulness of witnesses including David Ray Harris, the star prosecution witness against Adams.

Harris has since virtually confessed to the slaying. He is on death row for an unrelated killing.

The appeals court, in overturning Adams' conviction, ruled that then prosecutor Doug Mulder had suppressed evidence and several witnesses lied under oath during Adams' trial. The state bar association is reviewing Mulder's actions in the case.

McFarlane and colleague John C. Creuzot, who also worked on the case, submitted their resignations April 5, the same day Dallas County District Attorney John Vance fired Scott, one of the original Adams prosecutors.

Bill proposes to criminalize cult activities

AUSTIN (AP) — Recent ritual killings in Matamoros and the rise of cults in Texas have prompted state lawmakers to draft a bill criminalizing cult activities ranging from vandalism to human and animal sacrifice.

Under companion bills by Sen. J.E. "Buster" Brown, R-Lake Jackson, and Rep. Sam Johnson, R-Plano, "diabolic cult acts" would be third-degree felonies.

"We are very much concerned, after the events that took place involving the murder of the Kilroy young man in Matamoros," Brown said, referring to the slaying of University of Texas student Mark Kilroy.

Kilroy's body was discovered along with 11 others, most of them mutilated, at a ranch, where a bizarre cult allegedly performed human and animal sacrifices to protect their illegal drug transactions. Two other bodies were found at a nearby farm.

Three cult members have been charged by Mexican authorities. "We are dealing with people that are not ordinary. We are dealing with crimes that are not ordinary," Brown said in a news conference Thursday. "This Legislature is going to have to look at legislation that is not ordinary."

"Our effort is designed to try and stop this kind of cult activity before it leads to the kind of act that took the life" of Mark Kilroy,

Brown said. Brown said law officers may see evidence of cult activity, but have little legal means to investigate it or bring charges against suspects.

As an example, he said, under current law, animal mutilation or sacrifice could only be prosecuted as destruction of property, but under the bill it would be a felony if linked to cult practices.

Diabolic cult acts are defined in the bill as "an act or practice, or ritual that is part of an organized, ritualistic, or social glorification (practice)."

- It prohibits:
- Consumption of human or animal blood.
 - Animal or human mutilations, sacrifices or torture.
 - Physical, psychological or sexual abuse.
 - Cannibalism.
 - Vandalism.

A bill by Sen. Judith Zaffirini, D-Laredo, would increase penalties for certain offenses involving children under 17 that were committed as part of a ritual or ceremony.

The Senate passed the measure Wednesday and sent it to the House.

Brown said law officers testifying on Ms. Zaffirini's bill during committee hearings said "they are in need of some new tools that would be able to deal with this new type of criminal activity."

He said, lawmakers will have to give "careful consideration" to protecting religious freedoms under the bill. "The design of this legislation is not in its final form," he said.

But, he said, "The framers of our Constitution... never intended for the First Amendment to protect the physical and psychological abuse of persons under the name of freedom of religion."

Remember one thing — Breathe!

We are fast approaching the time of year when all those people who for years said "I don't" will suddenly make a 180 degree turn and announce proudly, "I do."

Since I am only recently married myself (two years in July), I feel qualified to give advice on this whole matrimonial business.

1. Go for the old-fashioned church wedding. I know for some people it will feel strange going into a church when it's not Christmas or Easter, but go for it anyway. There are 10,000 voices out there who will tell you your marriage will never work. Knowing that you stood before God, a preacher and several dozen regular church-going, God-fearing people and promised to weather the storms of doubt will certainly see you through to better times.

2. Remember to breathe. I know that by the time people are in their 20s and old enough to consider this marriage stuff they should not have to be reminded of this. But... the day of my wedding I was so nervous I kept kept turning blue.

"Uh, Bear, I think you need to tell your lungs to take another breath about now," Bill, my best man would say. "While you're at it, you've also forgotten to zip your pants, or tie your shoes. Oh, and traditionally men wear socks with a tuxedo and dress shoes."

I looked at my feet. Yep, about it. No socks. But before I could do anything about it I keeled over for the third time that afternoon.

"It's my fault," Bill said. "I didn't remind you to breathe. You really gotta loosen up."

3. Wait six months to honeymoon. When Caryl and I planned the honeymoon, it included a weekend stay in Amarillo before taking off for three days in Dallas/Fort Worth and four in Orlando at Walt Disney World.

"Amarillo? Why Amarillo?" she asked me. "This is a pretty big event we are planning," I told her. "We will be tired and nervous..."

"Stop for a second and breathe," she said. "You're turning blue again."

"We'll be real nervous. We can take a couple of days to relax before going on to the major sites."

Once in Amarillo after the wedding we went to the hotel.

"Honey, the shower doesn't work," I told her, after fiddling with knobs.

"Call the front desk."

Five minutes later a maintenance man showed up with a variety of ratchets. "What's the

Off Beat

By Bear Mills

problem?"

"No water."

He turned the knob. Water flowed freely.

"Uh, it wouldn't work for me."

"Don't worry; happens all the time. You probably won't believe this but some newlyweds are so nervous when they get here they actually pass out because they forget to breathe!"

"No, you don't mean it."

By the end of the evening the maintenance man and I were old friends. I had to call him back to turn on the air conditioner, the TV and the light in the bedroom. "I ain't gonna have to call the paramedics to revive ya', am I? You're lookin' mighty blue," he told me.

The next day I took Caryl to the Palo Duro Canyon. "It's our honeymoon and you're taking me hiking in 100 degree weather?—You really are romantic," Caryl said.

"Ever been to the Palo Duro Canyon?" I asked her.

"Nope."

"That's what a honeymoon is for — to do things you've never done before."

"We did that last night."

4. Pray. I consider marriage to be the greatest single event I have ever taken part in. Caryl is my best friend and one of God's greatest gems on this earth. But don't let anybody tell you marriage isn't work. It is. It is hard work. Sometimes you will pray God will keep you from killing her. Other times you will pray God will protect you from being killed. Most of the time you will pray for the commitment to make something as special as marriage work in a society where almost nothing works like it's supposed to.

And up through the wedding you will pray God will remind you to breathe. It's hard to say "I do" when you are passed out at the altar.

Bush decides to embrace treaty on global warming

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House has quickly reversed itself on a major environmental problem and embraced the idea of a formal treaty negotiating process on global warming.

The decision puts the United States in line with all other major Western economies in supporting such an initiative.

And the reversal occurs the same week a government scientist testified the White House made him alter his testimony on the "greenhouse effect" to give the impression not everyone agreed on the severity of the problem.

The change of course was revealed in a cable despatched Thursday night to U.S. delegates at an environmental conference in Geneva sponsored by the United Nations.

Declaring it was essential for the United States to exercise a leadership role, the cable said, "We should seek to develop full international consensus on necessary steps to prepare for a formal treaty-negotiating process."

Coach freed on bond

CONROE (AP) — A Plainview High School tennis coach jailed for nearly two months in Montgomery County on capital murder charges is now free on $150,000 bond raised by hometown friends and relatives.

Jon David Weatherred, 30, was released Thursday with the help of friends from Kress, a Panhandle farming community near Plainview, who put up money and used their property as collateral for cash.

Weatherred had been held since March 13 when he was arrested in the Dec. 12 slaying of William Ralph Strawn, 35, a purchasing agent for a medical supply company in The Woodlands.

Strawn was shot execution-style in The Woodlands home of his fiancée, Pamela Beene, a Conroe school district teacher. Ms. Beene, 30, found Strawn's body after he failed to show up at his job.

Investigators have said Weatherred committed the killing out of jealousy because Ms. Beene, his former girlfriend, rejected him and made plans to marry Strawn.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Lessen government, prevent corruption

"Power tends to corrupt and absolute power corrupts absolutely." So said the wise Lord Acton a century ago. The examples keep coming in. Surely one lesson from the scandal swirling around House Speaker Jim Wright is that, whatever the matter of his alleged offenses, he became so haughty that the line between public and private interests became blurred.

So it is with the Recruit scandal in Japan, which has just brought down Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita. Japan's political system is much different from ours, but in one way it is identical: Top politicians wield vast power over the society and economy; so because of the immense sums of money involved, many politicians can be bought. After all, to a multi-billion-dollar business conglomerate, funneling a few million to top politicians is like paying the bill of a roach exterminator.

Alas, it isn't likely that this sort of corruption will end. The people of America, Japan and other free nations are not yet ready to accept the truth that government, by its very nature, corrupts. They don't yet realize that the only way to prevent corruption in government is to reduce government's size radically.

Said Thomas Jefferson, in his first inaugural address: "Sometimes it is said that man cannot be trusted with the government of himself. Can he, then, be trusted with the government of others? Or have we found angels in the forms of kings to govern him? Let history answer this question." Recent history, coming both from Jefferson's own country and from a distant land never seen by him, confirms his deep understanding of human nature. Wright, Takeshita and many other politicians prove that we still have yet to find "angels in the forms of kings."

The way to end such corruption? End the temptation. The U.S. federal government (not to mention state and local prefectures) today devours some 25 percent of our national income, compared to the 2 percent in Jefferson's day. Things are almost as bad in Japan, which 150 years ago hardly even had a central government. No wonder our politicians are corrupt.

There's only one way the Recruit scandal, the Wright scandal and other scandals can be avoided in the future: Reduce the government Goliath to Lilliputian size. The way to end the corruption that power brings is to reduce power. Jefferson spent his eight years as president reducing the already small government he inherited from Washington and Adams. That's another example for the ages. Another saying of his now rings more true than ever: "That government is best which governs least."

Berry's World

Keep raising those questions

WASHINGTON — Civil rights sometimes have a way of turning into civil wrongs. Ask Evelyn Smith of Chico, Calif. In this instance, two young people, Ken Phillips and Gail Randall, have claimed the rights. The grandmotherly Mrs. Smith has suffered the wrongs. It is a story of our changing times.

The story goes back 16 years or so, to the time that Mrs. Smith and her husband decided to augment his mail carrier's income by buying several rental properties, among them a duplex at 677 Eastwood Ave. He died of pancreatic cancer in 1987. She advertised the duplex for rent.

Along came Phillips, who was then 28, and his companion, a 24-year-old student at Chico State University. They found the duplex attractive and the rental fair. They gave Mrs. Smith the clear impression that they were married, and they left a deposit.

Then it transpired that they were not married; they were merely living together. Mrs. Smith is a devout Presbyterian of the old Calvinist school. She regards fornication flatly as a sin. She refused to give them a lease, and returned the deposit.

California has a fair housing law. It forbids discrimination in private housing not only by reason of race, sex, nationality and age, but also by reason of "marital status." Phillips went to the Fair Employment and Housing Commission and filed a complaint against Mrs. Smith.

The case was heard last April before Administrative Law Judge Karl Engeman. In December he returned a verdict against Mrs. Smith and in favor of the unwed couple. He recommended that she be ordered to pay $454 plus interest to the plaintiffs, and also to post a notice in her rental units confessing her violation of the law and promising not to repeat the offense.

It is now up to the state commission to accept or reject the judge's proposed decree. No matter the outcome, the case almost certainly will be appealed. The unwed couple is represented by Jonathan Lew, a staff attorney for the state commission. Mrs. Smith is represented by Cimon Campbell and Jordan Lorence, counsel for Concerned Women of America.

The case obviously has constitutional dimensions that might eventually push it into the U.S. Supreme Court. Mrs. Smith is standing firmly on her First Amendment right to the free exercise of religion.

She notes that the Bible condemns fornication in more than 30 passages, notably in Paul's first epistle to the Corinthians: "To avoid fornication, let every man have his own wife, and let every woman have her own husband." She cannot and will not condone fornication under a roof that she owns.

The plaintiffs' position rests in the clear wording of the California law. A landlord may not discriminate by reason of "marital status." The couple might also argue plausibly that in the permissive climes of California, the marriage bond seems to be honored more often in the breach than in the observance.

In this cause, I stand foursquare on the side of Mrs. Smith. Goodness knows, I am old enough not to be shocked by common-law cohabitation. The nation's mores manifestly have gone through a sea of change in recent years, responding to shifting winds of what is said to be sophistication.

In 1970, the census reported 523,000 unmarried couples sharing the same living quarters. By 1986, the figure had grown to 2,220,000 couples. To read People magazine, one might well conclude that half the stars of the entertainment world are living and procreating out of wedlock. Upward of 800,000 bastard children are born every year.

None of this is really relevant to the case at hand. The constitutional question is whether the state has the power to compel Mrs. Smith to engage in an act that she sincerely regards as against her religion. The legal question is whether the state has such an overriding concern for discrimination in housing that it may enforce the "marital status" provision. What is California's compelling interest in fornication?

During the hearing last April, Mrs. Smith's counsel made a nice point. California maintains 19 state universities. None of them permits unmarried males and females to live together in campus housing.

Why is it lawful, Mrs. Smith asks, for an unwed couple to lease her duplex, but unlawful for the same couple to share a room at the state university two miles away? Why must she be compelled to condone the very kind of immorality the state condemns? Good questions, ma'am. Keep raising them.

They can't buy off enemies

Recently a false alarm was sounded about "the danger of eating apples."

An organization called the Natural Resources Defense Council (NRDC) alleged that a pesticide called Alar contaminates apples to the extent that youngsters eating enough apples could get cancer.

School boards in California and Chicago and elsewhere — fearful of eventual litigation resulting from having ignored the warning — withdrew apples from school cafeterias.

In the apple-growing country of our American Northwest the impact was tantamount to an economic earthquake — and it was entirely unwarranted and unfair.

The organization which sounded the warning, the NRDC, has no scientific standing. What it is is a litigation group which — with threats to sue — intimidates industries and government agencies.

The NRDC is supported mostly by ultra-liberal foundations.

Elizabeth Whelan of the American Council on Science and Health calls the apple danger "applesauce."

And she calls those who threaten us with killer applesauce "nutrition terrorists."

Paul Harvey

The American Council on Science and Health gets support from Uniroyal, the maker of Alar. So her objectivity might be questioned except that her organization gets less than 10 percent of its funding from pesticide manufacturers. It's their only avenue for fighting back.

The news media, always earliest with the warnings, is frequently remiss about sounding the all-clear.

You and I have visited before on the subject of corporate misgiving. Organizations with righteous-sounding names insistently seek donations from corporations in the name of social justice or race rights or community betterment or protection of the environment under a real or implied threat to boycott the corporation's products.

Thus many corporations contribute to organizations and individuals whose views and purposes may be diametrically opposed to their own.

Rarely does any corporation dare to confess outside the board room that it is being blackmailed by special interest groups.

The Capital Research Center is a Washington-based study group that monitors trends in philanthropy. It has released a list of 10 U.S. corporations that have contributed most generously to organizations with anti-business bias.

According to Capital Research, these are the corporations that are funding their own enemies: Dayton Hudson, Coca-Cola, General Mills, Pillsbury, Chemical Banking Corp., Acta Life and Casualty, Atlantic Richfield, AT&T, J.P. Morgan and Citicorp.

Many recipient organizations advocate more government regulation of business and use of the courts to harass corporations.

If big business imagines that it can "buy off" its most outspoken critics, it can't — it doesn't work. The recipient organizations turn right around and bite the hand that feeds them.

Labor unions helped Europe stay free

By BEN WATTENBERG

If it really is the end of an era, if the Cold War really is over, we ought to ask: Why?

Part of the answer is "Irving Brown," whose memorial service was held, appropriately, on May 1 — May Day — in the marble and mosaic grand lobby of the AFL-CIO headquarters building in Washington.

Brown died in February of this year in Paris. He was 77. For four decades he represented the American trade union movement in Europe.

Many Americans do not know that American labor has a foreign policy and has been a potent player in American statecraft. Over the years that policy has generally been consistent and describable in straightforward phrases: "anti-fascist," "anti-communist," "anti-totalitarian," "pro-democracy."

There are many reasons, from patriotic to parochial, that labor is so concerned with foreign policy and so passionately pro-democracy. One reason, as AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland likes to say, is that, "We don't want to negotiate with an employer who also owns the police, the army, the courts and the atom bomb."

Irving Brown arrived in Europe as World War II was ending. The continent was destitute. Politically, only the communists were well organized. The Soviet Union had taken over the eastern half of Europe, and they were trying to gain influence in the western half. Their chosen instrument, their greatest potential prize, was the trade union movement. The communists knew that whoever spoke for the unions could credibly claim to speak for the workers. They knew that if they could capture control of unions, they could roll the waters of the West, for example, by subverting the Marshall Plan.

Backed with the authority and resources of American unions, Brown helped European unions fight communist doctrine and control. It was not an easy task. The European union movement came out of a leftist tradition of bitter class struggle and class consciousness alien to the American experience. Brown and his American colleagues stressed that the biggest issues at stake went beyond left vs. right and on to the contest between free vs. non-free. In most European countries, through the toughest times of the Cold War, the communists were denied the domination they sought.

Later, Brown was influential in the creation of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions, which has worked globally to keep unions free and out of communist hands.

And so, in the course of time, the force of totalitarianism was stymied. Not, of course, by the trade union movement alone. There was allied military strength, a trillion dollars worth and more. There were courageous politicians of many democratic ideologies. There was the example of the fruits of a vigorous and often creative private business sector. But the unions were a prime target, and thanks in some large measure to American trade unionists like Irving

Brown, the prize was denied to the oppressors.

Now, the tide of totalitarianism seems spent. They say it's the end of an era. But if so, why? It is a long tale, with many tale-spinners, but let us remember that, in the first instance, totalitarianism flourished because it was prevented from succeeding.

At the memorial service, Kirkland spoke of the role of trade unionism in the new era: "For years a silent army has been assembling on the path (Brown) trod, but they are silent no more. ... they have raised the banner of free trade unionism in Poland, and they are changing the course of history. In China they have taken to the streets ... demanding democracy. In Hungary they are forming independent trade union organizations. They have marched in the streets of South Korea and Chile. In South Africa they are tolling the death knell of apartheid. Wherever working people are rising from their knees and walking erect, they are choosing the path of Irving Brown."

American dependents evacuate homes during Panama crisis

By JOSEPH B. FRAZIER
Associated Press Writer

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Hundreds of American military dependents evacuated their homes in Panama after President Bush stepped up his offensive against Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega by ordering in nearly 2,000 combat troops.

Bush on Thursday also recalled U.S. Ambassador Arthur Davis to protest the annulling of Sunday's election and the beating of the opposition presidential and vice presidential candidates by supporters of Noriega.

The crisis convulsing this strategically important country occurred after the government halted the counting of ballots Wednesday after claiming its presidential candidate, hand-picked by Noriega, held a 2-1 lead.

A team of international observers headed by former President Jimmy Carter said the opposition presidential candidate, Guillermo Endara, had won by a 3-to-1 measure despite widespread fraud.

Endara, who was severely beaten Wednesday during a street protest by a group of thugs wielding two-by-fours and metal pipes, remained hospitalized today.

Several hundred U.S. diplomatic and military families on Thursday packed up emergency supplies of clothing and treasured keepsakes to seek refuge in one of the 10 American military bases.

"The problem is regime-directed gangs," said Terry Kneebone, a spokesman for the U.S. Embassy.

Kneebone said there were no direct threats against U.S. personnel but that in the past the Panamanian government has publicized the neighborhoods where Americans live.

U.S. government figures put the number of embassy dependents in Panama at 152. There are about 10,600 military dependents, 972 of whom live off-base, according to U.S. Southern Command figures.

Military police check identification at Fort Clayton, Panama, base gates Thursday.

In addition, there are another 20,000 American civilians living in Panama, most of them retirees or in private business. Representatives of American businesses based in Panama, once a leading international financial center, were urged to evacuate their families.

Opposition vice presidential candidate Ricardo Arias Calderon, who was also beaten Wednesday, called the sending in of American troops "a U.S. policy provoked by Noriega and not sought by us."

Arias said action should be taken by the Organization of American States.

The 1,881 troops, making up a light division and a standard mechanized division, will join about 10,000 U.S. forces already stationed in Panama. Officials said it will take about a week to send all the reinforcements.

Panama's Defense Forces, headed by Noriega, number about 15,000.

Panama government television said Thursday the troop deployment is "within the framework of the aggressive policy" of the United States.

Rigoberto Perez, former secretary-general of the Revolutionary Democratic Party, the main pro-government party, said the government has no plans to get rid of Noriega.

"He is our leader. You don't change leaders in time of war," Perez said.

The government said it nullified the results because American meddling, among other factors, made it impossible to declare a winner.

Yolanda Pulice de Rodriguez, at a news conference from which American news organizations were barred, said there were no plans for new elections.

Protests over fraud and the nullification of the results poured in from many countries, including such Latin neighbors as Argentina, Peru, Venezuela, Brazil, Ecuador, Guatemala, Costa Rica and Bolivia.

Britain called on Noriega to step down.

NATO welcomes Soviet proposal to cut missiles

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — The NATO allies today welcomed Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's proposal to unilaterally cut 500 short-range nuclear weapons in guarded terms and called on Moscow not to stop there.

"We consider reduction in 500 weapons alone as a welcome, positive, but rather modest step," NATO said in a statement after U.S. Secretary of State James A. Baker III discussed his trip to Moscow this week with senior officials of the 15 other NATO nations.

NATO already has removed 2,400 nuclear arms in the past decade, the statement said.

"Our levels are much lower than those of the Soviet Union," it said and added that NATO looks to Moscow to make further "reductions in its unwarranted superiority."

NATO estimates the Soviet Union has 1,450 short-range nuclear missile launchers in Europe, against 88 for the Western alliance.

Baker discussed with the allies a new challenge by Gorbachev to cut not only short-range nuclear weapons but tanks, troops and aircraft in Europe as well.

The NATO meeting was attended by seven foreign ministers, including Baker and West Germany's Hans-Dietrich Genscher, and senior officials of the 16 NATO nations.

The Soviet offer to cut 500 short-range nuclear weapons comes at a time when NATO is buffeted by an internal dispute over whether to modernize its 88 Lance missiles. The issue is expected to dominate a May 29-30 NATO summit here.

Baker met separately here with Genscher, who wants NATO to delay the modernization of the Lance missiles until the early 1990s and begin talks on reducing short-range nuclear arms with the Soviet Union.

At the outset of their session at NATO headquarters, a reporter asked Baker if he planned to "bury the hatchet" with Genscher. "There is no hatchet," replied Baker.

Baker was also met separately with Dutch Foreign Minister Hans van den Broek whose country is one of several NATO members trying to mediate in the modernization debate that has pitted Britain and the United States against West Germany and several other allies.

Baker told Gorbachev at their meeting in the Kremlin this week he opposes talks on short-range nuclear weapons saying the Warsaw Pact was so far ahead in tactical nuclear weapons the United States could not even consider negotiations until there was "a little less of an imbalance."

The unilateral cuts Gorbachev intends to make this year include 284 short-range missiles, 166 nuclear bombs carried by airplanes and 50 nuclear artillery shells.

In Moscow, Gorbachev also moved boldly on the conventional weapons front telling Baker he would offer to cut Warsaw Pact tanks by 40,000, combat aircraft by 42,000, and artillery pieces by 47,000, a U.S. official said.

VA to reopen its files on Agent Orange

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Department of Veterans Affairs is taking another look at the cases of all Vietnam veterans whose benefits claims due to exposure to Agent Orange were denied, and easing the standards for receiving compensation.

The change became known Thursday when VA Secretary Edward Derwinski said the government will not appeal a federal judge's decision earlier this week that struck down regulations restricting compensation for victims of Agent Orange.

Derwinski's decision was seen as a major step toward disability benefits for some of the more than 34,000 veterans of the Vietnam War who have unsuccessfully sought to have the government admit their exposure to the toxic herbicide has caused health problems.

Derwinski said the VA will follow the judge's instructions to review all previously denied claims and use new, statistical standards to decide whether specific diseases are presumed to have been caused by Agent Orange exposure.

"It's a very significant step," said Mary Stout, president of the Vietnam Veterans of America, a 35,000-member group that filed suit over the VA's denial of benefits in Agent Orange cases. "I think it does show that there's a new Veterans Administration and a new administration that's taking a different view of the Agent Orange situation."

Agent Orange was widely sprayed by U.S. forces in Vietnam as a defoliant. Its medical effects years and decades later on the soldiers who handled it or were exposed to it have been the subject of intense legal and scientific debate.

U.S. District Judge Thelton Henderson ruled this week in San Francisco the VA had used an "impermissibly demanding test" in requiring proof of a cause-and-effect relationship between exposure to Agent Orange and specific diseases.

Instead, he said, the agency should require only a finding of a statistically significant correlation or "increased risk of incidence" — a less difficult standard to meet.

Derwinski, a veteran and former member of Congress, said he had begun "a good hard look" at the department's Agent Orange policy even before the federal judge's ruling. He said he concluded it was not good policy and "frankly not good politics" to fight the ruling.

VA officials said the department will direct its 11-member scientific committee that reviews Agent Orange issues to take a new look at all scientific and medical studies of Agent Orange using the new statistical standard.

Derwinski said he expected final decisions on the diseases by October.

Deputy Secretary Anthony Principi said the VA would consider any veteran who served in Vietnam to have been exposed to Agent Orange and would not require specific proof they were in an area where the herbicide was sprayed.

The department, which until this year was known as the Veterans Administration, has consistently held that only one disease, a skin condition known as chloracne, was caused by exposure to Agent Orange during military service.

As a result the VA has denied disability compensation for veterans who claimed exposure to other diseases, including cancer. The VA has provided medical treatment for those conditions, however.

Whether those cancers and other illnesses can be linked statistically to Agent Orange exposure has been a matter of dispute. Derwinski's decision puts that question before the VA's panel of scientists and other experts, which had concluded there was no scientific link based on the previous standard.

Derwinski and other VA officials said they had no way to estimate the potential cost to the government.

Account of brutal crime causes top Wright aide to resign

By JOAN MOWER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—John P. Mack's desk at the Capitol is empty today, but questions remain about the balance between justice and forgiveness following his resignation amid a furor over his brutal attack on a woman 16 years ago.

A top aide to House Speaker Jim Wright and one of the most powerful staff members in Congress, Mack resigned Thursday, saying, "I wish I could rewrite the past, but unfortunately I can't."

Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., co-chair of the Congressional Caucus for Women's Issues, called the resignation "very sad" but "necessary."

"I believe in rehabilitation, but not when it leads to such a high position," she said.

While many people on Capitol Hill knew the Mack story, it resurfaced last week when The Washington Post published fresh details of the unprovoked 1973 attack in an interview with the victim, Pamela Small.

Small recounted how Mack, then a 19-year-old store manager, attacked her with a hammer, stabbed her with a steak knife and then left her for dead in her car. Doctors said she was lucky to survive.

At the time, Wright's daughter was married to Mack's brother.

Although he was sentenced to 15 years in prison, Mack served just 27 months and was given a job by Wright following his parole. He rose steadily from a $9,000-a-year mail clerk's position to become the $89,500-a-year head of the Democratic Steering and Policy Committee, which sets the majority party's agenda in the House.

Wright said in a statement that he had been "willing to give this young man another chance, and in the intervening years I have never had occasion to regret it." The speaker, already under fire and the subject of a House ethics investigation, said Mack resigned without being asked.

Rep. Beryl Anthony, D-Ark., chairman of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, said that after the victim's account was published, "There was an immediate reaction that went nationwide."

"I can understand the emotional outcry," he said. "I heard it from my staff. ... We heard it in congressional committees."

As executive director of the steering committee, Mack was a visible figure in the House, often working on the floor and running meetings for Wright.

House Majority Leader Thomas Foley, D-Wash., said he was "very sorry" that Mack resigned, and called him "one of the most able and dedicated employees" in Congress.

"This society believes in forgiveness," added Rep. Tony Coelho, D-Calif., the House majority whip and a close friend of Mack's.

The two were even investors together in Dairy Management Associates, a business in Merced, Calif., Coelho's hometown, according to David Dreyer, Coelho's spokesman.

Others were less sympathetic, especially in light of Small's declaration that Mack had never apologized or made any restitution for his attack on her.

Last week, Rep. Lyn Martin, R-Ill., talked with Schroeder and Rep. Olympia Snowe, R-Maine, the other co-chair of the women's caucus, about what course of action to follow, Snowe said. Martin also broached the subject of Mack with Wright, an aide said. "I think Mr. Mack made the appropriate decision," Martin said following the resignation.

On Wednesday, Snowe, one of 26 women in the House, said she drafted a letter to Wright, telling him "he ought to reconsider John Mack." The message to Wright was that he ought to dismiss his assistant, she said.

Snowe, who had obtained signatures from several other female GOP House members, said she never gave the letter to the speaker because Mack resigned, making the suggestion moot.

Snowe said she believed Mack shouldn't hold such an influential job when he "clearly violated the law, didn't finish his sentence and didn't pay restitution" to Small.

Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., said, "apparently there was outrage among the women members of Congress" over the Mack story. Rep. Mary Rose Oaker, D-Ohio, said she'd always found

Mack to be a decent person but the type of crime he committed was "very offensive."

Snowe said women often "feel vulnerable" when they read stories like the one about Mack.

But Rep. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., was critical of the timing of the Post's story at a time when Wright is under fire from the House ethics committee for his personal financial dealings.

"I don't see what has been gained by this," she said.

Rep. Charles Wilson, D-Texas, said Mack's success on Capitol Hill "obviously upset some people."

Panel considers lowering tax on horse race bets

AUSTIN (AP)—Opponents of lowering the state's take from horse race betting said cutting the tax rate now would break a promise to Texans who voted in 1987 to allow pari-mutuel wagering.

But the president of the country's oldest racing association told a Senate committee Thursday that lawmakers must reduce the state's take for Texas to become "a dominant force" in the sport.

"Texas has the opportunity to become a dominant force in a worldwide industry," said Frank De Francis, chairman and chief executive of the Maryland Jockey Club, which operates the Pimlico racecourse in Baltimore.

He told members of the Senate Economic Development Committee, however, that Texas will not have a viable horse racing industry unless lawmakers reduce the state's pari-mutuel wagering take.

Sue Cox, of the anti-gambling group Texans Who Care, disagreed, saying, "Lowering the tax at this time reeks of pari-mutuel having been sold under false pretenses."

"For an industry that desperately wants to be thought of as one having integrity, it is strange that one of the first acts is to break its commitment," Cox said.

No applications for major race tracks were received for the Dallas-Fort Worth and San Antonio areas. The only bids for a Class 1 track were made by two groups in Houston.

When Sen. John Leedom, R-Dallas, said racing officials sold the idea of pari-mutuel racing as a way to raise tax revenue, De Francis said, "I don't care what was said two years ago. Life is a system of change."

Sen. O.H. Ike Harris, R-Dallas, sponsored the state's current racing law and has proposed changing the tax rate now. He said the thrust of the election campaign for pari-mutuel racing focused more on economic development than raising tax revenue.

De Francis, who has said he would like to expand his racing interests to Texas, urged passage of two Harris bills that would lower the state's take from 5 percent to 1 percent and allow simulcasting of horse races between tracks. Simulcasting allows races at one track to be broadcast to another.

He said the Maryland horse racing industry was on the verge of "extinction" before lawmakers there reduced the wagering tax rate from 4.1 percent to 0.5 percent in 1984. Since then, he said, horse racing has become the third largest industry in the state, adding $1.5 billion to the economy and producing 22,000 jobs.

Harris' bill would establish a sliding scale tax rate. For the first $100 million wagered at a track, 12 percent would go to the track, 1 percent to the state and 5 percent to the purses.

The state's take would increase and the track's share decrease until wagering reached $500 million, when the track's take would not go lower than 6 percent and the state's no higher than 5 percent.

Cox also opposed a proposal to simulcast races, saying it could lead to off-track betting.

Harris said the committee would vote on his horse racing bills Friday.

Spring fever really a healthy sign of the great awakening

By SUSAN FISHER
Associated Press Writer

FARMINGTON, Conn. (AP) — If the bright sunshine and warm breezes of spring tempt you to abandon boring work and run outdoors, don't resist.

Go play in the sun. That's the prescription from doctors who say it's only natural to want to direct energy outside when the weather gets warmer and the days get longer.

Contrary to dictionary definitions, doctors say spring fever is not simple laziness, but rather the same sort of instinctive response that prompts bears to emerge from hibernation, birds to migrate and countless species to mate in the spring.

"It's not a medical diagnosis, but it's real," said Dr. Henry Schneiderman, an internist and pathologist, on a sunny spring afternoon, in his windowless University of Connecticut Health Center office.

He described spring fever as the restless feeling that comes with the beginning of season: "It makes it difficult to focus on the tasks at hand."

Although spring fever seems like a kind of fatigue, it isn't fatigue at all, said Dr. Thomas Lane, an internist who directs the Fatigue Clinic at the Health Center. "Spring fever is not a reduction in energy but a reduction in energy to do boring tasks."

Spring fever is worse than cabin fever—a winter condition of increased anxiety or boredom from living for some time in a confined space, Schneiderman said. "Not only is the office or house a pain in the neck but the outdoors is beckoning."

Hormones also play a role, he said. The increase in sunlight triggers the pineal gland at the base of the brain to release hormones. Similar hormones in other animals and birds signal the onset of mating season; the increased hours of sunlight also stimulate migration in birds.

In a sense, Schneiderman said, people have an urge to fly from their responsibilities. "I think most people can deal with it. Most people won't come to the doctor for it. If they wound up coming to the doctor for it, I would think they had some other problem."

Staying indoors for some time also has been known to cause physical problems. Headaches, chronic fatigue and irritability have been linked to lower oxygen levels and indoor pollutants like molds and formaldehyde odors.

The cure to spring fever is to enjoy life, to stop and smell the blooming roses, Schneiderman said. "Getting out is good for physical health and getting out is good for mental health."

"Running to and from the car doesn't count as getting outside."

Some cold facts about white wilderness

By The Associated Press

Here are some facts about Antarctica, the coldest place on Earth:

- Antarctica is so remote that the great explorers missed it altogether during the Age of Discovery. Neither the Russian Thaddeus von Bellinhausen, who discovered two coastal islands in 1819-20, nor American Nathaniel Palmer, who discovered what is now called Palmer Peninsula in 1820, realized they were on the verge of a new continent. In 1840, American Charles Wilkes sailed along 1,500 miles of coast and realized that he had found the seventh continent.
- In 1911, Norwegian Roald Amundsen was the first to reach the South Pole. Eighteen years later, aviator Richard Byrd was the first fly over it. British scientists led by Sir Vivian Ernest Fuchs made the first land traverse of the continent in 1957-58 in huge snow tractors.
- Six thousand meteorites have been discovered on Antarctica, more than those discovered in all the rest of the world.
- The continent's human population averages 2,000 in the summer, dwindling to about 800 in the winter. Only one other warm-blooded animal remains during the winter, the emperor penguin.

The female emperor penguin lays one egg and returns to the warm sea for the winter. The male stands with the egg between its feet for nine weeks without food. During this time, it loses half its weight while maintaining a body temperature of 100 degrees.

■ Even the penguins venture no farther inland than half a mile, which leaves the fifth largest continent with 5.4 million square miles and 10 percent of the world's land mass virtually uninhabited.

■ The Soviet base at Vostok recorded the world's lowest temperature — minus 129.3 degrees Fahrenheit — in July 1983. ■ During storms, Antarctic winds reach 200 mph. When it's summer in the northern hemisphere, the temperature in Antarctica averages minus 45 degrees. In austral summer, it warms up to just below freezing.

■ All but 2 percent of the continent is covered by ice, which is three miles thick in places. This ice-pack holds about 90 percent of the world's fresh water, and if it melted, scientists predict it would raise the level of the world's oceans by 160 to 200 feet. ■ Despite all the ice, the continent receives less than two inches of precipitation a year. Boreholes in the Antarctic ice yield samples that date back 200,000 years. The continent also contains a desert, known as the Dry Valleys, that is the driest place on earth.

Join Us In Worship IN THE CHURCH OF YOUR CHOICE

Real Joy!

Unbounded joy! The joy of discovering new things. Each day bringing new wonders. All of life... so new... and exciting. God has been so wonderful. We have so much to appreciate. Living each day being thankful to God for all the wonderful things that he has given us. Attend church each week and know the "REAL JOY" of worshipping God.

The Church is God's appointed agency in this world for spreading the knowledge of His love for man and of His demand for man to respond to that love by loving his neighbor. Without this grounding in the love of God, no government or society or way of life will long persevere and the freedoms which we hold so dear will inevitably perish. Therefore, even from a selfish point of view, one should support the Church for the sake of the welfare of himself and his family. Beyond that, however, every person should uphold and participate in the Church because it tells the truth about man's life, death and destiny; the truth which alone will set him free to live as a child of God.

His Touch

By Charlotte Barbaree

Scripture: The Lord delights in the way of the man whose steps he has made firm; though he stumble, he will not fall, for the Lord upholds him with his hand. (Psalm 37:23-24 NIV)

I am a creature of habit. I have a new computer at work, and the work I produce is done almost entirely with the use of a computer tool called a "mouse." I slide the mouse on my desk top, click the mouse's button, and the computer receives its commands from the mouse. I spend the better part of two days a week manipulating that mouse.

I have developed a mouse habit. Whenever I sit down to use my home computer, I reach automatically for a mouse even though I don't use the mouse at home. I knew how ingrained the habit had become when I sat down at my ancient sewing machine, and I reached for a mouse. I've been known to sit down to eat and reach for a mouse!

Christians, have we developed the Christian habit? Faithful worship and service with a church family, daily Bible study and prayer, wholesome language and activities, a loving attitude toward others — each practice produces a colder walk with the Lord and creates a peaceful familiarity which soothes the soul.

The more often we obey God's biblical instructions, the more easily we will respond in a Christian manner to life situations. No matter the provocation, the anger, the fear, the pain or the joy we experience, our automatic response will be to reach for God's hand. We are creatures of habit.

TUPELO, Miss. (AP)—Christian protests apparently are having increased influence on commercial advertisers on television, as indicated by some of their recent actions.

The American Family Association, based here, called off its boycott of the Pepsi Cola company, saying it has agreed not to air its Madonna commercial or to sponsor the rock singer's tour.

Roman Catholic Bishop Rene H. Gracida of Corpus Christi, Texas, also canceled a boycott which he had called against the Pepsi company because of Madonna's sensual video, "Like a Prayer."

"We think Pepsi has made a very wise business and moral decision," says the Rev. Donald E. Wildmon, AFA executive director.

He also says Domino's Pizza, Ralston Purina and General Mills have canceled their advertising on Saturday Night Live after protests from the association.

"More and more corporations are beginning to say no to the exploitative and anti-Christian programming of the networks," he says.

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP)—Conditions shifted in U.S. society between 1950 and 1970 and "it is no longer natural, normal and American to grow up Christian," says the Rev. William H. Willimon, a Duke University professor.

"Paganism is in the air we breathe and the water we drink," Willimon, a United Methodist, said in a lecture at Southern Baptist Theological Seminary. "If our children grow up in faith, we are going to have to put them there."

He said the "world has declared war on the church in the most subtle ways." Therefore, he said, Christians must form strong worshipping communities because "being a Christian is too difficult a way to walk alone."

WASHINGTON (AP)—The U.S. Department of Defense has distributed a new edition of Days of Remembrance to be used at military posts in observances recalling the 6 million Jews who perished under Nazism.

The 144-page book, produced by the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council with the assistance of a Holocaust study center of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, is to become a part of the military's educational program.

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP)—Evangelist Billy Graham, talking with Syracuse University students as part of his Central New York Crusade, said of the spiritual state of the Soviet Union, where he has preached:

"I believe it is one of the most religious countries in the world. They've just not been allowed to express this religion in years past. I think we're going to see something good come out of what is happening now, if people don't push too fast."

Psalty and his kids rehearse their performance.

Hi-Land Christian to present Psalty the Singing Songbook

Psalty, the Singing Songbook, will be performing at Hi-Land Christian Church, 1615 N. Banks, at 7:30 p.m. Saturday, May 13.

Psalty and his kids will present two mini musicals. The first, called Kids' Praise-a-luia, is a kids' praise Hootenanny, and the other is Gr-r-owing Up in God, a story about growing up to love the Lord.

Psalty is a fun-loving character played by Dwight Brown. He can make you laugh by some of the things he says and does and sometimes just by looking at him.

His deep desire is that kids and adults learn (in a fun way) the principles God has called him to teach, which is to praise the Lord from their hearts.

Those performing with Psalty are Matt Brown, Stacey Brown, Clint Cox, Lori Cox, Courtney Drake, Cara East, Misty Ferrell, Cody Hill, Renee Hill, Stacy Huddleston, Burton Jones, Alicia Lee, Luke Long, Amy Lowrance, Brock Lowrance and Carrie Zumstein.

The pastor and congregation invite young and old alike to Hi-Land Christian Church for an evening of praise and worship with these two Mighty-Mini Musicals and Psalty.

Committee issues proposed charter for reforming council of churches

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The nation's largest ecumenical organization, the National Council of Churches, is struggling to overcome an operational and financial crisis and to widen its work for Christian unity.

A proposed charter for that purpose was issued last week by a special action committee of 15 after six months of work and 35 regional consultations around the country.

The committee's report, to be considered by the council's governing board of 265 denominational representatives May 16-19 in Lexington, Ky., calls for a reformation of the council's structure and functioning.

The changes "will help our council be a viable entity in the times in which we live," says United Methodist Bishop Melvin G. Talbert of San Francisco, chairman of the reorganization committee.

The council includes most of the nation's mainline Protestant and Eastern Orthodox Churches with memberships totaling 42 million.

Among other things, the plan provides for expanded involvement with Roman Catholics and evangelical bodies, as well as streamlining the council itself into a trimmer framework.

It would fuse a complex, loose-knit array of 11 operational units into three program units — on unity and relationships, witness and service, nurture and discipleship (Christian education).

Each unit, including denominational representatives, would have a greater role in its own decision-making, programming and staffing, thereby reducing centralized direction.

This has been a source of recent friction and turmoil in the 39-year-old council.

"Critical problems have too often been papered over rather than named, examined and resolved," says the committee, attributing them to changed situations in the churches and in American culture.

Neither the council "nor even the entire Christian community enjoy or expect the privileged and leadership.

The conflicts emerged as the council sought to move from a "cooperative agency" of churches working together to a "community of Christian communions" acting in common faith and mission as one in Christ.

Some of the operational units, particularly the huge relief arm, Church World Service, clashed with central leadership headed by the Rev. Arie R. Brouwer and also with the governing board.

Brouwer says the new design aims to deal with the problems, consolidating units and giving them greater rein in determining priorities, but with accountability to an Executive Coordinating Committee.

The plan also calls for an annual "Conference of Communions" bringing representatives of all the participating churches into mutual deliberations, and for a wider ecumenical forum every four years.

It would seek involvement of non-member churches, such as Roman Catholics and Southern Baptists, which already participate in several council functions, as well as various evangelical bodies.

The council has a special six-member committee working on closer links with Roman Catholicism, and in that cause a 12-member council delegation in April visited Pope John Paul II and other Vatican officials. It was the first such visit in 20 years.

status and moral authority they once took for granted" when the council was formed in 1950, the report says.

It says that not only is religion more pluralistic, but it and the nation are pummeled by racism, sexism, secularism, nationalism and expanding technologies and communications engulfing local communities.

Describing the council's trouble as a "crisis built upon multiple crises that are interactive and cumulative," the report identifies three major areas of conflict — over authority, accountability

Religious right seems mostly quiescent

By DAVID BRIGGS
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The religious right, lacking a charismatic leader and fresh from its success in keeping a Republican in the White House, may be in danger of being pushed out of the political arena by an old foe: apathy.

The Rev. Ed Dobson and Ed Hindson, who each spent more than a decade leading evangelicals out of the political closet as architects of the Moral Majority, contend in a new book that religious conservatives are searching for new leadership.

"I think the vast majority of fundamentalists ... are kind of in neutral," said Dobson, once considered the successor to Jerry Falwell's evangelistic empire.

With Falwell announcing his withdrawal from politics and Pat Robertson's unsuccessful presidential candidacy, Dobson said, "There is no charismatic person to put it together."

Dobson and Hindson, authors of The Seduction of Power: Preachers, Politics and the Media, discussed the emergence of the religious right as a political force at a recent conference sponsored by the Center on Religion and Society.

Hindson said the religious right's success in electing former President Reagan and President Bush — who support evangelical positions on abortion and "family life" issues — may have left some evangelicals apathetic.

"They don't see themselves threatened by the political party in power," said Hindson. One poll showed more than 80 percent of white evangelicals supported Bush, he said. "I think the average fundamentalist-evangelical is thinking, 'Hey, eight more good years. Why worry about it?'"

The exception to the political inertia among religious conservatives is the abortion issue, Hindson and Dobson said.

Operation Rescue — a series of protests outside abortion clinics — shows increased activism among "younger, more radical" religious conservatives, said Hindson, a former religion professor at Falwell's Liberty University before becoming executive director of the Center for Biblical Counseling and Education in St. Louis.

For evangelicals who believe abortion involves the taking of a human life, Hindson said, "It is the ultimate moral issue of our times."

The march on Washington of at least 300,000 people advocating legalized abortion may jar more evangelicals back into the political arena, he added. "I think what happened ... is going to cause or force renewed coalitions among Catholics and evangelicals on the abortion issue."

In their book, Dobson and Hindson say the religious right has had mixed success with its political agenda, fending off the Equal Rights Amendment and the gay rights movement, but failing to bring about significant changes on issues such as abortion and public school prayers.

But Dobson dismisses criticism that fundamentalists were exploited by the Republican Party. He contends the religious right was "granted legitimacy" by the GOP.

"I would argue the religious right used the Republican Party as much as the Republican Party used the religious right," said Dobson, a former editor of the Fundamentalist Journal who worked with Falwell for 15 years before becoming the senior pastor of Calvary Church in Grand Rapids, Mich.

Still, the men said, the new prominence fundamentalists have enjoyed in the media has also been a mixed blessing, with the downfall in sex scandals of TV evangelists Jim Bakker and Jimmy Swaggart bringing unwanted notoriety.

When Falwell tried to step in to save Bakker's PTL ministry, Hindson said, he became "a man in a white suit stomping all over the barnyard."

Hindson also said his old boss, through such actions as labeling Nobel Peace Prize winner Bishop Desmond Tutu a "phony" and his religiously based defense of such individuals as Oliver North and deposed Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos, provided an example of the dangers of stretching religious principles to defend extreme political views.

Visually handicapped students learn way around art museum

By HOLLACE WEINER
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

FORT WORTH (AP) — Although Janice Sloan can't tell black from white or night from day, this blind, 8-year-old child knows her way around the Kimbell Art Museum.

She races up the marble stairs. She runs her hands across a fifth century mosaic. She slips into a cane chair in the museum's dining room, rests her elbows on an oak table and sips a glass of pink lemonade.

Janice feels at home. So do her classmates — seven visually impaired students from Mary Louise Philips Elementary school who hurtle themselves up the Kimbell's travertine staircases for their twice-a-month workshop in art appreciation.

This is no arts-and-crafts class, no sheltered workshop for the primary-grade set, but rather a museum-classroom where kids who can't see learn about contrast, balance, symmetry and proportion.

"My intention here is not to teach handwork, busy work or little craft capabilities, but to introduce the general principals of art that are not easily absorbed without sight," said Marilyn Ingram, the Kimbell's curator of education who has developed the course, "through trial and error," over the past four years.

"Without vision, they can miss attaining an understanding of major esthetic notions like balance, harmony and order," Ingram said. "These interrelationships are the basis of music, literature, logic and so many other disciplines."

For years, Ingram yearned to open the museum to the blind. But what could she give them besides Braille labels beneath pictures? She searched educational archives for a written course of study. Finding none, she teamed up with Sheryl Nealy, a Fort Worth teacher for the visually impaired. With advice from the classroom teacher and twice-a-month visits from Nealy's students, the curator has developed a workbook of lesson plans that she hopes to eventually publish.

So how does an art historian, like Ingram, explain patterns and spaces to three kids who can't see at all, two who can only distinguish light from dark and three others with eyesight so hazy they are classified as legally blind?

The curator starts with the museum's building, a work of art in itself, a graceful space with arches and vaults designed by architect Louis Kahn. The kids touch the floor — 10 feet of travertine marble, followed by 20 feet of smooth oak, followed by another 10 feet of marble. As the pattern repeats itself, the children begin to comprehend contrast, texture and balance.

Once the repetition of the floor is evident to the children's hands, it becomes evident to their feet as they wander about the museum.

"We tell them the door is at the center of the building," Ingram went on. "By the way they come into a building they can quickly understand how it's laid out if they realize that one side is echoed in another side."

"They learn what classical means in this way," the curator said. "They learn how symmetry has been used, down the ages, by feeling three-dimensional models of buildings," like the Parthenon and Lincoln Memorial, and how balance applies to the design of other things as well.

In one lesson, the students studied shapes, making wind chimes that dangle with pieces of clay formed into circles, squares and other geometric shapes.

In another lesson, the children studied faces, feeling the contours of their own eyes and ears, then fashioning life-size masks out of clay. Many of the students were surprised that their eyes were so far below their hairlines rather than focused at the top of the faces. They studiously felt for the mouth above the chin and the space between the upper lip and the nose.

"They don't know this," Ingram said. "This is a revelation to them. They don't have that sense of the spaces between their features. They don't look at other people's faces. They don't look at their own."

Last week's lesson was texture, with each child's assignment to make a mosaic out of beans, rice and paste. When the kids arrived, each was greeted by a docent, a museum guide who volunteers her time to work with a particular student whenever the class meets. Seated next to adult helpers, each child fingered five kinds of grains and seeds.

"These are smooth and wavy," said Crintis Gray, 10, picking up a kidney-shaped red bean. "This one has a rough spot and it's smaller," he said, rubbing a white bean with his thumb and forefinger. The black bean, he concluded, were smaller than the whites ones, and smoother too. Next came the split peas. "This used to be one piece and it's broken," Crintis decided.

Let's See...

There are a lot of fragrances to choose from,
I think she might like a new gown and robe,
She did mention a new purse, maybe a Texas Handbag,
I could get her those new terry slippers from Isotoner,
She always likes brass or crystal, for the house,
I see her wearing a lot of those Jog Suits and Activewear,
Maybe a necklace and earrings from Napier might do it,
And if its not Quite Right, She can always exchange it.

PFA presents organ and classical guitar concert

The Pampa Fine Arts Association will present in concert Dr. Judson Maynard, organist, and Polly Maynard, classical guitarist, Sunday, May 14, at 3 p.m. at St. Matthews Episcopal Church. The public is invited.

Organist Judson Maynard received his bachelor of music and master of music education degrees from the University of Montana and his doctor of philosophy degree from Indiana University. He is an associate of the American Guild Organists and a member of the Guild of Carillonners of North America.

During a faculty development leave in 1979, Maynard studied organ in Haarlem and carillon at the Netherlands Carillon School in Amersfoort, Netherlands, where he received the Final Diploma in carillon playing. As well as organ recitals, Maynard regularly presents carillon recitals on the Charles and Georgia Robertson Baird Memorial Carillon, located in the west bell tower of the Texas Tech Administration building.

Maynard is also a member of the Texas Tech Baroque Ensemble, playing viola da gamba which he made himself.

Besides organ, Maynard teaches harpsichord, carillon, and sophomore music theory classes at Texas Tech University.

Following an organ recital at

Judson Maynard

Polly Maynard

the renowned Holy Christ Church in Hand, Netherlands, the Kolner Stadt-Anzeiger newspaper cited Maynard as being "highly dedicated" and "an American organist who understands his craft."

Polly Maynard received her bachelor's and master's degrees in classical guitar performance from North Texas State University in Denton, where she is currently adjunct professor of guitar. In addition, she is part-time guitar instructor at Eastfield Community College in Mesquite, Tex. She also heads the Denton Childbloom Program, a music education program where she uses small guitars to introduce children between the ages of 5 and 12 to music.

Ms. Maynard also is a regular performer with the Dallas Classic Guitar Society's outreach program, Guitar-in-the-Community (GITC). The eight GITC performers are sent individually to schools, senior centers and special care facilities in the Dallas-Fort Worth area. Their performances are meant to be both entertaining and educational, bringing music to individuals who may have little contact with the arts.

A frequent performer, Ms. Maynard has played in master classes given by Oscar Ghiglia, Baltazar Benitez, Michael Lorimer, Eliot Fisk and Michael Newman.

Dieters carry no weight with insurance companies

DEAR ABBY: During the last 10 years I have tried dozens of diets, all of which were worthless. (One cost me nearly $1,000.)

I finally decided to try a medical program to help me lose the 130 pounds I so desperately need to lose. So what did I learn? My insurance carrier won't pay one cent of this $3,000 medically supervised weight-loss program. (Yes, I have tried Weight Watchers, Overeaters Anonymous, TOPS, Nutrisystem, Cambridge, Slimfast, starvation, etc. I have even looked into stomach stapling, which insurance would cover, but my doctor advised against it.)

Abby, a person can be an alcoholic — no problem, insurance will pay for the recovery treatment. Drug addiction, same thing. Ditto for a mental breakdown. So why won't insurance companies acknowledge that there are people like me for whom obesity is a health problem? I am not a skinny little thing who is frantic to lose five or 10 pounds. I am 130 pounds overweight! I'm as addicted to food as an alcoholic is to alcohol.

SPEAKING FOR MANY
DEAR SPEAKING: Indeed I do agree. Morbid obesity is a life-threatening condition, and I am amazed that it is not recognized as such by insurance companies.

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

I think it should be.

DEAR ABBY: I heard you on my car radio this morning, and I have a bone to pick with you. You were giving some tips on how to plan a wedding, and please correct me if I am wrong, but I believe you said a woman should not feel insulted if her fiancé asks her to sign a prenuptial agreement.

Abby, I am an unmarried 20-year-old woman, and if my fiancé asked me to sign a prenuptial agreement, I would feel very much insulted. To me it would mean that he didn't trust me and wanted to make sure I didn't take him to the cleaners.

Please tell me how you arrived at that cockamamie conclusion.

SYLVIA IN CALIFORNIA
DEAR SYLVIA: A prenuptial

agreement benefits both parties and is especially important if one of the couple has been previously married and has considerable assets. If there are children from a previous marriage, it seems only fair that they should inherit their parent's estate. Unless this is provided for in a prenuptial agreement, in a community property state (and yours is one), the assets of the couple will be divided equally in the event of death or divorce.

I also recommend that each party retain his/her own attorney. And no one should sign anything without consulting a lawyer.

DEAR ABBY: In response to "Losing Patience": When my son was 2 1/2 years old, he had to wear a patch over one eye temporarily to strengthen the other eye. One day while pushing him in a cart through a grocery store, a man with a bushy moustache stopped us and asked, "What's wrong with that boy's eye?" I explained, and we went our separate ways.

When we were out of earshot of the man, my son asked, "Mama, what's wrong with that man's mouth?" (He had never seen a moustache before.)

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Your blending of enthusiasm with warmth produces a charisma within you today that others will find very appealing. Your presence will be welcomed in any circle. Know where to look for romance and you'll find it. The Astro-Graph Matchmaker instantly reveals which signs are romantically perfect for you. Mail $2 to Matchmaker, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) The odds tend to favor you today concerning competitive involvements. This is because you are likely to be more determined and tenacious than those who compete against you.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Be both open-minded and a good listener today. Someone who has your best interests at heart might try to tell you something constructive that can help you with social relationships.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Possibilities for personal acquisition look better than average today. This is because several channels for gain could open simultaneously.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) This should be a fun day for you with lots of activities in the office. The reason things will be to your liking is because you'll be the one who designs the program.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) You will operate more effectively today if you are free from the influence of others. Your instincts will put you on the right track, but outside input could confuse you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Your highly receptive mind will put you in an excellent position to learn something of value today. This new knowledge will make it easier for you to achieve a personal goal.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) This could be an extremely rewarding day for you, especially if you are able to devote your attention to improving your material lot in life.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) It is not necessary for you to toss your weight around in order to impress others today. There will be something in your demeanor and inner resolve that will automatically command respect.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) There is some special information you possess that is far more valuable than you realize. Properly used, it could put you in a key position to earn a commission.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Friends are apt to be more sensitive to your needs than usual today. If there is something special you've been wanting a pal to do for you, this is the right day to make your request.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Tasks you put your hands to today should be accomplished with relative ease and efficiency. This is because you'll be desirous of taking more pride in your work than usual.

Jordan held to 15.

Knicks win, Suns take lead in playoffs

By BILL BARNARD
AP Basketball Writer

The New York Knicks are winning the battle against Michael Jordan, while managing only a stalemate in their playoff series against the Chicago Bulls.

Jordan, the NBA scoring champion the last three seasons and a 36-point scorer for his 27-game playoff career, was held to 15 points Thursday night as the Knicks pulled even after two games of their best-of-7 series with a 114-97 victory.

In the only other NBA playoff game Thursday night, the Phoenix Suns beat the Golden State Warriors 113-104 in Oakland, Calif., taking a 2-1 series lead two nights after they'd lost the homecourt advantage.

In games tonight, the Los Angeles Lakers play the Seattle SuperSonics in Seattle and the Milwaukee Bucks take on the Detroit Pistons in Detroit. Los Angeles leads its series 2-0, while Detroit won the opener of its series.

In the Knicks-Bulls game, Jordan missed 10 of 17 shots from the field and three of four free throws. It was his career playoff low and his 1988-89 season low. His previous postseason low was 19 against Boston in 1986 and he was held to 18 points three times during the 1988-89 regular season.

Gerald Wilkins, Jordan's main tormentor on defense, said that holding Jordan to two points on 1-for-5 shooting in the first quarter set the tone for the game, in which the Knicks never trailed.

"I was pleased with the way we started on him, because it gave us a lot of confidence in checking him," Wilkins said. "That picked up everyone on the team."

Jordan has taken only 34 shots in the two playoff games against the Knicks after averaging 27 field-goal attempts in five games with Cleveland in the first round.

"Our defense played Michael Jordan as well as he can be played," Knicks coach Rick Pitino said. "But I don't know what was better, our offense or our defense. They were both spectacular."

Patrick Ewing scored 23 points, Mark Jackson 20 and Kiki Vandeweghe 18 for the Knicks, who shot 57.3 percent from the field to 43.5 percent for the Bulls. Jackson also had 16 assists and Vandeweghe was 9-for-10 from the field.

The Bulls were led by John Paxson's 16 points.

In the Suns-Warriors game, Tom Chambers helped lead Phoenix to victory.

Seven of his last nine shots found the bottom of the net, giving him 31 points.

Harvesters fourth in state golf tournament

AUSTIN — Coach Frank McCullough looks for his Pampa Harvesters to break out of a fourth-place deadlock and move toward the top going into today's final round of the Class 4A state golf tournament.

Highland Park, led by Harrison Frazier's 73, is the first-round leader at 307, three strokes ahead of Silsbee.

Pampa is tied with New Braunfels at 313 going into the last 18 holes at Morris Williams Golf Course. The back nine Thursday caused problems for the Harvesters.

"I think we still have a good chance. We're only six shots out. Hudson (Dax) bogeyed the last three holes, Teague (Ryan) bogeyed the last two and Wood (Mark) bogeyed two out of the last four," McCullough said. "Those were holes where we were in good shape and shouldn't have bogeyed."

Teague, a junior, shot 74 and is in a three-way tie with Bastrop's David O'Connor and New Braunfels' Bryan Parker in the medalist race.

"We'll get to see the course again and I look for us to improve some tomorrow and play a little better," McCullough said.

Wood shot a 78 for the Harvesters, while Hudson had an 80, Mike Elliott 81, and Russ Martindale 87.

"A couple of coaches have said this is the closest state tournament in Class 4A they've ever seen."

A three-way lead in a state tournament is not as safe as a three-shot lead in a regional tournament," McCullough said.

Silsbee is second at 310 while Bastrop is third at 312.

All five members of the Highland Park team shot under 80.

"Highland Park is good. This is their first year in 4A, and they've been had the experience of playing against 5A teams in the past. 'I'd rather be leading, but if you can't lead, at least it's good to be in a position to challenge,'" McCullough said.

Optimist Club kicks off baseball, softball season

A young man's fancy may turn to love in the spring, but in Pampa — for more than 800 youngsters — their fancy turns to baseball and softball. Opening Day of the Optimist baseball program Saturday will feature 50 baseball and softball teams in action in the Beginner, Rookie, Bambino and Babe Ruth baseball leagues and the Little League softball leagues.

A barbecue is also planned, which starts a 12 noon and last until 5 p.m. The barbecue is five dollars a plate and proceeds will go for the purchase of baseball equipment.

"The Optimist youth programs which include football, basketball and baseball, cost more than $100,000 each year," said Weldon Ellis, Optimist vice-president and chairman of the annual baseball and softball coupon book fund raiser. "We definitely believe that the youth of Pampa are worth it. We have appreciated over the years the tremendous support given to our youth programs by the community."

Coupon book sales officially begin Opening Day and will continue through Memorial Day. Each book has a value of more than $400 in coupons and sells for $20.

"We have the best value for our supporters that we have ever offered," Ellis said. "For example, if a person only used the free oil and filter change and the free tire rotation and balancing, he would get more than double value for his $20. Silver earrings, an ivory plant, miniature golf and free meals would simply be additional bonuses."

Many teams have selected princess candidates who will head the teams' efforts to raise money for the Optimist programs. Players selling the coupon books may receive prizes, such as baseballs, softballs, coupons redeemable at the Optimist concession stand or Optimist bucks which can be redeemed for prizes of the player's choice. Team prizes, prizes for team mothers and prizes for princesses will also be awarded.

Ryan leaves Royals dazed

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — After striking out 11 times against 42-year-old Nolan Ryan, the Kansas City Royals were left in a daze.

"Great," third baseman Kevin Seitzer said. "Incredible," second baseman Frank White uttered.

"Amazing," Manager John Wathan gushed.

Striking out four of the first six batters, Ryan wound up with a complete-game, 6-3 victory for Texas on Thursday night in his first appearance in Royals Stadium in almost 10 years. He gave up five singles and walked only two.

"He's just a great pitcher," said Seitzer, who had two of the singles. "It's fun to hit against a guy you know is going into the Hall of Fame."

Ryan and Royals Stadium were both young in 1973 when he made the Royals the victims of the first of his five no-hitters.

"He's still tough," Wathan said. "At 42, that is amazing to still be able to throw the ball that way."

The Royals and their stadium will always occupy a soft spot in Ryan's heart. Thursday night's complete-game win raised his career record against Kansas City to 21-11 in 271 1-3 innings. That's more innings and more victories than he's compiled against any other team in his 22-year career.

"I've always liked this stadium," said Ryan, 4-2 in his first season back in the American League after nine years with Houston. "I like the feel of this stadium."

It was the 185th time in his career and the 12th time against the Royals in which he has fanned at least 10.

Braves keep win streak going

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — It's a little early to talk about comeback player of the year, but Atlanta's Lonnie Smith is putting in a strong bid.

Smith, an eight-year major league veteran who spent most of last season with the Braves' Richmond farm team, had three hits, including a home run and a double, as Atlanta beat Philadelphia 8-3 Thursday night for its seventh straight victory.

The win lifted the Braves to .500 at 17-17, the latest date Atlanta has been at the .500 mark since June 19, 1987. The Braves' winning streak is their longest since May 15-22, 1986, when they also won seven in a row.

Smith is now batting .342. In his last five games, he has reached base 19 times in 23 plate appearances. He has had six hits, 12 walks, and was hit by a pitch.

"I can't recall ever having a streak like this," Smith said, "but I'm really enjoying it. Things have just been going well, and I just hope they continue."

In the only other game played in the National League, St. Louis beat San Diego 6-5.

After being hit by a pitch in the fifth inning, Smith hit his fifth homer of the year in the sixth off reliever Randy O'Neal, 0-1.

Many picked the Braves to finish last in the NL West this season. Smith says that might have been premature.

"Most people haven't stopped to look at this club," Smith said. "We have a good mix of young guys and veterans and the attitude is just great. We could surprise a lot of people. The ability and consistency of our young pitchers is just incredible."

Tom Glavine is one of the young pitchers Smith was talking about. The undefeated 23-year-old lefthander allowed eight hits to win his fifth game Thursday and now has four complete games this season, including a two-hit shutout over the Phillies on May 4.

Cardinals 6, Padres 5

Milt Thompson drove in three runs and Jose DeLeon became the first six-game winner in the NL as St. Louis edged visiting San Diego to sweep the three-game series.

Harvesters capture district's all-sports championship

The Pampa Harvesters have captured the unofficial "all sports" championship in District 1-4A, garnering a total of 84 points in the dozen UIL programs for boys and girls. Hereford finished second with 81 1/2 points, while Levelland picked up 77 for third. Other point totals were: Borger 66 1/2; Randall 46; Dumas 45; Estacado 44 1/2; Dunbar 35 1/2; and Frenship 25.

Breaking the programs down between boys and girls, Pampa's programs finished first in both areas, the boys teams totalling 43 and the girls 36. The other five points comes from tennis, where the team standings are based on combined boys and girls earned points in the fall program. Boys and girls teams each won two different championships, the total of four beating out Hereford by one. Levelland was the only other school to earn more than one, leading the district in football and girls basketball.

Pampa's championships came in boys basketball and golf, and girls track and golf. Next best finishes were third place in boys and girls cross country and baseball. Poorest showings came in football and tennis, which finished fifth. Overall, it was a competitive year in all sports at PHS.

The big winners came in programs that were led by coaches allowed to specialize and not use that sport and those athletes as a second coaching assignment after football. One has to wonder just how good the baseball team could have been, using all that talent and desire to develop the skills necessary. Time constraints, couples with occasional weather problems, did not allow the taking of 50-75 ground balls per day, lengthy sessions in the batting cage, turning double plays, developing pitching arm strength, control, savvy. The same was true for boys track.

The Harvesters never won an all-sports crown in the old, strong 3-4A and 3-5A districts with the Amarillo and Lubbock schools, the best accomplishment third place twice in the 1950s and four times in the 1970s. And though the district has been diluted a bit by the addition of Frenship and newest member Randall, winning the overall crown is a great accomplishment for this year's corps of athletes, boys and girls, and their coaches. Congratulations!

There is probably no stronger, more faithful unpaid board of directors than that which guides the Tri-State Seniors Golf Association, which is headquartered in Pampa. They came from all over...Oklahoma, New Mexico, the remote reaches of Texas (Dallas, Lamesa, even Amarillo) last week in answer to the call from President Carlton Freeman for a final check-up on plans for this summer's 55th annual competition.

Secretary Floyd Sackett reported 154 of the maximum field of 160 golfers had already returned entry fees, and a full field, with a waiting list for any late dropouts, was assured once again. Among those already entered are defending champion Jim Kirk, and some former champions including Jake Broyles, Harold Delong and Roy Peden. Great competition is assured.

New items added this year include a long-driving contest, additional trophies for more places, qualifying for championship and first flight, and the likelihood of playing summer (ball down) rules.

And showing their appreciation for another great Pampa tournament, the Top O Texas, their love of the game, and encouragement to younger players, the Board voted to rotate a newly-created college golf scholarship among three schools, Cameron U., Oklahoma State and Texas Tech, with the possibility more would be added in the future. Those three college programs have been strong supporters of the ToT Labor Day event, sending practically their entire golf teams to participate annually.

Nominations are now being taken for the 1990 Panhandle Sports Hall of Fame awards, to be made next January 21. The first organizational meeting of the year was held recently under the leadership of John Heetland, representative of the Amarillo YMCA Y's Men's Club, sponsoring group.

Still to be selected are the individuals to be inducted into the Hall of Fame, three or possibly four to be so honored. In addition, nominations for athletes and coach of the year in football, baseball, golf, tennis track and volleyball are being accepted. Also sought are nominations for the Deed Henry Award, given to a courageous, handicapped athlete; the Big Play and Super Team awards. Also, special achievement honors are presented to persons for their sports involvement, either as an athlete, coach, booster, etc. who do not fall into any other categories.

If you have suggestions or nominations, they can be sent to Heetland at Box 1369, Amarillo 79105. Or, if you desire, transmit them to me and I'll channel them to the proper individual responsible for that particular sport.

And finally, best of luck to the Harvester girl tracksters, making their fifth appearance today in as many years to the state competition in Austin. Whatever the outcome for the defending champions, it has been an overwhelmingly successful season for new head Coach Mike Lopez and his young, dedicated athletes.
