Pilot food program gathers praise here

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
Staff Writer

A pilot program of delivering food for the needy in rural areas has received praise from Second Harvest, a nationwide network of 200 food banks.

"You have an excellent program here. You should be proud of it," Pete Taylor told Bill Ragsdale, coordinator for the Pampa route.

Taylor, a representative of the Central Regional office of Second Harvest based in Chicago, was in Pampa Thursday to observe the rural route delivery process. He was accompanied by Melody Wattenberger, executive director of the High Plains Food Bank in Amarillo.

While Taylor and Wattenberger watched as the High Plains Food Bank driver and volunteers from seven community agencies throughout the area unloaded the truck and redistributed the food items in 43 minutes.

"That's good time, about six minutes per agency," Taylor commented.

Merchants Motor Freights has provided a loading dock for the monthly delivery at no charge to the agencies or High Plains Food Bank.

"It's really good of Merchants to let you use their dock," Taylor said. "I've seen a lot of deliveries that are made out in the parking lot."

This is the first time Taylor had seen the rural delivery program at work, Wattenberger said. "We wanted to bring him to Pampa because it was our first rural route and it's our best," she said.

Taylor arrived in the United States from Yorkshire, England, four years ago after replying to an ad for a warehouse manager.

"When I called I found out it was Second Harvest, a food bank network," he recalled. "I didn't even know what a food bank was. I thought it was a place where you stored food and if times got bad you went and got the food out." Taylor's background in England had been in trucking and warehousing, knowledge he felt would be assets to the food bank program.

For 3½ years he served as operations manager at the Kansas City food bank, before applying for the Central Regional office position.

Now Taylor travels extensively to Second Harvest member food banks in the Central Region to monitor the programs, and provide aid and direction in providing the food bank services.

Second Harvest is celebrating its 10th anniversary, he said, with First Lady Barbara Bush serving as the program's honorary chairman.

In the past 10 years, Second Harvest has grown from a single food bank to the largest nongovernment distributor of food in America. In the past nine years, the program has delivered more than 1.5 billion pounds of food to agencies serving the needy.

The food industry, retailers, individual, corporate and foundations donate food and funds to Second Harvest member food banks. These food banks warehouse the items to be channelled to more than 38,000 charities nationwide.

In 10 years, the pounds of food distributed has quadrupled from more than 100 million pounds to more than 400 million pounds.

High Plains Food Bank of Amarillo became a member of Second Harvest in February 1983.

Anywhere from 5,000 to 10,000 pounds of food is delivered to Pampa for distribution to area community agencies each month, Ragsdale said.

Other Pampa agencies who benefit from the food bank's program include Tralee Crisis Center, Genesis House for Boys and Girls, Meals on Wheels, day care centers, Salvation Army and Southside Senior Citizens.

Country club secretary indicted on theft counts, evades arrest

By DEE DEE LARAMORE

Former Pampa Country Club secretary and office manager Leslie L. Hinds, indicted Thursday on 81 counts of theft by a Gray County Grand Jury, has continued to elude arrest by press time today.

A warrant for Hinds' arrest was issued Thursday afternoon after District Judge Grainger McIlhany had set a combined bond of $20,000.

When Gray County sheriff's deputies went to Hinds' home at 1001 N. Somerville Thursday, they were told Hinds had gone to Amarillo and would be home later that day, said District Attorney Harold Comer.

At press time today, Gray County Sheriff Jim Free said Hinds had still not returned home.

Hinds, a Pampa Country Club employee since 1982, was named in two separate indictments alleging theft from Frank Healy, former manager of the Pampa Country Club, totaling $107,803.28 over a two-year period from 1987 through 1988.

Comer explained that Healy was named in the indictment as a legality, but added the alleged thefts were reportedly from Pampa Country Club funds.

The first indictment naming Hinds contained 49 counts of theft for a total of $86,117.39 through "acquiring and otherwise exercising control over property."

A second indictment recorded in the District Clerk's office involves the theft of $21,685.89 in U.S. currency.

Judge Grainger McIlhany set bond of $10,000 on each indictment.

The indictments are the result of a probe by the District Attorney's office concerning reportedly missing funds from the Pampa Country Club. An IRS levy for unpaid Social Security and federal withholding payments earlier this year initiated an investigation by the country club's board members, Comer said.

Healy and Hinds have both resigned from their positions with the Pampa Country Club, said the district attorney, who is also a member of the Country Club's board of directors.

Comer said earlier that the club manager's resignation was not due to any criminal wrongdoing. Healy has since begun work as manager of a country club near Austin.

Grand jurors also indicted Jody Edward Brunson, 17, 2400 Dogwood, on a charge of aggravated sexual assault in the alleged rape of a 30-year-old Pampa woman March 29. Brunson is presently free on a bond of $20,000, set by McIlhany.

The sexual assault charges stem from the reported rape of an acquaintance of Brunson's which allegedly occurred at the woman's home about 10:15 a.m. March 29.

A Hall County deputy sheriff and a state game warden took Brunson into custody the following day after Brunson had gotten his 1979 Chrysler New Yorker stuck in a draw while trying to drive through the rugged canyons between Turkey and Quitaque.

A church bus driver who had been accused of indecency with a child was not billed by grand jurors, who did not find evidence to support an indictment, according to the district attorney.

Grand jurors recessed after meeting all day Monday, Comer said, and reconvened on Thursday to hear the remaining cases presented by the District Attorney's office.

Following is a list of indictments handed up by the grand jury after the session ended

- Thursday:
- Billy Ray Swanson, 21, 315 S. West — possession of marijuana, $2,500 bond.
 - Lynn Holtman, 36, east of Pampa — possession of a controlled substance, $10,000 bond.
 - Ruby L. Swanson, 41, 919 E. Francis — tampering with governmental record, $1,000 bond.
 - James Jackie Brown, 28, 325 Jean — possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver, $15,000 bond.
 - Joanie Langford, 25, 425 Jean — possession of controlled substance with intent to deliver, $1,000 bond.
 - Russell Alan Owen, 22, 610½ E. Francis — two indictments alleging burglary of a habitation, $5,000 bond on each.
 - Kevin Kirkham, 20, 1936 N. Christy — two indictments alleging burglary of a habitation, $5,000 bond on each.
 - Mary Dorsey Bullard, 30, 1000 Huff — aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, $5,000 bond.
 - Peter Galaviz Rodriguez, no age or address given — unauthorized use of a motor vehicle and burglary of a building, $2,500 bond on each indictment.
 - Troy Britt, 25, 1052 Neel — burglary of a habitation, $10,000 bond.
 - Allen Eugene Jackson, 26, 1117 Huff — three indictments alleging burglary of a habitation, $5,000 bond on each.
 - Bobby Hicks, 25, 320 Cook Ave. — three enhanced indictments alleging delivery of a controlled substance, $20,000 bond on each.
 - Jimmy Lee Phillips, 36, 533 N. Sumner — aggravated assault on a police officer, $10,000 bond.
 - Norman Rouse Jr., 38, 318 Albert — unlawfully carrying a weapon on premises licensed for the sale of liquor, $3,500 bond.

School tax rates may be on way down

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

School tax rates for Pampa residents may be on the way down next fall if projections regarding the proposed budget for 1989-90 are correct, said Dr. Harry Griffith, superintendent of schools, during Thursday evening's board of trustees meeting at Carver Center.

Griffith said it was too early to make promises on the tax issue, but said the outlook for a tax reduction is very good.

The school board, under the direction of recently elected president John Curry, will begin budget hearings this summer.

"I'm trying to be realistic with the board, but maybe I'm being optimistic as well," Griffith said. "If the state does not do any sizeable damage to our funding, we should be able to have a lower tax rate. We are looking forward to that possibility."

Griffith also revealed several projects the district will undertake this summer, including remodeling the office at Pampa High School to make it more attractive and functional.

Board member Jim Duggan praised any effort to make the high school administration area more appealing to the eye

"That high school office is almost embarrassing," Duggan said. "Mr. (Daniel) Coward (high school principal) is doing a good job and we need to give him more to work with."

Other projects on the table for this summer include moving the behavioral learning center (BLC) from the vocational building at the high school to the basement, making Horace Mann and Wilson elementary schools handicap accessible, adding a new 1,000-gallon water tank at the high school, ventilating three science rooms in the district and adding an early childhood education center at Austin Elementary School.

Griffith said if a grant is approved for the alternative high school program, the district will also need to begin working to prepare the basement of Clarendon College-Pampa Center to house the new curriculum.

During the action item portion of the meeting, the board voted unanimously to approve wrestling as a new varsity sport at the high school. Officers of Pampa's Takedown Club, a local wrestling organization, were on hand to commend the board for their action on the new school sport.

Dennis Cavalier, high school athletic director, said he will oversee the program. He noted wrestling, unlike most other sports, is an activity boys of all weights and sizes can participate in against other youth of the same size and weight category.

The board also voted to reject a request by Anthony and Kay Smith of Pampa to have penalties and interest waived for unpaid taxes from 1974 and 1975. Mr. Smith said he didn't feel it was right for him to be charged the extra amount because the district did not send him a bill.

"I don't know everything I should about taxes," he told the board. "When I get a bill, I pay it, and when I don't, I don't." He said he had attempted to pay the taxes, but not the penalty and interest, as soon as he was notified of them in 1985.

However, Pat Bagley, chief appraiser for the Gray County Appraisal District, said under the law he could not accept partial payments unless the payee signs a form accepting responsibility for the rest of the amount due.

Bagley and Jerry Haralson, business manager for the PISD, told trustees the central issue was Section 31.01 of the State Property Tax Code, which states a district is under no obligation to track down property owners' addresses when none is listed on the tax rolls.

"It's not that the Smiths were trying to keep their address a secret," board member Joe Van Zandt commented. "But, if people did want to move around and purposely keep their address a secret, they could avoid paying taxes" if such a law was not in place.

Griffith and board members noted that the Smiths are well-respected members of the community and that the central issue is a philosophical one over interpretation of the law.

The Smiths said their next move would be to allow the tax district to sue them over the issue and resolve it in court.

Several board members noted that if the district were to approve the waiver, they would be flooded with thousands of requests for similar waivers because the tax district did not have current addresses on property owners.

Among other items approved during the meeting were the 1989-90 school calendar, contracts for services with the Educational Service Center in Amarillo, a new policy on school sponsored trips, a report on TEAMS test scores which showed the district is doing very well and an expansion of the area drug dogs may search around the high school.

West Germans pedal through Pampa on U.S. bicycle tour

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
Staff Writer

Nineteen days ago two men from West Germany embarked on an adventure that will span a continent and touch two oceans. Along the way, they passed through Pampa.

Herbert Born and Erhard Reitgruber began their journey by flying across the Atlantic Ocean to Washington, D.C., in mid-April. Once in the United States, they took their custom-made bicycles, packed their gear and began pedaling for Los Angeles.

Reitgruber is a native of Austria now living in Koln, West Germany, and working as a technical engineer for an air conditioning and heating service. Born is export manager for Spies Hecker, an auto-finishing company.

The idea of bicycling across the United States took root in Born's mind two years ago, he said.

"I had to look for someone to do it with me," he said.

He found his partner among a group of friends who bicycle on Sundays in Koln. After some persuasion, Born said he managed to talk Reitgruber into sharing his adventure with him. "I'm doing this for two reasons," Born explained.

"First, it was a challenge to cope with the distance and, second, I wanted to see the country and meet the people here. "It was a chance to do something extraordinary," he added. The two West Germans will have traveled approximately 3,400 miles by bicycle. So far, they've completed almost 2,000 miles of the journey. Yet the most difficult miles lay ahead, Born thinks.

"It will be more difficult than it has been so far," he said. "We'll be going through an area that is less populated, fewer places to stay over. But then it will be more adventure."

"When you plan such a thing you have no idea of what it will be like," Born said. "Everything is quite surprising and new. So far, we've been really excited about what we've seen."

"The country is so huge, so magnificent and the people are so courteous," he said. Both Born and Reitgruber have been impressed by the courtesy of the truck and automobile drivers who have passed them along the way and the kindness of the people they have met.

Wednesday evening the two bicyclists, wet and cold from the heavy rains this area experienced earlier this week, stopped in Miami only to discover there was no motel for them to stay in.

Martial law declared in Beijing

BEIJING (AP) — Premier Li Peng declared martial law in Beijing early Saturday to end more than a month of student demonstrations that have shaken the Communist leadership.

The declaration came after the student campaign for democracy evolved into a nationwide movement and disrupted Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's visit to China.

Earlier today, Li warned that measures would be taken if thousands of students did not end a hunger strike in central Beijing's Tiananmen Square, and China's Cabinet, the State Council, banned further demonstrations.

The students had decided to end the six-day hunger strike but vowed to continue a pro-democracy sit-in in the square.

At midnight, crowds rushed from the west toward Tiananmen Square, shouting that soldiers were coming, although no troops were visible.

No one in the crowd said they had seen troops, but a Cable News Network reporter said he saw about 50 army trucks more than a mile west of the square. He said people were urging the soldiers not to move in.

The decision to end the hunger strike came after at least 2,400 participants were taken to hospitals. Most returned to Tiananmen Square after being revived, but doctors reported hepatitis and other infectious diseases in their damp and dirty squatter camp.

"We have achieved a great victory," said student leader Zhang Boli. "We will change from 3,000 hunger strikers to a sit-in of tens of thousands. Our struggle ... hasn't ended."

The official Xinhua News Agency called the strike halt temporary, but it did not elaborate. Students did not say the halt was temporary.

The sirens of ambulances taking collapsed fasters to hospitals rang through the city, and marchers and trucks filled with protesters headed for Tiananmen Square, where about 100,000 protest supporters milled.

Student leaders urged their classmates not to respond with force if police or soldiers tried to break up the sit-in. The students said they would stay in the square until the government agreed to their demands, which include a dialogue on political reform, free press, and an end to official corruption.

Earlier, Premier Li Peng said measures would be taken to stop the fast, which began Saturday and government sources said Communist Party chief Zhao Ziyang, who opposed a crack-down, offered to resign.

It was not immediately clear if Zhao's offer, reported by a government source and confirmed by a second source, was accepted.

A source in the People's Liberation Army said troops from outside the Beijing region were brought in for "possible action" after the 38th Army, which protects the capital, said it was unwilling to suppress the protests.

But there was no stepped-up police presence around the square late today, and no soldiers were seen.

Students of Beijing Normal University whose bus Zhao boarded said he had tears in his eyes as he spoke with them and autographed their hats and shirts.

Students said Zhao told them, "I came too late, too late. I should be criticized by you." He also said that the "problems you have raised will eventually be resolved," but made no concrete offer.

DPS rules alcohol involved in police officer's accident

The Texas Department of Public Safety trooper that worked a one-vehicle accident involving an off-duty Pampa policeman early Thursday morning has ruled alcohol was a contributing factor to the wreck.

Trooper Lynn Holland said it could be as long as three weeks before any charges are filed in the case. He said the DPS would have to wait for blood test results to be returned from a laboratory in Lubbock. The test will be used to determine if Lance was driving while intoxicated.

However, Holland also said he had no proof at this time that Lance was intoxicated, only that he had been drinking and that was a reason for the accident.

Lance's pickup struck a light pole near the intersection of Francis and Gray at approximately 1:55 a.m. Thursday. He had to be freed from the truck by Pampa firefighters, who used the Jaws of Life.

Lance was listed in good condition at Coronado Hospital through press time today. Holland said the only charges that have been filed against Lance are for failure to wear a seat belt.

Pampa City Manager Jack Chaney said once the police department is officially notified that alcohol was a contributing factor to the accident, it will begin an internal investigation into the incident.

He said if formal charges are filed, Lance will be suspended with pay pending action by the grand jury on the case.

Workers' comp efforts flounder

By SCOTT ROTHSCHILD
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — Two state senators unveiled another version of changes to the workers' compensation system as a compromise, but both sides of the fight said it was unacceptable.

"There is no true reform in the proposal given to the Senate" on Thursday, said Larry Milner, president of the Texas Chamber of Commerce.

David Perry, president of the Texas Trial Lawyers Association, said, "No interest group has signed off on this."

The Senate recessed Thursday without taking any action on the newest wrinkle in the knotty issue of changing the system of compensating workers injured or killed in job-related accidents.

Senators said they would consider the issue again today.

After more than an hour of debate and bickering on the proposal by Sens. Ted Lyon, D-Rockwall, and O.H. "Ike" Harris, R-Dallas, many negotiators remained unsatisfied.

"This is simply a modification of existing law and as such would be unacceptable to the House," said Rep. Richard Smith, a Bryan Republican who wrote the House workers' comp bill.

"There hasn't been a compromise reached," said Sen. Bob Glasgow, author of a workers' comp bill that passed out of subcommittee on a 4-3 vote.

But Lyon defended the proposal, saying, "No one is really happy with it. But it is an attempt to solve this dilemma."

Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, urged his colleagues to settle their differences, approve a bill and let the House-Senate conference committee hammer out a compromise.

"We're running out of time. I don't care if we have to stay here until midnight, members, let's get a bill," he said.

Shortly afterward, the Senate disbanded as a committee of the whole when it became apparent that copies of the Lyon-Harris bill would not be printed in time for senators to have a copy to study during debate.

Businesses claim their skyrocketing workers' comp insurance premiums are caused by high jury awards to employees, while labor groups and attorneys who represent injured workers blame greedy insurance companies and unsafe working conditions.

The major controversies center on how benefits for injured workers are figured, and how disputed claims between the worker and insurance company are resolved.

Under the Lyon-Harris proposal, partial and permanent disability benefits, such as the loss of a finger, would remain based on lost wage-earning potential.

The bills by Glasgow and Smith would use an impairment schedule that specifies the compensation amount for a specific injury.

Critics of impairment say it is confusing and would reduce benefits to low-paid workers, but supporters of the proposal say it provides a benchmark for workers to determine how much their claim is worth. Then they can decide whether to settle or dispute the amount.

The Lyon-Harris proposal would establish a two-track system for resolving disputed claims, similar to the Glasgow bill.

Disputes under one track could end up in binding arbitration. The other dispute track could end in a jury trial, but only the record developed in a previous contested case hearing could be used in the trial.

Houston area pelted by heavy rains as storms go southward

By MICHAEL GRACZYK
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP)— Southeast Texas residents today were mopping up behind a massive thunderstorm system that roared across the state, dumping nearly a foot of rain on Houston, flooding low-lying areas and stranding motorists.

"The storm system has now traveled over into the Louisiana-Mississippi area and out over the gulf," National Weather Service meteorologist Tom Fountain said this morning.

"There could be some isolated thunderstorms in the state this afternoon, but those will be probably a quarter inch (of rain) at the most," he said.

For the 24 hours that ended at 4 p.m. Thursday, 10.28 inches of rainfall was recorded at Houston Intercontinental Airport — the highest total for any day in May on record and the second highest 24-hour total ever in the Houston area.

The highest was 15.65 inches recorded on Aug. 27 and 28, 1945.

But unlike its stops in the Dallas-Fort Worth area and in Central Texas earlier in the week, no deaths or serious injuries were reported by the storm's Thursday blast through the coastal areas en route to Louisiana.

In nearby Spring, the storm system pummeled the area with 15 inches of rain since Wednesday. More than 11 inches fell at Conroe, about 40 miles north of Houston, while The Woodlands in south Montgomery County had at least 13 inches.

One person died in a twister and at least five others were swept away in swollen creeks.

Another 11 inches fell Thursday on the San Jacinto River at the Eastex Freeway and on Luce Bayou near Wolf Road in northeast Harris County, according to the flood control district. In contrast, 2.72 inches hit Brays Bayou at South Rice, and less than 6 inches fell downtown.

"The prognosis is good today," Fountain said. "I understand that Greens Bayou and Cypress Creek (in north Houston) are beginning to slowly fall and may be back within their banks by this afternoon."

In a heavy rain, the areas regularly flood. The storm came at the tail of a massive front that first struck Texas Tuesday, ravaging the northern and central parts of the state with tornadoes and flash floods. One person died in a twister and at least five others were swept away in swollen creeks.

No deaths or serious injuries were confirmed in the Houston area Thursday, but authorities continued to search the Cleveland area this morning for a missing man reported to have drowned.

A Jarrell woman died in a tornado early Wednesday and at least five others died in flash flooding in North Texas related to the storm.

On Thursday morning, searchers found the body of a 12-year-old Ennis boy who disappeared in a rain-swollen creek Wednesday night. The boy, Eric Eugene Mercado, had tried to cross Mustang Creek west of Ennis with his cousin.

Later Thursday, authorities in Collin County recovered the body of a teen-age boy who disappeared while wading in Lake Lavon near Wylie. A second boy who accompanied the first also disappeared and authorities planned to resume the search for him today. Their identities had not been released this morning.

In the Houston area, the National Weather Service predicted partly cloudy skies with a high in the upper 80s today and lower 90s Saturday with little chance for significant rainfall.

But residents below the Lake Houston Dam along the San Jacinto River were warned to expect flooding through Saturday.

"We should see some flooding along the lower river from the dam to the (Galveston) bay through Saturday," said Bill Evans, assistant director of the Harris County Flood Control District. He said rain runoff will cause the San Jacinto River to crest today at the dam spillway.

No mandatory evacuations were ordered, but residents of about 100 homes fled by boat when Greens Bayou overcame its banks. Other residents along Cypress Creek were forced out by high water.

"The water came in and within 30 minutes it was knee-deep," said Wayne Williams, who had to leave his home in the Inverness Forest subdivision. "Everything in our house is flooded. It's chest deep. Everything is gone."

Some streets were still blocked by water this morning and heavy fog shrouded much of the Houston area, but rainwaters had cleared the major freeways.

The thunderstorms swamped many areas of north Harris County, Montgomery and Liberty counties, north of Houston, as well as Fort Bend County, southwest of the city.

The thunderstorms caused more flooding than did Hurricane Alicia in 1983, flood control district spokeswoman Billie Wolff said.

Hundreds of people were evacuated from their homes and emergency shelters opened throughout the area.

Wolff said the first reports of flooding began about 9 p.m. Wednesday and by the early morning hours of Thursday, water was lapping into north Harris County houses.

Cypress Creek and Greens Bayou rose more than 20 feet in 24 hours after the rains began, and flooding also was reported along Sims Bayou, and Peach and Caney creeks.

Rainfall totals in north Texas from the storm ranged from two inches at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport to 13 inches in Mansfield, south of the metropolitan area.

Flood waters in South Dallas sent as many as 400 people fleeing from nearly 170 houses.

Water from a creek combined with the Trinity River to create the floods that also inundated a city storage lot containing more than 200 police cruisers, trucks and other vehicles.

"It ain't never done this before," said Billy Joe Reed, 53. Some said the flooding was the worst in Dallas since 1957.

Early today, many residents had returned to their homes but some were still hampered by water that had yet to recede.

Lightning and fallen tree limbs were blamed for knocking out power to 70,000 customers of Houston Lighting & Power Co. at the peak of the storm, utility officials said. Some 10,000 remained without electricity Thursday afternoon.

A tornado was reported on the ground within the Houston city limits near the Houston Astrodome late Thursday morning but no damage was reported.

Parker receives DECA scholarship, Cook elected new chapter president

Travis Parker was named recipient of the DECA scholarship and Charlotte Cook was announced as new chapter president at the 1988 DECA Employer and Senior Appreciation Banquet held Thursday night.

Parker, a senior, has served as president of the Pampa High School Chapter of Distributive Education Clubs of America during the past year. Wednesday morning he was named to Who's Who in DECA at the school's award assembly.

Cook, a junior, has served as chapter treasurer in the past year. She was awarded an academic certificate for Marketing I during the awards assembly Wednesday.

The DECA banquet was held in the Heritage Room at M.K. Brown Auditorium, with chapter members, employers, parents and guests in attendance.

Parker, son of Mr. and Mrs. Rick Clark, has competed and placed in area and state contests during his two years in DECA, including second in advertising and first in collegiate division visual display events at area. He also has attended various leadership conferences and national conventions.

He was elected state reporter at this year's state convention, a position he will hold as a freshman in college. As state reporter, he will be responsible for putting out the state newsletter, with the Pampa chapter assisting him in the project.

Parker has been employed at Hub's Booterie as a marketing student.

Cook, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Cook, has been employed as a marketing student at Pampa Hardware. She competed in general merchandise retailing at area competition, placing third. She attended the state convention as a chapter voting delegate and helped in Travis' campaign for state reporter.

The 1988-1989 chapter officers were recognized at the banquet. Besides Parker and Cook, these included Sonya Martin, vice president; Sheila Whitaker, junior vice president; Michell Sudderth, secretary, and Lonnie Been, reporter.

Presiding over the banquet activities, Parker said, "Marketing is a very dynamic and exciting program. The students that participate in the program are given the opportunity to study the free enterprise system, participate in DECA and work part of the day."

Noting that the success of a high school marketing program relies on the business community, Parker said, "The students in Pampa are very fortunate to have a business community that will work with the school and the students. The students in marketing realize how fortunate we are to have the support of our businesses." Employers were presented certificates of appreciation from their marketing students and the chapter for their support of the program.

"We appreciate all the time our employers have given to us," Parker said. "We realize that it is not always easy employing high school students. It takes a lot of patience and understanding on the part of the employer."

"We are very grateful for these wonderful people that have given us the opportunity to work in the marketing field."

DECA sponsor and marketing coordinator Donna Crow gave special recognition to the DECA Advisory Board members for their support and service in the past year.

Advisory board members for the past year include Kent Moss, Geraldine Rampy, Rutley Chalk, Rick and Martha Clark, and Larry Hollis.

Also receiving certificates were the Marketing I and II students, with special recognition given to the graduating seniors.

Lawyer ousted in drug probe

TYLER (AP)—A federal judge has disqualified an attorney representing three drug defendants after federal prosecutors revealed the attorney was part of a federal grand jury investigation into nearly six years of drug trafficking operations in Rains County.

U.S. District Judge Robert M. Parker released attorney Randy Taylor from defending Phillip Ray Land, Ronnie Burns and Jimmy Burchett — three of six people arrested Tuesday on a 26-count narcotics distribution indictment — after prosecutors said Taylor has been implicated in the case.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Gorby's unwilling to lose his power

In the old days, purged Soviet bureaucrats were executed. Nowadays those purged go into easy retirement. That's what happened when Soviet boss Mikhail Gorbachev purged 110 senior officials at a recent meeting of the Central Committee of the Communist Party.

The move solidifies Gorbachev's own power base. In his four years in power, he has moved faster than any previous Soviet boss to lock his grip on the party bureaucracy. All this means that, from now on, he must be held personally accountable for all major Soviet actions. Other factions still exist in the Kremlin, but they wield much less power now that Gorbachev and his personality cult have risen yet higher.

The changes may endanger his major programs, perestroika and glasnost. Indeed, Gorbachev seems to be following the path of his predecessors, who used periods of relaxed control to loosen things up a bit and get trade and credits from the capitalist West. But no major changes were made.

Glasnost, the policy of openness to criticism, received a major blow just as Gorbachev was increasing his power at the Central Committee meeting. On April 26 Izvestia, the government newspaper, issued new edicts severely limiting reporting on nuclear disasters. The edicts, published three years to the day after the 1986 disaster at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant, stamp as "classified" virtually all reports on disasters at nuclear and conventional power plants, no matter how small.

Perestroika, the policy of economic restructuring, is also going nowhere. In a speech before the Central Committee meeting, Gorbachev endorsed perestroika, but admitted that it wasn't working too well. "The food problem is far from solved," he said. "The housing problem is acute. There is a dearth of consumer goods in shops. The list of shortages is growing. The state's financial position is grave." The construction industry "has been shoveling billions of rubles into the ground and is creating actual ruins," obliquely referring to the collapse of hundreds of buildings in the Armenia earthquake. As to workers, Gorbachev said, "Many forgot how to work. They got used to being paid often just for coming to work."

Gorbachev might use these persistent problems as leverage for further economic reforms, but he has been pursuing this course for four years now, to no avail. Indeed, there probably is no solution to the problems he lists short of a full-scale restoration of the free market. Tinkering with the system clearly has accomplished little. The one thing Gorbachev retains, despite the problems with glasnost and perestroika, is his own immense personal power. That is one area that he is not willing to decrease.

Opinions are simply written

WASHINGTON — Opinions of the U.S. Supreme Court are not ordinarily read for the fun of it — they are read for the law of it — but a California professor recently had a lark with the high court's use of the word "simply." Simply put, it may be said that the justices are simply in love with "simply."

Writing in the National Law Journal, Berkeley's law professor Stephen R. Barnett disclosed the results of a computer search for the word. He was reading the 33 separate opinions of Feb. 21 and 22, and "simply" began to itch. The opinions disposed of some complex cases, among them a Wisconsin case involving a battered child and a Texas case involving a tax exemption for religious periodicals.

The high court found the cases not so difficult after all. In the Wisconsin case, Chief Justice Rehnquist pulled off a hat trick. He noted twice that the state's failure to protect the child "simply does not constitute a violation of the due process clause." An earlier case, he said, "simply has no application."

In the Texas case, Justice Brennan asserted that Justice Scalia was "simply mistaken" in his views. Scalia struck back: One argument used by Brennan was "simply not available." Justice Blackmun chimed in: Brennan's approach would resolve tensions between the free exercise clause and the establishment clause "simply by subordinating the free exercise clause."

Barnett became entranced with his scholarly inquiry. His computations found an average of one "simply" per opinion and 2.5 "simples" per case. He urged his academic colleagues to pursue the research. He wondered if "simply" appears at random, or if there is a correlation between its use and the nature of the case. He reached a cautious conclusion: "The more important and difficult the case, the more the justices proclaim it simple."

As an example, he cited Justice O'Connor's opinion in what is known as the Croson case. The opinion invalidated a set-aside program for minorities in Richmond, Va., and hinted at a dramatic change in the court's view of affirmative action generally.

"Justice O'Connor's opinion used the 's'-word five times, (including 'there is simply no way of determining,' it is quite simply impossible to evaluate,' it is simply impossible to say.)" Meanwhile Justice Marshall, in dissent, went to the well twice ("simply blinks credibility," "there is simply no credible evidence"), and Justice Stevens, concurring, dipped in once ("simply not true").

Professor Barnett awarded the simply prize for February to Justice Blackmun, who ran off with the trophy by using "simply" eight times in one opinion. The professor prudently declined to predict a winner for the term.

About 70 cases remain to be decided. It will be close, but the court's only filly is looking good. Through Feb. 22, when he suspended analysis, O'Connor had used "simply" 17 times. Blackmun and Stevens were close behind with 16 each.

The professor used a computer. This correspondent has no equipment beyond an aging editor's eyeball, but it can be reported that the flood still rages.

On March 28, Justice Stevens, dissenting in the case involving state taxation of federal retirees: "The intergovernmental immunity doctrine simply does not constitute a most favored nation provision ..."

On March 29, Rehnquist upheld a Dallas ordinance restricting admission to certain dance halls to teen-agers only. The law may limit the teen-agers' opportunities to dance with older persons, but these opportunities "simply do not involve the sort of expressive association that the First Amendment has been held to protect."

Brennan had a "simply" on April 18 ("simply the means chosen"), and Stevens scored a double on April 25 ("an impairment ... is simply too indirect" and "there is simply no evidence in the record"). O'Connor had a ringing "simply" in the sex discrimination case on May 1: "I simply cannot believe that Congress intended ..."

These are important researches. Another scholar recently analyzed in the National Law Journal the court's affection for oxymorons. It would be interesting to send the computer in search of litotes. Why did Justice Marshall speak on May 1 of "not inconsiderable tasks," only to refer successively to a considerable overlap, considerable common ground and considerable benefits? These semantic subtleties are simply beyond a layman's understanding. Let us press on.

He's not the same boy now

Young Gene Astley reached the first important crossroads in his life when he was 11.

Until then what began as juvenile mischief had escalated into confrontations with police.

Gene was bored with school in general and with art classes in particular, so the morning he snuck in early and rewired the school's fire alarm he timed it to go off during art class.

That got him expelled from school for one month.

With much pleading and many promises his parents got him reinstated in school.

But within a week he had decoded 100 bicycle locks and relocked all the locks on the wrong bikes.

That got him expelled again.

And again, the intercession of his parents got him returned to the classroom — until he organized his own gang. At Gene Astley's direction, youngsters, ages 6 to 8, with their wagons would steal empty milk bottles off porches, take them across town and sell them for 5 cents each.

This time he was expelled from the Portland, Ore., school system for one year.

And this time when his parents pleaded for their son's reinstatement, they were told, "Only on one condition; he must join the Boy Scouts and participate diligently in the activities of his local Scout troop."

At that crossroads, the spoiled only child of the Astley family redirected his adventurous spirit toward scouting.

Within weeks his parents and schoolteachers noticed the change. The young rebel learned new skills, gained confidence, became an assistant patrol leader.

Soon Gene was earning merit badges and elevated to patrol leader. Then senior patrol leader.

And Gene Astley then did what all of us in scouting should aspire to do; he went "all the way," ultimately to earn scouting's highest degree: Eagle.

The now self-disciplined young man went on to earn his B.S. degree from the University of Oregon and his M.S. from Oregon State.

Today, in Kennewick, Wash., one of the city's thriving industries is Sandvik Special Metals Corporation.

Sandvik is a supplier for aerospace industry and for the nuclear industry.

As a byproduct of the corporation's metallurgical research, some of the exotic new metals have been adapted to the manufacture of golf clubs.

Titanium golf club shafts, labeled T-Shaft, are now sold in thousands of pro shops around the world.

And this year — May 20-24 — the Sandvik Corporation will sponsor a golf tournament — a PGA-sanctioned tournament called the Sandvik Washington Open. Professionals and amateurs in the Northwest will compete for a $100,000 purse.

The founder and president of Sandvik Special Metals — the multimillion dollar corporate sponsor of this tournament — is a man you knew as a boy: Gene Astley.

And all of the proceeds of this tournament and every Sandvik Washington Tournament every year will be donated to the Boy Scouts of America.

Students get A's in censorship course

By CHUCK STONE

While the secretary of education was handing out a C-minus average to the nation's schools, I was giving the University of Delaware students in my course on censorship all A's and B's.

Secretary of Education Lauro F. Cavazos recently lamented that "we aren't doing well," and cited the decline in national high-school graduations and college entrance exam scores.

I told my students that they were doing very well indeed and cited their analyses of the mini-controversy over the appointment of a Catholic priest to head the nation's second-largest library.

Two distinguished writers, Gay Talese and Joseph Heller, protested in published letters the job shift of the Rev. Timothy J. Healy from president of Georgetown University to president of the New York Public Library.

"I would welcome clarification on obedience," wrote Talese, referring to the Healy's priestly vows. "Obedience to whom? To his church? Or to those who disagree with him?" Heller sought similar assurance.

An equally distinguished writer, Garry Wills, defended Healy's appointment.

This was the class assignment: Read the three letters to The New York Times, then answer this question in a memo: "Is a Catholic priest as head of the nation's second largest library a potential threat to the fullest clash of ideas, as advocated by Aristotle, John Locke, John Stuart Mill, Justices Oliver Wendell Holmes and William O. Douglas, or are Healy's critics guilty of pre-emptive censorship?"

Not only had students read those authors, they had also read George Orwell, John Milton, 16 Supreme Court cases on the First Amendment and newspaper articles about other advocates of censorship such as:

• The well-to-do Michigan mother who single-handedly intimidated advertisers into withdrawing from a television show.

• A Mississippi fire-and-brimstone preacher who terrorized Pepsi into withdrawing a Madonna commercial that resembled her controversial "Like a Prayer" video.

• The Ayatollah Khomeini, whose death threats forced an author into hiding.

• The ethnic, religious, gender, professional and civic groups who seek to censor ideas or television programs that they judge offensive.

The score from the memos? Healy 22, Talese and Heller 2.

I can't speak for every college kid, but these 24 students make a liar out of Allan Bloom. The American mind is not closing.

Enjoy some of their comments: "If Talese and Heller wish to question the integrity of Father Healy's secularity, allow me to remind them that basketball is far from a divine preoccupation. Yet the library's new president has provided his institution with a fine, secular basketball program for years." (Mark)

"In the words of Alexander Pope, 'What mighty contests arise from trivial things.'" (Tara)

"Do not condemn the man before he begins the job, Mr. Heller. Would you like readers to ban your books before you begin writing them?" (Bob)

"It's Talese's secularism which has degenerated into a tyranny of openness, a secularism so exaggerated it courts elitism and prejudice." (Tom)

"I conclude with mixed feelings. I have to agree with Joseph Heller's concern. I also believe that the potential threat of censorship lies with those who agree with Talese and Heller." (Sharon)

"According to Aristotle and Mill, Talese and Heller would be guilty of prior restraint. As a Jewish American, I do not feel that because my president is not of my faith that he will dictate policies reflecting his faith." (Jaimi)

"I agree with Mr. Talese. I do think that the Father's appointment lends itself to possible conflict between personal values and values en masse." (Corey)

"Father Healy is a Jesuit priest in the 1980s, not the 1480s." (David)

Those few comments hardly do justice to the spaciousness of their ideas. But they reflect the best of democracy in the marketplace of ideas.

Wright seeks quick hearing in hopes of changing the tide

By JIM DRINKARD
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — House Speaker Jim Wright, his support eroding among fellow Democrats, is hoping a long-shot legal move in his fight against ethics charges will rescue his political career.

But even as Wright expressed confidence he could defeat some of the charges against him in televised proceedings scheduled Tuesday, those who elected him speaker were growing more pessimistic about his chances of holding onto the post.

"It's time for a leadership change," said Rep. Philip Sharp, D-Ind., one of the few Democrats willing to say publicly what many were saying in private. Wright, he said, has become too distracted by his ethics struggle to run the House's business.

Another mid-level Democrat, speaking on condition of anonymity, said many have written off

Wright's political fortunes and are now focusing on the need for a legal defense to protect him from possible Justice Department action.

Others questioned Wright's strategy of leaning so heavily on a motion to dismiss the two most serious charges against him — that he used bulk sales of his book to evade outside income limits and that he improperly accepted $145,000 in gifts from a business partner with a direct interest in legislation.

Even an ardent supporter said Wright needed some good news. "It's got to quit raining on the speaker," said Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Texas. "The constant addition of problems has not been helpful. Some things have got to break extremely favorably."

In asking the ethics committee to dismiss the charges, Wright was essentially demanding that the panel abandon a legal inter-

Wright pretation of House rules that it accepted when it voted to charge him with 69 rules violations. The speaker's defense is that the panel stretched the rules when it charged him by deeming Fort Worth real estate developer George Mallick to have a direct interest in legislation and by characterizing his book royalty earnings as disguised speaking fees.

But one of Wright's eight lawyers, William C. Oldaker, acknowledged that motions to dismiss charges are routinely denied, and put chances of winning next week at probably less than 50-50.

And ethics committee Chairman Julian Dixon, D-Calif., called the committee's interpretation of the rules "very well founded."

But Wright, appearing briefly before television cameras on Thursday, expressed optimism that he would prevail. "We welcome the opportunity for our case — and we believe it is very, very strong — to be heard before the full public view," he said.

Wright himself will not appear at the hearing. His lawyers will be allowed to argue their case for dismissing the charges, and ethics committee outside counsel Richard Phelan will defend the committee's action. The hearing will be televised on C-SPAN, the cable TV public affairs network.

The full ethics committee, made up of six Democrats and six Republicans, will then decide whether to grant the motion, probably sometime later in the week, Dixon said.

Whatever the outcome, any remaining charges would then become the subject of a trial-like disciplinary hearing before the committee. Members would be asked to decide whether there is clear and convincing evidence of the alleged violations.

Also on Thursday, the ethics committee denied Wright access to advisory opinions on ethical questions which the panel has given other House members, saying that to release them would violate confidentiality the members receiving the opinions expect.

It also completed taking depositions in its investigation of a gas drilling venture which netted Wright $170,000 in profit last year at a time when he needed $100,000 to pay off a bank loan from a failed nursing home investment.

The panel interviewed Tom Law, the Fort Worth attorney who administers the speaker's blind trust. Law said afterward that the committee had asked "very probing" questions, but declined to elaborate.

Wright's office denied reports that the Internal Revenue Service had launched a preliminary criminal investigation of his business dealings with Mallick.

In a statement, Wright said Gary Booth, Dallas district director of the IRS, had denied to the speaker's lawyer that any investigation was being conducted.

Jury refuses to indict father in death of his comatose son

CHICAGO (AP) — The legal ordeal is over for a father who disconnected his comatose son from a respirator and held him until he died, but the act of desperation reveals a gap in laws dealing with euthanasia, experts said.

A grand jury refused Thursday to indict Rudy Linares on a first-degree murder charge for the April 26 death of his 15-month-old son, Samuel.

Linares, 23, pulled a .357-Magnum caliber handgun on hospital staff and kept them at bay while taking his son off a respirator and cradling the boy in his arms until the severely brain-damaged toddler died.

He said he did it "because I loved my son." The child had been in a coma since August, when he accidentally swallowed a balloon, cutting off oxygen to his brain.

Linares pleaded guilty Thursday to a misdemeanor charge of unlawful use of a weapon and was sentenced by Circuit Judge Robert Bastone to one year conditional discharge, meaning he will serve no time in jail.

Bastone told him to get a psychological evaluation and consider counseling.

"As far as punishment is concerned, I think you have suffered enough," the judge said at a brief hearing.

"I'm glad it's more or less behind me now," Linares said.

Linares, a house painter from Cicero, had been charged with murder, but after the grand jury action, the state's attorney's office said it would not prosecute the charge.

Groups that back legislation to support parents and other relatives in such cases applauded the grand jury's decision.

"Everybody is really relieved for Mr. Linares," said Fenella Rouse, legal director for the New York-based Society for the Right to Die. "It's the right decision."

Public defender Kevin Smith said Congress and state legislatures must draft laws to govern such cases.

"The criminal courts are not where this should be dealt with," he said. "There should be an orderly way that a family dealing with a tragedy can end the suffering of a child or another loved one without being driven to an act of despair like Rudy Linares was driven."

State's Attorney Cecil Partee repeated his pledge to form a panel of medical, legal and religious representatives to analyze the issues raised by the case and seek appropriate laws.

Rush-Presbyterian-St. Luke's Medical Center had refused the family's requests to withdraw life support and welcomed prosecution for child abuse or murder because the youngster wasn't brain-dead.

Judge: Red Cross handled relief fairly

MIDLAND (AP) — The Red Cross did nothing improper when it disbursed about $200,000 less in the tornado-ravaged town of Saragosa than it collected after the May 1987 disaster, a federal judge says.

Some residents of the small cotton-farming town 35 miles south of Pecos sued the American National Red Cross six months after the tornado leveled most of the town, killed 30 people and injured more than 160. Texas Rural Legal Aid filed the suit on the Saragosans' behalf.

The plaintiffs asked for records of donations the Red Cross collected in the tornado's aftermath, and demanded about $200,000 the private agency raised but put in the bank for future disasters. They said Saragosans should have received all the money the Red Cross collected because of the tornado.

But U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton ruled Wednesday that the Red Cross had published an accounting of the funds and that the private disaster agency had disbursed the money to Saragosans according to their needs. The Red Cross collected more than $1 million and spent $985,000 in the town, Bunton said.

The decision didn't please some Saragosans.

"They could have built better-quality homes with the money that was donated to the town," said Tony Gallego, who helped lead the legal fight. "But I guess that's the way (the Red Cross) operates and always will operate."

Residents have complained their Red Cross-built houses have thin walls, and were painted sloppily. But some residents ended up with bigger houses than the ones that were destroyed in the twister.

Ironically, the most strident critics of the Red Cross effort have been those who lost property, but not family members — a turn of events that has caused a rift between those who lost loved ones and those who didn't.

Atlantis astronauts say Magellan probe highlight of shuttle mission

By LAURA TOLLEY
Associated Press Writer
SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — The Atlantis astronauts say the highlight of their recent shuttle mission was deployment of the Magellan probe, which already has traveled more than 2 million miles from Earth on its voyage to Venus.

Atlantis Commander David M. Walker said he and his four crew members were "caught up in the scientific significance" of the mission, the first U.S. interplanetary probe to be deployed in 11 years.

"We had a small part to play in it, but we are now emotionally attached to Magellan as it takes off to Venus and we intend to watch (it) very closely. We feel proprietary about it," Walker said Thursday during a news conference at Johnson Space Center.

"It was just amazing to me we were sending a satellite off to that planet," said astronaut Mark Lee, a mission specialist and the only space rookie on the flight.

"We wish Magellan good luck on its mission," Lee said.

The other Atlantis astronauts were pilot Ronald Grabe and mission specialists Mary Cleave and Norman Thagard. Their four-day voyage ended May 8 with a landing at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif.

Magellan, which was more than 2 million miles away from Earth on Thursday and traveling nearly 6,000 mph, is expected to map up to 90 percent of the Venusian surface with its high resolution radar.

Those images should help scientists learn more about how Venus evolved so differently than its sister planet Earth.

The probe was on a near perfect path and had only minor difficulties with its attitude control that did not endanger the spacecraft, said Mary Beth Murrill, spokeswoman for the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif., which manages the project for NASA.

A planned trajectory correction maneuver for the probe is planned for Sunday, she added.

After an 806-million-mile voyage, the probe is scheduled to reach Venus in August 1990.

During their news conference, the astronauts showed two films and several pictures taken during their flight. One film depicted the dramatic and volatile minutes during the launch as seen from an astronaut's viewpoint.

Lee operated a home video camera tethered to his suit that showed the billowing smoke clouds from the blastoff and the strong vibrations inside the shuttle as it rode into space on two solid rocket boosters. It was the first time such a camera was used to document the launch.

But after the shuttle separated from the boosters, the ride inside became much smoother, allowing Lee to have more control of the camera. He turned it on several other crew members, who were still strapped in their seats.

Lee said his first launch was a lot like the simulations astronauts complete during their training except for the "visual sensations."

"It just sort of takes your breath away the first time you look at the Earth," he said.

The astronauts also showed spectacular photographs taken of the Earth, including shots of Houston, Florida, the Bahamas, a dust storm over the Sahara Desert and evidence of deforestation in the Himalayas.

One photograph of Houston was presented to President Bush, who calls the city his hometown.

Walker, a Navy captain, said landing the shuttle was a little more difficult because of the higher crosswinds at Edwards. NASA has been hoping to get data regarding the shuttle's landing capabilities with crosswinds, and the Atlantis touchdown was the first such test.

The shuttle commander said Thursday that data from the touchdown is still being evaluated.

Walker declined to comment on the near collision of his small jet with an airliner over the Washington area Monday. He repeated earlier statements that he thought it was inappropriate to talk to the media about the incident until the investigations were completed.

The pilot of a Pan Am Airbus 310 said the T-38 NASA jet trainer flown by Walker zipped by within 500 feet of the wide-body airliner, which was en route to Paris with 166 passengers and a crew of 10.

Three federal agencies, including NASA, have opened investigations into the incident.

U.S. to permit visits by people with AIDS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Persons who have AIDS will be allowed to enter the United States to attend conferences, conduct business or receive medical treatment under new rules being drafted by immigration authorities.

Foreigners infected with AIDS or the HIV virus can apply for 30-day visas provided they do not seek to travel to this country as tourists, the Justice Department said Thursday.

The new regulations, to be issued shortly by the Immigration and Naturalization Service, will allow foreigners infected with AIDS to visit relatives, conduct business, seek medical treatment or attend conferences, said Justice Department spokesman David Runkel.

The regulations were drafted after last month's dispute over a Dutch AIDS patient who was detained by federal authorities in Minneapolis while en route to an AIDS conference in San Francisco, Runkel said.

An immigration judge overruled the INS' refusal to grant Hans Paul Verhoef, 31, of Rotterdam, a waiver to an exclusion order.

INS asks foreigners seeking to enter the country to state whether they have a contagious disease. Congress added AIDS to the list two years ago.

AIDS, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome, is a contagious disease that attacks the body's immune system, rendering it incapable of resisting other diseases and infections.

The new rules were called "a ludicrous policy" by Pat Christen, policy director for the San Francisco AIDS Foundation, which seeks to delete AIDS from INS' list of contagions.

"There is no reason to believe that a tourist poses any more public health threat than a business person," she said. "People with HIV infection are not casually contagious and are not going to go around transmitting the disease," she said.

"It's a disease of consenting adults. We don't need to worry about foreign invaders."

Students want teaching as LA strike continues

By BRUCE V. BIGELOW
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — With no end to the walkout that has hobbled education in the nation's second-largest school system this week, substitute teacher Chris Farmer keeps smiling at striking teachers, but "They don't smile back."

And the juniors and seniors who showed up Thursday at his John Marshall High School classroom were a pretty listless bunch.

One girl thumbed through Bridal Guide magazine. A youth read Coma, a paperback thriller. Three students sat with headphones in their ears. Several students answered questions from a stack of "Trivial Pursuit" game cards.

"It's pretty painful, really," Farmer said. "They're a good group of kids. They just want something to do."

The scene was typical of the 600 schools in the Los Angeles Unified School District, where 2,237 substitutes who crossed the picket lines for a special daily wage of $167 are coping with the workload of 22,000 striking teachers.

Student attendance has declined steadily since the strike began Monday. Of the 551,759 students enrolled this quarter, 283,620 were counted Thursday, down from 329,371 on Monday.

The first formal contract talks, in months between the striking teachers union and the school district took place Thursday. Both sides agreed not to comment to reporters.

Farmer, tall and gangly with wire-rimmed glasses, is an erstwhile substitute teacher who doubles as a contract worker at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena. With no current contract at the lab, he has worked every day since the strike by the United Teachers-Los Angeles union began.

Farmer was one of 22 substitute teachers supplementing 17 Marshall faculty members who worked Thursday despite the strike. The staff normally includes 139 teachers.

Marshall is an ornate stone building that has been used as a backdrop for countless movies, commercials and television shows, including Wildcats, Grease and Room 222.

In 1987, a team from the school won the National Academic Decathlon, a point of pride for Principal Donald Hahn.

"One of the things the substitutes like about Marshall is that it's a good school," said Bill Pitkin, a biology teacher who began picketing at 5:30 a.m. Thursday.

His pride in the school was mixed with bitterness about substitutes whom he views as strikebreakers.

"There's one substitute in there who's an exceptional teacher. ... He's taught some of my biology classes. But we won't ever call for him as a substitute again," Pitkin said.

Teachers, who currently earn salaries of $23,440 to $43,319, are seeking a 26 percent pay increase over two years. The district is offering them a 20.5 percent increase over three years.

A little more than half of Marshall's enrollment of 2,780 students was counted in attendance Thursday.

The beginning of the strike was chaos, Hahn said, but "the longer it goes, the better it's going to be for us because we're getting more and more teachers each day."

Relief workers defy shellings in Lebanon

By RIMA SALAMEH
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — More than 60 Western relief workers are defying kidnappers and constant shellings to aid Palestinian refugees and tens of thousands of Lebanese displaced by the country's 14-year civil war.

But a recent spate of abductions has raised questions whether the risks are worth it.

Some non-governmental aid agencies have withdrawn their officials in recent weeks after their relief workers, once considered immune from Lebanon's kidnap gangs, were abducted by Moslem militants.

On Thursday, the PLO told four West German relief workers to leave a Palestinian refugee camp after they refused to say who kidnapped some of their colleagues.

But 20 organizations are still functioning, providing badly needed help to a growing number of homeless people and refugees.

Fourteen aid officials — four Swiss Red Cross officials, four West Germans, an Irishman, a Swede, a Norwegian, a Briton, a Belgian and a Syrian — have been abducted since 1985.

Most were released after periods ranging from hours to a month. Three, including a West German kidnapped twice, remain missing, along with 15 other Western hostages. Longest held of the hostages is American Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press; who was abducted March 16, 1985.

But 20 organizations are still functioning, providing badly needed help to a growing number of homeless people and refugees.

"There's no question of us leaving," said Francoise Derron, spokeswoman for the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), which has 13 Swiss officials in Moslem west Beirut, the largest foreign relief team in Lebanon.

Like most aid officials interviewed, she declined to discuss security arrangements. But, she stressed, "We're going to continue our work, especially a big program of aid distribution to the displaced people."

More than 750,000 people have fled Beirut's Christian and Moslem sectors since fierce artillery and rocket battles broke out March 8 between army commander Gen. Michel Aoun's mainly Christian forces and an alliance of Syrian troops and Moslem allies.

Derron said ICRC teams have distributed blankets, kitchen sets and food parcels to 61,000 people whose homes were destroyed by the shelling or who were forced to flee.

The Red Cross pulled out its 30-strong team Dec. 21 following death threats from unidentified extremists. But the Geneva-based organization sent a smaller team back Feb. 7.

A West German team working with the ASME-Humanitas group in Sidon, provincial capital of south Lebanon, have become the most recent targets for extremists.

Two of them — administrator Heinrich Struebig and nurse Petra Schnitzler — have been kidnapped twice in the space of two weeks. They and colleague Markus Quint were first abducted May 4 near Sidon by unidentified gunmen.

Struebig and Ms. Schnitzler were freed after a few hours, apparently to relay a message to Bonn that Quint would be freed if a Frankfurt court handed down a light sentence on Lebanese Shiite Moslem Mohammed Ali Hamadi.

Hamadi, on trial for taking part in the 1985 hijacking of a TWA jetliner and the slaying of a U.S. Navy diver, was convicted this week of air piracy and murder and sentenced to life in prison.

Quint was freed after 11 days in captivity, apparently after intervention by Shiite leader Nabih Berri.

Struebig and Schnitzler were kidnapped again May 16 with another colleague, 28-year-old male nurse Thomas Kempfner.

Schnitzler was freed when Moslem militiamen inadvertently intercepted her abductor's car. But the two men remain missing.

While mystery still shrouds these abductions, the Palestine Liberation Organization accused the Germans of deliberately concealing their kidnapers' identities and blatantly ignoring security precautions.

The PLO, which controls the refugee camps where they work, asked them get out of south Lebanon and the group said they would leave.

Unlike most aid officials, the 11 Westerners working for the U.N. Relief and Works Agency, which cares for Palestinian refugees, use bulletproof cars and move around protected by heavily armed Lebanese bodyguards.

UNRWA spokesman Iman Kasrawi, a Palestinian, said the agency, which employs 2,700 Palestinians and Lebanese, has no plans to evacuate its foreign staff.

Two have been kidnapped and freed. But British writer Alec Collett, on assignment with UNRWA, was abducted in 1985 and his kidnapers claimed they killed him.

Incaviglia (center) has game-winning hit against Twins.

Rangers snap losing streak

ARLINGTON (AP) — Pete Incaviglia was stuck in a 1-for-17 slump when he stepped to the plate in an all-too-familiar position against the Minnesota Twins.

Incaviglia had struck out in his previous two at-bats but his fortunes changed against reliever German Gonzalez with two outs and the winning run on second base in the 11th inning of Thursday's game. He lined a single to left-center that scored Julio Franco and lifted the Texas Rangers over the Twins, 6-5.

Incaviglia's clutch hit off Gonzalez, 3-2, snapped the Rangers' four-game losing streak and made a winner of Rangers' bullpen ace Jeff Russell, 3-0.

"It was nice to hit one in a situation like that to win it," Incaviglia said. "It's been really frustrating."

"I've been hitting the ball hard, but at people. This time it found a hole. I need to get back on track because I'm a very important part of this team."

Franco singled with two outs in the 11th and stole second, beating catcher Tim Laudner's throw, to set the stage for Incaviglia's game-winner.

"I just tried to get in the catcher's way anyway I could," Incaviglia said. "Julio can steal a base in crucial situations. Then I just looked for a pitch I could drive."

Texas took a 5-4 lead in the eighth on Rafael Palmeiro's two-out single that scored pinch-runner Cecil Espy. Espy had moved from first to third on Scott Fletcher's groundout to shortstop.

But Gary Gaetti tied the game, 5-5, in the ninth with a leadoff homer to left.

"It was a classic example of how not to pitch to a good hitter," said Rangers starter Nolan Ryan. "I got behind, then left a pitch out over the plate. That's exactly what I didn't want to do."

Ryan permitted four earned runs, six hits, struck out 10 and walked three before exiting after nine innings. Ryan, the league leader with 73 strikeouts, had his 186th career game with 10 or more strikeouts.

The Twins took a 3-1 lead in the second, thanks to an unearned run that was set up by Palmeiro's throwing error. Al Newman reached second on the play and Dan Gladden followed with an RBI double just inside the left-field line.

Perez, Brown named top PHS athletes

Robert Perez and Yolanda Brown have been selected as the outstanding male and female athletes for 1988-89 at Pampa High School.

Perez and Brown, along with many other student-athletes, were honored during Wednesday's annual awards ceremony.

Perez, a senior, qualified for the state meet in cross-country and the regionals in track this year. At the district track meet, he placed second in the 800 to advance to regionals.

Perez is believed to be the first Harvester to qualify for the state meet in cross-country. After placing fifth in district and ninth in regionals he finished 67th out of 101 entrants at the state meet in Georgetown.

Perez was also a starter in football as a receiver and in the defensive secondary.

Brown, who also closes out her high school career, will probably best be remembered as the finest all-around female athlete in PHS history. She starred in three sports and will be attending

Texas A&M on a basketball scholarship.

Brown set all-time scoring and rebounding records in basketball. Among her honors include District 1-4A's Player of the Year, Amarillo Globe-News Super Team and Sophomore of the Year. Brown was a member of four state championship relay teams in track and was named the district's Most Valuable Player in volleyball when Pampa won the championship in 1987.

Golf work party scheduled

A work party is scheduled for 8:30 a.m. Saturday at the new public golf course north of Pampa.

Construction will begin on two outdoor restrooms and volunteers are asked to bring a hammer and nail apron.

Pampa Public Golf Association President Buddy Epperson said work is nearly completed on the pro shop, which will contain a snack bar, offices and utility room. Soil erosion caused by the recent rainfall has damaged part of the greens, which has been sown with bent grass.

"The weather situation has been pretty good since the project started. We've had very few problems, but I guess you can't win them all," Epperson said.

Epperson urged as many volunteers as possible turn out for Saturday's work session.

Walling delivers for Cardinals

HOUSTON (AP) — Just as he did for parts of 12 seasons with the Houston Astros, Denny Walling came off the bench to deliver the decisive hit.

Only Thursday night, his former team was the victim.

Walling, traded to St. Louis last year from Houston, singled home Willie McGee with the winning run in the 10th inning as the Cardinals broke a five-game losing streak with a 4-3 victory over the Astros.

"I like the guys over there," Walling said of the Astros. "But I'm with St. Louis now. It doesn't matter what team I do it against."

Walling dumped his pinch-hit single into left field off of loser Larry Andersen, 1-1.

Ken Dailey, 2-1, pitched the final two innings for the victory.

With one out in the 10th, McGee reached on an error by Houston second baseman Bill Doran.

Jose Oquendo's third hit of the game moved McGee to third and set up Walling, who was batting for Tony Pena.

The Astros were not surprised it was Walling who ended their five-game winning streak.

"Denny came off the bench and got a hit just like he has always done," said Doran.

Andersen knows Walling well enough to realize he had made a mistake with his pitching.

Lions Club slips by Energas

Lions Club snapped a two-game losing streak with a 3-2 win over previously-unbeaten Energas Thursday night at Optimist Park.

Lions is 1-2 on the season while Energas is 4-1 in the Babe Ruth 14-15 year-old League.

Buddy Plunk went the distance on the mound to pick up the win. He allowed three hits while striking out eight and walking five.

Top hitters for the Lions were Dwight Nickleberry and Eddie Hernandez. Nickleberry, Cedrick Wilbon and Troy Reeves played outstanding defense for the Lions.

Losing pitcher was Jade

Brown. Top hitters for Energas were Phillip Sexton and David Johnson.

Baker-Finch leads Colonial

FORT WORTH (AP) — Call it the Cape Town Classic or maybe the Singapore Sling, but the Colonial National Invitation seems suddenly inappropriate for the latest million-dollar PGA gala.

U.S. golfers are almost a no-show.

An Aussie, a South African and a Japanese ruled the leader board Thursday after the first round over a wet, windy and wicked Colonial course known as Hogan's Alley in honor of five-time winner Ben Hogan.

Australian Ian Baker-Finch slashed five shots from the Trinity River layout's testy par 70 and rode the 65 to a one-shot lead over Japan's Isao Aoki and South Africa's Fulton Allem.

The visiting tourists slipped off early and largely unnoticed at daybreak Thursday and escaped the full force of the gusting Texas breezes.

"... We talked early in the round about how easy the course was playing and how lucky we were that there was no wind," said Baker-Finch, 28, who holds 10 foreign titles but is a non-winner on the American tour after only a handful of appearances.

He has won but $13,689 in five PGA outings this year.

"It's not as easy to do well on the U.S. tour because there are so many good players," he said. "Just to make the cut here is an achievement."

At any rate, he likes it better than last year's schedule, which nearly qualified him for the funny farm.

Market flooded by sports books

UNDER THE COVERS: Blame it on the Jim Wright "books for dollars" game, or the still-to-be-published Volvano Vulcan, a flood of sports books has hit the market the past few weeks.

Simon and Schuster, which once accepted the Volvano thing and then backed off, has added to its magnificent Fireside Series with inexpensive paperbacks of all persuasion. We say inexpensive, because when you look at $20-35 for a hardback, anything under a sawbuck is a bargain today. With the thought there may even be something for Dad's Day, let's review briefly.

First, a couple of golden oldies returning a quarter-century later for the baseball fan. Bill Veck was to baseball what Ringling Brothers is to circus. The innovative mind that created the exploding scoreboard, brought a midget, a one-armed outfielder, and Satchel Paige out of the obscurity of the Black barnstorming leagues into sports page headlines, earned this lifelong consummate showman the title of "baseball's Barnum." And it's all told in these two excellent reads, "Veck as in Wreck" and "The Hustler's Handbook." Veck, himself hobbling around on a wooden leg and riddled with illness, explains how losing streaks, rainouts, all kinds of catastrophes can be turned into diamond mines.

Sports Forum

By Warren Hasse

Golfers aren't left out. "Shark Attack" is Greg Norman's guide to aggressive golf. The Australian native who became the first to win over $1 million in prize money in a single year on the PGA tour, explains every shot in the game, with special emphasis on the eternally-overlooked "thinking" aspect.

"Golf Begins at 50" is another lesson manual jammed with secrets from a fellow who hit that magic age four years ago and found it cause to play the best golf in his life. Gary Player (what is it with these invading foreign golfers and book writing?) takes you right from the putting stance to the proper equipment and exercise.

It's been ten years since this book first came out, but there is now a new generation of pseudo-athletes, male and female, who don't have the benefit of a licensed athletic trainer to tell them about the biochemical genius of their bodies. "The Sweet Spot in Time" is written by John Jerome, who has authored several volumes attempting, and succeeding, to explain how the body functions for athletes of all levels. What are the body's needs, why can an athlete achieve those special peak performances, how can you become the Six Million Dollar Man? The problem here is that you will never again be able to view a superb athletic feat without relating back to this book to seek the cause and effect.

Not to be overlooked is the less athletic, the person who likes the esthetics of the unnoticed world around us: bird watching. Did you know the sixth annual World Series of Birding was held in New Jersey last week, and the winning six-member team spotted 201 bird species in a 24-hour period? The Garden State is a primary migration flyway from north to south, with over 350 species filling the skylanes each year. "The Birder's Catalogue—the Sourcebook for Birding Paraphernalia" is probably the most complete collection of information for bird lovers of all kinds.

And we mentioned it before, but "How To Make Money In One Day At The Race Track" needs a bit more explanation. With the opening of LaMesa Park, Sun-land, Ruidosa, Santa Fe and the location at Remington Park, the curious are obviously going to make their way to watch the horses run, and eventually wind up with a two buck bet to "show." Most novices will buy a Racing Form, which makes them about as expert as buying a football program makes you a coach. This book explains all the strange terminology one encounters at the parimutuel window (one of those strange terms), how to rate horses, how to make the final selection, how to play longshots, how to read and evaluate race results and the racing program, how to take on such strange bets as the daily double, exacta and trifecta...and most of all, how to manage your money. It will leave you more confused than ever, but at least by reading it you will feel like you're as track-wise as the guy standing in the betting line next to you...which you probably are!

Those are just some samplings of the summer's sports book fare. And you thought all we ever wrote about were the Harvesters and Cubs.

Briscoe ousted from playoffs

The Briscoe Broncos were eliminated from the Class 1A playoff hunt Thursday afternoon when they were defeated by the Follett Panthers, 8-2, in District 4-1A baseball action at Briscoe Field.

Follett scored three runs in the first inning and two more in the second before Briscoe came alive in the third, posting its only two runs of the game. The Panthers wrapped up the scoring with a three-run effort in the fourth.

David Gilmer, who lasted four innings on the hill for the Broncos, was credited with the loss. Shawn Zybach came in relief to finish out the remaining three frames.

Briscoe collected five hits on the day.

"Defensively, we played pretty well," said Briscoe coach Ron Van Vranken, whose Broncos fell to 0-3 in district play and 2-4 overall for a third-place finish. "But we left 11 runners on base, and that was the difference in the game. We didn't hit at the crucial times."

Briscoe will host Kelton (0-2 in District 1-1A, 2-5 overall) in a non-district contest this afternoon at 4:30.

Follett will travel to Higgins this afternoon to battle for the District 4-1A championship in a game beginning at 4:30. Higgins (2-0 in district, 2-2 overall), currently in first place, has previously defeated both Follett and Briscoe. If Follett (2-1 in district) defeats Higgins today, the two will play a tie-breaker to determine playoff seeds.

In District 1-1A action, Lefors defeated Kelton twice this season to clinch the conference championship. Second-place Kelton will take on the winner of the Higgins-Follett game in the area playoffs next week, while Lefors will take on the loser.

Playoff sites and dates have not yet been set.

Volunteers needed for new Partners in Parenting project

Partners in Parenting is a new project being developed by a task force of the Gray County Extension Home Economics Program Advisory Committee in cooperation with the Texas Department of Health and Human Services. Partners in Parenting is a volunteer program helping first-time parents through parenting support and education.

The project is scheduled to begin in June. A training for volunteers will be conducted on Saturday, June 3, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The PIP project is looking for volunteers who: (1) are interested in being a friend to a new parent; (2) have an active interest in new ideas; (3) are caring; (4) are willing to share some time with a new parent.

What's expected of a volunteer? Volunteers must complete an eight hour training session. They will be paired with a first-time parent and will make personal contacts with their parent partner. Volunteers will be encouraged to try to attend once a month group meetings with parent partners. Finally, volunteers will provide feedback and observation-type evaluation.

Personal satisfaction of sharing and caring with another person will be a primary benefit for volunteers. Volunteers will also have the knowledge that they have had a role in lowering the incidence of child abuse. In addition, application to award continuing education units (CEU's) for the training session is being made.

Partners in Parenting can use volunteers of any age who meet the criteria previously mentioned. Interested persons should contact the Gray County Extension Office at 669-8033 by May 24, 1989.

G.L. Sanders to exhibit works at Kerrville Fair

G.L. Sanders, Pampa artist, has gained acceptance to the prestigious Texas State Arts and Crafts Fair. The 18th annual event is scheduled for May 27-28 and June 3-4 in Kerrville.

Sanders won his right to exhibit in a competition among 230 exhibiting artists at the 1988 event. Approximately 100 exhibitors are chosen at each event for the next year, with an open competition held each autumn for the remaining booths. Nearly 600 applications are considered in the two competitions.

Sanders works in bronze and cast paper - his creations are carefully crafted and distinctive. "Thank You, Noah! Animals in Texas Arts, Crafts and Music" is the theme selected for the 1989 fair and celebrates the state's love of animals. Visitors will stroll the spacious shaded fairgrounds and see animals as subjects of paintings or poised in the graceful lines of bronze sculpture. They can watch as critters are stenciled on a floor cloth or Noah's Ark is applied on a quilt in the folk art tent. Also animals will appear elegantly in a wool weaving. Wool. And mohair. The best of the Texas partnership with its animals. From these fibers that envisage art and provide livelihood, the fair will fashion an extensive exhibit.

The nimble fingers of Texas needleworkers show just how much can be accomplished with wool and mohair. Almost weatherproof Scandinavian knitting, airy Shetland lace, indigo blue crewel work and colorful hooked rugs take form before visitors' eyes.

Also, there will be sheep shearing and hands-on demonstrations to make drop spindles from sticks. A gentle angora rabbit snuggles happily in her master's lap as hair is combed directly off her back onto a spinning wheel.

Entertainment, free to fair ticketholders, and good food combine for two weekends already a long-standing tradition for Texans, out-of-state and out-of-country visitors. The oak shaded grounds and huge circus-size tents provide a pleasing backdrop for the artists and craftspersons.

A free color brochure on the 1989 Texas State Arts and Crafts Fair can be obtained by contacting TACF, P.O. Box 1527, Kerrville, Tex. 78029-1527 or calling (512) 896-5711.

rewarding for her to help the community and the AHA. Trask's work is greatly appreciated by the AHA, as she continues to help memorial donations become "gifts of life" for others. Memorial contributions made to the AHA are carefully handled based on the purpose of each gift. Memorial donations are not only to honor the deceased, but also to acknowledge wedding anniversaries, birthdays, illness, or other occasions. Upon receipt of a memorial donation, Trask sends an appropriate card to the recipient of the donor's choice. Included with the card is a thank you card which the recipient may then mail back to the donor to acknowledge his or her thoughtfulness.

To make a memorial contribution to the AHA in Gray County, please include the following information with your donation: name and address of donor(s), name and address of recipient(s), and name of person being honored. Contributions should be mailed to Trask at 1810 Beech, Pampa, TX 79065. For more information about the AHA's memorial program, call her at 669-7678.

'Torch Run' art festival planned in Guymon

The U.S. Olympic Festival '89 Torch Run will be passing through Guymon June 17-18. Along with many other festivities, there will be an Art Show sponsored by Artists' Studio Northwest on Sunday, June 18 from 1 to 7 p.m. This show is open to all artists of fine art and will be held at Thompson Park at Sunset Lake in Guymon.

As this is an outdoor event, each artist will be responsible for his or her own equipment for displaying artwork. There will be an entry fee of $10 for each space.

For more information and entry form, write to Wilma Aikers, POB 12, Hooker, Okla. 73945 or call 405-652-2095. Entry forms may also be picked up at the Gallery on Main Street in Guymon.

Bridesmaids learn from bride that friendship has its price

DEAR ABBY: I just learned that a friend for whom I agreed to be a bridesmaid tried to make a profit on the bridesmaids' dresses. "Betty" told me the dress cost $125. When she delivered it to me, I thought it looked rather cheap and poorly made, but I didn't say anything. I paid the $125 in good faith.

Another bridesmaid, Betty's roommate, called to tell me that she just found a sales slip listing the dress as $54, and she was so disgusted, she pulled out of the wedding party. That gave me the courage to call Betty and tell her I was pulling out, too, and why.

I had also planned a wedding shower for Betty, which I canceled. Betty became very defensive and said the store had made a mistake in marking the dresses, which was untrue. I checked with the store.

Betty is now frantically calling around trying to find other girls to be her bridesmaids. She told one girl the dresses cost $125, but she could have hers for $60.

Money is not the issue here. I told Betty that she was not the kind of person I wanted for my friend. She accused me of "overreacting" and making a big deal out of nothing.

I would like your opinion and so would the other bridesmaids who

Dear Abby

dropped out.

EX-BRIDESMAIDS IN LONG BEACH

DEAR EX-BRIDESMAIDS: Overreacting? No way. I have heard of petty ripoffs, but I must say that this is a new low. (And people ask me if I make up these letters.)

DEAR ABBY: After a recent death in our family, I suddenly realized that I didn't have a will.

I intend to make one as soon as possible, but I need to know if it's possible to write a will myself, or must I use a lawyer?

If I write my own will, is it necessary to have it notarized? Also, is there anything else I should know to make sure it holds up?

ROGER THE DODGER IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR ROGER: Each state has its own laws concerning wills, but in California a "holographic" will — one written in one's own handwriting — is legal, providing: It is written on a plain piece of paper with no other writing on the paper. The writer must show a "donative" intent, stating clearly what he wants left to whom. The will must be signed and dated by the author.

A holographic will requires no witnesses.

DEAR ABBY: I just read the letter from "Dorthea Redwine," whose husband is a banker in Fayetteville, Ga. He told her that folded and creased checks play havoc with the high-speed equipment used in processing checks.

This has been discussed in our office frequently. We aren't supposed to fold checks, but what should we do when businesses send bills accompanied by addressed return envelopes that are too short for a regular company check?

Thanks for letting me have my say. And tell Mrs. Redwine I love her last name!

IN THE CHURCH OF YOUR CHOICE

The Lord is my shepherd

The 23rd Psalm is one of the most familiar chapters in the Bible. Early in life, most of us have committed it to memory. Every once in a while we should go back to these verses and think of the wonderful message of faith and trust in God that they reveal to us. They show us that we have a loving Father; one who will show us the right paths; one who will protect and provide for us. These scriptures end with a note of thanksgiving and a promise.

"Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever."

Plan to start a regular worship in the Lord's house.

The Church is God's appointed agency in this world for spreading the knowledge of His love for man and of His demand for man to respond to that love by loving his neighbor. Without this grounding in the love of God, no government or society or way of life will long persevere and the freedoms which we hold so dear will inevitably perish. Therefore, even from a selfish point of view, one should support the Church for the sake of the welfare of himself and his family. Beyond that, however, every person should uphold and participate in the Church because it tells the truth about man's life, death and destiny; the truth which alone will set him free to live as a child of God.

Church to have film on origins of rock and roll

The George Davis Ministries of Wichita Falls will present a special program at 7 p.m. Saturday at the First Pentecostal Holiness Church, 1700 Alcock.

The service will include a film entitled Rock and Roll - A Search for God. The meeting will explore the origins of rock music and outline its effects on our society. The relationship of drug abuse, teen suicides and satanism with rock music will be clarified.

Doctors George and Albert Davis have traveled around the world alerting their hearers to the dangers of rock music. They have just returned from a preaching mission to the world's largest Protestant church in Seoul, Korea.

Feeling that this special service is of great interest to the community, the local church is presenting it on a night when most groups don't schedule activities. This is done to enable as many as possible to attend.

The congregation and Pastor Albert Maggard extend a welcome to everyone to attend the special program.

His Touch

By Charlotte Barbaree

Scripture: For what I do is not the good I want to do; no, the evil I do not want to do - this I keep on doing. (Romans 7:19 NIV)

I have always had a passion for science. When I was a small child, I had a voracious appetite for scientific information to which I had to access. My second grade teacher touched our science lessons as lightly as possible. I wanted details!

My sister was a whole two years older than I, and she had answers for everything. Mind you, she didn't know any more about science than I did, but she had a rich imagination. She presented her tall tales with conviction - she drew pictures on our blackboard - and I believed every word she said.

When she told me all the stars were laid out to form one enormous star shape, I believed her. When she told me people with big mouths always had good singing voices, I believed her.

When she drew a picture of a person's innards, I not only believed her, I begged for days for her to show me more, but her creativity had run dry on the subject.

Invariably, I couldn't wait to present the latest scientific gospel-according-to-sister to my teacher. Although not strong on science, my teacher tried to convince me that my sister didn't have her facts straight, but I knew better.

Why is it, Christians, that we are so easily persuaded by the beckoning of temptation, but we must struggle to discern God's will for righteousness sake?

The voice of the proverbial little red devil on our left shoulder shouts louder in our ears than the angel on our right shoulder. Temptation deceptively woos us with convincing words and beguiles us with vivid mental images.

On the other hand, righteousness only offers the richness of truth and the blessing of infinite grace. The Holy Spirit urges us to listen and get our lives straight, but we know better. Aren't we smart?

Religion roundup

NEW YORK (AP) - Catholic educators say they are pleased at the Vatican's readiness to modify a proposed document on Catholic colleges and universities that had drawn much American criticism.

Three North Americans were named to a 15-member international commission to assist in a major revision of the document.

Its initial draft in 1985 had aroused keen objections from U.S. Catholic educators as projecting a degree of ecclesiastical control over colleges that would not be acceptable on the American academic scene.

That draft was revised, but educators at their April 18-25 meeting with Vatican officials called for further major revisions, and the commission was set up to guide the process.

NEW YORK (AP) - Reform synagogues marked the 100th anniversary of the organization of Reform rabbis in this country - the Central Conference of American Rabbis - in activities here the weekend of May 6-7.

Founded in 1889 under leadership of Rabbi Isaac Mayer Wise, it now includes 1,500 rabbis serving about 800 congregations in the United States with a membership totalling 1.5 million.

Religion

Religious businessmen strive for balance

By NEAL TAMPLIN
El Paso Times

EL PASO (AP) — Chuck Emmett, the owner of an El Paso radiator shop, used to give a higher quote for a job if a customer looked as if he could afford it.

Whatever the market will bear, was his philosophy.

Emmett abandoned that philosophy in 1967 when he had a born-again religious experience. Now, he doesn't inflate prices for anybody.

"Money is not my god anymore," said Emmett, a 51-year-old member of Pro Cathedral Church of St. Clement.

He added, "A businessman that doesn't have Jesus Christ is going to be more easily persuaded to fall to temptations."

Emmett is one of several devoutly religious businessmen interviewed for this story. Their strong beliefs sometimes make for conflicts with the hard reality of the business world.

Russell Clark, pastor of the Horizon City Community Chapel, said he experienced ethical conflicts when he worked as a hotel security director a few years ago. The hotel didn't want to spend enough money to adequately protect its customers.

"My personal religious belief is that people come first rather than budget and that is a tough one in today's economic world," he said.

But Clark and others say that religious ethics help a business owner develop integrity, a key for success. "People will always respect someone that has convictions and lives up to them," said Tom Doyle, pastor of Coronado Baptist Church. "Even if they don't agree with them."

Art Moreno, owner of Art's Photographic Suppliers, said his Catholic faith helps him deal with the stresses of business.

"There are a lot of trying times in the course of business, whether they be financial or personal, and I always ask for God's help in seeing us through some of the crises," Moreno, 55, said. "And it never fails that somehow he comes through."

Moreno said his business goes through money crunches from time to time. "All of a sudden from nowhere you get money coming in from unexpected sales. It's not luck."

Moreno believes in toleration toward other lifestyles. His laboratory will print artistic shots of nude models. But it won't print pornographic shots. "I'd rather not be a part of it," he said.

Ken Sholten, an evangelical Christian, said his religious beliefs make him compulsive about paying bills on time.

By the same token, Sholten, a wholesale supplier to construction companies, would be happier not borrowing money at all because of his beliefs. When he pays off the money he borrowed to start the K.D. Sholten Co. six years ago, he never wants to borrow money again.

Sholten, 43, said he makes it clear to business contacts that his Christian faith affects how he does business. "Why would a person want to have my faith if it doesn't make a difference?" he asked.

If Sholten goes out for a business lunch, he asks to pray before eating. "And I never had anyone turn me down. They just respect where I am coming from."

Many manufacturing representatives like to take their customers out for a night of drinking. Sholten politely declines.

He once spent an evening walking along the beach while a group of business associates attended "Wet T-Shirt Night" at a Miami bar.

Despite his strong beliefs, Sholten has no problems with doing business with non-religious people. "Some of the best contractors we deal with as far as I know have no religious beliefs."

Emanuel Cardon's workday starts at 5:30 a.m. and often doesn't end until 10 p.m. Cardon spends half his day managing the Comfort Inn in El Paso. Cardon, stake president over 2,600 Mormons in east El Paso, spends two or three evenings a week at church meetings.

"I enjoy it," said Cardon, 57. "It's two different jobs. You do the worldly job from 5:30 to 3. From 6 to 10, you do the spiritual job."

He spends about 60 hours a week on motel business and another 30 on church business. "You learn to manage your time and organize it," he said.

Cardon feels he still has enough time to spend with his family. He usually goes out to dinner with his wife Mondays and sets aside Saturdays for doing things with his family.

He believes the morals advocated by his church help him in business. "People know what we stand for. We try to be honest in our dealings."

Zion Lutheran Church members Gene and Esther McAdoo welcome guests at the Big Z barbecue, the church's main fund raiser of the year.

Zion Lutheran Church plans Big Z barbecue

Zion Lutheran Church will host the third annual Big Z barbecue Saturday night in the church parish hall, 1200 N. Duncan.

The event is the church's major fund raiser of the year and in 1988 helped the congregation to raise enough money to pave their parking lot.

Pastor Art Hill said the event has become an annual tradition in which members of the community are encouraged to get involved.

"The Big Z was begun as a way for our congregation to make some major improvements to our facility above and beyond the budget," Hill said. In addition to a meal of barbecue brisket and all the trimmings, Hill said the evening will include a silent auction as well as country music.

The event will be emceed by Bear Mills, a staff writer for The Pampa News and former country music disc jockey for KOMX radio, Hill said.

Among the items up for sale in the silent auction are weekend vacations, food, personal services and crafts.

Tickets for the barbecue, which begins at 6 p.m., are on sale at the church the night of the event for $7.50.

First Assembly to host service by missionaries

Robert E. and Alma Jo Ferguson, who have served as missionaries to the Philippines, will be ministering at the First Assembly of God, 500 S. Cuyler, for the 6:30 p.m. Sunday service.

The Fergusons arrived home in July 1988 from Davao City, Philippines, to begin their "Deputational Cycle" in preparation for their sixth missions assignment.

The Fergusons have served as missionaries since 1966. From that year to 1973, they ministered in the Bahama Islands. Mr. Ferguson pastored the Evangelistic Temple in Nassau and later directed the pilot program of the Mobilization and Placement Service (MAPS) in constructing a church on the Grand Bahama Island.

MAPS is an Assemblies of God program which sends church laymen in short-term voluntary missionary work abroad.

From the Bahamas, the Fergusons transferred to Singapore, where they established a new church that met each Sunday in the Equatorial Hotel.

While on furlough, Mr. Ferguson served as the missionary in Robert and Alma Jo Ferguson residence for the Missions Department at Southwestern Assemblies of God College in Waxahachie.

The Fergusons have spent their last two terms in the Philippines as resident faculty of the Immanuel Bible College at Cebu City and planting an evangelistic center at Davao City.

During their next term of missionary service, they will return to the Far East to continue planting additional churches and training ministers to meet the challenge of the unprecedented growth the church is experiencing.

The public is invited to attend the special Sunday evening service.

Community Praise Service set

A Community Praise Service will be held at 6:30 p.m. Sunday at the Community Christian Center Church, 801 E. Campbell.

Pastor Richard Burress said the public has a "welcome invitation" to attend the service.

"It will be an outside service," he said. "Everyone come as you are. Bring your lawn chairs or blankets. It will be a regular service."

In case of bad weather, the service will be held inside the church, Pastor Burress said.

The First Family invites you to join them for worship this Sunday...

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) There's a possibility you may be either overpowered or outmaneuvered in your one-on-one dealings with others today if you let your guard down and get careless. Be watchful. Know where to look for romance and you'll find it. The Astro-Graph Matchmaker instantly reveals which signs are romantically perfect for you. Mail $2 to Matchmaker, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Think twice before attempting to do something today that neither you nor your helper have the expertise to accomplish. It might end up costing you more than if you had hired an expert to do the job.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Don't get yourself involved in any type of financial risk or gamble while socializing today. You might end up feeling victimized and point the finger of blame at your pals.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Someone or something stand in the way of your victory today and hamper your chances for attaining a desirable objective. A fresh start may be required.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Don't be pressured into putting anything on paper or making verbal commitments today with which you do not feel comfortable. There could be valid reasons for your inner concerns.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) This is hardly the time to assume new financial obligations if your old ones have not been cleared up as yet. Try to alleviate your debts instead of getting in deeper.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Handle close friends with utmost tact and diplomacy today. A wrong move or a few thoughtless words could suddenly shatter a harmonious association.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) If you do not promptly attend to your duties and responsibilities as they arise today, it could put a damper on your weekend. You're bound to collect guilt from things you neglect.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Usually you're a rather gregarious person who feels comfortable in a crowd. Today, however, if you're inclined toward solitude, don't force yourself to mingle.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Attention will be focused on you today whether you seek it or not. Be mindful of your behavior, because people will be looking for flaws in your character rather than things to admire.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) You're not likely to be too effective today in trying to impose your views on a resistant listener. This person will be slow to anger, but if you're too persistent, may get the listener really steamed.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) This is not a good day to discuss financial matters with your mate. Each party is likely to feel the other is the one who is putting the household in the red ink.

Institute says audio tapes can enhance brain's performance

By BILL BASKERVILL
Associated Press Writer

NELLYSFORD, Va. (AP) — "Let this relaxation sink inward, let it sink inward, let it flow into your brain," intones the soothing, mellifluous voice as a low-frequency tone resonates in the background.

"Feel it sinking inward easily and calmly until your entire brain feels more and more relaxed, more and more relaxed."

The tapes 'create an auditory environment in which people can relax very profoundly and have extremely focused attention.'

Robert A. Monroe, founder and executive director of The Monroe Institute, is guiding his listener on a 30-minute journey to dreamland via an audiocassette tape called the "Catnapper."

The tape, one of a series of Monroe's "Hemi-Sync" recordings, "recharges and aids recovery from lost sleep or jet lag; relieves anxiety before exams, meetings and speaking ...," according to a brochure.

The institute, tucked away in the Ragged Mountains between Charlottesville and Lynchburg, also sells tapes it says can improve concentration and memory, help break the smoking habit, improve one's tennis or golf game or aid in recovery from major illness or surgery.

There are a number of companies that market audio-guidance systems, said Leslie J. France, director of the institute's professional division, but those "don't use the specific, carefully modulated frequencies that we do."

Behind Monroe's voice, each tape has a different audio tone the institute says manipulates brain waves to produce a desired behavior. The tapes "create an auditory environment in which people can relax very profoundly and have extremely focused attention," said Ms. France.

Professionals ranging from a best-selling mystery writer to an orthopedic surgeon swear by the tapes, but a leading biofeedback and brain-wave authority says a person can achieve the same results without using Hemi-Sync.

"The danger is that it short-changes people," said Dr. Elmer E. Green of the Menninger Foundation in Topeka, Kan. "I have been telling everybody to burn the tapes and start depending on yourselves."

The Menninger Foundation, a psychiatric center that studies human behavior, trains people "to help themselves instead of programming them," Green said. "We want people to know power is centered in themselves, not in a procedure."

Monroe, 73, said his interest in using sound to influence behavior evolved from a long broadcasting career that included a top post at Mutual Broadcasting System and ownership of radio stations and a cable TV operation.

Monroe found that certain audio patterns can lead the brain into various states; he got a patent on the discovery in 1975. That finding led to a system of "binaural beats" in which separate signals are fed into each ear through stereo earphones to produce a synchronization of the left and right hemispheres of the brain, a focused and coherent state that Monroe called "Hemi-Sync."

Brain synchronization happens naturally, but only for random, brief periods, Monroe said.

"Rhythmic tones similar to what he has on the tapes have been shown to produce a synchronizing effect on brain waves," said Dr. Lester Fehmi, head of a behavioral clinic in Princeton, N.J. "You can produce a specific effect."

'I have been telling everybody to burn the tapes and start depending on yourselves.'

Still, a Hemi-Sync user has to be receptive to get the maximum benefit, said F. Holmes Atwater, director of the institute's brain-mapping project. "A Monroe tape will not work unless you want to cooperate with it. There's a lot of psychology involved, but also physiological changes."

Best-selling mystery novelist Phyllis A. Whitney uses the concentration tape to jump-start her imagination. "When I have a question that stumps me, I sit in a chair and turn on the tape. In a startlingly few seconds the scene comes. I use it again and again. It works. I get better ideas more quickly."

Dr. Peter W. Kozicky, an orthopedic surgeon at St. Luke's Hospital in Bethlehem, Pa., uses the emergency series tapes in the operating room during surgery and in the recovery room after-

Once-promising DeBarge singers learn drugs can damage dreams

EDITOR'S NOTE — The Rev. William Abney remembers how the DeBarge youngsters would captivate the audience as they sang in the choir at his Bethel Pentecostal Church. But, he says, they weren't able to cope with their rapid rise to fame as Motown recording artists. Today the once-promising DeBarge singing group has split up, three having been convicted on drug charges.

By LISA PERLMAN
Associated Press Writer

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — Just five years ago, the singing DeBarge family was at the top of the pop music world, promising to be one of Motown's brightest lights of the 1980s.

The four brothers and a sister, with their silky harmonies first perfected while singing in their uncle's church choir, were often compared with the Jackson Five.

Further, there were five more talented siblings who also were either already in the music business or were waiting in the wings.

Since then, three of the siblings have been convicted of drug charges and at least two others have had other brushes with the law.

Only one, El DeBarge, has remained in the musical spotlight.

Etterlene DeBarge Rodriguez, the mother of 10 and grandmother of 15, blames drugs.

"In every life a little rain must fall, and this rain happened to be drugs," she says. "They had a calling, but they deviated because they were young and very talented. There are so many vices out there to destroy you."

Seated next to her recently in the family's stylish Grand Rapids home was son Jonathon, better known as "Chico." Just two years after gaining national attention with his self-titled, pop-funk album on the Motown label, Chico was on his way to prison.

Last June, at the same time he was planning a European concert tour, the 22-year-old singer-songwriter was stopped by federal authorities at Detroit Metropolitan Airport after returning from Los Angeles. They found 2.2 pounds of cocaine in his bag and that of a companion.

Brother Robert, 33, who gained notoriety in the late 1970s and early '80s with the now-defunct soul group Switch, also was convicted in the case.

Robert began serving a five-year, three-month prison term in February. On April 12, Chico began a five-year, eight-month sentence.

In the past few years, Mrs. Rodriguez also has seen son El convicted of creating a disturbance for the beating of a Calvin College student after she reportedly resisted his advances.

She has seen son Tommy spend time in jail for cocaine convictions and son Robert arrested for allegedly telling a stewardess he was carrying a bomb.

Rodriguez believes the arrest of Robert was a "blessing in disguise" because of what she says was a longtime drug habit.

Jonathon 'Chico' DeBarge is facing a prison term for possession of cocaine.

Rodriguez says her home is a gift from son El, as is the new Cadillac in the driveway. In the garage is a new black Jaguar El has just bought for himself.

The Rev. William Abney remembers how the family would captivate the audience as they sang in the choir at his Bethel Pentecostal Church in Grand Rapids.

But, he says, they weren't able to cope with their rapid rise to fame.

"It was like putting an ice-cold piece of glass into burning hot water," Abney says. "It'll crack."

Fame came first to Robert and Tommy in the late 1970s and early '80s with the group Switch, which had a contract with Motown.

The family struck gold again with Motown in the early '80s when siblings El, Bunny, James, Mark and Randy hit the top of the soul charts and then crossed over to pop with a series of hits: "Time Will Reveal," "Rhythm of the Night" and "All This Love."

With fame, however, came varying levels of success and the pressures of being in the spotlight. By 1986, the group had disbanded and El and Bunny wound up solo artists for Motown.

The family is now spread across the country. El commutes between California and Michigan with brother Tommy, who plays bass in his group. Marty, James and Randy are trying to get another recording contract and Bunny also is hoping to record again, Rodriguez says.
