Three PHS athletes admit to steroid use

By SONNY BOHANAN

The athletic director at Pampa High School disclosed Monday afternoon that at least three varsity athletes have admitted to taking anabolic steroids, a potentially dangerous drug designed to increase muscle mass.

Coach Dennis Cavalier said the three football players, who will all be seniors next year, told him they purchased the drugs from a local man they had made connections with at the Pampa Youth and Community Center.

A relative of a PHS athlete heard the athlete discussing steroid use and brought the matter to the athletic director's attention, Cavalier said. Cavalier then spoke privately with various PHS athletes, which led to confessions by three of them.

"Through a series of interviews, it became apparent there had been some steroid use," Cavalier said. "Three youngsters admitted to using them."

"I'm under the impression that the connection was made at the Youth Center. I'm not sure the actual transaction took place on the premises, but the contact was made there."

Cavalier said he met with the students' parents on Monday night and suspended all three athletes for the remainder of the school year and throughout the summer. He would then consider reinstating them for the following school year.

"This being the first offense, I'm hesitant to suspend someone for consecutive school terms," Cavalier said. "I want to create a situation where the parents are knowledgeable about this and the kids are held responsible for their actions."

"The first stage is for them to confront their parents with it, and then we'll give them a chance for rehabilitation. About August 1, I'll sit down with them and their parents and we'll decide where to go from there."

"But we want to make a strong statement to all the athletes in Pampa that this will not be tolerated."

Under current federal laws, anabolic steroids are classified as a dangerous drug. Simple possession carries a maximum $1,000 fine and up to six months in jail, while conviction of selling or delivery mandates 2 to 10 years in prison or a fine not to exceed $5,000.

Presently, anabolic steroids do not fall under the heading of controlled substances. But the Texas Legislature is considering a bill this week that would add anabolic steroids to the list of controlled substances, allowing practitioners to distribute the substances only for a valid medical purpose, not including body building, muscle enhancement or increasing muscle bulk.

"Controlled substances are listed under four classifications," said Ken Hall, Pampa's acting chief of police. "Any drug not under this schedule, but that is a prescribed drug, is considered a dangerous drug. It is unsafe for self-medication."

Cavalier said he knows the identity of the man accused of selling the anabolic steroids, and he will discuss with the parents the possibility of filing criminal charges against him.

The three athletes told Cavalier that they had used anabolic steroids a total of five times between them. Two had taken injections twice, while the other had only taken one dose. Cavalier said he was told the doses cost $10-$15 each.

The athletes in question also told Cavalier that they believe the anabolic steroids were originally purchased in Juarez, Mexico, across the border from El Paso.

Lee Garcia, director of the Pampa Youth and Community Center, said he had no knowledge of the incident until he was contacted Monday afternoon. He expressed surprise that high school students were

Jim Wright begins his defense

By STEVEN KOMAROW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Jim Wright's defense opened before a national television audience today with his lawyer urging the House ethics committee to "stand in the way of the lynch mob" seeking the House speaker's resignation.

"According to the press, Jim Wright's through. He's got to resign his speakership. Maybe even his seat in Congress," said Stephen Susman, attorney for the Texas Democrat.

"Why worry about due process for a dead man?" he asked rhetorically. "Why should this committee stand in the way of a lynch mob or a conviction based upon guilt by association?"

Because "if a member of Congress cannot get a fair trial, ... no American can," he said.

The arguments were made in a trial-like setting, with Susman and his team at a "defense" table and the ethics committee investigators poised behind an identical table across the room. A central lectern allowed the lawyers to speak while standing before the committee, which sat behind a raised, wood-paneled dais.

Wright's wife Betty arrived during Susman's arguments and took a seat in the front row of the audience. One of the speaker's daughters also attended, but Wright himself did not.

Susman was asking the ethics committee today to dismiss key charges against Wright based on different interpretations of the House rules. Supporters hope for a narrow legal victory that the speaker could parlay into political salvation.

Wright's lawyers contend he is being judged by a new, harsher standard that goes far beyond the letter of House rules. In advance of today's hearing, they gave themselves no better than an even chance of winning dismissal of at least some of the 69 counts against him.

But with Wright's political support eroding under the weight of serious ethics charges, even the speaker's supporters emphasize the importance of persuading the ethics committee to drop at least one of the two main charges.

In the month since the panel formally made its charges against the speaker, his support has eroded. Members of his own party have begun holding meetings to discuss his case and its possible harmful effect on their own political situations.

The stakes in today's arguments were heightened by the ethics committee's decision to allow television coverage of the hearing. Rarely does the panel allow such open coverage, but Wright said he welcomed the chance to have his side of the story presented.

The C-SPAN cable network planned full coverage of the proceedings.

Wright himself was not scheduled to testify today, and his spokesman, Mark Johnson, said the speaker probably would not even attend the session.

Susman, a tough, 48-year-old litigator from Houston brought in this month to bolster the legal team, opened the proceeding for Wright.

Arguing the ethics committee's position was Richard J. Phelan, a skilled lawyer from Chicago who has conducted the Wright investigation since last July and who was the author of the tough report that led to the charges.

The ethics committee, made up of six Democrats and six Republicans, was not expected to rule on the motion until later this week.

If the committee were to agree with Wright's arguments, the case against him would be reduced to a few relatively minor violations of reporting requirements.

Wright's case for dismissal of the most serious charges rested on two contentions: That House rules categorically exempt book royalties from limits on outside earned income and That lawmakers can accept benefits from longtime friends, so long as they are not lobbyists or have other clearly defined direct interests in bills before Congress.

Bentley, Cornett lead Wheeler graduates

WHEELER — Mayor Wanda Sue Herd is to be featured speaker at the Wheeler High School graduation ceremonies at 8 p.m. Friday in the high school auditorium.

Leading the 23-member graduating class will be William Chad Bentley as valedictorian and Cory Augustus Cornett as salutatorian.

Bentley is the 18-year-old son of Mack and Sue Bentley of rural Wheeler. He has attended Wheeler schools for 13 years.

In addition to serving as valedictorian, Bentley has been a member of the National Honor Society and has competed in UIL calculator application and ready writing.

For three years, he has been a starter on the Wheeler football team and served as team co-captain. He was named to All-State Defensive Line and All-State Honorable Mention Offline. He has also competed in the track 800-meter, 1600-meter and 1600-meter relays.

Bentley plans to attend Texas A&M University in College Station on an academic scholarship.

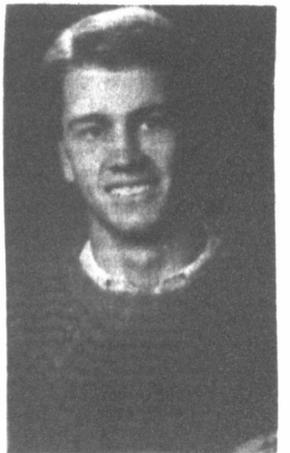

Cornett is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Bob McCain of Wheeler and Lt. Col. and Mrs. Wes Cornett of Woodbridge, Va. He has attended Wheeler schools for the past 11 years.

He has been a member of the National Honor Society since his sophomore year. For two years he has been a member of Student Council. He was named Class President his senior year. He has received awards in Spanish II, typing and physics.

Cornett has played on the Wheeler High School basketball team for four years. He was named to All-District his senior year and also served as captain this year. He played tennis four years, qualifying for regional his sophomore and senior years.

Two injured in accident

Department of Public Safety Trooper Lynn Holland looks over damage resulting from an accident late Monday morning 20 miles south of Pampa on Hwy 70. Two elderly men from Turkey and Quitaque were injured late Monday morning when their 1989 Toyota pickup was struck by a 1985 International truck 20 miles south of Pampa. The International, owned by Phillips Petroleum and driven by Troy Lee Hutchings of Pampa, failed to yield the right of way as it crossed Hwy. 70 and struck the pickup, which was driven by Donnie Edward Brunson, 74, of Quitaque, according to Holland. Brunson and his brother, Roy Brunson, 79, of Turkey, were transported to Coronado Hospital by Rural/Metro ambulance. The younger Brunson was treated and released. However, Roy Brunson is listed in stable condition with a fractured arm and leg. DPS reports indicate Hutchings was cited as being at fault in the accident. The Toyota pickup was totaled in the wreck, while the International received damage to the front suspension area.

Former PCC secretary turns self in to sheriff

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
Staff Writer

Leslie L. Hinds, former Pampa Country Club secretary wanted in the alleged theft of more than $100,000 in Country Club funds, turned herself in to Gray County Sheriff Jim Free on Monday.

Sheriff's deputies had been attempting to serve a warrant for Hinds' arrest since her indictment Thursday on 81 counts of theft by a Gray County grand jury.

"She came in about noon, was arrested and posted bond," Free said today. "She got her picture taken and was fingerprinted. She was with us about an hour."

Hinds arrived at the sheriff's office with a bondsman, Free said.

After being taken into custody and completing the arrest process, Hinds made a $20,000 bond and was released, he said.

"I understood she was in Santa Fe, N.M.," Free said. "She's got an attorney out of there."

Thursday Gray County Sheriff's deputies attempted to serve the arrest warrant at Hinds' home at 1001 N. Somerville. They were told at that time that Hinds had gone to Amarillo and would return home later that day, authorities said.

Hinds, a Pampa Country Club employee since 1982, was named in two separate indictments alleging theft from Frank Healy, former manager of the Pampa Country Club. The indictments state that a total of $107,803.28 was taken over a two-year period from 1987 through 1988.

District Attorney Harold Comer said previously that Healy was named in the indictment as a legality, but that the alleged thefts were reportedly from the Pampa Country Club.

The first indictment contains 49 counts of theft for a total of $86,117.39 through "acquiring and otherwise exercising control over property."

A second indictment contains 32 counts of theft of U.S. currency amounting to $21,685.89.

Judge Grainger McIlhany set bond at $10,000 on each indictment.

The indictments resulted from an investigation by the District Attorney's office concerning reportedly missing funds from the Pampa Country Club. An IRS levy for unpaid Social Security and federal withholding payments earlier this year initiated an investigation by the country club's executive board.

Healy and Hinds have both resigned from their positions with the Pampa Country Club.

Hinds is scheduled to appear for arraignment before Judge McIlhany Friday afternoon, Comer said today. Arraignments are scheduled to begin at 1:30 p.m. Friday. Assistant District Attorney John Mann will be handling the arraignments of those indicted by the grand jury last week in Comer's absence, the district attorney said.

Patient injected with altered cells

By PAUL RECER
 AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Scientists searching for new ways to battle cancer have for the first time injected genetically altered cells into a human.

The lead researcher in the federally approved experiment launched early Monday at National Institutes of Health, Dr. Steven A. Rosenberg, said a milky-colored fluid containing cells that were genetically manipulated using a mouse virus was intravenously administered to a cancer patient.

NIH officials would identify the patient who underwent the 30-minute procedure only as a male suffering from malignant melanoma, the extremely virulent disease also known as black mole cancer.

"Today was the first ever," said Rosenberg. "It is the first time that a new gene has been introduced into a human."

A federal court suit settled last Tuesday cleared the way for the experiment. The Foundation on Economic Trends and its president, Jeremy Rifkin, had sued earlier this year to block the research, claiming the experiments had been approved by the NIH without proper public hearings.

A federal judge dismissed the suit after the NIH, located in suburban Bethesda, Md., agreed that a committee that evaluates human gene research will hold all its deliberations and votes in involved in steroid use.

"I was not aware that any of the high school kids that work out here were taking them," Garcia said. "They didn't get them from the Youth Center. They may have got them at the Youth Center. But I can assure you, they didn't get them from me."

Approximately 100 weight lifters work out regularly at the Youth Center, said Garcia, who serves as the weight instructor. He said he is not aware of anyone that uses anabolic steroids there.

"Most of the people who take steroids try to keep it pretty confidential," he said. "I have never suspected anybody here of taking them. I would definitely ask them to take these activities somewhere else. If this is being done here at the Youth Center, we want to stop it."

Garcia did say that he has seen weight lifters that he suspected of using anabolic steroids, although that was at a gym in another city. For the most part, he maintained, steroids are the domain of competitive body builders who employ intensive, aggressive workouts.

"The body builders who want to gain some quick bulk work out at a much higher intensity than someone who is just trying to get in shape," he said. "I think they (steroids) make them be more aggressive, and I think that's why the pros use them a lot. For the person who is competitive in sports, they definitely give them the edge."

"If you go to any body builders club, it's very common. It's like taking a drink of water. Before I came here, I worked in a place in Amarillo where there was a lot of talk about it, although I never witnessed it. If you are around them enough, you can tell."

Garcia also believes that a large number of the anabolic steroids in circulation find their way to users by illegal means.

"I think most of it has to come from the black market, because they're really restricting physicians," he said. "They're not letting physicians prescribe steroids to athletes."

A poll of each of the pharmacies listed in the Pampa phone book indicates that there is no local outlet for getting such drugs on a prescription basis.

Tony Frogge, owner of the Medicine Shoppe, said he considers anabolic steroids extremely dangerous and would not consider stocking them under any circumstances.

"Over a period of time you can have pretty serious kidney and liver problems," Frogge said. "Longterm, it's pretty dangerous."

A local doctor, who asked not to be identified in a story on anabolic steroids, said continued use of the drugs can be as damaging as using cocaine.

"Basically, it has a liver toxicity and causes a blood-filled cyst that may not be recognized until it's too late," the doctor said. He added that anabolic steroids greatly inflate the amount of harmful cholesterol in the body and can bring on hepatitis within the first few months of use.

Frogge said medical research on steroids also points to a serious threat of strokes and congestive heart failure from use of the drugs.

Another local pharmacist, Denny Roark, said he believes the drug is widely available on the black market.

"A lot of companies have quit making them," Roark said. "We can hardly even get them. You can get them across the border in large loads, though."

Dr. Peter H. Gott, a nationally syndicated newspaper columnist, recently noted that, "despite their proven benefits, these drugs cause unwanted side effects when used in large doses or for extended periods."

Also listed among the harmful side effects are disruption of growth patterns, personality changes, cataracts, diabetes, mental changes or the altering of sexual characteristics.

Most health care professionals agree that not everyone who uses anabolic steroids for a short period of time will suffer physical damage. However, long term use will almost always lead to adverse physiological results, medical experts contend.

Soviet court allows criticism of officials

MOSCOW (AP) — People whose criticism of officials or government agencies amounts to the unpleasant truth cannot be jailed for speaking out, the Supreme Court has ruled in limiting the scope of a widely assailed new decree.

The decree, enacted April 8, bans discrediting officials and government bodies. Reformers and human rights activists have condemned it as being open to abuse.

"Well-founded, argumentative criticism of the action and decisions of these organs and officials by citizens, acting publicly in the framework of socialist law, cannot be viewed as a criminally punishable act," the court said on Monday.

President Mikhail S. Gorbachev is seeking to strengthen the role of law in Soviet society, and Monday's ruling constitutes one of the rare times the court has acted to ensure a controversial law is applied consistently.

The official Tass news agency said that since the leadership of the Supreme Soviet, or parliament, passed the decree citizens have been arrested under differing interpretations of the law.

The Supreme Court told lower courts the decree touches only "intentional public distribution of slanderous inventions" that undermines faith in officials.

It said the decree does not apply to "dispatches in the press and any other form of information reflecting insufficiencies in the activity of these organs, social organizations and officials."

The ruling represents an effort to protect officials from insults and slander, and protect the rights of individuals to express their views, the court said.

Tass did not say how many criminal cases have been filed on the basis of the new law or give any details of cases.

Soviet officials have said the decree is more specific and less subject to abuse than Articles 70 and 190 of the criminal code.

Senate approves workers' comp plan as 'a fair solution'

Sen. Glasgow, left, debates a point on the workers' compensation bill.

By SCOTT ROTHSCILD
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP)—The issue of workers' compensation moved a step, but lawmakers were trying to determine if it was a step forward or backward in avoiding a special legislative session.

House workers' comp leaders said Monday they would have preferred the Senate had endorsed an earlier proposal by Sen. Bob Glasgow, D-Stephenville.

"We're farther behind in the area of compromise and consensus than we were (with Glasgow's bill)," said state Rep. Richard Smith, R-Bryan, who authored the House workers' comp bill.

"I would certainly would have hoped that they would have adopted Mr. Glasgow's version," said House Speaker Gib Lewis.

But the Senate didn't. It approved a bill that supporters called a fair solution, but opponents said lawmakers were trying to "rearrange the chairs on the Titanic."

Sen. Ted Lyon said the measure would decrease employer-paid workers' comp insurance premiums, increase benefits to injured workers and make sure contested claims were fair to both employees and employers.

"No single group is happy, and that probably means it's fair," said Lyon, D-Rockwall.

With one week remaining in the regular session, the Senate bill was approved on a voice vote after previously gaining a 22-9 vote.

But opponents of the bill said it fails to correct problems in the current system and is so radically different from a bill approved by the House that the issue will have to be confronted again in a special legislative session.

In the 22-9 vote, Glasgow opposed the bill and lashed out at his colleagues for wresting control from him in the behind-the-scenes negotiations between special-interest groups.

Glasgow attacked almost all critical points of the bill and warned that a rate rollback provision will chase insurers out of the state.

"What you may have is not one insurance company in Texas writing workers' compensation benefits," Glasgow said.

"What we have done here is rearrange the chairs on the Titanic. What we have done here is simply go back to a system that is in crisis today," said Sen. Bill Ratliff, R-Mount Pleasant.

The bill will now go to the House, where it will likely be rejected, and then to a House-

Senate conference committee.

The major disputes in changing the workers' comp system are over how to calculate benefits for workers injured on the job and how to resolve disputes between the injured worker and employer.

The Senate bill maintains the current system of figuring benefits on lost wage-earning potential and sets up a two-track method of resolving disputes. One track leads to binding arbitration; the other can lead to a jury trial.

Business opposes the jury trial provision and has supported a system of benefits that establishes a specific schedule of payments for injuries.

Opponents of the Senate measure said the jury trial track was too similar to the current system of trial de novo, where previous administrative rulings are not admissible in the court.

But other Senators and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby said the bill does away with the current jury trial provisions.

"There's not trial de novo in it. Under the dispute resolution system, all parties agree that a very high proportion, 85 percent or so, will go through the mediation-arbitration system," Hobby said.

These Pampa High School seniors' parents may have been clowning around in the Senior Girls Spirit Car on Monday, but they're serious about providing a good time at the Senior Class party after graduation June 1. Parents, school officials and community leaders are joining in co-sponsoring the party, featuring a hypnotist and hundreds of dollars worth of prizes, at the Pampa Community Building. Tickets are $7.50 each at the school or at the door.

Senate considers new university for Killeen

AUSTIN (AP)—In what one opposing senator called log rolling, the Senate tentatively voted to create Central Texas University at Killeen, which would replace public and private institutions in that city.

Seven senators blocked final passage Monday, which could occur today.

Also, an amendment was added, 16-13, that would require approval by the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board before the new university could be established in September 1994.

Amendment sponsor Kent Caperton said "when the logs start rolling, and we started them rolling here the other day," it is difficult to stop legislation creating universities. Caperton mentioned passage of a bill to expand the University of Texas at Dallas from a two- to four-year institution.

Sen. Temple Dickson, D-Sweetwater, said the proposed university at Killeen would serve a population of 400,000, including the "largest military base in the free world," Fort Hood.

The new university would replace American Educational Complex, a public junior college, and the American Technological University, a private upper-level school.

Caperton, D-Bryan, said the Legislature in recent years has "been more cautious" about creating universities, preferring to wait on recommendations by the coordinating board. "We just want to know what we're acting on," he said.

Dickson said if he had to make a choice between bureaucrats and the Legislature, "I'll go for the Legislature every time."

The bill was sponsored in the House by Rep. Stan Schlueter, D-Killeen.

The Senate passed, and sent to the governor, a House bill that would create the Texas Rural Economic Development Fund to guarantee loans from private lenders to projects in rural areas, with a primary goal of assisting food- and fiber-processing industries.

Also sent to the governor was a House-approved bill that would increase penalties for hunting at night with aid of a light and using electric devices to stun or kill fish.

Senators accepted House amendments to a bill that would allow a trial court, in rendering a monetary judgment, to set security in an amount less than the judgment, which was a major issue in the multibillion-dollar Texaco-Pennzoil case.

They also approved House amendments to a bill that would penalize unauthorized duplicating, bootlegging or labeling of recordings and live music performances.

The Senate amended and returned to the House bills that would:

- Place certain long-distance telephone services, such as some with contracts with hotels, airports and hospitals, under Public Utility Commission regulation.

Sponsor: 'Revolving door' bill looks dead

AUSTIN (AP)—Legislation that would shut the "revolving door" allowing state employees to quit and then work for businesses they once regulated appears doomed for this session of the Legislature.

Sen. Bob Glasgow, D-Stephenville, the bill's Senate sponsor, said his measure probably is dead this session.

In the House, Rep. Terral Smith, R-Austin, acknowledged he had bottled up in subcommittee the main House bill on the subject.

As chairman of the House Natural Resources Committee, Smith also derailed a revolving door bill aimed at the Texas Water Commission.

"I guess you could say that rumor is true," Smith told the Austin American-Statesman when asked if he was keeping the main revolving door bill locked up in a House subcommittee to kill it.

Pam Fridrich, executive director of Common Cause of Texas, said the legislation is needed to make sure that "people who are employed in the public sector are working to serve the public and not for private gain.

"We're concerned, for instance, that a state employee might give preferential treatment to a possible future employer, somebody they currently regulate," she said.

Rep. Ralph Wallace, D-Houston, authored the main bill in Smith's subcommittee.

Under that bill, during the first year after state employees quit, they would be prohibited from working for any business regulated by their former state agency.

For two years after leaving state jobs, they could not represent their new employer before that agency on matters in which they were involved while working for the state.

However, Glasgow's bill is not as restrictive. It would ban employees below management level from representing a new employer before the agency for a year.

Gator stranded in urban jungle

IRVING (AP)—Authorities are planning today to capture and relocate a 7-foot alligator stranded in a manmade lake at Las Colinas, a high-tech business complex north of Dallas.

A game warden with the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department said authorities are attempting to trap the gator in Lake Carolyne.

The lake feeds a canal through that meanders through the complex that includes centers for such companies as IBM, GTE Southwest, Kimberly-Clarke Corp. and the Boy Scouts of America.

The alligator, which was spotted in the lake Monday, will be transferred to a zoo, game preserve or into the wilds of Texas, said Terri Miller, game warden in TPW's Dallas office.

"We have some people who are experienced with them, but they're generally down in the coastal areas," Ms. Miller said of the alligators.

Authorities watched the alligator for nearly six hours Monday as it floated through the lake located between the Mandalay Hotel and Computer Associates Tower.

Gary Reynolds, supervisor at the Irving Animal Control, said the gator may have traveled down the swollen Trinity River during last week's heavy rains and crawled across a field and into the lake.

"We figured that with all the rain we've had in the Trinity River, it just got out and went over to this place," Miller agreed. "If it wasn't in an area where there were lots of people, we could probably leave him there."

Workers from animal control, TPW, the Irving Fire Department and the Irving Police Department were unable to free the gator from his concrete habitat Monday, Miller said, because the closest large trap was in Houston. It was to be flown to Dallas overnight for the rescue attempt.

"We're going to place it in the water with the bait—probably liver—inside," Miller explained. "From my understanding, when he takes the bait, it will close the door and he will be trapped. He'll be alive, but trapped."

SPS files to distribute credits

Southwestern Public Service Company (SPS) has filed to distribute $13 million in credits to its Texas retail customers, primarily representing these customers' share of proceeds from SPS's sales of electricity to other utilities.

A residential customer who uses 1,000 kilowatt hours a month would receive a credit of $10.21.

These new credits are separate from and in addition to previously announced credits related to recent SPS rate reductions.

As a participant in an experimental market program, SPS has been able to sell electricity to western utilities as far away as California on a competitive basis, said Jerry Diller, SPS's group manager of rates and regulation.

Under the program, 75 percent of the difference between the cost of production and the sales price is to go to customers in the SPS service area, Diller said.

"Previously, these sales required time-consuming approvals of individual transactions and a rigid price formula established by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission," Diller said. "Under the experimental program, utilities are able to buy and sell electricity in what amounts to a daily auction."

The credit also represents proceeds from SPS sales to other utilities made in the traditional regulated manner.

SPS has been successful in the bulk-power market because it is a low-cost producer, Diller said. "Demand has been high because several power plants in the western United States have been out of service for various reasons," Diller said. "Also, hydro-electric power from the Pacific Northwest was limited due to relatively dry conditions." These circumstances will change, Diller said, so it is difficult to predict if SPS sales at past levels will continue.

SPS filed the requested credit union with the Public Utility Commission of Texas (PUCT). If approved, the credit would be recognized in August electric bills.

"We also are requesting that the PUCT establish a procedure whereby we can pass on any future credits from such sales on a periodic basis as they accumulate," Diller said. "Under present PUCT procedures this is not possible."

The proceeds from these bulk-power sales to other utilities are treated as a fuel-cost credit. The $13 million credit requested by SPS includes approximately $2 million in traditional fuel savings resulting from lower costs for coal and natural gas. The credit also includes interest at 11.7 percent.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

The families could use fewer burdens

George Bush doesn't seem to be getting a grip on this "president thing," as he might call it. Recently he said, "I mean to live by what I've said: No new taxes," reiterating his 1988 campaign pledge. But he has already proposed a bailout of the savings and loan industry that will cost taxpayers more than $100 billion. That might be interpreted as more taxes.

And now administration voices are heard suggesting that a gas-tax boost might be imposed, in return for enactment by Congress of Bush's proposal to cut the capital-gains tax from 28 percent to 15 percent. Administration officials are also hinting that Bush's no-new-tax pledge may last only through the first year of his administration, never mind that his 1988 promise was made for a job whose tenure lasts four years.

George Bush's central mistake seems to be a complacent attitude toward the high-taxing Congress, with which he thinks he can "deal." That's the wrong way to do business with this group of budget busters. Listen to Jim Miller, who as director of the Office of Management and Budget in Reagan's second term reduced the deficit by $71 billion between 1986 and 1987. Interviewed in the current Policy Review, Miller says that when Reagan stood firm against tax hikes in 1986, massive deficit reductions were achieved.

But the opposite happened when Reagan caved in to Congress and allowed a tax rise — supposedly to "reduce" the deficit — after the October 1987 stock crash. The deficit, instead of declining again, actually rose by $6 billion from 1987 to 1988. Miller says "that a policy of holding firm against tax increases and against excessive spending results in a substantial reduction of the deficit, whereas agreeing with Congress to a tax increase results in no deficit reduction progress at all — in fact, it produces the reverse."

President Bush should listen to this wisdom and reject any gas-tax increase. That makes both economic and political sense. Trading a gas-tax boost for a capital-gains-tax cut would give Democrats ammunition to use against Bush. They would say he's taxing poor and middle-class motorists to subsidize wealthy stockholders. That is economic nonsense: A capital-gains tax would spark a new investment boom, creating tens of thousands of new jobs for the poor and the middle class. But, in politics, one must be concerned about perceptions as much as substance.

The president would do better just trying to get the capital-gains-tax cut passed on its own merits. He should appeal to the American people, perhaps giving a national address to promote the tax cut. Likewise, a gas tax is a bad idea, even if Bush could somehow out-swindle Congress into swapping it for a capital-gains-tax cut. With gas prices already up 40 percent in recent months, families across our land are finding it harder to make ends meet. They don't need extra government burdens; they need fewer.

It won't be a perfect solution

Stephen Chapman

George Bush says that, as a result of his new crime-fighting package, "We're going to take back the streets." Sure we are. Right after Caesar's Palace opens the world's biggest casino in downtown Tehran.

If Bush were consulting a psychiatrist, right now the doctor would be nervously trying to calm his patient while discreetly buzzing for a few burly attendants.

Delusions like these are the result of detachment from reality. The real root of the crime epidemic is not drugs, as Bush and about 97 percent of the American people believe — it's laws against drugs.

The President's program dramatizes how law enforcement in this country is becoming nothing but drug law enforcement. The sort of law-breaking that endangers people and property is being ignored so that police and prosecutors can try to prevent exotic powders from going up noses.

This development in turn produces more crime, not less. What makes the drug trade so violent is that it's illegal and highly lucrative. What makes drug users prone to crime is that their habits are so expensive.

Cracking down on drugs in the hope of reducing violent crime is like trying to stop your car by pressing the accelerator. Reducing the supply of drugs will raise the profits to be earned by dealers and the prices to be paid by users. That makes dealers more eager to kill people to protect their markets and users more inclined to steal to finance their addiction.

Bush's program reflects the national obsession with drugs without offering the faintest hope of getting rid of them or their suppliers. Some of it obviously was written by Jay Leno. Dealers must be rending their garments in despair that they will no longer be able to equip their assault rifles with clips holding more than 15 bullets.

"We now know what a 'kinder and gentler' America means," quips University of Chicago law professor Albert Alschuler. "It means drug dealers who want to kill you will have to do it with no more than 15 shots."

The rise of assault rifles is due to turf wars among drug dealers. Bank robbers and burglars generally don't pack AK-47s, because their purpose is to get what they want without the tiresome inconvenience of shoot-outs.

But drug dealers, who want to kill some of their rivals and scare the bejesus out of the rest, need all the firepower they can find. Eliminate the drug laws and you eliminate not only the drug dealers, who would be replaced by Rotarian retailers, but also the need for efficient instruments of mass slaughter.

Bush's other remedy for the assault rifle program is to award a bonus of five extra years in prison to anyone convicted of committing a violent crime while carrying one. But to do that, we will have to find more places in our prisons, which already are more crowded than Bill Cosby's endorsement schedule.

So we'll have to spend more money to build prisons — more than the enormous sums we're already spending. Since 1970, annual outlays for prison construction have risen 13-fold. Bush wants to increase spending on federal prison construction by $1 billion so we can put still more people behind bars. He also wants to hire more federal agents and prosecutors to go after the crooks.

All of this would be unnecessary except for the drug war. Increasingly our jails look like conventions of Cocaine Anonymous. Nearly two out of every five federal inmates is in for drug offense; by the turn of the century, it will probably be half. Drug violations are now the biggest single cause of incarceration in the state of New York.

Judges, prosecutors and police don't have much time for anything else. More than half of the felony indictments in Washington, D.C., are now for drug offenses. In Prince George's County, Maryland, a suburb of the nation's capital, the police chief says he now gives anti-drug measures a higher priority than homicide investigations. Killers go free so coke-heads can do time.

Bush does have one idea for reducing the prison population, which is electrocuting more criminals. Unfortunately, this is not much of a deterrent to drug traffickers, who risk being gunned down every day by rivals. As Alschuler notes, a drug dealer on Death Row probably has a longer life expectancy than a drug dealer on the street.

Legalizing drugs wouldn't be a perfect solution. But it would guarantee the end of the guerrilla wars among urban drug dealers, it would assure a dramatic drop in violent crime and property crime, it would unplug our courts and jails, and it would save billions of dollars to federal, state and local governments. The drug war, on the other hand, promises not to solve these problems but to magnify them.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Tuesday, May 23, the 143rd day of 1989. There are 222 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: On May 23, 1934, bank robbers Bonnie Parker and Clyde Barrow were shot to death in a police ambush as they rode inside a stolen Ford Deluxe on a road in Bienville Parish, La.

On this date: In 1430, Joan of Arc was captured by the Burgundians, who sold her to the English.

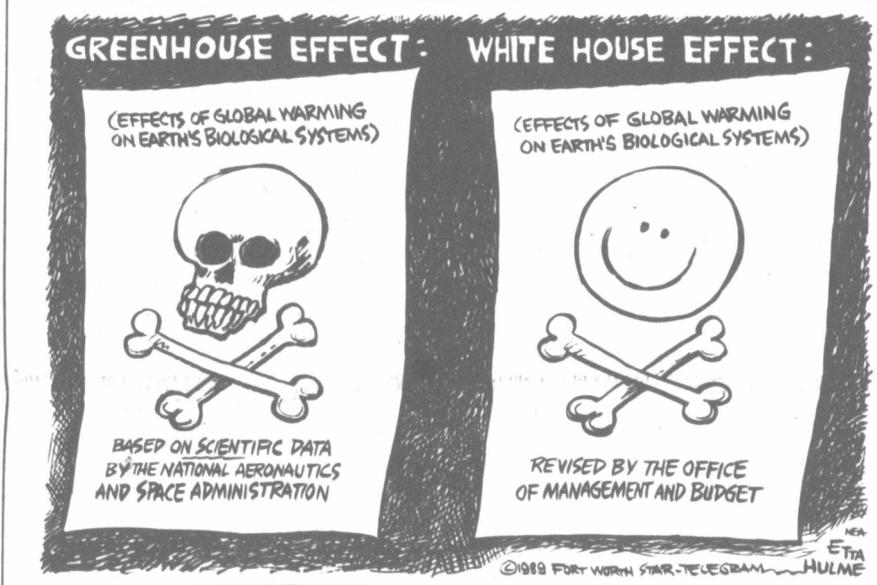

In 1533, the marriage of England's King Henry VIII to Catherine of Aragon was declared null and void.

In 1701, Capt. William Kidd was hanged in London after he was convicted of piracy and murder.

In 1788, South Carolina became the eighth state to ratify the U.S. Constitution.

In 1873, Canada's North West Mounted Police force was established.

In 1915, Italy declared war on Austria-Hungary in World War I.

How to insure a best-seller

Lewis Grizzard

I phoned my mother to give her the bad news. "I'm afraid that when my new book comes out, we can't have the same arrangement as we've had for others," I explained.

"Do you mean you're actually going to give me a book this year, rather than selling me one at 15 percent off?" my mother asked.

Writing a book is hard. You give your mother a book, then your grandmother will want one free, too, and pretty soon, you're giving away books to your entire family.

Fifteen percent off for my mother isn't a bad deal. I only knock off 10 percent for close friends.

"My publisher and I have decided to try something different with the new book," I went on. "Instead of selling books one at a time, we're going to deal only with volume buyers."

"Where did you come up with an idea like that?" my mother asked.

"Haven't you been paying attention to the news?" I asked back. "It's the way politicians are peddling their books, and if it works for them, it might work for us."

"You mean like Jim Wright of Texas?"

"That's exactly what I mean. Jim Wright didn't piddle with selling one book at a time. He moved them a truckload at a time," I answered.

"Now," I continued, "I have you down for 600 books. At $16.95 each that comes to right around $10,000 plus tax."

"But, son," said my mother, "I can't afford to spend $10,000 on books. And where in the world would I put 600 books?"

"How about in my old room?"

"I rented it out to a boarder."

"What you do with the books," I said, "is your business, and tell the boarder I'm putting him down for 100. It's the least he can do if he's sleeping in my old room."

I called my cousin Edward next. He runs a service station.

"Edward, remember how I always swapped you one of my new books for a free tuneup?"

"Yeah," he said, "and I hope your car's running better than your last book read."

I never cared for Edward when we were children. I like him even less now, and the only reason I swapped him a book for a tuneup is that I keep hoping his vast ignorance of literature might be improved. Except for my books, the only thing Edward ever reads are the owner manuals he finds in customers' glove compartments.

"Listen, Edward," I said. "Forget the little book-for-a-tuneup favor I've been doing you all these years. I'm simply not going to be a nice guy about it this year because I have discovered a new and better way to sell books. It worked for the speaker of the House and I don't know why it won't work for me."

"Edward, you have to buy 250 books from me this year."

"Wait a minute," said Edward. "Hey, Harvey, will you turn off that engine for a second. I can't hear a thing."

"Tell me what you just said again," Edward went on. "It sounded like you said you wanted me to buy 25 books this year."

"Two-hundred-and-fifty, Edward," I said.

"That's somewhere in the neighborhood of $4,500. I'm taking a check from Mom for her books, but I want cash from you."

Later I called some other relatives, close friends, my dentist, my doctor, my bartender, the guy who works the meat counter at the grocery store, my barber, my golf pro and a few names I picked out at random from the phone book.

At last count I had nearly 10,000 books accounted for, and I haven't even begun hitting on religious groups, Boy Scout troops, the National Rifle Association, and all those Rotary Clubs I made speeches to for free.

I think I've got a best-seller on my hands. Mom will sure be proud.

She recalls a period of true happiness

By SARAH OVERSTREET

A group of us, all right around 40, were talking about happiness the other day.

I guess if you followed the Big Chill School of Psychoanalysis, you'd say we're all at that midlife stage where we realize half of our lives are gone. So, if we're going to take that solo cruise around the world in a sailboat, we'd better divorce our spouses and quit our jobs — it's now or never. I think we're just a group of people whose talk always ricochets from one subject of interest to another. Happiness, or especially the lack of it, can consume a lot of talking time, no matter what age.

This time, one of us made a challenge: "Can anyone think back to a moment in your life when you were really, truly happy?" Each of us began to recall numerous joyful scenarios, until the challenger went on:

"Now, I don't mean just a little happy, with something hovering there in the background to diminish it. I mean really happy, without reservation."

Well, that was a little harder to pull up. Try as I might, almost every picture I called forth had one of those little "somethings" casting a shadow over it. As I examined the scenes more closely, I realized a lot of those dark little "somethings" had to do with fear: fear of what was going to happen tomorrow; fear of my parents finding out what I was up to; fear of my friends changing their minds and not liking me; fear of losing whatever was making me so happy right at that instant. What a revelation! I used to joke about guilt being my ethnic heritage, and I've long realized that my childhood was haunted by the knowledge that after the Sunday-school picnic came the altar call and threats of eternal damnation. I just didn't know how pervasive the feeling was.

But I'll save that for an hour with my psychoanalyst. I did manage to come up with one totally happy scenario, however, and it surprised me: I was 9 years old, sitting with my friend Shirley underneath the big elm tree in our front yard. We were standing guard at our flower stand — the S and S Flower Shop. Shirley's parents had an artificial flower business, and they let Shirley and me have the broken pieces to make jewelry and trinkets with. We tried to sell them to our neighbors; I can't remember if anyone but my mother ever bought anything from us, but I don't think we cared much.

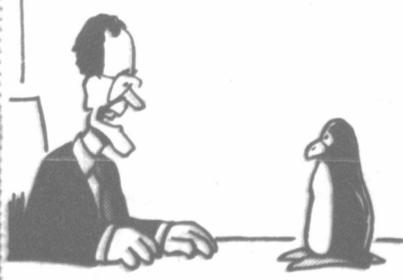

There, in the comforting shade of that good tree, Shirley and I talked and talked. I don't remember much of what we talked about, but what I do recall is the feeling of being totally accepted by someone who just seemed to truly like me. I don't mean we never disagreed; it was just that the argument was always over issues, never over who was smarter or right-er or "cooler."

I have never realized this until now, but with all my other friendships back then, there was always a price. To keep Doreen's favor, I had to accept constant criticism; Judy would only play with me when her "better" friend wasn't around; Linda was two years older and made me do everything she wanted, or else I had to go home. These other friends all seemed very important in big-time 1960; of all of them, I would have probably counted Shirley the least.

How odd. As I look back almost 28 years later, I can only guess that since her acceptance came so easily, it must have seemed less valuable. Funny what the years will do. I'd trade all of big-time 1960, and a lot of the big times that have come after it, for a few afternoons under that old elm with Shirley.

Kennedy praises leadership in Mexico

By ANITA SNOW
Associated Press Writer

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Sen. Edward Kennedy praised Mexico's political leadership, saying he believed the country's leaders would help the country survive its current political and economic troubles.

After meeting with President Carlos Salinas de Gortari on Monday afternoon, Kennedy told a news conference at the Los Pinos presidential residence that "the Mexican people should be sure of the quality of leadership that exists in the country."

"I have been impressed with the leadership of President Salinas, of Mr. (Cuauhtemoc) Cardenas and the leaders of PAN," he said.

Kennedy met with Manuel J. Clouthier and other leaders of the conservative National Action Party known as PAN on Sunday and shared breakfast with Cardenas, of the newly formed left to center Democratic Revolutionary Party on Monday.

Both Clouthier and Cardenas were unsuccessful candidates against Salinas, of the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI, in the July presidential election last year.

Kennedy said that with all three, he discussed the issues of Mexico's foreign debt, drugs, immigration, the environment and human rights.

"Mexico is very fortunate to have a wide range of leaders who have a respect for democracy during this critical time in Mexico's future," Kennedy said.

He also praised Salinas in his fight to resolve Mexico's debt crisis, saying "no other debtor country has adopted an austerity program, the self-discipline that Mexico has."

Kennedy, who left Mexico City for the northern cities of Monterrey and Ciudad Juarez late Monday, said he had learned much since arrived in Mexico early Saturday. He was scheduled to travel to return to the United States via El Paso, Texas on Tuesday.

Although he had spent most of his time in Mexico City, on Sunday he made a quick tour of the southern state of Oaxaca, where he visited an Indian market and met with peasant leaders.

"We will leave with many impressions and a deeper understanding of Mexico and its people," Kennedy told the news conference. "But most of all, we leave with a feeling of good will."

He also said the United States should work to find more ways to cooperate with its southern neighbor.

Earlier on Monday, Kennedy called on the Bush administration to provide "bolder leadership" to help developing nations reduce their foreign debts, which he called "too important to be left to economists and bankers."

The Democrat from Massachusetts urged the administration to advance a debt-reduction plan outlined by Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady in March. But he described Brady's suggestion that the Third World's debt principal be reduced by 20 percent overall as "too little too late."

"The international debt is too important to be left to economists and bankers. It is a public problem and public leaders must resolve it," the senator told a breakfast meeting of the American Chamber of Commerce of Mexico.

Kennedy suggested that Mexico's debt servicing be cut by at least 40 percent over the next six years.

Mexico's servicing of its $107.4 billion foreign debt is expected to total $16 billion in interest and principal this year. The government of President Carlos Salinas de Gortari presently is negotiating with its creditors to restructure those payments.

"The commercial banks holding Mexico's debt must either cut interest rates sharply or reduce the principal on their loans," Kennedy said, adding that "a nation should be expected to pay no more than it is able to pay and still sustain growth."

Echoing frequent Mexican statements on the debt, Kennedy declared: "All of the parties — private bankers and multilateral institutions, creditor nations and debtor nations — have contributed to the crisis. All must share responsibility for finding a solution."

The senator urged the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank and other international lending institutions to be "more flexible in their approach and recognize the different needs of different nations" struggling to cope with the debt burden.

Follini communicates via her computer from inside her cave Monday at Carlsbad, N.M.

Woman to leave cave after 130 days alone

By HOLDEN LEWIS
Associated Press Writer

CARLSBAD, N.M. (AP) — After four months and 10 days in a sealed cave with no human contact, Stefania Follini now must face researchers who will poke needles in her arm and electrodes in her head to see how it affected her.

The 27-year-old Italian interior decorator volunteered for the isolation experiment that began Jan. 13 in an effort to learn how people may be affected by the long solitude of interplanetary travel.

In the absence of night, day or timepieces in 30-foot-deep Lost Cave, Miss Follini's menstrual cycle stopped and her sleep-wake cycle changed radically. She tended to stay up 20 to 25 hours and sleep about 10.

She believed two months had passed, not four.

Those were the most obvious effects of her isolation from the sun and other people, but not the only effects.

Researchers believe her muscle tone and the level of calcium in her bones decreased, that her immune system is depressed and that she is able to concentrate more deeply.

Scientists will find out for sure in the days following her departure from the cave this afternoon.

Coming out will be a shock. The temperature in Carlsbad was expected to reach 100 degrees, as it did Monday — a big difference from the cave's constant climate of 74 degrees and 99-percent humidity.

When experiment coordinator Maurizio Montalbini notified Follini via computer Monday that the experiment was almost over, she reacted at first with disbelief, then with delight.

"Are you really serious?" she replied through the computer linking her to researchers in a house trailer above the cave.

Montalbini assured her he was, then wrote: "We will not ask you for any more data." It was a reference to the physical and mental tests she was asked to perform periodically.

Follini laughed and clapped at the news as 40 reporters watched her over two TV monitors inside the cramped trailer house.

Then, for the first time in 129 days, Follini heard a human voice other than her own. It was from the man upstairs.

"Stefania, I am your God, talking to you," Montalbini said over an intercom.

She looked at a video camera trained on her, laughed, and said: "I didn't think you would find me down here."

Follini spoke briefly with the other Italian researchers, then remarked that when she heard Montalbini's voice for the first time, "the feeling she had was like when the alarm clock goes off on Monday morning," interpreter Rita Fraschini said.

The jubilation probably will end quickly, however, because the prodding and poking isn't over by a long shot. On Memorial Day, she has a date with University of Texas Medical School researchers in Houston.

"We're taking her back to Gulf Pines Psychiatric Hospital for EEG (electro-encephalogram brain scans) and performance tests," said Dr. Jon DeFrance, an assistant professor at the medical school. "We're going to study her extensively."

DeFrance's team will attach electrodes to Follini's head while she performs computerized tests of mental acuity and concentration. They did similar tests while Follini was in the cave, but with the tests in Houston, researchers will be able to watch how specific parts of her brain function while she's solving problems. Researchers will perform the same tests again in six months.

Other scientists will draw blood and inspect her in other ways to monitor her immune system, bones, muscles and coordination.

Montalbini said Monday he thinks Follini might surprise researchers when they discover what kind of shape she's in. He said she kept her strength and flexibility by doing calisthenics and judo and maintained her mental poise by keeping busy by reading and decorating her 10-foot-square plastic-enclosed living area.

She also entered the cave mentally prepared for the solitude — something Montalbini considers important.

"I hope with this research to find a way to prepare people going in space or submarines," Montalbini said.

Woman brings unusual discrimination suit

By CURT ANDERSON
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — Friction between light- and dark-skinned blacks underlies an unusual federal lawsuit in which a black woman says she lost her job because of her light complexion.

Tracy Lynn Morrow said she sued to get her Internal Revenue Service job back and to fight prejudice within her race.

"If there is this problem within our black society, then I think we have to correct it," Morrow said Monday. "That would make us stronger, too. I feel it would help us as a race."

Earlier this month, a federal judge denied a motion to dismiss the case, ruling Morrow could claim job discrimination if she could prove her supervisor, also black, harassed and ultimately fired her over skin tone.

Morrow, who turns 27 on Wednesday, was fired as a clerk-typist in March 1986. Last July, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission allowed her to sue.

Morrow contends her supervisor, Ruby Lewis, harassed her soon after Lewis was promoted in 1985.

"She tortured me mentally,"

Morrow said. "I heard it said that the only reason I got the job was because I had light skin."

Lewis replied in court documents that Morrow was fired because of incompetence and job attitude, not skin color. The Associated Press was unable to locate Lewis on Monday for further comment.

"Since hues of skin have never been a consideration with me, and I never even thought about it until Tracy presented it as an issue in this case, it's impossible for me to have discriminated against her on that basis," Lewis said in court documents.

No trial date has been set in the lawsuit against Lewis, the IRS and the U.S. Treasury secretary.

It apparently is the first case of its kind in the United States, said Norman Harris, director of the Department of African-American Studies at the University of Georgia. But discrimination within black society based on skin shade is not new.

"There are black folks who would want to look as much like Europeans as possible," Harris said, because lighter skin in the past has brought social advantages in white-dominated society.

That attitude has sparked resentment. Black historian and sociologist W.E.B. DuBois wrote about the "double consciousness" of the lighter-skinned black person. Other black authors have written about the "tragic mulatto," Harris said.

"This was a person who was not fully African or American, who was confused about identity," Harris said. "It's usually somebody who doesn't recognize the heritage of the black community."

Lighter-skinned blacks often received preferential treatment from slaveowners, and a greater percentage of free blacks before the Civil War were fair-complexioned, said John M. Mathews, a Georgia State University history professor specializing in black studies.

The division continued after emancipation, Mathews said, with lighter blacks finding it easier to get jobs and gain entry into other levels of society.

"They had a bit more cachet," Mathews said. "It was a distinction that black people often made among themselves."

In the 1987 movie School Daze, filmmaker Spike Lee satirically portrayed a campus rivalry between lighter-skinned blacks who try to enter white-dominated society by taking on white traits, and darker blacks who view them with disdain.

Morrow's case has stirred debate among Atlanta's blacks about whether variations in skin tone still trigger any racial prejudice and resentment.

Radio station WVEE-FM held a "call-in show Monday on the case. Producer Nate Quick said calls ran about 2-to-1 against Morrow, with most callers saying racial prejudice between blacks is not widespread.

Khomeini undergoes surgery

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iranian leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini underwent surgery today to stop internal bleeding in his digestive system, Tehran radio reported.

The radio, monitored in Nicosia, broadcast a statement from Khomeini's office saying that the 88-year-old patriarch was in satisfactory condition following the operation and that progress reports about his health would follow.

There have been persisting reports that Khomeini has been in poor health in recent years, and that he underwent heart surgery.

Chinese students decide to press on until government falls

By JOHN POMFRET
Associated Press Writer

BEIJING (AP) — The famed portrait of Mao Tse-tung in Tiananmen Square was vandalized today as hundreds of thousands of people marched near the gigantic painting, calling for Premier Li Peng to step down.

Despite exhaustion and some thinning of their ranks, student protesters decided today to press on with their 10-day occupation of the square until the government falls.

The vandalism of Mao's gigantic portrait with red, black and blue paint by two young men was akin to blasphemy and an isolated incident in a remarkably peaceful popular rebellion that has galvanized much of the country.

A Chinese journalist who witnessed the attack said the two men, wearing the white headbands of student protesters, were seized by students. Their status was not immediately known.

Mao was Communist China's founder and ruled the country for 27 years until his death in 1976. His uniform and the blue sky background were splattered and black and red dots marred his chin and smeared between his eyes.

Later, workers covered the painting with a tarp.

The pro-democracy student protest, which began last month with marches and class boycotts demanding press freedom and an end to official corruption, has won such widespread popular support that it has tamed martial law, which Premier Li Peng declared in Beijing on Saturday.

Today's march in the square by students, intellectuals and supporters was at least the third such huge outpouring of support for the students in a week. The marchers were calling for the resignation of Li, senior leader Deng Xiaoping and President Yang Shangkun.

Intellectuals from the Chinese Academy of Sciences led the protest. They accused Li of staging a military coup in his struggle against Communist Party chief Zhao Ziyang. Li apparently acted on orders of the 84-year-old Deng.

"People unite and break the militaristic coup," read one poster. "Bury the cult of the individual. End old people's politics," read another.

A bus designed by the Central Academy of Fine Arts broadcast for a free press. A painting on the bus showed red lips crisscrossed by two rifles. "We will not be silenced," read one slogan.

The rest of the capital was calm after a tense weekend in which hundreds of thousands of people spontaneously set up roadblocks to protect the students from troops.

Many military and Communist Party leaders have opposed using troops to crack down on the demonstrators.

Student leaders met today and decided, despite the exodus of thousands of demonstrators who are returning to their schools, to continue their occupation of the square that is China's symbolic center of power.

It was not known how the vandalism of the Mao painting, which has become one of Communist China's most important symbols, would affect the protest. Portraits of Mao have appeared among the protesters in a sign of nostalgia for a simpler, more selfless time.

Tanker skipper indicted on felony charges

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — A grand jury has added three felony counts to the criminal charges facing the former skipper of the Exxon Valdez.

Meanwhile, a worker was killed Monday aboard a ship housing workers involved in the cleanup of the massive oil spill caused by the wreck of the tanker.

In Anchorage, Joseph Hazelwood was charged with three counts of second-degree criminal mischief, District Attorney Dwayne McConnell said.

The indictment accuses him of reckless actions before the 987-foot tanker ran aground on Bligh Reef. If convicted of all three, Hazelwood could be sentenced to up to 15 years in prison and fined $150,000, McConnell said.

Hazelwood, 42, of Huntington, N.Y., was charged in Valdez in late March with three misdemeanors: operating a boat while intoxicated, reckless endangerment and negligent pollution.

McConnell said the state will ask to have all the charges consolidated into a single trial.

Hazelwood is free on $50,000 bail on the misdemeanor charges pending a June 20 trial. No date has been set for his arraignment on the felony charges in Superior Court.

Hazelwood's blood alcohol content was illegally high nearly 11 hours after the accident, the Coast Guard said. He had turned over control of the tanker to the third mate, who was not certified to pilot the ship in Prince William Sound.

On Monday, a food worker aboard one of the vessels housing cleanup workers in Prince William Sound was crushed by a freight elevator aboard the Coastal Star, a headquarters ship anchored about 55 miles southwest of Valdez, Coast Guard Chief Mark Kennedy said.

The victim's identity was being withheld until relatives could be notified.

Meanwhile, Exxon and the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service announced a special rehabilitation center will be opened in Anchorage for bald eagles and other flesh-eating birds as the toll of wildlife continues to mount.

Drug tax, steroids among proposed bills

By REP. WARREN CHISUM
84th District

The Texas Legislature has had a busy week, working on over 100 pieces of legislation. Several bills should be of interest to the people of the 84th district.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE SUNSET

This bill, which continues the Texas Department of Agriculture, passed, but was amended to limit the power of the agriculture commissioner on the control of pesticides. The control of pesticides was placed under a six-member board from various colleges, including Texas Tech, University of Texas, Texas A&M; the Public Health Commission and the Chemical Council.

What should have been routine legislation became controversial because of the commissioner's recent involvement with the European beef boycott. According to opponents of the bill, the agriculture department has become too political, and the commissioner should no longer be elected.

Supporters of the bill say that elected officials are subject to closer scrutiny than appointed officials, and that the bill was needed to continue the state agency which is devoted to the promotion and regulation of one of the foundations of the state economy — agriculture.

TAX ON ILLEGAL DRUG SALES

This bill would impose a tax on controlled substances, counterfeit substances, simulated controlled substances and marijuana.

I voted for the bill, since it is one more tool to help the law deal with drug dealers. The threat of a tax levy large enough to wipe out any illegal profits should add to the deterrent value of a prison sentence and criminal fine for drug dealing.

STERIODS AS A CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE

This bill would add anabolic steroids and human growth hormones to the list of controlled substances, allowing practitioners to distribute the substances only for a valid medical purpose, not including body building, muscle enhancement or increasing muscle bulk.

Unlawful possession would be a Class B misdemeanor for less than 200 grams. Possession of 200 to 400 grams would constitute an aggravated felony (maximum penalty life in prison and a $50,000 fine.)

Supporters of this bill assert that steroid abuse has reached epidemic proportions. Unprescribed use of these drugs is sometimes fatal and often has devastating side effects, including cancer, coma, fetal damage, kidney disease, sterility or violent mood swings.

Opponents say that the penalties are too harsh, and that comprehensive programs should be implemented to make young people aware of the dangers of steroid and hormone use.

COUNTY OFFICIALS ON CERTAIN BOARDS

This bill, which would have an effect on Memphis, allows county commissioners to serve on the governing boards of certain associations and corporations.

Supporters say that a recent attorney general's opinion has cast doubt on the propriety of a county judge's service on the governing board of a corporation that does business with the county. This bill would clarify the judges' and commissioners' right to serve.

Opponents say that the bill would open the door for county judges and commissioners to serve as directors of any kind of entity, including for-profit corporations. Such participation goes against public policy, according to the detractors.

CITY TRAFFIC FINE RETENTION LIMITS

This bill would allow cities under 5,000 to retain all traffic fines in a fiscal year until the total exceeded 30 percent of city revenue from all sources. After that cap was reached, cities would be required to send all but $1 of each fine to the state treasurer for deposit as general revenue.

Since this bill would have an adverse effect on Estelline, I voted and spoke against the bill.

CAPITAL FELONY LIFE WITHOUT PAROLE

This bill would make persons sentenced to life in prison for a capital offense ineligible for parole. I voted for the bill because I think there are some people who should never leave prison. However, the bill was defeated because many people thought it was too tough on criminals.

CUTTING TAXES FOR VEHICULAR LIQUIFIED GAS PERMIT FEES

A person who uses liquified gas to run a motor vehicle on public highways is required to pay an annual tax, in advance on each motor vehicle owned, operated and licensed by the state. This bill would reduce the tax for every class of vehicle and mileage category.

THE BILL PASSED WITHOUT AMENDMENTS.

UNDERGROUND STORAGE TANK INSTALLERS

This bill would give the Texas Water Commission authority to license persons who install, repair or remove underground fuel storage tanks.

Supporters of this bill say it is needed because about one-third of the underground fuel storage tanks in Texas leak or soon will. The tanks represent a serious environmental hazard. In the long run, proper installation will prevent leaks, thus avoiding costly clean-up operations which would cost the state money.

Opponents say that the program would require installers, who are often small businessmen, to pay large costs, which might discourage many from acquiring the necessary education to learn proper installing techniques.

TEACHER CAREER LADDER REVISIONS

The teacher career ladder which was a part of HB72 in 1984 established four levels of salary supplement for teachers who were assigned to the ladder. This bill proposes massive revision of that law by changing the appraisal criteria and the career ladder level criteria, requiring a comprehensive master teacher examination and changing other provisions.

Supporters say that the new bill would strengthen the career ladder system, but opponents of the bill say that the problems with the career ladder has been with the implementation of the bill, not the original legislation itself.

If you have questions or comments about these bills or any other legislation, please call me at my toll-free number, 1-800-692-1389.

Computer shows how your wrinkles could look in 20 years :

DALLAS (AP) — How would you like to see how you'll look in 20 years?

Are you sure? Wrinkles and all?

Johnson & Johnson, which wants people to use its sunscreen products, has come up with a high-tech crystal ball: a computer similar to the one used by the FBI to age photographs of abducted children who have been missing a long time.

For Maria Kilday, 39, a high-tech photo image of what she'll look like in 20 years if she continues the same exposure to the sun was a shocker. But the health effects weren't uppermost in her mind.

"Oh, I better get a man fast," she said as she studied the wrinkled face she may have when she is 59.

Kilday's mother, Maxine Jones, 63, was somewhat reluc-shopping center recently.

Kilday, like others who dared to peek into the future, was first given a questionnaire to fill out. Among the questions were how much exposure she had to the sun, her tanning frequency and whether she uses a sunscreen.

The computer then took a picture of her face, her information was entered into the computer, and within a minute, a wrinklier image of her 20 years down the line appeared on the screen.

The computer also provided a less-aged image of what she would look like in 2009 if she takes care of her skin.

"We've had some quite traumatic changes," said Dr. Alan Menter, a dermatologist and director of the Baylor Psoriasis Center. "The young people are the ones who are most astounded, and they are the ones ... we need to get the message across to."

"This is a nice attempt to educate the public," Menter said. "It really gives them a vivid example of what they are going to look like in 20 years if they don't get out of the sun more often."

Monte Freeman, 20, wasn't intimidated by the 40-year-old wrinkled image staring him in the face.

"Those were the wrinkles of an 80-year-old," he said. "My dad is in his 50s and he doesn't have that many wrinkles."

Freeman was not one of the day's converts to Menter's advice to use a sunscreen daily. "I like to get as much sun as possible," Freeman said.

Robert Boyd, 20, on the other hand, may have been convinced.

"Oh, man, that's rough," he said after seeing his image. "I rarely use sunscreen, but ... after that, I'm seriously going to think about it."

Menter said he doesn't suggest that everyone stay indoors. But wrinkling can be reduced, he said, if people use a sunscreen while being exposed to incidental daily sun contact, such as when driving to work.

Mary Marino, right, reacts to seeing a computer image of herself 20 years from now.

tant to have her image aged, but was philosophical after giving in.

"Well, I will be 83, you know," Jones told The Dallas Morning News.

Island residents await pests, but it's not tourists

By KEVIN GALVIN
Associated Press Writer

TISBURY, Mass. (AP) — It's springtime on Martha's Vineyard and the locals are girding for what's become an annual influx of arrogant, offensive pests who walk the streets at night and hang out at restaurants.

It's not tourists. It's skunks. Hordes of the "black cats with white tails" have inhabited the island, taking up residence under houses, rummaging through restaurant garbage, intimidating vacationers, terrorizing pets and, frankly, stinking up the place.

"They're really bold and brassy. You can see them on the main streets, you can see them walking around anywhere," said Diane Goodale, animal control officer for the Vineyard Haven section of town. "If you're fishing at night, they'll just come right up to you."

Dead fish along the shore, ground nesting birds and plenty of woods make the island an ideal habitat for skunks. And state wildlife officials and animal control officers in the island's six towns say their telephones don't stop ringing in the springtime when baby skunks are born and the warm weather makes the beasts more active.

Fin Miller was the man many residents hired from 1982 until his retirement in 1987 to rid their property of the raccoons, skunks and feral cats that were giving them headaches.

During that five-year period, he said, he trapped nearly 500 skunks. Another trapper was said to have caught about 300 a year during the period.

"I found they're partial to Devil Dogs and Twinkies. People used to call it junk food but I used to call it skunk food," Miller said.

Many islanders swear that, at least since Colonial times, no skunks were on the island before the late 1950s. How they returned to Martha's Vineyard is a touchy matter involving old allegations that have flourished into local lore.

Legend has it that the skunk population was revived when Vineyard Haven native Craig Kingsbury brought two unscented skunks — one male and one female — and set them free to roam with the oxen, cattle and goats on his farm some 30 years ago.

Kingsbury, 77, swears it's not true.

He blames vacationers for bringing baby skunks and raccoons over as pets and abandoning them on the island when the cuddly critters got big and nasty. The old farmer said he was accused by his neighbors because a family of abandoned skunks took up residence on his property.

"The skunks moved in on my farm and I didn't bother them, kill them or have a fit over them. I just left them alone," he said, and laughed at the typical city vacationer's fear of wildlife. "Anything bigger than a field mouse puts them in a trauma."

The 100-square-mile island has few predators to control the skunk population.

"They only have one natural enemy, and that has four wheels," said Peter Kazlauskas, operations manager of the island's trash disposal agency.

Survey shows two of 1,000 college students have AIDS

By DEBORAH MESCE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The American College Health Association said Monday a study of 19 U.S. campuses found that two out of every 1,000 students tested was infected with the AIDS virus, a rate below the national average but a figure one official said "should cause real concern."

Officials said the study points up the need for more aggressive efforts to prevent the spread of the deadly virus on college campuses.

The study — the nation's first survey attempting to determine the prevalence of AIDS among college students — tested the blood of 16,861 students who sought medical attention in their campus health centers. The University of Texas at Austin was among those included in the test.

Of those, 30 tested positive for the human immunodeficiency virus, or HIV, which amounts to an overall infection rate of 0.2 percent, said the association, which conducted the study with the federal Centers for Disease Control.

No student tested positive at 10 of the schools, while five of the schools had rates of 0.4 percent or higher.

Richard Keeling, director of student health services at the University of Virginia and president of the college health association, said the survey results "establish beyond any doubt that HIV infection is a current problem on college campuses."

He said "the fact that HIV infection appears on campuses across the country should cause real concern."

By comparison, studies have indicated that the infection rate among prisoners is four out of 1,000, or 0.4 percent. Nationwide, researchers believe 1 million to 1.5 million people are infected, a rate of 0.4 percent to 0.6 percent.

Keeling said the overall 0.2 percent rate is "somewhat higher than we hypothesized at the outset," but he added that "these numbers are meant to be indicators, rather than statements of specific levels of infection."

AIDS, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome, is a contagious, fatal disease that attacks the body's immune system, rendering it incapable of resisting other diseases and infections. The virus most often is spread through close contact with blood, blood products or semen from infected persons.

Its chief victims have been homosexual men and intravenous drug users, although a small percentage of cases are attributed to transfusions of contaminated blood, heterosexual contact and spread from infected pregnant women to their offspring.

The 19 campuses, comprising 18 public and private institutions, were selected to represent a cross section of higher education in the United States, the association said.

However, the association picked only large universities because they tend to attract students from their geographic areas. Also, the survey was restricted to students who had routine blood tests done at their student health centers.

The testing was done anonymously, and results were not broken out for the individual schools.

The association said it will continue the study during the next academic year and wants include several more schools, including historically black institutions and some with predominantly Hispanic students.

Other schools included in the survey were:

Central Missouri State University-Warrensburg; Emory University, Atlanta; Mississippi State University-Starkville; Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill.; Rutgers University, New Brunswick, N.J.; San Diego

State University; Southern Illinois University-Carbondale; University of California-Berkeley.

University of Colorado-Boulder; University of Connecticut-Storrs; University of Georgia-Athens; University of Kansas-Lawrence; University of Maryland-Baltimore County and College Park.

White House concerned over rising dollar

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House Monday voiced concern over the recent rise in the dollar's value abroad, saying that if not reversed it could "undermine international efforts to reduce global trade imbalances."

The statement appeared to a call for greater international action to halt the dollar's rise, possibly including heavier intervention by the Federal Reserve and other central banks to stabilize the currency.

A statement read by deputy White House Press Secretary Roman Popadiuk said the climbing dollar "is a matter of concern" that "has also prompted questioning of the administration's commitment to the process of economic policy coordination" among the Group of Seven major industrial democracies.

It was a reference to United States, Britain, Japan, France, West Germany, Italy and Canada, who have jointly vowed to take concerted efforts to stabilize currencies through a variety of steps, including direct intervention in exchange markets by central banks and adjustments in interest rates.

"The administration remains fully committed to this process. If the dollar's recent rise against other major currencies is sustained for a prolonged period or extended, it could undermine international efforts to reduce global trade imbalances," the White House statement said.

"Accordingly, we will continue our efforts to strengthen underlying policies that promote the adjustment of external imbalances as well as cooperating in exchange markets as agreed" by the seven nations, the statement said.

Although the statement appeared to represent an administration call for the Federal Reserve and other central banks to do more to stabilize the dollar, Popadiuk refused to elaborate on it, claiming its spoke for itself.

"The president and the secretary of the treasury remain the administration's sole spokesmen on the dollar and exchange rate policy," he said.

The dollar's surge against other major currencies has threatened to undo recent improvements in the U.S. trade deficit. A stronger dollar makes imported goods less expensive in U.S. markets, aggravating the deficit.

Recent intervention by central banks — buying and selling of dollars directly — has failed to stem the rise of the currency.

Even an increase in a key interest rate last month by the West Germany's central bank — a move that would usually help weaken the dollar — failed to have much impact on the dollar's rise.

Basic maternity wardrobe can cost $1,500

NEW YORK (AP) — So you're going to be a mother. You begin thinking about decorating the nursery, hiring a baby nurse, assembling a layette, and the high cost of college takes on meaning.

But there are more immediate costs — obstetrical care, which averages $2,600 nationally, and maternity clothes. Yes, your new profile merits a new wardrobe, and even if you do the smart thing and borrow a few garments from friends, it's no small expense.

Judy Loeb, design director for Jeanette Maternities in New York, estimates a minimum $1,600 shopping spree for a working woman's spring-summer wardrobe. That's assuming your feet don't swell, requiring new shoes.

But it's cheaper than if you were buying regular clothes of comparable quality — 10 to 20 percent cheaper, according to Loeb.

"We're using the same fabric and cutting larger, but there's price resistance because they won't be wearing the clothes as long," Loeb says. "It's a problem for us because we're trying to deliver a quality product."

Loeb says that even though prospective mothers balk at spending on maternity clothes, they should buy what they look good in and feel good in because for six months those few pieces are going to be worn at least once a week.

"You wouldn't ask that of your regular wardrobe, would you?" she queries.

At any rate, Loeb says the most popular fashions for spring and summer are pants, particularly cotton, in both knit and bicycle styles. Two piece dresses and slip dresses also are in demand.

Colors? "Peacock, papaya and tomato with a lot of white," says Loeb.

The most needed items during the first three months of pregnancy are pants and skirts because of waist expansion, she says. The Waiting in style and comfort — for work, a fuchsia rayon and silk jacket ($153) over coordinating print two-piece rayon dress ($138). For play, a navy and cream stripe romper in cotton knit ($68). Dress and jacket in sizes 4-14. Romper in SML. (From Mothers Work).

bulk of the wardrobe will be purchased during the second trimester, while purchases during the final three months will be items to boost the morale, plus nursing garments.

A basic maternity wardrobe, according to Loeb:

First trimester: One pair each of jeans, knit pants, tailored pants. Two basic skirts, one black or navy, one white or tan. One versatile dress.

Second trimester: Lingerie including six pair maternity panties, three pair maternity stockings, maternity slip, three prenatal bras. Three blouses. One blazer or suit. One career dress. One day-to-evening dress. Two fashionable casual outfits such as a sweater knit set, jumpsuit or slacks set. A second pair of knit pants. Bathing suit.

Third trimester: Lingerie including three nursing bras, two nursing gowns, three pairs support stockings, and any morale boosters.

Of course, Loeb has a vested interest in maternity fashions, but she warns mothers-to-be not to buy larger sizes of regular clothing.

"The clothes are not cut to compensate for an expanding stomach," she says, "and will hike up in the front as pregnancy progresses."

Small diamond becomes big problem

DEAR ABBY: My problem is too embarrassing to discuss with friends or family, so here goes:

I am a single, 40-year-old professional woman who enjoyed being single until last year when I met "Barry." He is my age — also a professional person — and we hit it off the minute we met. We love each other very much and plan to marry soon.

Well, Barry gave me an engagement ring last week, but I'm not wearing it for two reasons. First, it has a 14-karat gold mounting, and I must be allergic to the metal because I started to break out on my finger after wearing it for only a few hours. Also — and I know this is going to sound terrible, but I'll be perfectly honest — that ring is a terrible disappointment. Abby, it's one-fifth of a carat. Barry said he insured it for $500. I am a large woman with large hands, and this diamond looks so small you need a microscope to see it.

If that's all he could afford, I wouldn't mind, but this man is very successful — I'm talking a $200,000-a-year income!

Is there anything I can (or should) do about this? I would like a ring I can be proud to wear.

DISAPPOINTED
DEAR DISAPPOINTED: Be candid with Barry. Tell him you

Dear Abby

had an allergic reaction to the metal, and also that you would like a larger diamond, since he can afford it. Offer to accompany him to the jewelry store when he returns it to ask if he can trade it in for one with a larger stone. (The jeweler will be glad to accommodate him — and how!) Yes, I know it's the "thought" that counts, but a fine diamond ring is also an investment. Diamonds are forever.

DEAR ABBY: Just before my 17th birthday, I got pregnant. The baby's father was 18 and irresponsible, so I kept "Todd," and my parents are raising him. I worked and continued my education. I even graduated from college.

I am 22 now and am going with a wonderful young man who wants to marry me. "Ray" doesn't know that Todd is my son. Ray has met my parents and believes that Todd is my kid brother. Todd calls my parents

"Mommy and Papa" and he calls me "Sissie." I know this is wrong and I'm not proud of it, but I've lied about it for so long, I'm in too deep to get out.

My parents think I should tell Ray the truth, but I'm afraid if he knows I lied about my son, he will lose all trust in me and say goodbye.

Abby, please tell me how to get out of this mess without losing the most wonderful man I have ever known.

DEAR SISSIE: Face reality. You can't go on living a lie for the rest of your life. Now is the time to tell Ray that the little boy who is living with your parents is in fact your son. And if Ray is the wonderful man you say he is, I doubt if you will lose him. But if you do, then you never really had him.

DEAR ABBY: This is for all those people who don't want to go to their class reunions because they weren't popular — or didn't belong to the "in" crowd in high school and they thought no one would want to talk to them anyway.

I didn't think anyone would talk to me either, but my husband and I decided to go to my 20th high school reunion. Abby, it was the best move we ever made.

I hugged more people in two days than I had hugged in 20 years! I have never felt such a sense of love and belonging as I did at that reunion. There were no pretenses of where we came from, since most of us came from working-class families; we came home to be together. I even made peace with an old enemy!

For those who organized that reunion in Pittsburgh, thank you from the bottom of my heart. For those who didn't make the effort to attend — you missed a wonderful weekend.

YOU CAN GO HOME AGAIN
DEAR YOU CAN: Because you took the trouble to write, perhaps those who were lukewarm about going "home" for a class reunion will reconsider. Thanks for writing. Thanks, too, for mentioning those generous people who organize class reunions. They require a ton of work, and not many are willing to tackle the job.

SHOOTING PAINS

If you're a victim of sciatica, you know what "shooting pains" are all about. The sometimes excruciating pain of sciatica frequently affects the hip, thigh and back of the leg. The ankle and foot are sometimes affected, too. But that's not where the problem is.

The sciatic nerve, the largest nerve in the body, extends from the lower spine to the back of the thigh and knee. Then it divides. One nerve goes down the front of the lower leg, and other goes down the back of the leg.

It's the inflammation of the sciatic nerve that causes the pain. This can be triggered by an irritated nerve root. What causes the irritation? The cause may be traced to a misalignment of the spinal column that's putting abnormal pressure on the roots of the sciatic nerves as they pass between the vertebrae.

Through x-rays and other procedures the doctor of chiropractic can locate the misaligned vertebrae. Using a gentle adjustment, he can align it properly again to help eliminate the cause and the pain.

Lakers' Johnson named Most Valuable Player

By KEN PETERS
AP Sports Writer

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — Magic Johnson, his characteristic grin beaming even brighter than usual, sounded — with tongue in cheek — uncharacteristically selfish.

"Last time, I dedicated this to my dad," Johnson recalled Monday at a news conference at which he received his second NBA Most Valuable Player trophy in three years.

"But this time, I had to work off some fat, and worked hard to win the free-throw championship, so I'm going to keep this one for myself."

"Nobody was out there last summer running and sweating with me," the Los Angeles Lakers guard said, chuckling.

Johnson did, of course, credit virtually everyone connected with the Lakers' organization with helping him win the award.

"A lot of thanks go to my teammates; they made me look good, kept pushing me, whether in practice or in games," Johnson said.

Johnson edged Michael Jordan of the Chicago Bulls for the award, and Johnson himself said Jordan would probably have been voted the honor if the playoffs were taken into account.

Jordan, the league's leading scorer with 32.5 points per game, has taken the underdog Bulls to the Eastern Conference finals with seven playoff games of 40 or more points. He lost to Johnson in the closest balloting since 1981 when Julius Erving edged Larry Bird by 31 points.

Johnson, currently trying to lead the Lakers to their sixth NBA crown since he joined the team in 1979, received 42½ first-place votes and 664.5 points from a nationwide panel of 85 media representatives who voted before the playoffs began.

Jordan received 598.8 points, including 27½ first-place votes.

Lakers coach Pat Riley said both Johnson and Jordan deserved the award, adding, "but one (Johnson) deserved it a little bit more."

Johnson praised the competition, then singled out Jordan.

"It's definitely special when you consider the people ... and the man who would, because of the playoffs, probably would win it if the voting was now," Johnson said, alluding to Jordan.

Following Johnson and Jordan in the voting were Karl Malone of Utah with 362 points and five first-place votes, Patrick Ewing of New York, 200 and eight, and Akeem Olatuwon of Houston, 179.3 points and two.

Johnson, who was MVP in 1987, said the quality of the other candidates for the honor made this year particularly gratifying.

Suns sticking to game plan

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP)— Los Angeles coach Pat Riley thinks he knows precisely what to expect from Phoenix in the second game of the Western Conference finals — more of the same, only better.

"I know Cotton Fitzsimmons and I don't think he'll change much for them," Riley said of his counterpart with the Suns. "They'll do the same things, only better."

The Lakers, seeking their third consecutive NBA title, try for a 2-0 lead when their best-of-7 series against the Suns resumes tonight at the Forum.

Fitzsimmons, talking about the way he employs his players, indicated that Riley's perception of the upcoming game — and the series — is right on the money.

"That's the way we play," Fitzsimmons said. "That's our game and that's the way we've been playing all year. We're not going to change for Magic (Johnson) or anybody."

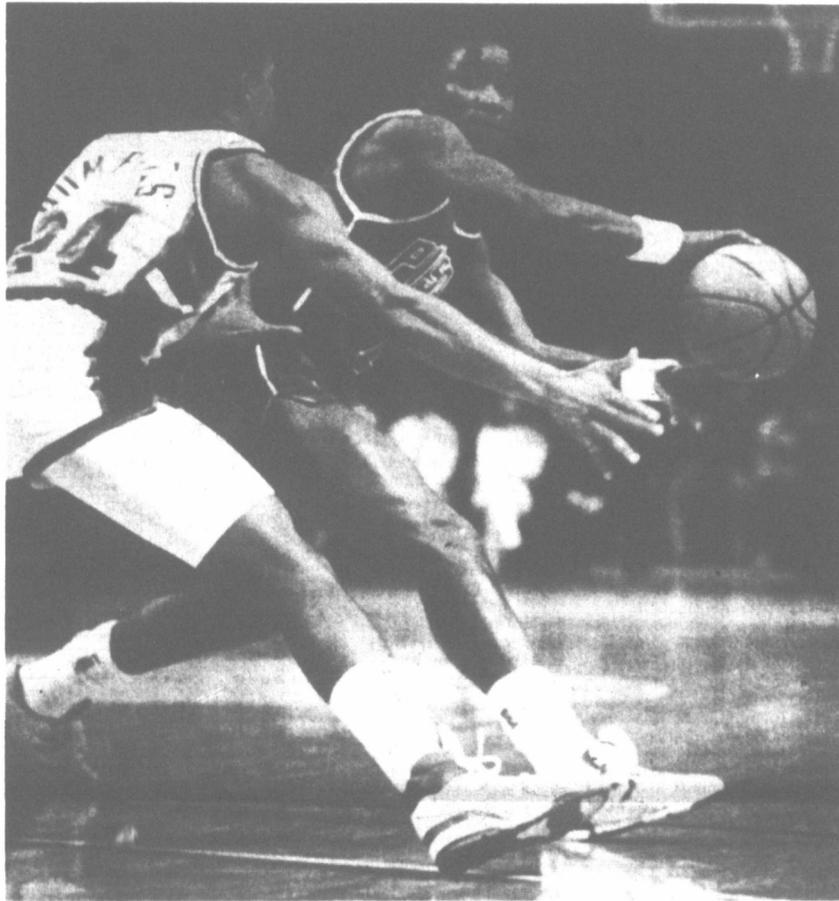

The Lakers, unbeaten in eight playoff games this year after winning their last five games in the regular season, beat the Suns 127-119 in the opener Saturday at the Forum.

Riley, asked if he was surprised that the Lakers haven't lost a game in the post-season, smiled and said, "No. I'm surprised by some other teams, like the Utah Jazz."

Utah, the Midwest Division champion, was knocked out of the playoffs by Golden State.

The Lakers did a relatively good job defensively in the opening win against the Suns.

Bulls, Pistons resume playoff skirmish

Isiah Thomas and Pistons look to bounce back tonight.

By HARRY ATKINS
AP Sports Writer

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Mark Aguirre's arrival in Detroit made headlines. Craig Hodges' arrival in Chicago made a difference.

But it's apparent from the Bulls stunning 94-88 victory in Game 1 that Hodges is likely to have more of an impact in the best-of-7 series — Michael Jordan and all — when it resumes tonight with Game 2.

"There's no question that when Craig arrived and Michael moved to the top of the floor, that was the difference," Bulls assistant coach John Bach said. "Everything sprung from those two moves."

When Aguirre was acquired from Dallas for Adrian Dantley, the Pistons already were a good team. But the Bulls were struggling when they got Hodges on Dec. 12 in a trade that sent Ed Nealy and a second-round draft pick to Phoenix.

Chicago went 8-2 after the trade. When Hodges sprained his left ankle and missed all but one of the final 14 games, the Bulls went 5-9.

But Hodges has played in all 12 of Chicago's playoff games, averaging 11.1 points, and the Bulls are 8-4 despite the fact the teams they've played — Cleveland, New York and Detroit — all had better regular-season records.

"We came together as a team," forward Scottie Pippen said. "We want to help each other out now and create things."

The creativity, of course, starts with the fabulous Jordan. But Jordan, despite his 32 points, made only five of his last 22 shots and finished with a 34.5 shooting percentage in Game 1.

Hodges, who became the shooting guard when Jordan was switched to the point, scored 14 points — including a 3-pointer with 3:39 remaining that pushed Chicago's lead to six points. That was important, since the Bulls had squandered a 24-point lead.

Hodges drew an offensive foul from Rick Mahorn with 29 seconds remaining and gave the Bulls the ball with a three-point lead.

"Michael doesn't have to hit all the time," Hodges said. "That's what he has teammates for. Michael creates so much for other people that he doesn't have to hit. And he plays so hard that it's infectious."

The Pistons beat Chicago in all six of their regular-season meetings, were riding a club-record 12-game winning streak and hadn't lost in 25 games at home.

Now they're face with a "must win" situation tonight.

"We realize they're a stronger team than we are, and a quicker team," Pippen said. "We just have to play hard. We've got to come back and play the same kind of basketball."

Detroit finished the regular season with an NBA-best 63-19 record to earn the home-court advantage throughout the playoffs. Now the Bulls have the upper hand.

"It might be a blessing in disguise," said Aguirre, who is averaging 14.5 points in the playoffs. "It's disappointing, but we've been motoring on all cylinders and maybe this will put a little fear in our hearts."

That's what Chicago coach Doug Collins is afraid of.

"Detroit has lost three games since February," Collins said. "And don't forget they have the best road record (26-15) in the league. But this did give us life."

Cubs adjusting to life without Dawson

HOUSTON (AP)— The Chicago Cubs are adjusting well to life without All-Star Andre Dawson, according to rookie Dwight Smith.

Smith was called up from the minors on May 1. Dawson has been out since May 6 with an injured right knee that is expected to sideline him for another month.

"When Andre got hurt, a lot of guys were down, but we've decided not to feel sorry for ourselves and do something about it," Smith said.

Smith did his part with a three-run, pinch-hit triple in the fifth inning as the Cubs beat the Houston Astros 5-3 in the only National League game played Monday night. St. Louis at Cincinnati was rained out.

The Cubs, 23-19, now have won six of their last seven games and are 11-3 against left-handed starting pitchers.

Houston left-hander Jim Deshaies lost for the first time since April 16, after having won four straight decisions.

"I just didn't have command at all," Deshaies said. "I had a terrible change-up and a terrible slider."

Deshaies, 5-3, allowed six hits and four walks in 4 1/3 innings before leaving with the bases loaded in favor of right-hander Danny Darwin.

handed pinch-hitters Gary Varsho and Smith.

"I took a chance and put up a couple of lefthanders," Zimmer said. "Darwin's as tough on righthanders as anyone."

Varsho struck out, but Smith cleared the bases with a drive over the head of center fielder Gerald Young, scoring Vance Law, Mark Grace and Damon Berryhill.

"Smith got hold of my fastball," Darwin said. "I tried to go up and away and he did what he was supposed to do."

Darwin used his fastball to strike out Varsho and got ahead 0-2 on Smith.

"He was getting confident and he tried to get another one by me," Smith said. "I had to be looking fastball. I'm a line-drive hitter and I try to use the gap and my wheels (legs). That's my game."

Rick Sutcliffe, 5-3, won his first game since April 21, working 7 1/3 innings.

Sutcliffe faltered in the eighth when Craig Biggio, Louie Meadows and Young had consecutive singles.

All three scored after reliever Mitch Williams walked Alex Trevino and Bill Dorn. Calvin Schiraldi replaced Williams and Glenn Davis hit a sacrifice fly, scoring Young, before retiring the last four Astros to earn his third save.

Glo-Valve rallies past Dixie Parts

Glo-Valve Service bombarded Dixie Parts with 14 hits in coming from behind in a 13-8 win Saturday in the Optimist Major Bambi League.

Optimist Roundup

Jim Bob McGahan had a perfect night at the plate to lead Glo-Valve hitting with three hits, including a double. Dale Noble and Todd Finney also had three hits for Glo-Valve. Noble's hits included a triple, home run and three runs batted in while Finney had a double and two RBI. Clint Cox and Albert Solis also contributed hits for Glo-Valve.

Rayford Young, who helped his own cause with two hits, was the winning pitcher with relief help from Finney in the last two innings. Young gave up seven hits, walked four and struck out six. Finney walked two, hit a batter and struck out five in his two innings.

Young was charged with all eight Dixie runs although only four were earned.

Dixie Parts was led at the plate by Ryan Cook with three hits, including a double, and by Kory Harris and Matt Archibald, who had two hits each.

Dixie led 4-1 after one inning and 6-3 after the second inning, but Glo-Valve scored five runs in the third, one in the fourth and four more in the fifth to clinch the win. Scott Focke, who was relieved by Harris in the sixth, was the losing pitcher. Focke gave up seven earned runs, walked two and struck out four.

In Rookie League play last night, the Outlaws won over the Cubs 15-5.

Top hitters for the Outlaws were Jesse Francis, home run; Greg Lindsey, single and home run; Josh Johnson, single and triple; Arvin Bahtia, two doubles; Eric Ballew, double and triple.

Top hitters for the Cubs were Randall Ellis, single and double; Jeremy Silva, double and triple; Eric Greer, triple, and Jason Roark, double.

Both teams played excellent defense.

Rangers still weak at designated hitter spot

ARLINGTON, (AP) — Forty games into the season, the Texas Rangers designated hitter remains undesignated.

The spot has been occupied, but nine players placed in the spot have combined to hit only .170.

Those same hitters, headed by Buddy Bell, Jeff Stone and Rick Leach, have batted a combined .280 when appearing in other positions.

Some suggest jokingly that Larry Parrish must have cursed the position when he was released by Texas in July.

The 6-1 loss to Minnesota Sunday provided a perfect example of the Rangers' lack of production from the offense-only position.

Steve Buchele had hit .300 over the club's last 24 games, but on Sunday he was moved from third base to DH. He popped up twice to shortstop Greg Gagne, then was relieved at DH by pinch hitter Rick Leach, who flew out.

Bell came into this season as the No. 1 DH prospect but has been limited to eight starts there by a combination of arthroscopic knee surgery and a .179 batting average.

Hitting instructor Tom Robson is puzzled by the way the DH spot seems to eat away at the batting average of whomever fills it.

"When one guy is DH-ing every single game for a long time, maybe he gets used to it," Robson said. "But once you get in the batter's box, you're there. You could use that as an excuse, but I don't buy it. It's just a different part of Cleveland's Joe Carter swipes second base against Detroit's Alan Trammell.

Tribe bombards Tigers

By The Associated Press

For the past 12 years, Detroit right-hander Jack Morris always checked to see when the Cleveland Indians were coming to town.

Morris entered Monday night's game against the Indians with a 23-7 lifetime record, including 15-0 at Tiger Stadium. But Cleveland finally got its revenge.

The first four hits off Morris were home runs by Brook now guys won't swing at it. That means he has to come back with a fastball."

Quite often this season, Morris' "out pitch" has been the one that's hit out of the ballpark. Tiger pitchers has allowed 31 home runs, nine by Morris.

"He's one of those guys you've got to get early if you're going to stick it to him," O'Brien said. "We just put some good swings on him tonight."

Elsewhere in the American League it was Baltimore 5, Chicago 1; Texas 4, Kansas City 1; and Minnesota 6, Toronto 2.

Morris, who began the season with a six-game losing streak, allowed seven runs and six hits in 2-1/3 innings.

AL roundup

Jacoby, Mark Salas, Oddibe McDowell and Pete O'Brien as the Indians beat the Tigers 7-3.

"I think he's struggling a little this year," Salas said. "I think guys are laying off that splitter fastball, that pitch that goes down in the dirt."

"That was his out pitch and

Stanley Cup series deadlocked

CALGARY, Alberta (AP)—Before the series even started, it was being called the most evenly matched Stanley Cup championship in years. Nothing in the first four games has happened to change that notion.

"It should be a long, exciting series," Calgary Flames coach Terry Crisp said after his team beat Chicago in the semifinals.

"After all, these are the best two teams in hockey."

The Flames had 54 regular-season victories and an NHL-high 117 points. The Montreal Canadiens were second in both categories with 53 and 115. They had the best defenses, the best goalies, plenty of experience and coach-of-the-year candidates.

So far, the series hasn't disappointed.

"I think it's had everything everybody expected it to contain," Montreal's Brian Skrudland said.

Going into Game 5 tonight at the Saddledome, each team has won twice. Each has scored 12 goals, each has won a home game and a road game, each has rallied for a victory.

Game 1 was tied 2-2 until midway through the second period. Game 2 carried that same score into the third period. Game 3 took more than 38 minutes of overtime to decide. Game 4 was scoreless for almost 32 minutes.

Both teams have received superb goaltending, Montreal from Patrick Roy, Calgary from Mike Vernon.

Both have gotten production from four lines.

Both have played strong defense, yet both have had enough uncharacteristic defensive lapses to keep things interesting.

Neither team has backed down in the battles along the boards and in front of the nets. In Sunday's fourth game, each was assessed 10 penalties for 36 minutes in the most physical game of the series.

"All series long, momentum swings one way and then swings back the other," said Ryan Walter, whose double-overtime goal gave Montreal its 4-3 victory Friday. "You couldn't ask for more of a seesaw series."

Added Canadiens captain Bob Gainey: "Both teams are very evenly matched. Both teams fight back. The Cup is a long-term thing after a long season. Now it's two out of three."

There's now a good chance that this will be only the second seven-game Stanley Cup final since 1971.

"I don't know what other people are thinking about the series, but we are not thinking about (it going seven games)," Calgary's Brad McCrimmon said. "We are just interested in getting ready for the next game."

Friday's overtime loss put the Flames in a hole. Sunday's 4-2 victory helped them climb back out.

"They had their backs to the wall and they played that way," Montreal's Craig Ludwig said. "We can learn from that."

"We needed it bad," Calgary's Doug Gilmour said. "This gives us some confidence. We got home-ice advantage back."

But how advantageous is home ice?

Calgary was the league's best home team during the season, Montreal the second-best. The Canadiens had the best road record, the Flames the second-best.

Sneva wants slower speeds

INDIANAPOLIS (AP)—Tom Sneva has consistently said that faster is not necessarily better in auto racing.

Sneva, the 1983 Indianapolis 500 winner and the first driver to qualify for the race at over 200 mph, has for most of this decade advocated slowing the cars down in the interest of competition.

This month, with drivers warming up at 210 mph and Rick Mears leading a record-smashing speed assault at the In-Indianapolis Motor Speedway with a mind-boggling qualifying run of 223.885, Sneva says it's time to do something about slowing the speeds or the sport will suffer.

"That's what I've been saying for the past five or six years, at least," said Sneva, who qualified for Sunday's race on the inside of the eighth row at 218.396 mph. "NASCAR slowed their guys down. You heard them at Talladega. They slowed 'em down from 212 down to 190."

"The drivers were complaining and moaning before the race, but the fans were standing and shouting for about 500 miles in that race."

Sneva was referring to the Winston 500 on May 7 at Talladega, Ala. Davey Allison took a stirring victory in a very competitive NASCAR stock car race after the sanctioning body imposed carburetor restrictor plates to slow the cars down in the interest of safety for competitors and fans.

"Fans come to Indianapolis to see speed most of the month of May, but on race day they want to see a race," Sneva said. "Like I said, we don't have to worry about this place surviving. But we have to worry about the rest of the sport."

"I wonder why nobody else can figure it out. I'm not exactly a rocket scientist," added the former school principal. "This is pretty common sense stuff. I don't think I'm that far off the track on these issues."

"The boys down south have pretty much done the same thing and have made it work."

Talking about the Indy-car rulesmakers, Sneva said, "They make way too many small changes. I don't know who they're listening to. Superman died a long time ago."

"You've got to have the equipment. Michael Jordan can wear addidas or Nike or whatever and he's still going to do his thing. Our sport isn't like that. Our tennis shoes are a pretty important element of our success, and the bad news is those tennis shoes cost about $350,000 apiece, and you've got to have more than one."

"Right now, if you've got enough money, you can buy the equipment that's going to put you in the show. That's the sad part about our sport. If you've got enough money, you can make it here."

"You don't see it in the Super Bowl, where somebody'll go up to the coach and say, 'Hey, Coach, I wanna throw a couple of passes in the Super Bowl. How much is it gonna cost me?' That doesn't happen in other sports, but it sure seems to happen in ours ... the only flag is green."

"We need to be more concerned with the quality of the show from green to checker," Sneva said.

Agents charged

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP)—Four Florida sports agents have been indicted on fraud and conspiracy charges after allegedly paying athletes at the University of Florida to sign professional contracts and then lie about it.

The four, all officers of Professional Athletes Financial Advisors Inc. in Hollywood, Fla., surrendered Monday and charged in a 90-page federal grand jury indictment with 20 counts of conspiracy, racketeering, mail fraud and wire fraud.

The U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration began investigating the agents during a year-long probe into possible cocaine use by Florida athletes. The investigators also tried to find out how the players were able to afford drugs.

The indictment accuses the agents of giving seven players "large amounts of cash, monthly wire transfers of funds, interest-free loans, hotel accommodations, airline tickets, payments to family members" and other gifts to induce them to break NCAA rules by signing contracts before their eligibility had expired.

The indicted agents are the firm's president, Gerald Gratenstein, vice presidents Greg Latimer and John Kasbar, and secretary Glenn Haft.

Two agents — Norby Walters and Lloyd Bloom — were convicted April 13 in Chicago on charges of racketeering, fraud and conspiracy.

They were found guilty of defrauding universities by luring college athletes to sign post-dated professional representation contracts before their eligibility had expired. Both have appealed the conviction.
