Wright decides to end 'season of bad will'

By STEVEN KOMAROW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Democrats are moving to install a new leader swiftly in hopes of avoiding long-term political damage from the ethics controversy that culminated in Speaker Jim Wright's decision to resign and end "this season of bad will."

No sooner had Wright announced his intentions in a forceful speech from the well of the House on Wednesday than Majority Leader Tom Foley said he hoped to "help bring a spirit of mutual respect and reconciliation back to the Congress."

"I think I'm seeing on both sides of the aisle a wish to return to national affairs," said Foley, who is expected to be named speaker at a Democratic caucus next Tuesday.

But while President Bush issued a statement praising Wright's "effectiveness and deduction," congressional Republicans weren't ready to let go of the ethics issue so fast.

Rep. Guy Vander Jagt, chairman of the GOP campaign committee, said Wright believed he had done no wrong. But, he added, the speaker behaved out of a "thought pattern" of "self interest rather than the public interest."

Wright's resignation speech was filled with detailed denials of the House ethics committee charges against him and punctuated with a plea to Democrats not to try and exact revenge on Republicans for his political demise.

"All of us in both parties must resolve to bring this period of mindless cannibalism to an end," said the man who initially laughed off the complaint that triggered the ethics committee investigation. "There's been enough of it."

The ethics committee investigation of the speaker, which led six weeks ago to charges that he violated House rules of conduct in 69 instances, has overshadowed and interfered with the business of legislation.

Every time he wanted to talk about national priorities, Wright said, the news media "wanted to ask me about petty personal finances."

"You do not need that for a speaker. You need somebody else," he said, announcing the end to his tenure.

Despite Foley's assured ascension to speaker, Wright's resignation comes at a tumultuous time for Democrats. Democratic Whip Tony Coelho of California has also announced plans to resign, saying he didn't want to endure an ethics investigation like Wright's.

Coelho acknowledged recently that a savings and loan officer set him up with a junk bond buy, and that he failed to properly report a $50,000 loan toward that purchase from the officer's financial institution.

In addition, Rep. William Gray of Pennsylvania, the No. 4 leader in the party hierarchy, has complained to Justice Department officials about leaks to reporters that his office is the subject of a separate probe.

The Democrats scheduled a party caucus next Tuesday to nominate Foley, and the full House is likely to ratify the choice within hours. The speaker said by the end of June he also would give up his seat representing the 12th district of Texas.

Never before has a House speaker resigned under fire in mid-term.

"Jim Wright committed a selfless act," said Rep. Robert Torricelli, D-N.J., who helped defend the speaker before the House ethics committee.

The investigation of Wright was begun a year ago based on a complaint by Rep. Newt Gingrich, R-Ga.

Wright holds up a copy of his book during his resignation speech Wednesday.

TCJS planner says county in serious condition

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
Staff Writer

Wayne Gondeck, planner for the Texas Commission of Jail Standards, spoke on how the agency continues to police the state's jail problems at the Pampa Rotary Club meeting Thursday.

However, Gondeck, who had just arrived in Pampa yesterday to meet with county officials concerning local jail issues, was unable to address any of Gray County's problems specifically.

Gondeck did say that Gray County is in a serious situation as far as Gray County jail is concerned. "The jail is full," he said, adding that an inspection of the jail is scheduled for June 16.

Terry Julian is to inspect the jail and give his report to Gray County officials soon after, Gondeck said.

"Any notices, if there are any, will be done at that time," he said. Problems with Gray County's jail will be addressed by the TCJS at the July meeting, he added.

Gondeck spent Wednesday afternoon discussing ideas for solving Gray County's jail woes, viewing possible sites for building a new jail and existing buildings for possible renovation into a jail.

Results of the Wednesday meetings were to be discussed at the Gray County Commission meeting today, county officials said.

Gondeck said he had been involved in the building of 35 jails throughout the state while in private business before he accepted the jail planner position with the TCJS earlier this year. He has worked with both renovation and new buildings, he said.

"Jails have become big business," the jail planner told Rotarians.

At present, jail operators are "asking for and getting" $45 a day to house prisoners for neighboring overcrowded jail facilities, he said. Jails are being built now for $100 to $110 per square foot, he said, with footage per prisoner varying from 250 square feet to 450 square feet.

Texas jails vary in size, he said, from Harris County's 4,500 bunk jail to Loving County's two bunk jail. Harris County presently has 7,500 inmates. Loving County has not had a prisoner in the past year.

Expense of incarceration has changed "drastically" in the past 20 years, he said. In 1968, costs for building a jail ranged from $40 to $60 a square foot.

Gondeck explained that Texas jail standards are a minimum requirement, designed to meet the needs of a diverse group. As time has passed, the standards have become increasingly specific in state law.

Last week, he said, Texas lawmakers passed a criminal justice package contained in 200 pages of legal-size paper on front and back.

"I haven't had time to read through it yet," he quipped. In the turbulent times of the late 1960s and early 1970s, the federal government became more involved in the policing of jails as a result of lawsuits filed and court rulings from this period, Gondeck said.

Since the rulings differed so greatly, members of the Texas Sheriff's Association and the Texas State Bar proposed that a state agency be set up to handle the situation, he said.

The result was the Texas Commission on Jail Standards, created in 1975. Soon after, representatives of the agency began inspecting jails throughout the state.

At first, Gondeck said, the agency's primary efforts were spent helping the jails meet the state's minimum standards. Then came a time of defining state law, such as the exact ratio of guards to prisoners, what were life safety items, and proper structure of the jails, he said.

"We emphasize today more on the operation and management of the jails," Gondeck said.

Areas the Commission is looking at now include proper access to the courts by prisoners, how much medical care to give prisoners and who will pay for it, amount and what kind of exercise needed by prisoners, and clearer definition of supervision of prisoners.

Presently 30 jails are under construction in the state to help ease the prison overcrowding situation, he said. Fifty more jails are in the planning stages.

Another method of solving overcrowding is the use of "boot camps" or "work camps" for low-risk prisoners.

As citizens begin to recognize the effect of drugs on crime, Gondeck predicts there will be more emphasis on treatment of drug addiction, education on drugs and rehabilitation of drug addicts.

In the past six years, the state's incarceration cuts has doubled from 1 prisoner per 1,000 population to 2 prisoners per 1,000 population, he said.

Six years ago, the statewide prisoner capacity was 19,000 with average daily population of 14,500 or 76 percent of the capacity. Now, although bed space has increased, the number of prisoners has doubled, leaving an overall incarceration rate at 112 percent of capacity, he said.

Counties are still building jails, Gondeck said. In 1989, the statewide prisoner capacity should be approximately 35,000 and 40,600 in 1990, he said. In 1989, jails throughout the state should be able to house 42,250 prisoners.

"It will take a united leadership and the support of the citizens to make this project work," he said.

School leaders not sure legislation can benefit the districts

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

As legislators and school administrators from around the state continue to examine the eleventh-hour school funding bill passed Monday night, many are convinced they were misled regarding the benefits of the legislation.

Rep. Warren Chisum, D-Pampa, said Wednesday he is upset there was not time to debate the merits of the bill on the House floor. He pointed out that lawmakers were given the bill at 11 p.m., only one hour before the session ended, and asked to see if it gave the schools in their district more state money than the one currently in place.

"We had a lot of pressure from House leaders that this was a good bill. We had no time to debate the conference committee report on the floor," Chisum said.

And while the bill does provide more money for many "poor" districts, it also mandates new spending that quickly absorbs most of the money. For "rich" districts, the news is even worse.

White Deer Superintendent of Schools David Sharp said the bill will cost his district another $50,000 in state aid on top of what it is already losing in its local tax base.

Currently, the district has a $100,000 budget deficit caused by a shrinking tax base. Yet, White Deer is considered a rich school district.

"A really poor district could get wiped out (by the funding bill)," Sharp said. "I think a school could gain some state money and still get wiped out."

He said the bill's increase in mandatory funding of the Career Ladder program from $70 to $90 per average daily attendance could mean financial ruin for some districts because it also abolishes a matching $70 per ADA in funding, $35 of which is used for support personnel. The other half is designated for any legal purpose the district deems appropriate.

"Say a small school district has 100 teachers and 1,000 students and they're paying the minimum on Career Ladder — $70,000," Sharp explained. "They could now get $150,000 more from the state and still go in the hole."

Griffith said the 18-step scale is more desirable because it means less of a pay increase each year for teachers, but provides them with considerably more money in the end than the state calls for.

Alanreed Superintendent Billy Bob Adams said his district of 24 students will lose $2 million in tax base next year. On top of that, according to figures provided by the Texas Education Association, the district will lose at least $1.600 in state aid.

"If we lose anymore, we won't have any," Adams said. "We've

"The politicians can say, 'We're doing this and that,' but they are still passing the buck and putting schools in the hole."

Sharp said the bottom line is that the new funding bill is a "political white-wash."

"We'll survive, but it is making a difficult situation a lot worse. I see overall that it's creating more problems than it's helped," he said.

For White Deer's Carson County neighbor, Panhandle, the funding bill is nothing less than devastating. The Panhandle Independent School District is also considered a rich district, Chisum said. However, he pointed out it has had property value decreases in the 20 percent range.

"If your property value is down more than 6 percent, you suddenly become a very poor school district," Chisum explained of the new bill's consequences. "You could go from wealthy to below average or wealthy to very poor."

Because of the new funding formula, Panhandle will lose approximately $81,366 in state funding, on top of what it has lost in decreasing local property tax values.

In Pampa, Dr. Harry Griffith, superintendent of schools, said he believes the financial situation will be a trade-out that will leave the district with about the same amount of money it had last year.

He said new state mandated salary increases will mean a group of teachers and administrators from the district will be gathering in the next four to six weeks to transform the modifications in the state's 10-step pay scale into the PISD's 18-step scale.

Griffith said the 18-step scale is more desirable because it means less of a pay increase each year for teachers, but provides them with considerably more money in the end than the state calls for.

Alanreed Superintendent Billy Bob Adams said his district of 24 students will lose $2 million in tax base next year. On top of that, according to figures provided by the Texas Education Association, the district will lose at least $1.600 in state aid.

"If we lose anymore, we won't have any," Adams said. "We've

City well water tap now operational after repairs

The city of Pampa well water tap, located at Boyd and Sumner, is operational again after city crews flushed lines to remove accumulations of rust.

Officials with the city Water Department said the well was reopened at noon Wednesday.

"Bacteriological samples showed no confluent growth," said Larry Morris, a lab technician for the city, indicating the water is fine to drink. "We've got a pressure tank in our well house and we had some rust in there, so we just opened up a valve where we could bleed off the rusty looking water."

The wellhouse was closed last week after the city received complaints about the water's being brown and having a metallic taste.

Public access to the well is on a no-charge basis for local citizens who cannot or will not drink tap water because of its high salt content.

been able to operate using a portion of our fund reserve. I just don't know what we're going to do.

"We don't pay any above state base (for teachers salaries) and don't get any state help for Career Ladder. And yet we are mandated to have it."

The big winner locally in the ADA funding appears to be Pampa, with a reported $2.1 million in ADA money.

"On one side you've got the pluses, but on the other you've got the negatives (mandated expenses) and it will take the Texas Education until mid-July to know about the impact of the legislation," Griffith said of the final impact on the district.

Another local district considered poor by state ADA standards is Shamrock. It will gain $748,693 in state funding over the next two years.

However, Superintendent Ron Gregory said he is remaining tight-lipped on the issue until he sees final impact estimates on the funding bill.

"We've been suffering. Our property values have dropped two years in a row," Gregory said. "We are considered a poor district and I don't know what the final picture will be because I haven't seen anything in black and white."

Lefors ISD Business Manager Jimmy Butler said he is estimating that district will lose $70,000 of its $117,000 in state funding because Lefors is considered a rich district.

City begins spraying for mosquitoes

The city's Parks and Recreation Department has begun its annual spraying program to combat mosquitoes.

PARL Director Reed Kirkpatrick said the program was to begin Wednesday night, with the city parks being the first areas to be sprayed under the program.

The spraying then will go into the northwest sector of the city and proceed east, beginning tonight. When that area is sprayed, then the spraying operations will move into the south part of the city.

"If anybody has a health problem and don't want us to spray in their alley, or want us to bypass their house, please call the Parks

"It probably won't mean cutting programs as much as cutting back within the programs," Butler predicted. "The good news is that our tax base has held at pretty much the same level."

Local superintendents will meet with Chisum this afternoon in Clarendon to begin sorting through the funding bill. Several superintendents said they are hopeful that after the meeting they will find the budget picture is not as gloomy as has been predicted.

Chisum blames the funding problems on the Legislature having $100 million too little to work with.

"The fact that we were $100 million short was only given to us an hour before the vote," he said. "The first print-out had $120 million more than the final bill."

The final blame for too little money for schools is partially the fault of Gov. Bill Clements, Chisum said. "I'm not saying I'm in favor of taxes, but if we had the cigarette tax, it could have given us another $200 million. We really shorted our schools."

PUC rejects GTE again

AUSTIN (AP)—GTE Southwest Inc. says it will fight in court a $59.2 million annual rate cut and $128 million customer refund ordered by the Public Utility Commission, which has refused to reconsider its decision.

Before the panel voted 2-1 against reopening the case Wednesday—the second time it has made that decision—one commissioner blasted a document filed by the company to urge the PUC to take new action.

In the document, GTE said of the decision that "like revisionist history in Stalin's Russia, it rewrites the facts to suit the new party line, ignoring the truth where the truth is inconvenient."

But the commission affirmed its April decision to not reconsider its order. Commissioner Jo Campbell concurred in the overall decision, and Chairman Martha Greytok dissented.

GTE Southwest President E.L. Langley said the company now has "no alternative" but to take its case to court.

But Langley said later Wednesday at a news conference in Dallas that the company will begin complying with the PUC's order to cut rates, probably in mid-July.

The rates, under the PUC order, for local customers, would be reduced by an average of 17 percent.

Commissioner William Cassin, who referred to the document in making a motion not to rehear the case, called it "one of the most intemperate and least effective attempts at persuasive legal writing I've ever read."

The document also accuses the commission of "irresponsible and illegal" actions and refers to a "lynch-mob atmosphere," said Cassin, quoting from it.

Business associate says Mrs. Wright is capable employee

By DAVE PEGO
Associated Press Writer

FORT WORTH (AP) — Businessman George Mallick said he doesn't plan to offer Betty Wright another job now that her husband has resigned as Speaker of the House.

But it is not, he says, because she wasn't a capable employee for his firm. "I don't believe I can afford her," he said. "Aside from Jim Wright, she's a capable businesswoman. She's been in business all her life. The only reason she worked for $18,000 a year was because she owned half the company."

Mallick, 54, said Wednesday in an interview at his office that there is no basis for allegations that Mrs. Wright might have been paid only as a courtesy to Wright for potential political influence.

Dogged by an ethics investigation of his business dealings and sales of a book, Wright said Wednesday he would step down from his leadership post next week and leave Congress by the end of June.

Even though Mrs. Wright has not worked for him in four years, Mallick said, her encouragement and influence has left a positive imprint on those who still work for his real estate development company.

"I didn't get a bargain," said Mallick of Mrs. Wright's $18,000 salary. "I got a wind-fall."

Mallick said he was asked by the House ethics committee for evidence that Mrs. Wright had actually worked for him, and he responded by providing reports and brochures she had written. He said allegations against her were a "cheap shot."

"She found investment opportunities and discussed them with me," Mallick said.

Mallick challenged the new media to ask the committee to provide the undisclosed testimony and evidence involving the Wright investigation, even though the Texas congressman has decided to walk away.

"I want you to go out and dig up the truth," he said.

That truth, he says, will vindicate Wright, who Mallick says is only choosing to forego due process "for the greater good."

Mallick said he didn't expect to hear from Wright Wednesday, but anticipated a call tonight. "I want to say to him, 'I understand. I know what you've done. I know why you did it.'"

At first, Mallick said he was surprised and shocked as he watched Wright's announcement and realized his friend was abandoning the seat he had doggedly chased as his lifetime ambition.

But Mallick said he agreed with Wright as the veteran Congressman asked fellow House members to halt "mindless cannibalism" against some lawmakers.

"Something has to be done to stop this madness that's going on," Mallick echoed.

Wright's decision to give up his lifelong dream of being speaker was not easy, Mallick said, adding that Wright had called him May 21 to ask his advice, then gone about making a long, thoughtful decision. "He very truly is a man of peace; he wants peace in that House."

It was 1963 when a young Congressman met a young developer over a cup of coffee. They shared their dreams and began walking toward them together.

"We were young lions, young Turks," said Mallick, sighing slightly as he looked around his spacious office, lined with civic awards. "I did great and he did well," Mallick continued.

Mallick said he never asked Wright to vote a certain way on any legislation nor did he ask him to intercede with any federal agency.

"Not that I wouldn't have been entitled to," he said. "Hell, I'm a constituent like anyone else."

The Fort Worth developer says he is ready for "another great adventure" if the controversy surrounding Wright's business dealings affects his business.

And he says he expects Wright to do well in the future — although it may not necessarily be in a political position.

"You haven't seen the last of him," Mallick said. "The man's met world leaders. He speaks fluent Spanish. There'll be a call to him."

Mallick, who said he has no idea what will become now of the Congressman's blind trust, said Wright never expressed a desire to be rich; he only wanted to serve America. And even in stepping down from the most powerful post in Congress, he is only trying to work for "a higher good," Mallick said.

Survey: Teen boys show interest in steroids

By WENDY E. LANE
Associated Press Writer

LUBBOCK (AP) — While a physicians survey showed an alarmingly high number of teenage boys inquiring about or using anabolic steroids, there's no way to know how many youths are seeking the drug from other sources, says a doctor who conducted the study.

A survey by two pediatric researchers for Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center showed that 48 percent of family physicians and pediatricians responding reported more than 200 inquiries about steroids by patients.

Twenty-nine percent of the doctors had seen patients they believed were using the drugs that some athletes take to increase their performance and body strength.

The survey revealed that teenagers sought the drug almost solely to enhance their performance in football, said Dr. George E. Bacon, who helped conduct the survey.

"God knows how many go to their coach, athletic trainer or other athletes," he said, noting the survey turned up evidence that coaches may be prompting athletes to ask their physicians about obtaining steroids.

While he expected to find evidence of interest and use among college-age males, Bacon said he was disturbed by the number of younger boys asking about obtaining steroids.

"It certainly is prevalent in high schools and junior highs and it might even be in the fifth or sixth grades," he said.

The study also found that one quarter of the inquiries were made by parents for their children.

"They seem to be concerned about their kids doing better in athletics or looking better," Bacon said. "You might think the kids would be asking about steroids surreptitiously, but that's not the case."

Teen-agers from ages 13 to 17 accounted for 48 percent of the inquiries and 31 percent of the perceived users, while young adults from ages 18 to 25 made up another 48 percent of inquiries and 68 percent of the suspected users. Adults over age 25 made up the remaining 4 percent of inquiries and 1 percent of usage.

All patients inquiring about steroids were male, and all but five were white.

Among young adults, the queries came mainly from body builders or weight-lifters rather than college football players, according to the survey, published last month in Texas Medicine, the medical journal of the Texas Medical Association. Many of the inquiries were about cosmetic benefits of the drug.

Derived from testosterone, anabolic steroids are prescribed by doctors to aid in treatment of anemia, leukemia and other conditions.

Cisneros, right, cuts a cake in celebration of Sea World's first anniversary, part of his duties on his last day in office Wednesday.

Cisneros leaves office to return to private life

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Bucking some political observers' predictions of immediate aspirations to higher office, Mayor Henry Cisneros leaves City Hall today and quietly enters private life.

The 41-year-old Cisneros served 14 years in the public sector, six as a city council member and the last eight as mayor of a city that grew to the country's ninth largest.

Cisneros was a driving force in the community whose influence was felt statewide and nationwide, observers said.

"I think that if I had drafted a plan for how I wanted these eight years to go, it would not have been as ambitious," Cisneros recently told the San Antonio Express-News.

"I could not have predicted the levels of success that have materialized for San Antonio," he said. "It's been better and more exhilarating than I expected."

Returning to office is Lila Cockrell, who preceded Cisneros as mayor from 1975-81. She returns after winning election over six other candidates last month.

One of the country's top Hispanic leaders, Cisneros wooed businesses such as Sea World and the future Opryland USA to the city and bridged gaps between feuding Hispanics and Anglos.

"One way or another, he'll be back," U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, said. "And we'll be the better for it."

Cisneros' latest victory was voter approval in January of a public transportation tax to fund construction of the Alamodome stadium, which he strongly supported.

But Cisneros declined to seek a fifth term after being besieged by personal problems, including a troubled marriage and the health of his son. He plans to join an asset management firm in San Antonio.

"I don't expect to try to remain a force in city government or city politics," Cisneros said. "I don't think you can be halfway in or halfway out. You're either in or you're out, and I'm going on to other things."

The city's general expenditures during his term grew from $184 million in 1981 to $257 million last year.

Officials said the number of tourists increased from 8.5 million in 1980 to 10.5 million last year, and tourism revenues grew from $654 million in 1980 to a projected $1.5 billion this year.

The Texas Employment Commission said jobs in San Antonio increased from 781,200 in 1980 to more than 1 million in 1988.

"I suppose the thing that I'm proudest of is having worked with San Antonians to raise our sense of the city's role and to overcome the kind of inward-looking tendencies," said Cisneros.

The only large Texas city that grew during the last five years was San Antonio, said Baylor University economist Ray Perryman.

"He bridged the gap between ethnic groups in a very articulate and charismatic way," City Councilman Weir Labatt said. "I haven't always agreed with Henry but he will go down in history as a mayor that was pro-active and imaginative, especially for the many things he pushed through the council that would not have gotten through the council were it not for his driving force."

Cockrell, 67, must lead San Antonio through one of its most critical periods, according to observers, who say she is charged with carrying out economic development and public-private partnership programs initiated by Cisneros.

"I want to see our city continue to move ahead with an expanded economic base, a base that will be sufficient to carry out our future needs and provide services to our citizens," said Cockrell.

Judge: Children's deaths 'roughest ever seen'

By PATRICE GRAVINO
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — The clubbing and subsequent fire deaths of three children, apparently at the hands of their father who also died, was "one of the roughest things" a judge investigating the deaths says he's ever seen.

"I've seen a lot ... but this tops all of them," said Williamson County Justice of the Peace Jimmy Bitz, who conducted an inquest into the deaths of Illian Dunlop, 9, Ivan Dunlop, 7, and Sacha Lucia Dunlop, 5, and their father, John Donald Dunlop, 40.

Bitz said Wednesday he ruled the children's deaths homicides and their father's death a suicide. Autopsies on the children revealed that the boys were knocked unconscious with a hammer before a fire was set with gasoline in their bedroom about 5:30 a.m. Monday, Bitz said.

Because of burns to the girl's body, head injuries could not be determined, but investigators think she too was struck, Bitz said.

"No doubt ... the children were unconscious when the fire was started," Bitz said.

All four died of carbon monoxide poisoning from the fire's fumes, Bitz said.

The children's mother, Maria Teresa Thompson, 42, couldn't push open the barricaded bedroom door after she heard one of the children scream, Bitz said. She suffered minor burns to her feet.

The bedroom door had been barricaded with a dresser and a table, Bitz said. Ms. Thompson then tried to get in through a window, but the fire already was too hot, Bitz said.

Williamson County Sheriff Jim Boutwell said a strong odor of gasoline remained in the burned master bedroom of the three-bedroom home. The Department of Public Safety also was investigating.

Dunlop and Ms. Thompson had been estranged and were having financial problems, investigators said. Sunday night, the couple had argued and Thompson told Dunlop to move out.

The couple had sought marriage counseling two weeks ago.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Nice words alone don't give freedom

The people's worldwide revolt against socialism continues. As events unfold in China, the latest action shifts back to a place fermenting for months: the Baltic republics still controlled by the Soviet Union. Recently, the parliaments of Lithuania and Estonia declared their nations economically independent of Moscow, with Lithuania's parliament in effect issuing a declaration of independence. Latvia, the other Baltic republic, is expected to take similar actions.

The Lithuanian and Estonian parliaments also called on the Kremlin to renounce the 1939 Nazi-Soviet pact, in which Hitler "gave" the Soviets control of three Baltic republics and eastern Poland in return for Nazi control of western Poland. The pact initiated World War II: when Hitler invaded Poland, Britain and France declared war.

To its credit, the United States has never recognized the Soviet enslavement of the Baltic nations, any more than we recognized Hitler's enslavement of Poland and the other nations he conquered. But the Soviets, amazingly, still recognize the Nazi-Soviet pact as valid. But to nullify the Nazi-Soviet pact would mean admitting the Baltic republics are independent. This Moscow is loathe to do.

But Gorbachev's quandary presents an opportunity for free nations. Sir Anthony Acland, Britain's ambassador to the U.S., has suggested we test the sincerity of Gorbachev's announced programs of glasnost and perestroika. Is Gorbachev serious about his promises to grant his people more freedom and independence? Only if he advances major changes can we trust his word.

The Baltic republics could be a crucial test for him. Their own parliaments — still ostensibly communist — have openly enacted legislation to achieve independence, economic liberty, and religious and political freedom. As independent countries, they could serve as links between the Soviet Union and the free West it's trying to woo.

To pass this test, Gorbachev should take three actions: First, renounce the odious 1939 Nazi-Soviet treaty. Second, grant legitimacy to the Baltic independence movements. Third, withdraw the Red Army forces that enslave the Baltics, and which were first sanctioned by the Nazi-Soviet pact.

Sir Acland is right: We must test Gorbachev. Nice words and a smile aren't enough. The Baltics are providing a crucial test. Let's watch closely how Gorbachev treats this outcropping of liberty.

Liberty's light hard to turn off

Arise, you prisoners of starvation!
Arise, you wretched of the earth.
For justice thunders condemnation,
A better world's in birth.
No more tradition's chains shall bind us,
Arise, you slaves, no more in thrall.
The earth shall rise on new foundation,
We have been naught, we shall be all.

China's protesting students were taught those words by the Communist Party that rules the country. It's the government's misfortune that they not only learned them, but took them seriously. That's how we got a spectacle rare in a people's democracy: the people demanding democracy.

When they were not singing the anthem of proletarian revolution, the students and citizens supporting them hoisted a replica of the Statue of Liberty, railed against corruption and called for liberty, government accountability and even the "separation of powers." This was not an echo of the Cultural Revolution of the 1960s, whose purpose was to purify communism. This time the enemy was communism itself.

The change was precipitated partly by the loss of faith in Marx and Lenin even in the highest party circles. In recent years, humbled by decades of stagnation, the government has relaxed its hold over the nation's economic life, unleashing energies that have transformed China. It has also experimented cautiously with political freedom.

But beginning the experiment was easier than controlling it. Like the Soviet regime, this one has found that liberty isn't something that can be turned on and off like a lamp. Once the darkness has been pierced, the people crave light.

Stephen Chapman

The movement for democracy in China has inspired fascination, joy and support in the West. In some quarters, it ought to evoke humility as well. This is the same country that, under Mao Zedong, was applauded by a parade of foreign visitors for its indifference to obsolete Western concepts of democracy and human rights.

China's opening to the West in 1972 evoked some of the most credulous nonsense ever uttered. John K. Fairbank, a venerable Harvard historian, announced that "the Maoist revolution is on the whole the best thing that has happened to the Chinese people in centuries." In China, he wrote approvingly, communism "has become not only an advance in the industrial arts ... but also a far-reaching moral crusade to change the very human Chinese personality in the direction of self-sacrifice and serving others."

Another American intellectual had earlier asked, "What right do we Westerners have ... (to) worry so nobly whether these people, whose former drowning or starving by the millions didn't make our front pages, have enough democratic rights?"

This ostentatious respect for the Chinese was really a form of condescension, implying that they were incapable of exercising the rights Westerners accept as their birthright. Anyway, the choice in China was never between food and freedom. Under Mao, the Chinese lacked both. During his disastrous Great Leap Forward in the late 1950s, food supplies dropped by some 30 percent. Harvard scholar Nicholas Eberstadt says that not until the last decade, thanks to economic reform, have the Chinese people been able to eat as well as they did in the 1920s.

What the protests of the last five weeks dramatize is what any clear-headed observer should suspect — that a government which refuses to make itself accountable to its people fears their judgment. The Chinese may not fully grasp or share American notions of self-government, but they clearly yearn for greater control over their lives and their leaders.

For the moment, the country's future is wildly uncertain, with the regime itself in turmoil over which way to go. Contrary to the hopes of those watching from abroad, it's possible that the protest will be crushed. But the millions of Chinese who have protested have made it harder than ever for the government to revert to totalitarianism.

Succeed or fail, the movement for democracy in China is a vital page in the history of freedom. It is also a reminder of what Alexis de Tocqueville wrote of the French Revolution: "Youth was at the helm in that age of fervid enthusiasm, of proud and generous aspirations, whose memory, despite its extravagances, men will forever cherish: a phase of history that for many years to come will trouble the sleep of all who seek to demoralize the nation and reduce it to a servile state." In China, we have heard what sounds like the cry of a better world in birth.

Putting bourbon in a jelly jar

Even if you don't particularly enjoy country music, you've got to admit some of the titles, lyrics and thoughts are wonderfully poetic.

For years, there was something that circulated called "The List." It included the very best country music titles and lyrics. Remember these titles:

- "My Wife Just Ran Off With My Best Friend, and I Miss Him."
- "I Gave Her a Ring and She Gave Me a Finger."
- "We Used to Kiss on the Lips, but It's All Over Now."
- "Every Man Must Leave His Footprints in the Shifting Sands of Time, But I'll Just Leave the Mark of a Heel."
- "How Come My Dog Don't Bark When You Come Around?"
- "I've Got Tears in My Ears from Lying on My Back Crying All Night Over You."
- And these equally impressive lyrics:
- "If your phone don't ring, it's me."
- "Ain't only one thing in this 'ol world worth a solitary dime and that's 'ol dogs, and children, and watermelon wine."
- "If you're waitin' on me, you're backin' up."
- "Has anybody here seen my sweet thang?"
- "The work we did, it was hard, but we slept at night cause we was tard." (That may be a paraphrase, but it's close enough - from Loretta Lynn's "Coal Miner's Daughter.")

Lewis Grizzard

Country music can be used in real-life situations. A friend was telling me how, when he asked his wife for a divorce, she refused and demanded they go to a marriage counselor.

At the last session with the counselor, the counselor asked my friend's wife, "Is there any song that really sums up your feelings for your husband?"

She responded, "Each time I hear Johnny Mathis sing, 'Until the Twelfth of Never,' I think of him."

"And what about you?" the counselor asked my friend. "Is there any particular song that sums up your feelings for your wife?"

"Absolutely," he replied. "Roy Clark's immortal, 'Thank God and Greyhound She's Gone.'"

My friend got his divorce.

I bring all this up because of a new country song I heard recently by George Jones. For those who are not familiar with Mr. Jones, he's been around for years and is a notorious drinker.

On one occasion his former wife, country singer Tammy Wynette, left their Nashville home to go on tour. She had all the liquor removed from the house, and left George with no car.

No problem for George. He was last seen heading to the nearest bar, driving the couple's lawnmower.

Despite his drinking problems, George Jones is recognized by many as the best country singer ever. His voice has the same tone as a steel guitar when he sings of love — lost and found.

And his latest: There's this guy, and his baby has gone, and he's sitting at home and darkness has come and he's got the hurt-all-over blues.

He turns to drink as the answer. He pulls off the shelf a decanter of bourbon that is in the image of the late Elvis. He's got to have something to drink the bourbon from, so he locates a Fred Flintstone jelly jar.

He pours out the jelly, steams the label off the jar and pours himself a drink out of Elvis.

And he sings: "Yabba Dabba Do, the King is gone, and so are you."

A classic is born.

Let's just call him 'Cool Hand' George

By WILLIAM A. RUSHER

"How's Bush doing?" is the standard opening in political discussions these days, rather like P-K4 in chess.

In response, the mind scans the events of the past four months, looking for spectacular successes (or failures) that can be attributed to the president. There seem to be comparatively few of either, which in itself then becomes the chief comment on Bush to date: "He isn't doing anything very much." But is that necessarily bad?

In fairness, let's first note that the Bush White House hasn't been nearly as inactive as its hyperthyroid critics charge. Bush pulled off a stunning coup in persuading the Democratic leaders of Congress to agree with him on a budget that keeps his solemn campaign promise, "No new taxes." And the White House press corps, after complaining piteously for years about Ronald Reagan's neglect of it, has been almost smothered with attention. On a whole range of issues, from education to child care, the administration has made concrete proposals.

Moreover, certain of its alleged derelictions are actually the products of legitimate caution or else of inevitable bureaucratic delays. Congress can hardly raise the standards for appointment to federal office to a point where Aristides the Just would have failed to make the cut, then complain because Mr. Bush hasn't re-enacted the Oklahoma Land Rush in his designations of sub-Cabinet-level officials.

A lot of the complaints about the delays, in fact, simply reflect the media's understandable boredom. They are professionally eager to interview new faces, develop new sources, discover new vulnerabilities. They want to see policy shifts that they can hail or denounce.

But George Bush wasn't elected president simply to provide the media with opportunities for big headlines and sonorous editorials. He is the successor to a strong president, most of whose policies he supported enthusiastically and has pledged to continue. If that bores George Will, it's just too damn bad.

In one major category, moreover, Bush is simply getting a bum rap. And that is in the area of relations with Moscow.

The past year has witnessed a series of astonishing developments in the Soviet Union. Far faster than anyone dared imagine even 12 months ago, the Soviet people are moving toward new political and economic arrangements. Gorbachev has thus far managed to stay ahead of the curve by endorsing far-reaching reforms and calling for more.

Obviously, such a period of internal reform leaves little energy or money available for external adventurism. Gorbachev has therefore sharply modified Soviet foreign policy: withdrawing from Afghanistan, pressing Vietnam to pull out of Cambodia, lowering Soviet pressures on southern Africa and reportedly even proposing to reduce Soviet military aid to Nicaragua.

Such actions were bound to make Gorbachev popular in Western Europe, though of course the longer-range attitude of its peoples will depend on how well Gorbachev delivers on his promises. But meanwhile what is the proper reaction from George Bush?

Various hotheads, in the media and elsewhere, have insisted that every time Gorbachev dramatically announces some minor reduction or pullback in forces or weapons that Moscow doesn't need anyway, Bush must hail the step and move swiftly to match or (better yet) double it. We are warned that failure to do so would yield the initiative to Gorbachev and might "split the NATO alliance."

But one pronounced characteristic of George Bush as president is becoming apparent: He is a real "Cool Hand," who rarely gets excited about anything — certainly not about every piffling Soviet disarmament ploy. As far as the Soviet Union is concerned, his present attitude seems to be: Things there are heading in the right direction, and Gorbachev is making most of the right moves, both internally and externally. Why should I try to paint the lily?

Perestroika also spells pollution, Soviet environmentalists say

By BRYAN BRUMLEY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mikhail S. Gorbachev has made it easier for environmentalists to talk about pollution problems in the Soviet Union, but his economic program is making those problems worse, a visiting environmental activist says.

Until Gorbachev instituted a policy of glasnost, or greater openness, discussion of ecological problems had been suppressed in the Soviet Union for decades, said Arvids Ulme, president of the Latvian Environmental Club, known in Latvia as VAK.

But Ulme told U.S. officials in meetings late last week to "look at perestroika in a different way, to realize that there is a downside to perestroika," the Russian word for economic restructuring.

"The economic reforms are speeding up the destruction of the environment because they are aimed primarily at saving the economy," Ulme said in an interview Friday with The Associated Press.

VAK is representative of the "green" movement of grass-roots political organizations in Eastern Europe — the Baltic republics of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania in particular — which mix their environmental complaints with nationalist concerns.

"Those protesting the country's environmental ills have many other complaints against the regime," CIA analyst Christine Westbrook wrote last December in the Christian Science Monitor.

The environmental issue is one of many that have their roots in the forced annexation of those countries by the Soviet Union during World War II. The United States does not honor that annexation.

"The refusal to recognize the legitimacy of the forced incorporation of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania into the Soviet empire has been a long-standing and fundamental tenet of American policy toward the Soviet Union," Deputy Assistant Secretary of State Paula J. Dobriansky reaffirmed in a speech on March 11.

The administration, she said, would seek to "establish and maintain regular contact with a range of emerging political, social and ecological informal groups in the Baltic states."

The Baltic environmental groups comprise key components of wider national front movements that far outpolled local Communist Parties in March 26 elections for the national Congress of People's Deputies, which convened last Thursday in Moscow.

Ulme's group contends that Kremlin economic policy not only pollutes the environment, but also threatens native populations.

"It's genocide," he said.

Moscow-based ministries made decisions affecting about 90 percent of the economic activity in each of the 15 Soviet republics, and that includes the heavy polluting industries. Gaining control of those enterprises lies at the heart of the Baltic drive to achieve greater autonomy from Moscow, said Ulme.

The Kremlin thus far has balked at attempts by Estonia and Lithuania to assert greater autonomy, but the "greens" have had some success.

VAK and other environmental groups organized protests consisting of more than 100,000 people last year to protest pollution of the Gulf of Riga, and they successfully battled construction of a hydroelectric project at Daugavpils and construction of a subway system in the Latvian capital of Riga.

The group opposed the subway not because members were against mass transportation, but because the construction, like other major industrial projects, would require the immigration of large numbers of Russian workers.

"It would employ 50,000 workers, and they would be non-Latvians," said Ulme. The construction of major enterprises in Latvia already has caused such a huge immigration that Latvians now constitute only about 50 percent of the population. The percentages are about 80 percent in Lithuania and 60 percent in Estonia.

Latvian environmentalists are now trying to close down or clean up an oil refinery built with help from the U.S. Occidental Oil Corp. in the port city of Ventspils, where residents are afflicted by skin and respiratory problems of epidemic proportions, according to accounts in the Soviet press.

Judge denies bond on arms sales charge

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A Canadian couple and a Swedish man remain jailed after they were denied bond for charges accusing them of conspiring to illegally export more than $600 million worth of military equipment to Iran.

After two days of testimony, U.S. Magistrate Eduardo E. de Ases on Wednesday ordered Eileen and Ronald Hilton Arab, both 52, of Vancouver, British Columbia, and Erik Nissen, 62, of Norrköping, Sweden, held without bond.

The trio was arrested May 25 and charged with violating the Arms Export Control Act, money laundering and conspiracy.

De Ases cited the amount of evidence in the case and the defendants' lack of ties to the Southern District of Texas in denying bond.

The detention hearing began Tuesday afternoon and continued Wednesday for about five hours with undercover Customs Agent Alonzo Pena and Victoria Arab, 21, daughter of the two Canadians, testifying.

Pena testified that Nissen said he had official government contacts in Iran.

Last survivors

Frank Shomo, left, 100, kisses the hand of Elsie Frum, 106, at a banquet in their honor Wednesday in Johnstown, Pa. The two are the last survivors of the May 31, 1889 Johnstown flood. The banquet was part of the centennial activities of one of the nation's worst natural disasters in which more than 2,200 people were killed by the raging flood waters.

Juarez pushes vendors out

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — Juarez's downtown renovation is almost complete with the virtual elimination of a maze of market stalls just south of the cathedral, officials say.

About dawn on Tuesday, three dozen commerce inspectors swept through the 18-square-block area. By noon, they had dismantled about 50 sidewalk stalls and had forced about 250 other vendors to move.

The sweep marked the beginning of the last phase of the renovation program known as Nuestro Centro — Our Downtown. In about a month, officials said, downtown will be free of vendors, the streets should be patched and well-lighted, traffic signs and medians should be freshly painted and the police presence should be strengthened.

In addition to making the streets cleaner and safer, the revitalization program is putting some vendors out of work.

"This isn't a new Juarez, it's a hungry Juarez," said Maria Gonzalez as she and a partner dismantled and carried away their produce stand on orders from commerce inspectors. "They told me if I didn't do it myself, they would do it for me. At least this way, I keep my stuff."

Malena Rodriguez Perez tried not to watch as the inspectors loaded her sole source of income onto a truck and hauled it away.

"Twenty-five years selling candy here," she said. "What am I going to do now? I don't know how to do anything else."

Bush confers with Thatcher on triumph at NATO summit

By TERENCE HUNT
AP White House Correspondent

LONDON (AP)—After rave reviews in West Germany, President Bush is ending his European tour with a visit to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, his chief ally and triumphant partner in a NATO dispute over nuclear missiles.

Bush conferred with the prime minister at 10 Downing Street today before a luncheon at Buckingham Palace with Queen Elizabeth II. A dinner with Mrs. Thatcher was the final event before Bush returns to the United States early Friday.

The president's visit coincided with a subway strike in London, which created traffic jams 10 miles long on major highways into the capital and forced many commuters to walk or ride bicycles to work. Motorists who reached the city found routes of the Bush motorcade sealed off.

Mrs. Thatcher is regarded as the United States' most ardent supporter in the West. At the NATO summit in Brussels, she took an even harder line than Bush on keeping nuclear missiles in Europe.

The issue pitted the United States and Britain against West Germany, after Chancellor Helmut Kohl demanded early East-West negotiations to reduce and perhaps eliminate short-range nuclear missiles.

In the end, Mrs. Thatcher and Bush prevailed in winning a NATO statement that put off any negotiations indefinitely. It said the missile talks could not begin until an East-West agreement on conventional arms had been signed and reductions were under way.

In Paris, Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze said Bush's disarmament proposals generally were positive, but expressed doubt that agreement on conventional force reductions could be reached within a year, as Bush had suggested.

"I want to emphasize that the British and French forces in West Germany represent 100,000 men and this creates an imbalance," the French newspaper Le Figaro quoted Shevardnadze as saying.

Despite the missile dispute, Bush got high marks during a 27-hour stop in West Germany, where he delivered a speech calling for an end to political divisions in Europe and a dismantling of the Berlin Wall.

"The Cold War began with the division of Europe. It can only end when Europe is free," Bush told 2,000 cheering people in the Rhine River city of Mainz.

West German Foreign Minister Hans Dietrich Genscher, who had prodded Kohl to take an aggressive stance in the missile quarrel, was effusive in praise of Bush's speech.

Soviet congress enters second week

MOSCOW (AP)—The new Congress today began a second week of debate after hearing an ex-Olympian assail the KGB secret police as out of control and Latvia's president propose granting the Soviet republics virtual autonomy.

The inaugural session of the Congress of People's Deputies was to have ended Wednesday, but it appeared the unprecedented open forum would last another week unless presiding officers cut off debate.

President Mikhail S. Gorbachev announced to the Congress late Wednesday that 469 deputies had signed up to speak; just 250 of them had been heard in six days of debate that has been televised live to the nation.

Gorbachev has diplomatically suggested the time allotted each speaker be cut by five minutes, to 10 minutes, but deputies responded with a joint "Nyet!" that resounded through the Kremlin's Palace of Congresses.

The remaining agenda has not been announced, although a speech was expected by Premier Nikolai I. Ryzhkov, who heads the Cabinet, which numerous speakers have blamed for the slow progress toward ending shortages of consumer goods.

Even before the 2,250-member body formally elected Gorbachev president last week, deputies took to the floor to propose radical changes that challenge the political monopoly of the Communists, who have ruled the country since 1917.

On Wednesday, the president of the Latvian republic, Anatoly Gorbunov, proposed constitutional amendments recognizing the 15 Soviet republics as sovereign states governing their own resources and enacting their own laws.

The Congress — the country's first elected body chosen through contested balloting in seven decades — has the power to make constitutional amendments or adopt a new Constitution entirely.

"The U.S.S.R. is a union, a multinational state, formed on the basis of agreement, equal republics, with self-determination of nations," Gorbunov declared. "Only the republics can delegate power to the union."

Such a revision of the power structure is needed "to eradicate the roots of ethnic tension," the Latvian Communist reformer said.

Moscow deputy Yuri Vlasov, who won a weightlifting gold medal in the 1960 Olympics, passionately assailed the KGB secret police.

"The best people of the country were tortured in its basements," he said, asserting that the KGB remains almost uncontrollable, continuing to dominate the lives of all citizens.

Vlasov also criticized Gorbachev's handling of ethnic unrest in Soviet Georgia. Nineteen people were killed in Tbilisi, capital of the southern republic, on April 9 when troops were sent in to break up a pro-independence demonstration.

Gorbachev has said he did not know until afterwards of the decision to use troops against the crowd.

"In no circumstances is it possible to accept that the head of state doesn't know the circumstances of the case," Vlasov said. "Otherwise, what kind of head of state is he?"

Also Wednesday, Boris N. Yeltsin, the immensely popular ousted Moscow Communist Party boss, called on the Congress to wrest power from the party.

Wife has eyes for husband but nose continues to balk

DEAR ABBY: I can relate to the lady who said she stayed on her side of the bed for 40 years because her husband hardly ever took a bath. I have been in the same boat for years. I threw hints at my husband for years, but it did no good. Finally, in desperation, I said to him, "Honey, you stink!" It was like talking to a brick wall.

I'm a good cook and keep a clean house, but this man refuses to keep himself clean. He must be used to the smell, but I'm not. I've slept by myself and cried myself to sleep because he doesn't think I'm worth taking a bath for.

The sad part of it is, I love this man, and he's the only one I want to give my love to. I'm 50 and still ache to have his arms around me and give me a little loving once in a while. I've never looked at another man and have no desire to.

Oh, I'd settle for a hug and a kiss, but if I try for it, it turns him on and makes him want to have sex, and I can't go that far because he smells so bad. I can't win.

The only time he ever was clean enough to love was when he was in the hospital and they bathed him. So what can I do, Abby?

DEAR MISSING: If you haven't told this to your family doctor, please do. Your husband could have mental problems. His behavior is not normal, and both of you are deprived because of it. Tell your doctor what you have told me. Your husband needs a thorough examination from the neck — both ways. I wish you luck.

DEAR ABBY: This is an open letter to all who have treated me kindly when they have driven by me while I'm on my bicycle.

Thank you for giving me a little extra room even if I have to ride in the lane instead of on the shoulder. You obviously realize that either the shoulder is soft dirt, or it has glass and junk on it that you can't see at 55 mph but I can see at 10 mph.

Thank you for not being impatient when it takes you an extra moment to get past me.

Thank you for not crowding me into the curb when there is no shoulder — as you know, sometimes the sewer gratings are set several inches below pavement level and might be just the right size to catch my tire and flip me into your path.

Thank you for not making left and right turns into me, but according to me the same courtesy you would any other driver.

Thank you for patience when I ride after dark. Sometimes I don't have a light and my clothing isn't bright enough, which is stupid, but maybe I've been caught unawares and didn't expect to be out after dark — maybe I had a flat, or misjudged my distance or the time. And I'm grateful when you don't turn on your bright lights in my face.

Thank you for not honking your horn, or seeing how close you can come short of hitting me (for the fun of it), or yelling or shouting obscenities when you drive by as though I had no right to be on the road.

Please be considerate of me, automobile driver. When gasoline costs $5 a gallon, we'll all be on bicycles. ANYWHERE, USA

Cowboys' Aikman progressing toward starting role

IRVING (AP) — Dallas Cowboys coach Jimmy Johnson says multimillion-dollar quarterback Troy Aikman has made so much progress that he could start in the team's season opener.

"Troy has been everything we've expected and more," Johnson said Tuesday. "Mentally, he has a good grasp of what we're trying to do. And we already knew how physically talented he is.

"He is right on schedule for where we want him to be. He may be ahead of schedule. I have no reservations about Troy possibly being the starter in that first game."

Aikman, the richest rookie in NFL history, reached terms on a six-year, $11.037 million deal. But after practices, he eats $3 sandwiches as he sits on the locker room's carpeted floor, brown-bagging it with offensive linemen.

But Aikman, who frequently has a dip of snuff pinched between his cheek and gum, has earned teammates' respect on the field.

"He hasn't come in here like with an attitude like 'clear out, I'm the big cheese,'" linebacker Garry Cobb said. "He's working as hard as anybody. There's no hot dog on him.

"He's going out there every day, trying to do everything within his power to improve and learn. That's the kind of attitude that everybody respects."

Aikman will be the first to agree that much remains to be done.

"I need to work on everything; not one particular area," he said. "Right now, being in shorts is a whole different ball game than it is when you put the pads on. When I get the pads on, I'll be able to learn a lot more about myself and my progress."

He has rejected all but a few requests for endorsements and personal appearances.

"I don't want to receive a lot of attention until I prove myself on the field, and right now I don't think I'm worthy of receiving that attention," said

Aikman. "So I've backed off."

Veteran quarterback Babe Laufenberg, who has spent time with four other National Football League teams, said Aikman has that intangible quality possessed by most great quarterbacks.

"That's something you look for and different people have it in different ways," Laufenberg said. "You picture a Joe Theismann, you picture him storming off the field, hollering and pointing.

"John Elway is more reserved, but they call him the 'Duke' because he does have that swagger," he said. "Presence isn't something you work on. You don't say 'I'm going to be this way.' It's something that you just are. Troy seems to have it."

Players are praising the strength of Aikman's arm and his ability to learn quickly.

"He can throw just about any kind of ball," cornerback Everson Walls said. "He can throw it deep; he can lay it up and put some touch on it; he can throw it short; he can get it outside."

Development of Aikman has been turned over to offensive coordinator Dave Shula, who helped develop Dan Marino at Miami, and quarterbacks coach Jerry Rhome, who played a key role in preparing Jay Schroeder and Mark Rypien at Washington.

"They've done a great job of handling him," Cobb, a veteran of 10 NFL seasons, said. "He's doing the things you need to do as a young quarterback: throwing the short ball, taking what the defense gives him, remaining patient.

"They're piecing out the offense for him, nurturing him along, having him work both sides of the field, giving him something new each day."

Five weeks of training camp and four pre-season games will determine whether Aikman gets Johnson's call as No. 1 quarterback for the season's first game.

"Whoever shines the most will start," said Johnson.

Orioles sweep Rangers

BALTIMORE (AP) — The Baltimore Orioles are in first place in June for the first time since 1983, having avoided a couple of disasters on their way to a sweep of their three-game series with the Texas Rangers.

Baltimore blew a four-run lead Wednesday, but rallied to defeat the Rangers 8-5. And when it was over the Orioles got the good news that ace lefthander Jeff Ballard was not seriously injured when hit on the left collarbone by a Pete Incaviglia line drive.

"It will probably be pretty sore tomorrow, but that's all," said Ballard, who left after five innings with a 4-0 lead. Incaviglia hit his liner to open the fifth, and Ballard recovered after being hit and threw Incaviglia out and was able to finish the inning.

"I was going to give him a chance to finish the inning unless he told me he couldn't," said manager Frank Robinson. "Normally, we'd have saved it for him, but the bullpen can't do it every night."

Had the Orioles held the lead, Ballard would have gotten his ninth win, tying him with Oakland's Dave Stewart and San Francisco's Rick Reuschel for the major league lead. But the Rangers scored five times in the sixth off Mark Huisman, before Mark Williamson came in to shut the door. Williamson retired all seven batters he faced, getting his second win in as many nights, to raise his record to 3-2. Gregg Olson retired the side in order in the ninth for his second save in as many nights and his fifth of the season.

Ballard iced the bruised area, and reported no after effects. "It's not as bad as it looked," said Robinson.

The Pampa team is sponsored by Pampa Ford, Lincoln, Mercury. Coaches are Weldon Ellis and Harley Knutson.

Bulls' Scottie Pippen (33) and the Pistons' Vinnie Johnson go after a rebound.

Pistons take lead

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. (AP) — In the special language of the NBA, the Microwave shorted out Air Jordan's landing lights.

Vinnie Johnson scored 16 of his 22 points in the fourth quarter Wednesday night as the Detroit Pistons, who trailed by as many as 10 points in the first half, beat the Chicago Bulls 94-85 to take a 3-2 lead in the Eastern Conference finals.

The best-of-7 NBA series continues Friday night in Chicago and Game 7, if needed, would be Sunday afternoon back at The Palace.

Detroit's swarming defense held Chicago's Michael Jordan, who averaged 27.7 against the Pistons in the regular season, to just eight shots and 18 points.

"You have to take what the defense gives you," Jordan said. "If cent of their shots.

It was two spurts, one by Mark Aguirre and a crunch time burst by Johnson, that proved the difference.

Aguirre scored 11 of his 19 points in the final 4:41 of the second quarter as Detroit got the Chicago lead down to 45-41 at halftime.

"He's capable of doing that," said Detroit guard Isiah Thomas, who has known Aguirre since their boyhood days on the Chicago playgrounds. "We've got to find a way of getting more of that out of him."

Thomas finished with 17 points. Aguirre had eight points in a 16-7 run to start the third quarter as Detroit finally took the lead.

Then Johnson suddenly heated up and the Pistons, with both Aguirre and Isiah Thomas sitting on the bench all but one minute of the fourth quarter, steadily pulled away.

"That's why they call him the Microwave," Jordan said. "Vinnie Johnson got hot and carried them down the stretch. Vinnie got hot and no matter what you did — get a hand in his face or what — he still got the shot off and he made it."

Jordan said he couldn't remember a game in which he took so few shots.

"I was moving the ball, trying to get other people involved," Jordan said. "I was creating and passing off. I knew they were going to throw two and three guys at me, so I wanted to get other guys involved."

The most involved was Craig Hodges whose 19 points included five 3-pointers, three in final quarter. Bill Cartwright had 16 points for Chicago, but only six in the second half.

With Jordan not able to get a shot, the rest of the Bulls offense suffered. Chicago got off only 59 shots, a record low for playoff games, shaving two off the old mark set May 3, 1984, by New Jersey against Milwaukee.

NBA playoffs

I didn't feel comfortable driving to the hole, I didn't do it. I'm not going to force an issue if it's not there."

In Game 1, also at The Palace, the incredible Jordan scored 32 points as the Bulls shocked Detroit with a 94-88 defeat, stealing away the Pistons' home-court advantage. In Game 3 at Chicago, he floated and soared for 46 points as the Bulls overcame a 14-point deficit down the stretch to beat Detroit 99-97.

"You want to get the ball out of his hands as much as possible," said Detroit guard Joe Dumars, one of several assigned to shadow Jordan. "He's an unselfish player. If he's not open, he'll pass it."

The Pistons, despite hitting their first two shots, hit only 27.3 percent in the first quarter and finished the game shooting 48.8 percent. The Bulls hit 49.2 per-

Gustafson looks for mound help

By TOM VINT
AP Sports Writer

OMAHA, Neb. — Texas' Cliff Gustafson, one of college baseball's most successful coaches, may take a page from the book of another top coach, Miami's Ron Fraser, in the College World Series beginning Friday.

Uncharacteristically, Texas pitchers have struggled this season, aside from ace Kirk Dressendorfer, 16-2.

"We've had a little trouble finding a number two starter," Gustafson said. "I don't think this is the type of team we've built a reputation for, of having good pitching depth."

Fraser has come to Omaha with similar teams and ended up with what he called pitching by committee. He'd use a host of pitchers to fight his way through the tournament.

"We may try that," Gustafson said. "We almost did that in the regionals."

Behind Dressendorfer, who earned All-America status on some squads as a freshman a year ago, Gustafson might use Scott Bryant, who has started three games this season and is 1-0. But Gustafson said Bryant has trouble going the distance.

"Six innings is about as far as he's gone this year," the coach said. "I'm thinking of using him more as a short reliever. He's pretty effective for three innings or so."

If history has any bearing, Gustafson will find a way for Texas. The 22-year coach has won 1,100 games, lost 240 and tied twice at the school.

This is his 15th appearance at the College World Series, tying the record of Southern California's Rod Dedeaux.

"That puts me in pretty elite company, I guess," said the soft-spoken Gustafson. "I think it goes back to the long-standing tradition of good baseball at Texas."

The Longhorns, in their 25th CWS, have made more appearances than any other team.

Pampa tennis league canceled

Plans for a summer tennis league in Pampa have been canceled due to a lack of interest, said PHS tennis coach Jay Barrett.

However, Barrett said entries are still coming in for the Pampa Tennis Open, which is scheduled for June 8-11 at the high school tennis courts.

"It looks like we're going to have a real good tournament," Barrett said.

Entry deadline is June 6. The tournament will have men's, women's, adult and junior divisions. Entry fee is $8 for singles and $16 for doubles.

Entries are limited to three events in two divisions in each tournament.

Matches consist of two out of three sets with a 12-point tiebreaker at 6-all in each set. There will be no-add scoring through the quarterfinals.

Entry blanks can be picked up at the Pampa Youth Center.

Barrett, who is the tournament director, can be contacted at (806) 665-9442 for more information.

How Little League Baseball began to grow

Editor's Note: This is the second of five excerpts from "Growing Up At Bat: 50 Years of Little League Baseball" (Pharos Books). Ceremonies at the Little League World Series (Aug. 22-26) will celebrate the 50th anniversary of the first season, which began on June 6, 1939.

By Harvey Frommer

The first Little League season was a primitive affair. Back in 1939, three baseball teams in Williamsport, Pa., played 24 games on makeshift fields and town playgrounds.

Carl Stotz, the founder of Little League, kept a small slate blackboard in the trunk of his car. He would take this portable "scoreboard" to games and painstakingly chalk in the scores inning by inning.

"We had the rules printed on sheets of paper," recalled the late Howard Gair, the umpire in the first game. He remembered standing behind the pitcher — the normal position used in Little League at that time — to call balls and strikes.

Fifty years later the key principles established that summer of 1939 still govern the sport for youngsters:

- The name remains Little League Baseball.
- The basic unit of organization is still the league — and not the teams comprising the league.

- A playing field is still scaled down to two-thirds regulation size; the distance between the pitcher's mound and home plate is reduced to 46 feet.
- The unique system of selecting players from a common pool of players from well-defined geographic areas still exists.
- A given number of players in each of three age groups is still placed on each team.
- All funds contributed by sponsors are still placed in a common treasury for the equal benefit of each team.
- Exploitation by commercial interests is still not permitted.

Ray Keyes, who later became the sports editor, was an office boy in 1939 at the Williamsport Sun-Gazette, one of the oldest newspapers in the United States. He used to post the first season's scores on the outside wall of the newspaper building for passers-by to see.

"The boys wore flannel uniforms," Keyes recalled. "Their pants were always baggy, and sweatshirt sleeves stuck out from under their shirts. Some were gangly and uncoordinated. But there was a spirit."

The following year, Stotz enlisted another manager for the fledgling Little League program.

"Carl Stotz and I had gone to school together," John Lindemuth explained. "So we knew each other a long time. One day he came over and asked if I'd like to manage one of the teams. You know how those things are — I stayed on (in the Little League organization) for 17 years."

Looking back, Keyes noted: "Williamsport was a small town, but it had a great tradition of baseball throughout the 20th century. We always had a Double A professional baseball team and gave it good support. There has always been a lot of community spirit in Williamsport."

To raise money, a Williamsport man designed a tin cup with one handle that was passed around at games with quite a degree of success during those early years. Many enjoyed a good-natured laugh when a shy youngster asked a spectator: "Would you please put something in the cup for the offering?"

But Stotz saw the need for more effective organization as Little League spread to surrounding communities. He was also sensitive to the program becoming dominated by large geographic areas and population centers — where there was a bigger pool of players to draw from.

"He organized the program along the lines of school-zone districts," said Lindemuth. "No more than 15,000 people could reside in a Little League district. (Today this limit has been enlarged to 20,000.) In this way, no one geographical region could be dominant."

"The plan also helped Little League to grow," Lindemuth continued. "Williamsport had a league, but the boys in the lower end of Newberry couldn't play here, so they had to organize their own league. The other sections followed. And that's how Little League Baseball spread across Pennsylvania and all over — along district lines."

During World War II, Little League programs began in towns throughout Pennsylvania. Teams now used canvas uniforms: no flannel was available for civilian use because of wartime demands.

Proper equipment was a constant problem during those early Little League years — no one had ever manufactured bats, bases, or uniforms designed with the safety needs of children in mind.

As Little League Baseball evolved, all types of people became involved. They ranged from the legend known as "Mr. Baseball" — Connie Mack — to an army of volunteers who would become the backbone of the program.

Mack was the long-time owner and manager of the Philadelphia Athletics. He became the first of many major-league boosters of Little League. It happened after a trip to Williamsport in 1944. He was highly impressed with what he saw.

"It would not surprise me one bit," Mack observed, "if some of these boys playing Little League Baseball made the major leagues."

Those were prophetic words.

Joey Jay was 12 years old in 1948 when the Little League program came to his home town of Middletown, Conn. Five years later, Jay would become a member of the Milwaukee Braves, the first former Little Leaguer to reach the majors.

Windy eats worms

In Stride

By
Sonny Bohanan

Former White Deer coach Windy Williams, now the AD at Dalhart, is becoming something of an earthworm connoisseur. He has eaten at least two of the legless critters in the last month, and those are only the ones that I'm aware of. No one knows what goes on behind closed doors.

Williams had made a promise to the Dalhart Golden Wolves last week that if they won their baseball playoff game, he would dine on an earthworm. Apparently, the thought of such a spectacle fired the team's enthusiasm, because the Wolves pulled off the victory.

True to his word, Williams had an earthworm snack at the Wolves' next pep rally.

Two weeks earlier at the White Deer sports banquet, Williams finally kept up his end of another bargain he made three months before. In February, the White Deer Does were preparing to play Groom, hoping to secure their first basketball playoff berth in 28 years. Williams issued a challenge to the effect that he would eat a worm if the Does won the game. They did.

Fortunately for Williams, earthworms are a scarce commodity in February, and the matter went unsettled. Or at least until two weeks ago, when Williams opened wide at the sports banquet and chased his barbecue dinner with a hearty annelid dessert. A promise is a promise, after all.

Move over escargot, make room for the latest delicacy. And Moms, there's no messy shell to remove.

The richest rookie in NFL history has made big strides during the Dallas Cowboys three-week quarterbacks school. Troy Aikman has done so well, in fact, that coach Jimmy Johnson is already talking about the possibility of starting him in the Cowboys season opener against New Orleans on Sept. 10.

According to Bernie Miklasz of the Dallas Morning News, after observing Aikman for 2½ weeks, everyone agrees on two things: the strength of his arm and his ability to learn quickly.

Folks have also been impressed by Aikman's tendency to stay in the background, shying away from publicity. Jim McMahon he's not.

"I don't want to receive a lot of attention until I prove myself on the field, and right now I don't think I'm worthy of receiving that attention," Aikman said in an interview with Miklasz. "So I've backed off."

Here's hoping Aikman starts every game next year. I don't think I can make it through another season of quarterback swap.

While Aikman is lauded for his quick learning ability, it seems that others just never learn. The name Pete Incaviglia comes immediately to mind.

Inky has never been known for his modesty, and his mouth often works better than his bat. He has contended from Day One that he has the kind of talent that will lead the Rangers to their first pennant.

During this spring's exhibition games in Florida, I read a quote from Inky saying he could hit 30 homers a year without even trying. That came as a surprise to me, considering he fell shy of 30 last season. Guess he just wasn't trying.

But he may have won the all-time foot-in-mouth award earlier this week. The Inkmans were benched following the Rangers' 6-1 loss to Baltimore on Monday, in which he was 0-for-4 and struck out three times with runners in scoring position. Over his last 25 games through Monday, Incaviglia hit .196 in 92 at-bats.

His response? "I know when I get it going, I'll be able to carry this club."

Right now the club's carrying you, Pete.

On the other end of the spectrum, the Rangers' Rafael Palmeiro was named the American League Player of the Week on Tuesday.

Over the seven-day period ending Monday, Palmeiro hit .542 with six RBI in 24 at-bats. He's the first Ranger to receive the award since Oddibe McDowell in June 1986.

Also, as of Tuesday, Palmeiro is .426 in his last 17 games and leads the league overall in batting with a .359 average. Carney Lansford of Oakland is second at .355.

Teammate Scott Fletcher can't seem to get a handle on things this year. He committed his 10th error this season Monday, leading to an unearned run on a single by Baltimore's Larry Sheets. Fletcher had only 11 errors all last season.

Speaking of unearned runs, the Rangers lead the majors with 37.

Doctors discuss 'The Great Lyme Disease Scare of 1989'

By PAUL RAEBURN
AP Science Editor

NEW YORK (AP) — doctor who specializes in Lyme disease increasingly finds his waiting room crowded with patients who don't have it.

He blames it on what might be called the Great Lyme Disease Scare of 1989.

The news reports began as soon as the weather was nice enough for a walk in the woods. They warned that Lyme disease is marching across the country, can go undiagnosed and can do serious damage to the joints and nervous system.

Those frightening assertions are true, as far as they go.

But nearly all Lyme disease cases are confined to eight hot spots in the Northeast and Midwest, most cases are easily cured and simple preventive measures can sharply cut the likelihood of getting it.

"In most of the states, only small numbers of cases have been reported," said Dr. Theodore Tsai of the U.S. Centers for Disease Control laboratory in Fort Collins, Colo.

Ninety percent of the nation's cases occur in the Northeast, half in New York state and 40 percent in just two counties — Westchester, immediately north of New York City, and Suffolk, covering the eastern half of Long Island.

The eight Lyme disease hot spots are New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Minnesota and Wisconsin.

Even in those areas, the risk can be lowered by wearing insect repellent and inspecting for ticks.

The disease was identified in 1975 by Dr. Allen Steere, then of Yale University and now of the New England Medical Center in Boston. The first cases were picked up near Old Lyme, Conn. It soon became clear the disease was spread by ticks found on deer, mice and other mammals. In 1982, researchers discovered it was caused by corkscrew-shaped bacteria carried by the ticks.

Between 1980 and 1988 some 14,000 cases were reported in the United States, according to the CDC. The disease is clearly on the rise, and has been reported in 43 states, but it remains uncommon outside the hot spots.

Much has been made of the serious complications that can sometimes arise from Lyme disease. It can affect the joints and the nervous system, causing permanent damage. If not treated early, it can be tough to cure, requiring extensive treatment with expensive intravenous antibiotics.

Lyme disease also is the great impostor. It can look like arthritis, flu, heart disease, palsy and, in advanced stages, Alzheimer's disease, meningitis and multiple sclerosis.

But diagnosis is not as tricky as it's been made out to be, said Dr. Raymond Dattwyler of the State University of New York in Stony Brook. "It's not a vague disease with aches and pains."

In two-thirds of the cases, it begins with a characteristic bull's-eye rash, a red ring around a clear center. It also causes specific kinds of nerve and joint damage that doctors can readily identify as Lyme disease.

Furthermore, blood tests can usually confirm the diagnosis, Steere said.

Dattwyler's office is in Suffolk

County, where the incidence of Lyme disease has approximately doubled each year for the past three years. Despite that sharp increase, he and his colleagues have cut the Lyme disease rate in half in employees of nearby Fire Island National Seashore.

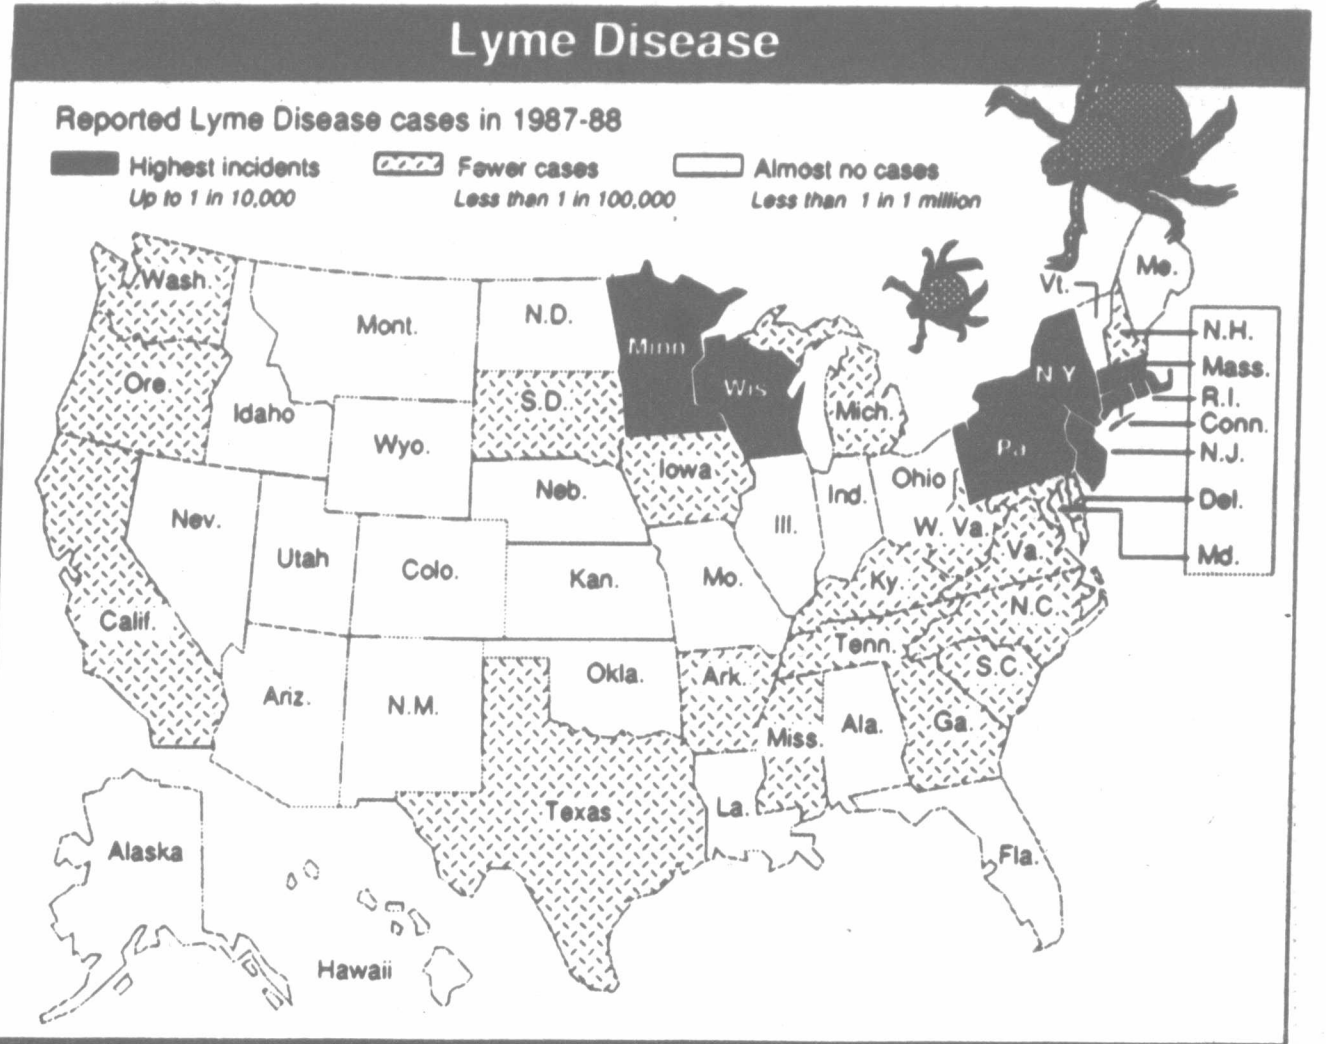

"Basically what we teach them is to recognize what the tick looks like, how to avoid exposure, how to remove the ticks, and really stress that you do have time before the infection occurs," he said.

Ticks must feed for 24 hours to 48 hours in order to transmit the infection, he said. If they're found and pulled off carefully with tweezers or fingers at the end of the day, infection is unlikely.

People who find ticks on themselves shouldn't rush to the doctors to be tested for Lyme disease, Dattwyler said. It takes four to six weeks to develop antibodies to the Lyme disease bug, and that's when the blood test can show infection. It would be reasonable to have the test done then.

Lyme disease is likely to continue its spread, and it may ultimately become an important disease outside the current hot spots.

Nevertheless, he said, the problem has been overblown. Emphasis on problem cases and tough diagnoses has "overshadowed what we know can be done to prevent it."

TIPS TO AVOID LYME DISEASE

NEW YORK (AP) — If you live in one of the Lyme disease hot spots, the following tips will help you recognize Lyme disease and prevent it.

Recognizing Lyme disease

■ The first symptom in two-thirds of cases is a red rash that develops days or weeks after a tick bite. It is often bull's-eye shaped — a red ring around a lighter center.

■ Those who don't get the rash get vague aches and pains and a low-grade fever. Next comes arthritis-like pain in the joints or nerve damage causing pain or numbness.

■ If you suspect you've been bitten by a tick, ask your doctor for a blood test — but wait four to six weeks. Before then, the test shows nothing.

Preventing Lyme disease

■ Look for ticks after being outdoors. Lyme disease ticks are small — about the size of a comma (,) in the newspaper.

■ If you find a tick, remove as much of it as you can with tweezers or your fingers. Cover it with antiseptic. Ticks must feed 24 to 48 hours to transmit the disease, so prompt removal greatly lowers your risk.

■ Use insect repellent containing diethyltoluamide (DEET).

■ When outdoors in high-risk areas, avoid brush when possible. Stay on the trail.

■ Wear long pants with bottoms tucked into shoes or boots.

Clements seeks disaster funds

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements asked the federal government to declare 18 additional Texas counties disaster areas as a result of the severe storms that struck the state earlier this month.

The latest request covers Angelina, Bell, Collin, Ellis, Hardin, Jasper, Jefferson, Liberty, McCulloch, Montgomery, Navarro, Newton, Orange, Polk, Sabine, San Jacinto, Shelby and Upshur counties.

"I have asked the federal government to review this request as quickly as possible so that the residents of these counties can begin rebuilding their lives, their homes and their businesses," Clements said.

If Clements' request is approved by the Federal Emergency Management Agency, eligible disaster victims in the 18 counties could get temporary housing, loans or grants to assist in repairing or replacing property.
