Court limits power to outlaw flag desecration

By JAMES H. RUBIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today limited the power of states to outlaw the desecration or destruction of the American flag.

The justices, voting 5-4, threw out the conviction of a protester sentenced to a year in jail and fined $2,000 for burning the flag in Texas.

The court said a flag-burning at a demonstration in Dallas during the 1984 Republican National Convention was a form of expression protected by the Constitution's guarantee of freedom of speech.

Justice William J. Brennan, writing for the court, said, "If there is a bedrock principle underlying the 1st Amendment, it is that the government may not prohibit the expression of an idea simply because society finds the idea itself offensive or disagreeable."

"We do not consecrate the flag by punishing its desecration, for in doing so we dilute the freedom that this cherished emblem represents," the majority ruling stated.

Joining Brennan were Justices Thurgood Marshall, Harry A. Blackmun, Antonin Scalia and Anthony M. Kennedy.

The dissenters were Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Byron R. White, Sandra Day O'Connor and John Paul Stevens.

Rehnquist, in an opinion joined by White and O'Connor, said the flag is a unique national symbol and deserves unique protection.

"The government may conscript men into the armed forces where they must fight and perhaps die for the flag," Rehnquist said. "But (because of today's ruling) the government may not prohibit the public burning of the banner under which they fight."

Today's ruling might permit states to outlaw flag burning in some cases. For example, a flag burning that led to a riot could still be illegal. Brennan said Texas already has a law banning conduct that leads to breaches of the peace, and that is not affected by today's ruling.

But Brennan said it violates constitutional free-speech guarantees to ban flag burning at political rallies or protests merely because the destruction of the flag offends some people or because the state wishes to preserve the flag as a symbol of national unity.

During the height of U.S. involvement in the fighting in Vietnam, draft-card burning and flag-burning were common forms of protest.

In a separate dissenting opinion, Stevens said, "sanctioning the public desecration of the flag will tarnish its value — both for those who cherish the ideas for which it waves and for those who desire to don the robes of martyrdom by burning it."

In an unusual move, both Stevens and Brennan read extensively from their opinions in the crowded courtroom today. Normally, justices only give brief summations of opinions at most when the rulings are announced.

Prison could bring new industry, Barton says

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

Should the citizens of Pampa approve city and county officials pursuing locating a state prison in Gray County, it could potentially mean locating new industry here as well, according to Pampa Area Chamber of Commerce Executive Vice President Bruce Barton.

"In the beginning we thought we had a prison problem," Barton said of the state prison situation, "but after viewing it they (the state) decided they had a criminal justice problem."

He said that rethinking of the role of prisons in the justice system has led state officials to pass legislation clearing the way for boot camp-style prisons, shock probation and some prisons where the inmates are linked up with industry to learn a trade and work at learning a new skill that will help them find employment upon their release.

Barton said over 10,000 new prison beds will be built over the next several years.

"We will be meeting (today) at 3 (p.m.) with the county, city, chamber and the Industrial Foundation (at County Commission chambers in the courthouse) to further discuss the specifics of a site south of town," Barton said.

"What we're looking at for the future is on past this next round," Barton said. "If the community wants us to, we're going toward a prison this round, and not in a haphazard manner. But we're looking toward even greater possibilities in the future where there will even be different types of facilities than there have been in Texas."

He said the matching of a prison with a new industry allows for community creativity in using natural resources of an area and mixing inmate and civilian labor to increase the economic stability of that city.

"The community's ingenuity is the only limiting factor and the state has set aside dollars from bond funds, I understand, to finance some of this," Barton said. He pointed out that should Pampa not get a prison during the next round of bids, it does not mean the city would not eventually get one.

"This is not a one-time shot. Right now there are over 10,000 prisoners in county jails in Texas who belong in the (Texas Department of Corrections)," Barton stated. "We're only talking about 3,000 beds in this next round. That's how many there are now, so we're looking at doubling the number of beds in the next few years. This is only the beginning."

He explained that "as long as the community view remains positive," plans on formulating a prison proposal will continue. State prison officials have requested any cities interested in landing a new prison submit a bid — with a donation of at least 300 acres of land included — by July 31.

Today city and county officials are scheduled to set dates for public hearings on the prison issue. Barton said it is possible the first hearing could be as early as next week.

Mayor Richard Peet and County Judge Carl Kennedy have joined other local leaders in emphasizing that Pampa and Gray County will not endorse a prison proposal unless there is a vast majority of public support.

Should a maximum security prison be placed near Pampa, it would mean 800 new jobs for the area as well as almost $17 million a year in new salaries, officials estimate.

Trustees approve more computers for schools

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

Plans to accelerate the rate at which computers are placed in schools around the Pampa Independent School District were formally approved Tuesday night during a board of education meeting.

Dennis Wyatt, a middle school math teacher, presented board members with an update on research he and other school officials had done on the impact of computers in the classroom.

"We are looking at getting the Joslen Learning Center," Wyatt said of middle school plans. "It will be at least three months before we get it in. We hope to eliminate some of the basic skills problems of computation that students are having ... With the lab and the instructional spiral we will extend the learning level of students."

He said students' high interest in computers and the individualized learning computers afford will mean the district could triple the amount of students prepared for algebra when they enter high school.

Lee Carter, district computer specialist, said board approval of the $211,000 for computer centers around the district will mean parents will see improved interest and results in math.

"They can look for an enthusiastic student who wants to go to school," Carter predicted. "The math lab will be one of their favorite activities during the day. After they have been working on the lab several weeks, they can look for significant improvement on their math scores and quite a bit of acceleration."

PISD plans will mean new computers for Mann, Baker and Austin elementary schools as well as the middle and high schools sometime during the coming school year. Carter said new computers for Wilson and Lamar elementary schools will be installed by next summer.

In other board action, trustees approved low bids of $8,500 from Brownings Heating and Air and $11,890 from Larry Beck Electric for mechanical and electrical work on the high school office area.

Dr. Harry Griffith, superintendent of schools, told board members the district will save $25,000 on the project and said estimates now show the remodeling will cost $43,000.

District Business Manager Jerry Haralson gave a presentation to trustees indicating the PISD finished the year in solid financial shape, reducing the deficit from $350,000 to $131,000.

"We will probably end up better than that and exceed our revenues and underspend expenditures," Haralson said. He explained such savings were possible because of state contributions to the district for the children of Fluor Daniels employees who were in Pampa for the Hoechst Celanese rebuild.

"Delinquent tax collections are going well, though they are not collecting as much as they were in 1988," he said of the current tax collection status of the district. Currently the district is owed $908,673 in delinquent taxes.

Independent oil and gas producers contend with field rules

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
Staff Writer

An ongoing struggle between the Texas Railroad Commission (RRC) and oil and gas producers in the Panhandle Field has flared up once more.

Sparking the controversy this time is a new, and some say confusing, set of Panhandle Field Rules issued by the RRC on May 1, as well as a RRC investigation that alleges some local independent producers are falsifying their oil production records.

Last week, both issues came to the surface in Pampa when the Gray County grand jury was to consider evidence from the RRC investigation. The same day — Tuesday, June 13 — members of RRC office in Austin met with area oil and gas producers at the Coronado Inn here to explain the new Panhandle Field Rules.

Both events were anti-climatic to a point. At the grand jury proceedings, Mary Anne Wiley, head of the RRC investigation division, informed jurors she would not be presenting a case to them, in spite of the fact that 16 independent oil producers had been subpoenaed to testify.

Brian Schaible of the RRC communications division in Austin declined to comment this morning on reports from sources in the oil industry that the commission has reached an agreement with several producers involved in the investigation.

The agreement reportedly specifies the producers will pay fines of up to $10,000 each in order to keep allegations they misreported production totals out of court.

Schaible said he couldn't give a timetable by which the settlements might be reached or by which the evidence would be ready for presentation to a grand jury.

During last Tuesday's meeting, Austin RRC representatives were forced to leave the Coronado Inn meeting early as a storm threatened outside. Inside the hotel's conference room, another storm was brewing.

Outside, the storm dumped inches of rain on the city in a matter of minutes. But, though the meeting was heavily attended, questions were technical and few touched on the volatile emotions apparently involved in the situation.

Independent oil producer Wallace Bruce of Pampa arranged the Tuesday meeting, he said, after receiving a number of telephone calls from people with questions about the new Panhandle Field Rules.

"So I called Jim Morrow (RRC oil and gas division director) and asked him to come down and help people live with what they've got in front of them," Bruce told those attending the meeting.

Bob Blakeney, District 10 director of the RRC, said the new rules are more complex than the average field rules. He said each oil and gas field in the state has its own set of rules.

"The main difference in these rules is the amount of gas can be produced from an oil well," Blakeney explained.

Previously the gas-oil ratio was 100 to 1, he said. At this ratio, an oil well that produced five barrels of oil could also produce 500,000 cubic feet (mcf) of gas, he explained.

Now, according to the new rules, an oil well can only produce a daily maximum of 120 mcf casinghead gas when assigned 20

North's sentencing postponed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Oliver L. North's sentencing is postponed while the judge considers defense charges that one of the Iran-Contra jurors who convicted the former White House aide deliberately lied during jury selection.

U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell postponed Friday's scheduled sentencing after North's lawyers produced evidence that juror Tara King failed to disclose that a brother had been convicted of armed robbery and that two others had arrest records.

The defense also alleged that Ms. King's statements to reporters after the verdict that she used marijuana and cocaine before the trial suggests she was under the influence of drugs during the trial.

King told interviewers that she did not use drugs during her jury service.

The judge on Tuesday postponed sentencing until July 5 and scheduled a June 28 hearing on defense allegations that King intentionally withheld the information when she filled out a questionnaire given to prospective jurors.

The questionnaire asked if any member of her family had ever been a party or witness to a civil or criminal court proceeding or had been under investigation by law enforcement authorities.

The 35-year-old office worker answered the question in the negative.

"This apparently intentional misstatement raises serious questions as to juror bias and impartiality," North's lawyers said in pleadings that were unsealed Tuesday by the judge.

Gesell might be forced to grant a mistrial if the defense can prove that it learned after the verdict that King deliberately withheld information to get on the jury.

Independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh, in other pleadings ordered unsealed, said North and his lawyers must prove that they learned about King's misstatements after the verdict.

Otherwise, his motion "constitutes an impermissible attempt to sandbag the judicial process," Walsh said, quoting from a 1982 appellate court decision.

Gesell gave North's lawyers until Friday to state "the precise date and time when counsel first learned each fact."

Walsh also argued that King may have inadvertently answered the question incorrectly, noting that she is nearly 17 years younger than the brother convicted of armed robbery in 1987.

Walsh said it was possible that "any knowledge she did have simply did not come to mind at the time she completed the jury questionnaire," particularly since King has 14 brothers and sisters.

During the trial, the defense did not seek to replace two jurors with alternates following media reports that they had failed to disclose involvements in lawsuits arising from traffic accidents.

Walsh also contended there was no evidence that King was biased against North.

"If King developed any prejudice" from her brothers' trouble with law enforcement, "it would likely be directed against the prosecution, not defendants," Walsh said.

North, 45, a retired Marine lieutenant colonel, faces a possible 10-year sentence.

Schools

The board also approved a recommendation to raise the amount of tuition paid by students from outside the district from $1,925 a year to $1,997.

Haralson said most of that money comes from Grandview-Hopkins students who attend Pampa schools. Board President John Curry asked administrators to see if payment for tuition costs could be rendered earlier in the year.

"It looks like we will go to a system where we will collect at the end of each semester for services rendered instead of waiting for the whole year to go by," Curry said of the district's collection procedure.

The board also approved a report on Metropolitan Achievement Tests that show PISD students are placing above the national average and heard a report on the Latch Key program, which provides after-school care for students whose parents work.

Organizers of the Latch Key program said there is hope the program will be better attended next year at Lamar and Baker schools. Minority populations at both schools are high and there has been reluctance by parents to enroll children in the program.

Latch Key officials said there are new policies that will assure the $15 weekly Latch Key charge does not prohibit parents with limited incomes from enrolling children.

Pampan remains in critical condition

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

Keith French, manager of the family-owned Music Shoppe record store, remains in critical condition in an Amarillo hospital following an automobile accident he had 12 days ago.

French was critically injured after the pickup he was driving smashed into several cars in the 1800 block of North Nelson and then came to rest after hitting a tree.

At the time of the accident, which occurred during a heavy thunderstorm, French was charged with driving while intoxicated.

Sgt. Allen Smith of the Pampa Police Department said Tuesday that it was apparent to his officers French needed medical attention. However, he signed a waiver refusing medical treatment and was then transported to city jail on charges of driving while intoxicated.

"As the intoxilyzer operator, I determined he was unable to perform any type of sobriety test," Smith said. "It was obvious to us the subject had to go to the hospital. But as long as he refused, we couldn't transport him."

Smith said as soon as French passed out and could no longer refuse treatment, he was transported to Coronado Hospital. He said French remained in city jail for about three hours before he passed out.

Records indicate he was transported from Coronado Hospital to Northwest Texas Hospital in Amarillo, where he remains in the intensive care unit.

French, 29, is suffering from severe hemorrhaging in the brain and has had to have his spleen and most of his pancreas removed because of the accident, his mother Frances said this morning.

"Since he was so long getting (to the hospital), the pancreas had produced so many enzymes it had eaten away on his stomach and colon and some of the lung," Mrs. French said.

"They have to operate on him every day," she said of her son's dire condition. He will reportedly have his seventh operation sometime today.

"The doctor told us Friday he would die, but he later said because of his youth he is still pulling through," Mrs. French said. "But he's not out of the woods yet. He's got a long way to go."

She noted that her son has had to be medically paralyzed so he will not move around and spread an infection doctors are fighting to control.

Earlier this year the French family became the center of region-wide attention after Keith's father, Robert French, wandered off from home. The elder French suffers from Alzheimer's disease and has still not been located, though he disappeared in March.

Gray County sheriff's deputies led an area-wide search for Mr. French that ultimately included hundreds of local volunteers looking for the Alzheimer's victim. He still remains on missing persons lists in a four-state area that includes Texas, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Kansas.

Rules

acres, no matter how many barrels of oil the well produces. The larger the acreage, the more gas can be produced.

The exception to this, he said, is new wells that can produce double the amount of gas for two years from the time the well is connected with a pipeline.

Blakeney said the reason for the problems here is that a gas reservoir is located over an oil reservoir and "this is probably the only area in the state where you have different rights for oil and gas."

An oil well can produce gas, he said, but the gas must come from the oil reservoir, because someone else owns the gas rights for gas from the gas reservoir.

If someone owns both the oil and gas, "then they're in good shape," Blakeney said.

Wright toying with comeback

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Speaker Jim Wright has yet to resign from the House but already is toying with the idea of a comeback, saying he would consider accepting "an absolutely genuine draft of a bipartisan nature."

"I am not sure that I should consider it even then, but I do very earnestly appreciate it," the Texas Democrat said Tuesday in a statement.

Wright, who stepped down as speaker amid an ethics investigation, has said he will resign from the House this month but has not said precisely when. He was replaced as speaker on May 31 by Rep. Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash.

Over the weekend, Wright reportedly met in his hometown of Fort Worth with supporters who urged him to run for reelection to the seat in a move to gain political vindication.

AUSTIN (AP) — Cooperation between lawmakers touted during the regular legislative session was lacking on the opening day of the special session as House and Senate leaders wrangled with overhauling Texas' workers' compensation system.

The first day of the session Tuesday featured several divisive moments:

■ Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby described as "idiots" business groups that want to eliminate jury trials in workers' compensation disputes.

■ A House committee approved a bill that does just that.

■ An advocate of making English the "official" state language said the key to solving the workers' compensation controversy was to make sure employees and employers all speak English.

Meanwhile, teamsters union members from Houston and San Antonio were visiting legislators in their offices.

"We're trying to get the Senate to hang with us," said Carl Dudensing, a member of Local 988 in Houston. He said he feared that Gov. Bill Clements would try to wear out lawmakers on the issue. "That damned idiot governor will call special sessions as long as he needs to," he said.

Lawmakers went to work almost immediately on the workers' comp controversy that has been studied and debated for nearly two years.

The Business and Commerce Committee approved a workers' comp bill that would remove jury trials in workers' comp fights and maintain at current levels benefits for workers injured or killed in on-the-job accidents.

The bill by Rep. Richard Smith, R-Bryan, gained the support of business, but was blasted by labor organizations and trial lawyers, who represent injured workers in court.

Hobby, presiding officer of the Senate, ripped into business groups, who claim that litigation costs from jury trials have driven up the price of employer-paid workers' comp insurance premiums, which have increased 148 percent over the past four years.

"We have idiots who represent the business community who say we don't want a trial by jury. You know this is really kind of silly," Hobby said.

Smith defended the bill, saying, "There simply is not any basis that insists an injured worker would want to wait two years ... to get his case heard before a jury if he had an alternative to that."

"The fact of the matter is, the insurance industry uses the system we have today to starve out workers," he said.

House Speaker Gib Lewis said Smith's bill will probably be voted on and approved in the House on Thursday. He said a House and Senate conference committee could begin negotiating on differences in the bill this weekend.

Hobby said the Senate State Affairs Committee would hold its workers' comp hearing Wednesday, adding, "Perhaps a bill will be reported to the Senate" by day's end.

Lewis, D-Fort Worth, said states that have eliminated jury trials "are eating our lunch as far as competitiveness and industrial development."

When Lewis heard of Hobby's remark about the business lobby, he said, "That's totally out of character for (Hobby) to make that statement."

Gov. Clements called the special session after lawmakers failed to reach a compromise on the issue during the 140-day regular session that ended

May 29.

While business groups say the skyrocketing cost of workers' comp is due to jury trials, labor and trial lawyers blame greedy insurance companies and businesses that refuse to provide safe working conditions for their employees.

Joe Gunn, chairman of the United Labor Legislative Committee, said Smith's bill diminished workers' rights to secure benefits for on-the-job injuries.

"This gives us workers' poverty instead of workers' dignity," Gunn said.

During the regular session, the House passed a bill supported by business, and the Senate adopted a proposal backed by labor and trial lawyers, who defend injured workers in disputed comp claims.

Gunn criticized the bill by Smith for reducing injury benefits from previous proposals to the current level, despite an interim legislative report that said benefits in some areas were too low.

Speaker Lewis said the benefits could be negotiated.

But Gunn said the differences in Smith's bill and the previous Senate version are so great, he expected lawmakers would need the entire 30-day special session, if not more, to resolve the issue.

Committee votes $200 million for initial SSC jobs

WASHINGTON (AP) — Legislation is pending before the House that authorizes $200 million to begin construction of the super collider next year, but supporters say they may have a fight on their hands when the bill gets to the floor.

"I think it could be a tough battle," says Rep. Jim Chapman, a member of the House Appropriations Committee, "so I have asked the committee chairman to move it quickly. He promised we'll have our bill on the floor by next week."

Speaker Tom Foley, D-Wash., has also promised quick consideration of the legislation, Chapman said.

The Sulphur Springs Democrat said opponents of the super collider could be well organized by the time the bill is on the House floor, but that moving the legislation quickly may be a way to end run such opposition efforts.

"The bottom line is that at each step of the process we become a larger and larger target for those who oppose the project," Chapman said. "We're out of the committee process, no longer in the back rooms of Congress; now we're on the floor of the House, where C-SPAN watches everything we do."

The House Appropriations Committee on Tuesday voted to spend $200 million on the super collider in the fiscal year that begins Oct. 1, setting aside $110 million for construction and $90 million for research and development of what would be the largest scientific instrument ever built.

The vote came less than a week after the Appropriations subcommittee on energy and water development approved the collider funds as part of a spending package for Energy Department and U.S. Army Corps of Engineers projects.

"People who oppose the super collider do so with some jeopardy," Chapman warned, pointing to the thousands of energy and water projects in the bill that affect many members' districts.

"Anyone who wants to take on the super collider and strip it out of this bill, having it unanimously approved by the subcommittee and unanimously approved by the full committee, would do so at some risk," Chapman said.

Chapman said there is "some grumbling out there" about the collider, and some members who believe their priority projects did not get a proper allocation could be resentful of the collider's $200 million appropriation.

President Bush, however, had sought $250 million for the project, which would be built south of Dallas.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen acknowledged after the vote that finding the $250 million will be difficult as the focus on the project shifts to the Senate.

"However, I believe the case for the SSC is compelling and I am working to ensure that adequate funding is available to begin construction in 1990," said Bentsen, a Texas Democrat.

Chapman said he was able to strike language in the subcommittee bill that said funding for ultimate construction may become more difficult in future years.

UH to complete divestiture from South Africa

HOUSTON (AP) — Two years after the University of Houston system regents voted to divest its investments in corporations doing business in South Africa, the sale of such investments is being completed, officials said.

The directive passed by the regents directed the system's financial managers to complete such a divestiture by this Friday unless it would prove financially harmful for the institution.

Texas has five of six U.S. cities with majority Hispanic populations

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas has five of the six U.S. cities that are mostly Hispanic, Census Bureau figures show, with Laredo being the most Hispanic city in the nation.

Census bureau figures from 1985 show Laredo's population is 97.9 percent Hispanic.

The other Texas cities with Hispanics accounting for more than half the population are McAllen, 82.9 percent; Brownsville, 81 percent; El Paso, 67.5 percent, and Corpus Christi, 50.5 percent, according to Census Bureau estimates. Las Cruces, N.M., is 56.5 percent, the Census reported Tuesday.

In its first detailed estimates of minorities by state since the Census Bureau conducted its 1980 head count, the agency said Texas had 3.7 million Hispanic residents in 1985, second only to California's nearly 5.9 million.

Hispanics accounted for 22.8 percent of Texas' population in 1985, up from 21.1 percent in 1980, the Census Bureau said.

Texas also had 1.9 million black residents in 1985, who accounted for 11.8 percent of the population. In 1980, Texas had 1.7 million blacks who accounted for 12 percent of the state's population.

Miguel Conchas, director of the Laredo and Webb County convention and visitor's bureau, said the Census Bureau figure seems "a little high." He said he would have estimated that Hispanic residents account for between 90 percent and 95 percent of the Rio Grande city's population.

Conchas said the Anglo population has increased slightly in the last two years, a period not reflected by the Census figures, due to the growth of the maquiladora industry in Laredo and Nuevo Laredo, Mexico.

Nuevo Laredo's 61 twin-plants have brought in mid- and top-management personnel from outside the state, many of whom are Anglo, Conchas said.

While seven flags have flown over the palm-tree lined city of conquistadores and cowboys — from Spain, France, Mexico, Texas, the Republic of the Rio Grande, the United States, and the Confederacy — Conchas estimates that if 97.9 percent of Laredo's residents are Hispanic, at least 95 percent are of Mexican descent.

Nationally, the number of Hispanics increased from 14.3 million in 1980 to an estimated 17.5 million by July 1, 1985, for a five-year growth rate of 22.9 percent. The growth rate in Texas was 23.1 percent.

UH system has withdrawn only about a third of its $6.4 million invested in companies operating in South Africa.

School officials said the withdrawal has been slowed by poor stock performances and by the stock market crash in October 1987.

As of May, the UH system had investments in about 13 companies with South African-related business operations. Most of the investments are in the form of securities traded on the Cities with the greatest concentrations of Hispanics, after Los Angeles, are New York, 2.3 million; Miami, with 815,000 in 1985; San Francisco, 775,000, and Chicago, 757,000.

The Houston metropolitan area, with 595,000 Hispanics, ranked sixth nationally, followed by the metropolitan areas of San Antonio, 568,000; El Paso, 360,000; San Diego, 358,000; Dallas, 346,000; and McAllen, 281,000.

San Antonio's population was about 46 percent Hispanic in 1985, according to the census. The Houston area was nearly 17 percent and Dallas-Fort Worth area approximately 10 percent, the census found.

In the Southwest, 37 metropolitan areas had populations of more than 10 percent Hispanic. Outside the Southwest, only three cities — Miami, 28.3 percent; New York, 13.2 percent, and Yakima, Wash., with 17.3 percent, had populations of more than 10 percent.

The Census Bureau said Tarrant County had the second-highest rate of Hispanic growth of the metropolitan counties surveyed, rising 40.2 percent behind only the 47.4 percent increase for Broward County, Fla.

The university system also has adhered to the regents' 1987 resolution not to invest further in firms doing business in South Africa, where a minority of whites hold power over a majority of disenfranchised blacks through the system of apartheid.

The University of Houston system consists of four separate institutions — the University of Houston, and branches in Clear Lake, Victoria and downtown Houston.

Veto of foreclosure bill shocks industry, activists

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements' veto of a bill to change foreclosure procedures in Texas will keep bankruptcy rates high, as borrowers seek protection from lender pressure, say people representing debtors.

Critics of the veto also said the action could lead to more lawsuits — although the governor said he was nixing the bill because of the potential for increased litigation.

"People are hysterical. They are upset," said Carol Abbassi, owner of an Austin business that helps people re-negotiate loans.

Real estate professionals and consumer groups claim that some Texas lenders have abused their powers by bidding unfairly low amounts for foreclosed property and then suing the borrower to collect the difference.

The compromise bill passed by the Legislature was backed by lenders, consumer groups and real estate developers. It allowed borrowers to request a court hearing to determine the fair value of a home or commercial property when a lender seeks such a deficiency judgment.

The bill was among 54 rejected Sunday by Clements, who said in his proclamation that the foreclosure measure was "unwise and inappropriate."

"This bill has the potential to result in numerous lawsuits and further delay the collection of deficiency judgments," Clements stated. "Such delays and further litigation are not in the state's best interest."

Abbassi said she received many calls from worried clients Monday, adding, "These homeowners are ready to slit their wrists this afternoon." People who have defaulted on their home loans are among those who continue to be at risk from low foreclosure prices bid by lenders.

Lawyer Joe Longley, a consumer lobbyist, said the veto could lead to further litigation over foreclosure disputes. The Texas Supreme Court, he said, could resolve some borrower vs. lender disputes when it rules on two foreclosure-related cases before it.

Robert Harris, president of the Texas Bankers Association, said his industry group had written the governor recommending approval of the compromise bill.

"I'm sure that some fingers are being pointed at us that we had something to do with this," Harris told the Austin American-Statesman. "We absolutely did not. When this organization cuts a deal with the Legislature and our opponents, we live with those compromises."

Rep. Terral Smith, who sponsored the foreclosure provision, said the governor's veto will lead to more lawsuits.

"We will end up with court-made law rather than legislative law. It will be costly and we don't know what the rules will be. We will end up with tremendous litigation," said Smith, R-Austin.

The foreclosure bill was criticized as a real estate developer bailout bill, but Smith said he backed it because it would protect homeowners from unwarranted deficiency judgments.

Grand jury refuses to indict bus driver in shooting death

DALLAS (AP) — A Dallas County grand jury has declined to indict a 37-year-old city bus driver in connection with the May shooting death of a passenger.

Chauncey J. Plummer, a Dallas bus driver for 10 years, had been charged with murder in the May 24 shooting of David Hayden, 25. But a grand jury on Tuesday refused to force a trial.

However, Plummer might still lose his job for violating rules against carrying firearms on routes.

Plummer has maintained he carried the weapon as protection on his route, which is marked by violence. He said he has been assaulted by belligerent passengers in the past.

Plummer picked up Hayden and a woman on a downtown street and told authorities that, through his rearview mirror, he saw the woman hand her bus pass to Hayden, who then tried to use it.

The driver told Hayden he could not use the pass, an argument ensued and Plummer ordered Hayden off the bus.

police records show. Hayden was shot once in the back with a handgun as he exited.

Plummer told police that Hayden punched him in the jaw before he stepped off the bus.

Plummer had been assaulted twice on the bus route in the past two years, once breaking his hand and the other time suffering a black eye, Dallas Area Rapid Transit spokesman Ron Whittington said.

Meanwhile, DART authorities have begun proceedings to dismiss Plummer for violating company policy, which forbids drivers from carrying firearms.

A decision is expected by Friday.

They have need for self-defense

Last month in Brussels George Bush finally showed some presidential stature. At the conclusion of the NATO summit he crafted a compromise on short-range nuclear-missile forces that, while not making everyone happy, didn't upset anyone terribly much either. West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl wanted to hold immediate talks with the Soviet Union on taking the weapons out of Europe. This threatened to break up the alliance, because the Soviets maintain an overwhelming dominance in conventional weapons.

Bush brokered a compromise in which missile reductions would take a back seat to talks for cutting conventional forces to more equal levels. Kohl praised Bush's role for showing "inspiration emanating from the leadership of the United States." He added: "Mr. President, it was a wise and right decision at a very important point in time."

The Bush compromise steadied the alliance at a time when it seemed to be cracking under pressure. The compromise also allows Bush to present a solid front to the Soviets in the conventional-forces reduction talks. And the compromise shows the Soviets that the Western democracies, however much they bicker as free, independent peoples, still can stay united.

Bush's task now is to follow this triumph with yet more imaginative thinking. Yes, he must negotiate with the Soviets, and now has a firm hand to do so. But he should also work things out with the other NATO nations for them to take on more of their own defense burden. Forty years after NATO's inception the alliance recognizes its mission — the defense of Europe — and is clearly capable of closing ranks to carry out that mission.

They are reluctant to do so, perhaps understandably. With some 40 percent of America's $300 billion defense budget going to defend Europe, that's a military welfare subsidy of $120 billion a year. Moreover, some of NATO's difficulties arise from the differences between America, a country an ocean away, and the alliance's European members. The Europeans wonder if America would risk a nuclear war to defend Western Europe. But if the Western European nations had full control of their own defense, this dilemma would not come up.

For these reasons, Bush should work out a plan for the gradual withdrawal of U.S. forces from Europe. We could remain friends and allies, even members of NATO. But we would leave to the nations of Western Europe the responsibility, and honor, of defending themselves.

Sometimes it's not really art

WASHINGTON — What is art? What is obscenity? What is censorship? And what is the role of the U.S. government in the world of art?

Old questions, these. Unanswerable questions, I suppose. But they all came together in Washington last week, when the Corcoran Gallery of Art canceled a scheduled exhibition of the photographs of Robert Mapplethorpe. The decision has set off an uproar.

A confession of ignorance: I never heard of Mapplethorpe, but he is identified by The Washington Post as "one of the pre-eminent photographers of his generation." During his lifetime (he died of AIDS in March at the age of 42) he charged $10,000 for a portrait sitting. Some of his single prints sold for $20,000. In the exotic world of New York, he evidently was a striking character.

A couple of years ago, the University of Pennsylvania's Institute of Contemporary Art (ICA) decided to put together a retrospective exhibition of 150 of Mapplethorpe's photographs. The ICA applied to the National Endowment for the Arts and received a grant of $30,000 to put the show together. Mind you, this is $30,000 in taxpayers' money. My money. Your money.

The exhibition accordingly made its debut at the Whitney Museum of Modern Art in New York. Later it was put on display in Philadelphia and Chicago. It was to have opened at the Corcoran on July 1, but on June 12 Christina Orr-Cahall, director of the Corcoran, announced that the show would not be mounted. A member of the National Council on the Arts declared he was "astounded" by the decision; he termed it "an enormous insult to art and the art world."

Why was the show so abruptly called off? A catalog of the exhibition had begun to circulate on Capitol Hill. Influential senators began to make the rumbling noises that precede a gully-washing storm. Discretion, the Corcoran concluded, is the better part of valor. The Mapplethorpe prints will remain in storage. An exhibition of prints by Japanese photographers will be mounted instead.

Why the thunder? Vanity Fair magazine ran an article last February on the Mapplethorpe exhibition as it appeared at the Whitney. Dominick Dunne wrote that the photographs represented Mapplethorpe's "art at the outer limits of his own personal sexual experience."

One triptych, for example, depicted two men in black leather, adorned with the paraphernalia of bondage and torture. "In the photographs, Jim, the master, is urinating into the willing, even eager mouth of Tom, the tied-up slave."

In another print, "an elephantine-size black penis simply hangs out of the unzipped fly of a man whose head is cropped." In a third, titled Marty and Veronica, a woman engages in oral sex with the truncated body of her lesbian lover. From Dunne's article:

"Mapplethorpe was a participant in the dark world he photographed, not a voyeur, a point he made clear by allowing a self-portrait showing his rectum — rarely considered to be one of the body's beauty spots — to be hung on the wall of the museum, with a bullwhip up it."

You get the idea. I need no persuasion to agree that photography is a form of art. I think of such photographers as Ansel Adams, Edward Weston and Alfred Eisenstaedt as artists. But in whose warped eye can Mapplethorpe's obscenities be honestly described as "art," and especially as the kind of art that warrants the encouragement of $30,000 in tax funds?

I state the matter bluntly: This is not art in any rational view. It is prurient junk, intended to shock the decent sensibilities of those who would come to a public museum.

Was the Corcoran's decision an act of invidious and hateful "censorship"? Not in my book. It was an act of political prudence and intellectual courage. The original decision to mount the show was a mistake, just as the NEA's decision to fund it was a mistake.

Suppose these original decisions never had been made. Would this have been censorship? Or would this have been no more than an exercise in curatorial judgment that time and money could be more wisely invested elsewhere?

Some years ago I wrote a book on the law of obscenity censorship. Because I live by the First Amendment, I am prepared to go a long way in defending a right to free expression. But when it comes to free expression with public funds in public institutions, reasonable lines have to be drawn. In this appalling affair, the lines were trampled underfoot.

Today in history

By The Associated Press
Today is Wednesday, June 21, the 172nd day of 1989. There are 193 days left in the year. Summer arrives at 5:53 a.m. EDT.

Today's highlight in history:
On June 21, 1964, civil rights workers Michael H. Schwerner, Andrew Goodman and James E. Chaney disappeared after they were released from a jail in Philadelphia, Mississippi. Their bodies were found buried in an earth dam six weeks later. (Seven men, including a chief deputy sheriff and a Ku Klux Klan leader, were convicted in 1967 of conspiracy in the killings.)

On this date:
In 1788, the U.S. Constitution went into effect as New Hampshire became the ninth state to ratify it by a 57-46 vote in the Legislature.

In 1834, Cyrus Hall McCormick received a patent for his reaping machine.

In 1887, Britain celebrated the golden jubilee of Queen Victoria.

In 1932, heavyweight Max Schmeling lost a title fight by decision to Jack Sharkey, prompting Schmeling's manager, Joe Jacobs, to exclaim: "We was robbed!"

In 1943, federal troops put down a racial riot in Detroit that claimed some 30 lives.

We are all in a minority now

On Broadway Tennessee Williams is yesterday; Edward Albee is passe. As they recede into the ranks of the venerable, the plays that are talked about are off-Broadway: Love Letters and Cocktail Hour, both by A.R. (Pete) Gurney.

He is making fun at the expense of WASPs, white Anglo-Saxon Protestants, because, he says, they are the only segment of our society we dare make jokes about anymore.

Each race, religion and nationality in some ways is distinguished from the others but those differences are now unmentionable.

The WASPs, says Gurney, are the last American ethnic pincushion that anybody feels free to ridicule.

At the same time, rising on the best-seller lists is a book by Robert Christopher called Crashing the Gates. It is about the de-WASPing of America's power elite.

It traces three decades during which WASPs have been replaced in politics, business, academia and in the media.

The population of the United States until 30 years ago was predominantly WASP.

According to the U.S. Census Bureau, our country's population today comprises 29.7 million blacks, 18.8 million Hispanics, 53 million Catholics, 5.9 million Jews. Other religions (other than Protestant), 14.5 million.

Paul Harvey

WASPs, 88.1 million, are no longer a majority. The American "majority" never was easy to categorize. All of us are "mostly something else."

But over the years we were helped to a better understanding of one another by loving Tevee in Fiddler on the Roof, Father O'Malley in Going My Way, Freddie Prinz in Chico and the Man, poor folk of Catfish Row in Porgy and Bess and Bill Cosby's Dr. Huxtable.

The media — theater, radio, TV, movies — tended to depolarize us. If we are now, in fact, a "kinder, gentler nation" it is because the media helped the melting pot melt.

Pete Gurney says he hopes his plays will reveal WASPs in a light that we can both laugh at and sympathize with.

"WASPs," he says, "are not really selfish, treacherous, heartless boobs. They have honor, decency, loyalty and a great sense of humor. They treat people courteously, civilly, and that, after all, is the source of the word 'civilization.'"

But Gurney says WASPs "tend to be perceived and to perceive themselves as repressed. They don't deal with these feelings. Some stutter. Some become addicted to games and sailing or liquor in their effort to get out from under."

So now our nation has become the first in the world where there is a majority of none. Said another way, a society in which everyone is a "minority" is a society without any "minorities."

In the future, to whom will we protest our grievances?

Darn! At long last I am a minority and with nobody to blame for my problems.

Theresa Saldana has quest for justice

By SARAH OVERSTREET

Slasher movies have made extremely good livings for their authors the past few years, and I've got a great idea for one.

There's this struggling young actress, see, and this crazy guy watches her in a movie and becomes obsessed with her. Only it's not a harmless kind of obsession, like a crush or something. Instead of trying to get a chance to talk to her, or maybe ask her for a date, he decides the only way he can win her is by "sending her into eternity," there to join her after his exit from this world.

The young actress goes blissfully about her seemingly normal life as the slasher begins to stalk her. Imagine the tension building as we watch him watching her, now and then taking out his hunting knife to hone the blade just a little more.

The scene that everyone will pay the big money to see, of course, will be the one where the slasher finally confronts the young woman as she comes out of a music lesson, and rips her open so savagely and so often that the knife bends.

This would probably be good enough to bring in the crowds once, but it's not enough to parlay into a sequel, "Woman-Slasher II." With that in mind, I'll have a passing delivery man wrest the knife away from the slasher, have the girl lose almost all the blood in her body and almost die on the operating table. Next I'll write in several years of physical therapy and counseling as she struggles to reconstruct her life. Then I'll have her triumphantly resume her acting career, marry and become pregnant.

But just when she thinks the nightmare is behind her, I'll have the crazy man write a letter to a TV talk-show host, saying he's still going to kill the woman. I'll include a few scenes of him in jail, with his psychiatrists all saying, "Oooooohhhh, don't let him out; he's paranoid and still very dangerous." I'll end the movie with the girl hearing the news on television of his pending release, despite the psychiatrists' misgivings. Then I'll start writing the sequel.

Great idea, huh? Well darn the luck, it's already been done, and in real life. In 1982, Scottish drifter Arthur Jackson stalked and brutally attacked actress Theresa Saldana in just that way. Jackson was convicted later that year and received the stiffest sentence California law allowed: 12 years in prison for attempted murder.

Until last week, Saldana believed Jackson would be allowed to once again stalk her and try to kill her. California officials told her that Jackson would most probably be paroled June 15 under the terms of California law. Those terms gave Jackson a day off of his sentence for every day served without trouble. They told her there was nothing they could do.

Saldana did the only thing she could; having been left helpless by legal authorities, she appealed to the media. When word of Jackson's imminent parole was publicized, public outcry held officials' feet to the fire, and they found there was something they could do after all. On June 8, Los Angeles prosecutors filed new criminal charges against Jackson for making death threats against Saldana from prison. He could receive an additional seven years and eight months in prison if convicted, but, in light of his mental history, he could remain behind bars for life.

That officials delayed so long, and made Theresa Saldana live again in terror of this madman, is unconscionable. But it has accomplished one thing, as no other case before it: Theresa Saldana's story has brought to public awareness the plight of the victim at the hands of our judicial system.

Jury finds congressman guilty on all counts in perjury trial

By ROBERT BYRD
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — Pat Swindall, eight months ago a congressman and once a Senate hopeful, now stands convicted of lying to a grand jury investigating a drug-related money laundering sting.

"Obviously, I'm very disappointed," said the 38-year-old conservative Republican, who lost re-election in November following his perjury indictment.

He was convicted Tuesday of all nine counts and faces a possible 10 months to five years in prison and $250,000 fine on each count. Sentencing was scheduled for Aug. 25.

Probation is not an option under new federal sentencing guidelines, which Swindall supported as a congressman.

Swindall, who spent two terms representing Atlanta's eastern suburbs, had hoped for an acquittal and a 1990 race against Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga. Now, barring a victory on appeal, he will go to prison after his Aug. 25 sentencing.

Swindall sat impassively in the federal courtroom as the jury announced its verdict on the 22nd day of his trial. His wife, Kim, rested her hand on his back.

Later, he told reporters he would appeal.

"This process is not over," he said. "We'll be trying this case again, and, I hope, not in Atlanta."

Swindall's attorneys asked before and during the trial for his case to be moved because of pretrial publicity.

He said he "had gotten involved in something I never should have gotten involved in, but I've said I had been 100 percent truthful before the grand jury. That hasn't changed."

Swindall, who went to Congress in 1984, was defeated in November by Democrat Ben Jones, a former TV actor in The Dukes of Hazzard, while under the cloud of the perjury indictment.

Swindall was accused of lying to a federal grand jury in his Feb. 2, 1988, testimony concerning his month-long 1987 negotiations with an undercover Internal Revenue Service agent and with a Swindall supporter later convicted of money laundering. The IRS agent was posing as a drug-money launderer.

The government said Swindall was seeking $850,000 to complete construction on his luxurious suburban home; the money was to be funneled to Swindall through a mortgage company created by his friend and political supporter, Charles LeChasney, authorities said.

Swindall had been accused of 10 counts that said he made 20 false statements to the grand jury. The judge dropped one count, and the jurors Tuesday found 18 to be willful lies.

Specifically, they found that he lied when he said he didn't recall being told the money included narcotics dollars, when he said he never agreed to accept the money and when he said a $150,000 check he received — but later returned — had nothing to do with the deal.

Swindall, a lawyer, said the trial included at least two "very reversible errors" which he hopes will win him a new trial: Freeman's dismissal of the testimony of Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., that House members have an overwhelming workload, and a prosecutor's remark concerning the possible motivation of defendants to testify during criminal trials.

Swindall did not testify in his own defense.

Neither area, however, directly addressed the bulk of the case: hours of secretly tape-recorded conversations between Swindall, LeChasney and IRS undercover agent Michael Mullaney.

In those tapes, heard by the jury, Swindall was told the money he was seeking "certainly" included drug money, was told he would be part of an operation to "wash" cash, and proposed that a mortgage company be set up as a "buffer" to funnel him the money. The deal eventually collapsed.

Federal judge approves settlement between Drexel and SEC

NEW YORK (AP) — Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. moved toward resolving securities fraud charges against it when a judge approved an unprecedented civil settlement between the Wall Street firm and the government.

The pact with the Securities and Exchange Commission places the nation's fifth-largest securities firm under strict supervision and requires Drexel to sever ties with its former junk bond chief, Michael Milken.

Approval of the settlement Tuesday by U.S. District Judge Milton Pollack cleared the way for Drexel to plead guilty to six felonies and pay a record $650 million in fines and restitution to settle separate criminal charges with the Justice Department.

"This settlement will bring to a close 2½ difficult years for Drexel, its employees and its clients," Drexel lawyer Thomas Curnin said in court.

The firm now can "go forward and devote its time and energies to the service of its clients," he said.

Judge Kimba Wood now is expected to begin considering the criminal plea bargain reached with the U.S. attorney's office in December.

The civil settlement was reached in April but was held up by legal challenges by Milken's attorneys.

Milken said Pollack should have been removed from the case because of an alleged conflict of interest — the judge's wife stood to profit from a leveraged buyout Drexel helped finance. The 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld Pollack when he refused to step down, and the Supreme Court refused to consider the case earlier this month.

During Tuesday's hearing, Pollack said that after careful study he granted the joint request by Drexel and the SEC to approve the settlement.

The SEC charged Drexel last fall with insider trading and other securities frauds involving more than 20 takeovers and other investment deals between 1984 and 1986.

As part of the settlement, Drexel neither admitted nor denied guilt.

The settlement does not include separate civil charges by the SEC against Milken, who resigned from the firm last week. Milken also has been indicted on criminal fraud and racketeering charges stemming from his activities at Drexel. His brother, Lowell, another former Drexel employee, also faces civil and criminal charges.

Thomas Newkirk, the SEC's chief litigation counsel in the case, said he urged the settlement so Drexel could continue cooperating with the government in other fraud investigations, including, presumably, the Milken case.

"This cooperation is essential not only to the commission's ongoing investigations but to investigations being conducted by the United States attorney," Newkirk said.

The settlement requires Drexel to overhaul its securities law compliance operations, its top management and some trading departments, and to submit to three years of close SEC scrutiny. It does not take effect until the criminal plea bargain with the Justice Department is approved.

The pact also requires Drexel to bar its employees from ever doing business with Milken or any clients he advises.

The settlement marks another milestone in the government's three-year investigation of corruption on Wall Street that began with former Drexel executive Dennis Levine and led to arbitrator Ivan Boesky, who paid $100 million to settle civil insider trading charges with the SEC in late 1986.

Richards returns $285,000 in lost tax payments

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Treasurer Ann Richards returned approximately $285,000 in lost federal tax payments to the Internal Revenue Service, saying she hoped the money would help reduce the federal deficit, which is running about $163 billion.

"I know it is difficult to send money to Uncle Sam, but maybe this will be a small start in reducing the federal deficit," Mrs. Richards said Tuesday.

The $284,889.36 is from 560 cashier's checks which were made out to the IRS, but never cashed, she said.

Under state law, the money belongs to the person or entity that a cashier's check is made out to — not to the person who purchased the check originally.

"For the most part, we believe these checks represent individual tax payments to the IRS that were either lost in the mail or never sent to IRS," she said.

"Unfortunately, a lot of those people probably had to pay their taxes twice because of these lost checks," said Mrs. Richards.

The largest single check was for $10,000, Mrs. Richards said, adding that the IRS has promised that any taxpayer they can identify as having had to pay taxes twice will get a refund.

Mrs. Richards said the Texas Treasury Unclaimed Property Division will turn over all pertinent information it has to the IRS in an effort to help find the original issuers of the check.

Shootings reported as wildcat coal miners strikes continue

By MATT HARVEY
Associated Press Writer

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Strike-related shootings were reported in two states as a wildcat strike by 28,000 miners in Appalachia and the Midwest showed no sign of easing despite the release of three jailed union leaders.

Meantime, CSX Transportation Inc. reported that the railroad's coal loadings were down about 1,000 cars per day because of the strike, putting 300 workers at least temporarily off the job.

"If the strike continues and spreads, the jobs of as many as 2,500 employees could be affected," said John W. Snow, president and chief executive officer of CSX Transportation, headquartered in Jacksonville, Fla.

CSX spokeswoman Suzanne Walston estimated the miners' strike has reduced by 15 percent the number of cars loaded daily by the company.

Some union and industry officials had predicted an end to the walkouts with the release of the union leaders jailed in Virginia for their actions in a strike against the Lebanon, Va.-based Pittston Coal Group Inc.

The three were released Monday night. On Tuesday, they promised a federal judge they would abide by his order banning sit-down demonstrations to block coal trucks at Pittston's processing plants.

Nearly 1,700 United Mine Workers members walked off their Pittston jobs in Virginia and West Virginia on April 5 after working more than 14 months without a contract.

The strike spread to Pittston's Kentucky operations Monday, idling 200 more UMW members.

Pittston had dropped out of the Bituminous Coal Operators Association to negotiate independently.

The unauthorized walkouts began June 12 after a UMW rally in Charleston to protest Pittston's action and to protest the fines and jail terms assessed union members in Virginia.

Shootings were reported Tuesday in Alabama and West Virginia.

In Sumiton, Ala., Assistant Police Chief Steve Jacks said a coal truck was hit by five bullets. He said the driver, whom he refused to identify, was not struck by any of the .22-caliber rounds, but did complain of grittiness in his eyes, possibly caused from the broken windshield. The truck belongs to Black and Gold Trucking, an independent Sumiton company.

Jacks said the shooting was strike-related and police were investigating, but no arrests had been made.

"At this time, we are working closely with some union people to try to get some tempers down," Jacks said. "I think we are making some gain and can come to a neutral standoff."

In West Virginia, where almost two-thirds of the wildcat strikers are located, strike-related gunshots were reported in Mingo County, but no arrests were made and no one was reported injured.

Wildcat strikers also headed to southwest Virginia coal fields to try to slow Pittston coal shipments.

"They've just got the place saturated with people; it's pretty well blocked up," said Virginia state police Lt. C.F. Eaton.

One of the freed union leaders, Marty Hudson, field commander, said he's optimistic miners can beat Pittston. Hudson said the wildcat strikers fear a Pittston victory could set a precedent.

"They see what Pittston is doing as a threat to their unions," Hudson said. "If Pittston is successful, it will directly affect their lives."

A union official in Illinois said the release of the union leaders may help take the steam out of the strike in his state.

Three executed for train arson

BEIJING (AP) — Shanghai authorities today killed three men convicted of setting a train on fire, the first reported executions since the military crackdown that has crushed the pro-democracy movement.

The three were shot to death at a public gathering a day after Shanghai's highest court rejected their appeals of the death penalty, a spokesman at the Shanghai Foreign Affairs Office said.

The United States and other governments had appealed for clemency for the three and for eight people in Beijing also given death sentences for alleged roles in protests triggered by the June 3-4 army assault on Beijing.

In other developments, the government today ordered colleges to set up new political education programs so students will learn to "love socialism and love the army" and accept official condemnation of the pro-democracy protests.

New arrests were also reported, raising the total nationwide to more than 1,600 since June 4, when the army killed hundreds of unarmed civilians in Beijing in crushing the student-led movement for a freer, less corrupt society.

Authorities at Beijing airport arrested four people who were involved in the protests and trying to flee, the Beijing Daily said. It said two were women trying to board a Paris-bound plane under false names. It did not detail their alleged crimes.

The three men executed in Shanghai were convicted of setting the train ablaze June 6 after it ran through a barricade set up by protesters, killing six people.

Local Shanghai radio said there were "no legal reasons for mitigating the punishment" of workers Xu Guoming and Yan Xuerong and Bian Hanwu, who was unemployed.

Death sentences in China usually are carried out by a bullet to the back of the head. There is no record of a death sentence in Communist China ever being overturned on appeal, although they sometimes are commuted to life in prison.

The Foreign Ministry did not immediately respond to President Bush's order Tuesday that U.S. government officials suspend all high-level contacts with Chinese officials.

Washington also said it would seek to postpone consideration of new loans to China by international organizations in order to protest the harshness of the crackdown.

In Hebei province south of Beijing, officials said they arrested 44 "ruffians" who took part in protests in the capital. Among them were two members of the United Association of Beijing Universities, the independent student union that led seven weeks of pro-democracy protests.

Shanghai officials said 65 people had surrendered there, including 42 leaders of independent student unions and other illegal groups. It said they repented and some, after "seeing the light," informed on others.

Neighbors worry about cancer risk at plant topping EPA list

By JEFF AWALT
Associated Press Writer

PORT NECHES (AP) — In the shadow of a Texaco chemical plant that topped a government list for cancer risk, a housewife complains of odors, a school janitor worries about a sudden skin ailment and a young pregnant woman thinks of moving.

Government and industry officials say the report listing Texaco's Port Neches facility as the nation's worst cancer risk is flawed, but that hasn't convinced the neighbors whose fears it awakened.

"Sure, I'm worried," said Michelle Thompson, 19, who learned she was pregnant the same week a congressman caused a stir by releasing the 5-year-old Environmental Protection Agency list.

"I have a son. I have one on the way. I don't want to live around here if there's going to be a threat of cancer," she said. "I never even thought about the plant. I've only lived here a year and it never even crossed my mind, but I've already talked to (my husband) Mark about leaving."

Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., released the report June 8 listing Texaco's butadiene plant as posing a one-in-10 risk of cancer. Though the ranking was hypothetical — it was based on the chances of contracting cancer for a person living within 200 meters of the plant over a 70-year period — it put Texaco's facility at the top of a list of 205 plants around the country.

Government and industry officials said the data was outdated, based on assumptions and offered no real indication of cancer risk, and some have chided Waxman for prompting unnecessary public fear.

Measurements by Texas agencies sharply contradict the EPA report, which the EPA described as a priority guide to locating pollutants and an inaccurate source of actual cancer risk.

State studies also show that cancer deaths in the area around the plant reflect statewide trends.

"I would agree that this is a useful tool for bringing that information to light, and certainly we're not saying that it's not a problem," said Marcia Willhite, a toxicologist in the Texas Air Control Board's research division. "We have been looking at it in the past and plan another monitoring trip in the near future."

"On the other hand, if I were living in Port Neches I would be pretty alarmed by some of the information I'm reading in the newspaper," Ms. Willhite said. "We just don't see them as real-world estimates."

People who live near the plant said the EPA report did heighten their concerns.

Pearl Clark, whose mother died of cancer and husband is undergoing treatment for the disease, wonders if the EPA report may be close to the truth.

"I have no proof, but I have often wondered about these plants," said Mrs. Clark, 57. "I think everybody here has wondered."

"There used to be a lot more people around here, but they got scared and moved out," said Violet Smith, who has lived across the street from the plant for 27 years. "We were planning to go too, but we just couldn't afford it."

"My doctor just told me he wants me to go see a specialist because this might be skin cancer," 53-year-old janitor Paul Thomas said, pointing to a spot on his forehead. "I know you can get that from the sun. I never would've thought about that plant before now, but I can't help but wonder."

The Texaco plant produces per year about 300,000 tons of butadiene, an ethylene extract used in the production of rubber. Butadiene has been linked to leukemia and lymphomas.

But officials at the plant said its design, rather than emissions, affected the EPA ranking.

The EPA used a list provided by Texaco naming every possible source of leakage from the World War II-era plant, and then assumed leakage from every point in constructing what was essentially a worst-case model.

Because the plant uses a unique once-through cooling water system, drawing from the Neches River and discharging it into water downstream, the number of potential leakage points is greater than plants using an enclosed system, said Ray Fletcher, manager of technical services at the plant.

Texaco has been testing every possible source of leakage annually since 1986 and found few leaks, he said.

"The number of actual emissions we have reported since then have been well within the accepted range ... and the number has decreased every year," Fletcher said.

Texas Air Control Board officials said they also are concerned about the potential for leaks with the water system, but added that on-site tests have never reflected a hazardous level of emissions.

A level of 220 micrograms per cubic meter is used as a guideline for hazardous levels of butadiene, Willhite said, but the highest level ever found near the Texaco plant was 20 ppm in 1984.

The plant, however, is facing possible fines for three nuisance violations stemming from odor complaints.

Oreo cookies and Teddy Grahams combine to create the details on this Teddy Bear Cake, sure to delight children of all ages.

Two favorites combine in one teddy bear cake

If you could imagine two of your children's favorite treats wrapped up in one cake, it might look like this lovable Teddy Grahams Bear Cake.

Boasting two flavors of Teddy Grahams — chocolate and honey — the cute critter also has six OREO cookies making up his paws and ears. Nonpareils, gumdrops, jelly beans and a strawberry fruit roll complete the totally edible bear.

The Teddy Grahams Bear Cake recipe was created by the Nabisco Brands Consumer Food Center. Faye Egan, who directs the center, says the cake is ideal for parties and other special children's occasions.

TEDDY GRAHAM BEAR CAKE

Makes 1 cake

- 1 (18.25-ounce) package white cake mix
- 2 cups Chocolate TEDDY GRAHAMS Graham Snacks
- 3 cups prepared white frosting
- 6 OREO Chocolate Sandwich Cookies
- 4 chocolate nonpareils
- 3 large sugar-coated gumdrops
- 2 small sugar-coated gumdrops
- 2 blackjelly beans
- 31 Honey TEDDY GRAHAMS

Graham Snacks

- 1 strawberry fruit roll
- Chocolate decorating icing

Prepare cake mix batter according to package directions; fold in chocolate graham snacks. Grease and flour 1 (8-inch) round cake pan and 1 (8 x 8 x 2-inch) baking pan. Divide and spoon batter into prepared pans. Bake at 350 F for 35 minutes or until cake tests done. Cool.

To assemble, cut 2-inch wide strip from one side of square layer. Cut a semicircle from one 6-inch edge, cutting from corners to a 1-inch depth at center. Place trimmed rectangle on serving platter. Place cut semicircle piece at bottom short edge of rectangle. Place round layer above rectangle, fitting into cut-out semicircle.

Cut strip crosswise into quarters; place on piece at each corner of rectangle for paws. Frost cake with white frosting. Use OREO Cookies for ears and paws; place nonpareils on each paw. Roll out large gumdrops for mouth and eyes; use small gumdrops for nose and belly button and jelly beans for center of eyes. Decorate with honey graham snacks, framing head, paws and belly button. Shape fruit roll into bow tie. Draw mouth and outline paws with decorating icing.

Kids can make dinner in microwave

By NANCY BYAL
Better Homes & Gardens
Food Editor

Here's a simple recipe to teach your children the basics of microwave cooking. Second time around, let them try it on their own. Kids like the Tex-Mex flavor also; it's peppy but not too hot. You can add hot taco sauce to spice up the dish.

CHILI-MUFFIN DINNER
One 12½-ounce package (6) frozen corn muffins
1 pound lean ground beef
One 15½-ounce can chili beans
One 12-ounce can whole kernel corn

One 14½-ounce can Mexican-style stewed tomatoes
One 8-ounce jar taco sauce
6 slices American cheese, cut into triangles

One 8-ounce container sour cream dip with toasted onion
Thaw muffins in the microwave following package directions. Remove from oven; set aside.

Crumble meat into a 3-quart microwave-safe casserole. Cook, covered, on 100 percent power (high) for 3 minutes. Stir meat with a fork to break up large pieces. Cook meat on high for 2 minutes more. MICROWAVE COOKING

Asparagus tips cook more quickly than the stalks. To cook both parts perfectly in your microwave, place in a rectangular baking dish with the tips toward the center where they'll cook more slowly. When you spoon on the topping, rearrange the spears with the tips toward the outside so the dish will look best for serving.

CHEESY ASPARAGUS SPEARS

¾ pound fresh asparagus or one 10-ounce package frozen asparagus spears

2 tablespoons water

½ cup cream-style cottage cheese, drained

¼ cup shredded Cheddar cheese (1 ounce)

1 tablespoon sliced green onion

¼ teaspoon pepper

Several dashes bottled hot pepper sauce

1 teaspoon margarine or butter

2 tablespoons fine dry bread crumbs

Wash fresh asparagus and break off tough ends. In a microwave-safe 10-by-6-by-2-inch baking dish arrange asparagus spears with tips toward center. Add water. Cover with vented microwave-safe clear plastic wrap. Cook on 100 percent power (high) for 7 to 9 minutes or until tender, rearranging asparagus once by switching center spears with those on the edges.

Meanwhile, in a small mixing bowl combine cottage cheese, Cheddar cheese, green onion, pepper and hot pepper sauce. Set aside. In a custard cup cook margarine, uncovered, on high for 20 to 30 seconds or until melted. Stir in bread crumbs; set aside.

Drain asparagus. In same baking dish arrange asparagus with tips toward edges. Spoon cheese mixture on top. Sprinkle with crumb mixture. Cook, uncovered, on high for 1 to 2 minutes or until Cheddar cheese is melted, giving the dish a half-turn once. Serve immediately. Makes 4 servings.

At a potluck picnic, my brothers and I always went for Mom's potato salad. We knew hers was best! One of her secrets was using sour cream and buttermilk in the dressing; another was combining the dressing and potatoes while the potatoes were warm. This easy recipe calls for cooking the vegetables in the microwave and uses Mom's tips for the dressing.

MICROWAVE POTATO SALAD

¾ pound whole tiny new potatoes

¾ pound fresh whole green beans or one 9-ounce package frozen cut green beans

¼ cup mayonnaise or salad dressing

¼ cup dairy sour cream

¼ cup buttermilk or milk

¼ teaspoon salt

¼ teaspoon onion salt

¼ teaspoon Italian seasoning, crushed

¼ cup sliced pitted ripe olives
Scrub potatoes; quarter lengthwise. In a 1½-quart microwave-safe casserole combine potatoes and ¼ cup water. Cook, covered, on 100 percent power (high) for 8 to 10 minutes or until potatoes are tender, stirring once. Drain in a colander; set aside.

If using fresh beans, remove ends and strings. Break into 1-inch pieces. In same casserole, cook fresh beans and ¼ cup water, covered, on high 13 to 15 minutes or until tender. If using frozen beans, cook beans, covered, on high 5 to 7 minutes or until tender, stirring once. Drain in a colander; set aside.

In same casserole stir together mayonnaise, sour cream, buttermilk, salt, onion salt and Italian seasoning. Stir in potatoes, beans and olives. Cover; chill 4 hours or until completely chilled. Makes 6 servings.

MS 'Beef-a-Thon' will feature Martin

The 19th annual Beef-a-Thon, to benefit the Panhandle Chapter of National Multiple Sclerosis Society, will be Sunday, June 25, from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Channel 10, KFDA.

Because of the generosity of the Texas and Oklahoma ranchers and cattle feeders, over 100 quarters of choice beef will be auctioned along with a car, airline tickets, barbecue grills, gift certificates, jewelry, paintings, puppies, weekend packages from area motels, playhouses, carpets, bicycles and hand painted t-shirts and dresses.

Interviews of persons from the area who have MS and who are actively engaged in a career or community activities will be shown during the afternoon. These interviews applaud some of the superachievers who work at overcoming MS. They are the people who work harder than the rest of society to climb stairs, drive a car, or get around in their workplace.

Glynda Martin of Miami will be one of the women who will be highlighted during the interviews. Martin is Assistant Cashier for the Citizen's Bank.

Multiple Sclerosis is a disease of the central nervous system. The myelin coating of the nerves in the brain and spinal column is destroyed and nerve impulses to the brain are interrupted and distorted. Multiple refers to the many scattered areas of the brain and spinal cord that can be affected. Sclerosis refers to the scleroses or hardened patches of scar tissue that forms over the damaged myelin.

It is not known how multiple sclerosis happens or why.

Teen should control his own earnings

DEAR ABBY: I was very disappointed in your answer to "Broke in Brooklyn," the 16-year-old boy who complained because his father insisted on taking over the money he had earned and doling out whatever he asked for — to be sure he wasn't misusing his earnings.

Abby, teen-agers can gain valuable experience by keeping their own bank accounts balanced and budgeting their own money. They learn by making their own mistakes while they are still at home, where they can be counseled by their parents. They also learn by suffering the consequences of their own poor judgment.

It is highly unlikely that a 16-year-old boy who can hold a steady job and keep up with his school and social demands will be using his money for drugs, booze or handouts.

A pox on your answer!
LAKEWOOD (CALIF.) FATHER OF THREE

DEAR FATHER: A single pox is hardly enough for that answer. Several hundred readers wrote to tell me I was wrong, wrong, wrong! And they were right.

Let's hear it from the mother of two teen-agers:

DEAR ABBY: You blew it! I refer to your response to "Broke in Brooklyn," the 16-year-old boy who objected to his father's insisting that he turn over his entire paycheck — then making it necessary for him to ask his father for money whenever he needed it.

Instead of congratulating the boy for earning money while going to school, you gave him a lecture, telling him to "count his blessings — he was lucky to have a father who cares about him," and blah, blah, blah ...

Well, I think the teen-ager should be able to keep the money he earned. Of course, if there is a tough financial situation at home, the boy may need to contribute a part of his earnings to the household. If not, I think it's the father — not the 16-year-old — who needs the lecture. Parents aren't always right.

DEBORAH R. ISHIDA, M.D., BEVERLY HILLS, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: Regarding "Broke in Brooklyn": My mother always used to say that when it came to money, Dad had no sense of "the bottom of the barrel" because when he was a boy, he had to turn over his entire paycheck to his mother, and when he needed money he'd just ask for some without even knowing how much was left in the sugar bowl.

Consequently, as a parent with family obligations, Dad always spent the last nickel in his pocket without knowing how much (if anything) was left.

Dear Abby

My mother had a hard time dealing with this, and told us that if we were going to make mistakes or run out of money, to do it while we were young enough to learn, and didn't have any family obligations.

NEVER BROKE

DEAR ABBY: Abby, ol' girl, that was bum advice you gave "Broke in Brooklyn."

Just when is the kid going to learn how to handle money? Will Daddy always be around to tell Junior how to spend and how to save? Give him a break, Abby. If he's mature enough to hold down a job, he should be mature enough to selectively save and spend his earnings.

I suspect that Dad is on a power trip and isn't ready to give up the control he has always had on his son.

MINNESOTA MOM

DEAR ABBY: Please add this to your list of helpful — and possibly lifesaving — items on child safety: My heart nearly stopped the day my 2-year-old son scaled our aquarium stand and had one leg in the 20-gallon tank before I could get to him from across the room!

Until that day, I had never viewed our aquarium as a safety hazard. Now I do. If you think this will help others, please print it.

Pioneer recipes, household hints and home remedies feature of new cookbook

A HANDFUL OF HISTORY: Texas was tough on horses and women — especially women in the kitchen. A Pinch Of This And A Handful Of That gives new appreciation for pioneer Texas homemakers.

In pioneer Texas in the 1850s, the convenient store was more than likely one hundred to two hundred miles away.

So the great-grandmothers of many native-born Texans had but one choice — they "made do" with what they had.

For instance, more than a century and a half ago, Sara King Standifer wrote down her recipe for "Eggless Spice Cake."

"Take 2 cups raisins and 2 cups water. Cook raisins in water till water is half gone. Mix in 1 cup lard or meat drippings, 2 cups sugar, ½ tsp. salt, 1 tsp. soda, 1 tsp. ginger, ½ tsp. cinnamon, 3 cups flour, ¼ tsp. nutmeg, and nuts if you have them."

Grandmother Sara said that if you are short on spice or have peanuts, they are good. She insisted that being short on spice "won't hurt the taste of your cake."

The Daughters of the Republic of Texas, District 8 in central Texas, collected recipes, household hints and home remedies from members whose ancestry date back to the 1830s for their historic cookbook, A Pinch Of This And A Handful Of That (Eaken Press, $12.95).

In her forward to the book, Liz Carpenter, noted Texas writer and lecturer, explains that "you not only cook by it, but get a history lesson and a stretch of the imagination in the process. Every page brings a smile and respect for pioneer women."

"Take eggs. I got carried away with the information I found on eggs, writing in 1850, an early daughter or mother of Texas tells you 'How To Get More Eggs — Keep hens quiet and well fed if you wish to fatten them, but make them scratch for their living if you desire eggs!'"

The recipe for watermelon preserves was provided by Vivian Buffa Hancock around the turn of the century. In a practical, off-handed way, she wrote:

"Take a thick-skinned watermelon, eat the middle red meat and trim the outside green rind off, leaving the white with a touch of red. Cut into strips about 1½ inches thick. Lay out on a platter or tin pan, then place it on the roof of the house and leave it for 3 days. Bring it into the house and weigh. Add an equal amount of sugar for each pound of fruit. Cook until a clear syrup is made. Pack into jars immediately."

For young mothers, this suggestion:

"Babies of 6 months may have beef tea or mutton broth once a day; if 10 or 12 months they may have a piece of bread or a rare beefsteak to suck. This with bread and milk, oatmeal porridge, or boiled rice and milk is the best diet for a baby under 2 years old."

Forget the self-cleaning oven. Texas housewives had an inexpensive way to clean grease off a hot stove:

"Cover with a thick layer of ashes; this will absorb the grease so you will not be offended by the odor as it burns. Later brush away the ashes and none of the grease will remain."

The Daughters carry several disclaimers in the home remedy section of the book. But this is the recommendation of Laura Gayle Wilson in 1853 for fainting or weakness:

"1 8-oz. cup rye whiskey, 1 small string (about 4 inches) rock candy. As much rock camphor as the liquid will take. It won't take too much, probably about 2 good tablespoons. Let the whole thing set for a week or two. It gets stronger as it sets."

For the diet-conscious lady of today, the "Tips for the Stout Woman" in 1870 probably would not be necessary:

"Avoid dainty and spindly chairs and furniture which serve to accentuate your bigness. Hats with wide and slanting brims are usually best. Wear gloves which match the sleeves in color. Avoid shoes with heels too high. Slender and dark-colored shoes are usually better than light ones ... Too small a bag emphasizes your stoutness and too large a bag may look too bulky. If you carry an umbrella use a long, slender one."

Delma Thames of Austin, District 8 representative, who served as editor of the book, became a member of the Daughters of the Republic of Texas about ten years ago when she discovered that she was a descendant of Joseph Lindley who fought at San Jacinto and at the siege of Bexar during the struggle for Texas Independence.

To be eligible for membership in the DRT, one must have a direct line ancestor who was in Texas prior to February 18, 1846, the date Texas became a state.

A Pinch Of This And A Handful Of That is available state-wide in most bookstores or may be ordered from the DRT c/o French Legation Museum, Box AG, 802 San Marcos St., Austin, Texas 78702 at $15.79, including sales tax and shipping costs.

Pioneer Texas women had their work cut out for them. One housewife of early Texas kept a record. She declared that during the past year she had:

"Made and baked 1,038 loaves of bread, 421 pies, 152 loaves of cake, 105 puddings, and 2,140 doughnuts. In addition she had "cooked 2,000 pounds of meat, 100 bushels of potatoes, took care of the milk and butter of five cows and looked after the thousand and one things which require the attention of a housekeeper."

OU names new coach

Gibbs becomes 18th head coach for Sooners

By DOUG FERGUSON
Associated Press Writer

NORMAN, Okla. — Gary Gibbs, who has spent his entire collegiate football career under the winningest coach in Oklahoma history, takes over as head coach undaunted by Barry Switzer's three national championships and 12 Big Eight Conference titles. "I'm Gary Gibbs. I know what I can do," said the defensive coordinator, who becomes the 18th coach at Oklahoma but only the third alumnus to take over the reins. Athletic director Donnie Duncan and interim president David Swank recommended Gibbs as the next head coach over two other assistants, Merv Johnson and Jim Donnan. Gibbs' appointment lacks formal approval from the university's regents, who meet today. The regents also were scheduled to discuss a settlement package for Switzer, whose resignation followed six months of turmoil and pressure to step down from a national power wounded by a three-year NCAA probation and five players charged in incidents involving guns, drugs and sexual assault.

Swank would only say the settlement is a mutual agreement between Switzer and the university. Swank denied that a settlement was in order because Switzer, who had four years left on his rollover contract, was forced to resign. Switzer had recommended his replacement come from his staff. Gibbs, 36, was confident Tuesday about moving in, and promised that the cloud hanging over the university would dissipate. "We've got to remove that cloud, that uncertainty of 'What's going on down there? Who's in control?'" Gibbs said. "We're a bunch of good guys. All we've got to do is the right thing." When asked how he would handle disciplining his players, Gibbs said, "That's really an easy question. You do what's right. You don't do what's wrong." Gibbs, who also received his master's in business administration from Oklahoma, said any other job but head coach at Oklahoma would be a step down. "This is my school," Gibbs said. "I came to Oklahoma because of people. Now I have the opportunity to pay something back to those people." In announcing sanctions against the Sooners, the NCAA had criticized Switzer for not having enough control over the program. Gibbs promised that would not happen under his regime. But he quickly added that "I'm not going to stand here and say we're not going to have a problem." Switzer was 35 when he was named head coach in 1973. The state's three largest newspapers and the 1949 Oklahoma football team had called for new leadership, but Duncan said he was satisfied that promoting from within would give Oklahoma a clean start. Switzer became head coach while Oklahoma was serving a two-year NCAA probation. He leaves the program in the first year of a three-year probation, mostly for recruiting violations. His teams were unbeaten through his first 30 games, and he left the game with the highest winning percentage, 84.4, among active college coaches.

New OU coach Gary Gibbs addresses the media Tuesday.

Rose talks about the next step in his legal battle to avoid suspension.

Rose denies charges he bet on Reds' games

CINCINNATI (AP) — Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti wants to make public a report containing allegations that Pete Rose bet on Cincinnati Reds games, a charge the manager is vehemently denying. An Ohio judge decided Tuesday that the report, by baseball investigator John M. Dowd, will remain confidential while he decides on Rose's attempt to block a hearing next week before Giamatti. Hamilton County Common Pleas Judge Norbert N. Nadel scheduled a hearing for Thursday morning on Rose's request for a temporary restraining order that would put next Monday's meeting with Giamatti on hold. Lawyers for Rose and Giamatti will witnesses at the hearing Thursday. Nadel decided Tuesday during a 30-minute meeting with the lawyers in his chambers that he'll look privately at Dowd's report, which contains allegations that could get Rose banned from baseball for life. However, lawyers for baseball said they want the entire report made public because Rose's lawyers released parts of it Monday in their lawsuit against Giamatti. The 225-page report written by Dowd was placed in the court record Tuesday by lawyers for the commissioner. Nadel decided he's the only one who will see it for now.

Giants go by the book

By The Associated Press

Roger Craig is a manager who likes his team to go by the book.

Scott Garrelts allowed no runs and seven hits in 7 1-3 innings as the surging Giants beat Houston 4-0 Tuesday night to take a three-game lead over the Astros in the National League West.

"It was a text book ball game," Craig said. "Our middle fielders made outstanding plays. Brett Butler made a great throw. We had clutch hits, especially by Jose Uribe to get the run home. It was the best played game of the year."

Garrelts, 6-2, struck out four and walked none. "I'm trying to move the ball in and out," Garrelts said. "I'm trying to slow my slider and fastball off the same motion, and I'm not throwing the ball down the middle of the plate."

Ryan uncorks his famous fastball.

Ryan's effort wasted

BOSTON (AP) — On May 6, 1977, while with the California Angels, Nolan Ryan beat Boston's Luis Tiant in Fenway Park. Retired from baseball for many years, Tiant now earns about $40,000 a year working for the Massachusetts state treasurer. Ryan, 42, still is pitching, for the Texas Rangers for $1.6 million this year, and still looking for his first Boston victory in 12 years. Ryan shut out the Red Sox on four hits for seven innings Tuesday night, but the effort was wasted. The Red Sox jumped on Texas relievers Kenny Rogers and Jeff Russell for six runs in the eighth inning for a 6-3 victory over the Rangers. "He was gassed," Texas manager Bobby Valentine said in explaining his removal of Ryan after the seventh. "He did a great job, but he said he had had enough." "I told him that if I got into a jam in the eighth I might not be able to get out of it," said Ryan, who threw 115 pitches while striking out six and walking three. Ryan, 8-3 this year, appeared en route to his 282nd career victory and his 56th shutout. Even the Red Sox were surprised when he didn't come out for the eighth. "When (Geno) Petralli hit that two-out homer for a 3-0 lead in the eighth, I thought, 'Oh, oh, that's icing on the evening,'" Boston manager Joe Morgan said. However, the Red Sox were given a new life when Rogers replaced Ryan. He walked the first batter, retired the next and then gave up a double off the wall in left-center to Wade Boggs. Russell, 3-2, replaced Rogers in a bid for his 17th save. However, Mike Greenwell lined a two-run double to left-center and, after a walk to Dwight Evans, Nick Esasky tripled to right. Esasky drove in Greenwell and Evans, then scored on Julio Franco's wild relay throw to third. Another run scored on an error. As far as the Red Sox were concerned they played two different games—one against Nolan Ryan, another against the Texas bullpen. "We didn't do anything against Nolan, then we looked out there and suddenly he was gone," Esasky said. "A shutout for seven innings, you can't ask for anything more than that," Valentine said. "He knew what he had to do and the other guys knew what they had to do." "Nolan was throwing real well and we didn't know why he came out, but we got ourselves rolling and kept going," said Esasky, who struck out twice against Ryan. "It was exciting baseball, a good one for us to win." "I'm sure they thought they had the game in hand, but we came up with some big hits," said Greenwell, who also struck out twice against Ryan. "Nolan threw a great ballgame. He threw great stuff."

Channing's Hill takes early lead in barrel racing at state finals

By SONNY BOHANAN
Sports Writer

SEGUIN — Nancy Hill of Channing is in first place in barrel racing and second in pole bending after two performances of the Texas High School Rodeo Association Finals at the Guadalupe County Fairgrounds. Hill finished the cloverleaf course at Seguin in 15.735 seconds to take an early lead in the barrels entering Tuesday evening's performance. Hill, who compiled 362½ points during the high school rodeo season to win the All-Around Girl title at the Tri-State Finals, clocked 20.839 in the poles, a mere .023 second behind leader Leah Lange of Seguin. Kara Peirce of Miami currently stands sixth in the barrels with a time of 16.348, while Shan Til Hext of Canadian is eighth, finishing in 16.391. Tamra Johnson of Pampa knocked over one of the barrels and clocked in at 21.847, while Kimbra Peirce of Miami had a time of 26.221 after toppling two barrels. Hext stands 12th in goat tying with a time of 13.540. Kory Pounds of Canadian scored 70 in bull riding to pull into third place. Teammate Dewayne Evans was bucked off and posted no score. Channing's Amy Hill, younger sister of Nancy Hill, is currently eighth in pole bending with a time of 21.256. Stran Smith of Childress, who captured the All-Around Boy title at the Tri-State Finals, roped and tied his calf in 11.284 seconds to move into third place, while Johnny Moffett of Canyon is second in barebacks with a score of 62. Not a single competitor from Region I posted a time in breakaway roping. "Overall the region is doing well," said Wheeler's Jane Thomas, the Region I secretary, "but we bit the dust in breakaway. We've still got some good kids coming up in other events, though." The State Finals will feature 10 performances in all. The top 10 athletes in each event will advance to Saturday's short-go, and the top four finishers in each event in the short-go will advance to the National Finals in Pueblo, Colo., in late July. Following is a list of area placings after two performances. Barebacks: 2. (tie) Johnny Moffett, Canyon, 62. Steer Wrestling: 6. Kirby Kaul, Hereford, 6.118; 12. Shawn McCormick, Hereford, 12.271. Barrels: 1. Nancy Hill, Channing, 15.735; 6. Kara Peirce, Miami, 16.348; 8. Shan Til Hext, Canadian, 16.391; Tamra Johnson, Pampa, 21.847; Kimbra Peirce, Miami, 26.221. Calf Roping: 3. Stran Smith, Childress, 11.284; 8. Beau Blue, Dumas, 12.726; 13. Clint Patterson, Spearman, 13.557. Goat Tying: 7. Kerrie Pitts, Floydada, 12.377; 12. Shan Til Hext, Canadian, 13.540; 18. Tonya Clymer, Amarillo, 17.735. Team Roping: 7. Trent Johnson, Nazareth, and Marty McCloy, Gruver, 9.813; 8. Steve Lookingbill, Dumas, and Beau Blue, Dumas, 11.162. Pole Bending: 2. Nancy Hill, Channing, 20.839; 8. Amy Hill, Channing, 21.256; Shelley Thompson, Channing, 26.609. Bull Riding: 3. Kory Pounds, Canadian, 70.

Portland angler's gizmo launches new business

By LARRY MORGAN
Corpus Christi Caller-Times

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Jim Loftin wasn't looking for a new line of work, he just wanted his fishing skiff to operate better in shallow water.

But when friends and other anglers saw how well the Portland angler's boat performed with the plate attached to the outboard motor, they clamored to have one.

Now Loftin's creation, the Turbo-Plate, is taking the oil field tubular salesman on the road across Texas, to Florida and the Midwest. These days he's making his pitch to boat dealers and fishermen, not oil well operators.

"If ever there was a mistake, this is it," Loftin said. "It just mushroomed from something I did for myself and a few friends."

Loftin often fishes in water 10 to 12 inches deep, but his 16-foot Stoner skiff couldn't plane in water that shallow without first being started in a tight circle, nor could it stay on plane at low speeds.

With Loftin's creation, the vessel will get up on plane in 12 inches of water — and do so quicker than before. In addition, the maximum speed has been increased about 5 mph and Loftin can slow down to just a few miles an hour, yet still be on plane — an advantage when looking for schools of fish in shallow water.

But the public response to the Turbo-Plate has consumed most of his working time, 90 percent on the Plate and just 10 percent on C.B.S. Tubulars, he estimates.

"I've put 1,500 of them on the market since October and 75 percent of the professional guides between Victoria and Mexico use the Plate," Loftin said.

The Turbo-Plates come in two sizes, one for outboard motors 15-to-40-horsepower and a larger size for 50-to-300-horsepower engines. The smaller version retails for about $100 and the larger one slightly more.

The Turbo-Plates, the larger one measuring about 30 inches by 18 inches, are made of a durable, yet flexible plastic and attach to the outboard motor's cavitation plate that is just above the propeller. Unlike other similar devices that are bolted to the cavitation plate, the Turbo-Plate is sandwiched around the cavitation plate.

"Those bass fishermen with $20,000 rigs said, 'Uh, uh, you're not drilling holes in my bass boat,'" Loftin said.

While Loftin had shallow water fishing in mind when it was created, the bass anglers have found it worthwhile, too.

"It will cut the bow rise by at least half, enabling the driver to see straight ahead at all times, the control at top speed is more responsive and water doesn't wash over the transom after quick deceleration," Loftin said. "Water skiers like it, as well, because there is extra power to pull skiers out of the water easier."

Corpus Christi guide Bill Sheka Jr. has Turbo-Plates on two of his boats and is convinced they work.

"The thing really works. When you punch it, it throws the nose (of the boat) down. And it's so simple. There is no drilling holes in the motor, and all that. And I haven't seen anything that holds up like these," Sheka said.

The principle behind the Turbo-Plate is simple, he said. It is based on controlling the force of the propeller thrust.

As the propeller forces water upward on take off, the Turbo-Plate simply forces it down and back, thus, lifting the back of the boat quicker. And while outboard motors are mounted with the propeller below the boat bottom, to prevent the propeller from sucking air, using the Turbo-Plate allows the motor to be raised because the Plate controls thrust and cavitation.

Several similar devices are on the market, but they are designed to work in the water while the Turbo-Plate is above the water surface.

"They are designed so you have to leave the motor down, and we increase boat speed with the motor up," Loftin said.

Loftin went through several designs before hitting upon the one that worked.

Schramm drumming up support for new football league

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

DALLAS — Tex Schramm's goal when he begins today a tour of the southeast United States is to find solid franchises and excellent television markets to support his Worldwide American Football League.

Included on the trip will be Joe Bailey and Billy Hicks, who worked under Schramm with the Dallas Cowboys, and former Southern Methodist University athletic director Russ Potts, who has numerous contacts in the South.

No franchises will be awarded on the trip, but Schramm expects to come away from the Wednesday through Friday tour with a good idea of where he wants to put them and which cities want franchises.

Schramm hopes to have six cities in Europe and six cities in the U.S. playing by April in the NFL-backed league. The European visit included stops at Paris, Madrid, Frankfurt, Barcelona, Milan, and London.

Schramm, who resigned as president and general manager of the Dallas Cowboys in February, has planned visits to Birmingham, Ala.; Orlando and Jacksonville, Fla.; Charlotte, N.C. and Nashville, Tenn. During the blitz he will view stadium sites and talk to potential owners.

The WAFL is likely to have a team in New York City and another on the West Coast. Also, San Antonio, Texas, is being considered strongly.

Schramm's private jet will be on a busy schedule. It flies to Birmingham and Orlando on Wednesday, goes to Jacksonville and Charlotte on Thursday, and completes the tour with a flight to Nashville on Friday.

"All the cities we are visiting are strong contenders for a franchise," the 69-year-old Schramm said. "We want to talk to potential owners and check out the stadiums and the business community. No decisions will be made on the tour but we'll leave with strong impressions one way or the other."

Schramm spent the early part of this week in

New York City lining up television advertisers. Schramm said NBC, ABC, CBS, and cable television have shown interest in the new league.

"It's imperative to have television for the success of the league," Schramm said.

Schramm knows a lot about television. It was his idea that helped institute instant replay for NFL games. He put together the first network telecast of the winter Olympics, the 1960 Games in Squaw Valley, Calif.

Schramm's entourage will be meeting with a wide variety of politicians and potential owners on the tour. For example, in Birmingham, Wayne Rogers, who played "Trapper John" on the television series M A S H, is interested in the league while in Nashville country singer Johnny Cash may meet with Schramm.

"This trip is to test the waters and see how warm they are out there," said Billy Hicks, who recently left the Cowboys to work for the WAFL and Schramm. "We're going to try to cram a lot of action into three days and the schedules will be tight but we want to get as much done as possible."

Two Dallas Carter players are suspects in armed robberies

DALLAS (AP) — Two members of the Class 5A state championship Dallas Carter High School football team are jailed today in connection with the armed robberies of two video stores, police say.

The two are being held on two counts each of investigation of aggravated robbery, said Sgt. James Andrews of the Dallas Police Department's robbery section.

The suspects remain at the Lew Sterrett Justice Center without bond pending filing of formal charges, said Brenda Riggs of the Dallas County District Attorney's records division.

Both men are members of the team which last season became the first in the Dallas Independent School District to win a state football championship since 1950.

The two, both 17, were arrested by patrol officers who spotted a 1988 vehicle matching the description of the car used in the robberies, officers said. "Officers put the information regarding the car, a red Chevrolet Camaro, out on their computers. So everyone in Oak Cliff (in South Dallas) was aware of it," said a robbery detective who declined to give his name.

"These two guys were in the car. The videocassette they purchased was recovered as well as a .22-caliber revolver."

Witnesses at two Video Exchange stores told police they were robbed Tuesday night.

In the first robbery, about 6:30 p.m., a store clerk said one of the two men pulled a pistol and demanded cash after the other paid $3.24 to rent a film.

"Clean out the drawer," a clerk quoted the robber as saying.

The clerk told police the men took $256.54 and fled in a red 1988 Camaro.

An hour later, at another Video Exchange store, two men matching the descriptions of the earlier robbers entered the store and asked for the movie, "Coming to America."

When the clerk turned around to get the movie, one of the men asked her to open the cash register, the woman told police. One of the men was holding a gun, she said.

The woman gave the men the money in the cash register and said she had no more money. One of the men, she said, told her he used to work at the store and he knew there was more money.

The men fled when a customer entered the store, the clerk told police.

Officers said they arrested the men a few minutes later after spotting an automobile matching the description of the one used in the robbery. A copy of the video "Coming to America" was found in the car, police said.

During the football playoffs, Carter's eligibility was threatened by a controversy surrounding algebra grades of a player.

After initially declaring the team ineligible for the playoffs because of the grades, DISD Supt. Marvin Edwards reversed his decision.
