HUD cancels mortgage loan guarantee plan

By DENISE CABRERA
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Department of Housing and Urban Development is canceling a $500 million mortgage loan guarantee program that one official says is an "absolute disaster."

HUD Secretary Jack Kemp ordered the troubled program canceled Thursday, as the department said the program was "riddled with abuse." Meanwhile, a House Government Operations subcommittee today was beginning review of another HUD program — the mortgage coinsurance program — in which a recent inspector general's audit found lenders had underwritten $700 million in loans that defaulted by mid-1988.

On Thursday, the subcommittee produced a government memo that links a staffer in George Bush's vice presidential office to a project involved in alleged influence-peddling at HUD.

The program canceled by Kemp guarantees mortgages to finance land acquisition and site preparation, such as street construction and sewer line installation, for smaller developers who would include housing for low-income and moderate income families in their projects.

Twenty-five of 58 projects financed through the 12-year-old Title X Land Development Mortgage Insurance Program have defaulted, costing the government $90 million, the department said.

About $500 million in loans were guaranteed since 1977.

"This program was an absolute disaster," said HUD spokesman Bob Nipp.

Kemp said application fees will be returned for projects that have not yet been approved. Projects with initial approval or with commitments for funds will be reviewed "to determine whether fraud or misrepresentation warrant the denial of government insurance," he said.

The department will publish a proposed regulation to "terminate the program due to the enormity of the losses involved, high patterns of abuse and the failure of the program to benefit the needy," the department's announcement said.

The Reagan administration sought legislation to abolish the program but was unsuccessful. Kemp's proposed regulation must remain open for a period of public comment before it can become final.

President Bush earlier this week accepted some responsibility for scandals which have surfaced alleging influence-peddling and mismanagement in several HUD programs while he was Ronald Reagan's vice president.

"If you want to assign blame to the vice president for what happened over the past ... eight years, OK, that's fine, I accept it," said the president.

The June 1987 memo from Deborah Gore Dean, former executive assistant to then-Housing Secretary Samuel Pierce, detailed more than $2 million in funding from HUD to Bayamon, Puerto Rico, during fiscal years 1986 and 1987.

The memo was sent to Tony Benedi, coordinator of special projects in the vice president's office, and provided the information "per your request."

A Bayamon project in which Fred Bush — former deputy chief of staff for then-Vice President Bush — earned $253,000 as a consultant had been included in an inspector general's audit of HUD's moderate rehabilitation program.

Fred Bush was a key fundraiser for George Bush's 1988 presidential campaign but is no relation to the president.

Bush, who also is ambassador-designate to Luxembourg, used his second appearance before the panel to make "clarifying statements" to the testimony he gave on May 25.

Bush had testified he contacted Ms. Dean about a project in Bayamon after finding her name in an executive federal telephone directory. Several panel members had questioned that account.

But on Thursday Bush said one of his former colleagues reminded him that Dean's name was first raised at a social gathering when the colleague was talking with another former HUD official, Hunter Cushing.

"My colleague's recollection is that Mr. Cushing told him we should talk to Deborah Gore Dean," Bush said.

Bush said he didn't know Dean so he consulted the directory, subsequently called Dean and later met with her at her office to discuss the project.

Borger woman victim of abduction, murder

BORGER — A man accused of abducting and killing a 20-year-old Borger woman Wednesday night was turned over to police by his grandfather Thursday afternoon.

Miguel Flores, a Mexican national who had lived in Hutchinson County with his family for the last five months, was arraigned before 316th District Court Judge Guy Hazlett.

Bond was set at $250,000 in connection with the kidnap/slaying of Angela Tyson, a 1987 graduate of Borger High School and a student at Eastern New Mexico State University.

Tyson was reported missing by her parents at 11 p.m. Wednesday night. She had been working at Green's Video Movie Center in Borger and closed the store at 8 p.m. Borger police said Tyson was working at the store for the summer to raise money for college.

Borger Police Chief Mike Smith said Tyson's body was found in the front seat of her car at 1 p.m. Thursday. He said the car was located just northeast of the city limits.

Dr. Ralph Erdmann, an Amarillo pathologist, conducted an autopsy on Tyson's body Thursday night. However, through press time today a cause of death had not been revealed.

Borger police did say a knife had been recovered in connection with the crime, but declined to speculate if it was the murder weapon.

Services for Tyson will be Saturday at 2 p.m. at Keeler Baptist Church in Borger with the Rev. Wyatt Carpenter, pastor, officiating. Burial will be in Westlawn Memorial Park under the direction of Minton-Chatwell Funeral Directors.

Tyson

Tyson was a member of Zeta Tau Alpha Sorority, an honor student and second runner-up in the Miss Portales pageant. She was also a member of several music groups at ENMU and was a music major.

Survivors include her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Tyson of Borger; one brother, David Tyson of Amarillo; grandmothers Marie Anderson of Borger and Eunice Tyson of Stinnett; and several nieces and nephews.

Divers search for men missing in rig collapse

FREEMONT (AP) — Divers searched this morning for three crewmen reported missing after an oil-drilling vessel capsized in the Gulf of Mexico, but searchers were unable to enter the ship and got no response when they tapped on the hull, officials said.

A fourth man on a fishing vessel helping in the search fell overboard and also is missing, said Lt. Don Merwin with the U.S. Coast Guard in Galveston.

Six workers from the vessel Titan, containing a jack-up rig, were rescued late Thursday by Coast Guard helicopter and boat

"The divers did go down, so evidently they felt it was secure enough," Chadwick said. "But they were unable to get inside the vessel. They tapped on the hull, and there was a negative response at this time."

Walter said the drilling vessel, also called a spud boat, has legs that can be jacked down to the seabed for oil exploration.

The fishing vessel Captain Gabriel reported the capsized rig at about 7:15 p.m. Thursday in 90 feet of water about 26 miles south of Freeport, Merwin said.

The three missing workers are believed trapped within the drilling equipment, he said.

"They may be trapped in the interior of the jack-up rig," Merwin said. "There's a possibility that it caught an air bubble. If they did there's a possibility that they're still alive. We're proceeding on that assumption."

A Coast Guard helicopter from Houston and three boats from Freeport and Galveston were dispatched to the scene. Four men still on the rig were rescued by boat, Chadwick said, and two others were lifted from the water by helicopter crews.

He said officials do not know what caused the collapse, but the vessel remained bottom-up in the water late Thursday. Merwin said there was no heavy rainfall in the area and waves were at 3 feet to 5 feet.

The rig is owned by Jude St. Romain of New Orleans, which hired a diving team for the search, the Coast Guard said.

Murder-for-hire plot revealed in Clarendon

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

CLARENDON — Donley County sheriff's deputies and an agent from the Panhandle Regional Narcotics Task Force broke up an alleged murder-for-hire scheme aimed at Sheriff Jimmy Thompson, 100th District Attorney David McCoy revealed Thursday.

Arrested in connection with the plot was Alice Dickerson Watson, 30, of Clarendon. She was charged with attempting to hire two men to kill Thompson to avenge two deaths she claimed were his fault, McCoy said.

"Jackie Schusler had a van wreck on Hwy. 70 and ran off a ravine and dead-ended into the gulley," McCoy said of an incident two years ago near Lake Greenbelt. "It killed him and a female passenger. They were thrown through the front windshield and the van rolled over on them.

"She got this idea it was (the sheriff's) fault. He didn't even work the wreck except for crowd control. DPS worked the wreck. If there was anything wrong, you'd of thought DPS or the mortician would have found it."

According to reports from Donley County officials, Watson said she was convinced Thompson had killed the two, then placed them in the van and pushed it off the ravine.

"Jimmy (Thompson) sort of liked the old boy," McCoy said of the relationship between Schusler and the sheriff. "For some strange reason, though, she said that was her reason for wanting to kill him."

Thompson, however, said the motive was probably drug-related. He said a "snitch" working for his office was attempting to buy five pounds of marijuana from Watson when she asked him to kill Thompson.

"On Wednesday, the 21st (of June), we had an informant trying to buy dope from her," Thompson explained. "Deputy Joe Shade and Blackie Johnson, the constable from Hedley, were talking to (the informant) about what kind of progress he was making on the drug buy."

"(The informant) told them (Watson) had offered him money to kill me. We decided to put one of the drug task force officers undercover to negotiate killing me."

McCoy said discussions between Watson and the undercover officer took place at the Oasis Bar on Hwy. 70 where she worked. Each of the three conversations with the undercover officer were taped, McCoy added.

Thompson said the final conversation between the officer and Watson took place on Friday, June 23, and Watson was arrested Wednesday of this week. She was arraigned Thursday and is being held in Donley County Jail in lieu of $50,000 bond.

He added Watson has confessed to the plot. She was reportedly going to pay whoever murdered Thompson $500 in advance and $4,500 after the murder had been committed.

Thompson said that Watson is well-connected to the Panhandle drug trade and that the five pounds of marijuana she was selling, which have been confiscated, was grown in the area.

"There will be a lot of good come out of this," Thompson promised. "A lot of good. We're going to be making a lot of progress." He indicated the murder plot may eventually reveal the inner workings of drug dealers in the Panhandle, but declined to elaborate.

McCoy said a special session of the Donley County grand jury will be called next Thursday, July 6, to hear the charges against Watson.

"The problem is that juries don't want to send women to prison," McCoy said of the challenge he faces getting Watson convicted. "She's going to get up there and say she didn't mean it and that she was just talking. If a jury can see any way out of it, they won't send her to prison."

According to Donley County officials, the original informant who had alerted Thompson's deputies to the plot also almost ruined their chances of catching Watson.

Doug Wright, an investigator for the D.A.'s office, told reporters Thursday the informant had begun telling people around Clarendon of the murder plot. He said fear Watson would attempt to hire someone else to commit the murder caused them to arrest her Wednesday.

Thompson discusses plot aimed at him.

Bush urges passage of ban on flag burning

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush, using the statue of the nation's most famous flag-raising scene as a backdrop, today urged passage and ratification of a "simple, stark and to-the-point" constitutional amendment to ban flag burning.

The president spoke before a hastily assembled crowd at a ceremony at the Iwo Jima Memorial, the statue of five Marines raising the flag on a Pacific island during World War II.

Bush used the ceremony to register his support for a Republican-drafted proposed amendment that asserts: "The Congress and the states shall have power to prohibit the physical desecration of the flag of the United States."

"This flag is one of our most powerful ideas," Bush declared. "If it is not defended, it is defamed. ... It represents the fabric of our nation."

Bush said the statue behind him, a huge bronze casting of a photograph by Associated Press photographer Joe Rosenthal, was "stunning. ... Even now it hum-

bles us, inspires us."

Bush said that the amendment drafted by Republican congressional leaders with the support of some Democrats was "simple, stark and to-the-point."

Senate Republican leader Bob Dole of Kansas praised Bush for supporting the amendment and called it a serious step to circumvent last week's 5-4 Supreme Court ruling that said flag burning is a form of free expression protected by the Constitution.

Also speaking at the ceremony were co-sponsors of the amendment, House Republican leader Robert Michel of Illinois and two Democrats, Sen. Alan Dixon of Illinois and Rep. Sonny Montgomery of Mississippi.

Both Democrats and Republicans have publicly deplored the Supreme Court decision, but a spokesman for the Democratic National Committee accused Bush of using the issue for political opportunism.

"He's running for president instead of being president," Mike McCurry, DNC communications director, said Wednesday.

Democrats say Bush's reform is campaign strategy for GOP

By STEVEN KOMAROW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reformers say President Bush's proposals for revising congressional campaign finances are inadequate. And Democrats say they amount to hardball party politics.

"He has chosen to submit proposals that blatantly favor the Republican Party and jeopardize bipartisan efforts already under way" to draft a campaign reform bill, said House Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash.

Bush announced Thursday proposals he said would help curb the influence of special interests and reduce the advantage congressional incumbents have over challengers.

"We must do more to truly clean up the system," he said.

Bush said he supported cutting back on the free-postage privilege for lawmakers, which he said pays for "mass mailings that amount to political advertising." He called for new laws to do away with gerrymandering, the drawing of oddly-shaped congressional districts to help certain candidates.

Political action committees connected with businesses, labor or trade groups should be banned, he said, and contribution ceilings to other PACs cut from $5,000 to $2,500.

But the president declined to endorse public financing of congressional campaigns, a favorite idea of many reformers, or overall campaign spending limits that have been urged by Democratic officials as well as private groups.

Fred Wertheimer, president of Common Cause, a good-government group that has lobbied for changes in campaign law, said Bush's plan "will not solve the basic campaign finance problems facing Congress today."

To accomplish that, it would have to also include overall spending limits, public financing, and shutting down so-called "soft money" — prohibited corporate and union financing that enters campaigns through loopholes in current law. Bush said he would favor disclosure of soft money.

Bob Dreyfuss, spokesman for the advocacy group Public Citizen, said that in dismissing public financing and spending limits, Bush "tends to really allow the people with money to have undue influence in politics."

Bush said public financing would exclude individuals from the political process by denying them the opportunity to contribute, and spending limits would discourage them from contributing.

Bush's proposals to reduce the advantages of incumbency would naturally hurt more Democrats than Republicans because there are more Democrats in Congress.

But Democrats said Bush's plan was also carefully crafted to coddle the types of donations Republicans are more likely to get and shut down Democratic funding sources.

"A totally partisan package has been set forward," said Rep. Beryl Anthony, D-Ark., chairman of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee.

Although Bush proposed to restrict political action committees, he would allow continuation of "ideological" PACs, many of which are one-issue groups which favor Republican causes.

Border Patrol cutbacks questioned

WASHINGTON (AP) — Border Patrol budget cutbacks in Texas are affecting the "front-line defense against illegal narcotics and a tide of illegal aliens," a San Antonio congressman says.

"My information is that the cuts have already resulted in gasoline rationing for Border Patrol vehicles. That's going to in turn affect the Border Patrol's ability to seize narcotics and to stop illegal aliens," says Rep. Lamar Smith, a Republican.

According to Smith, Border Patrol sectors in El Paso, Marfa, Del Rio, Laredo and McAllen face a 62 percent cutback in operating budgets this summer, the fiscal year's final quarter.

Operating budgets in those sectors already were scaled back by 50 percent for the third quarter, Smith and five other congressmen told Attorney General Richard Thornburgh in a letter this week.

Rep. Joe Skeen, a New Mexico Republican, said the Border Patrol in his state faces similar budget reductions.

"This problem was brought to my attention by ranchers in southern Hidalgo County (N.M.) who were concerned about the high illegal alien traffic across the border and the apparent lack of control measures," Skeen said in a statement. "When I investigated the problem, I learned of the impending budget cuts."

The Immigration and Naturalization Service, which is over the Border Patrol, had no immediate comment.

In their letter to Thornburgh, Skeen, Smith and the other congressmen say the current 50 percent cutbacks have already resulted in severe gasoline rations.

In some cases, only five gallons of gas are allotted per vehicle per day.

"These rations render necessary Border Patrol functions — narcotics seizures, illegal alien apprehensions and support of local law enforcement efforts — ineffective," said the letter, also signed by Democratic Reps. Kika de la Garza of Mission, Ron Coleman of El Paso, Solomon Ortiz of Corpus Christi, and Albert Bustamante of San Antonio.

The congressmen warn that further cutbacks in fourth-quarter budgets "will result in the closing of several border checkpoints and could have unfavorable consequences to this region's war on drugs and outstanding border control efforts."

Smith, the ranking Republican member of the House immigration subcommittee, is asking Thornburgh to transfer funds from non-essential services to the INS's southern region.

"We wrote Thornburgh, to see what the score," Skeen said in an interview. "They may be having budget problems, but they should be telling us about them. We want to hear from the INS on exactly what the situation is."

Smith said the INS faces a budget crunch for two reasons — Congress cut its request for this fiscal year by 7 percent, and the agency has had to absorb the costs of processing thousands of Central Americans who crossed into the country illegally earlier this year.

But Smith argues law enforcement along the southern border should be a top priority of the INS, and said 60 percent of drug seizures on the border are made by the Border Patrol.

East Germany accused of using bank loans for terrorist groups

WASHINGTON (AP) — A $600 million loan by American and other western banks to communist East Germany in 1985 wound up in Libya, and part of it was used by terrorists against Americans, says a former staffer for the National Security Council.

About $60 million of the money was divided evenly among the Red Brigades in Germany, the provisional Irish Republican Army in Northern Ireland and the M-19 guerrilla force in Colombia, said Norman A. Bailey, senior director of national security planning from 1981 to 1983.

The loan was arranged by the First National Bank of Chicago along with the International Bank of Japan, according to Tom Lundeman, a spokesman for the Chicago bank. He added that about 50 banks of several nationalities took part and the agent was the Arab Banking Corp. of Bahrain.

Such loans have been criticized by some prominent Americans, including former Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger.

Alan Delp, the Chicago bank's senior vice president in charge of international banking, said in a telephone interview that he would be very surprised if the money went to Libya.

"It would be very foolish on the part of the East Germans," he added.

Bailey appeared on a television program taped for the Public Broadcasting System called Follow the Money.

"We can identify a money trail ... which eventually ended up in the death of American Marines in a discotheque in Berlin and the death of Libyans through American bombing of Libya," he said. "There is no question about it, we can trace that."

The United States bombed Libya in 1986 in retaliation for an April 5, 1986, terrorist attack on a Berlin discotheque that killed a U.S. serviceman and a Turkish woman and wounded 204 other people.

Bailey explained that all major transfers from the West go through three major clearing houses.

Bailey said the money was traced by the National Security Agency, a highly secret agency that eavesdrops on international communications for U.S. intelligence operations.

Pat Coulson, public affairs officer of the NSA, said she had no comment.

Bailey now heads a private consulting firm, Norman A. Bailey Inc. He said in a telephone interview that he was succeeded in his job by his deputy, with whom he remained in close contact. He still has his own "top secret" clearance, he added, which enables him to read highly confidential U.S. government documents.

Lt. Gen. William Odom, the agency's director from 1985 to 1988, also appeared on the program, part of a PBS series called American Interests. He said he could not comment directly.

"I will say that such flows would not be abnormal for the East Bloc's way of supporting Third World activities," he added.

The show is to be broadcast July 12, two days before President George Bush has his first summit meeting with leaders of other non-communist industrial countries.

The program also shows Helmut Krausser, identified as London representative of East Germany's Aussenhandelsbank (Foreign Trade Bank), to which the loan was originally made.

"Regarding Libya, I don't think there was any kind of this support," he said.

Neal B. Freeman, executive producer of the program, said in a telephone interview that there was no indication that First Chicago knew where the money eventually went.

Banners hung for rodeo time

Rodeo banners were hung at local businesses around the city Thursday and today as rodeo time nears.

In the past, several of the banners have been stolen or vandalized, according to Top o' Texas Rodeo Association officials.

The banners are private property and any theft or vandalism is a crime. The rodeo association will prosecute anyone involved in the theft or destruction of these banners, officials said.

The rodeo banners that are paid for and displayed by area merchants add a great deal to our rodeo celebration and crimes such as theft or vandalism only ruin the activities for everyone, officials stated.

Oil drilling ban gaining momentum

WASHINGTON (AP) — A move to halt new offshore oil exploration is gaining momentum in Congress where the Exxon Valdez disaster hangs like an oil slick over the debate on opening new coastal areas to the petroleum industry.

The House Appropriations Committee approved legislation Thursday calling for a moratorium on new oil and gas exploratory leases along vast stretches of coastal waters from the Georges Bank off New England to Alaska's Bristol Bay.

The measure is likely to clear the House, and the White House has begun to focus on the Senate in hopes of blocking final approval of the ban, which President Bush maintains will threaten the country's domestic energy needs.

The moratorium, included in an $11.6-billion fiscal 1990 money bill for the Interior Department, prompted heated debate before clearing the committee by voice vote after two damaging amendments were defeated by votes of 28-22 and 29-22.

But the debate made clear the deep concern felt by many members of Congress over the possibility of an oil spill — a concern spawned by the March 24 Exxon spill in Alaska and intensified by three recent smaller spills in Rhode Island, Delaware and Texas.

"We've got to wait," argued Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Mass., urging approval of the yearlong moratorium on further offshore oil exploration until better safeguards are shown to protect against an oil spill.

"We've seen what's happened in Prince William Sound" in Alaska, declared Rep. Sidney Yates, D-Ill., adding that "the same potential damage" is present in other coastal areas.

Opponents of the moratorium, which would prohibit the Interior Department from issuing offshore oil leases until October 1990 in the areas affected, argued that such delays would seriously harm the country's energy policy.

"What we're doing in the name of the environment is cutting off our (domestic) energy sources. ... We're going to have brownouts and then there will be blackouts," argued Rep. Bob Livingston, R-La.

Rep. Ralph Regula, R-Ohio, argued that the Bristol Bay leases pose no environmental threat to the bay area, one of the country's premier commercial fishing areas, although the oil would be transported by tanker.

The Interior Department last year sold six leases in Bristol Bay for exploratory drilling for $95 million, but will have to buy them back if the moratorium clears Congress.

An exploratory drilling moratorium already has been in effect on leases in many of the areas included in the legislation, but the oil industry had hoped before the Alaska spill that some of those bans would be lifted this year. Instead, the moratorium would be extended another year and expanded.

Austin police arrest suspect in poisoning of historic tree

By PEGGY FIKAC
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — The Travis County district attorney praised an "outpouring of support from the community" for the historic Treaty Oak after a man was charged with felony criminal mischief in the poisoning of the tree.

Paul Stedman Cullen, 45, of Elroy, was being held in lieu of $20,000 bail in connection with the poisoning, authorities announced in a Thursday news conference at the centuries-old tree. Elroy is a community south of Austin.

Authorities said the pouring of the powerful herbicide Velpar around the tree's base may have occurred during some sort of ritual. Police would not elaborate.

"The arrest is a tribute to both the good work of the Austin Police Department and to the caring of this community," said District Attorney Ronald Earle, noting that several residents phoned in tips to police.

"The people who live here have a pretty high awareness of their environment and take steps to preserve it," he said.

Cullen was arrested at 11:41 a.m. near a farm and ranch supply store where he worked, said Austin Police Sgt. John Jones, who investigated the case. The warrant said Cullen acquired Velpar through the business.

An arrest warrant authorized by State District Judge Jon Wisser said Cullen poisoned the Treaty Oak "in a ritual."

Wisser said that before he signed the warrant, investigators told him Cullen had checked out books from the public library on black magic and the occult.

Earlier, the Austin-American Statesman reported an unidentified suspect in the poisoning had been trying to cast a spell to protect a woman or because of a rivalry over a woman.

The judge also said police told him that Cullen had a prison record for burglary, was known to carry a pistol and was believed to have mental problems.

"So, I set bond at $20,000 because it sounded like he was a fairly unstable, dangerous individual," Wisser said.

Cullen was charged with second-degree felony criminal mischief and faces a maximum of 20 years in prison and a $10,000 fine if convicted. A prior felony conviction would allow that to be raised to a first-degree felony, with a maximum punishment of life in prison and a $20,000 fine, Earle said.

The Texas Board of Pardons and Paroles said Cullen was released from prison on March 19, 1987, after serving three months of a two-year sentence for burglary in Travis County.

Cullen was under parole supervision until December 30, 1988, said Karin Armstrong, spokeswoman for the board of pardons and paroles.

Wisser said Jones told him he had listened to a tape on which Cullen said he poisoned the tree. Jones said last week that several callers identified the same suspect and that the man supposedly had told others about the episode.

Officers searched for further evidence in a makeshift trailer where Cullen lives on the grounds of the farm and ranch supply business.

Hilliard Nelson, who identified himself as the brother of the woman who owns the business, said his sister allowed Cullen to live there because she "felt sorry for him."

The Treaty Oak is struggling to survive the poisoning, which has received national attention on network television and in newspapers.

After the attack was discovered early this month, a total of $11,000 was offered for information leading to the conviction of the poisoner. Du Pont, which makes Velpar at a plant in La Porte, put up $10,000 of the reward, and the Texas Forestry Association added $1,000.

Dallas billionaire H. Ross Perot has pledged money and given advice in the effort to save the tree, and state and national experts have recommended several forms of treatment. Visitors have left flowers and get-well messages at the oak.

Crowd greets Wright at his 'homecoming' in Fort Worth

By HOLDEN LEWIS
Associated Press Writer

FORT WORTH (AP) — Jim Wright says he is not bitter about his political downfall and he's undecided about what he'll do next.

Wright, whose resignation from the U.S. House of Representatives takes effect this afternoon, was greeted by about 3,000 enthusiastic supporters Thursday night at a homecoming bash at the Round Up Inn in central Fort Worth.

"I want to thank you for being broad-minded enough, tolerant enough, big-spirited enough to tolerate my foibles, my eccentricities and my mistakes occasionally," Wright said as the crowd cheered. "And you let me do the big and important things that helped all of us."

That was about the closest Wright came to mentioning the 69 alleged violations of House ethics rules that prompted him to announce May 31 that he was resigning the House seat he held more than 34 years.

He blamed his troubles partly on reporters who he said were too quick to write about rumors.

When Julius Caesar rode his chariot through adoring crowds, Wright said, a man continuously whispered in his ear, "Remember, Julius, you're only a man."

"Thank goodness I don't need somebody to remind me of that," Wright continued. "Now, in our modern society, we have the newspapers to remind us of that."

After a 15-minute speech, Wright took off his coat and sat on the edge of the stage, shaking hands, signing autographs and saying hello to old friends. The crush of admirers thinned out after about an hour.

Wright, smiling and obviously pleased with his reception, said he felt no bitterness toward the media and his political opponents.

"Anyone who carries a burden of bitterness does more harm to himself than anyone else," he said.

In his folksy speech, during which he stood, relaxed, with his hands in his pockets, Wright said he would like to remain active as a private citizen. He said he would like to work toward peace in Latin America, and he added that talking with college students made him happy.

After the speech, he said had yet to make any long-range plans.

Wright's welcome was warm. The red drapes behind the stage at the cavernous Round Up Inn were decorated with a "Welcome Home Jim" sign in 6-foot-high letters. Beside the letters was a 10-foot-high caricature of Wright featuring his bushy eyebrows. He got half-minute standing ovations when he took the stage and after he finished his speech.

The Rev. Carol Ann Tatum of Fort Worth braved the crush in front of the stage and emerged with autographs of Wright and his wife, Betty, who sat beside him.

"I feel fantastic that other people feel the same way about him that I do, and that's pure love," she said.

Allison reverses course, moves back over already drenched land

HOUSTON (AP) — Southeast Texas, saturated by Tropical Storm Allison earlier this week, was getting even more rain today as remnants of the persistent storm returned to the area.

"It's not near the storm when it went through a couple of days ago but it will produce some heavy rains," National Weather Service meteorologist Tom Fountain said, adding that some areas could get as much as 3 inches of rain.

The weather service extended a flash flood watch today to include southeast and parts of northeast Texas, extending from the upper Gulf Coast to as far north as Paris, Tyler and Nacogdoches.

In Port Arthur, the weather service measured three inches of rain since midnight, bringing the June total in the city to 17.5 inches — breaking the record of 15.04 inches set in June 1942.

Some street flooding was reported this morning in Port Arthur and nearby Beaumont and residents were advised not to travel unless absolutely necessary.

Farther north, in Polk County,

A low pressure center — the remains of Allison — was stationary just west of Houston with little movement expected. The wind flow around the storm was bringing the moisture from the Gulf.

Allison, which became the first named storm of the 1989 Atlantic hurricane season when winds reached 39 mph, moved ashore southwest of Houston on Monday, dumping more than a foot of rain in a 24-hour period, before taking its downpours into Louisiana. In its wake, however, it left hundreds of homes flooded, roads closed, at least four deaths and preliminary damage estimates approaching $1 billion.

Officials said aside from this week's rain, Southeast Texas residents have to contend with heavy rains from last month. Any additional rain is expected to cause more flooding into already flooded creeks, bayous, rivers and other low-lying areas.

"All streams and bayous are back within their banks," Bill Evans of the Harris County Flood Control District said Thursday.

"As long as the 3 inches is over a daylong period, we're OK. But you get 4 or 5 inches, we could get in trouble again."

About 100 miles east of Houston in Orange and Jefferson counties, heavy rainfall Thursday flooded streets and underpasses.

"I waded through water to get to my car this morning," said Sherri Christianson, who lives about a mile from the Sabine River in the flood-prone West Bluff area of Orange County. "We're tired of it. Mother Nature needs to let up on us."

Beaumont police Thursday reported light rain and improved runoff in areas that saw prior flooding, but the Orange area near the Louisiana border reported steady rain, along with numerous street closings and flooded homes.

"The saturation point is at a maximum," Sheriff's department Maj. Dave Smith said. "The river is full and all the drainage systems are full, so if the storm pulls back up out of the gulf or they open the flood gates at Toledo Bend (Reservoir) we're going to have very serious problems."

Word on abortion decision awaits Monday

By RICHARD CARELLI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The wait for the Supreme Court's latest word on abortion rights will last through the weekend.

The court prolonged the drama surrounding its most closely watched case of the 1980s by postponing until Monday any word in an abortion dispute from Missouri. In it, the justices are being asked to reverse the court's 1973 decision legalizing abortion.

Scores of partisans who had gathered on the court building's front steps voiced disappointment Thursday.

Olivia Gans of the National Right to Life Committee said, "It is difficult to wait ... but we remain optimistic."

Faye Wattleton, president of Planned Parenthood, said further delay would be "an indication of the turmoil that this court is willing to create in this country."

Randall Terry, national director of an anti-abortion group called Operation Rescue, said, "If I was a Supreme Court justice, I would throw the decision off the airplane as I was leaving the country."

Before beginning its three-month summer recess, the court must deal with three cases awaiting decision.

In each, the court must announce a decision or order the case reargued. If it chooses the latter course, a new round of arguments would be held during the court term that begins in October, with announcement of a decision likely in 1990.

Court officials refused all comment on the prospect of a Monday decision in the Missouri case, which is called Webster vs. Reproductive Health Services. And in the absence of any hard facts, rumors abounded.

Abortion-rights advocates fear the court will order the Missouri case reargued next term and do so in a way that signals the justices are contemplating a major retreat from the 1973 ruling in Roe vs. Wade.

In that decision, the court said women have a constitutional right to abortion.

If reargument is ordered, the court also could agree to review up to three other abortion disputes pending before the justices. That would be read by some as a tip-off the court was on the verge of a sweeping ruling.

The three cases — from Illinois, Ohio and Minnesota — all involve state regulations making abortions harder to get.

The 1973 ruling said a woman's decision to have an abortion during the first three months of pregnancy must be left to her and her doctor. It said states may regulate abortions during the second trimester only to protect the woman's health, and may take steps to protect fetal life in the third trimester.

State authority to regulate abortions after the first trimester was not made absolute, however. If Roe vs. Wade were reversed, states would be free to stringently regulate — or even outlaw — abortion.

In the two decisions the court

did announce Thursday, it:

- Gave public officials more authority to ban advertising and sales pitches — including "Tupperware parties" in college dormitories. The 6-3 ruling in a New York case significantly limited commercial free speech.

- Limited, in a case from Washington state, the power of Indian tribes to control, through tribal zoning laws, the use of land owned by non-Indians within a reservation's boundaries.

The two other cases in which decisions are pending include an important church-state dispute from Pittsburgh focusing on holiday displays.

DPS challenges drivers to be safe

The director of the Department of Public Safety has challenged Texas drivers to show that the DPS traffic death estimate of 52 persons for the long July 4th period is far too high, said Col. Joe Milner.

"The number will be lower if more drivers will slow down, avoid drinking alcohol and use a well-known safety precaution — seat belts," said Milner.

"The DPS Public Information Office will conduct the traffic fatality count for 102 hours, beginning at 6 p.m. Friday, June 30, and continuing until midnight on Tuesday, July 4th," he added.

The final count for the 1988 July 4th period, which was 78 hours in length, totaled 32 fatalities, according to a DPS news release.

Col. Milner said as part of his agency's "Operation Holiday," additional troopers will be deployed to help minimize the risk of driving on all roadways in rural areas.

Maj. Vernon Cawthon, regional commander of the Texas Department of Public Safety, stated, "Before traveling, you should insure your car is in good working condition, including necessary equipment to help in case of a break down, such as a good spare tire. Long trips should be well planned, allot ample time for traveling, be well rested and take frequent breaks."

The DPS also warned Texans not to drink and drive. Driving while intoxicated is not only associated with large fines, jail time and loss of driving privileges, but the cost could be as high as the driver's life.

The DPS offered several suggestions. Always be watchful of other motorists. Be courteous by displaying good driving habits that you expect others to display. Remember that courtesy can be contagious.

Insure that everyone in the vehicle is properly secured and that all loose items are in the trunk. During a collision, any loose object could be a potentially dangerous weapon.

"To insure your safety this 4th of July holiday, drive friendly. It's the Texas way!" DPS officials said.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Let's hope Poland picks free market

Democracy continues to advance peacefully in at least one place, Poland. In elections this month the Communist Party regime lost heavily to the Solidarity free trade union. Yet regime spokesman Jan Bisztyga announced, "We are consistent. ... We shall not leave the road of democracy and reform."

Some people, in Poland and America, are now discussing what shape Poland's government will take after communism. The talk may be premature. Soviet tanks still occupy Poland. No one knows what actions Soviet boss Mikhail Gorbachev will take if democracy triumphs. And Poland's own Communist regime may, like the regime in Beijing, have second thoughts about the freedom flower allowed to bloom.

Yet should Poland discard communism, what next? Some commentators speculate that Poland might not be prepared for democracy and Western-style freedoms. The country has little experience with democracy. And many Solidarity leaders favor turning the communist economic structure into a kind of worker socialism, with most big factories still run by the government but (so it is hoped) without the massive corruption and incompetence endemic to communism.

These are indeed hazards a post-communist Poland must face. But several things offer hope. Poland has had few years of democracy, it is true, but mainly because it was occupied by Russia, Prussia and Austria from 1795 to 1918, by the Nazis and Soviets from 1939 to 1945, and by the Soviets since then.

During the brief period of independence, 1918 to 1939, Poland had only eight years of democracy, after which Gen. Jozef Pilsudski seized power as dictator. But it was an age of dictators: Mussolini, Hitler, Peron, Franco, all of whom were replaced by democratic governments. Had the Soviets not intervened, there's no reason why Poland would not have followed the same path.

A free Poland probably would develop the two-party system typical of most free countries. One party would be oriented toward the free market, one party toward social democracy — perhaps the Communist Party. But if the communists have been too discredited to survive, Solidarity itself might split into two parties. Already Solidarity activists are divided into a faction that favors rapid free-market reforms, and one that would maintain state control of big industries.

Poland's socialist economy is near collapse and needs drastic surgery. Free-market reforms would apply that surgery, setting the energy of individuals free for the task, while democratic socialism would be like applying a Band-Aid to an amputated arm. If Poles choose socialism, their choice will fail rapidly, eventually pushing them toward a free market. But let's hope that they choose a free market.

So far, the dogs are winning

WASHINGTON — As it nears the end of its term, the U.S. Supreme Court once again is grappling with the Sleeping Dog Doctrine. So far, the dogs are winning.

The doctrine is known to lawyers as the rule of stare decisis. Loosely translated from Latin, it teaches justices (and lower court judges) to stand by prior decision. In brief, let sleeping dogs lie.

Twice this month the court has adhered to the rule, but not without a struggle.

In a racial discrimination case based upon a Civil War statute, a majority declined to overrule a decision handed down in 1976. In another case involving "victim impact" statements in criminal trials, a majority stuck by a 1987 opinion — but only over the vigorous protest of Justice Antonin Scalia. The greatest challenge to the rule will come when — or if — the court decides whether to overrule the landmark abortion case of Roe v. Wade (1973).

In the racial discrimination case, Justice Anthony Kennedy defended the rule of stare decisis as a doctrine "of fundamental importance to the rule of law." It provides "a basic self-governing principle within the judicial branch." Prior decisions, especially in cases that turn on statutory law, ought not to be overturned without compelling reason. It is often better that the law be settled than that the law be settled "right."

The Sleeping Dog Doctrine applies with lesser force in cases that turn on constitutional interpretation. The reasoning is that Congress can always correct what is seen as a wrong construction of a statute, but unless the court changes its own collective mind, it takes a full-blown constitutional amendment, ratified by three-fourths of the states, to overcome opinions of the high court in such areas as school prayer and abortion.

In any event, the court often has changed its collective mind in the past. Perhaps the most notable switch in the court's history came in 1954, when the justices unanimously discarded 60 years of precedent in the matter of school segregation. Over these six decades, as Justice Hugo Black cheerfully acknowledged, the 14th Amendment had not changed by as much as a comma, "but the judges had changed."

That is usually the way these great turnabouts occur. Back in 1870, the Supreme Court held the Congress had no power to issue paper money. The decision infuriated President Grant. He persuaded Congress to enlarge the court from seven to nine members. Then he named two complaisant fellows to the court. A new test case was promptly hustled onto the docket, and behold: Presto! Change! The paper money that was unconstitutional in 1870 became legal tender in 1871.

Another remarkable about-face came in the early '40s. The high court had ruled 8-1 in 1940 that a Pennsylvania school district constitutionally could compel students to recite the Pledge of Allegiance. This was the Gobitis case. Following the high court's guidance, West Virginia passed a law decreeing that students could be expelled if they refused the salute. Walter Barnett, a Jehovah's Witness, went to court. Kazaam! On June 14, 1943, the Gobitis decision went to history's landfill dump.

How come? The First Amendment hadn't changed. The judges had changed. Harlan Stone had moved up to chief justice; James Byrnes had resigned; Wiley Rutledge and Robert Jackson had come on the court. Justices Black and Douglas, after "long reflection," had simply changed their minds. Three years earlier it had been fully constitutional for schools to require the pledge. Now it was unconstitutional.

On other occasions the court has ignored the doctrine of stare decisis on issues of double jeopardy, black voting rights and the imposition of state income taxes upon federal employees. Between 1937 and 1941, a rapidly changing court overruled one case after another involving minimum wages and working hours. Justice Owen Roberts grumbled that the string of reversals "tends to bring adjudication of this tribunal into the same class as a restricted railroad ticket, good for this day and train only."

So it goes. When it suits their purpose, members of the high court inveigh ponderously against letting their own personal views intrude upon the chaste purity of the law. Precedent must be honored. Stare decisis must be respected. But when times and judges change, sleeping dogs are roused from slumber.

We live under a Constitution, as Charles Evans Hughes observed long ago, but the Constitution is what the judges say it is.

And abortions after the fact

In the ongoing debate over abortion — between the baby's right to life and a mother's right to choose, between wanted babies and unwanted babies — many media people have been influenced — perhaps unduly — by the day-to-day examples of what happens to so many unwanted babies.

Abortion after the fact. Christina LoCasto of Staten Island, N.Y., abandoned her newborn in a jetliner restroom. Charged with child abandonment, she pleaded "not guilty."

But then her plea-bargaining lawyer was able to make a deal; she pleaded "no contest" and escaped jail.

And under the letter of the law relating to a mother's rights it is likely that some judge is bound to return her baby to her.

You may have heard that a little girl "fell to her death" from a fifth-floor window in New York. Little Rachel Sanchez, age 2, died as a result of terrible injuries.

Now police have charged that the mother threw the daughter out the window. That the mother, angered because her air conditioner had malfunctioned, threw the child out the window.

Subsequent investigation revealed evidence of other child abuse in the household.

According to a neighbor, Mrs. Sanchez had recently thrown a puppy and two kittens out the window "to punish the children."

The mother is now charged with murder, with "abortion after the fact."

Two surviving children, ages 1 and 3, have been turned over to the Child Welfare Administration.

The Sanchezes have three other children living with relatives — a total of five apparently unwanted babies.

In Los Angeles' Lennox area Baby Roxanne Diaz-Molina, 11 months old, was allegedly beaten by the mother's boyfriend.

Baby Roxanne did not die immediately from the "multiple injuries inflicted." She clung to life at County-Harbor-UCLA Medical Center for agonizing hours. Then she died.

The boyfriend — how cynically we have come to use that word — Jacinto Peres — may have been the baby's father.

In Alton, Ill., a mother has been indicted, suspected of killing two infant daughters — one year apart.

Her husband says she did not want the babies.

A North Chicago couple is charged with force-feeding their infant son sulfuric acid.

I hear criticism that the media is taking sides with the pro-choice proponents.

If this is so, I suspect that the journalists who matured as beat-pounding reporters have seen too much of "abortion after the fact."

Let's accept more European immigrants

By BEN WATTENBERG

America now has a refugee policy that goes something like this: "When you can't get out, you can come in — but when you can get out, you can't come in."

It is a bizarre policy, yet grounded in some reality. It is a policy that is wrong and dumb. We can have a policy, Congress willing, that is right and smart.

The current situation is rooted in the starkly changed circumstances in the Soviet Union and some of the Eastern European nations. The communists, it used to be said, were primitive barbarians. Their nations were prisons; people couldn't leave. Shame!

But today, in that economic basket case called Poland, emigration is allowed. Hungary today has an open border. The Soviet Union is letting out many Jews, Armenians and Pentecostal Christians, and the numbers are expected to mount.

Now that many can leave, what has been the response from the West? Several words come to mind: Incoherent. Weird. Amoral.

America has laws concerning refugees. Until recently, people from the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe were almost automatically granted refugee status by the United States. But the legal definition of "refugee" concerns a "well-founded fear of persecution." So what happens when a nation like Poland becomes less nasty to its citizens? The legal presumption of persecution falls away.

Accordingly, when liberalization began in the East, American policy was changed from blanket approval to a "case-by-case" approach. The case-by-case procedure takes more time, money and personnel — and it was applied to what quickly became a flood of applications for refuge. Naturally enough, in a Kafkaesque sense that is, the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service stopped interviewing potential refugees from Poland. The backlog was too big, they said. Nice policy: "Case by case, but, by the way, we're not accepting cases."

The Bush administration will soon be allocating an extra 22,500 refugee slots. The numbers are far too small. A real solution lies in the realm of "immigrants" not "refugees." Immigrants at least don't face the Catch-22 question of "persecution."

American immigration patterns have changed. It used to be that about 80 percent of our immigrants were whites of European ancestry. Today, 80 percent are not.

The growth of Asian, Hispanic, Moslem and black immigration has been generally healthy for the United States. But it has not been publicly applauded. People are saying America will literally change complexion — and they are not pleased.

There are anomalies in the current immigration law that allow us a golden opportunity to do several good things at once. Almost all of our immigrants today come in on the basis of family preference criteria. Because of the recent non-European makeup of our immigration, it is very difficult for Europeans to emigrate to the United States; they have no close relatives here. It is also very difficult for people to come to America on the basis of what skills are needed in the United States.

We need a new legal immigration policy that will provide a more level playing field for all. It should allow more slots for Europeans and more slots for skill-based immigration. By raising the annual total, this can be done, and done without cutting back on existing immigration sources. We now take in about 600,000 legal immigrants per year. We should move toward 1 million.

A newly marked-up Senate immigration bill makes little headway on these matters. Hope for intelligent action now rests with the House immigration subcommittee, chaired by Rep. Bruce Morrison, D-Conn.

Establishing a new stream of immigrants — European, skilled and legal — would help unfree people be free. It would take some of the current racial and ethnic hostility out of American attitudes toward immigration. It would help us deal with labor and customer shortages that America will face in the 1990s. It would help America grow and prosper.

Dole aide resigns amid investigation into male prostitution

By RICHARD KEIL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal officials are investigating possible credit card fraud against patrons of an alleged homosexual prostitution ring, including a top political operative in the Labor Department who has now resigned.

The investigation is based on financial records and other material seized in raids on a house in an upscale Washington neighborhood that police say was used by escort services with names such as "Dream Boys" and "Man to Man."

U.S. Attorney Jay Stephens on Thursday confirmed the investigation into allegedly fraudulent multiple billings of the services' patrons, after The Washington Times reported that the ring was patronized by Reagan and Bush administration officials, congressional aides and one of its own former editors.

One of a handful of individuals named in the Times article, Paul R. Balach, resigned Thursday evening.

"I hereby resign my position this date due to the public disclosure of activities concerning my personal life," Balach said in a letter announcing his resignation as Labor Secretary Elizabeth Dole's political personnel liaison to the White House.

Balach told the Times that thousands of dollars in charges were run up on his credit card; without his knowledge after he used the service.

Secret Service agents and District of Columbia police raided the house in Northwest Washington on two occasions, in February and May.

In applying for search warrants, district police Detective Gerald W. Robertson said the investigation had produced "probable cause to believe that records and evidence related to an interstate prostitution business" were located there.

Stephens refused to talk about allegations of the homosexual ring, but said in a statement that his office "has been investigating allegations involving credit card fraud arising from the execution of those warrants."

During the raids, officers confiscated multi-line telephones, paging devices, credit card imprints, numerous bank statements, credit card slips and a diary of the escort business, according to an inventory filed in U.S. District Court.

The Times said it has obtained a number of credit card slips and it identified individuals who paid for services, including Balach.

Labor Department sources said Balach initially decided Thursday morning to take a few days' annual leave after being named by the Times as a patron of the escort services. He resigned Thursday evening.

In an interview before his resignation was announced, Balach said, "I have been a victim. I'm cooperating fully. I've talked several times with the Secret Service." He declined to elaborate, but said the Times had published "an accurate account of the turmoil I've been through" the last few months.

The Times quoted unnamed witnesses and law enforcement agents as saying the Secret Service kept one box of seized files containing names and other information about high-level government officials who were clients of the escort businesses.

The Times said Stanley Mark Tapscott, one of its former assistant managing editors, was among those who used the escort services. Tapscott, who resigned June 20, said he had not paid for sexual services of any kind, but was conducting an investigation into dial-a-porn services. The paper said its editors were unaware of any such reporting assignment.

Another individual identified by the Times as a patron of the escort services was Charles K. Dutcher, former associate director of presidential personnel in the Reagan administration. Dutcher, now a private consultant, told the newspaper that "stress" drove him to seek out a male prostitute once.

Calls to Dutcher's home were not answered and he did not immediately return messages left on his answering machine.

Proud of the flag

County courthouse Thursday. Koger's sign invites any "Commie jerk" to try and burn the flag he's holding.

California on edge about wildfires

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A Fourth of July fascination with bangs, booms and sparkles has Southern California authorities on edge as a worsening drought kicks in an early wildfire season.

"The problem we have this year is that we've reached the critical stage right before July Fourth and it's hard to keep people from bringing in the fireworks," said Terry Molzahn of the U.S. Forest Service.

Flames crackling through tinder-dry brush in mountains near Lake Elsinore, 60 miles southeast of Los Angeles, and the Antelope Valley briefly forced thousands of residents to flee infernos in recent days.

The fires have blackened about 10,000 acres and have destroyed eight homes. The largest blaze, near Lake Elsinore, was reported 70 percent contained late Thursday, and firefighters hoped to surround it completely by today.

"With the amount of dead material or die-back of the brush, we are today where we should be at the end of August," said Los Angeles City Fire Battalion Chief Bob Neamy.

Rangers in the 647,000-acre Angeles National Forest will be stopping all vehicles entering the forest this holiday weekend to check for fireworks, said U.S. Forest Service spokesman George A. Roby.

Some cities permit the sale and use of so-called "safe and sane" fireworks, which include sparklers and other non-explosives. It's the illegal fireworks, most smuggled in from Mexico, that alarm firefighters.

"We don't recommend any type of fireworks use for the public," said Neamy, whose department recommends attending one of the many fireworks presentations in parks, stadiums and along the coast.

"We don't want to take apple pie and the American flag away. We don't think fireworks are bad if they are conducted by professionals in a show," said city fire spokesman Gary Svider.

All fireworks, including the type that exploded Tuesday in a Koreatown apartment and injured several police officers, have been forbidden in Los Angeles since 1942.

Firecrackers, skyrockets and other aerial displays are prohibited in California, the only exception occurring during the Chinese New Year when Chinese business associations are allowed to set off firecrackers in ethnic and religious celebrations.

Last year, illegal fireworks were responsible for 146 fires and 59 injuries in Los Angeles.

In the 8,200-acre Lake Elsinore blaze, two houses and five mobile homes were destroyed. Authorities said much progress was made Thursday in fighting the man-made fire. An investigation was under way to determine if the fire was arson.

"We got a super day in today getting a line around this," Barton Ball of the U.S. Forest Service said late Thursday. "Everybody is back in their homes."

In the Antelope Valley 45 miles north of Los Angeles, meanwhile, firefighters declared that 2,250-acre blaze contained Thursday at 6 p.m.

Company admits falsifying drug test

WASHINGTON (AP) — The generic version of a popular high blood pressure drug was sold to the public without undergoing full safety tests, a House subcommittee charges.

Vitarine Pharmaceuticals Inc. of Springfield Gardens, N.Y., recalled the drug, a generic version of Dyazide, earlier this month because of concerns that faulty data may have been submitted to the Food and Drug Administration in an application for approval of the drug.

A House subcommittee, in a letter to Vitarine on Thursday, said it had learned that the company has told FDA officials that the tests were "false because the innovator product (the original drug) was put in Vitarine capsules and simply tested against itself."

"The new information raises serious concerns" about the safety of Vitarine's product as well as a generic version made by Bolar Pharmaceutical and the original drug made by SmithKline Beckman, said Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., in a letter to the FDA. He chairs the investigations subcommittee of the House Energy and Commerce Committee.

A subcommittee source said the tests yielded different results even though SmithKline's original product allegedly was being compared with itself, instead of with the Vitarine generic drug.

"The drug (the Vitarine generic) is not what was tested, so you don't have any idea whether it is safe," said the source, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Before its patents expired, Dyazide was one of the best-selling drugs in the country, measured by dollar volume of sales.

The subcommittee asked Pharmakinetics of Baltimore, Md., the laboratory that conducted the tests comparing Vitarine's product and Bolar's version with the SmithKline original, to hold all samples of the drugs.

The comparison studies are crucial to the FDA's approval of a generic, lower-cost version of a prescription drug. The tests determine whether the generic drug is chemically identical to and thus biologically equivalent to the original.

Dingell's subcommittee has been conducting an investigation into alleged bribery in the FDA's generic drug division. The Justice Department also is investigating the allegations.

The FDA declined to comment on the subcommittee's latest charges.

"The FDA is in the middle of an ongoing investigation of Vitarine and it would be improper to comment any further at this time," said spokesman Jeff Nesbit. Asked whether the FDA had safety concerns about Dyazide or either of its generic versions, he said, "no," but added, "I really can't speak to that."

Alan Kaplan, a Washington attorney representing Vitarine, said: "This is a matter that is being investigated and Vitarine has advised the FDA of this possibility. It's still under investigation. There's no definite conclusion at this time."

Senator wants U.S.-PLO talks halted

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Florida senator is calling for a suspension of U.S. talks with the Palestine Liberation Organization after two secret meetings between the Bush administration and Chairman Yasser Arafat's second-in-command.

And Israel is registering regret and disappointment. Ambassador Moshe Arad called at the State Department Thursday to say PLO terrorism is escalating and that the U.S. move has hurt chances for holding Palestinian elections.

Sen. Connie Mack, R-Fla., asked Secretary of State James A. Baker III in a letter to suspend all contact with the PLO until Congress can review the development in hearings and in committees.

"It is incomprehensible to me that the administration would escalate its contacts with the PLO without any consultation with Congress or any improvement in PLO behavior," Mack said.

While the senator said the Bush administration had "upgraded its contacts," State Department officials said the two meetings did not reflect a change in policy.

The State Department confirmed that Robert Pelletreau, the U.S. ambassador to Tunisia, met twice with Salah Khalaf, known also as Abu Iyad, who is Arafat's security chief. There was no immediate word on the outcome of the meetings.

Officials said the purpose was to explore prospects for holding elections among the 1.4 million Palestinian Arabs who live under Israeli control on the West Bank and in Gaza.

But Arad called on Assistant Secretary of State John Kelly to reinforce his government's opposition to the U.S.-PLO dialogue, which the Reagan administration opened last December after Arafat publicly renounced terrorism and acknowledged Israel's right to exist.

The meetings were confirmed by the State Department only after they were disclosed by Khalaf in an interview with the Kuwaiti news agency KUNA.

A State Department spokesman, Adam Shub, and other U.S. officials said Pelletreau's two meetings with Khalaf did not reflect any change in U.S. policy.

"Ambassador Pelletreau is our authorized channel for conducting the U.S. dialogue with the PLO and as such he may meet with PLO officials," Shub said.

Officials who spoke only on condition of anonymity said one of the meetings was held Monday and the other on an earlier occasion.

Sudanese military forces overthrow government in coup

KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP) — The Sudanese armed forces today seized power by overthrowing the civilian government of Prime Minister Sadek el-Mahdi, the military announced. No casualties were reported.

Sadek el-Mahdi

Egypt's state Middle East News Agency said in a dispatch from Khartoum that "some political figures and Cabinet ministers" were arrested but did not give numbers or names.

There was no word on the whereabouts of el-Mahdi, who became prime minister after the May 1986 general election.

Sudan, the largest country in Africa, has about 19 million residents. It is a poor, predominantly independence.

Army units today occupied strategic locations around this capital, including the presidential palace, cabinet offices and the official voice of the Sudanese government, Radio Omdurman. A few soldiers also were posted at the official Sudan News Agency.

Gili Farah, an agency journalist, said there were no reports of violence during or after the coup.

Traffic was banned on bridges spanning the White Nile and the Blue Nile, but this city of 2 million appeared otherwise normal for the Moslem sabbath. Some cars and pedestrians were in the streets. No celebrations or demonstrations were evident.

Khartoum International Airport and Sudanese airspace were declared closed. In Cairo, Egypt, a regional air traffic control official said the International Civil Aviation Organization had warned airlines not to fly over Sudan.

Omdurman Radio went off the air early today but resumed transmissions at 8 a.m. (12 a.m. CDT) with martial music.

"The June revolution has come to restore to the Sudanese citizen his injured dignity and rebuild the Sudan of the future," the agency quoted the radio as saying.

A text of a later statement on the radio, read by Brig. Gen. Omar Hassan and also distributed by the Middle East News Agency, said the military staged the coup because "political parties failed to lead the nation toward the realization of its minimum aspirations."

In February, the military said it would move against el-Mahdi unless he ended Sudan's six-year civil war by accepting a tentative peace pact worked out between an opposition party and southern rebels. The war has contributed to food riots, widespread hunger in the south and a severe refugee problem.

The Egyptian agency said the brigadier who read the statement was believed to be a member of the armored corps, but it was not clear if he was the coup's actual leader.

The coup apparently ends the second premiership of el-Mahdi, 53, who became the country's first civilian leader in 17 years when his Umma Party won general elections 37 months ago.

At 30, el-Mahdi was prime minister for 10 months in 1966-67. This time, he took over from a transitional military government that overthrew President Gaafar Nimeiri in April 1985 and ruled for a year until arranging elections and surrendering power.

Jaruzelski says he's open to additional reforms in Poland

By JOHN DANISZEWSKI
Associated Press Writer

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski says he's open to additional democratic reforms in Communist Poland as long as they benefit society.

The comments by the Polish leader came before the party's Central Committee meets today to consider a nominee, likely Jaruzelski, for the new office of president.

Jaruzelski in a 40-minute interview with The Associated Press said the party will not return to its monopoly rule of the past. "We have become convinced that monopoly is a very unhealthy thing, not only in the economy, but also in political life."

Candidates backed by the labor union Solidarity won 99 of 100 seats in the newly created Senate and all 161 seats open to the opposition in the 460-member Sejm during voting in June. The remaining Sejm seats were reserved for the governing communists and their allies, who control the legislature.

The two chambers, meeting as the National Assembly, are expected to assemble early next month to elect a president.

The electoral activity will take place as President Bush comes to Poland on July 9-11 for a state visit. Bush is expected to express support for the recent Polish reforms.

Jaruzelski, who crushed Solidarity during martial law in 1981 and agreed to relegalize it this year, held the interview Wednesday at an elegant government reception room near his office. He answered additional questions in writing.

Wearing his familiar dark glasses and a traditional business suit, Jaruzelski declared that his party's automatic leading role in Poland "already is history."

Asked how far democratization could go, he said, in a written answer: "The limits of the reforms are not rigid. The main issue is their social purpose and effectiveness."

He said the economic and social changes have already put Poland in the forefront of reforms in the East bloc.

Asked if he would assume the presidency, Jaruzelski, who turns 66 on July 6, was noncommittal.

"I haven't gone to confession in a very long time, and I can see that you want me to confess," said the party leader, who once attended a Roman Catholic boarding school and leads a predominantly Catholic church.

He said his candidacy would depend on "democratic" consultations within the party.

"I will also seriously consider the stand of the opposition, understanding that the president, especially in our conditions when we have to unite the nation's efforts and build platforms of accord, should have at least a minimum of support" from all sides.

"I am a soldier, so I have a deep-rooted feeling of duty — but also of honor. I will not crawl to this post."

Speaking of reform, Jaruzelski said the opportunity for change could be lost if society rejects economic steps that "are painful — like every surgery that is expected to bring health."

Jaruzelski meanwhile said Poland hopes for "friendly American support," particularly help rescheduling its $39 billion debt with international lenders. But, he added, Poland wants no "charity."

Clements wants records kept open to public

By PATRICE GRAVINO
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — Information on felony crime victims should be open to the public and the media, but not to companies trying to sell security or alarm systems, says Gov. Bill Clements.

"We will not stand by and allow Texans to be preyed upon by criminals and unscrupulous business practices," the governor said in a news release announcing he had opened the special legislative session for consideration of changes in a recently passed law on crime victim identity.

Clements said Thursday that state law shouldn't restrict information available to the media.

"Allowing the Texas Open Records Act to become the Texas Closed Records Act is inexcusable," Clements said. "Clearly, the Texas media has a right, indeed an obligation, to fully and accurately inform the people of Texas.

"This information is essential to their responsibility as public representatives," he said.

The new law, which allows government agencies including police and fire departments to withhold the names of felony crime victims, has angered news organizations and confused police.

State lawmakers, who asked Clements to put the issue on the special session agenda, have said the measure was meant to protect crime victims from sales pitches by security and alarm companies. They said it has been misinterpreted and misapplied.

Clements urged legislators to amend rather than repeal the law. He said penalties should be established for people or businesses that use crime victim information for commercial profit.

The bill's author, Rep. Fred Blair, D-Dallas, earlier Thursday said he wanted to repeal the law "because of what is going on now and because of the future misapplication of the bill."

Thought to be the first of its kind in the United States, the measure allows the withholding of victims' names, addresses and other identifying information.

Sen. Kent Caperton, D-Bryan, a frequent sponsor of open-records legislation, said the bill "just slipped through," during the regular legislative session, which ended May 29.

Blair said, "There was no opposition (to the bill) at any level ... It went through the process like every other normal bill does."

"It's just that those who were interested didn't pay any attention and didn't do anything about it," he said, referring to the lack of opposition by news organizations.

"I think the lawmakers are just like you and everybody else," Blair told reporters. "I think all the lawmakers saw the bill as I saw the bill."

Clements signed the measure June 14. He said later that he hadn't thought it would put crime victim information "in seclusion."

News organizations throughout Texas have been unable to get routine crime information, such as the names of people killed in drunken driving accidents.

State troopers have been told to withhold any victim information in a possible felony crime.

Join Us In Worship IN THE CHURCH OF YOUR CHOICE

Preparing for the future

We parents are very careful to teach our children thrift and industry so that like this little girl they begin early in life preparing for the future. We sometimes are not so careful though to point out that there is a great deal more to the future than "a penny saved is a penny earned" or "early to bed and early to rise makes a man healthy, wealthy and wise."

We need the Church to remind us about the real values of life and to help us teach our children what life is really all about. Your nearby Church will be glad to answer any questions, religious or otherwise, you have about your child's spiritual training. The Sunday School is maintained to help you help your children. Use it!

Is something wrong with your life—an inner restless dissatisfaction? The answer to every human problem comes only from God our Maker. He alone can forgive and reassure. Through the church God has committed the provision and proclamation of His forgiveness and redeeming love. Without a church relation no one is securely related to God. Everyone should be in the Church and the Church in everyone!

His Touch

By Charlotte Barbaree

Scripture: Peter and the other apostles replied: "We must obey God rather than men!" (Acts 5:29 NIV)

In another town in the past, an alcoholic friend said, "I like my preacher. He's the kinda guy who will sit down in my den and have a few beers and smokes with me. And he's not too good to use a few choice words or exchange dirty jokes. He's my kind of preacher!"

I also knew the preacher. He, above all, wanted to be accepted in this world. He had an exaggerated need for people to know he, too, was a normal guy with normal desires and normal weaknesses.

In his effort to relate to others, his sermons even reflected (actually emphasized!) his own propensity for wavering faith in the deity of Christ. He perceived this spiritual vacillating as a mark of normalcy in Christians.

He was so anxious to associate himself with "normal" people that he did a grave disservice to the majority of his "normal" flock.

I could easily understand my drunken friend's affinity with the preacher. The preacher represented no threat to his conscience or his pleasure.

Tragically unrecognized by either of them, the preacher may very well have traded my friend's soul for his own social acceptance. The behavior that made him popular among a few rendered his Christian influence impotent with everyone!

We Christians all face the same dilemma as the preacher. What shall it be? Will we gamble the immortal souls of others for a wisp of willful indulgence in companionable vice?

Religion roundup

NEW YORK (AP) — A recent poll in Israel found that 61 percent of the people oppose legal changes advocated by Orthodox leaders that would bar admission under the Law of Return to Conservative and Reform converts to Judaism.

The poll of 1,096 Israelis, conducted for the American Jewish Committee by the Smith Research Center, also found that 51 percent say Reform and Conservative rabbis should have the same status in marriages, divorce and conversion that Orthodox rabbis now have.

WASHINGTON (AP) — About 500 members of the National Religious Broadcasters have not affirmed its new standards on ethics and financial integrity, according to syndicated religion columnist Michael McManus.

Only 70 members have done so, he says. In addition, he writes, the Internal Revenue Service is investigating 23 media evangelists, six of them prominent television preachers.

LARNACA, Cyprus (AP) — Pope John Paul II and the Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie, leader of world Anglicanism, have traded some more arguments about ordaining women.

Letters between the two prelates were released at a meeting here of the primates of Anglican branches in 27 nations.

Runcie had written the pope, urging study of the ordination issue on an ecumenical basis, saying it hasn't even been tried and expressing hope it would be carried out with "trust and mutual respect."

The pope said ordination of women in some parts of Anglicanism seems to "effectively block" mutual recognition of ministries, since Roman Catholicism and Eastern Orthodoxy are "firmly opposed" to it.

However, the pope emphasized the "strong bond of communion by which we are already united" and their mutual commitment to increasing that bond.

Religion

Americans feel strong on religion

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Americans are turning against marijuana and greater sexual freedom. Large majorities of them also favor stronger family ties, more emphasis on hard work and less on money.

They especially trust organized religion, and two-thirds are members of a church or synagogue. But half think religion is losing influence on American life, while a third think it's increasing.

Most think a person can be a good Christian or Jew without attending religious services, but 42 percent do so each week. A third say they have experienced a powerful religious insight or awakening.

And most teen-agers affirm belief in angels.

These are among the varied facets of faith turned up in recent Gallup organization polls, and summarized by its Princeton Religious Research Center in its monthly Emerging Trends.

Most of the surveys were among a representative 1,200 or more, with a margin for error of less than 4 percent either way.

One of the most unusual and consistent findings in this age of technocracy is that one of every three Americans say they have had a "mystical experience, that is, a moment of sudden religious insight or awakening."

The center says this "is one of the least explored, yet one of the most fascinating aspects of the spiritual life of Americans, sometimes described as an otherworldly feeling or union with God or a universal spirit."

The Gallup poll first began exploring the topic in 1962, finding that 20 percent then reported such experiences. By 1976, the proportion had risen to 31 percent, and has ranged above that since, 33 percent in 1988.

"Such an experience often appears to have a profound effect on the outlook and direction of a person's life," the report says, adding that the experiences are "more often gradual than sudden."

"One of the most interesting aspects of these phenomena is that they happen to the non-churched and the non-religious as well as to persons ... who say religion plays an important role in their lives."

On the drugs and sex issues, the trend is definitely down. During the past 10 years, public acceptance of marijuana has plunged — from 20 percent in 1978 to 13 percent in 1981 to only 8 percent today.

In the same period, overall public demand for greater sexual freedom fell from 29 percent in 1978 to 25 percent in 1981 to 22 percent today, with the sharpest downturn among young adults, although they still are more likely to espouse it.

Support for stronger family ties, now 94 percent, has remained close to that throughout the decade. So has the support for less emphasis on money, now 67 percent, and for working hard, now 70 percent.

Organized religion has for years been rated the most trusted institution, although the military momentarily surpassed it in 1986, and still ranks close to it.

The Supreme Court is close behind, with television, organized labor and big business at the bottom of the list.

The 65 percent reporting church or synagogue membership is the lowest ever recorded, down from 69 percent the year before. The record high was 76 percent in 1947. Attendance, now 42 percent, hit its high in 1955 at 49 percent.

Seventy-six percent of Americans say one can be a good Christian or Jew and not attend religious services, a proportion that has changed little for the last three decades.

Among U.S. college students, about half of those who have heard of the "New Age movement" have an unfavorable view of it, and only 14 percent favorable. It is a modern, optimistic mix of Eastern and Western spiritual ideas.

More teens than ever believe in angels, 74 percent of them, up from 64 percent in 1978. At the same time, 29 percent of them say they believe in witchcraft, up slightly from 25 percent in 1978.

NEW YORK (AP) — Rabbi Joel H. Zaiman of Baltimore has been elected the new national president of the Synagogue Council of America, which represents all three wings of Judaism: Orthodox, Conservative and Reform.

Larry Haddock

Haddock new minister for Hi-Land Christian

The congregation of Hi-Land Christian Church, 1615 N. Banks, announced this week the arrival of its new minister, Larry Haddock.

Haddock, 35, and his wife Janet have a 14-year-old daughter and are expecting their second child in December. They are moving to Pampa from a three-year ministry in Alamosa, Colo.

He is a native of Colorado who worked for nine years in the farm equipment business before entering the ministry. A student at Intermountain Bible College, Haddock received his degree in Bible Ministries from Manhattan Christian College in Manhattan, Kan., where he graduated summa cum laude.

"The Lord has truly blessed our efforts in ministry," said Haddock. "The congregation in Colorado more than doubled in average attendance during our time there."

He pointed out construction of a new facility and several practical ministry and evangelistic outreach programs were also started at the church during his time in Alamosa.

"With God's blessing and through the corporate efforts of the fine Christian folks at Hi-Land, we anticipate great growth, both spiritually and numerically," Haddock stated.

He expressed a desire to share his enthusiasm for Christianity with others.

"The one thing that turned my personal life around was when I came to realize this whole Christianity business was something to feel good about, something to smile about, as opposed to the piousness I had often perceived in so many 'religious' people," Haddock noted. "I am truly excited about my faith in Jesus Christ and I think it shows."

Haddock said he would start sharing that enthusiasm by inviting the public to attend Bible study each Sunday at 9:45 a.m. and worship services at 10:45 a.m. and 6:30 p.m.

Former burglar now jail chaplain

By BETH PRATT
Lubbock Avalanche Journal

LUBBOCK (AP) — Although Gilbert Herrera vowed to put his criminal past behind him, the former burglar again passes his time at the Lubbock County Jail. But this time, he can leave every day.

Herrera is one of two official jail chaplains appointed by Sheriff Sonny Keesee to work with inmates, their families, crime victims and potential offenders. And for the former Brown Beret activist, the ministry offers an opportunity to help a class of people often without hope.

"It's taken 40 years for Gilbert to come to the place where he could pin on that badge," Keesee said.

"I couldn't have done it four years ago," Herrera admitted. "I was still too confused."

Herrera's training actually began long before his seminarian days. It began with a burglary conviction in 1969, alcohol and drug problems, a five-year sentence and revocation of parole that sent the 22-year-old to the Texas Department of Corrections. Oddly, it is the jail sentence and other conflicts with the law that qualify Herrera to serve as chaplain.

While jail ministries sponsored by churches have existed here for many years and continue to make worship services available to inmates, Keesee is instituting a different facet of ministry: volunteer chaplains who wear badges and have a history relative to inmates.

"A prerequisite is that the chaplain must have been to the penitentiary," Keesee said. The volunteer also must have been out of prison and demonstrated for at least a year that there has been a genuine change in his behavior.

"A lot of people are not aware that even back in the so-called old days, Gilbert was a great help with many of our jail problems with inmates. He was kind of a mediator," Keesee recalled.

The sheriff credits Herrera with quelling more than one jail disturbance brewing among inmates. In cases of need when families did not have time to go through the bureaucracy of various social agencies to get help, "I could call Gilbert and he would take care of it. Some of the things he did he never got credit for."

"I am convinced that he has made a complete turnaround in his life," Keesee added. "In the past few months, he's worked not only with inmates in jail, but also with the young people on the streets who are trying hard to get into jail. He's very effective, one of the most effective I've ever met."

"What's the old saying? 'When you walk the walk, you can talk the talk.'"

Walking the walk is not easy, Herrera is the first to admit.

But today, Herrera is more at ease than when he initially made his religious conversion in the summer of 1986. The new easiness shows in his voice as well as in his body language.

"I feel I'm still in training camp," Herrera said. "I don't hurt as much as I did. The hardest thing for a man (to do) is to humble himself and admit he is wrong."

Although he has not used alcohol or drugs in four years, Herrera admits that the desires that drove him to illicit behavior are still there. "Every day I run into friends that still test me," he said.

Herrera's strong desire to be "somebody" initially led to his involvement in the Brown Berets, a Hispanic civil rights organization. He started a Lubbock chapter and often took his crusade for equality to city hall.

"I was showing the public a leader, but in my heart I was scared," Herrera said. "Now it is different — people respect me for what I'm doing. Most don't want to know about the Bible, but (to know) how much I care."

Herrera said now "I found I don't need an army to help people. I need to put God first."

Herrera was ordained in the ministry May 8, 1988, at First Baptist Church. The Rev. D.L. Lowrie, who was instrumental in advising the new convert, returned to Lubbock to preach at Herrera's ordination with a sermon titled "Being somebody for God."

The Rev. John Ballard, associate pastor at First Baptist Church, said Herrera has provided such a good example for his followers that the congregation has renamed a 2½-year-old charity organization funded through individual donations the Gilbert Herrera Evangelistic Association.

"I see the miracle of hatred being turned to love, bitterness being turned to joy and animosity turned to peace," Ballard said of Herrera. "There is a brand new Gilbert Herrera — I just wish everybody could know him like I know him."

Keesee said he, too, thought Herrera would provide a good role model.

"I watched Gilbert working through First Baptist Church for a long time before I made up my mind to offer him this position," Keesee said. "I need to emphasize that Gilbert is not deputized, but wears a clergy badge."

Notifying families when a family member is jailed, bringing news of crime-related or traffic injuries and fatalities and other traumatic events often fall within the duties of sheriff's deputies.

Keesee said he believes having a volunteer chaplain available to go out with the deputy and minister to a family in crisis can make an important contribution. A chaplain who understands the language and culture of the families involved helps avoid misunderstanding, Keesee said.

Since the sheriff's department brings bad news, it is often viewed as the enemy, Herrera said. He sees his job as that of offering comfort, much in the way that military sends a chaplain to assist a family in times of trouble and sorrow.

Because he is not a law enforcement officer, Herrera said people will talk to him. "I feel that my badge holds more power than the law of the land," Herrera said, referring to spiritual power. "People will call and want to turn themselves in. Even when we deal with hard criminals, we know a mother somewhere still loves him. I want to be there for her."

But not all the emotional and spiritual needs are with those behind bars, Herrera observed. "Deputies, lawyers and doctors go to hell, too," he said. "I take the opportunity to share the gospel with them, too."

Religion Roundup

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Eastern Orthodox's objections to ordaining women and a British clergywoman's reactions produced a strained moment here at the recent interdenominational World Conference on Mission and Evangelism.

On behalf of Eastern and Oriental Orthodox participants, Bishop Antonius Markos of Egypt said they supported a study by the World Council of Churches of full participation of women in church life, but not in the priesthood.

To admit women to the priesthood is "not, for us, subject to debate, since it is contrary to Christology, ecclesiology, tradition and practices" of the church through the ages.

Later, in discussing a proposal expressing joy at growing unity among Christians, the Rev. Elizabeth Jane Nash of the United Reformed Church in Great Britain said she was "deeply hurt" by the Orthodox statement and added:

"How can I as a woman, an ordained woman ... express joy when I experience rejection and hurt?"

Markos replied that the Orthodox did not intend to hurt anybody but "in love, we have to express our faith." He added: "Any woman ordained by her own church, if her church accepts her, we will give her all respect."

Teacher helping police to break Spanish language barrier

By JOHN CONWAY
The Odessa American

ODESSA (AP) — Sometimes, language barriers can be deadly. An Odessa woman, however, offers a way to crack that language barrier, at least for police officers and crime victims or suspects.

Linda Quiroz has translated common police questions and commands and designed a classroom course complete with workbooks, video and cassette tapes to teach peace officers how to understand and speak Spanish.

The course enables officers to complete a traffic stop or gather initial details of a crime without being fluent in Spanish. The booklets also contain street talk phrases that tip police off to the presence of a weapon or a threat from a suspect.

Ms. Quiroz, a former elementary school teacher, started her own business, Bilingual Video Communications Inc., to sell the materials. But the work means more to her than a potential profit.

"As a Hispanic with a language background, I feel responsible to these departments to develop a program that helps in dealing with Hispanics," she said.

"Hispanics are here. We have to deal with them," she said. "All you have to do is put yourself in the other person's shoes. Could you imagine how you would feel if you were stopped by the federals in Mexico?"

A poignant example of how separate languages can lead to tragedy occurred in Odessa in March 1988.

A fire that raced through a backyard clubhouse in East Odessa claimed the life of a 2½-year-old boy. According to one witness at the scene, confusion and warnings shouted in Spanish contributed to a delayed rescue.

Lynn Graham, 30, said he remembers the boy's grandmother shouting in Spanish as the wood shack burned fiercely.

"She was all over the area looking for her grandson. It finally clicked that it was possible he still was in there. That's when she started screaming, 'My bambino,'" he said.

"I clicked on it, and some of the firemen clicked on it. It definitely was a delay and a bilingual crossover," Graham said.

A firefighter raced into the little shack still in flames and brought out the boy, who was found under a pile of drapes and blankets. No one knew where the boy was at first because the 10 kids in the backyard scattered when he arrived, he said. Graham grabbed a garden hose and began fighting the blaze.

The fire's cause was blamed on children playing with matches and a spray can.

Quiroz first considered a language course for paramedics and hospital personnel as well as police. However, she discarded the other possibilities because the medical terminology was too difficult to simplify, she said.

An Ector County Independent School District elementary language teacher for 12 years, Quiroz got the idea while teaching. Instead of developing a Spanish program for elementary students, she opted to go into business for herself. Sales of the $595 kit haven't been brisk for Quiroz, who implemented her marketing plan about two months ago. She hopes to sell the product nationwide.

With a bachelor's degree in Spanish and a master's degree in educational administration, Quiroz plans to teach her program this fall at Odessa College.

She also started negotiations for 30-second spots on the Law Enforcement Television Network in Dallas to teach specific Spanish phrases. The network began broadcasting this year.

Another break occurred in May when the Texas Commission on Law Enforcement Officer Standards and Education approved Quiroz's course for officer training. Officers must complete 20 hours of training each year to remain certified.

Although Quiroz has logged a few successes with police departments in New Mexico and the Dallas Police Department, area law enforcement agencies haven't opened their checkbooks.

Ector County Sheriff's Department Chief Deputy Bob Eaton said his department is considering the program, but hasn't decided whether to spend the money. All the same, he admits to a need for deputies who speak Spanish.

"If you stop a car on traffic, you need to be able to tell them why you stopped them," he said, adding the same duty lies in reverse when someone waves down a deputy for help along the road. "If you can't find anyone there who speaks Spanish, then you have to get a Spanish-speaking officer over there," Eaton said, adding that such a situation ties up manpower.

He said that an alternative to buying the materials is to send deputies to Quiroz's class this fall.

Police Cpl. John McAhon said he has discussed Quiroz's program with Police Chief Alan Stewart. McAhon said the Police Department has not been formally approached to buy the materials but is interested in learning more about them.

"Here in the department there are enough bilingual people who, even if a full report is taken, are qualified enough to translate," he said.

When singles aren't doubles, they are not seen as whole

DEAR ABBY: A recent letter expressing concern regarding the manner in which a wedding invitation had been issued prompts me to write you about my objection to the way singles are often treated in that regard.

We have two sons, both past 35 and professional men, who are happily unmarried and have their own homes in cities many miles from ours.

Invitations for weddings, graduations and other occasions, as well as Christmas cards, often come to us with their names tacked on as if they were still children. Anyone who does not have their addresses could obtain them with a simple phone call. Instead, we seem to be expected to call them long-distance or write to them to relay the invitation or greeting. They, in turn, have made it a practice not to attend any function when invited in this manner.

On one family occasion they were seated at the "children's table" because they were unmarried!

Their grandmother excluded them from her magazine gift subscription list, saying, "That is only for the married ones. They can read yours." (No mention was made of the miles between us.)

Are single adults being treated in this manner for the purpose of saving the cost of an additional acknowledgment and postage stamp, or is it merely thoughtlessness on the part of the sender? Or are singles not considered valid social entities by some?

Abby, please let your readers know that single adults are indeed adults and should be treated in an adult manner.

STEAMED IN THE MIDWEST
DEAR STEAMED: You just did. And I couldn't have said it better. Thanks for writing.

I can tell you the height of any contractor who designed and built any women's restroom in the world. That height is directly proportional to the height of the towel dispenser.

Most towel dispensers are at my eye level or even higher. That means whenever I go to dry my hands, water drips down my arms. The logic of the situation escapes me.

I didn't research the issue, but if by some chance there is a state ordinance regarding the height of towel dispensers in public restrooms, women need to write their congressman and get a new law passed.

By the same token, handicapped restroom facilities are designed by people who have never "been there" or been with someone who has. Towel dispensers placed at my eye level or above cannot possibly be reached by persons in a wheelchair or be used easily by people on walkers or crutches.

And those "sanitary hot air dryers"...people in wheelchairs could use them for hair dryers.

Do I have a solution to this challenge for daily living? No. I'm just thinking aloud.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Thanks for your letter regarding the grandparents who failed to buckle up their grandbabies in their car seats. Parents have to get tough and absolutely insist that their little ones are buckled up whenever they ride in a car.

My smart daughter and her husband solved that problem by training their child to insist on being buckled up. My 3-year-old grandson said to me, "Grandma, you can't go yet because you haven't buckled me up!"

Train the children to demand to be buckled up.

PEGGY S. HENDRICK, SPRINGFIELD, MO.

DEAR PEGGY: Hooray for a great suggestion. Little ones are always taking orders—what a treat for them to be able to give one. Thanks for giving several million people a lifesaving idea.

Readers, instruct your little ones to demand to be buckled up—or nobody goes anywhere.

DEAR ABBY: The vacation season brings to mind an experience I had on consecutive trips to Europe several years ago.

The first trip, in France, the night before the bus driver was to leave our tour group (which was flying to another city), the tour guide had some bad news: The driver's room had been burglarized, and all his money stolen! The people on our two-week tour had a meeting, and everyone agreed to double his tip.

The next year, in Greece, different tour guide, different driver, same bad luck before departure. Different, but sympathetic tourists. All except one. Just call me...

CONFIDENTIAL TO OCTOBER BRIDE: A good marriage isn't a matter of luck. It's the result of a conscious and constant effort. It's giving and forgiving, knowing when to talk and when to keep quiet. All marriages are beautiful. It's the living together afterward that's difficult.

McEnroe's racket abuse highlights usual thrills, spills

By ANDREW WARSHAW
AP Sports Writer

Wimbledon '89

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Grass court experts are struggling or gone. Young clay court stars are playing on grass like old hands. Unknown players are posting upsets, strawberry prices go up and down and rain and sun alternate as sure as night follows day.

The first four days of Wimbledon had all the usual thrills and spills, but trying to find a pattern is impossible.

Take Thursday, for example. One day after Jimmy Connors bowed out in the second round — only the third time he had exited so early in 18 years — he almost was joined on the sidelines by John McEnroe.

McEnroe, a three-time champion, struggled for the second successive time before booking a berth in the last 32 of the men's singles.

The 30-year-old New Yorker, who needed five sets to oust Australia's Darren Cahill in the first round, had to battle for another four to dispatch Richey Reneberg, an American ranked 106th in the world, 6-3, 3-6, 6-3, 7-5.

It took him almost three hours and included a warning for racket abuse at the start of the third set, when he dropped his serve by double-faulting. The fifth-seeded McEnroe served eight double-faults, making 24 in two matches.

While McEnroe just survived, another seasoned grass-courtier, No. 5 women's seed Zina Garrison, was eliminated.

Garrison, one of the few players who had been expected to threaten favorites Steffi Graf and Martina Navratilova, lost 1-6, 6-2, 7-5 in the second round to little-known Australian Louise Field.

Field led 5-0 in the final set but almost blew her chance when she lost the next five games. She gathered her concentration, broke Garrison's serve and wrapped up the biggest victory of her career on her fifth match point.

"I just thought, if I play well, I mean, she's only human," said Field, ranked 121st in the world. "I didn't really think about what was going to happen."

Arantxa Sanchez, the 17-year-old French Open champion who once thought grass was for cows and didn't win a match here in 1987 or 1988, charged into the third round by beating Julie Halard of France in straight sets.

Mary Joe Fernandez, another teen-age baseliner, did the same at the expense of Louise Allen, while Natalia Zvereva of the Soviet Union ousted big-serving Eva Pfaff.

But as usual in this topsy-turvy tournament, there was the exception to the rule. Gabriela Sabatini, the third seed but more at home on clay, was stunned 6-4, 6-3 by Rosalyn Fairbank of South Africa in the day's biggest upset.

Chris Evert, who has failed only once to reach the semifinals in 17 years at Wimbledon, beat Hu Na of the United States 7-5, 6-3 in the second round. She had to fight back from a 5-1 first-set deficit and save four set points to do it. And Pam Shriver, an archetypical grass-court player, needed an 8-6 third set to put out Briton Sara Gomer.

McEnroe didn't quite have to go into a final set against Reneberg — and he may not have survived if he had.

"I'm glad it didn't go to a fifth set," said McEnroe, who again had no consistency on his serve and lacked his old speed.

McEnroe began well enough, dropping only six points on serve in the opening set. But once Reneberg raised his game, danger loomed.

Reneberg won five straight games as he grabbed the second set and moved up 2-0 in the third. McEnroe rallied to take the set, still not serving at his peak, but then found himself on the brink of a fifth set as his opponent moved up 5-2 in the fourth.

Now McEnroe played his best tennis, returning serve with a flurry of passes. He ripped through the last five games of the match and finished with a low cross-court backhand.

It was pretty difficult for No. 2 Martina Navratilova on Thursday. Seeking a record ninth Wimbledon championship, Navratilova was tied with Kristine Radford of Australia 6-3, 3-6. The match then was halted by darkness and carried over to today.

Men's defending champion Stefan Edberg of Sweden, the second seed, led Todd Woodbridge of Australia 6-4, 6-4, 1-6 when the match was stopped.

Martina Navratilova makes her feelings known after missing a shot in her second-round match against Australia's Kristine Radford on Thursday. The match was tied, 6-3, 6-3, when it was suspended by darkness.

Washburn banned from NBA for life

ATLANTA (AP) — An NBA official said the league won't abandon Atlanta center Chris Washburn, but the Hawks don't expect him to return after being banned from the league for his third drug infraction.

As a three-time violator, Washburn was banned for life, the sixth player to be banished under the drug rule. Washburn does have the right to appeal for reinstatement in two years, but in the meantime his contract is terminated at a cost to him of at least $1.6 million.

Although Washburn technically remains the property of the Hawks, team president Stan Kasten said Thursday: "That's small consolation for what's happened to Chris. Frankly, we're not counting on having him back."

The league gave no details in its statement released Thursday except to call it Washburn's "third violation."

The center-forward was suspended without pay by the NBA on Sept. 26, 1988, after a substance-abuse relapse and was returned to the league's rehabilitation center at Van Nuys, Calif. He did not play last season.

Gary Bettman, counsel for the NBA, said at the time that Washburn had received a "second strike" under the league's substance-abuse program, but he would not reveal what Washburn had done.

Washburn became the sixth player banned for life since the NBA drug policy was approved five years ago. The others were John Drew of the Hawks and Utah Jazz, Micheal Ray Richardson of the New Jersey Nets, Lewis Lloyd and Mitchell Wiggins of the Houston Rockets, and Duane Washington of the New Jersey Nets.

Bettman said Washburn's problem was complying with requirements of rehabilitation.

"We've offered him the opportunity to come back into treatment. His agent, William McCandless, has been advised that the ban has been imposed. If Chris wants treatment, the league will provide it. We will not abandon him," Bettman said.

Washburn coach at North Carolina State, Jim Valvano, said he was surprised and disappointed by the news.

"I'm also very, very concerned with Chris, himself. I'm hoping he gets the help he needs," Valvano said. "He certainly seemed to be getting himself together when I saw him."

Beck leads Western Open by one stroke

OAK BROOK, Ill. (AP) — Chip Beck, delaying his honeymoon in search of the top prize of $180,000, shot a 65 to take a one-stroke lead after the opening round of the $1 million Western Open.

Beck, who came within one stroke of the Butler National course record of 64 set by Bob Gilder in the first round of the 1982 Western, had a one-shot advantage over Payne Stewart and Blaine McCallister. Paul Azinger and Mark O'Meara were two shots off the lead with 67s.

A tournament-record 55 players broke par, 11 more than in last year's first round over the par-72, 7,097-yard layout. Most of the players felt that Butler would exact its toll over a weekend with no rain in the forecast.

Beck, who was married to Karen Thompson last Saturday, had an eagle and eight birdies against three bogeys in Thursday's round.

"That was fun," Beck said. "I was telling my wife the honeymoon can come later. The best honeymoon would be winning this tournament."

Beck, who won at Los Angeles and New Orleans last year, came closest to victory this season when he finished in a tie for second, one shot behind Curtis Strange, in the U.S. Open.

Beck had three straight birdies on the front nine and then carved six strokes off par in a stretch from No. 11 through No. 15. He eagled the 478-yard, par-5 12th when he put a 1-iron approach onto the green and dropped a 60-foot putt.

He sank two birdie putts of 30 feet, another of 15 feet and chipped in for another.

Stewart, who had eight birdies and two bogeys, said, "The course is in the best condition it'll be in all year. The greens were perfect but they will get firmer. It's nice to get off to a good start."

McCallister warned: "The course will get firmer and quicker. A lot can happen in the next two days." O'Meara had a bogey-free round and said, "I'm satisfied with the way I'm playing."

Azinger said he couldn't remember the last time he had shot in the 60s on the first day of a tournament.

"I've finished in the top 10 in the last 16 tournaments but I always had to come from behind," Azinger said.

Greg Norman was in a group at 4-under-par 68 with former Western champions Hale Irwin and Mark McCumber.

"It was a smooth day but I was playing in the slipstream of Chip Beck," said Norman, who was in a group behind Beck. "Every time I looked up, Beck was chipping in or making a putt."

Defending Western champion Jim Benepe all but shot himself out of contention with a 78, but last year's runnerup, Peter Jacobsen, was among those finishing with 69s.

Tom Kite, this year's leading money winner, was in a group of 20 players who shot 71s.

Babe Ruth Seniors travel to Amarillo

Pampa's Ford-Lincoln-Mercury Senior Babe Ruth team will play in an Amarillo tournament this weekend after a 12-day rain layoff.

On Saturday, Pampa meets Caprock at 3 p.m., followed by a game against Tascosa at 5. Pampa then faces Amarillo High at 6 p.m. Sunday and will conclude the tourney at 8:30 p.m. Sunday against Randall.

All games will be played at the Tascosa High School field.

Pampa currently stands at 9-3 on the season.

Celane defeated Rotary, 12-2, Thursday night in the losers' bracket of the Bambino League City Tournament.

Danny Frye wielded a big bat for Celane, cracking two home runs, a double, a single and 6 RBI. Teammates Hank Gindorf, Jeremy Stone and Russell Tyler had two hits apiece.

Ivan Langley, Bryan Martindale and Chad Hapeman each had one hit.

Hank Gindorf got the mound win, yielding three hits and striking out eight.

Brian Cota had two hits for Rotary, and Jeff McCormick rapped a single.

Celane will play Dixie tonight at 8, and the winner will take on the victor of the Dean's/Cabot game (scheduled for 6 tonight) on July 5 at 6:30 p.m.

The winner of the July 5th contest will then play Dunlap, and that winner will advance to the City Championship game, scheduled for Saturday, July 8, at 6 p.m.

Pete Jimenez slammed a bases-loaded triple to highlight a four-run third inning as Glo-Valve Service defeated Dunlap Industrial, 11-8, Thursday to remain undefeated in the Optimist Bambino League City Tournament.

Dale Noble went the distance on the hill for Glo-Valve to win his second game of the year. He gave up three earned runs on eight hits, three walks and one hit batter. Dunlap's J.J. Mathis gave up 11 hits, four walks and hit one batter.

Nathan Williams led Glo-Valve at the plate with three hits, including a triple and an RBI. Jimenez's third-inning triple brought in three runs and Noble aided his own cause with three hits. Doubles by Todd Harrison and Jim Bob McGahan produced an RBI for each, while Rayford Scott and Scott Johnson each contributed a single and an RBI.

Ryan Bennett paced Dunlap with two hits, a run scored and two RBI. Duane Nickelberry had two doubles, two runs scored and two stolen bases. Shawn Cook doubled in two runs and Mathis had a double and scored a run. Damion Nickelberry and Ryan Gibson each added a hit and one run.

In the first inning, Gerald Reyes reached base on an error and scored on Duane Nickelberry's double. Nickelberry later scored on a passed ball. Glo-Valve evened the score in the bottom of the inning when Williams reached base on a fielder's choice, Noble singled and McGahan doubled.

Glo-Valve took over the lead with four runs in the bottom of the third. Williams opened with a triple, then, with two out, Johnson walked and Derrick Archer was hit by a pitch. Jimenez tripled and scored on a wild pitch to put Glo-Valve ahead to stay.

Dunlap came fighting back with three runs in the fourth on a walk to Gibson, singles by Damion Nickelberry and Bennet, and a double by Cook. Glo-Valve got two of the runs back in the bottom of the fourth on hits Williams, Noble and Johnson.

Hits by Mathis, Gibson and Bennet produced a run for Dunlap in the fifth, but Glo-Valve answered with three runs on Harrison's double and consecutive hits by Young, Williams and Noble.
