Rain doesn't stop conclusion of events at Kid Pony Show

By DAVID GOODE
Staff Writer

The 1989 Top o' Texas Kid Pony Show concluded just as the rain came Wednesday night at the rodeo grounds.

Group V (ages 12 to 13) and Group VI (ages 14 to 15) competed last night, including several Texas area high school Tri-State Rodeo (Texas, New Mexico and Oklahoma) participants entered in the show.

William Gill, a Miami sophomore, is a member of the Canadian Tri-State High School Rodeo Association. He participates in calf roping, ribbon roping and team roping.

Gill has dyslexia, a learning disorder. But according to his mother, Mary Ann Gill, he doesn't let this get in the way of his schooling or roping.

He wears glasses with colored

Irlen lenses which help his reading and math as well as his roping. He has noticed an improvement in his roping since he started wearing them during practice, said his mother adding, "His team roping partner always wants him to wear his glasses."

However, since he had not been practicing with them lately, he didn't wear them in last night's performance, said Mary Ann Gill.

Tamra Johnson of Pampa, who participated in last night's events, is a member of the Pampa Tri-State High School Rodeo Association.

She went to the finals this year in barrels, poles, goat tying and breakaway roping. She also competed in the Texas high school finals in Seguin in barrels and poles, said Janice Rucker, coordinator for the Pampa Tri-State High School Rodeo Association.

According to Rucker, Johnson practices everyday sometimes for two hours and also stays busy in other school activities.

Another Miami High School student who participated in the Kid Pony Show, Kara Peirce, also participated in this past school year in the Tri-State finals and Texas high school finals in barrels and poles, said Rucker.

Following is a list of winners from last night's show:

House panel OKs anti-flag burning bill

AUSTIN (AP) — Burning the U.S. or Texas flag would be a crime under a bill approved by a House committee.

The measure was passed in response to a federal Supreme Court ruling that such action is constitutionally protected free speech, lawmakers said Wednesday.

"This legislation will send a strong message that we will not allow the dignity of our flag and country to be tarnished by the flippant actions of irresponsible individuals," House Speaker Gib Lewis, bill sponsor, said.

"The bill does not address the suppression of individuals' rights to express themselves, but instead very plainly states that it is illegal to improperly destroy the flag," he said.

The House State Affairs Committee approved the bill, which has passed the Senate, with a 9-0 vote after amending it to include the state flag. The bill would make it a misdemeanor, with a maximum punishment of a year in jail and $2,000 fine, to destroy the flag in a way other than that provided by the U.S. Constitution or Texas laws.

The Supreme Court has ruled that the burning of the flag in protest during the 1984 Republican National Convention in Dallas was protected by the U.S. Constitution.

Rep. Bruce Gibson, D-Godley, said the bill differs from existing state law, making it a crime to seriously offend another person by desecrating a flag.

Bush arrives in Paris for French bicentennial

By TERENCE HUNT
AP White House Correspondent

PARIS (AP) — Fresh from a landmark visit to Eastern Europe, President Bush joined other world leaders today for a spectacular Parisian party celebrating the 200th anniversary of the French Revolution.

The gala events preceding a summit meeting of the world's seven largest industrial democracies contrasted sharply with the president's trip to Poland and Hungary, where he promised to help both communist nations with major economic reforms.

Bush was greeted by French President Francois Mitterrand at the inaugural bicentennial event at the Place du Trocadero, a ceremony commemorating the Declaration of the Rights of Man, a statement issued in August 1789 setting forth the French Revolution's aims of liberty, fraternity and equality for all people.

Before Air Force One left Budapest for the French capital, Bush told Hungarian leaders that "as your economy modernizes, you will play an even greater role in the evolution of a new Europe, a Europe that is whole and free."

As he joins the bicentennial celebration of French independence, Bush told his Hungarian hosts, "you are proving, here in the heartland of Europe, that the Rights of Man are the proper birthright of us all."

The president and his wife, Barbara, were bid farewell at the Budapest airport by Hungarian President Bruno F. Straub after two-day visit.

An 8-year-old girl, Nicoletta Nikolaibisz, appeared on the runway, gave Bush her mohair doll and chatted with the president briefly.

In Paris, Mitterrand greeted each leader arriving by limousine at the ceremony site near the Eiffel Tower. The crowd in the street cheered when Philippines President Corazon Aquino appeared. Other guests included Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi of India, President Robert Mugabe of Zimbabwe, President Mobutu Sese Seko of Zaire and other African leaders, U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar, Brazilian President Jose Sarney, Mexican President Carlos Salinas de Gortari and Uruguayan President Julio Maria Sanguinetti.

Paris is the site for both the summit and the celebration of the bicentennial of the French Revolution. And the party comes first — a massive gala with concerts, fireworks and parades.

Both literally and figuratively, Bush was bringing the key to the party. He was carrying the historic key to the Bastille prison, the site where the French Revolution began when the Bastille was stormed in an uprising against the crown on July 14, 1789.

The key was given to George Washington nearly 200 years ago by the Marquis de Lafayette.

Since 1858, the historic artifact has been in the possession of the Mount Vernon Ladies' Association, the private, non-profit organization that owns and operates Washington's home. The association is loaning the key to France for the celebration.

For France's festivities, Mitterrand invited more than 30 heads of state and government from nations rich and poor.

When the party reaches its peak Friday, the Champs Elysee will be the site of a parade featuring Britons marching under artificial rain, Russians dancing with a bear on ice and an American band strutting backward all the way down the famed avenue.

Bush's arrival in Paris was the halfway point of a 10-day overseas trip that began with visits to Poland and Hungary.

Gonzales receives 45 years after guilty plea for murder

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
Staff Writer

Richard Gonzales, 23, received a 45-year prison sentence in 223rd District Court Wednesday after he pleaded guilty to the August 1988 murder of Humberto Castillo Granillo.

In his testimony before District Judge Don Cain, Gonzales appeared to be protecting a second man charged in the slaying.

Ricardo (Ricky) DeLeon, 22, surrendered to authorities at the Gray County Sheriff's Office in late June, 10 months after the shooting in which Granillo died and two others were seriously injured.

Under questioning by District Attorney Harold Comer, Gonzales testified that he and DeLeon drove a pickup next to a "mechanic's shop" near the Houston Street alley where the shooting occurred. He said he knew the people sitting in a car parked in the alley.

Comer asked Gonzales why Ricky DeLeon was in the pickup truck with him.

"He actually was trying to stop me," Gonzales replied.

Comer asked Gonzales if DeLeon had handed him the gun before he walked over to the car. Gonzales replied that he had gotten the gun from DeLeon four days earlier.

The district attorney reminded him that he had made a statement to law enforcement authorities that DeLeon had handed Gonzales a .22 caliber pistol from under the seat and had taken a rifle himself when the two got out of the pickup.

At first Gonzales said he had gotten the gun from under the seat, but later admitted DeLeon did hand him the gun.

"When I asked for the gun, (DeLeon) gave me the gun," Gonzales finally said. "But he did not know what for."

Gonzales testified that the shooting was the result of an on-going argument that had continued for 1½ to two years.

"It had already built up too much, arguing and fighting, back and forth," he said.

The defendant said he was drunk and angry when he walked up to the light yellow Oldsmobile in the alley behind 310 Houston Street on the night of Aug. 14.

First, he walked to the driver's side of the vehicle, but when he realized there were two girls, he walked around to the passenger side.

"I asked where 'Raoul' was," Gonzales recalled, adding that Raoul was another name for Miguel Angel Castillo, 24, who was in the car.

"Why were you looking for 'Raoul'?" Comer asked.

"To shoot him," was the soft reply.

At that point, someone reached out of the window, Gonzales said. "I panicked and I shot them," he said. "I remember shooting two guys on the left side."

Keeping the fires burning

Workers prepare the barbecue pit at the Top o' Texas rodeo grounds Wednesday before laying down 2,000 pounds of beef donated by The Food Emporium. The chefs are covering the bed of coals with sheets of tin and a layer of clay, which will support the muslin-wrapped beef. The meat, also insulated on top by tin, clay and another bed of coals, will cook for about 24 hours. Floyd Sackett, a member of the Top o' Texas Rodeo Association Board of Directors, reported that workers stayed overnight Wednesday to keep the fire burning during the rainstorm. The barbecue will be served tonight beginning at 5:30 for all Thursday ticket holders.

Murder

gotten shot when she pulled on the gun, he said, adding, "I never shot at her."

"After I knew I had shot Latisha, I took off," he said.

Gonzales said he went back to DeLeon's house, gun in hand. He hid the gun at that time, but said he willingly gave it to authorities when he was arrested several hours later.

Castillo and Hernandez, 16-years-old at the time, were seriously injured. A fourth person in the Oldsmobile, Juana Carmina Cortez, 19, was not injured.

Following the shooting, according to police reports, Cortez drove the car at speeds exceeding 80 miles an hour down Duncan Street to Coronado Hospital. Pampa Police Officer Jay Lewis saw the car speed by at Starkweather and Browning streets. He took up pursuit of the vehicle, and watched as the yellow Oldsmobile bumped over the grass near the entrance to the hospital's emergency room before coming to a stop. When the door of the car was opened, the murder victim fell to the ground.

An autopsy report showed Granillo died of one of two gunshot wounds to the head, either of which could have been fatal. He also suffered gunshot wounds to the arm and leg which police say may have happened as Granillo tried to protect himself.

When sentencing Gonzales, Judge Cain gave the defendant credit for the 327 days he has spent in Gray County Jail since the shooting. Three charges of attempted murder were considered in the sentencing as part of the plea bargain agreement, but will now be dismissed.

Following the sentencing, Gonzales briefly laid his head on the table and shook it back and forth before straightening up to face the judge.

After discussing his right of appeal with his court-appointed attorney David Holt, Gonzales said he did not wish to appeal the court's decision.

Gray County Sheriff Jim Free said Gonzales and two other prisoners sentenced to Texas Department of Corrections are to be taken to Huntsville next week.

House passes Medigap regulation bill

AUSTIN (AP) — A bill designed by its author to cut down on abuses in the Medicare supplement insurance industry was approved by the Texas House.

"I think this is definitely a move in the right direction to eliminate some of the abuses that have been occurring, and there have been tremendous abuses in the industry," said Rep. Hugo Berlanga, D-Corpus Christi, on Wednesday.

The House adopted the proposal 135-0 and sent it to the Senate. Berlanga said State Board of Insurance Chairman Paul Wrotenberg was the "driving force" behind the Medigap regulation bill.

"He recognized when he came on there was in fact a serious problem with Medigap insurance," said Berlanga, House speaker pro tem.

Wrotenberg, appointed to the board by Gov. Bill Clements this year, asked the governor to add the Medigap issue to the special session agenda, which the governor controls. Clements did so this week.

One concern was that the federal government would take over regulation of Medigap policies in Texas unless state law was changed to conform with new, minimum federal standards, Berlanga said.

The bill would set standards for so-called Medigap policies, which supplement Medicare coverage. It would prohibit insurers from duplicating Medicare benefits.

A person who applied for Medicare supplement insurance would have 30 days, rather than 10, to return a policy and receive a premium refund under the bill.

Insurers would have to file a copy of Medicare-supplement insurance advertising 60 days before using it, under Insurance Board rules. The board also would regulate companies that generate sales leads for insurance agents.

John Hildreth, director of the southwest regional office of Consumers Union, has said the bill will be valuable if it is aggressively implemented by the board.

Other rules to be issued by the board under the bill would require insurance companies to limit the commission of an agent who sells a replacement policy.

The limit would be the amount the agent would get for renewing the policy, if the replacement was substantially similar to the previous policy. Currently, an agent can get a much higher commission for selling a new policy.

In other action Wednesday, the House passed and sent to the Senate a bill to establish procedures for creating county crime-victim assistance programs.

The bill by Rep. Sam Johnson, R-Plano, would increase the court cost on conviction of a felony from $20 to $30.

Endangered whooping cranes encountering more problems

By The Associated Press

San Antonio Zoo officials say evidence of avian tuberculosis in an ailing female whooping crane poses big problems for wildlife officials' attempts to protect the endangered birds from extinction.

Meanwhile, Canadian and U.S. wildlife experts recommended discontinuation of a whooping crane foster parent experiment that cost the governments a total of $2 million but failed to produce a single egg in 15 years.

The ailing 3-year-old female whooping crane, found near death at its Aransas County habitat in Austwell last April, was being treated at the zoo. It is one of two that have remained at the refuge since the winter of 1987.

"In all probability, the crane definitely has avian tuberculosis," Ken Fletcher, zoo veterinarian, said Wednesday. "And if that's the case, we've got a real problem on our hands."

Wildlife officials fear the other whooper, a male, also may have contracted avian tuberculosis, although no tests have been conducted on it.

A tissue sample from the abdominal cavity of the female whooper was sent last month to the National Wildlife Health Research Center in Madison, Wis. Animal care officers there have confirmed that acid-fast bacillus, the cells that indicate tuberculosis, are evident in the tissue sample.

The acid-fast bacteria have been found in ducks in Texas but never in a whooping crane here, Fletcher said. However, avian tuberculosis has been found in a western flock of cranes that migrates from Idaho to New Mexico each winter, he said.

Officials don't know if other cranes in the 138-bird flock have contracted the disease or if the birds were infected at the Aransas National Wildlife Refuge, where they winter near Rockport, said Fletcher.

He told the Corpus Christi Caller-Times refuge officials have limited measures to protect the cranes from infection. But no treatment is available for the terminal disease, which usually kills a bird within a year.

Fletcher said whoopers normally live for at least 40 years, and only about 200 are known to exist in the United States.

The female whooping crane's tissue sample was recently sent to a U.S. Department of Agriculture laboratory in Ames, Iowa, for conclusive testing. Results are expected within a month, officials said.

Avian tuberculosis has never been treated successfully, said Nancy Thomas, endangered species disease specialist at the research center, the only laboratory that conducts research on infectious diseases for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

The two whooping cranes that may be suffering from avian tuberculosis have eaten little and have lost weight during the past few months. Their breast bones protrude, and they have lost plumage.

"These birds have been extremely weak and ragged-looking," said Brent Giezantner, Aransas refuge manager. "These two birds are the first that have ever stayed at the refuge for two summers in a row."

Last winter, wildlife officials were disappointed when only 138 of the majestic birds made it to the Aransas refuge. They had expected 150.

One of the 138 was shot and killed by a hunter, two are ill, and four have disappeared and are presumed dead. The rest migrated to their nesting grounds in Canada's Wood Buffalo National Park, 2,400 miles to the north.

The foster parent experiment recommendation was made last month by U.S. and Canadian experts. The Houston Chronicle, in today's editions, said it obtained a report on the meeting in Jackson Hole, Wyo., on Wednesday.

In the program, sandhill cranes at Grays Lake National Wildlife Refuge in southeastern Idaho were used to incubate whooper eggs transplanted from Wood Buffalo park in Canada's Northwest Territories and rear the young birds as their own.

Officials in the foster parent program tried to establish a second migratory population of the endangered whooping crane in addition to the original flock at the Aransas refuge.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service director and Canadian Wildlife Service director general must affirm the recommendation to discontinue the program. That decision probably will be made in the fall, said Jim Lewis.

Parks crews watch for fires

By The Associated Press

In the parched, wildfire-vulnerable national parks of West Texas, each lightning strike is like a pull of the trigger in a game of Russian roulette.

The wrong chamber has come up twice in the past week at Big Bend National Park, where fire danger is listed as extreme, but wildfire damage was limited to about 163 acres.

Guadalupe Mountains National Park in Texas and adjacent Lincoln National Forest in New Mexico have been under fire alerts since spring, but neither has suffered major fires in the past week.

A fire crew of about 20 Mesquero Apache Indians is on constant alert at Big Bend, spokesman Roy Given said. When not fighting fires, the crew clears tinder-dry brush.

"As long as the fire danger remains extreme, we'd like to keep them here," Given said, adding there is the constant threat the crew will be transferred to fight fires in New Mexico or elsewhere in the West.

Fire danger in the Guadalupe Mountains and Lincoln National Forest had been listed as extreme for several weeks, but humidity has caused the fire danger rating to be dropped to high, spokesman Ed Wood said.

"This is the driest year we've had on record," Wood said. "It could rain for a week and it still wouldn't bring us up to a comfortable situation."

Campfires and smoking are banned in the back country of both national parks and the national forest. Big Bend allows campers' stoves, but not even those are allowed at Guadalupe Mountains or Lincoln National Forest.

In the Big Bend, lightning started a fire that spread to 160 acres Saturday before being put out, and another lightning strike ignited a three-acre fire Monday, Given said. Both were on the mountains surrounding the central Chisos Basin, whose rain gauge has recorded 1.61 inches of rain since the beginning of March.

Gay leaders back lesbian's bid for police job

By DAVE PEGO
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — An Oklahoma woman who said her application to become a Dallas police officer was rejected because she is a lesbian tearfully asked the City Council to change the department's policy.

Gay leaders said Dallas residents don't care about the sexual preferences of those who answer emergency calls and said they will not rest until they call a discriminatory hiring policy is ended.

In a surprise and emotion-tinting appearance at Dallas City Hall on Wednesday, Mica England of Tulsa, Okla., told council members she was a lesbian who had been denied employment as a Dallas police officer.

The 25-year-old restaurant chef said she decided to fight back after being told Monday by a police recruiter that she did not qualify to wear Dallas blue "because I was openly and willingly admitting that I was gay."

Dallas Gay Alliance leader William Waybourn, who accompanied Ms. England to Dallas City Hall, urged council members to change the department hiring policy.

"Most citizens, when they dial 911 for an emergency, don't say to send a straight officer," Waybourn told The Associated Press later. "They're not concerned with what officers do in their own beds."

But Police Chief Mack Vines said his department's policy prohibits hiring of "anyone who violates state statutes."

A police personnel supervisor said the hiring ban is based on state law prohibiting "deviant sexual intercourse with another individual of the same sex."

"Homosexual conduct is against the law," Capt. John Ferguson told the Dallas Times Herald. "If somebody admits they engage in homosexual conduct, we're not going to hire them. That's a cut factor. We cannot hire somebody that's violating state law continually."

England, who has studied criminal science, said she was recruited by two Dallas police officers last month in Tulsa and that they had told her it was no problem if she was gay.

She said she even wrote "I'm gay" on an application question that asked: "Have you ever committed a deviant sexual act?"

But when she came to Dallas for a second round of interviews earlier this week, she was informed she did not qualify to join the force.

As the Dallas City Council was debating a resolution to support human rights in China Wednesday, she rose and asked members to consider human rights in Dallas.

England told The Associated Press she has every intention of accepting a Dallas police job if she can get an offer. She believes she will have no trouble qualifying physically. She is 5-foot-7 and 145 pounds, runs in charity races and works out regularly at a Gold's Gym.

"I like this city," she said. "That's what I came to do. I'm not sure what kind of treatment I would get, but I think I could deal with it."

Waybourn and other gay leaders said they plan to use Ms. England's case to try to open job opportunities for gays.

"There's no rhyme or reason to this discrimination," Joe Cook, president of the Dallas Civil Liberties Union, told The Dallas Morning News. His organization also is assisting England.

"Other line officers don't care if someone is gay," Waybourn said. "They want someone in the car with them who will be reliable. They want a partner to protect them when they get into trouble. They're not worried who their partner sleeps with."

Waybourn said the alliance has been working since 1982 to encourage the police department to hire openly gay men and lesbians and will soon receive police hiring records under the federal Freedom of Information Act.

"We've been waiting seven years for a Mica England to walk through our door," Waybourn said. "We've been trying to get the city to recognize that hiring policies of our police department were discriminatory."

Clements gets repeal bill on crime victims law

AUSTIN (AP) — A bill repealing a new law that allows police to withhold the names of felony crime victims will be signed by Gov. Bill Clements, a spokeswoman says.

"At the direction of the governor, our staff worked with sponsors of the bill to make sure the problem was straightened out," said Rossanna Salazar, deputy press secretary to Clements.

The repeal was approved by the House with a 134-0 vote after it was amended to protect certain crime victims from being contacted by companies soliciting business, such as those selling home security systems.

The Senate concurred with the House amendment, 27-0, and sent the bill to Clements for his consideration.

News organizations decried the confidentiality law after a number of law enforcement agencies began withholding information they previously had made public. The law was passed in the regular session that ended May 29.

Some agencies withheld information on missing children and accident victims, said George Irish, San Antonio Light publisher, in testimony this week to a House committee. Irish represented Texas Media, a first amendment and freedom-of-information coalition of seven Texas news media organizations, in urging repeal of the new law.

Rep. Fred Blair, who sponsored the confidentiality law and the bill repealing it, said the original measure "was being broadly applied to accident victims, DWIs, missing children — all the kinds of things that we want to provide information on."

"So we repealed it, and we're going to take a look at it in the future," said Blair, D-Dallas.

Sen. John Leedom, R-Dallas, was the Senate sponsor of both measures.

Blair said the bill sent to the governor accomplishes "about half" of what he wants in order to protect crime victims, but that he wanted "an ample opportunity for full discussion" before attempting further changes.

The bill, in addition to the repeal, would prohibit using crime victim information obtained from law enforcement agencies to solicit business from the victim or a family member of the victim.

The prohibition would apply to victims who were physically injured in a crime or whose home was illegally entered.

The repeal would be immediate, and the solicitation section would take effect Jan. 1.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

What's happened to British ideas?

At a recent international conference in Geneva on Indochinese, participants, led by Great Britain, voted to send most Vietnamese boat people back to Vietnam. How cruel. If forced back to Vietnam, the boat people face almost certain arrest — and possibly torture, imprisonment and death.

To its credit, the U.S. government opposed the action. Said Deputy Secretary of State Lawrence S. Eagleburger, head of the U.S. delegation: "Unless and until dramatic improvements occur in that country's economic, social and political life, the United States will remain unalterably opposed to the forced expatriation of Vietnamese asylum-seekers."

Even the representative from Vietnam's communist regime, Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach, opposed the forced return: "We reject absolutely all forms of coercion. Coercion constitutes a violation of the Declaration of Human Rights and could only bring on unforeseen consequences." Coming from a regime that had butchered thousands of its own people, and spent a decade occupying Cambodia, that's an Orwellian statement to be sure. But the point is that, unlike Britain, the regime in Vietnam at least is using the language of human rights.

Why does Britain so strongly favor shipping the boat people back to Vietnam? True, many of the boat people have landed in Hong Kong, including 9,200 last month. But though Britain retains sovereignty over Hong Kong, it will cede sovereignty to Communist China in 1997, essentially washing its hands of the matter. Hong Kong's residents were not allowed to choose that arrangement, and Britain still refuses to give the people there the full blessing of democracy.

Clearly, Britain wants to force a people it does not control (the boat people), away from a place to which it will not grant democracy (Hong Kong), back to one of the worst tyrannies in the world (Vietnam). Wasn't Britain once known as the "Mother of Democracies"?

It doesn't make sense in another way. The boat people are a boon to any land that accepts them.

The Bush administration should remain steadfast against the action by the conference, indeed even increasing the quotas for Vietnamese refugees allowed into America. Those quotas were cruelly decreased in the last days of office of Bush's predecessor. If the British and others don't want the boat people, we'll take them.

All women aren't that dumb

Starting today, the Department of Health and Human Services will begin issuing chastity belts to all single women, enforcing a nationwide ban on birth control pills, diaphragms and condoms and placing all married women on a compulsory schedule of child-bearing, with a minimum of six offspring required for each couple.

I'm not kidding. It's all there in the Supreme Court's latest abortion decision. Don't take my word for it, though. Listen to impartial analysts like Molly Yard, the president of the National Organization for Women. "This is war against women," she attested. "Pretty soon nothing much will be left for a woman in controlling her reproductive life."

Judith Lichtman, head of the Women's Legal Defense Fund, described the ruling as "a major setback for women." The executive director of the abortion clinic involved in the suit that led to this ruling blamed it on "a patriarchal group who has the arrogance to try to control a woman's body."

Don't these people have any shame? Feminist leaders are in danger of becoming to women's rights what Jimmy Swaggart is to fundamentalist Christianity — a public embarrassment that taints the entire movement.

Molly Yard was protesting a ruling that will prevent a tiny percentage of abortions. She was anticipating an eventual ruling that would, at most, allow states to decide for themselves whether to allow abortion — which many of them undoubtedly would, as they did before the 1973 Roe v. Wade decision. Her argument, you should pardon the expression, is that without access to abortions, women have no reproductive freedom.

Oh? I don't mean to sound hopelessly puritanical, but is the Supreme Court going to make it illegal for a woman to keep her clothes on, or her knees together. Or, if she declines these options, to use one of the many ingenious means available in any drugstore to keep a sperm from snuggling up to her ovum? Or to be sterilized once she decides she doesn't want to ever have another baby? Or to insist that the man in her life get a vasectomy?

I have searched the Supreme Court's opinion in vain for any evidence of such an alarming plan. As for pregnancies caused by rape or incest — those in which the woman truly has no "reproductive freedom" — President Bush's proposed abortion ban would exempt those, along with abortions needed to save the life of the mother.

Given the Grand Canyon-sized gap between reality and rhetoric, I have to conclude that the "pro-choice" activists who were wailing, one, have as much respect for the truth as a hog has for table manners and two, think that the average American woman is dumber than a lawn sprinkler.

On the latter point, Yard and company are obviously mistaken. Most women do believe they have a right to equality. Most women do not believe that without a wholly unfettered right to abortion, they are wretched slaves to male oppression.

Feminist groups would have you believe that this is a fight between women, who must have access to abortions to be free, and men, who would like to abolish abortions so they can revive the sexual roles of, oh, the 12th century. What they don't bother to mention is that opposition to abortion is more common among women than among men.

In a recent poll by the Los Angeles Times, for example, 20 percent of men strongly supported abortion rights, compared to 17 percent of women. Only 26 percent of men were strongly opposed to legal abortion, but 33 percent of women were. A CBS News/New York Times poll found that if exceptions are made for rape, incest and danger to the mother's life, most women would support a ban on abortion. Those who favor the status quo are a small minority of their sex.

Anyone who's ever attended an anti-abortion demonstration, where women generally equal or outnumber men, doesn't need to be told that the movement is no patriarchal conspiracy. Patriarchal, maybe.

Feminist leaders refuse to recognize many plain facts, like this one: For every woman who says men can't understand why abortion should be legal because they don't have to worry about getting pregnant, there's a woman who says men can't understand why abortion should be illegal because they've never had a baby growing inside their bodies.

If women have been set back by this ruling, they can blame not the male half of the population but those of their sisters who think women can live free and fulfilling lives without the right to destroy their fetuses. Odd that feminist leaders, who display such extravagant imaginations, find it impossible to imagine that.

They want more Cornbread

A number of readers have enquired about my new dog, Cornbread.

Cornbread is a 6-month-old male black lab, and I have paired him with the grizzled veteran Catfish, also a male of the same breed.

People want to know, "How does Catfish like having another dog around the house?"

I'm not certain since Catfish can't talk. But the look on his face when Cornbread bites him on the ears, or outruns him to a tennis ball, seems to be saying, "How could you have done this to me?"

Sibling rivalries. I've heard about that sort of thing before, and why shouldn't it apply to dogs?

Cornbread has turned out to be a toe-licker. I've heard about that before, too. Erotic novels are full of that sort of thing, and, again, why shouldn't it also apply to dogs?

A toe-licker isn't the worst kind of dog you can get. The worst kind of dog is an egg-sucker.

I had an egg-sucker once. His name was Leonard. He hung out around the chicken coop, and when the hens had finished their business, he would root his way under the fence and suck a few eggs.

"You have got to get rid of Leonard," my grandfather said. "He's an egg-sucker."

I might have had to give Leonard his walking papers had it not been for an incident that occurred soon after my grandfather's ominous statement. Leonard was on his way to the hen area one morning and got into a rift with our rooster, Garland.

Lewis Grizzard

Garland gave Leonard such a whipping the dog never went near the chicken coop again. And whenever he smelled eggs cooking, he would run under the bed and whimper.

In an effort to find out if Cornbread was an egg-sucker, I opened the refrigerator door and pointed out the eggs to him to see what he would do. (They don't allow chickens in my neighborhood.)

Cornbread showed no interest in the eggs whatsoever. He grabbed a pound of ground chuck instead. What relief I felt.

I first learned Cornbread was a toe-licker early one morning. I had thrown off my covers and my feet and toes were exposed.

I was in the midst of a dream in which I was attempting to walk through a field covered with green jello. I awakened, however, to find Cornbread licking my toes.

I asked the vet if the fact Cornbread licked toes meant the dog was suffering from any sort of physical or mental disorder.

"Not that I know of," said the vet, "but if he stops licking your toes and starts biting and chewing them, you've got a real problem."

Biting and chewing, indeed. Like Catfish before him, Cornbread has done some serious damage.

He ate my glasses recently. He chewed up one of my golf shoes. Even the spikes had teeth marks.

He has gnawed the legs on several chairs, he attacked a pillow and won, he destroyed a wool blanket a friend brought me from New Zealand, and one morning I took him out and he started chewing on one of the tires on my car.

Other than that, he's a wonderful dog. He's happy. He's friendly. He's smart. And he's mine.

Catfish, I am certain, eventually will learn to accept him as a part of the family, and sleeping in a pair of socks hasn't been nearly as bad an experience as I thought it might be.

Sports event gave Dow Co. undue clout

By ROBERT WALTERS

POTOMAC, Md. (NEA) — The chain-link fences surrounding the tennis courts at the Congressional Country Club in this Washington suburb were festooned with gaudy banners promoting the official purveyors to the Dow World Senior Open.

Avis, Marriott and Carey were, respectively, the sanctioned providers of rental cars, hotel rooms and limousines to the tennis matches, sponsored by the Dow Chemical Co. Other firms promoting their ties to the event ranged from American Express to British Airways.

The principal event was a tournament in which 16 high-ranking tennis players, aged 45 or older, competed for $130,000 in prize money offered by Dow. But more intriguing for political aficionados was a supplemental tournament, the Congress-Parliament Challenge Cup.

As its name implies, it was a competition between eight members of Congress and eight members of Britain's Parliament — all of whom agreed to join in the dubious enterprise of linking sports marketing to politics.

Sports marketing is the questionable union of business and sports. Its contributions to the advancement of civilization include the commercial sponsorship of everything from professional golf matches to stock car races, and the plastering of billboards at the edge of every imaginable type of sports playing field.

What once were known as the Orange Bowl, Cotton Bowl, Sugar Bowl and Fiesta Bowl now are formally designated the Federal Express Orange Bowl, Mobil Cotton Bowl, USF&G Sugar Bowl and Sunbelt Fiesta Bowl. Corporate logotypes are pasted onto professional golfers' bags and sewn into professional tennis players' shirts.

Almost the entire surface of a successful racing car ("everything but the headlights," notes one observer) and its driver's uniform is covered with the names of corporate sponsors. The corner posts and canvas floors of boxing rings have not escaped similar treatment.

Beer brewers, soft-drink bottlers, cigarette makers, auto producers and others pay millions of dollars for the honor of sponsoring not only golf and tennis matches but also skiing, surfing, bowling, cycling and running competitions.

Corporations will spend $1.5 billion this year — more than twice as much as in 1985 — to attach their names to sporting events, while an additional $100 million will be paid to athletes to endorse various commercial products.

Until recently, however, those events did not compromise the integrity of public officials by luring them into commercially promoted competitions. Indeed, Dow boasted that its sponsorship of the tennis matches between legislators from the two countries would "make sports history."

All four House members on the congressional team were Democrats, while the Senate delegation consisted of two Democrats and two Republicans. The best known of the politicians was Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, the Democratic vice presidential nominee last year.

The problems inherent in tying politics to sports marketing were illustrated by Dow's decision to add two slots to each team for "guest players" — and then to fill one of those positions on the congressional team with its board chairman, Paul F. Orefice.

Moreover, Orefice was fortuitously teamed up in all five rounds of the doubles competition with Sen. John B. Breaux, D-La., a member of the environmental protection subcommittee in the Senate that has jurisdiction over the industrial chemicals and wastes manufactured by Dow.

While the tournament was underway, one of its organizers explained to an idle player that the promoters originally planned to seek corporations willing to pay $5,000 apiece for the honor of being the official sponsors of a doubles team of lawmakers.

"But in a time of high ethics in this town" the idea was abandoned, he said. In other words, the organizers were worried about the public relations aspect of the arrangement — but not especially concerned about selling corporations the sponsorship rights to senators and representatives.

Economic summit held amid hoopla in France

By JEFFREY ULBRICH
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP)—Leaders of the world's seven major industrial democracies gather in Paris on Friday for their 15th annual economic summit, surrounded by France's bicentennial hoopla and with a comfortable sense of economic self-satisfaction.

The oil crises, inflationary pressures, monetary instability and other woes that dominated previous summits seem contained, giving the government leaders time to take an unhurried look at matters such as the environment and Third World debt.

The surge in the dollar that started in June, sending economic shivers down the backs of many a government official, has been cooled after massive intervention by central banks selling dollars.

An optimistic U.S. Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady emphasized the Western economies are doing well and the coordination process among the seven—the U.S., Canada, Japan, West Germany, France, Italy and Great Britain—is working. There is no need for tinkering during the three-day summit beginning Friday, he said.

"The summit is taking place in a period of growth," noted Jacques Attali, a special adviser to French President Francois Mitterrand. "The discussions will be on how to manage this growth."

Lack of an immediate economic crisis is good news for debtor nations and the Third World in general. While debt is not a new subject for the seven, this year it will be the "priority of priorities," according to Attali.

Both Mitterrand and Brady are pushing plans that involve forgiving part of Third World debts in exchange for guarantees that the rest will be paid. Nobody opposes the idea, but there are differences over where to find the money to finance the plan.

Mitterrand long has cast himself as the champion of the poor, underdeveloped and indebted. He hopes the summit will end with a "Paris plan" for debt reduction. In May, he announced France will forgive 16 billion francs, the equivalent of about $2.5 billion, in public debt owed by Africa's 35 poorest countries.

President George Bush recently said the United States will forgive about $1 billion in debt owed by 16 sub-Saharan African nations starting Oct. 1.

Bush, making his first outing at a "Big 7" summit, on Monday proposed a $100 million American aid package to help private entrepreneurs in Poland, coupled with debt relief and new loans. Bush said he will be seeking similar funds from the other participants at the Paris summit.

On Wednesday, Bush announced an aid package for Hungary, which includes plans to ask Congress for $25 million in new aid to spur that country's moves toward a free-market economy.

Exxon, Coast Guard debate oily slick's source

SAN DIEGO (AP)—An oily slick several miles long may be from residue dissolving in the tanks of the Exxon Valdez as the damaged tanker goes in circles outside San Diego Bay, Coast Guard officials said.

Coast Guard Cmdr. Jack Scarborough said Wednesday the residue may have dissolved as the ship entered the waters of Southern California, where the Valdez is to undergo extensive repairs.

The 987-foot ship was damaged in March when it crashed into a reef in Prince William Sound off Alaska. It spilled nearly 11 million gallons of oil, the worst spill in U.S. history.

Officials were awaiting results of samples sent to a Coast Guard laboratory in Connecticut to determine the source of this week's leak. Exxon officials say the material is leaking from the Valdez, but they don't know what it is.

The Valdez remained about 50 miles off San Diego early today. It has been barred from entering the bay until it is free of environmental and navigational hazards.

Scarborough said the difference in the water temperatures may have caused the recent leaking. "That would explain why the folks in Alaska felt they had a clean ship when she sailed and would explain why we have a dirty ship now."

But Exxon Shipping President Frank Iarossi said he doubted that was the case. "I don't think temperature is a significant factor," Iarossi said. "The reason is, we operate in 80-degree temperatures all the time."

Alaskan waters were about 35 degrees; San Diego's are about 60 degrees.

Scarborough said the ship was trailing an oily slick about 11 miles long Wednesday but that the discharges have become intermittent and less concentrated.

Two longer slicks that formed Monday and Tuesday were said to be dissipating. Exxon agreed Wednesday to hire a cleanup vessel to mitigate any environmental damage.

Officials said the impact on fish and wildlife was expected to be negligible.

Once the leakage stops for at least a 24-hour period, the ship will be towed to a sheltered cove, probably off Navy-owned San Clemente Island, so divers can remove five pieces of metal hanging from the hull to allow the ship to enter the shallow harbor.

After the repairs, the ship is to enter the harbor to begin a $25 million overhaul at National Steel and Shipbuilding Co, where it was built in 1986.

GOP, Demos join forces against B-2 bomber

WASHINGTON (AP)—House Republicans and Democrats are forecasting a rocky congressional ride for the stealth bomber despite the Air Force assessment that the half-billion-dollar aircraft is key to U.S. strategic forces.

"The B-2 program is in a lot of trouble," Rep. William Dickinson of Alabama, ranking Republican on the House Armed Services Committee, told Air Force officials who pleaded their case Wednesday.

Defense Secretary Dick Cheney was to present his argument for the bomber today before the House panel.

Air Force Secretary Donald Rice and Chief of Staff Larry Welch met with stiff resistance from lawmakers Wednesday as they urged members at House and Senate sessions to continue spending for the $70 billion program.

Rice and Welch told the committee that stretching out the B-2 program would increase the cost significantly. Current estimates put the price tag of a single bomber between $500 million and $750 million, making it the most expensive plane in history.

Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, said extending the program could raise the price of a single bomber to $1 billion.

"If you make the annual cost acceptable, the sticker price becomes unacceptable," Aspin said. "If you make the sticker price acceptable, the annual cost becomes unacceptable. I don't know how to fix it."

Moments after Aspin's comments, Dickinson put it more bluntly to the Air Force officials.

"When the chairman tells you you're not going to get it politically, you can put it in your pocket and take it to the bank," Dickinson said.

Rep. Herbert H. Bateman, R-Va., added: "I want to put my head down and cry. You made a compelling case but I don't know where to get the money to pay for it."

Two committee Republicans—Reps. John Rowland of Connecticut and John Kasich of Ohio—have joined forces with liberal Democrat Ronald Dellums of California on an amendment to shut down production of the B-2 after the manufacturer, Northrop Corp., produced 13 planes.

The amendment, which the lawmakers said they will introduce on the House floor, would allow the 13 planes to be developed and tested and then a decision would be made on whether to continue the program.

"It's a reasonable, moderate position," said Rowland, who believes the coalition can win support from members stunned by the cost of the radar-evading aircraft.

But the Air Force argues the B-2 outpaces improvements in Soviet air defenses, is important to nuclear deterrence and can be used in a conventional role.

Despite the sticker shock, the B-2 "comes down as the only candidate for some categories of things we want to do," Rice said.

Morgue theft charges made

DALLAS (AP)—A Dallas County autopsy technician has been charged with theft in connection with the disappearances of jewelry and cash from corpses taken to the medical examiner's office.

Alvin Wilson, 32, is being held at Lew Sterrett Justice Center in lieu of $1,500 bail.

Dallas County sheriff's detective Al Messinger said an informant at the medical examiner's office told investigators in late June that Wilson had taken two rings from bodies at the morgue and that $100 also had disappeared from a storage area.

Dallas County Medical Examiner Charles Petty refused to discuss the case, according to the Dallas Times Herald.

Texas representatives among those taking junkets abroad

By JENNIFER DIXON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Mickey Leland's overseas travel is "hot and sweaty and substantive," Rep. Solomon Ortiz, who visited 27 countries in two years, says he takes trips, not junkets.

All told, the Texas congressional delegation took 74 trips in 1987 and 1988 at a minimum cost to taxpayers of $400,000, according to Public Citizen, a congressional watchdog.

Their destinations ranged from Leland's trips criss-crossing the Third World to a series of economic conferences Rep. Martin Frost attended in Madrid, Paris and Milan.

"Trips are important and not junkets," said Ortiz, who visited more countries on his seven trips than any other Texan. "They are designed to give congressmen a first-hand view of the problems and developments abroad."

On one trip alone for the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, the study said Ortiz was in nine countries — Mexico, Belize, Jamaica, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Guyana, Trinidad, Tobago and Venezuela.

During another fact-finding mission on narcotics, Ortiz touched down in five more countries — Korea, Thailand, Burma, Singapore and Indonesia — at a cost of $18,878.

Ortiz said he also travels as a member of the Armed Services Committee because "we are concerned about the living conditions of our GIs. We're concerned about where they live, where they sleep and the diseases they face. We want to see if military contracts are being carried out and whether buildings are built to specification."

"As a general proposition," says Frost, a Dallas Democrat, "it is very helpful for members (of Congress) to gain exposure to other parts of the world."

Frost, a member of the House Rules Committee, which has no role in drafting legislation, took two of his three trips with the panel. One journey took him to Spain, Portugal, Morocco and the Ivory Coast, the second to Spain, Malta, Turkey, Kenya and Senegal.

Frost argues that the influential Rules Committee does decide which bills go to the floor and whether they can be amended, meaning the members are asked to make important foreign policy decisions.

Leland, a Houston Democrat who heads the Select Committee on Hunger, took five of his seven trips with the panel; many of the destinations were not exactly hot tourist attractions — Botswana, Zambia, Ethiopia, Haiti and Vietnam.

"Mickey's trips have been working, grueling trips — non-stop in terms of meetings and on-site visits. They're hot and sweaty and substantive," said his spokeswoman, Alma Newsom.

Leland also visited Taiwan with the Energy and Commerce Committee and at the speaker's request went to Spain, the Soviet Union, and Germany.

With nine separate trips, Rep. Kika de la Garza, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, took the most of the delegation, but only visited 13 countries, returning to Mexico five times.

The nine trips taken also put De la Garza, a Mission Democrat, in fourth place among all members of Congress in the number of separate overseas outings, Public Citizen said.

Some Texans ventured behind the Iron Curtain over the past two years, with Rep. Jack Brooks of Beaumont traveling to Poland, and Sen. Phil Gramm and Reps. Jake Pickle and Jim Wright also going to the Soviet Union.

Others ventured into countries on the fringes of war or torn by strife — Rep. Tom DeLay's only trip was to Nicaragua, Rep. Charlie Wilson returned three times to Pakistan.

The study said only a handful of the state's congressmen took no overseas trips in the last two years — Republican Reps. Steve Bartlett of Dallas, Joe Barton of Ennis, Larry Combest of Lubbock and Lamar Smith of San Antonio, and Democrat Henry B. Gonzalez of San Antonio.

Bartlett's spokeswoman, however, said he did take one short trip on a regularly scheduled Defense Department flight to Europe. Public Citizen said globetrotting members of Congress took a total of 1,053 overseas trips in 1987-88 at a cost to taxpayers of at least $13.5 million.

"There are many valid reasons for members of Congress to travel at taxpayer expense, but at least some of these trips appear to be unjustified excursions," said Joan Claybrook, president of the Ralph Nader organization.

The information on members of the 100th Congress was compiled from figures furnished by committees and from military records.

Although commercial travel would be cheaper, the report said, lawmakers often used the Air Force's 89th Military Airlift Wing.

NATO to propose aircraft reduction

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Seeking early agreement at East-West conventional disarmament talks, NATO is submitting a proposal that specifies the types of combat aircraft it wants covered by an arms accord, U.S. officials say.

Secretary of State James A. Baker III told reporters Wednesday in Hungary, where he was accompanying President Bush, that the proposal marked "a step toward ending the military division of Europe."

Baker announced that NATO would today propose a ceiling of 5,700 combat aircraft and 1,900 combat helicopters for each alliance. The inclusion of an aircraft cutback complied with a long-standing East bloc demand.

According to NATO data, the Warsaw Pact countries have about 9,600 combat aircraft versus about 6,700 NATO aircraft.

The Vienna talks on conventional forces break for the summer today, allowing the Soviets and their allies time to frame a response before the talks resume Sept. 7.

The new Western proposal is based on a blueprint for deep reductions in conventional arms and troops in Europe first unveiled by Bush at an alliance summit in May and subsequently endorsed by NATO members.

Bush called for military cutbacks that would fix the same ceiling of 275,000 troops in Europe for each superpower. According to NATO statistics, that would require the United States to remove 30,000 troops from Europe while the Soviets would have to pull out more than 10 times that, or 325,000.

The proposal also foresees deep cuts in armaments, with a proposed ceiling of 20,000 tanks for each side and reductions in combat aircraft and artillery.

Prison camp anniversaries renew debate about which one was worse

EDITOR'S NOTE — The Confederacy's infamous Andersonville prison camp in Georgia marks its 125th anniversary this year. So does the Union's Elmira prison in New York. While Andersonville remains a symbol of the inhumanities endured by prisoners during the Civil War, Elmira and other Northern prisons escaped that notoriety. But there is little evidence that one was worse than the other.

By JOEL STASHENKO
Associated Press Writer

ELMIRA, N.Y. (AP) — Like some rusty bayonet or tattered battle flag hidden away in the attic, the Elmira prison camp is an all-but-forgotten relic of the Civil War.

Considering the human suffering involved, maybe memories of the prison, which opened 125 years ago this month, are best left undisturbed.

Except for a flagpole, a small monument and two stone markers there's nothing in the quiet Elmira neighborhood where the prison camp once stood to mark its presence.

But buried beneath tidy rows of white headstones and shade trees at the Woodlawn National Cemetery are the remains of 2,973 Confederate soldiers who died at Elmira, many from starvation.

The Confederacy's Andersonville prison in Georgia is remembered as the most infamous example of the inhumanity and deprivations of the Civil War, even though records show that a soldier imprisoned in Elmira stood little better chance of surviving than did one in Andersonville.

Questions linger over whether those 2,973 Rebels died mainly because of the primitive state of medicine and sanitation during the Civil War, or whether they were victims of the Lincoln administration's intentional policy of neglect toward prisoners of war.

Union officials ordered in May 1864 that a complex of barracks at Elmira that had been used for three years to house Union soldiers be converted to a prison camp for captive Southerners. A 12-foot-high fence was immediately thrown around a 30-acre portion of barracks.

On July 6, 1864, a train pulled into Elmira with the first 399-man contingent of prisoners on board. It was a ragged group of prisoners. Most had been captured during the grinding battles of the Wilderness in Virginia.

Things went wrong at the prison camp almost from the beginning.

A stagnant body of water, within the fences of the prison, became a breeding ground of disease amid an extended heat wave that summer.

Approval for a sluice to allow fresher water from the nearby Chemung River to pass through for that project didn't come until October — and prisoners didn't complete the canals until Jan. 1, 1865.

In the meantime, men were dying in droves.

"The scurvy was among us, and as the cold weather advanced the death rate increased rapidly," wrote prisoner L.B. Jones. "Scurvy, typhoid, pneumonia and finally smallpox broke out to an alarming extent, carrying off great numbers of the poor fellows."

The food at Elmira could have been another problem. Elmira prisoners after the war said a day's rations generally included two 1-inch-thick slices of bread, 2 ounces of meat and a pint of soup, often only the thin broth in which the meat was cooked.

According to figures compiled by an early-century historian of the Elmira prison, Clay Holmes, 27 percent of the camp's captives died. Pulitzer Prize-winning Civil War historian James McPherson places Elmira's mortality rate at 24 percent.

By way of comparison, 13,000 or 29 percent of the 45,000 Union soldiers imprisoned at Andersonville died.

Why, then, have Elmira and other Northern prisons with high death rates — Camp Alton, Ill., Lookout Point, Md., Johnson's Island, Ohio, and Rock Island, Ill. — escaped Andersonville's notoriety?

"To the extent that Elmira and others lack infamy, I would guess it has to do with who won the war," Thomas says.

The only historic site operated by the National Park Service at a former Civil War prison camp is at Andersonville. Events including historic recreations, memorial services and even an archaeological dig will be held throughout this year to mark Andersonville's 125th birthday.

But Elmira's anniversary will pass quietly. The chances are good that most of the people living in the well-maintained, turn-of-the-century homes around the former site of the camp won't give the historic significance of this year a second thought.

Separated triplets

Terry, left, and Jane Mohr of Manhattan Beach, Calif., pose with their triplets: Cooper, left, born Feb. 15, 1987, and Hanna Christina and Mollie McKenna, born on Nov. 19, 1988. The triplets were born as a result of a relatively new medical procedure that allows for separate implantation in the mother's womb after in vitro fertilization. The fertilized eggs can be removed and frozen, then later implanted, even at separate times, as happened with the Mohrs.

Watchdogs: Tighter lobbying rules needed

By MICHAEL HOLMES
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — Recent publicity about lobbyists buying legislators' vacations and a businessman distributing $10,000 checks to senators may make this the time for reform of the Legislature's ethics rules, a public watchdog group says.

"Members are extremely concerned about re-election, and they're willing to make strong commitments at this time because they see scandal brewing. When you've got scandal, it's time to push for reform," said Tom Smith, director of the group Public Citizen.

The public could help change the system by boosting lawmakers' salaries from the current $600 a month and linking that pay raise to reform, Smith suggested.

"If they want a Legislature that works for them instead of special interests, they've got to ante up and pay the salaries. They've got to vote in November to raise salaries — and demand significant reform in campaign finance and lobbying," he said.

A referendum on the November ballot proposes tripling legislators' salaries from $7,200 a year to more than $23,000. It also would remove the constitutional requirement that voters approve all salary hikes by paying lawmakers 25 percent of the governor's salary — which the Legislature sets.

Smith suggested that as legislators ask voters for the raise, they should promise to reform the campaign finance system and ethics laws that have no restrictions on how much lobbyists can spend to wine, dine and take lawmakers on trips.

"I think there ought to be that kind of promise made by legislators around the state," Smith said. "And people should demand an answer from their representatives on whether they're going to vote for some limitations. They need to make it clear they want this system to change."

Another group, Common Cause, also seeks changes. Pam Fridrich, that group's executive director, agreed that citizens should tell lawmakers what they think.

"The public needs to be contacting legislators and telling them, 'We want you to disclose this information to us, we want campaign finance reform, and we want you to be above board with us,'" she said.

In the past two weeks, the Legislature has been embarrassed by two incidents.

In late June, news reports revealed that the Texas State Troopers Association helped pay for a lobby-funded ski trip for some lawmakers and gubernatorial aides. The association opposed a bill, eventually vetoed by Gov. Bill Clements, to require police groups to publicly disclose where they spend money raised through telephone solicitations.

Then late last week, two days before a Senate vote on a workers' compensation bill, East Texas millionaire Lonnie "Bo" Pilgrim offered $10,000 checks to one-fourth the members of the Texas Senate after telling them of his unhappiness with the current workers' comp law.

The checks — with the payees' names left blank — were intended as campaign contributions, said Pilgrim, who distributed several in the Senate chamber while a committee was meeting there. Most of the nine senators offered the checks rejected or returned them.

Travis County District Attorney Ronnie Earle said he is investigating.

Although lawmakers can't accept campaign contributions during regular legislative session, there is no prohibition during special sessions like that going on now.

Unlike federal law, Texas law places no limits on how much money individuals can donate to political campaigns.

Smith said the time has come to change both campaign and lobbying laws. He points to the current special session over workers' compensation reform — the system that pays benefits to workers killed or injured on the job — as an illustration.

"The workers' compensation debate has been a classic example of how the flow of money often determines how issues are resolved in the Legislature," Smith said.

"Since nobody makes any money off job safety, there's been nobody really trying to fix that problem. Everyone's trying to give the manufacturers and business community a break, but nobody's trying to address the real issue: worker safety," Smith said.

Fashionable clothing with hidden features speeds dressing for wheelchair users

When actress and model Pamela Ann Martin suffered a disabling spinal stroke she spent a year in a hospital, flat on her back—but she still managed to get to a shopping mall on a stretcher to follow her passion for fashion.

"I was the only person shopping for clothes from a horizontal position," recalls the vivacious brunette, who graduated from California's Brooks College with a degree in fashion merchandising and design.

A physical therapy counselor encouraged Pamela to become a computer programmer or a keypunch operator but that was much too uncreative, she says, adding:

"I told them I was going to Hollywood to study acting. They laughed."

But now, more than a decade after her stroke, the 35-year-old Ms. Martin's determination has paid off with wheelchair appearances in several television dramas, feature films and national talk shows. She also writes a column, "Rolling With Laughter," and recently created the cartoon feature "Wheelies."

Her modeling gigs have been mainly in behalf of Everest & Jennings, a California-based firm that produces "Avenues," a catalog line of fashionable clothing with hidden features to speed dressing for wheelchair users.

"People who are disabled deserve to have a positive fashion image," says Pamela, whose modeling endeavors began at the age of 6. "I did fashion shows for charity and social events throughout my schoolgirl and college days."

"Now the biggest difference between my ability and disability is that I model on wheels instead of in heels."

"Most people just jump in their clothes and—zip—they're off, but for me, getting dressed can be a major project."

Often, she points out, conventional clothing doesn't fit or look attractive on people who spend their day sitting. Jackets are too long and too binding when propelling a wheelchair. Slacks are too short and pockets are out of

(AP Laserphoto)

Fashion on wheels - hidden features such as cross-entry pockets and a unique cut and length are built into Everest & Jennings reach. Skirts drag and get caught in wheels.

Designers of clothes for wheelchair users should develop patterns which flatter the seated figure, according to clothing consultants.

"To create clothing for special needs, you must use design to solve problems," explains Dr. Naomi Reich, chairman of the University of Arizona's Clothing and Textiles Department. "That requires analysis."

Research and testing indicate that such clothing should be cut with extra fabric in the seat and less in the front.

Other touches can include thigh pockets or hidden calf pockets for keeping glasses, keys and other items within easy reach. And some pants can have hidden ankle-to-knee zippers to speed dressing and accommodate braces.

According to Gret Atkins of Cornell University's Department of Textiles and Apparel, clothing can be as much a barrier to wheelchair users as a curb without a curb cut.

"Sometimes dressing can be so exhausting that they might choose to stay in their nightwear and not go out or invite someone over," she says. "We're such a visual society that most disabling conditions—whether an artificial limb, uneven gait or wheelchair—call attention to themselves."

"If clothing draws further attention to disabilities then we have failed as designers."

Dear Abby

Man can't find charity for his traveling money

DEARABBY: In the past 10 years, my wife and I traveled to Canada on various tours, and during those trips we accumulated a fair amount of Canadian coins and currency. I kept putting the coins in a good-sized jar until the jar was full and weighed about nine pounds. I decided to send this jar to some worthy group located as far north in Canada as I could find.

I found a small town on the map, and wrote to the president of a well-known worldwide service club in that town offering to send the club my Canadian coins. I received no response. Then I wrote to the president of the Chamber of Commerce in that town. I never heard from him, either. So I wrote to their international headquarters in Chicago, and received no reply.

I then personally went to the local chapter of another international service club, showed them my jar of Canadian money and asked if they wanted to send it to their Canadian chapter. Two employees were there at the time, and they both laughed at me!

I was ready to give up, when I thought maybe a church mission could use it, so I wrote to the bishop of the Episcopal church in Whitehorse—in the Yukon area. The bishop responded immediately, telling me of a small mission in his area, so I mailed the jar to the bishop, who forwarded it to this little mission.

Soon after, I received a nice thank-you letter saying they had purchased a pulpit Bible with part of the donation, which they had counted, and it came to $144.27!

So, you see, Abby, two international service clubs missed out on a nice donation by their silence and laughter.

If you use this letter, please don't identify me or my city. I don't want to embarrass anybody.

WELL TRAVELED

DEAR WELL TRAVELED: Congratulations on your resourcefulness as well as your determination to put your "hard-to-get-rid-of" Canadian money to good use.

Shame on those who ignored your offer, and double shame on those who laughed at you.

DEAR ABBY: I have read that blood donated in the United States is now routinely tested for the AIDS virus. If the blood tests "positive," is the donor notified of this fact?

Please answer this question in your column because I'm sure many others would like to know.

FORT SMITH, ARK.

DEAR FORT SMITH: If the blood tests "positive," it is tested again. If it tests "positive" a second time, the donor is notified.

DEAR ABBY: Yes, life is hard for the unambiguous who say exactly what they mean.

My dad told me about this ambiguous statement that appeared in our church bulletin: "Following communion services this Easter Sunday, Mrs. Johnson will lay an egg on the altar."

Cowboys' White retires after 13-year career

Club's most accurate passer

IRVING (AP) — Danny White said he disagrees with Dallas Cowboys coach Jimmy Johnson's thinking that the team can be successful in the NFL playing young, inexperienced quarterbacks. But it also is a philosophy White said he has accepted.

"He's the boss and he needs to be the boss," White said Wednesday.

And with that, the Cowboys quarterback of the 1980s retired after a 13-year NFL career. White, 37, is the most accurate passer in club history and holds 11 team records. All told, he led the Cowboys to five playoff appearances and two division titles. His record as a starter was 67-35, a winning percentage of 65.7 percent.

But he also was constantly compared, some say unfairly, to Roger Staubach, the Hall of Fame quarterback who during an 11-year career led the Cowboys to four Super Bowl appearances and two NFL championships.

"That's just something that's been overdone," White said during a teary-eyed farewell. "I never tried to live up to the expectations they had of Roger. "I consider it an honor to follow him."

Johnson only hopes one of his young quarterbacks creates the same type of excitement as Staubach, who led Dallas to 23 comeback victories, 14 in the last two minutes or overtime.

The Cowboys selected UCLA quarterback Troy Aikman with the first pick in this spring's NFL draft. They picked Miami quarterback Steve Walsh in Friday's supplemental draft, and Scott Secules is entering his second season.

Steve Pelluer, the Cowboys' starter last season, is holding out in a contract dispute, leaving Babe Laufenberg as the only player at this week's quarterbacks school who has taken an NFL snap.

Johnson remains unfazed. "I feel like because of the unique situation we're in, our younger players know more about the system than our veterans," he said. "Just because a player is a veteran doesn't mean he is the player farthest along in our

Danny White announces his retirement at a news conference Wednesday.

All of which left White in limbo, especially after a Wednesday morning meeting with Johnson.

In May, White signed a contract for an undetermined length, but his role already had diminished with Pelluer's emergence over the past two seasons.

White said he never considered playing as a backup whose role might include tutoring the younger quarterbacks.

Fans were too critical

IRVING (AP) — Cowboys Center Tom Rafferty says Dallas fans who were critical of Danny White had too much greed and not enough sense.

Fans were too willing to criticize White for three consecutive NFC championship game losses when what he really deserved was credit for taking the team even that far, Rafferty said.

"It's unfortunate when people look back on his career, they look at the plays he didn't make instead of looking at the ones he did," Rafferty said. "He's had a great career."

White retired Wednesday after 13 years in the NFL. The end came after a meeting with new Cowboys coach Jimmy Johnson, who said he didn't have big plans for White next season.

"I think he did what he could as well as he could," Rafferty said. "He played a lot of good games and he made a lot of big plays for the Cowboys."

After becoming the Cowboys' starter in 1980, White led the team to three straight conference championship games. He also guided the Cowboys to five post-season berths and two NFC East titles. White, 37, had been working out at the Cowboys' quarterback school for the past two days with Troy Aikman, Steve Walsh, Babe Laufenberg and Scott Secules.

The Cowboys selected Aikman out of UCLA with the first pick in this spring's NFL draft. They picked Walsh out of Miami in Friday's supplemental draft, and Secules is entering his second season.

Laufenberg said he was sorry to see White retire, but added, "I guess this is probably best for Danny."

"During the time that I've been here, he was always a guy who worked hard and went out there and held his head high," Laufenberg said. "I think he's going out the way he should."

"He believes he can still compete. Danny now has a chance to go out and play for another team."

Walsh, who got his first chance to work out with White on Tuesday, said the veteran's leadership could have helped the younger quarterbacks.

"We're losing some valuable experience," Walsh said.

NL sweeps All-Star doubleheader

Pampa bambino team advances to SW Regionals

There was one thing both sides could agree upon after the National League All-Stars beat the American League All-Stars to advance to the Southwest Bambino Regionals.

The National League had to earn the right.

The NL All-Stars avoided going to a third game with a doubleheader sweep Wednesday night in a best of three series at Optimist Park, but the wins weren't easy by any means.

After taking the opener 6-4, the NL held off an American League rally to win the second contest 3-

1. Pitches Duane Nickleberry of the NL and Jason Warren of the AL were locked in a scoreless duel for the first two innings of the second game. Then the NL broke on top 1-0 in the third when Nickleberry singled and came home on an infield grounder by Dale Noble.

The NL padded their lead in the top of the fifth with two runs on an RBI single by Nickleberry and a wild pitch.

The AL had hopes of pulling out a victory after consecutive singles by Rene Armendiaz and Jeremy Morris in the final inning. Armendiaz scored on a passed ball, but that was the only run Nickleberry allowed.

Nickleberry and Warren went the distance for their respective clubs. Nickleberry gave up seven hits while striking out 10 and walking five. Warren yielded six hits while striking out five and walking one.

In the opener the NL jumped out to a 3-0 lead in the first inning on a run-scoring single by Kyle Parnell and a two-run homer by Danny Frye. The American Leaguers got on the board in the top of the second when a run scored on an error. The National Leaguers also tallied in the bottom of the second on an RBI grounder by Todd Finney.

The American League knotted the score at 4-4 in the third on a 3-run homer by Matt Winborne. However, the National Leaguers retaliated with a big blow of their own in the fifth when Hank Gindorf slammed a two-run homer over the center field fence.

Danny Frye was the winning pitcher. Rene Armendiaz took the loss.

The Southwest Regional Tournament will be played July 29-Aug. 3 at Broken Bow, Okla. The winner advances to the Bambino World Series Aug. 12-19 in Wilmington, N.C.

Sports medicine program helps rodeoers

By SONNY BOHANAN Sports Writer

For more than 100 years, the professional rodeo cowboy has been known for his independence and daring nature. Unlike other major league athletes, he does not have the luxury of guaranteed contracts, injured reserve clauses or qualified pension plans. In pro rodeo, the athlete becomes a winner or loser based on his own ability and initiative.

This attitude is what rodeo and the cowboy are all about. However, it has also placed the cowboy, as an athlete, at a distinct disadvantage.

To be in contention for the world championship, he must compete at more rodeos and against more competitive livestock than ever before. If he cannot perform, and perform at his peak level of competition, his chances of winning are greatly reduced.

"When a rodeo cowboy gets injured, the paychecks stop," said eight-time world champion bull rider Don Gay. "There never was any salary to start with, much less 'injured reserve,' and the cowboy must get back on the road as a simple means of economic survival."

"It's simple — unless you're there to put your hand in the bull rope, you've lost your chance at winning any money. If you're hurting, you don't go home — you just get in that car or plane and try to heal on the way to the next one."

But now, thanks to Don Andrews of Nashville and Dr. J. Pat Evans of Dallas, the scale is beginning to tip in favor of professional rodeo cowboys.

Andrews and Evans saw the need for a perennial sports medicine program in the ranks of pro rodeo. With their vision and the financial assistance of Justin Boot Co. of Fort Worth, a program to help the contestants recover from injury while conditioning to prevent further injury was inaugurated at the National Finals Rodeo in 1980.

"As we came to know the sport, one thing seemed remarkable to us," said Andrews, co-ordinator of the Justin Sportsmedicine Program. "Rodeo dished out some of the most intense physical punishment of any athletic competition, yet it also had a complete lack of sports medicine personnel so common in other professional sports."

In 1982, Justin unveiled a first in the world of sports, a completely equipped mobile hospital, fitted with sophisticated medical and training devices. Since the rodeo cowboy's nomadic lifestyle prevented him from getting medical attention and advice when he needed it, Andrews and Evans decided to bring the hospital to the cowboy.

Since then, the program has grown to include a year-round staff of five and four mobile hospitals, two used on the rodeo circuit, one on the motorsports circuit and a smaller unit started for skiing in 1986. Now, a Justin Heeler — as the professional trainers are referred to — is on call at 40 major pro rodeos each year.

The hand-picked pros who staff the medical trailers know exactly what rigours are placed on the cowboy by his particular specialty, and how to deal with injury situations, both before and after they occur.

"Even more than an injury treatment function, the Justin Sportsmedicine Program has tried to place its emphasis on injury prevention," said Andrews. "In this business, it's not if you get hurt, it's when. So 70 percent of what we do is educational."

"Through pre-event care like testing for muscular strength and endurance, and demonstrating proper flexibility and our protective taping techniques, our specialty is helping cowboys learn more about taking care of themselves."

Program Manager Jon Hester of Denton, the newest member of the Justin Sportsmedicine team, pulled into Pampa earlier this week with the mobile hospital. He will be on hand during all three PRCA performances of the Top O' Texas Rodeo, beginning tonight and continuing through Saturday.

Hester's training uniquely qualifies him to administer to the needs of rodeo cowboys. He assisted with the Justin Program at the Mesquite Championship Rodeo while finishing his physical education degree at University of North Texas.

His participation at Mesquite, as well as working with the UNT athletic program, was the result of carefully laid plans which he hoped would give him the knowledge and credentials to work with the Justin Sportsmedicine Program.

Hester, who travels to over thirty rodeos per season, is a member of the National Athletic Trainers Association and the Southwestern Athletic Trainers Association as well as a certified emergency medical technician.

This weekend's participants can rest easy knowing they won't encounter the situation described by pro rodeo barrelman Ted Kimzey:

"Before the Justin Program existed, we were on our own. Pain was just an understood part of what you did, and you learned to shrug it off. Half the time you knew something hurt, but you simply toughed it out until it went away — if it ever did. You had to be feeling like you were practically staring at the undertaker before you'd resort to a doctor."

"Justin, thank goodness, has made rodeo life a little saner and a whole lot safer, by putting the educated opportunity to take care of ourselves at our back door. I don't know how we ever did without it."

Baseball's lawyers contend commissioner has authority to investigate Rose case

By JOHN CHALFANT
Associated Press Writer

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Pete Rose contends he cannot get a fair hearing from baseball commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti, and Giamatti indicates he cannot get one in Rose's hometown of Cincinnati.

Lawyers for Giamatti asked U.S. District Judge John D. Holschuh on Wednesday to deny the request of the Cincinnati Reds manager to send his legal battle with baseball back to Hamilton County Common Pleas Court.

Rose's lawyers now have until noon Monday to file a response to baseball's memorandum.

Lawyers for baseball argued that the commissioner long ago was established as an independent authority with exclusive powers to investigate allegations of gambling and to take appropriate action.

"Courts of the United States have uniformly recognized the power of the Commissioner to investigate, determine, and punish conduct he judges is 'not in the best interests of the national game of Baseball,'" the memo said.

It described gambling as the capital crime of baseball that infects the game's integrity.

Rose is trying to block Giamatti from holding a hearing on gambling allegations. Baseball's career hits leader could be banned from the game for life if he is found to have wagered on the Reds.

Rose, who contends he cannot get a fair hearing from Giamatti, was granted a temporary restraining order by Hamilton County Common Pleas Judge Norbert Nadel in Cincinnati on June 25 to block the hearing.

Baseball lost an appeal in the 1st Ohio District Court of Appeals in Hamilton County, and then sought to move the matter into federal court in Cincinnati. The case was sent to Columbus.

"In this case, as (federal) Judges (Carl) Rubin and (Herman) Weber stated in their order transferring this matter to the Eastern Division at Columbus, the plaintiff is 'not just another litigant' but an individual of 'national reputation closely identified with the Cincinnati Reds and the City of Cincinnati,'" the memo said.

"Because of the extraordinary renown of the plaintiff in Cincinnati, and the daunting publicity this matter has received, the case was transferred to this court sitting in another city in order to assure a fairer environment," baseball said in a 110-page response to Rose's motion.

The memo said it appears the federal court judges in Cincinnati believed that severe local prejudice justified transfer of the case.

"Plainly, this same local prejudice must weigh much more heavily on a state court judge who must be elected and re-elected by the citizens of the locality," the filing said.

The memo, filed on Giamatti's behalf by Columbus lawyer John C. Elam, said it is difficult to understand Rose's objection to moving the matter into federal court.

"It now appears, however, that plaintiff is unwilling to accept the jurisdiction of any court other than one which is most subject to the influence of local pressures produced by his fame, notoriety and close identification with the city of Cincinnati," the memo said.

Strange looking for more titles

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — Now that he's had the opportunity to savor his U.S. Open title defense, Curtis Strange feels it's time to move on.

"The year's not over yet," said Strange, who was part of the 156-man field in today's scheduled opening round of the Anheuser-Busch Golf Classic.

One month ago, Strange became the first golfer in nearly four decades to win consecutive U.S. Open championships. Now he is pondering the possibility of winning more major tournaments this year.

"I'm thinking more and more about the British Open," he said of next week's event in Scotland. "This year I really want to do well. Last year I was a little overwhelmed, then shot 79 in the first round."

"I'm looking forward to it and the PGA. I have a lot better attitude. I'm more fired up."

Strange, whose Open triumphs represent his only victories in the so-called majors — the U.S. and British opens, the Masters and the PGA Championship — said it's not impossible to win more than one a year.

"But as far as winning all four majors in a year, I don't think it is possible, especially when a guy can't dominate our tour," he said. "Sure, if a Jack Nicklaus came out, it could be possible. It was always possible when he was playing."

Before he goes gunning for another major title, Strange will be confronted by another task that has proved difficult for him in the past: playing well in the Anheuser-Busch.

The event is staged at the Kingsmill Golf Club, a 6,776-yard layout which Strange calls his home course and is built in a sprawling resort where Strange makes his home. Strange, who missed the cut in this event in 1986, said it can be a double-edged sword playing at home in front of large galleries of family and friends.
