Exciting saddle bronc riding was one of the rodeo events.

ToT Rodeo concludes action with exciting, winning rides

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

Beginning with a bareback bronc ride that was called the best most people had ever seen and finishing up with a bull ride right out of a cowboy's dream, the final performance of the Top o' Texas Rodeo Saturday night was pure magic.

An excellent crowd combined with some of producer Benny Beutler's best stock to provide the right setting for an exciting finale to the three-day event.

Beginning the evening was a 75-point bareback bronc ride by Randy Wright. At several points in the 8-second trip, the horse seemed to be blasting off as it left the ground kicking and snorting.

That thrilling ride was followed by Randy Slaughter scoring one point better on a horse that was less than thrilling. However, technical mastery and high spurring made the jaunt exciting, nonetheless.

Thirty-three-year-old Cole Tindol of Briscoe capped the event as he scored an incredible 82-point showing on Half-Moon that several experienced PRCA riders called the best they had ever seen.

"I felt like a made a real good ride and everything turned out just right," Tindol said after hearing he had won the event. "Tonight he (Beutler) had a real good pen of horses. It is probably the best pen of horses he's got. It made everybody look good."

Tindol said he didn't realize he had the winning ride until he bailed out after the 8 seconds and heard the reaction of the crowd.

"I just knew I was going to have a good score. The crowd was really going so I knew he had looked real good bucking," Tindol said.

Other outstanding performances of the night included Roy Duvall's 4.6 second steer wrestling time, second best in the entire rodeo, and 16-year-old Kim West's low time of 18.68 in the barrel racing.

But nothing could adequately prepare rodeo fans for what they would see when Lewis Barnes, 25, of Hutchison, Kan., mounted 047 for his turn at bull riding.

Barnes was faced with stiff competition as five of the previous riders had scored good marks and each of the bulls seemed to be looking for blood.

But Barnes also had a premonition he might take it all. The bull he drew was the same one he had won the event on last year in Pampa.

"I liked it when I drew him, but you still got to get out there and ride him," Barnes said. "He was coming around to the right pretty good, then he turned back to the left and it went real well."

"The crowd and everything in general was primed for it."

As Barnes left the chute, the bull showed the exact moves necessary for a winning ride, spinning first one way and then the other. For Barnes that made the rest relatively easy as he responded with good form and, most of all, just held on.

Radar-evading B-2 Stealth bomber makes maiden flight

By DENNIS ANDERSON
Associated Press Writer

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — The $500 million stealth bomber roared into the air for the first time today, soaring above the Southern California desert on a flight that could decide whether the bat-winged aircraft lives or dies.

The B-2, designed to evade enemy radar, was arrayed with reflective material to allow test personnel to keep track of the plane and its two pilots during the 2-hour flight.

The sinister-looking black jet raced down an 11,000-foot runway at the secretive Air Force Plant 42 at Palmdale and lifted off at 6:37 a.m. PDT, with two F-16 fighter jets giving chase through the still and cloudless desert sky.

It landed here at 8:30 a.m. after performing test maneuvers over the Mojave Desert.

Thousands of people gathered among the tumbleweeds outside the plant shouted "Here they come, here they come!" as the great flying-wing's dark shadow passed over. "Great God," exclaimed Northrop employee Les Holland.

The plane's landing gear remained down, as is standard practice on test flights in case of malfunctions.

The plane, 69 feet long with a 172-foot wingspan, taxied out of Plant 42, the Air Force's primary research and development facility, in the desert 40 miles north of downtown Los Angeles.

The stealth bomber's only previous flights have been on a computer flight simulation. Air Force and Northrop officials say no other aircraft has been tested more thoroughly without having been flown.

The flight was seen as vital for the future of the bomber, which is already 18 months behind schedule. At a budgeted price of $500 million each — the Air Force wants 132 of the planes — it is the most expensive plane in history.

A key congressional committee has voted to withhold further funding until the plane proves itself in the air.

President vows to end divisions of East-West

By TERENCE HUNT
AP White House Correspondence

LEIDEN, Netherlands (AP) — President Bush rang the curtain down on his European odyssey today vowing to end East-West divisions and predicting that "ultimately, whatever the odds, freedom will succeed."

Bush spoke hopefully of the prospects for political and economic reforms throughout Eastern Europe in a speech prepared for delivery in this historic North Sea city where Rembrandt worked. Hugo Grotius formulated theories of international law and the Pilgrims sought exile before sailing for the New World.

"The challenge we face is clear," Bush said. "We must work together toward the day when all of Europe, East and West, is free of discord, free of division."

Bush arrived in the Netherlands, the last stop on his 10-day European tour, after visiting Poland and Hungary and attending economic summit talks in Paris, where the seven richest industrial democracies received a proposal by Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev for integrating the Soviet economy with that of the West.

Saying that dramatic changes were under way in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union, Bush cited Gorbachev's letter as "only the latest example of the Soviets' moving in our direction."

Tracing the rebuilding of Western Europe from the rubble of World War II, he said that "the 'other Europe' — the Europe behind the wall — endured four decades of privation and hardship, persecution and fear."

Said Bush: "Today that 'other Europe' is changing. The great wheel is moving once more. Our time is a time of new hope — the hope that all of Europe can now know the freedom the Netherlands has known, that America has known, that the West has known."

"Our hope is that the unnatural division of Europe will now come to an end, that the Europe behind the wall will join its neighbors to the West, prosperous and free," said Bush, making the first visit to the Netherlands by any American president.

He said Poland and Hungary are moving at the forefront of political and economic reform, traveling farther over the past year than anyone in the West

House members considering HUD investigation and budget

By STEVEN KOMAROW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House this week plans to lay out next year's budget for the Department of Housing and Urban Development even as it presses its investigation into alleged corruption at the agency.

The Senate, meanwhile, is looking overseas with work on the State Department bill.

The House subcommittee investigating the scandal in the federal housing program was to hear from Carla Hills, a former HUD chief who is now the U.S. trade representative.

In sworn testimony last week by a former HUD official, Hills was named as one of those who had intervened with the department to ease restrictions on a private lender called DRG Funding Corp.

DRG had been restricted in its participation in HUD programs because of violations of department rules. However, the restrictions were lifted in 1985 after Hills intervened with HUD Secretary Samuel Pierce.

House Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., said he doesn't want to see federal support of housing programs suffer because of the influence-peddling and other problems during the Reagan administration.

The topic is sure to come up Wednesday when the House takes up the fiscal 1990 spending bill for HUD and other agencies including the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Congress has fallen far behind schedule in its consideration of the spending bills for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1. The House was supposed to pass all 13 of them before the July Fourth recess, but only two have cleared so far.

Foley now hopes to pass the rest of them by the August recess. Three are scheduled for this week, with the agriculture and foreign operations bills slated for action in addition to the HUD bill.

The Senate last week began consideration of a State Department authorization bill.

Among the debates the bill is expected to draw this week are whether the United States should continue talks with officials of the Palestine Liberation Organization who have past links to terrorism, and whether the White House should be barred from using other countries to carry out deeds that the administration itself is barred from doing — such as what happened in the Iran-Contra scandal.

After dealing with foreign affairs, the Senate is expected to turn to the American heartland with a rural development bill. The legislation would earmark federal money for loans to rural businesses, upgrading rural water and sewer systems, and provide aid to rural schools and hospitals.

Also, negotiators from the Senate and the House continue efforts to forge a compromise bill to bail out the savings and loan industry.

The House-Senate conference has tentatively agreed to adopt the most stringent features from the separate legislation passed by each chamber, in hopes of preventing a recurrence of the current troubles which are costing taxpayers tens of billions of dollars.

The two chambers were still wrestling last week with differences over how to finance the thrift industry bailout and how to structure the new regulatory system.

How to prevent flag-burning will be discussed as a House panel continues hearings on ways to overcome a Supreme Court ruling that upheld the legality of flag-burning as a form of political protest.

Constitutional experts and veterans' groups are scheduled to testify this week before the constitutional law subcommittee.

The House ethics committee, which took a breather after its probe forced the resignation last month of Speaker Jim Wright, is expected to meet this week to consider the case of Wright's chief accuser, Rep. Newt Gingrich of Georgia.

Gingrich, now the No. 2 Republican in the House, is accused of violating House rules when he formed a partnership to promote his book with people who had an interest in legislation. The ethics committee has not yet decided whether to launch a formal inquiry into the matter.

Nunn said Friday. "It is far too expensive to be a stealth taxi."

Its maiden flight had been scheduled Saturday, but a low fuel pressure gauge reading aborted the flight.

The B-2 was to fly to nearby Edwards Air Force Base after performing test maneuvers over the Mojave Desert.

cated in the desert 40 miles north of downtown Los Angeles.

The sinister-looking jet raced down an 11,000-foot runway at the secretive Air Force Plant 42 and lifted off at 6:37 a.m., with two F-16 fighter jets giving chase through the still and cloudless desert sky.

The plane's landing gear remained down during the early stages of the flight.

After Saturday's flight was canceled, workers checked the aircraft and discovered a problem in a device called the heat exchanger in the bomber's fuel system. The problem was fixed, but no other details were available, said Air Force Lt. Col. Jerry Ferguson.

So-called stealth technology combines advanced materials and a special shape to create a plane undetected by enemy radar. Though the bomber is still being developed, stealth fighters have operated several years.

Saturday's delay resulted after a low fuel pressure reading on one of the advanced bomber's gauges caused concerns.

Also hampering Saturday's planned launch was a small aircraft that strayed into the airspace at the site and made a surprise landing. The Cessna 182 contained a family that had lost its way in the California desert.

The Cessna landing, however, played no role in Saturday's delay, officials said.

man said. "I look forward to coming back next year."

And with good reason. In addition to winning the bull riding two years in a row, Barnes' score made him high money winner for the entire rodeo, an honor that was recognized when he was presented a handsome set of luggage after his event.

The Saturday night crowd also got another treat as they were entertained by a precision drill from the nationally famous Santa Rosa Palomino Riding Club of Vernon.

Riding palominos, members of the club executed perfectly timed exercises, many of them done at a full gallop.

Rodeo directors made a last-minute change in the schedule to include the Santa Rosa club in place of women's bareback bronc riding when all three contestants in that event pulled out to attend a women's rodeo in California.

But no one seemed to miss the women. Credit that to the thrilling moves of Santa Rosa members as their showing earned the first standing ovation of the rodeo.

It also primed local rodeo fans for the 1990 ver-

Norwegians protest alleged Soviet nuclear sub accident

By DOUG MELLGREN
 Associated Press Writer

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Smoke was spotted pouring out of a Soviet nuclear submarine off Norway but Soviet officials said today that no fire had occurred. Norway voiced skepticism and protested the incident.

Norway maintained that the ship may have been on fire and criticized what it said was Soviet failure to warn it of a possible radiation threat. The Soviets said the Norwegians mistook diesel exhaust for smoke.

"We must note what the Soviets said, but stick by our original statement about indications of a possible fire," Defense Ministry spokesman Erik Senstad said today.

The Alfa-class ship was spotted pouring smoke from its observation tower Sunday and was being towed by a Soviet tugboat, Senstad said.

In response to a diplomatic query, Soviet officials said Sunday that the smoke was part of an exercise and that the submarine had never been in trouble, said acting Foreign Ministry spokesman Oeyvind Nordsetten.

Today, Soviet Defense Minister Dmitri Yazov denied there had been a fire and said the Norwegians had mistaken diesel exhausts for a blaze, the official Tass news agency reported.

Yazov said the submarine had been on a combat training mission and was shifting its power load to a battery when "one of the cells was short-circuited ...

"The submarine surfaced. Its diesel engines were fired and produced the exhaust," he said. "There were no accidents or other emergencies."

The Norwegian state television station NRK showed the submarine cruising swiftly under its own power and reported no outward signs of an accident.

The ship was sighted by the Norwegian research vessel Mariatta in the Barents Sea about 75 miles east of the Norwegian town of Vardo and north of the Kola Peninsula.

Senstad said the submarine may have reached a Soviet Northern Fleet base on the Kola Peninsula today. Norway had no information of casualties on board or damage to the ship's reactors.

President

once thought possible.

Delivering the last major speech of his European trip, Bush spoke to an audience in Pieterskerk, the Church of St. Peter, a huge cathedral dating to the early 12th century, after conferring with leaders in The Hague, the nearby seat of the Dutch government.

The president said that during his visits in Eastern Europe, he heard "new voices full of new hope. Their were the faces of pilgrims on a journey, fixed on the horizon, on the new world coming into view.

"And they know, as we do, that ultimately, whatever the odds, freedom will succeed," he said.

Leiden is the community where religious dissidents from England took refuge before they sailed seeking freedom in America. The remains of the Rev. John Robinson, a Pilgrim leader, is buried in the cathedral where Bush spoke.

"Here in Leiden, where the Pilgrims dreamed their new world, let us pledge our effort to create a new world in Europe, whole and free, a new world now within our reach," he said.

In this nation where protecting the environment is a major issue, Bush noted that the economic summit leaders focused for the first time this year on such problems as global warming, acid rain and ocean pollution.

Bush said pollution respects no national boundaries. "It's time for nations to join forces in common defense of our environment," he said. "The United States will do its part."

Bush delivered his address after receiving a 21-gun salute at an airport arrival ceremony in Amsterdam and having tea with Queen Beatrix at Noordeinde Palace at The Hague and meeting with Prime Minister Ruud Lubbers.

The Netherlands, the first nation to establish ties with America in 1782, is a staunch NATO ally that braved fierce public opposition in agreeing to accept the basing of nuclear-tipped cruise missiles in 1985. The missiles were never deployed as a result of the 1987 U.S.-Soviet treaty abolishing the medium-range weapons.

Bush held nearly an hour of talks at the Parliament with Lubbers, whose center-right coalition government collapsed in May over the financing of an environmental cleanup campaign, and was thrown into a caretaker status pending elections Sept. 6.

Dutch politicians described Bush's visit as a "pat on the back" for a loyal NATO ally. The president returns to Washington on Tuesday.

Texans joining in market venture with Soviet space agency

By SYDNEY RUBIN
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP) — To meet growing demand for satellite launch services, a new deal has been struck between two great superpowers — the Soviet Union and Texas.

A joint venture agreement gives a group of Texas entrepreneurs exclusive rights to market products and services of the Soviet space agency, Glavkosmos, in the United States.

"The Soviets couldn't be nicer. You couldn't ask for better bunch of partners," said Buck Hightower, a founder of the Houston-based Space Commerce Corp., which is selling everything from official Glavkosmos T-shirts to launch services for U.S. satellite companies wanting to hitch a ride on a Soviet Proton rocket.

selves doing business on Red Square.

"We were trying to sell some idle oilfield equipment to the Soviets," Hightower said, adding that the Texas good 'ol' boy network led him to Arthur Dula, a Houston aerospace attorney and former NASA consultant who had broad Moscow contacts. "We got to know the neighbors."

Glasnost was booming, U.S. rocket companies were unable to meet American business' demand for launch services, "so we decided to engage in a little creative international trade," Hightower said.

They rang Alexandr Dunayev, head of Glavkosmos, "who thought it was a fine idea," Hightower said. The high sheriffs at the U.S. State Department weren't so sure.

Dula, now president of Space Commerce, wanted the Soviet rocket to blast off from a U.S. site carrying the first payload, two communications satellites for Hughes Aircraft.

The State Department said no way.

The Texans then decided to launch from the Soviet Union. Under the Reagan administration, the State Department denied an export license to Hughes.

Under the Bush administration, the Texans have found a more receptive State Department and they plan to apply for another export license soon, Dula said in a telephone interview from Houston this past week.

If the license is denied again, his Texas company will launch the Soviet rocket from another country such as Australia or Brazil and will haul a payload containing no American parts. The fee for a ride on the Red rocket is about $30 million.

Besides T-shirts and rockets, Space Commerce also offers a range of other Soviet space agency services, including navigational aids and flights aboard the space station Mir.

Moreover, Space Commerce can write contracts for advertisers who want to proclaim their product or service on the side of a Soviet rocket. The Soviets disclosed recently that they want to exploit commercial opportunities that their space program has created, including putting ads in space, seen by millions of television viewers during blazt-offs.

In addition, Space Commerce soon plans to conduct tours to Soviet space facilities never before open to the public — American or Soviet.

Tourists will be able to visit the Mission Control Center at Kaliningrad near Moscow, or Star City, where cosmonauts train, with sidetrips to the Bolshoi Ballet and the Moscow Circus.

"Our feeling is that there must be a place in the world economy for the Soviet Union," said Hightower, who also heads an Austin property development company.

During the air show last month, the Space Commerce partners did a brisk business selling T-shirts, mostly to American visitors.

Approached quietly by a gray-haired man in a business suit, partner Robert R. Brandes said: "No sir, just T-shirts here. The back part is where they're selling the rockets."

'Miracle' pilot uncertain about what happened

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. (AP) — Washington attorney Thomas Root said he doesn't know how he passed out during his 800-mile flight down the East coast, and blamed his bullet wound on a gun he said discharged when his small plane crashed in the ocean.

In an bedside interview published today in The Washington Post, Root denied he had been attempting to commit suicide, and said he has become the victim of innuendo as his story mushroomed.

"I'm shocked. I can't understand why this story has blown up there, beyond the admittedly unusual circumstances, to end up being a front-page story like this," said Root, listed in stable condition Sunday at Hollywood's Memorial Hospital.

After the four-hour flight on autopilot Thursday, the crash into Bahamian waters, and his rescue by Air Force parajumpers, Root's survival was called miraculous. But the subsequent discovery of a gunshot wound to his abdomen led to suspicion he hadn't meant to survive.

"As I was swimming around out there, hurting a lot, I was thinking about my family and that I wasn't going to see them again," he told the Post. "And I say that to say that I don't think I have the ability, nerve or stupidity to take another life — mine or anyone else's."

Root said he did not know what had caused him to pass out during the flight but confirmed federal investigators' account of his losing oxygen, possibly from carbon monoxide leaking into the cabin.

Refuting reports that he was put on a list of suspected drug smugglers by federal authorities after trips to the Caribbean, the 36-year-old Alexandria, Va., resident also said he had never dealt in drugs and had never even taken his plane outside of the United States.

Root talked Saturday with a National Transportation Safety Board air safety investigator and an FBI agent. NTSB investigator Andrew Alston said he didn't have reason to dispute Root's version of events, but that investigators in several places will try to determine whether evidence matches Root's story.

Alston said investigators were questioning Root's claim he doesn't remember the gunshot, which initial tests indicate was at very close range.

Root has suggested that a .32-caliber Smith & Wesson revolver he kept loaded in the glove compartment fell out and fired when his single-engine Cessna ditched.

Root said the gun could not have fired earlier in the flight because he would have lost too much blood before the plane dived.

But Capt. James Rahman, the Coast Guard flight surgeon who treated him soon after the crash, said Root showed symptoms of peritonitis, which he said would prove he was shot at least two hours before the plane hit water.

Root's explanation will be checked in further tests and discussions with firearms experts and the gun's manufacturer, Alston said.

State officials like idea of summit in Texas

By The Associated Press

President Bush's suggestion Sunday that Texas would be a good site for next year's international economic summit sounded like a good idea to Texas officials.

"Texas is a state of international importance and for the president to bring the leaders of the free world to his home state is a brilliant idea," said Gov. Bill Clements through his spokesman Reggie Bashur.

"I think that's a great idea," said state House Speaker Gib Lewis, who suggested that his hometown would be the perfect site for a global meeting.

"I think Fort Worth, Texas, would be a super city," Lewis said.

At the end of the Paris summit Sunday, the president refused to Hot air balloon crash kills one

HOUSTON (AP) — A Houston balloonist who died when his hot air balloon struck a power line and burst into flames considered his sport safe, his former wife said.

Oliver Martin Sell, 58, a hot air balloon enthusiast for eight years, died in the Sunday morning accident, authorities and witnesses said. A companion in the balloon was reported in extremely critical condition this morning, a hospital spokeswoman said.

"I hope what has happened is not construed to make it seem like ballooning is a dangerous sport because he never thought of it as dangerous," Sharon Sell said. "He believed it was safe and worked to make it safe. It was his great love."

Federal Aviation Administration investigators had not yet determined an exact cause of the accident, but sheriff's investigators at the scene said the balloon was severed from the wicker gondola by the impact with the power line.

Harris County Sheriff's Capt. D.E. Doehring said a line leading from the balloon's propane tanks may have sprayed flames all over Sell and his companion when the line was dislodged. The companion, whose name had not yet been released, was flown by Life Flight Helicopter to Herman Hospital with third-degree burns over 95 percent of his body, said hospital spokeswoman Barbara Cafferty.

Harris County Sheriff's Department spokesman Tom Twardowsky said the accident near Highway 6 was witnessed by several people around 9 a.m. Sunday.

Leldon Want Jr., 26, said he was working at a construction site nearby when he heard a loud noise and saw the balloon just after it hit the 40-foot power line. Want pulled the companion from the flaming gondola after it toppled to the ground.

"We went over there and asked him if he could walk," he told the Houston Chronicle. "I got him up and kept talking to him, so he wouldn't go into shock. His helmet (a plastic one used by bicyclists) was burned and melted around his head. He was burned all over his body."

Summit leaders sketch out plans, leave details to others

By SALLY JACOBSEN
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP) — The world's seven industrial giants agree on broad plans to clean up the global environment, fight drug trafficking and ease the debt burden of poor nations, but they are leaving it to others to fill in the details.

President Bush and the other leaders Sunday ended their two-day summit earlier than expected and congratulated themselves on how well they had worked together.

"The summit, in my view, was a clear success," Bush told reporters at a news conference on the manicured grounds of the U.S. ambassador's residence in Paris.

Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, attending his fifth conference, said it was "the one that achieved the largest degree of consensus."

"It was a splendid summit," gushed first-time participant Sousuke Uno, Japan's embattled prime minister.

And Britain's prime minister, Margaret Thatcher, dismissed reports she had been snubbed by the French whose birthday bash for the 200th anniversary of their revolution coincided with the summit.

"Indeed, I have received every attention," she insisted.

The leaders' talks, held annually since 1975 to examine the economies' health, were nearly overshadowed by Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, who sent a surprise letter urging more East-West cooperation on economic issues.

Bush said the letter, addressed to French President Francois Mitterrand, caught the leaders' attention. "It was just one more manifestation of the changing world we're living in," Bush said. West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl said he was pleased the Kremlin chief recognized "the responsibility of the Soviet Union in resolving world economic problems."

The summiteers — representing the United States, Canada, France, Britain, Germany, Italy and Japan — picked up on growing public worries about polluted air, water and land and devoted about a third of their final 22-page statement to the environment.

"Decisive action," they said, "is urgently needed to understand and protect the earth's ecological balance."

They condemned dumping wastes in the oceans, spilling oil in the seas and stripping forests of trees. They worried that excessive emissions of carbon dioxide and other gases could change the world's climate.

She said the main benefit to the city would be the international exposure.

"I am going to be pursuing this issue with Secretary Mosbacher and Secretary Baker because I think they share my view that Houston would be a natural."

State Sen. J.E. "Buster" Brown, who represents a district near Houston, also applauded the president's suggestion, noting that the oil bust has left the state suffering economically.

Houston Chamber of Commerce President Eileen Crowley said she knew of no organized effort to attract the international economic summit to Houston, but added that Bush may have provided all the incentive the city needed Sunday.

With his new freedom, Adams on speaking trail

By ROBERT DVORCHAK
AP National Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Randall Dale Adams refuses to let bitterness spoil his enjoyment of freedom, even though he served 12½ years in prison and came within three days of being executed for a murder he didn't commit.

"I hate what happened," said Adams, 40, freed in March from a Texas prison after an appeals court set aside his conviction. "But each day is like being granted another day to walk upon the Earth and bring peace to my family."

"If I did hold feelings of bitterness or revenge, I will ruin whatever future I do have. If you come within three days of being executed, you better know who you are and you better throw your animosities out the window."

Adams was convicted in the 1976 shooting death of a Dallas police officer. The case was documented in the film The Thin Blue Line, which questioned the testimony of prosecution witnesses including David Ray Harris, who is on death row in Texas for another killing. In the film, Harris virtually confessed to the 1976 shooting.

Adams bears no hatred toward Harris, saying: "I wish him no harm, but I wish him no luck in life."

After the movie was released, a state appeals court overturned the conviction and Texas authorities dropped the murder charge instead of retrying Adams, who moved to Columbus, Ohio.

"The film proves beyond a shadow of a doubt I did not receive a fair trial," he said. "It's like watching a bad dream or the last chapter of The Twilight Zone."

In his 3½ months of freedom, Adams has lectured and appeared on television shows such as 60 Minutes, Donahue and Geraldo. He is planning a speaking tour on college campuses this fall while he mulls job offers.

"This is a case and a story that must be held before the public. I want to live my life one day at a time and take the hurt out of my family's eyes as much as possible," Adams said in New York on Thursday. The same day, he addressed a Cincinnati seminar on the death penalty.

Despite his experience, Adams favors capital punishment, although he thinks lethal injection is more humane than the electric chair he faced. "I would not want to look like yesterday's bacon," he said.

Any future books or movies hinge on the outcome of a lawsuit he filed in June against Errol Morris, the producer of the The Thin Blue Line.

While he was in prison and the movie was being made, Adams accepted a nominal fee of $10 and would have received payments Morris said would have been "in the neighborhood of six figures" if a TV movie or book were forthcoming.

Adams' suit, which he called an injunction, asked the courts to declare that he owns his story. His attorney, Randy Schaeffer, said a settlement has been reached but the papers have not been signed.

"I'm perfectly happy to discharge him from the agreement and give him the rights back if that's what he wishes," Morris said from his Cambridge, Mass., home. "To say that the rights to his life story were purchased lock, stock and barrel for $10 is not true. I didn't become involved in this movie to make money. I wanted to right a terrible injustice in the courts."

Morris said no one was paid to appear in the $1 million movie. He has appeared at a benefit for Adams in Ohio, and has donated the film for screenings. He still has $100,000 in debt from the film.

"He talk about it like it's Batman or Ghostbusters II. I think it's unfortunate this happened," Morris said of the lawsuit.

For his part, Adams said he didn't want to appear ungrateful for Morris' part in freeing him from prison. But he wanted a legal declaration so there would be no dispute about who owns the story rights.

"It got blown out of proportion. Just let my family have the right to say yea or nay on any future project. I'm not suing Errol Morris."

Does your job affect your hearing?

It's a fact. Excessive noise on the job can damage your hearing. And in recent years, hearing impairments among industrial employees have been growing at an alarming rate!

When Lang's engineers studied this problem, they discovered two things. One, that these losses were specific in the high frequency range. And two, that conventional hearing aids did not provide the specialized help needed to effectively treat such losses.

With this in mind, Lang developed the HF 2000—the ultimate attack on industrial loss. The custom designed HF 2000 is the most natural sounding aid on the market today. Its all-in-the-ear construction provides a perfect fit, for maximum comfort.

If you suspect a hearing loss from excessive on-the-job noise, ask us about the HF 2000—the aid made especially for today's industrial worker!

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Campaign reform needs free speech

Both President Bush and the Democratic leadership in Congress have proposed campaign reforms. But neither proposal recognizes the essential truth about campaign tactics and spending: that they are, when you get down to it, a free-speech issue.

If what is said during a process that presumably results in free elections of our leaders is not protected by the First Amendment, then what speech deserves those protections?

True campaign reform would lift the limits on campaign contributions imposed in 1974; those limits currently stand at $1,000 per campaign to a candidate or $5,000 per year to a Political Action Committee. The result of the 1974 law has been to freeze incumbents into their posts. The reason is that, unlike challengers, incumbents get taxpayer-funded "free" mailing (franking) and free TV publicity, among other benefits. A challenger finds it difficult to surmount such difficulties.

A second good reform would be to limit congressional terms to two for the Senate (12 years) and five for the House (10 years), just as we limit the president's tenure to eight years. This would prevent congressmen from becoming satraps beholden only to the Washington special interests and disdainful of the folks who elected them.

Bush wants to limit the franking privilege. Congressmen could use taxpayer-funded postage only when replying to constituents. Bush also opposes a Democratic proposal for public funding of congressional campaigns, but doesn't oppose the existing funding of presidential campaigns.

Bush's partisanship shows in his proposal to eliminate most Political Action Committees, including those run by corporations, unions or trade associations; and to reduce PACs' contributions from $5,000 to $2,500. This is a clear attack on their right to free speech. Further, Bush proposes increasing congressional pay by 25 percent, despite the clear opposition Americans showed earlier this year to any government pay raise.

The Democrats' biggest bad idea is to limit overall campaign spending, which, again, arbitrarily limits candidates' ability to disseminate their message, a violation of free-speech rights and especially unfair to those candidates challenging the Democrats' grip on Congress.

America's founding fathers established a campaign system based on complete free speech for incumbents, challengers and all citizens. The only worthy reforms return us to that system.

Berry's World

OKAY, MR. STATE POLITICIAN, HOW DO YOU STAND ON THE ABORTION QUESTION?

WELL, NOW-ER-LET'S SEE! WHICH WAY IS THE WIND BLOWING?

© 1989 by NEA, Inc. Jim Berry

This court's term was a lulu

WASHINGTON — You would have to look back more than 50 years, to the term of 1935-36, to find a term of the U.S. Supreme Court that even approaches in dramatic impact the term that ended with a bang two weeks ago. Like it or loathe it, this term was a lulu.

There are similarities in the sessions of 1935-36 and 1988-89, and there is one significant difference. Then, as now, the court was dominated by a conservative bloc — Van Devanter, McReynolds, Sutherland and Butler in the 1930s, and Rehnquist, White, Scalia and Kennedy today. Fifty-odd years ago Owen Roberts provided a swing vote; Sandra Day O'Connor often performs that function now.

The Hughes court of 1935-36 declared virtual war upon the liberal policies of Franklin Roosevelt. It toppled the Agricultural Adjustment Act, overturned the Guffey Coal Act, barely upheld the Tennessee Valley Authority and nullified a New York law fixing a minimum wage for women. It was a term of rancorous dissents and bitter divisions.

What now? It might be said that nothing much happened in the term that ended on July 3. Nothing at all. The court merely dived into abortion, religion, obscenity, race relations, capital punishment, drug testing, sex discrimination and the burning of the American flag.

The court approved helicopter surveillance of private property. It granted immunity to public social workers in a case of private child abuse. It walloped the states with a ruling on taxation of retirement benefits. It approved massive punitive benefits in liability cases. What a term!

There was a similarity also: The justices that were generally collegial in 1987-88 were bitterly divided in the term just ended. The court divided in 94 cases, 34 of them by votes of 5-4. Justice Brennan dissented 51 times, Justice Marshall 53 times.

The brethren and their sister made little attempt to conceal their feelings. Scalia accused his colleagues at one point of "immolating privacy and human dignity" and "coarsening our national manners." He began his dissent in a Texas taxation case in this friendly fashion: "As a judicial demolition project, today's decision is impressive."

Marshall castigated the conservative bloc for "eviscerating the First Amendment." Brennan found the majority's reasoning "unfair, unwise, impetuous, distorted, and nothing short of astonishing." In the abortion case Blackmun wrote one of the most savage dissents in Supreme Court history; earlier he charged the conservatives with forgetting that racial discrimination ever had existed.

The difference? Ah, the difference is not in the court or the cases. The difference this time is in the White House. Roosevelt had only to be patient, to bide his time, and he was able to be rid of such troublesome old fellows as Van Devanter (replaced by Black), Sutherland (replaced by Reed) and Butler (replaced by Murphy).

The prospect under President Bush is strikingly different. Justice Brennan was 83 in April, Justice Marshall turned 81 on July 2, and Justice Blackmun will reach 81 in November. The three unreconstructed liberals might serve as long as Oliver Wendell Holmes, who retired at 91, but the probabilities are against it.

If any one of them should be replaced by a justice sharing the philosophy of Scalia and Kennedy, a conservative bloc will be shaping the Constitution into the next century.

In some ways the past term was unexceptional. Thirty cases saw unanimous rulings; another 21 saw no dissent as such. This is about par. Justice White again established his place as the workhorse of the court: He wrote 18 of the 134 signed opinions. Justices Stevens and Brennan each wrote 16. White and Blackmun sat in all the cases; the other seven recused at least once.

The liberal bloc, as usual, was more solid than the conservative side. Justices Brennan and Marshall disagreed only three times in the entire term. By contrast, conservatives Rehnquist and Kennedy split 13 times; Rehnquist and O'Connor went separate ways in 12 cases.

One regrettable trend appeared to intensify. The nine justices more and more often wind up all spraddled out. By my count, 139 "concurring" votes were cast during the term. Hairs were split by micrometer calipers. In a case involving capital punishment of retarded persons, all nine got into the act.

Back in the 1920s Holmes wrote his opinions with such brevity that they rarely exceeded two pages in the Supreme Court Reports. It is a loquacious bunch on the high court now. They will be back in October, and what do you know? Abortion will be back again too.

Repairing our wounded planet

Suppose we could take all the trash that threatens to bury us alive ...

Suppose all of it — corn flakes boxes and junked refrigerators and old tires and glass bottles — could be ground up and treated and returned to the soil whence it came as compost.

And suppose that compost contained 24 mineral elements — including 17 that have been established as essential for growing things.

If we can accomplish that — economically — maybe we can repair our wounded planet.

Howard Burr says we can. He is presently building an Agripost facility in Dade County, Fla., which promises to produce Agrisoil by November.

Converting trash to energy proved prohibitively costly, but converting trash to fertilizer has already been demonstrated to be feasible.

With an initial facility near Pittsburgh and a subsequent one in Jamaica, Burr has demonstrated that garbage and trash can become "rich soil" in 21 days.

We have to do something. Presently we're dumping solid waste into landfills. Two thousand of those are almost full and 3,000 have already overflowed, been closed.

Incinerators generate dangerous gases and still leave residue requiring dumping.

Agripost promises to grind, decompose and pasteurize that stuff — creating a stable, odorless, pathogen-free fertilizer and soil conditioner.

The $25-million Dade County facility promises to "digest" 800 tons of waste per day — converting 95 percent of it to marketable fertilizer, soil conditioner or potting soil.

Agrisoil made at the Jamaica plant has already been used to beautify the lawns and gardens of Disney World. This new facility will receive from the county an annual fee of $6 million for "getting rid of the trash" while turning out a product for which farms, nurseries and golf courses will pay.

Coming and going, trash can be profitable.

Already other counties in Florida and elsewhere are contemplating Agripost plants of their own.

The process, invented by Burr, involves grinding trash into four- or five-inch pieces. The garbage then proceeds through several other grinders that progressively chop it into smaller and smaller pieces.

Along the way the garbage is sprayed with chemicals that promote aerobic decomposition. This prevents unpleasant odors as the waste decomposes.

The specially treated, ground-up garbage is piled into long rows by bulldozers in an enclosed building about 400 by 600 feet.

The piles are probed to be sure the temperature is high enough to kill any bacteria and the moisture remains at optimum level.

Dozers turn the piles daily so the waste decomposes evenly.

After 21 days the worthless trash is converted back into minerals, oxides and sand-like particles — Agrisoil.

Thus, with an assist from technology, nature's cycle is complete.

Let's hope we try to 'do the right thing'

By CHUCK STONE

"It is a peculiar sensation, this double consciousness, this sense of always looking at one's self through the eyes of others." W.E.B. Du Bois wrote, in describing the Negro's dual identity as a black and an American.

Eighty-six years later, Spike Lee has produced a double-consciousness movie for both races — a disconcerting allegory for whites and a high-five rap for blacks.

If you're white, you will either love "Do the Right Thing" for its cinematic grandeur or hate it for its revolutionary threat. If you're black, you will either revel in the way the movie gets down or dismiss it as one-dimensional fictional jive.

I dug the movie. "Do the Right Thing" is not so much a story as it is a series of vignettes during one day, a black replication of James Joyce's "Bloomsday" in "Ulysses."

Spike Lee weaves a string of characters in his tapestry, counterpointed by three outrageously funny street-corner philosophers. They are the ghetto's Greek chorus. And how they do carry on, "sellin' wolf tickets" (conning people by shooting off your mouth) and shuckin' and jivin'.

About midpoint in the movie, its different levels of double consciousness suddenly struck me — black-white tensions, black-black discords, white-white conflicts.

"I'm sicka niggahs," grouses the irrationally racist Pino, son of Sal, the owner of the local pizzeria.

"These people grew up on my food," Sal replies soothingly.

Buggin' Out, who spouts black nationalist rhetoric and sports a grotesque haircut, asks the three philosophers to boycott the Italian-owned pizzeria.

"Hell no!" disdainfully snorts one of the philosophers who boasts a hip phallic nickname. "You ought to boycott that barber that (messed) up your head."

Lee, who wrote, produced and directed "Do the Right Thing" did only one wrong thing — deciding to act in his movie. His character, Mookie, the delivery boy for Sal's pizzeria, has all of the thespian pizzazz of a two-day-old pizza.

But as director, Lee is pure genius with subtleties that define the distances in the black-white symbiosis.

As the movie opens, a saxophone mournfully wails, "Lift Every Voice and Sing" (the black national anthem)... Mookie starts out wearing a Dodgers shirt with Jackie Robinson's number, 42 (most white critics miss this), but later changes to Sal's Italian tricolor (red, green and white)... One loud-talking street dude wears a Lakers shirt, but a white man who has just bought a brownstone on the block is wearing a Celtics shirt with "Bird" on the back... An off-camera voice recites the names of black heroes (persons either killed by New York City police or white gangs).

Lee relentlessly pursues paradox. Radio Raheem, a dim-witted hulk who carries a monstrous boom box, suffers the same fate as America's most prominent advocate of non-violence, Martin Luther King Jr.... The two racial moderates, Sal and Mookie, commit two violent acts that lead to the tragic denouement.

Ossie Davis, who turns in an uncanny performance as "Da Mayor," struggles to rise above his perpetual alcoholic haze with thoughtful aphorisms. As Mookie walks by, a bleary-eyed Da Mayor looks up and urges, "Do the right thing."

What is the right thing? King's advocacy of non-violence or Malcolm X's "be peaceful ... but if someone puts a hand on you, send him to the cemetery?"

Neither happens in "Do the Right Thing" and the real enemy, in this instance the police, is never punished. How times change. Yesterday, white America was nervous about a political Jesse Jackson. Now, it is confronted with a modern-day Martin Luther, a dissident black Catholic priest named Father James A. Stallings Jr., and a revolutionary filmmaker named Spike Lee.

To at least try to understand the double consciousness of both is to "do the right thing."

More violence breaks out in Soviet Georgia

By BRYAN BRUMLEY
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP)—Troops today patrolled a tense region of the republic of Georgia to prevent new outbreaks of ethnic violence after rioting in which 14 people were killed at least 127 injured, Soviet news reports said today.

The fighting broke out Saturday night and lasted into early Sunday in the Black Sea city of Sukhumi, capital of the Abkhazian Autonomous Republic, Tass said. The region is administered by Georgia.

Said Tarkil, ideology secretary for Abkhazia, said Abkhazians were protesting a decision by the Georgian government to restrict the number of Abkhazians enrolled at the city's branch of Tbilisi State University.

Abkhazians, outnumbered by both Georgians and Russians in their homeland, have protested alleged discrimination in the past.

Georgia also decided to separate the Sukhumi branch from the other campuses, Tarkil said in a telephone interview from Sukhumi, 900 miles south of Moscow.

"The Abkhazian side is against this. It is inadmissible to divide a university according to nationalities," Tarkil said, adding that a commission from the national parliament also opposed the division of the university.

Tarkil said that the fighting raged over a large part of the city and involved not only students, "but all segments of the population."

The Tass report said "measures are being taken to render help to those wounded, to restore public order and tranquility. The situation is now being controlled by police and troops of the Interior Ministry," which runs the national police force.

Tass said Sunday that 11 people died and 127 were hurt in the weekend fighting. It did not specify the nationalities of the victims or give their names. The Georgian news agency Gruzinform today said the death toll was at 14.

"In the clashes, stones, sticks, firearms and cold steel were used," said a joint report by Tass and Gruzinform.

Gruzinform said police and military units were patrolling the city and adjoining areas. "The situation is tense," an employee of the news agency said in a telephone call.

The senior official in Georgia, Communist Party First Secretary Givi Gumaridze, rushed to Abkhazia along with law enforcement officials seeking to restore order.

Party and government officials "appealed to the population to be rational and responsible and assist law enforcement authorities in stabilizing the situation," the report said.

Abkhazia, a region of 535,000 people, lies along the Black Sea coast in the Caucasus Mountains of the southern Soviet Union, adjacent Turkey. Abkhazians in the region number 91,000.

The weekend fighting is the latest in a series of ethnic disputes and other unrest since Mikhail S. Gorbachev came to power in 1985, bringing a greater tolerance of dissent.

Drug cult has possible links with Chicago mob, agents say

BROWNSVILLE (AP)—Narcotics and money-laundering schemes may link Chicago mob bosses to a cult-influenced drug ring blamed for 15 slayings near the United States-Mexico border, federal agents said.

"We can acknowledge we are looking into a relationship, but I really can't go into any details," said Charles Harrison, assistant special agent in charge of the U.S. Customs regional office in Houston. "It's an ongoing investigation."

In a copyright story, The Brownsville Herald reported Sunday that Harrison's agency is investigating a possible relationship between Chicago organized crime leaders and the Matamoros, Mexico, cult ring.

The Herald reported that an extensive investigation is under way into a possible narcotics and money laundering enterprise involving the cult figures, a Chicago-based crime syndicate and Manuel "Poncho" Jaramillo of Mission. The newspaper cited court transcripts, indictments, affidavits and police records filed in drug and racketeering cases from South Texas to Illinois.

Jaramillo's Houston attorney, Dennis Yates, called drug and racketeering allegations against his client "harassment."

"Those accusations, as far as we're concerned, are absolutely untrue," Yates said. "They aren't substantiated, they have not been substantiated and they never will be substantiated."

Among Jaramillo's associates are Albert Caesar Tocco, a reputed Chicago mob boss arrested in January by FBI agents and charged in a 48-count federal racketeering indictment, according to the Herald.

Other Jaramillo associates include members of the Matamoros-based Hernandez family, which Mexican and American agents believe was central to a gruesome cult accused of killing 15 people, federal investigators said. Police have said some of the cult's victims were sacrificed in rituals aimed at protecting a narcotics ring.

Mexican Federal Judicial Police arrested Serafin Hernandez Garcia, 22, and his uncle Elio Hernandez Rivera, 22, during an April 9 drug raid at the family's ranch close to the Rio Grande near Matamoros. Authorities unearthed 13 bodies and discovered remnants of ritual slayings.

Another two victims later were found on a nearby ranch.

U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration agents in Houston arrested Serafin Hernandez Rivera, the 45-year-old brother of Elio, on April 17. He is the only suspect in the case in custody in the United States. He is scheduled for trial this summer in Brownsville on drug and gun charges. Another brother, 26-year-old Ovidio Hernandez Rivera, remains at large.

Police have said the organization smuggled tons of marijuana and cocaine into the United States.

Michael Habiniak, 37, of Harlingen is a principal figure in the South Texas-Chicago investigation, the Herald reported. Habiniak was convicted Jan. 11 in Corpus Christi on federal charges of conspiracy and possession with intent to distribute marijuana on board a U.S. vessel under American jurisdiction.

Customs agents on Aug. 20, 1988, arrested Habiniak on a boat in the Gulf Intracoastal Waterway and confiscated 597 pounds of marijuana.

A government motion filed in Habiniak's case states, "Investigation by U.S. Customs has revealed a criminal enterprise connection between some of (Habiniak's) associates in the Rio Grande Valley and in Chicago, Illinois, with Albert Caesar Tocco of the Accardo organized crime family."

An investigation by the customs office in Corpus Christi revealed Habiniak was a business partner of Ramona A. Jaramillo (Manuel Jaramillo's wife at the time) in the Texas-based corporation La Esperanza Mining Co.

A week before Habiniak's arrest on the waterway near Port Mansfield, Ovidio Hernandez' relatives reported Hernandez and his 2-year-old son had been kidnapped from the Amigoland Mall parking lot in Brownsville.

His kidnapers demanded a ransom of $800,000, an amount police later learned Ovidio and his brothers had stolen from the suspected culprits in a drug deal gone sour, according to Brownsville Police Department reports and court records in the Habiniak case.

JOINT PROBLEM, MUSCLE PAIN

If you've developed symptoms that make you think you have arthritis, it would be wise to have an examination to see if the muscles in the affected area are out of balance.

Muscles help keep a joint stable and assist it through its normal range of motion. But if the muscles on one side of the joint are weak, this puts a strain on the joint. It may also cause arthritic-like symptoms.

The doctor of Chiropractic will test the muscles to determine their balance and strength. He will also evaluate nerve patterns and may take an x-ray to study the joint structure involved. Perhaps some laboratory procedures will also be needed.

If the problem is in the muscles around the joint, treatment can be given to strengthen and return them to proper balance. Once this is achieved, the arthritic-like pain and discomfort may be greatly relieved or eliminated.

It's been 20 years since Armstrong's 'small step for a man'

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP)—"That's one small step for a man, one giant leap for mankind."

Twenty years have passed, nearly a generation, since Neil Armstrong called those momentous words down from the moon.

Two decades since Earthlings watched those flickering television images, saw that tentative first step on the dusty surface and looked on in wonder as two Americans hopped about in weak gravity, planted and saluted their flag, picked up bits of lunar treasure and spoke with their president a quarter million miles away.

Astronauts Neil Armstrong and Buzz Aldrin — taking those first steps on the moon Sunday, July 20, 1969 — were realizing a goal that John F. Kennedy had set in frustration and desperation.

Kennedy came to office in January 1961 with a pledge to "get this country moving again." The economy was sluggish, Fidel Castro had taken over Cuba, and the United States trailed the Soviets in the highly visible arena of space.

The space chasm widened April 12, 1961, when Soviet cosmonaut Yuri A. Gagarin blasted into orbit, the first man to fly in space.

American prestige was rocked again five days later. On April 17, Cuban exiles, sponsored by the Central Intelligence Agency, stormed the beach at Cuba's Bay of Pigs in an effort to overthrow Castro. His forces routed the ill-equipped exiles, leaving the United States and its young president in shame and disarray.

Kennedy accepted the blame and decided bold action was needed to restore America's honor. Space was the answer, he concluded, and he gave Vice President Lyndon Johnson the task of determining what could be done.

On April 28, the National Aeronautics and Space Council, which Johnson chaired, issued a preliminary report: "The moon is a good target for us."

That report came even before the first U.S. man-in-space flight.

On May 5, after a three-day weather delay, astronaut Alan Shepard rode a slender Redstone rocket and a cramped Mercury capsule 115 miles up and 302 miles down the Atlantic tracking range on a 15-minute suborbital flight.

America heaved a sigh of relief. The Soviets were still ahead, but the United States was on the move.

To keep the pace going, Kennedy launched project Apollo — after the Greek archer-god, the god of light and truth, bright-shining, far-shooting.

Christopher C. Kraft Jr., who would become flight operations director for Apollo, was a NASA engineer working on the Mercury project.

"I thought he had lost his mind," Kraft said of Kennedy and his bold commitment. "We had a total of 15 minutes of manned spaceflight experience, we hadn't flown Mercury in orbit yet, and here's a guy telling me we're going to fly to the moon. ... Doing it was one thing, but doing it in this decade was to me too risky."

Despite the doubts of Kraft and others within NASA, America's biggest, costliest and most ambitious technological effort began with virtually no dissent. Before it was achieved, more than 20,000 industrial contractors and 420,000 technicians, engineers and other skilled persons would be involved.

While the hardware of Apollo was being developed and tested, Americans and Soviets were learning to live and work in space and to perfect the rockets, spaceships and techniques for going to the moon.

To a watching world, it was like a relay race in space. The Soviets, with their larger booster rockets and larger manned spacecraft, held the early lead.

John Glenn in 1962 was hailed as America's first orbital champion. Three more Mercury orbital flights proved man could survive and function for at least a short time in weightless space.

NASA moved on in 1965 to the two-man Gemini program, and 10 exciting flights in 20 months tested and proved all the rendezvous and docking and space walking procedures needed to travel to the moon.

The Soviets, too, were perfecting these techniques. But by early 1967, as the United States was ready to move into manned Apollo flights, America seemed to have a slight lead, based on superior computer and other technologies.

Then, tragedy.

In a countdown test on Jan. 27, 1967, a month before the planned launch, faulty wiring released a spark that touched off an inferno inside the Apollo 1 cabin. The flames, intensified by the 100 percent oxygen environment, incinerated the three-man crew, Gus Grissom, Ed White and Roger Chaffee.

Three months after the Apollo fire, cosmonaut Vladimir Komarov rode into orbit in a new spacecraft named Soyuz, believed to be a test model for a lunar command ship. After a day in orbit, as he returned to Earth, Soyuz 1 tumbled, became tangled in its parachute straps and crashed. Komarov became the world's first in-flight space casualty.

Apollo was reexamined, re-wired, redesigned and finally flew. Apollo 7 orbited the Earth for 11 days in October 1968, and then, in a bold move, NASA officials decided to fly the three-man Apollo 8 crew into orbit about the moon on Christmas Eve 1968.

They reasoned the flight would provide vital information about navigating around the moon and rob the Soviets of any glory they might reap by looping one man once around the backside of the moon on a translunar trajectory. There was a widely reported rumor the Soviets were ready to do that.

The mission was a huge, uplifting success, followed by two more flights, one in which two astronauts swooped to within 10 miles of the lunar surface.

Then on July 16, 1969, more than 1 million people came to watch the launch of Apollo 11 at the Kennedy Space Center. All eyes stared at the sheet of flame as the mighty Saturn 5 rose ponderously from Launch Pad 39A, precisely on schedule at 9:32 a.m., and sent a thunderclap across the scrubland.

In the spaceship on the tip of the rocket were Neil Alden Armstrong, 38, a civilian, the commander; Air Force Col. Edwin Eugene Aldrin Jr., 39, the lunar module pilot, and Air Force Lt. Col. Michael Collins, 38, the command module pilot — ambassadors from planet Earth headed for a target 250,801 miles away.

Four days later they were in lunar orbit, 60 miles high, ready for the descent to the surface.

Armstrong and Aldrin climbed through a tunnel into the spider-like lunar module they called Eagle, while Collins remained in the command module named Columbia.

The two craft separated behind the moon, out of radio contact with Earth. Tense minutes passed on the ground until the two ships emerged from behind the moon and Armstrong reported: "The Eagle has wings."

Once they reached their closest approach, Armstrong had five seconds to decide whether to fire the descent engine again or to abort and fly back to Columbia. He pressed the button to restart the engine.

Landing on the Sea of Tranquility was 12 minutes away.

Suddenly, guidance computer alarm lights began to flash in the cabin. The computer was overloaded and Eagle was rapidly approaching an abort situation.

A young guidance engineer in Houston, 26-year-old Stephen Bales, saw the computer was being asked to solve too many problems, but by checking altitude and other radio data, he recognized that it was solving all the right problems.

Bales, through capsule communicator Charles Duke, passsed this information to the astronauts in a series of dramatic "go's."

But there was more trouble ahead.

Because Eagle was moving 15 mph too fast due to a navigation error, its landing target was 4 miles west of the intended spot. Armstrong reported they were headed into field of large boulders and craters.

Armstrong needed 90 seconds to find a smooth touchdown spot. The maneuvering dropped the fuel supply dangerously low, and Eagle had only about 12 seconds to spare when Armstrong shut off the engine.

"Houston. Tranquility Base here. The Eagle has landed," Armstrong reported.

Man landed on the moon at 3:17 p.m. CDT on Sunday, July 20, 1969. That was just 164 days before the end-of-the-decade goal Kennedy had set eight years earlier.

In London's Trafalgar Square, crowds screamed and applauded. In New York's Yankee Stadium, the baseball scoreboard flashed "They're On The Moon!" The stadium filled with cheers, then there was a moment of silence before the 35,000 fans sang "America the Beautiful."

At Tranquility Base, with no problems and excitement running high, Armstrong and Aldrin asked permission to step outside early, skipping a planned four-hour rest period.

Mission Control agreed and the two moonmen struggled into their boots, gloves, helmets and backpacks. They depressurized the cabin, and Armstrong backed down the nine-rung ladder to the first step on the dusty lunar surface. It was 9:56 p.m. CDT.

"That's one small step for a man, one giant leap for mankind."

It was a sentence he said later had come to him after he was on the moon. "It was a statement that was natural in the sense of the time," he said.

For several minutes, Armstrong carefully tested the firmness of the soil and his ability to move about in a gravity field only one-sixth the strength of Earth's.

He said Tranquility Base was strewn with boulders and pocked with thousands of small craters. "Magnificent desolation," Aldrin exclaimed after following Armstrong to the surface.

A television camera they mounted on a post 60 feet away provided more than 500 million viewers with a ringside seat to history.

Armstrong and Aldrin planted a 3-by-5-foot American flag, and Aldrin stepped back and saluted it. Wire stiffeners enabled it to stand out in the airless vacuum. But they made it plain they came as representatives of all nations when they unveiled a stainless steel plaque bearing these words: "Here men from the planet Earth first set foot on the moon, July 1969 A.D. We came in peace for all mankind."

President Richard Nixon spoke to the moonwalkers from the White House, telling them their mission "inspires us to redouble our efforts to bring peace and tranquility to the world."

The astronauts gathered more than 50 pounds of rocks and set up three scientific experiments.

It was after 11 p.m. and time to return to Eagle's cabin. Aldrin had been outside 1 hour 44 minutes, Armstrong 2 hours 44 minutes.

After several hours of fitful rest in the uncomfortable cabin, they fired Eagle's ascent engine and blasted off and caught up with the orbiting Columbia.

Early the next morning, Collins triggered Columbia's engine and drew a bead on planet Earth.

On July 24, eight days after launch, Columbia splashed down in warm Polynesian waters, landing just nine miles from the carrier USS Hornet.

After the astronauts' release from quarantine Aug. 10, millions turned out to hail the new heroes during tours that took them to cities around the world.

But space officials misread the national mood. The public followed Apollo as a race with the Soviets and, with Apollo 11, perceived the contest was won.

The country was torn by Vietnam. The racial and campus turmoil of the late 1960s had prompted some to view the space effort and its $20 billion price tag as a symbol of misplaced national priorities.

NASA's dreams were derailed by Congress and the Nixon administration. Only the space shuttle survived, first flying in 1981.

Ex-football player may be steroid victim

By MARCIA DUNN
Associated Press Writer

PITTSBURGH (AP) — He was one of professional football's mightiest men, a 295-pound monster who could bench press twice his weight. Now, Steve Courson is thrilled to lift 15-pound dumbbells and to climb a flight of stairs.

The former offensive lineman, now only 33 years old, suffers from a mysterious disease that turns heart muscle into flab and eventually kills its victims unless they undergo a transplant.

Though his doctors can't blame Courson's condition on his long, heavy use of anabolic

'Why is all this ironically happening to me? I've had two strikes. Strike three you're out.'

steroids, they can't rule it out. Neither can he.

"There are so many ironies about my situation. That's why I can't discard them as being an accident. Why is all this ironically happening to me? I've had two strikes. Strike three you're out."

Courson, formerly of the Pittsburgh Steelers and Tampa Bay Buccaneers, is believed to be the first professional athlete to be put on the waiting list for a heart transplant after years of taking illegally obtained anabolic steroids.

Experts fear more may follow.

"I wouldn't be surprised. I think it's going to happen," said transplant pioneer Dr. Thomas E. Starzl of the University of Pittsburgh.

"The potential health hazard and the impact on the national health care system ... it's very frightening," said Harvard University's Dr. Lyle Micheli, president of the American College of Sports Medicine.

It also raises an ethical question for transplant surgeons: With a scarcity of organs, what priority should people be given who take harmful drugs?

Anabolic steroids are derivatives of the male sex hormone testosterone. They stimulate the development of bone, muscle and skin. Users include Canadian sprinter Ben Johnson, who lost his 1988 Olympics gold medal as a result.

Courson first took steroids in 1974 before his sophomore year at the University of South Carolina. In four weeks, he ballooned from 230 pounds to 260. By 1984, when the Steelers traded him to the Buccaneers, Courson boasted a 60-inch chest and 22-inch biceps. At one point, he was shelling out $1,500 a year for steroids, "not that big a tradeoff when you're making $300,000."

In March 1985, in the midst of an 1,800 milligram-a-week regimen, his highest ever, Buccaneers doctors told Courson he had an irregular heartbeat. The problem cleared up in two weeks with medication, and Courson quit steroids for the next year. He was waived at the end of the 1985 season and retired.

On Nov. 23, 1988, he went to Allegheny General Hospital for what he thought was an ulcer. It turned out to be the disease cardiomyopathy.

For years, doctors have warned of the immediate side effects of steroids: acne, sexual function problems, rashes and unusually aggressive behavior, known in the trade as "roid rage." Less is known about long-term effects, although animal tests suggest the drugs accelerate cardiovascular disease.

"We don't know frankly what is the bottom line," said Dr. Judith Orie, Courson's cardiologist. "But we do know anabolic steroids cause high blood pressure in patients. High blood pressure after a point in time causes the heart to fail. Steroids can alter the immune system."

"We don't know whether that has played a role and allowed a virus to affect his heart or not."

About 40 percent of all heart transplants are performed on cardiomyopathy patients, said Dr. Michael Kaye of the University of

'But we do know anabolic steroids cause high blood pressure in patients. High blood pressure after a point in time causes the heart to fail.'

California at San Diego, who keeps an international registry of heart, heart-lung and lung transplants.

"The transplant community is concerned (about steroids) because of the tremendous need for organs and lack of donors," Kaye said.

There were 1,223 people awaiting heart transplants in the United States as of June 26, according to the United Network for Organ Sharing.

Plan to kill cocaine at source all but dead

By BRYNA BRENNAN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush's plan to combat cocaine at the source — South America — is all but dead just months after its inception, officials say, citing turf battles among U.S. agencies, poor planning and little coordination.

The plan to eradicate and intercept cocaine in Peru and Bolivia — the world's main coca plant producers — also suffered serious setbacks because the two Andean nations are rife with corruption, lack resources and face enormous economic and political problems, the officials say. In Peru, the largest coca leaf grower, an ambitious U.S. program has been halted because increasing guerrilla activity threatened American personnel.

South America was to be the battleground for stopping the cocaine flow into the United States. Bush, in his presidential campaign, called for an "international strike force to hit back, quick and hard and often at foreign drug operations" to stop narcotics production at the source.

Most of the world's coca leaves, the source of cocaine, grow in Peru's Upper Huallaga Valley, a lush region at the foothills of the Andes known as the "cocaine cradle." The sprawling region is a stronghold of leftist guerrillas known as Sendero Luminoso, or Shining Path.

U.S. efforts to operate in the region and set up Bush's strike force were halted because of the security threat, said a spokeswoman for the State Department's Bureau of International Narcotics Matters. She spoke on condition she not be identified.

Ground-level eradication, already inefficient because it is done by hand, was slowed further. Aerial spraying, which would effectively stop the plants' four harvests a year, is banned by Bolivian law and repeatedly put off in Peru.

Attempts by about a dozen agents of the Drug Enforcement Administration to locate and destroy makeshift cocaine laboratories and clandestine airstrips have been curtailed by the guerrilla activity, forcing agents to move out of the region and ferry in by helicopter for daytrips.

With the strike-force approach stalled, DEA agents are falling back on longstanding programs of advising local authorities. They continue to train Peruvian police while work goes on in the Upper Huallaga Valley to shore up a helicopter base to offer enough security against the guerrillas for American personnel to operate full-time in the region.

At the same time, DEA agents will be undergoing a course tailored for them by the U.S. Army later this month at Fort Benning, Ga. Charles J. Gutenson, chief of cocaine investigations for the DEA, said in an interview that the training is primarily to teach the agents to deal with Peru's jungle environment and the Maoist guerrillas operating there.

U.S. officials still disagree on where prime responsibility for the South American drug mission should lie, with options ranging from the DEA, whose primary role is law enforcement, to the U.S. armed forces, which would go after the traffickers and growers using counterinsurgency tactics.

The CIA, noting the lack of definition, set up a Counter Narcotics Center in April to "combine operational and analytical support to our country's fight against international drug trafficking," says spokesman Bill Devine. He said the plan is to unite the intelligence community — the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Defense Intelligence Agency, the National Security Agency, the Customs Service and the DEA.

Declining to elaborate on the mechanics of the CIA center, Devine added: "The whole idea is to prevent overlap, for everyone to read from the same book."

Some officials say the CIA center is yet another layer of bureaucracy. And a Senate aide who has traveled to the drug-growing region says the CIA center could prove unworkable because the agency routinely refuses to cooperate with other agencies because it "doesn't give up its sources, doesn't want to see them in court."

March of Dimes 'Jail and Bail'

Jerry Coffman of Personal Touch didn't mind trying on Officer Munoz's handcuffs in a practice run for the March of Dimes Jail and Bail scheduled for Tuesday and Wednesday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. For $15 anyone can call 665-4422, the Jail and Bail headquarters at Culberson-Stowers, and have their favorite "outlaw" arrested. An arresting officer will then escort the criminal to jail where a judge will set a fine. The person has one hour to raise money for the March of Dimes through pledged donations. You could be called upon to help "free" someone or you may just end up in jail yourself.

Old train depot gets a fresh coat of paint

Pampa's old railroad station will never see the days of trains again, but it will be the site of new activity. The McAdoos have purchased the old train depot and are fixing the place up for their own business.

"We've lived in Pampa for 17 years," says Esther McAdoo "and it is very exciting to own a landmark."

"There's still lots of work to be done," says husband, Gene. But with the help of son, Brian and his wife, Kresha, plus the services of Ray Hunter, it should be business anew around the old train depot very soon.

The Burlington name is imbedded in brick on the west side of the old train depot where the tracks used to run by the station.

Charming womanizer causes wife to wonder

DEAR ABBY: I am an attractive, 49-year-old, professional woman, married for more than 30 years to a charming womanizer. He has had many affairs during our marriage.

He's a loving, generous man. I truly love him, and I know he loves me. But when I question him about his continuous affairs, he says he could die tomorrow, and he intends to enjoy his life fully while he's here and able to do it.

I've decided to continue our marriage, but a major problem is that I'm reminded of reality frequently by women leaving messages for him, sending him gifts and cards, etc. He also talks openly about his exploits to our men friends, and I feel anger at the invasion of privacy, and despair at his insatiable ego. Am I a fool to continue to live with this man? What do your readers who have been in similar situations think?

PAINED IN SHERMAN OAKS

DEAR PAINED: Obviously, your husband has made no secret of the fact that he collects women like a schoolboy collects baseball cards. When he tells you that he intends to "enjoy his life," and you accept his fooling around, that is tantamount to giving him permission.

Every woman has her definition of love, but how a woman could "love" a man who has taken a vow to cherish her and forsake all others, then openly makes a mockery of those vows, is a mystery to me.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

Since his shabby treatment pains and angers you, and you continue to hold still for it, you should see a therapist to find out why you tolerate it.

DEAR ABBY: Yesterday I was doing some housecleaning and came across a congratulatory wedding card we had received 2 1/2 years ago. Tucked into the envelope was a check we had overlooked. It was a wedding gift from an acquaintance of my husband. It had been sent to his parents' home while we were on our honeymoon, and later forwarded to us. We moved soon after, and this card with the check enclosed was buried in the mess!

Of course, no thank-you note was ever sent, and the check was never cashed. What should we do with the check? Cashing it at this late date might mess up someone's checking account.

Should I destroy it? Return it? Any suggestions?

FLUSTERED IN FULLERTON

DEAR FLUSTERED: Acknowledge the gift graciously, and apologize profusely, explaining how the goof-up occurred.

Since no bank (to my knowledge) will honor a check of such ancient vintage, unless the sender is very understanding and sends a replacement, you can kiss the gift goodbye.

DEAR ABBY: I need your advice on how I (a mother-in-law) should handle the following problem: Our son and daughter-in-law were married in August 1988. To this date, my friends have been calling me to inquire as to whether their wedding gift was received.

This is very embarrassing. Have thank-you notes gone out of style? I have questioned our son on a couple of occasions where money was the gift, and he told me those gifts have been acknowledged.

How should I answer my friends? EMBARRASSED PARENTS

DEAR PARENTS: I understand your embarrassment, but friends who ask parents if their children have received their wedding gift are putting the blameless parents on the spot.

I suggest that you give those friends the couple's telephone number, and suggest that they call and ask if their gift was received.

(Problem? Write to Abby. For a personal, unpublished reply, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Abby, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069. All correspondence is confidential.)

Martinez completes training for La Leche League Leader

La Leche League International is pleased to announce that Charlene Martinez has completed the necessary requirements to become accredited as a La Leche League Leader. Martinez joins 9,000 other volunteer La Leche League Leaders active in the U.S. and 46 to other countries, with over 100 groups in Texas.

Martinez first became interested in League when she was expecting her first baby, and decided to share with others the information that was so important to her.

La Leche League accreditation program involves a home study course for breastfeeding mothers interested in sharing their knowledge and expertise. Organizational techniques, counseling, meeting content, and background research and resources are covered.

It has taken Martinez three years to complete training. She was quite impressed to find out how much information has been assembled by the League and enjoyed all the background and research which she covered.

Martinez

"The concept that my family comes first is the best reinforcement that I gained from this accreditation process," said Martinez.

La Leche League's resources include a worldwide network of professional advisors representing many medical/sociological disciplines. They approve League's printed material before it goes to press.

Most breastfeeding questions revolve around the normal management of the breastfed baby. This is where personal experience becomes invaluable. Each accredited volunteer League Leader has breastfed her own baby and is dedicated to helping others.

Martinez and her husband, Joe, have two children. While her commitment to her family is first and foremost, she has always found volunteer time for La Leche because she knows how important the work is. "I am looking forward to serving in the capacity," Martinez stated. "I know how wonderful the breastfeeding information and support I received from La Leche was, and I hope to see it made available to everyone who wants and needs it."

The regular monthly meetings are held on the third Tuesday of each month. The next meeting is July 18 at 10 a.m. at 1121 Sandalwood. Discussion topic will be "Breastfeeding: The Healthy Choice." For further information contact Charlene at 665-7658.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) If you sense you have the upper hand over someone you're dealing with on a one-to-one basis today, you're probably right. However, this does not give you license to take advantage of this person. Know where to look for romance and you'll find it. The Astro-Graph Matchmaker instantly reveals which signs are romantically perfect for you. Mail $2 to Matchmaker, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Keep accurate records of your procedures today and be sure to document everything you do, especially if you're performing a service for someone else. There's a possibility of a misunderstanding down the line.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Usually you're rather prudent in the management of your resources, although upon occasion you can be surprisingly extravagant. This could be one of those days.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Here's a helpful motto to hang inside your office today: "What you see here, say here, hear here, stays here when you leave here." If it doesn't, it could cause you regrets or complications.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Don't knuckle under today if you have to deal with a big mouth. Stand up for your rights. A mouse might learn to roar, like a lion, but it's still a mouse.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Be extremely cautious today if you're involved in a situation that requires some type of investment or cash outlay on your behalf. Be absolutely certain you know what you're doing.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) It's commendable to want to be your own person, but it's not very admirable to try to gratify your self-interests at someone else's expense. Be mindful of others today.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Future plans should be predicted upon honest projections, not wishful thinking. If you miscalculate today, you could be buying grief tomorrow.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) There's a possibility you might be operating on a different plane than your friends today. This could lead to misunderstandings if the differences become too great.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Don't butt your head against overwhelming odds today. It may be courageous to rush in where angels fear to tread, but it could also be very foolish if it's a "no win" situation.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Being able to distinguish between apprehensions and intuitive perceptions might be a difficult assignment for you today. Don't mistake negative thoughts for hunches.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) If you're thinking about buying something expensive today about which you know little, it might be wise to have your judgment vindicated by an expert's appraisal.

Rose investigation at the crossroads

Two sides locked in legal skirmish in three courtrooms

By JOE KAY
AP Sports Writer

CINCINNATI — Marge Schott says she's no different than any other baseball fan. She, too, wants a quick resolution to the uncertainty over Pete Rose.

The Cincinnati Reds' owner probably won't get her wish.

It has been 120 days since the baseball commissioner's office announced an investigation of the Reds' manager. Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti appeared to be close to making a decision at the end of May, but Rose got a delay in his hearing and then a court order taking the matter out of the commissioner's hands.

While the case languishes in the courts, Rose remains the team's manager, protected from suspension or firing by the court. And legal experts say it could be several more months before anything is settled.

"We're far from halfway through the court case," said Charles Wilson, a law professor at Ohio State University who teaches a course in civil procedure. "The court case is just barely starting."

That means the gambling allegations against Rose could keep overshadowing the game through the World Series.

"It's a shame. It's such a great American sport," Schott said. "I think people are sick of this. I know I am."

Rose won a major victory June 25 when Hamilton County Common Pleas Judge Norbert A. Nadel granted him a temporary restraining order that protected him from suspension or firing and effectively took the case away from Giamatti. Since then, the two sides have been locked in a legal skirmish waged in three different courtrooms.

The case currently is at a crossroads. U.S. District Judge John D. Holschuh in Columbus, Ohio, will make the next big decision: whether to transfer the case to the federal court system or leave it in Nadel's court.

Rose wants Nadel to keep the case. Baseball's lawyers want it moved to federal court, where they have won in previous challenges to the commissioner's powers.

Under a timetable approved by Holschuh, Rose's lawyers were to submit their final brief in the case today in Columbus. A spokeswoman in the judge's office said Holschuh definitely wouldn't decide today.

Wilson said it wouldn't be surprising for the judge to take several weeks, or even several months, before ruling.

"From any perspective you look at it, this can't be the most pressing issue on his docket," Wilson said. "This is a matter where frankly Pete Rose is certainly not being harmed by any delay, because he's getting paid and doing his job."

"And baseball is hard-pressed to argue it's being harmed because it has given him this much time anyway. Baseball is not in a position to argue,

"Judge, you need to move right away because we're being harmed every day."

While the legal case drags on, Rose also is being tested by his team's nosedive on the field because of injuries.

The Reds have had 10 players disabled by injury, prompting them to fall from first place in the National League West to third, nine games behind San Francisco. The Reds have lost 22 of their last 32 games.

To try to protect his players from the distraction of media covering his lawsuit, Rose has met with the reporters and photographers in a large conference room away from the clubhouse after every game at Riverfront Stadium. During his post-game interview Sunday, Rose showed the strain of a 6-3 loss to Montreal.

"The walk from the clubhouse to here is starting to be a long, long walk," Rose said. "I'm going to invite you writers back into my office."

Quest ends for Donald

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — Mike Donald capped a 10-year quest for his first PGA Tour victory when he birdied the fourth hole of a rain- and darkness-interrupted playoff at the Anheuser-Busch Golf Classic today.

The victory, which came after Tim Simpson missed a 30-foot birdie putt, was worth $153,000 to Donald, 34, of Hollywood, Fla.

As darkness descended Sunday night over the Kingsmill Golf Club, Donald and Simpson eliminated Hal Sutton on the third playoff hole, where he made a double-bogey 6 and they both carded 4s.

Tournament officials then told Simpson and Donald to return this morning to continue the playoff at 427-yard 16th, a dogleg right with an elevated green.

Playing under gray skies and a continuing threat of rain, both players put their drives in the fairway. Donald, hitting first, landed his approach seven feet from the pin and Simpson hit hit to 30 feet.

As the players walked on the green, a light rain began to fall, and Simpson, after lining up his birdie try, left it four feet short. Donald then wasted little time in knocking in the winner and going into a mini-victory dance.

Sutton and Simpson, who got the second of his two career victories earlier this year, won $74,800 each.

The three had finished four tours of Kingsmill's 6,776-yard, par-71 layout in 268, 16 shots under par.

Donald closed with a 6-under-par 65.

Expos stumble past Reds 6-3

By DICK BRINSTER
AP Sports Writer

If the price of admission to a baseball game was based on its length, 28,348 fans at Cincinnati's Riverfront Stadium got their money's worth. But if quality of play is the true barometer, they should have lined up for a refund.

They were forced to sit through 4 hours, 8 minutes of stumbling and bumbling, which mercifully came to a halt shortly after Nelson Santovenia broke an 0-for-8 slump with an RBI single in the top of the 12th inning Sunday to lead the Montreal Expos a 6-3 victory over the Cincinnati Reds.

The teams combined for 26 strikeouts, 17 walks, six errors, two wild pitches, a passed ball and 25 runners left on base.

"Today, we stunk up the place," Reds manager Pete Rose said. "We got two runs by way of error and one run with a bases-loaded walk."

He could have been speaking for both sides, but Montreal's Otis Nixon, who added insurance with a two-run double, had the podium for the Expos.

"That was an ugly ballgame. ... I don't know what was going on," Nixon said.

Neither did Cincinnati third baseman Lenny Harris, whose throw home hit Montreal's Tim Wallach in the back, enabling the Expos to tie in the fifth.

"When things go bad ... they go bad," Harris said.

The other 129,546 paying customers who watched National League games saw something more representative of the show. In those games, it was San Francisco 3, Pittsburgh 1; Atlanta 6, New York 2; Los Angeles 3, St. Louis 2, and San Diego 4, Chicago 3. Houston at Philadelphia was rained out.

Santovenia's single off Kent Tekulve, 0-3, enabled the Expos to overcome four errors.

Tim Raines opened the 12th with a single and was sacrificed to second. Wallach was intentionally walked to get to Santovenia, who grounded a single through the middle to snap a 3-3 tie.

After Andres Galarraga was intentionally walked with two outs, Nixon demonstrated his speciality — hitting with the bases loaded.

Steve Frey, 3-0, allowed two hits in one inning of relief for the victory. Tim Burke pitched the 12th for his 19th save.

Giants 3, Pirates 1
San Francisco has had several pitchers shuttled back and forth between the disabled list and the active roster for most of the season. On Sunday, the Giants got Scott Garretts back, and he paid an immediate dividend, pitching six innings of two-hit ball.

Jeff Brantley pitched two hitless innings and Steve Bedrosian got the final three outs for his 13th save.

The Giants broke a 1-1 tie in the fourth when Kevin Mitchell led off against Jeff Robinson, 5-8, with a single, went to second on Ken Oberkell's grounder and scored on Pat Sheridan's single.

Dodgers 3, Cardinals 2

Tim Belcher returned to a starting role and pitched out of jams twice.

Belcher, 6-8, started a key double play in fourth inning after giving up both St. Louis runs. An inning earlier, he escaped a bases-loaded jam by striking out Vince Coleman and Milt Thompson and retiring Ozzie Smith on a fly ball.

The decisive run came on a bad throw by Thompson. The St. Louis center fielder caught Mike Scioscia's fly ball and overthrew both catcher Tom Pagnozzi and Jose DeLeon, 8-9, allowing Hamilton to score.

Jay Howell pitched the final two innings for his 17th save.

King captures Women's Open

By PETE HERRERA
AP Sports Writer

LAKE ORION, Mich. — In the hours before the most important round of her career, Betsy King decided she would leave nothing to chance.

"I knew I was going to play aggressively, and I wanted to find out early if I was going to hit the ball well," King said Sunday after a final-round, 3-under-par 68 that gave her a four-shot victory over Nancy Lopez in the 44th U.S. Women's Open.

King, who led through the first two rounds, entered the final day in a tie for the lead with Patty Sheehan. Also there was the memory of a third-round collapse on Saturday, when King lost a four-shot lead by taking two bogeys and a double-bogey over the final four holes.

It was a rare lapse for King, who with Sunday's victory — her fifth this season and 19th overall — became the first woman golfer to top $500,000 in earnings in one season.

A driver and a 4-wood on the Indianwood Country Club course's first hole erased that memory.

"I hit two good shots on the first hole and that was an instant lift," she said. "That was actually the first round I'd even hit the fairway on that hole."

King reached the 462-yard, par-5 in two and two-putted for the first of her five birdies. She followed with consecutive birdies on the par-3 third and par-4 fourth holes, with putts from five and 15 feet.

King three-putted from 65 feet to bogey the 170-yard, par-3 fifth hole and Sheehan, who scored her only birdie of the day on three, was back within one.

No one would get that close the rest of the way.

King birdied again on No. 7, where she hit a 9-iron to within 25 feet, then sank the putt.

Sheehan, who had vowed not to play under pressure in the final round, took a triple bogey on eight, where she hit her second shot — a 3-wood — out of bounds. King's lead ballooned to six shots over her playing partner, and only Lopez, who matched King's 68, came close to mounting a challenge.

Sheehan, a runner-up twice this decade in the U.S. Open, never recovered and finished with a 79.

King's 72-hole score of 6-under 278 was second best in the tournament's history, one shot more than Liselotte Neumann's winning score last year at Baltimore. But 278 was a notably impressive score, given the character of the 6,109-yard Indianwood course, with its narrow fairways, slick greens and waist-high heathered rough.

And while much of the field subdued Indianwood at least once — 16 players broke par on Sunday — only King conquered it.

King earned $80,000 from the $450,000 purse, with Lopez picking up $40,000.

Rangers fall again

CLEVELAND (AP) — You won't likely recognize many of the names alongside the bigger numbers in the Cleveland Indians' recent box scores.

Joey Belle, 3 RBIs in two games. Brad Kommsink, three homers and 14 RBIs in 10 games. Dion James, .341 in 10 games.

"All the new guys are chipping in and helping right now. You've got some new blood out there contributing," Manager Doc Edwards said Sunday after the Indians' recent arrivals spurred an 11-5 victory over the Texas Rangers.

The Indians scored 29 runs in winning the last three games of a four-game series against Texas. Cleveland began the series as the lowest-scoring team in the American League.

"When you get nine guys doing it, it makes it easier for all of us," said Joe Carter, who had two hits, scored two runs and drove in one Sunday. "We're being smart. If they give us a walk, we'll take a walk. It's a matter of guys hitting their pitch instead of swinging at the pitcher's pitch."

Texas starter Kevin Brown, 7-6, was victimized by several ground-ball hits during the Indians' six-run first inning, but he also contributed to his own downfall by walking in two runs and hitting a batter.

Wendell Palmer of Pampa will be among more than 1,400 athletes entered in the 22nd annual U.S. TAC National Masters Track and Field Championships July 20-23 in San Diego.

Palmer currently is the holder of world age records in both the shot put (53-6 1/2) and discus (182-0). The 57-year-old Palmer has had to overcome knee problems so he can compete in both the nationals and the World Games July 27-Aug. 7 in Eugene, Oregon.

"It feels pretty good now. I'm ready to go," Palmer said.

Palmer was featured in the latest issue of the National Masters News, a monthly tabloid devoted exclusively to track and field, long distance running and race walking for men and women over 30.

The National Masters meet will have its biggest turnout ever.

Jackson hopes to stick with Oilers

HOUSTON (AP) — At age 26, Kenny Jackson thought it was time to get down to business and out of pro football. So he left the Philadelphia Eagles.

After squaring away his business holdings, Jackson went back to the Eagles in the middle of last season after All-Pro receiver Mike Quick broke a leg. He spent most of the season on the sidelines and didn't make a single reception following his return.

But at age 27, Jackson says he is all business about pro football again and is trying to get on with the Houston Oilers after being left unprotected by the Eagles. He has been working out in non-contract drills at the Oiler's Operation Headstart training camp.

"A lot of teams called, including San Francisco, Buffalo and Cleveland," Jackson told the Austin American-Statesman. "San Francisco made me a good offer. But I figured Houston throws a lot to its wide receivers, sometimes uses four of them. And the cost of living is less here than San Francisco."

Oilers coach Jerry Glanville told the Austin newspaper that he would not discuss Jackson's progress at the non-contact camp.

"What we value more than anything is courage. You can't judge that until we've put on gear," Glanville said.

But receivers coach Ray Sherman said Jackson looks capable.

"When he first came up, he had excellent speed (4.5 in the 40). He doesn't look like he lost any speed," Sherman said. "So far he's looked pretty good. He runs good routes, and he catches the ball."

Schramm looks for NFL to back new league

DALLAS (AP) — Former Dallas Cowboys president Tex Schramm told a Dallas newspaper that he anticipates NFL officials will give their blessing this week to an international spring football league.

"I thoroughly expect that we will go ahead," Schramm told The Dallas Morning News.

The league is expected to vote on the proposed World League of American Football at a meeting Tuesday and Wednesday at a suburban Chicago hotel. Under the proposal, the international league would be owned and operated by the NFL and the NFL's 28 franchise owners would be shareholders in the venture.

Schramm has served as the NFL's ambassador and president of the proposed league since April 18 and took a tour of Europe to gauge interest in several cities.

The former Cowboys executive said all three major television networks have expressed interest in the league.

Schramm envisions a 12-team league with teams evenly split between Europe and North America.

The WLAF is considering placing North American teams in San Antonio, Mexico City, New York, Montreal, Orlando, Birmingham and Nashville.

No franchise fee has been recommended, but the Dallas newspaper reported that such a fee could range from $5 million to $15 million.

Schramm said he envisions football become popular in Europe by appealing to a specific market — one that currently pays scant attention to soccer.

"The fans are the younger (ages 16-40) people, those interested in progressive things, the trendsetters, the more affluent people — the Yuppies," Schramm said.

NFL football has been increasing in international popularity through taped replays, satellite broadcasts and some pre-season contests.

The Cowboys played the Chicago Bears in the inaugural American football game at Wembley Stadium three years ago. The NFL has since played in Sweden and next month will play its first game in Tokyo, between the Los Angeles Rams and the San Francisco 49ers.
