Voyager snaps Neptune photos

By LEE SIEGEL
AP Science Writer

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Voyager 2 plunged over Neptune's north pole and today made its closest approach to the moon Triton. The spacecraft snapped photos of an ancient ice volcano, cliffs, faults and glacier-like lunar terrain as it reached the pinnacle of its epic exploration of four planets.

"This is it — we are exploring new worlds!" laboratory astronomer Rich Terrile said after the 12-year-old craft made its rendezvous with the outermost planet, Neptune "is not a gee-whiz, science-fiction, special effects movie. It's a real place."

The one-ton Voyager probe skimmed 3,048 miles above Neptune's icy north pole cloud tops at 10:56 p.m. CDT Thursday — the closest of its planetary encounters — after being accelerated by Neptune's gravity to a speed of 61,148 mph.

Five hours later, the probe made its closest pass by the moon Triton at 4:10 a.m., a flyby that was confirmed when signals reached Earth at 8:16 a.m. CDT. The four hour and six minute delay is the time it takes Voyager's radio signal to travel the 2.75 billion miles to Earth.

Scientists announced Thursday that Voyager discovered two more tiny moons orbiting the solar system's fourth largest planet: a 60-mile-wide moon designated 1989 N5, and the even smaller 1989 N6, which is a mere 30 miles wide.

That brought the number of Neptune's moons discovered before the close encounter to eight, including the two moons detected from Earth — Triton and Nereid — and four found earlier by Voyager.

The array of information on Neptune's largest moon had scientists, if anything, more excited than they were about Neptune itself.

"Triton will upstage Neptune. It's filled with hummocky, rippling terrain," Terrile said.

"It looks like there's all kinds of fault systems all over the place," said Laurence Soderblom, of the U.S. Geological Survey. The faults suggest that "Triton quakes" may have occurred at one time on the moon.

Later, Joseph Boyce, a NASA geologist, said there was "abundant evidence of ice volcanism" in the latest pictures. He referred to volcanoes that once spewed frozen natural gas or other ice-like substance rather than molten rock.

Voyager's newest photos of Triton received this morning showed a smooth feature, looking somewhat like a dry lakebed, that Boyce said measured several hundred miles across.

"It looked like it could be a crater of a volcano itself," Boyce said. "It looks like some sort of feature flooded by material, and the material is probably volcanic material."

The Voyager mission found similar evidence of icy volcanic flows on Uranus' moon Ariel in 1986, and earlier found active sulfur-spewing volcanoes on Io, a moon of Jupiter.

Boyce emphasized there is no evidence yet that Triton's icy volcanism is currently active, but said the smooth floor of the crater, unmarked by meteorite impact craters, indicates that the ice volcano may have been active within the last million years or so.

Earlier, Bradford Smith, head of Voyager's photographic imaging team at NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory, had described Triton's surface in photos taken Thursday as "extremely strange and puzzling."

The photos showed long fault lines, ridges, low-lying cliffs and "ice structures of various sorts, like glacier terrain," scientist Torrence Johnson said.

While difficult to interpret, the early photos of Triton gave "the same impression as if you stepped out onto some strange and alien surface," with what appears to be a blue, pink and white topography that is "closer to flat than big mountains," said Smith, who called the pictures "Just short of spectacular."

At 1:59 a.m. CDT, signals were received showing that Voyager had been bombarded by dust particles up to 100 times a second as it passed through the plane containing Neptune's rings, said Donald Gurnett. The particles, each about a millionth of a yard across — the size of the particles in cigarette smoke — did not damage the spacecraft.

"This is a historic occasion," said Lennard Fisk, an associate administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Colombia drug war heats up

By JAVIER BAENA
Associated Press Writer

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — The government intensified its war on drugs, ordering cocaine traffickers to surface and claim $200 million in confiscated property or lose it. Enraged dealers staged a series of deadly bomb and arson attacks.

Using emergency powers under a four-year state of siege, President Virgilio Barco issued a decree Thursday requiring owners of the seized property personally to make claims for restitution and barring them from using real estate agents, lawyers or other fronts.

Police and military agents have seized hundreds of luxurious mansions, ranches, office buildings, shops and restaurants across the country along with airplanes, helicopters, cars, trucks and other items in an unprecedented offensive.

Defense Ministry officials put the total value of the goods at about $200 million.

The government crackdown began last week after the assassinations of Luis Carlos Galan, a popular presidential hopeful, as well as a national police colonel and a magistrate. Drug traffickers were blamed. Many of the drug lords face charges in the United States and the Colombian government promised to extradite any who are arrested.

Early Thursday, traffickers infuriated by the crackdown bombed offices of the Liberal and Conservative party offices in downtown Medellin, killing a passerby.

They also set fire to the weekend retreats of two prominent politicians on the outskirts of Medellin, an industrial city 215 miles north of Bogota and the base for the world's biggest cocaine cartel.

Families were sleeping in both houses when gangs doused the structures with gasoline before dawn and set them ablaze, authorities said. The families ran outside and were not hurt.

Two bombs, each containing about 45 pounds of dynamite, were found at the Medellin offices of two national radio networks and deactivated.

At one of the stations the bombers left a communique saying: "We declare total and absolute war on the government, on the industrial and political oligarchy, on the journalists who have attacked and ravaged us, on the judges who have sold out to the government, on the extraditing magistrates, on the labor union presidents and all those who have persecuted and attacked us."

The communique was signed by The Extraditables, a violent group authorities link to the Medellin cartel.

"We will not respect the families of those who have not respected our families," it said. "We will burn and destroy the industries, the properties and the mansions of the oligarchy."

Authorities have arrested three alleged drug traffickers as part of the crackdown, but the bosses of the cocaine cartels are believed in hiding.

According to one of Barco's decrees, property that is not claimed by the owners will be divided among government agencies.

Rural property will be distributed among landless peasants, and urban property will go to needy children and mothers.

People are tipping police to possible raid sites, said a national police spokesman, Col. Alfredo Salgado.

"The people have always wanted to cooperate with the police, but they were afraid," he said.

Teachers encouraged to improve self-image

No one cares how much you know until they know how much you care.

— "The original" Mike Smith

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

Believing that teachers have the most important job in society, "The original" Mike Smith set about upping teachers' self-image so they could, in turn, improve that of their students.

Smith's presentation before over 500 Pampa school employees at M.K. Brown Civic Center was titled "I am only a teacher." It was inspired by an event in Santa Fe, N.M., in which an educator was asked what she did for a living and responded with those words.

Interspersing self-written poems with his humorous and high-energy presentation, Smith responded to the "only a teacher" mindset by reciting "To Teach."

"To know or do is one thing/I guess that's really neat/But someone has to teach you, if the odds you're going to beat./We've heard it since forever, with time it stood the test./When the challenge is to master/learn only from the best./But if that master masters/and has not the skill to teach/All they learn is left beyond/our simple human reach./The moral of this story/is so sad and oh so true/

Them that can must teach and them that can't should do," Smith read.

Smith said it is vital that teachers love their students and listen to them, freeing them from the stigma that average accomplishment will get them through life.

"Our society does not reward potential," he said. "Our society rewards activity."

He then asked the faculty and staff members present to clap their hands on his signal.

"Who made you clap your hands? You did. I can't make you do it. I can only make you want to do it," Smith said. "But you had to do it yourself."

He pointed out that treating students with love and respect is the easiest way to inspire them to want to achieve.

Again he shared a poem, this time dedicated to those students commonly considered average.

"I don't cause teachers trouble and my grades have been OK/I listen in my classes and I'm in school everyday/My parents think I'm average/My teachers think so too/I wish I didn't know that/'cause there's lots I'd like to do/I'd like to build a rocket/I've got a book that tells me how,/or start a stamp collection/But no use in trying now/'cause since I learned I'm average/I'm just smart enough to see/it means there's nothin' special/I should expect of me."

Smith said he wanted those who deal with students daily, whether teachers or support personnel, to know that no matter what is going on in their personal lives, they must be completely dedicated to the job of education when they are around children.

"We have got to have that magic moment set up for young people so they learn it's OK to be happy, it's OK to learn, it's OK to succeed," Smith said.

He pointed out that teaching children good self-esteem is vital to their achievement.

"When I was in school I was a 'C' student," he said. "My friends were 'C' students. We all wanted to get C's so nobody would upset the curve."

Smith said it was when he reached college that he learned having 'A' potential but only 'C' achievement would not be enough to get him through life.

He said teachers who encourage students to like themselves enough to want the best are the ones who will make the greatest positive impact on the future of society.

"What other career is there where you can actually reach out and touch the future?" Smith asked. "If we can break some of those things we say (to children) like, 'Who do you think you are?' we can have an endless wonderful future."

"If we don't, the trend from 10 years ago from 10 percent dropout rates to 30 percent

Waterline leak causes Celanese plant shutdown

Officials at Hoechst Celanese's Pampa Plant said a waterline leak caused the shutting down of two coal-fired boilers Thursday morning.

Brent Stephens, plant manager, said today that one boiler was back on line and there was never a threat to human health.

"We've got one boiler that will stay down for several days while we repair some tubes that were damaged during the shutdown," Stephens said.

Stephens attributed the boiler problem to a valve that was inadvertently left opened during the night.

He said the plant would operate at a reduced rate of production until the second boiler is repaired.

There was one small fire in the plant during the shutdown, but Stephens said it was put out before the Celanese firefighters even arrived on the scene.

Stephens also said one plant worker was slightly injured by escaping hot water from one of the boilers.

"He had two blisters on his face, but he is back at work today," Stephens said.

According to a Celanese press release following the incident, no chemicals were spilled and city officials were told of the problems.

A representative of the city's Emergency Management office confirmed Thursday that Celanese had followed the Community Awareness and Emergency Response (CAER) guidelines in dealing with the boiler problems.

Stephens said the plant's emergency alarms were sounded at 9:15 a.m. Thursday as a precaution and to let plant personnel know a shutdown was under way.

An "all clear" alarm was sounded at 9:40 a.m., according to company officials.

DPS: 34 could die in Labor Day traffic

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Department of Public Safety said today the traffic death count for the Labor Day weekend could be as high as 34.

"This may scare you, but you need to know" about the prediction, said Col. Joe Milner, DPS director.

"The Department of Public Safety will be doing everything it can to ensure you have a safe holiday, but we need your help. Please, don't drink and drive, stay within the speed limit and wear your safety belt," Milner said.

In 1988, 30 people died in traffic accidents during the 78-hour Labor Day holiday period. Two critically injured people died later.

today will go to 40 and on up." Pointing out that people hear many more negative than positive things about themselves, Smith noted that America has the highest suicide rate for people 12-25 in the world.

"We have got to give children hope," Smith insisted. "I had a guy tell me one time that what we needed to do was teach children about reality. Some of the children in your classes go home everyday to a reality that would make you shudder."

"They know about reality. Let's show them that things can get better!"

Pointing out that America leads the world in suicides of people ages 12 to 25, Smith said it is crucial teachers help students like themselves

"By the time a student reaches their teen-age years they have heard 14,000 negative things about themselves to only 10,000 positive," Smith said. "We've got to change that."

Awareness briefing planned

A public meeting outlining the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant (WIPP) near Carlsbad, N.M., is set for 7 p.m. Tuesday at the Coronado Inn.

Sponsored by the Pampa Emergency Management Department and the U.S. Department of Energy, the briefing is intended to convey Texas' role, waste transportation and disposal, and basic information about radioactive materials. A full-scale model of the transport package, called TRUPACT II, will be present after the meeting.

WIPP is a research and development facility designed for the safe disposal of defense generated radioactive by-products. Located 2,150 feet underground in bedded salt deposits formed 235 million years ago, the repository will receive waste from 10 generating sites around the country. Shipments are to pass through Texas along I-20 in the south and I-40 in the north enroute to the facility.

Anyone wishing to attend this program may contact Steve Vaughn, Pampa Emergency Management coordinator, or Kathy Beck, assistant coordinator, at 665-8481.

There has been no traffic fatality reported anywhere in Texas for June 13, Milner added.

Judge halts school drug tests

GALVESTON (AP) — A federal judge declared mandatory drug tests a constitutionally improper intrusion of students' individual rights and ordered a Southeast Texas school district not to administer them again this fall.

The drug tests began in August 1988, requiring students in the East Chambers Consolidated Independent School District in Winnie to produce a urine sample for drug testing before taking part in activities like sports, cheerleading and band.

In a 17-page opinion, U.S. District Judge Hugh Gibson said mandatory drug testing of junior high and high school students is a flagrant violation of constitutional rights and intrusion on the personal privacy of school children. Winnie is about 25 miles southwest of Beaumont.

The American Civil Liberties Union, representing a 19-year-old student who opposed the testing, challenged the drug testing plan in court. The student, a senior, sued after he was barred from a Future Farmers of America event because he refused to take the test.

"The program brings a very private function under rigid scrutiny of school authorities without any individualized suspicion," the judge said.

"It is an across-the-board, eagle-eyed exam of personal information of almost every child in the school district. It is difficult to imagine any search of school children being more intrusive."

Keith Davis, superintendent of the school district, said Thursday he was disappointed with the ruling but would decline further comment until the district school board could review the decision.

School officials defended the plan, saying students could avoid peer pressure to use drugs by giving the students an excuse not to use drugs.

Gibson said the testing might only encourage students on drugs to quit extracurricular activities in order to continue their drug use. Gibson issued a restraining order last November, halting the drug tests temporarily. His latest order makes the ban permanent.

The school district was one of a handful of schools in Texas that had instituted mandatory drug tests for athletes and other students involved in extracurricular activities.

School district officials said the plan had drawn inquiries from other districts throughout the country.

Under the program, a student testing positive for drugs would be suspended from extracurricular school activities and placed in a counseling program. A student testing positive a second time would be suspended from school for one semester, and a student testing positive a third time would be suspended for one year.

A positive test would have meant suspension from outside activities and referral to a counseling program. A second positive test would result in a one-semester suspension from school. A third positive test would prompt a one-year suspension.

"In the past, nobody in the little towns (was) willing to sue," said Bruce Griffiths, the ACLU attorney who filed the suit. "This was the first test in Texas. I'm pleased."

While the ruling applies only to students in the East Chambers district, Griffiths said other districts should pay attention to it.

Police investigate two sexual assault reports

Pampa police are investigating two unrelated alleged sexual assaults that occurred Thursday.

The two events became the second and third sexual assault cases reported this week, with two of the three involving children.

Det. Jay Lewis of the police department and Deputy Lynn Brown of the Gray County Sheriff's Department are investigating a report of ongoing sexual assault against a 13-year-old female. A press report indicates the assault, by a known male suspect, has been going on for a period of time.

Lewis said the assaults allegedly occurred in Pampa and Arlington. He also said the female has been voluntarily removed from the home by her mother pending a full investigation.

Earlier this week a 12-year-old female was sexually assaulted in an unrelated incident. No suspect in that case has been identified or arrested.

In another incident Thursday a 77-year-old female resident of the Pam Apartments was reportedly sexually assaulted at her residence by a known suspect.

A press release stated the attack occurred around 1 p.m. The victim was treated and released from Coronado Hospital.

Lewis said an investigation is continuing into that incident.

Woman given death sentence for murder

ATHENS, Texas (AP) — Betty Lou Beets, convicted of killing one of her husbands and suspected of killing another, became the first woman in Texas since 1963 to receive an execution date for a death sentence.

Mrs. Beets was convicted of capital murder in the slaying of her fifth husband, former Dallas Fire Capt. Jimmy Don Beets. She has been indicted, but not tried, on a murder charge in the death of her fourth husband, Doyle Wayne Barker.

State District Judge Jack Holland set a Nov. 8 execution date for Mrs. Beets, who was found guilty in the 1983 slaying, Henderson County District Attorney Billy Bandy said Thursday.

"You are to be taken to a room at some hour before sunrise as provided by law to be injected with a lethal substance or substances prescribed by law," Holland told Mrs. Beets.

The men's bodies were unearthed in Mrs. Beets' yard near Payne Springs, a town of about 150 in Henderson County, about 60 miles southeast of Dallas in 1983. The men had been shot in the back of the head with the same .38-caliber pistol, prosecutors said.

Mrs. Beets, 52, had no comment after the hearing and said she would communicate by letter from her prison cell in Gatesville.

"I feel sick," Faye Lane, one of Mrs. Beets' daughters, told the Athens Daily Review. "It feels like things are speeding up and that it may happen sooner than we thought."

James Beets, son of Jimmy Don Beets, said he was glad the execution date had finally been set.

"Now my dad can rest in peace," Beets told the Tyler Morning Telegraph. "I plan to witness her execution for my dad."

Mrs. Beets' attorney, Eden Harrington of the University of Texas Resource Center in Austin, asked Holland for time to prepare a defense. The judge said he would entertain any motions she filed.

Mrs. Beets' case set a precedent when the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals overturned her 1985 conviction and then, in a rare move, changed its mind and reinstated the death sentence.

Prison officials say the last woman to receive an execution date in Texas was Carolyn Ann Lima, who was scheduled to die in 1963, TDC spokesman David Nunnelee said. Her sentence was later commuted.

Three other women sentenced to die in Texas have not received execution dates. They are:

— Frances Elaine Newton, 24, given the death penalty for murdering her husband and two children in 1987 for $100,000 in insurance benefits. Adrian Newton, 23, was shot in his Houston home as he lay on the couch. Seven-year-old Alton and 21-month-old Farrah were shot through the heart.

— Pamela Lynn Perillo, 33, sentenced to die for the February 1980 slayings of Robert Banks, 30, of Houston, and his friend, Bob Skeens, 26. Both men were strangled.

— Karla Faye Tucker, 29, sentenced to death in Houston for the 1983 killings of Jerry Lynn Dean, 26, and Deborah Thornton, 32, who were killed with a pickax.

The women are imprisoned in Gatesville.

Minister arrested for sexual assault

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A Baptist minister ordered held in lieu of $100,000 bond on a charge of sexually assaulting a teen-ager may have been involved in as many as a dozen molestation cases involving young boys, police say.

Police said Freddie J. Corothers, 36, was charged in connection with the assault of a 13-year-old neighborhood boy.

A court official said Thursday the bond under which Corothers was being held is 10 times the bail normally set for someone charged with his first felony.

Corothers, pastor of He Rose Missionary Baptist Church, was arrested Wednesday on a charge of aggravated sexual assault of a child.

Corothers told police he worked as a nurse, but refused to say where he was employed, officers said. Neighbors said the small church had been open about 11/2 years and attracted a small congregation.

The massive bond set for Corothers was requested by investigators, who suspect as many as a dozen more children, ranging in age from 12 to 14 years old, may have been involved over the past few months, according to Police Lt. Albert Ortiz.

Police are working to contact the other children investigators believe were victimized and convince them to come forward, Ortiz said. He said more charges could be filed as early as next week.

"We're hoping that they (other victims) can put aside the embarrassment of the situation and admit to what happened," he said. "Our main concern was getting him away from the kids. We've done that." Officers confiscated adult movies they believe were used, along with money and the promise of gifts, to entice young boys into the house.

"They (boys) were known to him either at his church or in his neighborhood," Ortiz said. "He would entice them with the movies or promises of gifts or money."

"This is a typical case where an authority figure abuses his power to entice very impressionable young boys to engage in sexual misconduct," Ortiz added.

The case came to light after one of the victims went to a doctor, who examined him and called police.

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements should recognize the real crisis facing poor school districts and include school finance reform on the agenda for the November special session, a senator from south Texas said.

"Many of our school districts are in effect bankrupt, and in order to continue operating they're taking from Peter to pay Paul," Sen. Hector Uribe said Thursday.

Uribe, whose Rio Grande valley legislative district includes property-poor school districts, said lawmakers should address school finance even if the Texas Supreme Court has not ruled on a lawsuit challenging the current system by the time the session starts Nov. 14.

"It's very clear that the quality of education in different parts of the state is different from other, wealthier parts of the state," Uribe, D-Brownsville, told reporters during a meeting of the Senate Education Committee.

"From a public policy perspective, it's really very important for the governor to act now and not wait for the Supreme Court," he said.

Clements declined to say whether he would add any issues besides workers' compensation reform to the special session agenda, which he controls.

In the lawsuit brought by poor school districts, State District Judge Harley Clark ruled the current finance system is unconstitutional. But the 3rd Court of Appeals in Austin overturned that decision, and the case has been appealed to the Supreme Court.

Public education in Texas is financed through local property taxes and state funds, along with federal money. Property-poor school districts have said they impose local taxes at a higher rate than wealthy districts, and even then they cannot raise as much.

A law passed this year provided "equity funds" of $200 million in 1989-90 and $250 million in 1990-91. However, poor districts said that amount is not enough to make a real difference.

The Senate Education Committee heard recommendations for improving the school finance system from representatives of poor districts.

Richard Kirkpatrick, superintendent of the Copparras Cove school district and spokesman for districts that have intervened in the lawsuit, said among other items the Legislature's plan should preserve local control.

School districts that impose local property taxes at a certain level should be guaranteed a certain amount of combined state and local funds, within broad limits and subject to accountability standards, Kirkpatrick said.

State Education Commissioner W.N. Kirby, named as a defendant in the lawsuit, told the committee that the Texas Education Agency and the poor districts "are telling you the same thing."

"In many ways, you can set aside the question whether it (the system) is constitutional or not, because everybody unanimously is telling you the system is absolutely not adequate, and not close to being adequate — that it would take a multi-billion dollar level increase infusion of money into the system to really approach the level of what we really need," Kirby said.

Hobby says he'll prepare workers comp bill proposal

By SCOTT ROTHSCCHILD
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — When lawmakers return for a special session on workers' compensation they will find a bill prepared by Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby.

Hobby, the presiding officer of the Senate, said Thursday he will craft a workers' comp bill before the special legislative session begins Nov. 14.

"In the next two or three weeks, I'm going to propose a bill that I think addresses the problem," Hobby said.

Hobby said his legislation will include recommendations from an interim Senate committee, which is studying the insurance system that provides coverage for employees injured at work.

The committee, chaired by Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, began hearing testimony last week and is expected to complete its report by Oct. 1.

After a 140-day regular session and 30-day special session, lawmakers remain at odds over how to reform the workers' comp system, setting the stage for the pre-Thanksgiving session.

Business groups say workers' comp insurance premiums are too high and labor groups say benefits for injured workers are inadequate.

While much of the debate has centered on whether to restrict appeals of claims in the court system, Hobby said one of the major problems is the assigned risk pool, which is for employers unable to buy the insurance in the open market.

The size of the risk pool has tripled since 1983 and is running a deficit of nearly $400 million. Insurance industry critics say small employers with excellent worker safety records are being forced into the pool by insurance carriers not willing to provide coverage.

But the insurance industry has said the growth of the pool shows that state-set rates are inadequate.

Hobby's remarks came before a meeting of the Legislative Budget Board.

During the meeting, the LBB approved funding for implementation of federal nursing home reforms, and transferred $5.2 million to replenish the state's disaster relief fund, which had been depleted by spring storm damage.

The fund was down to about $1 million before requests for assistance to repair damages from Hurricane Chantal started coming in.

The LBB also rejected a proposal that would have broadened a ban against former officials of the Texas Department of Human Services from bidding on contracts with the department. The ban would have extended the contract prohibition.

Jailed felons gain paroles

AUSTIN (AP) — A recent decrease in the number of jailed felons awaiting transfer to state prison could be the beginning of a trend, said a planner with the Texas Board of Pardons and Paroles.

"As the board continues with programs it has established to maintain a constant number of releases from TDC (Texas Department of Corrections), and as the parole in absentia program continues to impact jail population, the number of felons in county jails will continue to decrease or at least remain constant," planner Pablo Martinez, said in a letter to the governor's general counsel.

Under the parole in absentia program, eligible inmates can be paroled straight from county jails.

Martinez also predicted further decreases as new prison facilities open.

From July 13 to Aug. 7, the number of jailed felons awaiting transfer dropped from 11,641 to 11,559. That decrease, amounting to 1.03 percent, is the first in almost two years, the board said Thursday.

The figures are based on reports from the 46 county jails that have capacities of at least 100 beds, board spokeswoman Karin Armstrong said.

Felons are being held in local jails because TDC, faced with a population cap set by a federal judge to guard against crowding, has imposed a quota system for accepting such prisoners from counties.

Recent legislative initiatives were instrumental in triggering the decrease, said William Brooks, executive director of the parole board.

Statue will remain at home

ABILENE (AP) — A three-ton bronze sculpture, touted as a symbol of this city's pride and hopes after the 1980s oil boom went bust, won't be hauled out of town, just across town, thanks to a devoted resident.

Titled "Hope for the Future," the $65,000 sculpture by Austin artist Charles Umlauf was mounted in front of the First State Bank Tower in 1986.

Now the piece, which portrays a kneeling couple lifting an infant to the heavens, will sit outside the Abilene Christian University.

Gayle Potter and other friends of the financially troubled bank closed earlier this year and word spread that the sculpture might be sold and even carted out of town, the Abilene Reporter-News said Friday.

At the sculpture's unveiling three and a half years ago, there was plenty of impassioned oratory about the piece reflecting Abilene's optimism and bright spirits, despite the economic downturn.

This week the sculpture turned up on a long list of items sold at public auction in Midland by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

NCNB acquired First State and its $175.2 million in deposits, but didn't want the statue.

Several other residents of this small West Texas City did.

Midland FDIC official Gene Shrode said bidding was fast and furious, starting at $2,000 and climbing to $20,000.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

FmHA subsidies should be ended

Government financial messes are becoming an order of the day. To the savings and loan and HUD scandals, add a new one: loans from the Farm Home Administration. In a new study for the Cato Institute, farm-policy expert James Bovard writes that FmHA loans "have helped wreck thousands of subsidized farmers' lives and created unfair competition for subsidized farmers."

Part of the problem is that Americans still understandably romanticize life down on the farm. Our urbanized and suburbanized culture often makes us long for a simpler, more innocent life. And movie stars like Sissy Spacek and Jessica Lange become instant farm "experts," even testifying before star-struck congressional committees, after portraying farm wives in movies.

Such sentiments often replace the hard activity of clear thinking on farm policy. The fact is that farming in crucial ways is like any other business: it involves the risk of failure. We should not expect all farms to make a profit, and government subsidies that try to save all farms only backfire. FmHA records indicate that farms most often fail because of bad farming policies. That's not surprising.

What is surprising is government's reaction. "FmHA's records also indicate that almost one-quarter of the bankruptcies among its borrowers were largely due to their having received too many loans," writes Bovard. When any other business, such as a restaurant, borrows too much and goes belly-up, we judge the owner to have been unwise. When a farm does the same, the owner suddenly becomes a victim of evil market forces and the recipient of a federal program.

Much as anti-poverty programs have created an entire class of people addicted to welfare, so FmHA (and other federal farm agencies) programs have created a class of farm welfare-addicted sodbusters. Bovard says: "Congress has created two classes of farmers: welfare farmers and self-reliant farmers. Every dollar of aid the government gives to welfare farmers makes it more difficult for self-reliant farmers to survive."

Worst of all, the government programs have dealt a severe blow to the family farmer, the very image of our bucolic daydreams, and the person the programs are supposed to help. H. Allan Nation, editor of the Stockman, says the programs have artificially boosted prices of land and equipment too high for family farmers.

The solution is to reduce the government subsidies to zero. The FmHA and other agricultural programs involve distant government bureaucrats in matters that can only be decided on the scene by market pricing.

Berry's World

Will Taj Mahal bring them in?

WASHINGTON — Some curious things have happened in the bizarre realm of school desegregation, but an observer would have to look long and hard to find a situation more ludicrous than the situation in Kansas City, Mo. Thirty-five years after the historic Brown decision, the city's children still are caught in a litigious net of "what's the color of your skin?"

Reading the record, one is struck by reminder of Alice in Wonderland. In her looking-glass world, everything was backward. One object of Brown was to assure black children of a better education, but in Kansas City black children are denied a better education — because they are black. The story has all the solemn lunacy of the Mad Hatter's afternoon tea.

In 1984, after years of litigation, a federal court in Kansas City found vestiges of the old segregated school system still in place. In 1985 the court approved a remedial plan to eliminate these vestiges. There would be magnet schools; there would be major capital improvements; there would be voluntary inter-district transfers of black students to the suburbs and white students to the inner city. These measures eventually would ensure that every grade in every school would have not more than 60 percent blacks, and not less than 40 percent whites, and everything would soon be hunky-dory.

It hasn't worked out quite that way. For one thing, suburban schools refused to go along. They didn't want the black transfers. The court held that because the suburbs had not created the condition, they could not be compelled to correct it, so the inter-district plan has fizzled.

Magnet schools have been created, but they have not drawn white students in sufficient numbers to meet the quota requirements. In Kansas

James J. Kilpatrick

City numbers have become an obsession.

Last month 3,436 black students were on waiting lists to get into the magnet schools. They couldn't be admitted. The school board sent letters to 1,024 white students inviting them — almost begging them — to enroll at a magnet. If 761 had accepted, openings would have been created for 1,594 blacks. Only 79 signed up, so only 200 blacks could be taken. This is how things work in Wonderland.

The greatest capital improvement in prospect is a new Central High School. At $32 million, it promises to be the Taj Mahal of American public education. It will cost twice as much as a typical high school, and it will have athletic facilities unsurpassed by many colleges. Federal judge Russell G. Clark, the master of these revels, approved plans in April. The plans call for an indoor track one-tenth of a mile long, a 50-meter indoor swimming pool, a weight room, handball courts and a room for the sole use of gymnasts.

Judge Clark ruled that the elaborate athletic facilities (not to mention a thousand computers and courses in classical Greek) "are necessary to attract non-minority suburban students to the inner city."

The judge did have one moment of austerity: "The court is not convinced that the desegregative attractiveness of a 10-meter diving platform outweighs the dangers and costs of construction ..."

The new Central will arise in the heart of a black neighborhood. The school is to have an enrollment of 1,400. Ah, so? If the rule of 60-40 is to apply, 560 white students must be dragged, gang-pressed, bribed or persuaded to come to Indiana Avenue. Some such quota will have to be fixed, or the whole idea of integration will collapse.

So it goes in Kansas City. At least some black parents are fed up with a quota system that provides good schools — but not for them. Last month Judy Rivarde and others filed a suit asking a different kind of relief: They want tuition vouchers that would admit them to local private schools that are ready and willing to accept them. The trouble is that these schools are mostly church schools, and a constitutional problem arises at the threshold.

The lawsuit picks up on a similar recommendation of the Desegregation Monitoring Committee. The committee in June proposed vouchers and also suggested that participating suburban public schools be rewarded with a bounty of $1,000 per head for all blacks accepted.

It is all very complicated. And the sad aspect is that in the Kansas City Wonderland, a color-blind Constitution becomes a color-bound Constitution. The element of race, which ought not to matter, now matters absolutely. King Numbers rules by counting white noses and black noses, and dividing total noses by the square root of the judge's birthday. Or something. Maybe the Taj Mahal will work, and then again, maybe not.

Hop from the moon to Mars

Neil Armstrong, the first-ever man on the moon, has modestly chosen for himself a low profile but there is something about that mission which needs to be known.

At 4:16 p.m., July 20, 1969, with much of the population of the world watching, Commander Armstrong had a crisis on his hands.

After a flawless three-day voyage, 240,000 miles in space, Armstrong was at the controls — easing his tiny lunar module, the Eagle, down the Sea of Tranquility.

A renowned scientist, Dr. Harold Urey, had predicted that "any space vehicle landing on the moon would immediately be swallowed in an ocean of dust."

But enough others believed otherwise to have brought this gamble to within 50 feet of the lunar surface.

Suddenly the alarm went off on the control panel. The on-board computer guidance system was overloaded. The spacecraft had overshot its intended landing spot by four miles.

Strapped into a standing position, Armstrong took over — disengaged the computer and assumed manual control. He maneuvered a fishhook turn backward, watching out the window for an alternative site. His pulse rate was 156.

Paul Harvey

The Eagle had less than 60 seconds of descent fuel left. Mission Control in Houston had already commenced the countdown for a mandatory abort. The astronauts had entered the "dead-man's zone" less than 50 feet above the lunar surface. If Armstrong tried to pull out at the last moment he would not have room to clear the lunar mountain ranges.

For 22 seconds, while Edwin (Buzz) Aldrin called out velocities and altitudes, Armstrong hovered over a field of jagged boulders.

Then he spotted a flat clearing. When he brought the Eagle to touchdown he had 18 seconds of fuel to spare.

It was six hours and 38 minutes later that Armstrong climbed down the Eagle's ladder, carefully pressed his boot into the moon's powdery plain, and announced, "One small step for man ..."

What I am saying is that our first moon landing was not automated and it was not easy and men of less superb skills and daring might never have made it.

Author Harry Hurt (For All Mankind), who has published an audit of the Apollo program, says, "Our conquest of the moon would have been a bargain at twice the price."

Look at the harvest: Billions of dollars' worth of new products; whole new industries.

Freeze-dried foods and shatterproof eyeglasses, quartz-crystal watches and cordless power tools, artificial limbs and mass spectrometers for surgery, the heart pacemaker and weather satellites.

Laser technology, fireproof fabrics, fiber-optics, rust-proofing and water filters. In all, I count 30,000 applications of space technology to private and commercial uses.

And one thing more.

Because the computer aboard the Eagle was not equal to its task, computers were improved — and down-sized — eventuating in the personal computer revolution.

Now Mr. Bush wants us to go back to the moon — and from there to Mars. Let's.

Religions face their trials and triumphs

By CHUCK STONE

GREEN LAKE, Wis. — It is a two-day drive or a three-hour plane hop from Atlanta to Green Lake, Wis., where two separate religious conferences met during the same week.

But more vast and wearying theological distances separate them.

In the southern urbanity of Atlanta, a small meeting of black Catholic lay people focused on the controversy over Rev. George A. Stallings Jr.'s breakaway Imani Temple and its emphasis on African-American culture. Still, even black Catholics sympathetic to Father Stallings seemed to reject any effort that would distance them from their church's central faith.

"What we'd like to see now is a reconciliation and a healing," said Walter T. Hubbard, executive director of the National Office of Black Catholics.

In the Midwestern verdancy of Green Lake, an annual conference of the American Baptist Assembly was strengthening its ties to its more than 20 overseas missions, which include El Salvador, Nicaragua and Zaire. The mood was joyously upbeat. A black minister, Rev. Ralph Byrdwell, led the predominantly white 700 conferees in the singing of hymns and spirituals. Returning missionaries were welcomed, and a new group was commissioned to go forth and spread the gospel.

"All of our programs have to be re-tested," declared the distinguished theologian Dr. Manfred Brauch. "It's the fermentation of the gospel."

Although Catholics and Protestants can unite in prayer to the same God, theology, race and church doctrines still divide them. A popular hymn's opening lines, "The Church's one foundation is Jesus Christ her Lord," raises the question, which church?

In San Francisco, a gay seminary graduate is being ordained by the Evangelical Lutheran Church of America.

ELCA Bishop Lyle Miller summed up a prevailing doctrine of many Christian churches: "We affirm ministry to and with gay and lesbian people. We do not endorse a ministry of ordained people (who) are practicing homosexuals."

That policy's demise may be just a matter of time. For centuries, Christianity (as well as Judaism) relegated women to subordinate and inferior roles. "Separate but equal" black churches — especially, black Baptists and African Methodist Episcopalians — flourished abundantly in response to white racism.

But times are changing — a little. This year, Episcopalians ordained a black woman, the Rev. Barbara Harris, as a suffragan bishop. The American Presbyterian Church also elected a black woman, the Rev. Joan M. Salmon-Campbell, as Moderator to head its three million members.

This past year, two front-page stories on religion that appeared three months apart in the New York Times reported on seemingly contradictory trends.

"Trend Gaining in Public Schools to Add Teaching About Religion" reported on a movement backed by both liberals and conservatives to incorporate more teaching about religion in public schools.

I enthusiastically applauded this trend.

"Shortage of Qualified New Clergy Causing Alarm for U.S. Religions" reported on a decline in ordinations among the three largest denominations, Catholics, Southern Baptists, and Methodists.

But an exciting new development could reduce the shortage. Older professionals are following Albert Schweitzer's example of pursuit of a higher calling.

Two months ago, Charles W. Gilchrist, a 52-year-old Harvard-trained lawyer and prominent Maryland elected official, abandoned a bright political future to be ordained as an Episcopalian deacon in preparation for the priesthood.

In 1989, the church still has one foundation. But its upper floors are changing.

Gene discovery offers new treatment for cystic fibrosis

By PAUL RECER
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Researchers who isolated the gene that causes cystic fibrosis say the discovery may lead to breakthrough therapy within the lifetimes of young people now suffering from the disease.

"This is a milestone of the highest order, but it does not have applications for the doctor's office tomorrow," said Dr. Francis Collins, a co-discoverer of the cystic fibrosis gene.

Dr. Jack Riordan, director of the CF research program at the Hospital for Sick Children Research Institute in Toronto, said that finding the gene means that "within the lifetime of CF sufferers, we can now say it's possible that drugs will be discovered" to treat the fundamental condition causing the disease.

Collins, of the Howard Hughes Medical Institute and the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor, Mich.; Riordan, and Lap-Chee Tsui, also of the Toronto research institute, announced Thursday they had isolated the gene responsible for CF.

In cooperative research at labs in Michigan and Toronto, they also discovered a mutation in the gene that causes production of a defective protein that leads to symptoms of the disease.

A report of their finding is to be published in the Sept. 8 edition of Science, the journal of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Robert K. Dresing, president of the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation and father of Robbie, a 22-year-old with CF, said the discovery gives a burst of hope for treatment of a disease that has been largely untreatable.

"Now I can look in Robbie's eyes and say we going to cure this disease and you will be a beneficiary," Dresing said at the news conference.

Cystic fibrosis is the most common lethal genetic disease of young people in North America, afflicting about 30,000. The Cystic Fibrosis Foundation in Bethesda, Md., said that 1,000 to 1,200 new cases, usually children, are diagnosed annually.

The disease causes the formation of a thick, sticky mucus that clogs the lungs and digestive tract, blocking breathing and digestion. Half of its victims die before their mid-20s.

Treatment of the disease has been symptomatic, with drugs and therapy designed to control the thick mucus and to help patients avoid or combat repeated lung infections that often kill.

First use of the new knowledge, said Collins, will be to develop a screening test to identify the 12 million or so Americans who unknowingly carry the defective gene and can pass it along to their offspring. He said about 5 percent of the white population are carriers of the gene.

CF occurs in a child only if it inherits two defective genes, one from each parent.

Riordan said the researchers found a specific mutation in 70 percent of the chromosomes carrying the CF gene. This flaw, he said, caused the gene to create a protein that lacks an amino acid called phenylalanine.

The flawed protein, now called the cystic fibrosis transmembrane regulator, somehow distorts the transport of charged particles across the cell membranes of some organs. This, in turn, plays a role in formation of the thick mucus.

Riordan said the researchers now must determine the gene mutation that causes the other 30 percent of CF-related problems.

Once this is understood, he said, researchers may be able to develop a therapy, perhaps some type of protein replacement, that will correct the flawed mucus secretion.

Hazel Maye holds up a trophy (a miniature brass bed) after winning the "Fastest Hands in the East" contest in New York Thursday. Fifty housekeepers from the city's top hotels tackled 25 beds, making them again and again before the bedlam was ended and Maye was declared the winner. Maye made three beds in 3 1/2 minutes to gain the title. Before the contest, she practiced by making 10 beds in one hour.

Dow Jones average sets new record in Wall Street market

By PETER COY
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock market analysts say the risk of a financial meltdown is far lower today than it was two years ago, the last time the Dow Jones industrial average was in record territory.

The Dow Jones average of 30 key industrial company stocks jumped 56.53 points Thursday, carrying it to 2,734.64 and surpassing the record of 2,722.42 set precisely two years ago today.

'The quote of the day was something like: What crash?'

The 1987 peak was the start of a short but severe bear market that culminated in the worst day in Wall Street history, the 508-point plunge in the Dow Jones industrials on Oct. 19, 1987.

Evidence of that debacle was hard to find Thursday.

"The quote of the day is something like: What crash?" said Robert Brusca, chief economist of Nikko Securities Co. International Inc., the New York arm of a Japanese brokerage firm.

Supporting the stock market in 1989 are a healthy dollar, relatively low interest rates and optimism that the economy will manage to steer a middle course between recession and high inflation.

Most of all, there is no speculative bubble ready to be popped. Stock prices are far lower in relation to underlying company profits than they were two years ago, said Lawrence Kudlow, chief economist at Bear, Stearns & Co.

"Fundamentally this is a great expression of confidence in the whole U.S. economic outlook," Kudlow said. "We keep throwing negatives at the market and they don't stick."

Added David M. Jones, chief economist at the brokerage firm Aubrey G. Lanston & Co., "Essentially the stock market is telling us that a soft landing is in store for the economy, and that's exactly the slowdown you need to keep inflation from accelerating."

While some other strategists are more skeptical about the economy's health, a market rally can sometimes feed on itself regardless of fundamental factors.

"The worst thing that can happen to an institutional money manager is to sit there with a pile of cash and watch the market take off without him. It's a buying panic," said Lawrence R. Helfand, managing director for retail sales at the Chicago brokerage Rodman & Renshaw Inc.

Thursday's gain was the second-biggest of the year, and it came in the heaviest trading since mid-June, a good sign for the market. Volume on the New York Stock Exchange totaled 225.52 million shares.

A subdued cheer rose from the exchange floor after the close Thursday.

"A day like every other day — no big deal," said Peter Mancuso, a specialist with Albert Fried & Co. "There was no question in everybody's mind that the market would get back to these levels. It just needed some time."

'There was no question in everybody's mind that the market would get back to these levels. It just needed some time.'

There was no economic news Thursday to account for the big jump. Bonds were up slightly and the dollar edged higher.

"The market's going up just on its own. When you call around, there's no reason. It just went up," Brusca said.

From its low point at the close of Black Monday to its close Thursday, the Dow Jones industrial average rose 57 percent.

"While nobody's paid much attention to it, it's two of the strongest years, back to back, that we've had," Helfand said.

Join Us In Worship IN THE CHURCH OF YOUR CHOICE

The Door of God's House

This old door, cracked and paint peeled, might well be the door of any small church throughout our vast land. The people that worship here perhaps are not able at this time to apply a costly coat of paint or do an extensive repair job. However, they are not ashamed of its weatherbeaten or well-worn appearance. Far from it, they are proud that it has stood always unlocked and sometimes open through a rainy day or stormy night ready to let all enter who seek refuge and comfort. Its hinges are loose; not from oversight but from overwork. Its old knob is shiny by the continual turning of humble hands. Wherever your church affiliation may be... from the smallest of wooden buildings to the loftiest cathedral, the door of God's house is always open to you. Go this Sunday! Remember, the church needs you; but more importantly... you need your church.

The Church is God's appointed assembly in this world for spreading the good news of His love to man and of His promise for man's redemption. Without this assembling in the love of God, no government of society or state of life will long passers and the freedom which we hold so dear will be a cold, dead, and empty shell. Therefore, every man should support the Church for the sake of the welfare of himself and his family. Beyond that however, every person should uphold and participate in the Church because it is the truth about man's life, death and destiny, the truth which, if we will set him free to live as a child of God

His Touch

By Charlotte Barbaree

Scripture: Not that I have already obtained all this, or have already been made perfect, but I press on to take hold of that for which Christ Jesus took hold of me. (Philippians 3:12 NIV)

When my husband, Calvin, was in junior high school, he was big for his age, and he was already a promising football player in a small, football-crazed town in Arkansas.

The year he was a ninth grader, the junior high football season finished ahead of the high school season, so he and a couple more of the promising junior high players were allowed to suit up for the last high school game of the season. They weren't expecting anything more than to sit on the bench, but just the privilege of suiting up and benching with the "big boys" was an awesome honor.

As the game raged on, their team was so far ahead, the coach decided to send in those who rarely got a chance to play. He sent Calvin and his junior high buddies in, too, and they were scared to death!

Time came for a punt and Calvin was the designated punter. He punted; the ball soared high. It went up and up, arched over his head, and landed BEHIND him for minus twenty-three yards! Thus was the auspicious beginning of his high school football career.

Of course, Calvin was embarrassed and worried that the coach would be disappointed. Now, in retrospect, he realizes the coach knew what would happen before the punt was made.

The coach knew Calvin was scared and might flub the punt, but the punt wasn't what was important; what really mattered was he was getting invaluable experience on the playing field.

Christians have purpose in life: to strive for Christlikeness and to endeavor to evangelize their world. The world often scoffs and criticizes our fumbling efforts. We're called everything from hypocrites to fanatics. Discouragement comes easily, and we fear we are letting God down.

But God sees in us not the clumsy souls we are but the spiritual champions we can become. Each effort made in Jesus' name is measured by its heart content rather than its perfection of style. God views the endeavor as invaluable experience on the Kingdom's field.

Under God's watchful eye, we press on to demonstrate Christ's victory!

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Representatives of two Orthodox branches that split in the fifth century over presumed differences about the nature of Christ have agreed on a joint statement of common faith.

The agreement, developed by a joint commission, was seen as overcoming a major obstacle to restoration of full communion between Eastern and Oriental orthodoxy after 1,500 years of separation.

They divided in the fifth century when the Orientals did not participate in the Ecumenical Council of Chalcedon, which defined two natures of Christ, divine and human. Orientals affirmed one united divine-human nature.

The joint statement says, "Those among us who speak of two natures in Christ do not thereby deny their inseparable, indivisible union; those among us who speak of one united divine-human nature in Christ do not deny the continuing dynamic presence in Christ of the divine and the human...."

"We neither separate nor divide the human nature in Christ from his divine nature, nor do we think that the former was absorbed in the latter and thus ceased to exist."

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A Southern Baptist consultant says that for three of the past four years, the number of new nonresident inactive church members has far exceeded the number of new resident church members.

"That means we are losing from the participating membership in larger quantities than we are gaining," says Glenn Smith, consultant with the Southern Baptist Sunday School Board.

He says that when non-resident inactive members (those who move away and do not join another church) are growing at 55,000 a year and resident membership is growing at 35,000. "That's a growth that will kill you."

Crystal River Band

Crystal River Band to give park concert

Crystal River Band will be in concert this Sunday at 6 p.m. at Central Park Bandstand.

The group is sponsored by New Life Worship Center. Pastor Farina and congregation extend an invitation to all gospel music fans to be a part of this inspirational outdoor meeting. Food and fellowship will follow.

In case of rain, the concert will be held at the church building, 318 N. Cuyler.

For the past seven years, the Crystal River Band has enjoyed weekends on the road, traveling through six states, singing the music they love. It's a total commitment for each member, Pastor Farina said.

They are considered to be

Southern Gospel with a unique flavor which appeals to all ages, with lyrics packed full of praise and worship. The group's goal is to "encourage you, bless you, worship with you, cry with you, laugh with you, entertain you, and above all, minister unto any need you might have," he said.

Crystal River Band has recorded five tapes, four of which were recorded in Oklahoma City. In May, the group signed a recording contract with The Eddie Crook Co., Nashville, Tenn., under the Harvest label.

The latest project has been entitled Praising The Lord, from which the single "I Hear An Echo" will be released nationwide in August.

Pentecostals hold meeting

A Pampa group attended the 21st General Conference of the International Pentecostal Holiness Church in Oklahoma City Aug. 10-14. The highest governing body in the denomination meets every four years.

Among the 1,500 voting delegates were Mrs. Mary Maggard, representing the First Pentecostal Holiness Church of Pampa as a lay delegate, and Rev. Albert Maggard, who served as a clerical delegate.

Mrs. Maggard was also a member of the 100-voice alumni choir from Southwestern College which sang in the Sunday evening worship service. The choir was honored with two standing ovations.

Also attending from the Pampa area were Rev. Cecil Ferguson, Mrs. Susie Ferguson, Ronnie Ferguson Lori Helton, Rev. Nathan Hopson, Rev. Archie Cooper, Mrs. Virginia Cooper, Rev. Billy Williams, Mrs. Jeanie Williams and Mr. Jimmy Williams.

Major changes were made in the denomination to streamline its evangelistic outreaches while preserving its doctrinal distinctives and fundamentalist characteristics.

Delegates from around the world, as well as several thousand visitors and observers, attended the sessions. Representatives from the American Bible Society, the National Association of Evangelicals and numerous denominations expressed appreciation for the outstanding growth of the Pentecostal Holiness Church and its cooperation in worldwide evangelistic endeavors.

Rev. B.E. Underwood was elected as the denomination's new bishop. Underwood had served for the past 16 years as assistant general superintendent and as director of the World Missions Department.

The denomination now numbers 8,805 churches, with 8,003 ministers and a worldwide membership of 1,833,964. The Conference theme, "Into His Harvest," highlighted the church's plans to win 6 million souls to Christ during the next 10 years.

First Christian Church has new pastor

Dr. John T. Tate officially assumed the pastorate of First Christian Church of Pampa this past Sunday.

Dr. Tate's first impression of Pampa, he says, is that "it's an extremely friendly place," adding that "I won't say we're settled, but we're moved in."

Prior to becoming First Christian's senior minister, Dr. Tate held the same position at First Christian Church of Mineral Wells for 11 years.

He married Doris Elaine Smith of Allen on Aug. 24, 1963. They are the parents of Wendy Elaine Tate, who will be a senior this year, and John Thomas (Tommy), who will enter Pampa High School as a junior.

Dr. Tate is a graduate of San Marcos Military Academy and holds a bachelor of business administration degree from Texas Christian University. He returned to Brite Divinity School at TCU in 1978, earning a master of divinity degree, followed by a doctor of ministry degree from Brite in 1983.

His pastorates include serving as associate pastor for First Christian Church of McKinney, interim pastor for Allen Christian Church and Weston Christian Church and then senior minister of First Christian at Mineral Wells.

Dr. Tate says he and his wife felt called to come to Pampa because of First Christian's practice of and attitude about prayer.

"We're very strong believers in prayer as a vital part of Christian life," Dr. Tate said. "Doris and I rely heavily on prayer."

As the new pastor of First Christian, Dr. Tate said his first priority will be to meet the members and see what their needs and the needs of the church will be.

"Then I will follow the Lord's guidance to do his will in the church," he explained.

"That's a very generalized statement," Dr. Tate conceded. "But before you can get to know people, they need to get to know you. Every place is different. Each church has unique characteristics, just like individuals."

Dr. Tate said he's been told he'll need to get "Pampanized," something he's prepared to do.

Dr. Tate is a life member of the International Fraternity of Delta

'But before you can get to know people, they need to get to know you. Every place is different. Each church has unique characteristics, just like individuals.'

Sigma Pi and a member of Southwest Association of Christian Church Educators.

He was active in the community while at Mineral Wells, where he served as chairman of Palo Pinto Alcoholism Service, and was a member of the advisory board for the Dunbar Neighborhood Council.

He served as committeeman and scouting coordinator for Boy Scouts of America.

He founded and later served as director for the Palo Pinto General Hospital Volunteer Chaplaincy Program. He was a member of the Mineral Wells Chamber of Commerce and served three years on the Mineral Wells Independent School District board of trustees.

Dr. Tate's other associations included Citizens Against Narcotics, Mineral Wells Area Ministerial Association (twice as president), Miss Mineral Wells Scholarship Pageant board and president of Mineral Wells Junior High Parent Teachers Organization.

His denominational service includes youth coordinator and Christian Youth Fellowship conference director for District #17 Christian Church in the Southwest; Christian Church in the Southwest Regional Youth seminar leader; and regional committee member, chairman and resource person for Christian Church in the Southwest.

In the Trinity Brazos Area, Dr. Tate chaired committees and served on the board of directors for the Christian Youth Foundation Camp. He is a member and officer of the Texas Bible Chair Foundation, University of Texas at Austin, board of trustees from 1985 until 1991, serving as chairman for 1988.

'Don't Mess With Texas' reducing littering

AUSTIN (AP) — Once thought to be too aggressive, Texas' "Don't Mess With Texas" campaign is reducing litter at a rate greater than any other state over comparable periods of time, according to the state highway department. Since the highway department started the campaign four years ago, roadside trash has declined 64 percent, according to study results announced by the department Thursday. The study was conducted by the California-based Institute for Applied Research. "By combining the energies of concerned volunteers statewide with the 'Don't Mess With Texas' message, we are reminding everyone that we should all do our part to make our state and our environment cleaner and safer," said Don Clark, director of the highway department's travel and information division. Clark praised anti-litter efforts by Texans, including more than 50,000 Adopt-A-Highway volunteers and thousands of other people in community organizations around the state who have supported the cleanup effort. The campaign was the first in the nation to take aim at habitual litter-ers, who were identified through research as 18- to 34-year-old men, the department said. Among the Texas celebrities who have appeared in advertisements promoting the hard-hitting message are Houston Astros pitcher Mike Scott, and musicians Willie Nelson, Jerry Jeff Walker and the Fabulous Thunderbirds. "Overall, Texas has continued to demonstrate a greater reduction in street and roadside litter at lower cost in shorter time than any state surveyed," said Daniel Syrek, director of the institute that did the litter study.

Poland's new prime minister faces formidable challenges

By JOHN DANISZEWSKI
Associated Press Writer

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Solidarity activist Tadeusz Mazowiecki became the East bloc's first non-Communist prime minister and indicated he was ready for the formidable challenge of inspiring disillusioned Poles and staving off economic disaster. Communist Party and Solidarity lawmakers united Thursday to elect the journalist and former political prisoner in a historic 378-4 vote with 41 abstentions. Mazowiecki is the first non-Communist to lead Poland since 1944. Solidarity leader Lech Walesa, who engineered Mazowiecki's election, was the first to celebrate. "I will do everything in my power so that my premier, my child ... passes the test before society," he said. The Soviet Union, for whom Poland is the largest and most strategic Warsaw Pact ally, expressed hope relations between the countries would not suffer. Congratulations also arrived from President Bush and from the prime minister of Communist East Germany, one of the least reform-minded countries in the East bloc. Mazowiecki was elected with at least 91 votes from the 173-member Communist caucus of the Sejm, the lower house of parliament. He said he planned to assemble a Cabinet within the next week and will seek participation by all parties in parliament. He did not say how many posts would go to each. The former aide to Walesa will have to wrestle with daunting economic problems, including a $39 billion foreign debt, inflation reaching 200 percent annually and empty store shelves. He said he would seek economic support from the West but no special "privileges."

"I want to form a government capable of acting for the good of society, the nation and the state," Mazowiecki told the Sejm. In reiterating his support for Poland's East bloc treaty obligations, he said it was wrong to identify "people striving for reforms" as "enemies of the Warsaw Pact." But Mazowiecki also spoke of the need to restore "normal" political and economic life to Poland, and said that included a market-oriented economy. The state "cannot take care of everything and guarantee everything," he said. "Poland cannot afford ideological experiments any longer." Mazowiecki's election came barely 15 months after he and Walesa led a disappointed group of strikers from the Lenin Shipyard in Gdansk, ending a nationwide wave of labor unrest in April and May 1988. Renewed labor unrest last August persuaded authorities to negotiate with Solidarity. The union was legalized in April and won 261 seats it contested in June parliamentary elections. Last week, Walesa put forward Mazowiecki as the head of a governing coalition and persuaded Communist President Wojciech Jaruzelski to go along with the deal. In Moscow, the Council of Ministers said it hoped his election would not damage relations between the two countries. "We express the certainty that the traditional relations of friendship and ... cooperation between the Soviet Union and Poland will continue developing in the basis of ... equality and respect, mutual benefit and mutual responsibility," the Soviet Cabinet said in a telegram. The Soviet Union invaded Hungary in 1956 and led an invasion of Czechoslovakia in 1968 to maintain orthodox Communist rule.

Credit cards for kiddie customers teaching save now or pay later?

By CATALINA ORTIZ
Associated Press Writer
SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A bank for children thinks a credit card is just what its kiddie customers want, but one opponent says teaching a new generation how to borrow is the last thing this debt-plagued country needs.

"We think it teaches absolutely the wrong message," said Loren Dunton, president of the National Center for Financial Education, a non-profit group that seeks to promote financial responsibility.

"Our message is to save now so you can buy later, and they're promoting the philosophy of buy now and pay later." The San Diego-based center plans to use its branches in 50 states to ask parents and teachers to oppose a plan by the Young Americans Bank to provide credit cards to children ages 12 and older.

"It offers the temptation to spend that even much older people too often can't resist," Dunton said in an interview in San Francisco Wednesday.

But the Denver-based bank, whose customers are all young people, said it is trying to teach the proper use of credit as part of personal finance.

"Our feeling is that credit cards are really a way of life, and a lot of us learn about credit in an undesirable way ... without any supervision or control," bank president Linda Sanders said. "Here that is done with control."

The bank, which already offers checking accounts to customers 12 and older, expects to issue the first cards by the end of this week. It has received hundreds of applications from all over the country since announcing earlier this month it would offer MasterCard to young people through the United Bank of Denver.

Applicants must have a parent or other adult co-sign to guarantee payment, and they won't be able to exceed a credit limit of $100. Otherwise, the cards will be like those issued to adults, with monthly statements and interest accruing at an annual rate of 18.8 percent.

Dunton said the low credit limit, co-signing requirement and even instruction on responsible use are not sufficient safeguards.

"You can't expect a teenager to use it responsibly when yuppies, who have been educated to the teeth, can't do it," he said.

The center argues that excessive borrowing and consumption have become deep-rooted and are hurting the nation's economy. Americans saved only 3.2 percent of their income in 1987, for example, while Japanese saved an average of 16.5 percent.

The center advocates greater savings, a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution, and a requirement that rehabilitative education be made part of bankruptcy procedures. Dunton says there is no shame or embarrassment attached to bankruptcy filings these days, and he considers that a bad sign.

Rather than giving youngsters credit cards, Dunton advocates teaching all elementary school students about money and high school seniors about personal finance, including credit.

Sanders said she was sympathetic to Dunton's concerns. Teaching children about financial responsibility was one of the reasons the bank was founded two years ago, she said.

Young Americans, state-chartered and federally insured, has $5.9 million in deposits from more than 9,300 customers. They range in age from newborns to 22, with the bulk 8 to 14, Sanders said.

The bank has about 1,100 checking accounts held by customers with an average age of 15. It also has about 1,500 borrowers with a total of $950,000 outstanding, about a third of which is for student loans.

Customers come from across the nation, although the majority live in Colorado.

Hearing is believing for husband who snores

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Abby is off on a two-week vacation, but she left behind some of her favorite letters taken from her best-selling book, "The Best of Dear Abby.")

DEAR ABBY: Shortly after I married Mark, I discovered that he snored. When I told him he snored, he denied it. Abby, his snoring sounded like a chicken bone in a garbage disposal!

Finally I decided I had had enough of his denials, so I bought a tape recorder and learned how to use it. One night after Mark fell asleep, I held the microphone under his nose and got about 10 minutes of snoring. Then I reversed the tape, turned up the volume and nearly blasted him out of bed. (Thank heavens he didn't hit me.)

Only after I threatened him with a nightly rerun did he agree to see an ear, nose and throat specialist for an examination. The doctor discovered several polyps (small growths) in Mark's nose, which he said could be the cause of his snoring. The polyps were removed in a simple surgical procedure, and now my darling snores no more! Pass this on.
PEACE AT LAST

DEAR PEACE: Not all snoring is due to growths in the nose, but

Dear Abby

it's well worth a trip to a doctor to find out.

DEAR ABBY: On our honeymoon I was horrified to discover that I had married the world's champion snorer. I used elbows and feet for temporary relief. Now we sleep in twin beds and I keep a yardstick under my bed. When Michael starts snoring, I get the yardstick and whack him with it. Now, as soon as he hears me reaching for the yardstick, he shuts up.

MICHAEL'S WIFE

DEAR ABBY: I've been sleeping with a piece of wedding cake under my pillow every night since June 17 because I heard it would get me a man. Is this true?

ALWAYS A BRIDESMAID

DEAR ALWAYS: I can't guarantee you a man, but you'll get plenty of ants.

DEAR ABBY'S Cookbooklet is a collection of favorite recipes—all tested, tried and terrific! To order, send your name and address, plus check or money order for $3.50 ($4 in Canada) to: Abby's Cookbooklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Rose still maintains innocence

Baseball great banished for life for betting on his own team

By RONALD BLUM
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Pete Rose, maintaining his innocence to the end, completed an epic plunge from baseball's pantheon to exile when he was banished from the sport for life.

Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti permanently barred the Cincinnati manager on Thursday for having bet on his own team.

"One of the game's greatest players has engaged in a variety of acts which have stained the game," Giamatti said, "and he must now live with the consequences of those acts."

Baseball's all-time hits leader had been scrutinized for six months and four days. When it was over, Giamatti concluded that "there was no position that I could take ... except permanent ineligibility."

With that, Giamatti closed the 27-year major league career of Charlie Hustle, a three-time batting champion and a former most valuable player.

Rose again denied the central charge: that he bet on the Reds numerous times during the 1985, 1986 and 1987 seasons. Two former associates, Ronald Peters and Paul G. Janszen, told baseball investigators of Rose's gambling and supplied documents that backed their claims. The 48-year-old Rose remained defiant to the end.

"Despite what the commissioner said today, I didn't bet on baseball," he said. "I have too much respect for the game, too much love for the game."

Rose may apply for reinstatement after one year and indicated he would. But none of the 14 people previously banned ever were restored.

"My life is baseball," Rose said. "I hope to get back into baseball as soon as I possibly can. I'm looking forward to that."

While Rose was confident that he would return in a year, Giamatti repeatedly stated there was no deal.

"I cannot say what my inclination would be after one year toward an application for reinstatement," the 51-year-old commissioner said.

The five-page settlement Giamatti and Rose signed on Wednesday makes no mention of the offenses that brought about the ban, baseball's first since Phillies president William D. Cox was barred in 1943 for betting on his team.

"Nothing in this agreement shall be deemed either an admission or a denial by Pete Rose of the allegation that he bet on any major league baseball game," the settlement said.

However, Giamatti made his reasons clear in a news conference.

"In the absence of a hearing and, therefore, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, I am confronted by the factual record of the Dowd report and on the basis of that, yes, I have concluded that he bet on baseball," Giamatti said, adding that he concluded Rose had bet on the Reds.

Rose is now prohibited from appearing at old-timers' games, wearing a major league uniform or working in any capacity for a big league club. He can't even step on a field.

Giamatti, the former Yale University president who became commissioner on April 1, said he thought Rose had a gambling problem.

"I think confident steps toward rehabilitation should be taken in a direction that heretofore has not been taken," the commissioner said. "But rehabilitation is not required in the agreement."

Rose, who had admitted betting hundreds of thousands of dollars on football and basketball games, scoffed at that suggestion.

"I don't think I have a gambling problem at all," he said

Rose listens as his lawyer, Reuven Katz, reads a statement during a Thursday press conference.

Volleyball action

Pampa's Dori Kidwell keeps the ball in play during volleyball action Thursday night against Amarillo High in McNeely Fieldhouse. AHS won 15-3, 15-7.

Rangers bounce back

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Texas Rangers utility man Jeff Kunkel says he saw a different attitude in the dugout and on the field after the team dropped two straight games to the Oakland A's and appeared to be dropping out of the American League West race.

Kunkel made the observation after the Rangers bounced back to take the final game of a crucial three-game series with the A's, 6-2, Thursday night.

"There was a lot of winning attitude and enthusiasm in the dugout tonight," Kunkel, who played center field Thursday night, said. "Not like the last two nights. There was a little doubt that we could beat them. Tonight, confidence was in our favor."

The Rangers had opened the series against the division-leading A's Tuesday night with ace Nolan Ryan on the mound and in need of a series sweep to get back in the race. Ryan suffered from lack of support as the Rangers lost, 2-0.

Rangers manager Bobby Valentine criticized the team's play and said some of the players appeared to be spectators as Ryan became the first pitcher in baseball history to get 5,000 strikeouts.

Sloppy outfield play contributed to a loss in the second game of the series, but it was a different story Thursday night.

"Nolan pitched a gem and lost," Rangers manager Bobby Valentine said. "(Kevin) Brown pitched a good game and lost. We were in all three games."

The A's saw their lead over the second-place California Angels fall to two games after California's 5-0 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

"Yeah, we watch the scoreboard," said A's manager Tony La Russa. "But it doesn't impact the way we play the game. My evaluation of the series is that we played our butts off and won two of three."

The Rangers open a three-game series with the Angels tonight. Texas has four games remaining with Oakland and seven with California.

"This club just needs to get hot," said Mike Jeffcoat, 7-5, who allowed two runs and six hits over 6 1-3 innings. "We need to get on a 10- or 12-game streak. We haven't been hot since May. There's no reason why we can't."

Julio Franco went 3-for-3 with an RBI single in a three-run fifth and Jack Daugherty tripled, singled and stole home to key Texas' 11-hit attack and help snap Oakland's five-game winning streak.

Gary Mielke pitched a perfect final 2-3 innings for his first major league save after Jeffcoat lowered his ERA to 1.59 over his last four starts.

"Jeffcoat had problems but he kept battling and throwing strikes," Valentine said. "He gives you a little extra effort when you need it. Mielke was outstanding. What a job he did. He had a great sinker and that's all he threw."

Oakland's Carney Lansford went 0-for-4 to snap a 19-game hitting streak. The streak was halted when Lansford grounded into a controversial tag play at third in the seventh.

Mark McGwire hit his eighth career homer in 15 lifetime hits at Arlington Stadium, a two-run shot in the fourth, giving the A's a 2-1 lead.

Dallas native Storm Davis, 14-6, gave up three fifth-inning runs to lose to the Rangers for only the third time in 15 lifetime decisions.

Davis said he was happy that Angels cooled the Royals, who had won nine straight. Oakland opens a weekend series with Kansas City tonight.

"I'm glad Kansas City lost," Davis said. "Maybe that will cool them off with us going in there tomorrow."

Oakland took a 2-1 lead in the fourth when Jose Canseco was hit by a Jeffcoat pitch and McGwire lined a shot into the left-field stands, his 24th of the season and fourth at Arlington Stadium this year.

Center fielder Dave Henderson's three-base fielding error in the second gave the Rangers a 1-0 lead. La Russa said Henderson's sore legs contributed to the error.

"He can make the routine plays but the tough plays he can't get to," La Russa said. "Arlington has a real small outfield and it's grass so I left him out there. But Kansas City is a big park and it's artificial turf so I'll have to give him some rest."

Texas padded its lead to 6-2 in the sixth when Kunkel singled, Daugherty tripled into the right field corner to score Kunkel and Daugherty stole home.

Daugherty was running on an aborted squeeze play and slid in safely when catcher Ron Hassey failed to catch the ball cleanly.

"A couple of things we usually do (defensively) we just didn't get done," Davis said.

Rangers designated hitter Harold Baines left the game in the fourth after aggravating a hamstring injury.

Valentine said Baines will be sidelined through the weekend series with California.

"He won't play for a while," Valentine said. "He can't run at all."

Astros continue slide

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The Houston Astros couldn't wait to get out of Pittsburgh. They almost didn't.

The Astros and Pittsburgh Pirates have played more extra-inning games than any other teams in the majors, so it was no surprise that each gave a little extra Thursday night.

But all the Astros finally gave up in a 3-2, 14-inning loss to Pittsburgh was some more ground to the first-place San Francisco Giants in the National League West race. The Pirates gave more warning they're going to ruin some opponents' 1989 seasons as they prepare for 1990.

"This game has a lot of integrity, and we owe it to the other teams to prove we're going to play our butts off," Manager Jim Leyland said after the Pirates completed a three-game sweep. "I think the Giants will appreciate it."

Manager Art Howe's Astros had won seven of their first nine games against Pittsburgh, but scored only four runs over 32 innings in this series. Houston, only 1½ games out of the lead Tuesday, finished the series four games back.

The Astros managed only three hits off four Pirates pitchers, but didn't lose until Jose Lind's medium-range sacrifice fly scored Gary Redus with one out in the 14th.

"We just didn't have any offense. We were flat," said Howe, whose Astros produced only two hits in the final eight innings. "We got a good pitching performance, but ... we had no offense the whole series."

The Astros, held to two solo homers in the first two games, had only one hit in the first six innings off Pirates starter Doug Drabek, but led 2-1 thanks to costly Pittsburgh errors by third baseman Bobby Bonilla and first baseman Redus. Drabek departed after giving up just two hits in nine innings.

The Pirates tied the score in the sixth when Mike LaValliere barely beat out a force-play grounder, allowing Barry Bonds to score from third. They stranded runners at third in the 12th and 13th innings before Redus doubled to center to start the 14th.

LaValliere's sacrifice bunt moved Redus to third, and Howe elected to let Juan Agosto, 3-5, his fourth pitcher, face the slumping Jose Lind.

Lind had only six hits in his previous 66 at-bats and hadn't gotten the ball out of the infield all night. He lofted a fly ball to medium-range left. After dropping back a couple of steps to make the catch, Kevin Bass' strong throw was too late to nail Redus.

"I didn't think about walking him (Lind)," Howe said.

Retired pastor-carpenter stays busy with feathered flock

By KIT KING

Denon Record-Chronicle

SANGER (AP) — Each morning the rustle of thousands of tiny wings greets Harvey Anthony as he steps out his door. He looks into pens filled with small brown birds flying or skittering over the sand.

Anthony raises quail in his Sanger back yard. And, he said, it's a rapidly growing business. Demand is always larger than supply. Buyers, who purchase quail for training dogs, restocking hunting grounds or eating, typically want 50 to 100 birds at a time. At $3.50 a bird, that adds up fast.

But money isn't why Anthony raises quail. The retired pastor and carpenter began with the birds around 10 years ago. "A cousin of mine had a bunch in his yard," Anthony related. "I saw them, all gathered in a circle with their heads pointed out and they just fascinated me."

He bought 105 chicks for $35 and raised 98 of them. "I haven't had that good a luck since," he said. Quail are delicate and hard to raise, he said.

Anthony built all his coops, flight pens, incubators and brooders himself. And he cares for the birds alone — a time consuming venture.

He begins with eggs in the incubator and they hatch about 24 days later, he said. About 24 hours after the eggs hatch, he moves the chicks to the brooder where they are kept warm, fed special feed and given water in pans filled with stones. "I put rocks in so the little ones won't drown," he said. Once they are large enough, he removes the rocks.

He feeds his quail special flight-conditioning and feather-growing food, which doesn't put fat on the birds. This makes them particularly attractive to dog trainers. "I've got one man who comes every year for birds. He says he passes up lots of quail farms because he knows my birds will fly."

For trainers, it's essential that the birds fly when flushed by the dogs. For this reason, Anthony seldom lets people into the pens and doesn't go in himself except when it's necessary.

"I know one trainer bought some birds that wouldn't fly because the breeder would go into the pen each night and sit there and feed the birds. They were used to people so they didn't fly."

When the birds are a few weeks old, they have to be "debeaked" — the tip of the beak is squared off. "If you don't debeak 'em, they start pecking their feet and feather picking" — pulling the feathers out of their back until they're nearly nude."

Until they are grown, the birds must be kept warm

— at least at 70 degrees. But heat doesn't seem to bother them. With aluminum roofs and screened sides, Anthony's coops get plenty of ventilation. In winter, he covers the screen with plastic to protect the birds from the cold.

To protect them from disease, he gives them feed that includes mild medication and "if they start to get drabby I give them a little Teramycin."

When he's not "fooling with the birds," Anthony doesn't rest. At "82 and a half" he has plenty to keep him busy. The Anthony home is filled with antiques, beautifully restored by Anthony and his wife, Willie.

The walls are covered with paintings and charcoal drawings of windmills and other country scenes, all done by Anthony. He started painting about 60 years ago, he said. "It's something I just have to do once in a while."

Pat Sajak's show makes CBS money

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Is Pat Sajak about to meet the same fate as a legion of challengers who assaulted the ramparts of Johnny Carson's late-night kingdom?

The Pat Sajak Show premiered on CBS Jan. 9, and after a brief honeymoon with the audience fell into the ratings doldrums that defeated Carson rivals from Les Crane to Dick Cavett to Alan Thicke to Joan Rivers.

Sajak has not only failed to lure viewers away from Carson, he faces his own serious challenge from Arsenio Hall. Although The Arsenio Hall Show is syndicated and does not compete directly against Sajak, his ratings have been running behind those for Hall. Another problem is that Hall's show is a favorite of the young audience most prized by advertisers.

Sajak is also behind ABC's Nightline and NBC's Late Night With David Letterman. In addition, it's slightly behind the ratings CBS had last year for a mixture of late-night shows.

Reportedly, CBS executives said they would kill the show if the ratings didn't improve by the end of the year. Some people are starting to write Sajak's obituary. But according to sources at CBS, as in the case of Mark Twain's reported death, the reports may be greatly exaggerated.

"As far as I know, there's no ticking clock," said Sajak. "I honestly don't know what their expectations are. My department is doing the show, not worrying about the ratings."

"I have no control on the ratings. I do have control over seeing that the show is good and I think in time that will affect the ratings. We had no illusions about going in and knocking anybody off and becoming an overnight sensation. It doesn't work that way in late night. We said from the beginning we'd get an early splash out of curiosity, then people would settle into their old viewing habits and in the long haul we would bring them back."

An important point, perhaps the crucial point, is that the Sajak show is making a profit for CBS.

"The fact that Sajak is running behind NBC and ABC and even behind what CBS had last year certainly generates a discussion of how long we'll hang in," said David Poltrack, CBS senior vice president for planning and research. "On the other hand, the show is highly marketable. Even with the low ratings the advertising rates are higher and the spots are selling well."

"It is a show that has already improved our revenue picture," he said, "and has the potential of improving our profitability dramatically if it can develop a larger audience. That suggests patience and an investment of time and energy to get it right."

Part of the show's profitability undoubtedly is due to the fact that a talk show is cheaper to produce than the action-adventure shows it replaced.

"We've been fiddling with the show from the beginning," said Sajak. "But we're not going to imitate Oprah Winfrey and wander into the audience looking for lesbian nuns. We've played around with various elements, but I think the show is basically the same as it was when we went on the air. I signed up for an entertainment-oriented talk show and that's what I'm doing."
