Central Park was ornamented with a light snow covering this morning as the season's first snowfall brought two inches of snow to the Pampa area.

Snowfall brings welcome moisture

From Staff and Wire Reports

Early morning temperatures of 28 degrees and moisture in the atmosphere combined to create the first snowfall of the season in the Pampa area today.

Darrell Sehorn, meteorologist for KGRO/KOMX Radio, said two inches of snow had fallen through 10 a.m. today and that it had a high moisture level, which should help winter wheat crops.

"We'll start seeing a little greater possibility of moisture from here on out," Sehorn said. "But the 30-day outlook is still (calling for) below normal moisture."

He said the next good opportunity for rain or snow would be the middle of next week.

Sehorn also said that temperatures will be above normal for the next 30 days.

Forecasters with the National Weather Service said that because of recent warm temperatures, it would be difficult for the snow to stick on most roadways although some may accumulate on bridges and overpasses.

In addition to blanketing the central and northern Panhandle with snow, a weather system moving across the state has created a wide variety of adverse weather today.

A flash flood watch was in effect in extreme Southeast Texas, a dense fog advisory was in effect during the pre-dawn hours for the coastal bend and coastal plain.

Numerous showers and thunderstorms were reported over Southeast Texas and scattered showers were reported over East Texas and South Texas today.

Some light rain and drizzle was reported over North Texas.

A cold front extended early today from a developing low pressure system in Southeast Texas southward to the coastal plains.

Forecasts called for clearing skies and cool to cold temperatures statewide Friday.

Lows tonight will be mostly in the upper teens in the Panhandle and mountains, the 20s and 30s across the rest of West Texas and in North Texas and in the upper 20s over the Hill Country and in the 30s and 40s over the rest of South Texas.

Highs Friday will be in the 40s across West Texas and North Texas and in the 50s across South Texas.

A cold front extended from a developing low pressure system in southeast Texas southward to along the coastal plains.

Early morning temperatures were mostly in the 40s and 50s, ranging from the 30s in West Texas to the 60s along the coast in South Texas. Extremes ranged from 32 at Dalhart to 67 at Brownsville, Kingsville and Corpus Christi.

Hemphill County commissioner indicted on misdemeanor charges of misconduct

CANADIAN - Misdemeanor indictments of official misconduct returned this week by a Hemphill County grand jury against County Commissioner Robert Forrest did not change his decision to seek re-election.

Forrest, 75, filed for re-election on Wednesday.

He could not be reached for comment today, but earlier told an Amarillo newspaper, "I have had a lot of neighbors and signers asking me to run again."

Attorney David A. Schulman of Lubbock, who represents Forrest, said in a telephone interview today, "He (Forrest) intends to plead not guilty and we intend to try the cases. He feels he has not done anything wrong and has been a good commissioner."

"I fully expect not guilty verdicts and we plan to get him off even if it takes three trials," Schulman said.

The Precinct 4 county commissioner is seeking his third term as county commissioner.

A spokeswoman in the county clerk's office said today Forrest was indicted by the grand jury on three charges of official misconduct.

"They were transferred immediately to the county court since they are misdemeanors," the spokeswoman said.

Allegations against Forrest include that he misapplied property belonging to county government, that he used a county scraper for personal reasons and that he placed a cattle guard on land he leases by using county equipment.

A citizen's complaint prompted the investigation by the grand jury, according to officials. County Attorney Charles Kessie, prosecutor in the case, said the Texas Rangers were called into the investigation to keep it independent and objective.

One indictment - regarding the county scraper - was for a class A misdemeanor, which carries a maximum $2,000 fine and one year of imprisonment.

The other two indictments were class B, which carry a maximum $1,000 fine and 180 days in jail.

Regarding the trying of the case, Kessie said this morning, "I don't discuss my plans in regard to cases under litigation."

Forrest was released on personal recognizance bonds on all three charges.

Man on rampage kills 14 women in Montreal

By MEG DENNISON
Associated Press Writer

MONTREAL (AP) - A man who blamed feminists for ruining his life stormed into the University of Montreal engineering school, singling out and fatally shooting 14 women in a macabre spree that ended with his suicide, police say.

Nine women and four men were wounded, two critically, in what was the worst massacre in Canadian history. Most of the dead and wounded were students.

The killer, clutching a semi-automatic rifle and wearing ammunition belts, stalked three floors in the bustling, modern school building Wednesday and at one point ordered all the men out of a crowded classroom, police said.

"You're all a bunch of feminists," he screamed before opening fire on a group of cowering young women.

The Montreal police department's public relations officer arrived on the scene and found the body of his daughter, a student, among the dead.

"I heard the gunman say: 'I want the women,'" said student Francois Borgeleau, who said she heard 20 to 30 shots fired during the spree.

Police identified the gunman, who appeared to be in his 20s, only as Marc. They said a three-page letter that spewed hatred for women was found on his body.

The handwritten letter blamed failures in the gunman's life on unidentified women and said he was going to kill some women in revenge, said Jacques Duscheneau, a senior police investigator.

Duscheneau said the gunman identified himself as a student, but did not specify a school. The weapon was a semi-automatic rifle and 35 to 37 shots were fired, he told reporters.

Police and witnesses said the man entered the school about 4:30 p.m. EST as the building was crowded with students on the last day of classes before exams.

The gunman walked into the first-floor cafeteria and fatally shot three women, Montreal Police director

Claude St. Laurent said.

He then went up to the second floor and walked into a classroom containing 60 students, ordering the men into one corner and the women into another, police said.

He told the men to leave, then screamed in French before opening fire on the women: "You're all a bunch of feminists," St. Laurent said. Six women died in the classroom.

A woman in an administration office was killed on the same floor.

The gunman then climbed to the third floor, where he killed four more women in the corridor, police said. He continued up to the fourth and fifth floors, shooting and wounding men and women.

Police say he then returned to the third floor and turned the gun on himself.

As word spread of the rampage, distraught parents came to the university seeking their children.

Pierre Leclair, the Montreal police's head of public relations, arrived and found his daughter, Maryse, dead on the floor, according to university spokesman Richard Doin.

A temporary morgue was set up inside, and the school set up a hotline to help provide information. All next of kin had been notified by midnight.

"All I know is that a crazy guy came in here and began shooting at anything that moved," said Dominique Berube, 22, one of scores of terrified students who ran from the building.

Student Eric Chavarie, who was in the classroom when the killer separated the students by sex, said "we thought it was a joke, but he fired a shot in the air and separated us into two groups, the guys in one corner and the girls in (another) corner."

"...he asked the guys to leave, he left the girls in there. We got outside in the hallway and for a couple of minutes he stayed in there and after when he got out he leveled his gun at a group of people who were there and he shot three or four shots," he said. "I saw some people fall."

Review Board upholds appraisal of Combs-Worley Bldg. in appeal

By BETH MILLER
Staff Writer

Gray County Appraisal Review Board sided with the Gray County Appraisal District on Wednesday during a protest hearing concerning the Combs-Worley Building at Russell and Kingsmill.

Attorney Bill Waters, representing Pebble Carter, owner of the building, asserted the $398,730 appraised value in 1989 was simply too high for the 58-year-old office building that has not made a profit in years.

He said the value was raised 41 percent from 1988 to 1989 on the building and suggested a value of $250,000 would be more in line.

Pat Bagley, chief appraiser for the appraisal district, said after additional information was obtained following the appraisal, the appraisal district would recommend a value of $315,230, lowering the original appraisal by $83,500.

The three members of the Appraisal Review Board present - Larry Cross, Dudley Steele and Dean Burger - agreed with the $315,230 assessment following the two-hour hearing.

Appraisal district personnel, including Judy Morris, assistant chief appraiser, and Jim Howell, field appraiser, explained the uniqueness of the Combs-Worley Building.

Morris said there were no "like sales" to compare the building with, which is called the market approach and is considered one of the best appraising tools.

"The market approach has little merit as the Combs-Worley is unique and no sales were obtained that were comparable," Howell said.

The final value of $315,230 was recommended after more information was obtained through personal interviews, study of the original plans, gathering of income/expense statements, lease agreements, occupancy rate and studies of like property sales in the Panhandle area, Howell told board members.

"The income approach has little merit as this approach assumes the leaseholder is leasing at a competitive average per square foot value with long-term leases," Howell said.

Combs-Worley, a 32,656-square-foot building, averages $3.19 per square foot, with that figure including the lobbies, hallways and stairwells. Howell said the "typical office space" in Pampa is $6 per square foot.

The building was appraised at $250,000 in 1975. Howell said that if the comparative cost index from 1975 to 1989 is applied and depreciation is applied, the value would be $357,045.

Using the Marshall-Swift Appraisal Guide, the building was depreciated by 75 percent less two percent depreciation for an updated heating and air-conditioning system.

Harvey Nienstiel, an accountant who has served as building manager at Combs-Worley since 1938, said he has also completed all income tax returns for the property since that time.

He said that since 1975 the building has been owned solely by Pebble Carter and that he has collected the rents and kept the records since 1938.

"I pay all their bills and prepared the income tax records," Nienstiel said.

Nienstiel said he originally rented the building on a square foot basis, but now uses a percentage increase. He said he does not have the tenants sign a lease agreement and all utilities, with the exception of telephone, are provided.

Pampan recalls events he experienced at Pearl Harbor

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

He remembers that day 48 years ago with crystal clarity.

He was in line for breakfast in the mess hall. Around 7 a.m. he heard explosions in the distance. How odd, he thought, that there would be bombing practice at this hour at the Wheeler Field bombing range.

The bombs continued, rattling the barracks. But it was when machine gun fire began strafing the mess hall that Sgt. Clint Lewis, 23, knew something was very wrong.

Lewis, now 71, is a Pampa bail bondsman who was serving as a desk sergeant in the Army when Pearl Harbor was attacked, Dec. 7, 1941.

"I was standing in the mess line going for breakfast," Lewis recalled. "This division was at Schofield Barracks 50 miles from Honolulu, directly across the street from Wheeler Field."

"The first indication we had was the bombs going off," he said of the early morning attack by the Japanese, which hurled the United States into World War II. "Then the planes made a turn and came back toward the airfield. In doing so they came over the barracks and were strafing us with machine gun fire."

Lewis said he responded by seeking out the supply sergeant and getting him to open the arms room.

After weapons were issued, Lewis took his position at the desk, monitoring phone calls for the military police, who were called into service as martial law was declared on the island.

"Everything is such a blur," he said of what happened next. "I was on the desk for three days and three nights with one other man. Everyone else was out in the field. One of us would man the desk while the other slept."

What is not a blur is the confusion that swept over a military base caught totally off guard by an enemy attack.

Hadn't it been only weeks ago that the Japanese ambassador had stayed in barracks near where Lewis lived?

"We entertained him," Lewis said. "Everyone's guard was down. No one suspected a thing. I firmly believe that had the Japanese followed with a landing force, they could have taken the island. There was such a lack of preparedness of the troops and commanders."

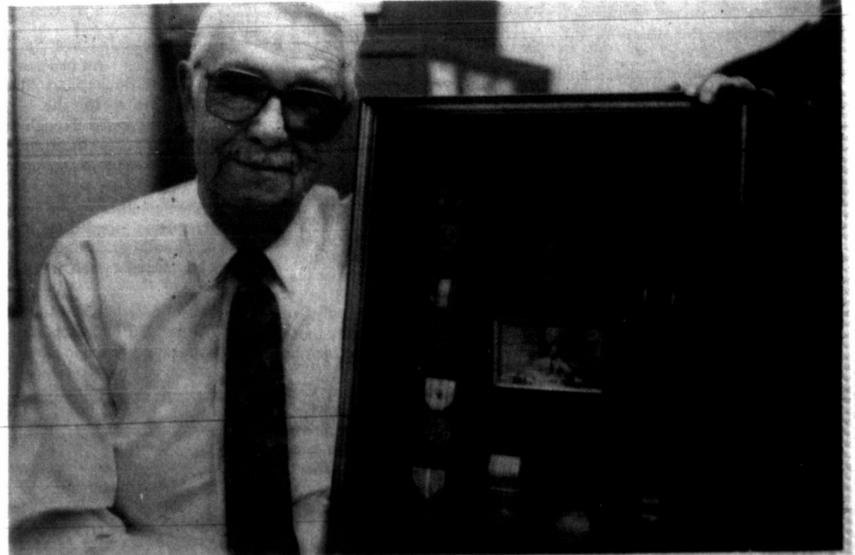

That evening, after the attack, with a blackout in effect and soldiers wondering when or if the Japanese would strike again, the order was issued to evacuate all women and children off military bases and into downtown Honolulu.

So, in total darkness, Lewis and others worked to move hundreds of dependents to safer ground. It was a bit of mayhem he said he will never forget.

In 1942 Lewis was transferred to an infantry division that occupied the beaches around Oahu, waiting and watching for enemy attacks.

That move to a combat command would be an indication of things to come for Lewis.

Sarpalius appraises world political changes

By BEAR MILLS Staff Writer

Changes in world political situations will mean the United States can spend less money on the military and more on education and the war on drugs, according to Rep. Bill Sarpalius, D-Amarillo.

During a press briefing in Pampa Wednesday night, Sarpalius said that while he still supports a strong military, he believes changes in communist governments around the world will mean U.S. troop reductions to some degree.

"I had a man at a town hall meeting who was 80 say to me the other day that he never thought he'd live to see these world changes," Sarpalius said. "There are still a lot of problems in the world. This is no reason to become lax."

However, he did indicate he was "leaning very strongly" toward military cuts.

Sarpalius also left open the possibility that some military personnel could be diverted to combating shipments of narcotics coming into the United States from South America.

In grading the job George Bush has done as a freshman president, Sarpalius rated it as only "fair."

"I think he has misled the people," Sarpalius stated. "He got on television and gave this beautiful speech about drugs. But his proposals would have cut $16 million in money coming to Texas." Since leaving state politics for his current job, Sarpalius said he has been surprised to learn how much waste and theft occurs in federal programs. He promised to make a concerted effort to revamp some programs and cut others to reduce graft.

While stating that the budget and not raising taxes would be the primary concern of Congress when it convenes after New Year's, he said he would also be seeking more federal money for public education.

Sarpalius also predicted that a re-worked version of a clean water bill for Lake Meredith desalinization will be approved.

"We'll come back the next session," Sarpalius said, "and we've got the votes. We're talking about clean water for 13 cities including Amarillo and Lubbock."

Sarpalius said he feels good about a new Clean Air Act and that new restrictions on gas consumption will force motorists to go to alternative fuel sources that rely on agricultural products, thus boosting the rural West Texas economy.

He also said that concerns by companies like Southwestern Public Service that their coal-fired operations will be hurt by the legislation are unfounded.

"I don't see that SPS will be hurt at all," Sarpalius said. "They have a process for cleaning the coal. I don't believe Congress will penalize them for their operation."

Appeal

From 1976 through 1988, Nensiel told the board members, the building would not have had more than a 2.5 percent profit, even if depreciation had not been applied.

Asked by Waters why an owner would continue operating a building that showed no profit, Nensiel replied, "Pride of ownership."

Kenneth Lard, an appraiser from Amarillo, said he is familiar with Pampa real estate, since he was born and reared in Pampa. He said he has been appraising since 1949 and is familiar with the Combs-Worley Building.

"I think it is overpriced, period," Lard said of the 1989 assessment by the Appraisal District.

Lard said he had not done an appraisal on the building because it would take "thousands of dollars and be 50-70 pages." He said he had used information provided by the owner of the building and the appraisal district in coming up with his opinion.

He referred to the Combs-Worley Building as being "unsalable" property.

Appraisal Review Board Chairman Steele said, "To me you have an abnormally low rental rate of about $3 per square foot. It's just an observation."

Nensiel said it would be unprofitable to raise the rent, because tenants would go elsewhere and the building would ultimately lose even more money.

Stating the market had not changed since 1988, Waters said, "There is no logical or reasonable basis to raise that value from that figure."

Although the $315,230 appraisal is more than the 1988 appraisal of $283,630, Bagley said the 1988 appraisal was undervalued and the new appraisal value is an attempt to place the property at a fair market value.

Cross made the motion to accept the appraisal district's recommendation, and Burger seconded the motion, saying, "I don't believe you're being taxed any higher than anyone else."

Lefors elementary students to give Christmas program

LEFORS — Elementary school children in Lefors will present This Is Christmas and Santa and the Three Scrooges as their seasonal programs during tonight's 7 p.m. PTA meeting.

Lela Harris, music teacher at the school, said the two plays, lasting about 20 minutes each, will feature music, dance and touching scenes which bring out the true spirit of Christmas.

This Is Christmas will be performed by students in grades one through three and is the story of a kitten's first Christmas, Harris said.

Students will be dressed as pets, presents or food. In addition, there will be a "live" tree and human members of the family who live in the house.

Harris said the presents, food and pets tell the kitten the story of Christmas. The production includes a rap number by the presents, done to a saucy french kick.

Santa and the Three Scrooges will tell the story of three heartless souls who buy the North Pole and turn around and sell it, evicting Santa Claus and cancelling Christmas in the process.

"But Santa and all the children come to the rescue and save Christmas," Harris said.

Members of the public are invited to the program and no admission will be charged Harris said.

Pampan

December of that year he was on a ship heading for Australia. Plans called for his division to take jungle training in Australia before joining fighting in the Burma-China theater.

"We stopped in Suva, on the island of Fiji, on the way and were diverted to Guadalcanal," Lewis said. "There the Army working it's way into the jungle, fighting Japanese and taking heavy casualties."

Several of Lewis' buddies were killed.

"When they say war is hell, they underestimate the situation," he insisted.

"You didn't have time to think of what effect it was having on you psychologically. You fought as far into the jungle as you could until dark, you dug in and at daylight you fought more."

During that time, Lewis lost friends to both sniper fire and hand-to-hand combat with the Japanese.

"You can't dwell on it though, or you become morbid," he said, wiping his eyes as if to wipe away horrible visions that had seeped back into his mind. "The public doesn't understand what you've seen and the things you've been through."

Lewis was evacuated from Guadalcanal after he contracted malaria, yellow jaundice and severe sinusitis from exposure to the elements of an untamed jungle.

First he went to New Zealand and from there to San Francisco.

But Lewis' exploits were not over. He re-enlisted and served in Japan during the occupation that followed that country's surrender.

After his discharge from the Army in 1953, Lewis went into a 20-year career in law enforcement, serving with sheriff's departments in Dallas and El Paso.

After that came 14 years as a private investigator in Dallas before moving to Pampa and his current profession as a bail bondsman.

"Someone said the other day that I spent years putting people in jail and now I work to get them out," Lewis laughed.

To a suggestion he should write a book, Lewis responded, "My wife keeps telling me I need to. And I will if I can ever slow down long enough."

Slowing down does not seem to be in the cards though.

Lewis is an active member in the Pearl Harbor Survivors Association, Guadalcanal Campaign Veterans Association, Disabled American Veterans, Veterans of Foreign Wars, American Legion and several national republican groups.

During his war years he collected the Bronze Star, Combat Infantry Badge, Good Conduct Medal, with two clasps, and numerous other rewards for his service to his country.

And, though 48 years have passed, Lewis never forgets those tumultuous war days or the men he fought beside.

He's planning on visiting with them during a 50th year Pearl Harbor reunion planned for 1991.

"War movies don't portray what war is," Lewis concludes. "When I think of war I think of being tired, dirty, hungry, getting rained on and sleeping on the ground."

"But most of all, I think of the uncertainty of not knowing what's going to happen next. You don't know if you're going to live or die.

"You just never know if you'll make it out of that fox hole or not."

Those are thoughts that Lewis may dwell on just a bit, 48 years to the day after he first was hurled into combat.

PHS, middle school speech students attend tournament

Members of the Pampa High School Speech team competed in their fourth tournament of the season on Dec. 1 and 2 at Amarillo High School.

Jason Lemons and Josh Steele of the debate team went undefeated into the quarterfinal round. Shay Good, interpreter for the high school team, competed through the semifinal round in impromptu speaking and humorous interpretation.

Another member of the team, Tiah Murry, was awarded the Ryan Wingate Medal for outstanding potential, noted coach Barbara McCain.

Seven middle school students from Pampa, led by coach Kathy McIntire, also competed in the tournament, their first of the year.

Committee approves workers' comp bill

By SCOTT ROTHSCHILD
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — The president of the largest organized labor group in Texas said he will work against a workers' compensation reform measure approved by a House-Senate conference committee.

"It's still not a good bill. It's a bad bill for workers," Joe Gunn, president of the Texas AFL-CIO, said.

The committee's plan, adopted 9-1, will be considered by the full House and Senate later in the week.

The Senate has already rejected a similar proposal, 17-14, but conference committee co-chairman Sen. John Montford predicted this bill has a better chance of picking up the necessary two-vote swing for approval.

"There were probably 20 major, substantive changes in an attempt to bridge the gap between the House and the Senate," Montford, D-Lubbock, said.

But Gunn disagreed, saying the changes were minor and that the bill would put workers at a disadvantage against their employers and insurance companies when trying to collect benefits for on-the-job injuries.

Sen. Gene Green, the lone dissenter on the panel, said he was unsure of the bill's chances in the Senate, which has earlier supported proposals backed by trial lawyers and organized labor.

"There were some changes in the bill, but not enough that I felt like we had the ability to recognize individual workers' needs in the system," Green, D-Houston, said.

Green pushed for amendments on benefits and resolving comp claims similar to ones that the Senate had already approved. But those were struck down by the committee.

"The bill has improved, but it's not improved enough that I can sell it to the people in my district," Green said.

Slate Rep. Richard Smith, the House leader on the issue, predicted the bill would pass and Gov. Bill Clements would sign it.

The conference committee bill was produced after marathon closed-door sessions.

Before the panel voted, Montford awarded each conferee an orange military helmet, with the inscription, "Workers' Comp. Battle 3," which refers to the number of times lawmakers have taken up the issue.

Business groups claim the reform plan will streamline the bureaucracy and reduce costs by restricting litigation in disputed comp claims. This, they argue, will help the workers secure timely and just benefits.

But labor groups and trial lawyers, who represent injured workers, say it will make it more difficult for workers to sue insurance companies when they believe they are being cheated in the amount of benefits.

A new method of calculating benefits is unfair, they say, because it treats all permanent injuries the same, regardless of what their job is.

For instance, the loss of a finger may end the career of a piano player, but doesn't have the same affect on a truck driver.

Lawmakers, now in a second special legislative, have fought all year over proposals to change the workers' comp system, which has been criticized for high employer-paid premiums and low benefits to injured workers.

Two of those senators targeted by the business lobby to switch their votes were present during the committee action.

Sen. Judith Zaffirini, D-Laredo, said, "We'll have to see what the final product is. I see a lot of progress though and this is the first time we've seen both sides negotiating."

Sen. Chet Brooks, D-Pasadena, who is also viewed as a critical vote, said, "We have to look at what the committee's done. Whether we're there yet I don't know."

DeLuna executed for fatal stabbing of woman

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Convicted killer Carlos DeLuna was executed early today for the 1983 robbery and fatal stabbing of a woman in Corpus Christi.

DeLuna, 27, whose criminal record escalated from car theft as a juvenile to attempted rape and then to murder, was pronounced dead at 12:24 a.m., 10 minutes after lethal drugs administered by Texas corrections officials began flowing into his arms.

"I want to say I hold no grudges, I hate nobody," he said while strapped to the death chamber gurney.

"I want my family to know I love them. I want to tell everyone on death row to keep the faith up, to keep going. Everything will be all right."

He took three deep breaths and stopped moving.

DeLuna had insisted he was not responsible for the death of Wanda Jean Lopez, 24, whose final words of terror on Feb. 4, 1983 were captured on a police emergency dispatcher's tape recording.

The woman had called police for help after customers tipped her they saw a man with a knife outside the convenience store-gas station where she worked.

"The last thing she was saying was, 'I'll give the money.' But he just wanted to stick her with the knife," said Steve Schiwetz, the assistant district attorney who prosecuted DeLuna. "It's really a bad deal."

"On the tape, she's talking to the cops ... And then you heard that scream."

Mary Vargas, Ms. Lopez's mother, said she hoped this would be the time DeLuna would die. DeLuna came within 12 hours of execution in 1986 before a federal judge halted the procedure.

"I'm glad this is over with," she said today when told the execution had occurred.

The U.S. Supreme Court cleared the way for the execution late Wednesday when the justices voted 7-2 to reject an emergency request to keep him alive.

DeLuna's attorneys said his sentence was invalid because jurors were not allowed to consider his history of alcohol and drug abuse. They also said their client wrongly was denied the right to represent himself on appeal.

DeLuna had been out of prison on parole for about six weeks after serving part of a three-year term for auto theft and attempted rape when he was arrested for the Lopez killing, hiding under a truck nearby.

Report shows deficiencies at Pantex plant

By JENNIFER DIXON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Energy Department says its "tiger team" discovered a "significant" number of environmental, safety and health deficiencies at the World War II-era Pantex nuclear weapons assembly plant near Amarillo.

Energy Secretary James D. Watkins has ordered the office of defense programs and Pantex's contractor, Mason & Hanger-Silas Mason Co., to develop a plan to address all deficiencies identified in the team's assessment.

The team completed its on-site assessment of the weapons plant on Oct. 31. Its draft report was released Wednesday.

Although a "significant" number of environment, safety and health findings and Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) violations were identified, "the continued operation of the facility does not pose an immediate or imminent threat to public and worker health, or the environment," DOE said.

The aging plant sits atop the Ogallala aquifer, practically the only source of usable quality water for the state's largest irrigated farming region, the Texas High Plains.

Yet the tiger team assessment found Pantex has no environmental monitoring plan, DOE said.

DOE said the tiger team observed that the site's groundwater monitoring needs upgrading, and that sampling practices do not meet current industry standards.

"Environmental non-compliance findings were identified, reflecting a lack of conformance with DOE orders relating to the National Environmental Policy Act, and a possible need for additional regulatory permits," DOE said.

OSHA identified more than 300 findings of varying degrees of severity, DOE said.

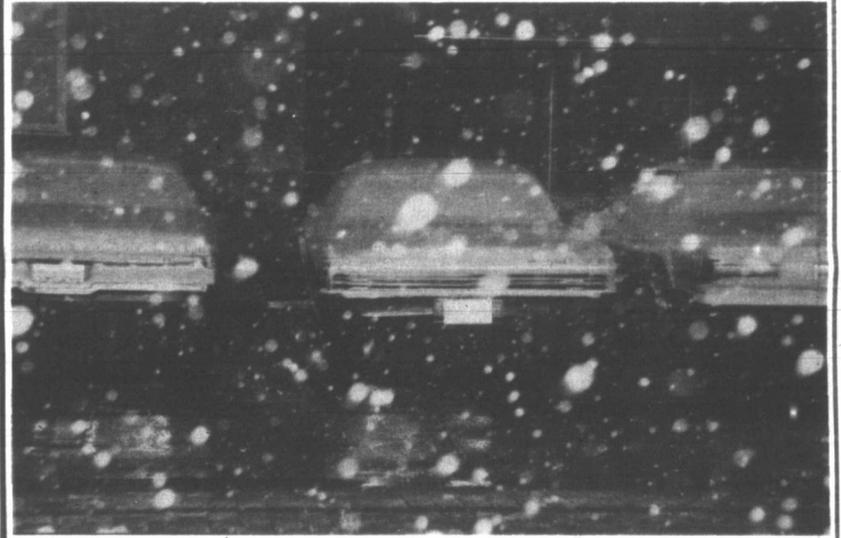

Rep. Bill Sarpalius, whose Panhandle district includes the plant, said the report indicates "some work needs to be done at Pantex."

"I think we all suspected this was the case, and I think everyone involved is anxious to get started on that work."

"The most important thing ... is that the Tiger Team concluded the plant 'poses no immediate threat to public and worker safety or to the environment,'" Sarpalius said.

DOE has estimated it will cost $1.7 billion over the next two decades to preserve and modernize Pantex, the country's only final assembly site for nuclear weapons.

Let it snow!

Early-morning snowflakes drift across the view of automobiles parked at Schneider Apartments as the season's first snowfall greeted residents today as they prepared to head to work and school. At least an inch had fallen shortly after sunrise, with clearing skies expected this afternoon.

O Christmas tree, most foul tree!

This is the season, experts tell us, when depression hits its peak and suicides occur all too frequently.

Some blame these tragic occurrences on poor family relations, loneliness and/or the fact that reality often does not live up to the fairy tale image of Christmas we paint for ourselves.

There is yet another theory to be explored. I'm pretty sure the entire root of all yuletide woes lies with the least suspicious of all suspects — Christmas trees.

Let's look at the evidence. There isn't a soul on the planet who ever put up a Christmas tree, real or artificial, who didn't think of at least half a dozen words you'd never dream of uttering in front of the preacher.

Take our own annual pre-Christmas decorating extravaganza a few days ago.

"Honey, would you get out the Christmas tree?" Caryl asked me.

"Where is it?"

"In the closet under the stairs behind the barbecue grill, the lawn chairs, that old TV, my box of summer clothes, the suitcase your mother accidentally left here, the vacuum cleaner and those things we need to take to the Salvation Army."

Two hours and three hernias later I had the Christmas tree out. Unfortunately, there was now so much junk strewn all over the floor, there was no room to set it down.

While I was holding the tree box, Caryl was trying to clear a space on the floor. As she rolled the barbecue out of the way, it bumped the closet door. The door pinched my arm, causing me to drop the tree box on Caryl's foot.

What is it about that kind of calamity that brings out the potty mouth in even the most Christian of souls? It kind of set the tone of the whole evening.

After we had cleared a small space to work in, which was then filled back up by the boxes of ornaments and decorations from the upstairs closet, we set about our business.

"You hold the base and I'll slide the tree in there. Then we fasten the three toggle bolts and attach the top portion of the tree," I told Caryl, sounding very much like the Marine I used to be.

"Huh?"

"Just like we did it last year."

"I hope not. Last year we ended up having a fight and didn't talk for two days."

"Now dear, don't exaggerate," I told her.

"Who's exaggerating? You crushed my finger in the base of this monster and then said it was my fault."

"Who was responsible for sliding it into the base?"

"I was."

"And whose finger got hurt?"

"Mine did."

"And whose fault is that?"

"It's yours."

Off Beat By Bear Mills

so simple as putting one piece of fake wood into one stand, attaching another piece of fake wood to the top and stringing a bunch of lights on it, is so hard?

"Hold it still," I kept saying.

"How can I hold it still? You keep shoving."

"I'm trying to get it in the connector. But I can't get it in there if you keep moving it."

"Look, Bucko, you're talking to the mother of your child to be, not Hulk Hogan. If you want the dumb base held still, you hold it."

"And you'll do the tree?"

"Give it to me ... OUCH!" In the transfer, the tree left two long scratch marks on Caryl's arm. I was in deep poo-poo.

"Look what you did to me!"

"It was the tree's fault," I protested. No good. There was blood in her eyes and a deadly silence in the air.

"All right," I told Caryl, "you just slide the base into the stand."

"Hold it still."

"I am holding it still." Like a bad dream in which the characters keep changing places and repeating the same lines, we fought with the tree and each other for the better part of an hour. Finally, it was assembled.

That was after Caryl took two Band-Aids and some peroxide for a cut on her finger and I cleaned artificial pine stems out of my ear from a nasty, if unintentional, whack up the side of the head.

"Now we put on the lights," I told Caryl.

"You put on the lights," she answered. "I'm going to bed."

"You'd leave me with this unfinished?"

"I better. We'll stay married longer that way."

Every year we go through this. And every year we forget how much trouble it was last year.

So what's the answer?

Don't even suggest a real tree. With real trees you go through the same agony and there are saws involved. That much stress and sharp instruments, too. It makes for a dangerous situation.

Next year we're trying a new approach — a pre-assembled one-foot tree that comes with lights and decorations already attached.

But isn't that the same thing I said last year?

Mattox knocks out 'Toughman' contest in Lubbock

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox said he knocked out a "Toughman" contest scheduled this weekend in Lubbock.

Mattox obtained a temporary restraining order Wednesday in a Travis County state district court against Adore Ltd. Inc., a corporation chartered in Michigan.

But Adore officials said late Wednesday they have requested an immediate "show cause" hearing in order to have a judge repeal the restraining order.

"We have received no reprimands, no citations, or notice that we have not complied with every regulation. We have no idea on what grounds they can justly revoke our license or prevent Toughman from being held," said Art Adore, president of Adore.

Mattox alleges the defendant violated the Texas Boxing Act and rules and regulations of the Texas Department of Licensing and Regulation.

"Toughman" contests are held in several states, and consist of a series of short fights in which the winners advance until there is a champion.

"These so-called toughman contests are nothing but brawls in which young men with no training or experience in the sport of boxing flail away at each other until there is one man left standing," Mattox said. "This is not sport. It's dangerous and violates state laws that govern professional and amateur boxing."

In the suit, Mattox says Adore Ltd. conducted "Toughman" contests in September 1988 in Waco despite advice from the Department of Labor and Standards that such a contest was illegal.

Adore held another "Toughman" contest in Abilene in October with the permission of an employee of the Texas Department of Licensing and Regulation, which is the successor agency to the Department of Labor and Standards.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Public servants shouldn't steal

Part of the American dream is the freedom to make your fortune through hard work and ingenuity. That possibility attracts penniless immigrants, who build such places throughout the nation. And it drives those born here onward to produce new goods and services, at the same time giving jobs to others. Only the terminally envious begrudge the rich man his due earning.

But in like fashion, we insist that our servants in the public sector make some sacrifice when they take on public office. Unfortunately, holding public office nowadays has become little more than an excuse to glom onto as much of the people's money as one can, either indirectly through special arrangements with special interest contributors, or directly through pay increases.

Earlier this year, a public outrage greeted the scheduled 51-percent pay increase for congressmen, from $89,500 to $135,000 per year.irate citizens lit up the phones at radio talk shows and forced Congress to cancel the raise.

But many congressional eyes remain glued to more taxpayers' loot. The House of Representatives passed a bill for a 33 percent raise, boosting pay to $120,000 in 1990. House leaders from both parties backed the bill and the hyperconciliatory Bush administration said it approves in principle. The Senate, oddly, backed allowing the House increase, but no one for itself.

House leaders think that the American people will find this pay increase more palatable than the last because the bill includes a ban on speaking fees and other honoraria. Many have criticized these payments from lobbyists.

But the American people probably won't be mollified. The honoraria-for-pay raise swap says essentially: "Bribe us to be ethical." That's hardly a good reason.

It's also funny to see the contradiction this implies for the House leadership, which indignantly denounces a capital gains tax cut because, goes the demagoguery, it would help the wealthy. (Actually, it would mostly help everyone else by creating jobs.) Then with the next breath these congressmen back a pay raise that would push their own income level from the top 2 percent of American families to the top 1 percent. For our congressmen, charity clearly begins in the House—and the Senate.

Profligate congressional spending is a primary cause of inflation (though not the only one.) When congressmen complain about how inflation has chewed away at their income, they should first blame themselves.

Our congressmen should get the message: It's fine to make your fortune in America, but not at the public's expense. A public servant is supposed to serve, not steal.

We can do without success

Stephen Chapman

Anyone who was around to see the end of the Vietnam War in 1975 knows that defeat produces recriminations the way microbes produce disease. But, with the West's triumph in the Cold War now visible on the horizon, it's surprising to hear a chorus of condemnation from within the victor's camp.

What's to condemn? The Soviets have held free elections, ended most censorship and allowed mass displays of public discontent. They've almost abandoned their satellites in Eastern Europe.

And how 'bout those satellites? Poland has had an honest election that produced a government headed by democratic trade unionists. Hungary has formally sworn off communism. East Germany has punched holes in the Berlin Wall.

Czechoslovakia has opened up travel to the West. Bulgaria has announced plans to create "a modern democratic country committed to the rule of law."

What's next? Who knows? Between the time this is written and the it appears in print, we may learn that Gorbachev has personally applied a torch to the Kremlin and commissioned a statue of Czar Nicholas II to adorn Red Square.

But sourpusses can still find reasons to grumble. The favorite theme lately is that the Bush administration and foreign policy experts have been patetically slow to acknowledge and embrace the changes going in the East bloc.

Jimmy Carter gripes that "we're delaying too long in responding effectively to the opportunity that presents itself." Walter Mondale complains that the Bush administration can speak nothing more eloquent than "the language of a bookkeeper and bureaucrat." Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell accuses Bush of "timidity" and "status quo thinking."

Eric Alterman, a senior fellow of the left-wing World Policy Institute, indicts not only the administration but almost everyone who failed to greet Gorbachev the way Jerusalemites greeted Jesus on his donkey, shouting hosannas and strewing his path with branches. "Not since Copernicus, perhaps, have so many been so wrong so frequently with so little humility," he announced recently on the op-ed page of the New York Times.

Why, for years experts have warned that Gorbachev might not be sincere, that he might not hold on to power, that he might not be able to carry out his plans. Yet he has defied these worries—which to Alterman is proof that anyone who expressed doubts is dumber than the Flat Earth Society.

To argue that Westerners should have known what was coming is not just unrealistic. It's preposterous. Did Lech Walesa dream of such changes four years ago, when Gorbachev gained power? Did Andrei Sakharov? Did dissidents in East Germany or Bulgaria or Czechoslovakia or Hungary?

More to the point, did anyone on the American left? If Eric Alterman had predicted the future as well as he predicts the past, he'd be the most famous political commentator in the world, which last time I checked he wasn't.

But the reliability of Western political forecasts is not the real issue. The real issue is what we're doing about the changes in the communist world. The impression we are given is that there is a historic moment to be seized which the President has so far failed to seize—by pulling troops out of Europe, or offering financial aid, or generally cuddling up to Gorbach.

But how is it we've screwed things up? Our timidity has coincided with the most spectacular changes in the communist world since the Bolshevik Revolution.

Maybe the policies of the Bush administration, and the Reagan administration before it, didn't contribute to those changes. But they haven't retarded them any.

And it's possible that our refusal to drool over Gorbachev has forced him to do things he otherwise wouldn't have done.

Faced with Jimmy Carter's grinning credulity, the Soviets were aggressively expansionist. Confronted with Ronald Reagan's fierce militarism, and then with Bush's chronic skepticism, they've begun acting about as bellicose and totalitarian as the League of Women Voters.

Maybe this is all just a meaningless coincidence. Maybe Stephen A. Douglas would have been a better Civil War president than Abraham Lincoln. But the burden of proof is on the doubters. Those who abhor the approach followed by Reagan and Bush are obliged to explain why such awful policies have been followed by such wonderful results.

Those of a less dogmatic bent may conclude that whatever we're doing, we should keep doing it. If the administration has failed in its foreign policy, we can do without success.

Today in history

By The Associated Press
Today is Thursday, December 7, the 341st day of 1989. There are 24 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:
On December 7, 1941, Japanese warplanes attacked the home base of the U.S. Pacific fleet located at Pearl Harbor on the Hawaiian island of Oahu, sparking America's entry into World War II.

On this date:
In 1787, Delaware became the first state to ratify the U.S. Constitution.

In 1836, Martin Van Buren was elected the eighth president of the United States.

In 1842, the New York Philharmonic gave its first concert, performing works by Ludwig van Beethoven and Carl Maria von Weber.

Finding love through the mail

I met Tim Jarvis in Chicago 13 years ago. He is a good and honorable man. He realized right away that I, a native of the South, had no business in the frozen regions of the North, and he befriended me.

For one thing, he drove me to work in his 1961 Volkswagen through snow, sleet and mounting despair.

For another, he pointed out I could find somebody to put an end to my loneliness in drinkeries on Division Street.

So he missed on that one, but he was, and is, a good friend.

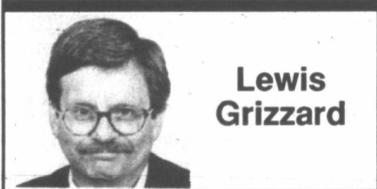

I moved back South in 1977 and Tim followed me a couple of years later. He experienced a sun-down in August, singles bar with 400 ex-Phi Mus and a Georgia-Florida football game, and he was hooked.

But he began having some of the problems in Atlanta I had in Chicago.

He hit the singles' bars, and that can get to a man after a while. Tim was nearing 40 and all the ex-Phi Mus he met couldn't understand why he wasn't driving a Mercedes.

And the older divorcees he met doing the shag to '50s rock-and-roll already hated men, so he was stumped.

But then he found something. It was in a magazine. It was a deal where American men could correspond with English-speaking Asian women.

Lewis Grizzard

"I figured, what did I have to lose?" he said. Tim found Rosel from the Philippines. They corresponded. Then, Tim flew to the Philippines and met Rosel for the first time.

They fell in love and they got married in San Jose, Calif., last spring. I was the best man.

If you're looking for any bad news, go buy a newspaper. Tim and Rosel are not only happy, they've just moved into their new house and they're expecting a baby early next year.

OK, so there are a few problems.

Rosel, for instance, really doesn't want to learn about football until she finds out where all the other players have gone in beach volleyball.

And she wonders—and Tim has a time explaining to her—what sort of religion Jim Bakker is. And the Georgia sodomy law, which puts a man in prison for having oral sex with his wife, puzzles her, too. "But if they were married ...," she asks. And there's some problems communicating. There are still times she asks Tim, "Would you like some paper in your soup?"

It's "pepper," Rosel, but what does that matter when you're in love.

What I mean to communicate here is that Tim Jarvis, now 41, got tired of the singles bar thing and found his love in life through corresponding with a woman in the Philippines.

I wrote a column about them when they married. And the calls and letters came flooding in.

"I'd like to get in touch with Tim," one man wrote, "and find out more about this. I'm 44, divorced and most of the women I meet are hostile."

Of course, there were reactions from women, too. One wrote, "How could you love somebody you met through the mail?"

The deal is this:
Don't write or call me anymore. I can't help you with any answers, but Tim and Rosel can.

They now publish their own penpal magazine like the one through which they met. I've seen the first issue, and the young ladies are beautiful.

Tim and Rosel want to give others the same opportunities they had. If you are interested, write them at American-Asian Couples, P.O. Box 590, Alpharetta, Ga 30239-0590.

Japanese buy-out not really a sell-out

By BEN WATTENBERG

The Mitsubishi Estate Co. of Japan has purchased the controlling interest in Rockefeller Center in Manhattan. In an earlier incarnation, Mitsubishi Corporation produced airplanes that shot at Americans.

The Sony Corporation, also Japanese, has purchased Columbia Pictures. Columbia owns the patriotic, flag-waving American classic Mr. Smith Goes to Washington, starring Jimmy Stewart-san.

The Japanese are the publicized lightning rods, but enormous investments are also coming in from Germany, England and Holland.

It's a clammy feeling. Suppose a latter-day Rip Van Winkle fell asleep on December 8, 1941, and woke up in the fall of 1989. His first hazy thought might well be "Japan won the war." It's enough to boil the blood of any red-blooded American. Isn't it?

Perhaps not. Are foreigners—Japanese and others—really "buying up America"? Is what's happening bad for us? Here are some ideas and facts to consider as the debate gets screechy:

Americans have greater direct investments in Japan than Japanese have in America. (The trend, however, is moving in a pro-Japanese direction.)

It was not very long ago that the buying-up complaints were going the other way. American corporations were being pounded for investing overseas. That was said to be terrible because America needed capital. Now we're getting it.

Real estate is a particularly passive investment. Suppose Mitsubishi buys the office building you work in. As Dorothy Parker asked after the death of Calvin Coolidge, "How can you tell?"

What are the Mitzis going to do, ship it to Yokohama? Might they raise your rent? Might they sell the building? Are those things ever done by by sweet American landlords?

The same week that Mitz bought Rock, the second richest man in the world, Taichiro Mori, bought Four Oaks Place, an office-building complex in Houston.

Interesting. New York City has just taken a big commercial hit; Exxon announced that it would move its headquarters to Dallas. And Houston is vastly overbuilt, with much unrented office space.

So what are foreign investors saying? That the American economy, even in some of its problem areas, is still so comparatively healthy that they want to put their money here.

The real estate purchases do not create wealth or jobs. But follow the money. What happens to the $846 million that goes to the Rockefeller heirs? What will they do with the money? Perhaps invest it in American businesses that do create jobs and wealth. Alternatively, they will put the money in banks, and the banks will loan money to domestic investors.

The Sony purchase of Columbia is also a compliment. What have they bought? The right to use their capital to sell the wildly popular American entertainment culture around the world.

And, by the way, America is still doing some buying itself. Ford has just purchased Jaguar, Britain's last independent auto manufacturer.

Perhaps Americans ought to calm down about the buying-up threat and about Japan.

By American superpower standards, Japan is still a minor league player—Triple A to be sure, but minor league nonetheless. (There is only one superpower left. It's us.) Japan is a country with half our population, aging rapidly, with a lower standard of living, with archaic agricultural and retail sectors, militarily defenseless, with crowded and exorbitantly expensive housing. But they do have a lot of money.

Follow the foreign money. There is an aspect of this situation that is rarely considered. Historically, no one buys up America. Investors usually only sink in.

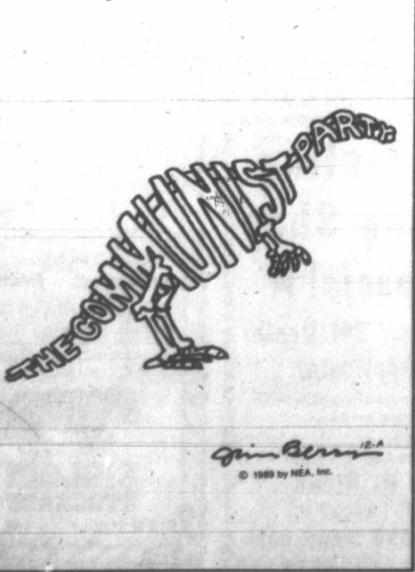

Foreigners put their money here. Then they come over here to oversee their investments, or send their sons, or their managers, to do it. Then the investors, or their sons, or their managers, or the wives thereof, become entranced with the barbarian Yankee customs. And some of them settle here. (The son of the founder of Sony now lives in Colorado.)

So we get the original capital. Then we get the talent. Then we get the inheritance.

We don't nationalize the investments. We nationalize the investors. Terrible, huh?

East German Communist Party moves up date for new congress

By CAROL J. WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer

EAST BERLIN (AP) — An official who allegedly pocketed millions of dollars through illegal arms sales was jailed today, and East Germany's military warned citizens outraged by corruption to keep away from the army's guns.

The Communist Party, trying to salvage its evaporating authority, moved up to Friday an emergency congress it had set for mid-December. Officials plan to completely reshape the party to reflect the breathtaking pace of reform.

Meanwhile, Premier Hans Modrow and two other top Communist officials prepared to open talks today with the increasingly powerful opposition, which is backed by a vocal and disciplined populace that has cast aside the Communists and appears to be dictating change.

In this country of 16.5 million people, citizens now guard secret police stations and interrogate their former interrogators.

On Wednesday, ousted party chief Egon Krenz resigned from his last official post, the presidency, and for the first time in the country's 40 years a non-Communist was named to the post.

Manfred Gerlach is to be an interim president until Parliament elects a permanent replacement. He chairs the Liberal Democratic Party, an ally of the Communists until it broke away several weeks ago, embracing reform.

In two tumultuous months of peaceful revolution, East Germans who took to the streets by the hundreds of thousands forced changes including:

— The ousting from power of two sets of Communist leaders, the second of which promised free elections as early as next fall.

— The opening of the Berlin Wall and other borders.

— Parliament's scrapping of the Communist Party's constitutional monopoly on political power. The upheaval has set into motion investigations into abuses of power by the ousted Communist elite, whose members allegedly exploited their high position to rob public coffers and live obscenely lavish lifestyles.

Early today, West Berlin police spokesman Helmut Hinz announced that Alexander Schalck-Golodkowski, a former leading East German trade official, was in a West Berlin prison following an international manhunt.

East German's official ADN news agency said he had turned himself in late Wednesday.

Schalck-Golodkowski fled the country last weekend. East German officials said he made millions of dollars by illegally funneling weapons to groups in South America, Africa and Asia.

West Germany's ZDF television network said Schalck-Golodkowski planned to pay back $31 million to the East German government from Swiss bank accounts. He is suspected of having smuggled several times that amount out of the country, according to reports on East Germany's state-run television.

On Wednesday, the government appealed for "calm and restraint" after reports of pro-reform activists seizing secret police facilities in the cities of Leipzig and Gera.

Groups of demonstrators have been surrounding secret police stations in recent days to prevent former officials from spiriting away incriminating documents that may be used for investigations of former leaders.

The Communist Party is ostensibly being guided by a 25-member committee until a new leader can be named.

Among Communist leaders, only Modrow retains much respect among the wary populace, and he appears more committed to government affairs than assuming the top role in the party hierarchy.

His government issued veiled warnings to citizens late Wednesday to refrain from attempts to take over military facilities, claiming there had been "indications" that such attacks were in the offing.

Colombian president pledges fight against traffickers' 'bloody tyranny'

By STAN YARBRO
Associated Press Writer

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — President Virgilio Barco blamed a truck bombing that killed 40 people in the capital on drug traffickers and pledged not to allow Colombian democracy to succumb to their "bloody tyranny."

Barco went on national television Wednesday night after 1,100 pounds of dynamite were detonated in front of the offices of the secret police in Bogota, gouging out a 20-foot-deep crater and wounding hundreds of people.

It was one of the worst terrorist attacks in Colombian history.

"In the last few days, the criminal organization of drug traffickers has begun a vile assault that has cost the lives of many innocent Colombians," Barco told his countrymen.

Three more bombs exploded in the cocaine-trafficking center of Medellin just before the speech was transmitted from Tokyo, where Barco was on a state visit.

The bombs, targeting a Mormon temple, an evangelical church and an electronics shop, caused only slight damage and no injuries, police said.

Barco said the bombing at federal intelligence police headquarters was part of a string of attacks by drug gangs intended to force the government to stop extraditing to the United States traffickers indicted by U.S. authorities.

He said traffickers also were responsible for the Nov. 27 bombing of a Colombian jetliner that killed all 107 people aboard, as well as for Tuesday's assassination of a Medellin judge.

The said the country's resolve to battle traffickers would not waver as a result of their terrorist onslaught.

"They will not succeed in defeating us," he said. "We are fighting and will continue to fight. The war is against all Colombia, against democracy. We will not allow ourselves to fall to the bloody tyranny of the narcoterrorists."

The Extraditables, a group linked to the powerful Medellin cocaine cartel, claimed responsibility for the truck bombing at intelligence police headquarters.

The morning rush hour explosion killed at least 40 people and wounded about 1,000. Aerial photographs showed extensive damage to buildings in a nearly two square mile area.

The explosion, felt more than three miles away, caused $23 million worth of damage to about 1,500 houses and buildings, including nearby Justice Ministry offices.

The Extraditables said in their message that they would continue the terrorist campaign until the Senate approves a national referendum on the country's extradition policy.

The Barco administration has sent nine drug suspects to the United States since decreasing the policy in August, when it declared all-out war on traffickers after they were blamed for the assassination of a popular presidential candidate.

However, none of the 12 leading cocaine bosses wanted for extradition to the United States have been caught.

On Tuesday, the House of Representatives passed a bill that would allow the public to decide in a plebiscite whether the policy should continue.

The administration has vehemently opposed the bill, maintaining it would lead to more terrorist violence as traffickers try to intimidate Colombians into rejecting extradition.

In his speech, Barco said the latest terrorist attacks prove the prediction's validity.

"These incidents show what these criminals would do to make sure that the referendum results are in their favor," Barco said.

There is still no indication on which way the Senate might vote on the referendum. But the bombings of the intelligence police offices and the Avianca Airlines Boeing 727 are likely to strengthen support for the administration's opposition to the referendum.

"I was for a dialogue (with traffickers) before the bombings, but now, no way," said one man interviewed on the news program 24 Hours.

S&Ls face strict new standards that some call a 'Pearl Harbor'

By DAVE SKIDMORE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Strict new standards for the nation's 2,900 savings and loans go into effect today, regulations that some analysts say may be the industry's "Pearl Harbor."

"It's a good analogy, except in one respect," said economist Robert Litan of the Brookings Institution, a Washington think tank.

"This wasn't a sneak attack. They should have known this was coming a long time ago," he said.

The rules requiring S&L owners to risk more of their own money each time they invest depositors' funds coincides with the 48th anniversary of the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor.

Only 1,800 of the institutions meet the standards issued Nov. 6 by the Office of Thrift Supervision.

The rules are required under S&L bailout legislation enacted Aug. 9.

The legislation requires S&L owners to have $1.50 in tangible capital for each $100 in loans; by 1995, the standard will be $3.

The provision is aimed at discouraging risky investments by the thrift owners.

Regulators estimate that about 300 institutions are in hopeless shape and in the next year will be transferred to the Resolution Trust Corp. for liquidation.

Another 800 have a chance of meeting the higher standard and must file business plans with the thrift office by Jan. 6 outlining how they plan to do it.

Until Jan. 1, 1991, regulators have the option of imposing growth restrictions on S&Ls falling short of the standards. After that, restrictions are mandatory.

According to preliminary estimates by the U.S. League of Savings Institutions, about 200 of the 800 should be able to shrink or otherwise adjust their balance sheets to quickly meet the standard.

Another 200 may take longer to meet the standard and about 300 will have to look for a merger partner with fresh capital or face failure.

The thrift office has already launched what S&L regulator M. Danny Wall has nicknamed an "arranged marriage" program to put weak institutions in touch with potential suitors.

Private analysts, however are skeptical about the prospects for the 800.

"There are very good reasons to question whether the guys in the middle will survive, certainly in their present form," Litan said. "The most likely strategy will be shrinkage because they will not be successful in attracting new capital. There's a pall hanging over the entire thrift industry, which makes investors nervous."

Anticipating the rules, S&Ls have been shrinking, shedding a record $15.2 billion in assets in September and $13.3 billion in August, according to the latest report available.

Litan and another economist, Paul Getman of the Wefa Group in Bala Cynwyd, Pa., said another provision in the thrift bill requiring S&Ls to concentrate 70 percent of their assets on housing loans, up from 60 percent, is discouraging investors and virtually forcing the shrinkage.

"Congress is saying to thrifts, 'Put all your eggs in one basket,' and that basket is looking real shaky," Getman said, noting weakening real estate markets in the Northeast on top of already soft markets in the Southwest.

The new capital rules are the cornerstone reform in the S&L bill. Supporters say S&L owners must risk more of their own capital as an incentive to avoid risky investments and run up big losses for the government deposit insurance fund.

Lithuanian parliament votes today to abolish Communist supremacy

By JOHN IAMS
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — The Lithuanian parliament voted today to abolish the Communist Party's constitutionally guaranteed supremacy and to legalize multiple political parties in the Baltic republic, activists said.

The move made Lithuania the first Soviet republic to reject the Communist Party's legal lock on power.

It also presented a bold challenge to President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, who has said that demands for more autonomy in some of the 15 republics are endangering his economic reform program.

Gorbachev also has been trying to crack down on the autonomy movements to reassure orthodox Soviet Communists who have been alarmed by challenges to the Communist Party at home and in several Eastern bloc countries. Eduardas Potashniskas, a Lithuanian activist who has been monitoring the Supreme Soviet's legislative sessions, said the vote today was 243-1, with 39 abstentions.

A vote on the same proposal Wednesday fell nine votes short of the two-thirds majority required to pass it.

The lawmakers decided to vote again today, in part because 84 deputies were absent and 30 abstained on Wednesday.

"During the session (today) of the Supreme Soviet of Lithuania, the 6th article of the constitution of the L.S.S.R. was abolished and changed into the new formula which declares a multiparty system," the information department of the Lithuanian political movement Sajudis said in a telex statement.

Sajudis spokesmen said new language recognizes that political parties and movements are within the legal framework of the Lithuanian Constitution.

Article 6, which became part of the basic law of the Soviet Union with the Brezhnev Constitution of 1977, makes the Communist Party the "leading and guiding force of Soviet society."

Eliminating it could help reduce the party's grip on all spheres of life.

The Lithuanian action only affects that republic, and is likely to face a stiff challenge from Moscow.

A similar proposal in the Armenia republic failed Wednesday when the legislature failed to draw a quorum.

Civic Forum leader Vaclav Havel, left, shakes hands Wednesday with Communist Party leader Karel Urbanek as they meet to discuss reforms.

Czech leaders planning to present new cabinet

By GIRARD C. STEICHEN
Associated Press Writer

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — The Communist leadership, whose new coalition government was rejected by the pro-democracy movement, will present a new Cabinet approved by the opposition, the nation's top dissident said Wednesday.

The dissident, Vaclav Havel, said at a news conference that Communist Premier Ladislav Adamec will present the list of names for the Cabinet to the opposition on Friday before it is made public.

He refused to disclose any details of the intense negotiations to include more non-Communists in the government.

Havel spoke after holding his first talks with Communist Party chief Karel Urbanek, who he said agreed with the opposition that "young, able people and experts who are not discredited" should be brought into the government.

After his 75-minute meeting with Urbanek, Havel and other opposition leaders met briefly with Adamec, who is trying to form a new Cabinet after a coalition government he named Sunday ran into fierce popular resistance.

The opposition spurned that government because it brought in just five non-Communists and left Communists in control of all key ministries.

The opposition has threatened a general strike on Monday if a new federal government is not named by Sunday.

Havel said Adamec will consult Thursday with representatives of other, increasingly independent official parties on forming a new government.

The opposition will then learn the names of the new cabinet Friday.

Both the government and the opposition have refused to disclose details of their negotiations. Opposition sources said the talks envisage some form of power-sharing before the free elections the opposition wants held by July.

The agreement on the new government represents the latest of several dramatic concessions the Communists have made in the last two months in the face of a massive pro-democracy movement.

These include a loosening of travel restrictions, the resignation of the Communist leadership of Milos Jakes and the end of the Communists constitutionally guaranteed hold on power.

Farm Bureau predicts shortages under pesticide ban

By JENNIFER DIXON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Texas Farm Bureau is predicting possible produce shortages under a proposed ban on the pesticide EBDC, but the Texas Agriculture Department says consumers will actually benefit from a healthier food supply.

While the state Farm Bureau says a decline is possible in the quality and quantity of produce available to consumers under the government's proposed ban, TDA says consumers are willing to make tradeoffs for fruits and vegetables free of cancer-causing pesticides.

And while the Farm Bureau says Texas farmers may have to either scale back production or turn to new, but less profitable crops, TDA says alternatives to EBDCs are already available or will be soon and a farmer's production should not suffer.

"We think the impact on consumers will be a positive one," says TDA's Max Woodwin, executive assistant for agricultural resources protection.

"We do know the EBDCs' breakdown byproducts are toxic and to remove potentially harmful chemicals from the market can only benefit consumers."

Consumers, he said, are willing to sacrifice a better-looking product grown with chemicals for a less attractive, but healthier fruit or vegetable.

The Environmental Protection Agency said Monday it would propose the ban within 90 days, but would leave the final decision until the spring of 1991, pending a study of EBDC residues due to be finished next September.

The ban would affect 45 crops but would allow EBDCs to continue to be used on 10 other crops, including wheat, peanuts, corn and grapes.

Manufacturers of EBDC — ethylene bisdithiocarbamate — have said they plan to halt use of the family of pesticides on 42 of the 45 crops at the end of this year, but had not put bananas, potatoes and tomatoes on the list.

EBDCs, which have been linked to cancer, have been used by farmers since the 1930s to combat fungus and mildew.

Ned Meister, director of regulatory affairs for the Texas Farm Bureau, said the ban on EBDCs, used primarily to preserve produce during shipment and storage, would reduce the availability of fruits and vegetables to consumers outside a growing area.

"The consumer is the one in the long run who is going to wind up on the short end of the stick," Meister said.

Experts: Economy will weaken, but no recession

By JOHN D. McCLAIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. economy will continue to weaken next year but avoid a recession and any substantial change in unemployment, the nation's top business economists predicted Wednesday.

The National Association of Business Economists said a survey of its members found 62 percent expecting no recession for the next three years.

But the forecasters' optimism was tempered by considerable concern about the short-term outlook: Nearly 20 percent of the respondents said a recession will occur either by the end of the year or during the first three months of 1990, ending an unprecedented peacetime economic expansion that began its eighth year this month.

Nevertheless, the new report was considerably more optimistic than last May's survey, which found 63 percent of the economists expecting a recession next year.

Four months later, 37 percent of the economists still forecast recession in 1990.

In the November survey, the consensus among the 55 respondents was that the gross national product — the nation's total output of goods and services — would continue to grow slowly, dropping from the 2.9 percent forecast for 1989 to 1.8 percent next year.

The survey also showed an easing of inflation fears, with predictions that the consumer price index will fall from 4.8 percent forecast for 1989 to 4.2 percent next year.

At the same time, the economists expect interest rates would continue to fall, with rates on three-month Treasury bills dropping from 8.1 percent in 1989 to 7.1 percent in 1990.

For 30-year Treasury bonds, the expected estimate is 7.8 percent next year, compared with 8.4 percent this year.

The economy has slowed considerably this year as the Federal Reserve boosted interest rates to restrain rising prices.

But it began in June to gradually let rates fall as inflationary presures moderated.

The manufacturing sector has been among the hardest hit by Fed actions, and the economists forecast continued weakness in industrial production.

But their report said "the slower overall growth and weaker industrial production is not expected to be reflected in higher unemployment."

The survey suggested unemployment would rise only from 5.3 percent this year to 5.5 percent next year.

That was down from the 5.8 percent predicted in their May survey and 5.7 percent in August.

The housing industry, hurt by higher interest rates earlier this year, is expected to improve modestly, with housing starts rising from 1.4 million in 1989 to 1.45 million in 1990, the economists said.

But they foresee no relief for the automobile industry, a third sector in the economic doldrums.

Car and small truck sales, they said, would drop from 15.1 million this year to 14.7 million in 1990.

The NABE report also suggested changes in the expected composition of the GNP in 1990.

"Consumer demand is expected to constitute a significantly larger share of growth while investment, reflecting a deteriorating outlook for corporate profits, is expected to weaken," it said.

The NABE also said its forecasters predicted the nation's twin deficits in merchandise trade and the federal budget would narrow, but "only very slowly."

"For 1990, the trade imbalance should be about $100 billion (down from $109 billion in 1989) and federal spending will exceed revenue by $141 billion (after a reported $152 billion in fiscal 1989)," it said.

Man runs fishy business in back yard aquarium

By TONY VINDELL
The Brownsville Herald

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — A quick glance around Mike Foxx Ford's back yard clearly tells the story of some fishy business.

Hundreds of colorful fish — young and old — seem to be everywhere and moving elegantly from one place to another.

Among them are many of the world's best-known exotic and tropical fish. Scores of Japanese Goldfish shake their silky-looking flashy tails.

A few feet away, a 15-pound flat-headed nurse shark swims endlessly inside a cage that sits in the middle of a shed. Contrasting the shark's enclosed environment is a large freshwater pond fed by a man-made waterfall.

Ford's back yard can provide moments of tranquility, but it is also a business. Most of the fish are for sale.

"People get a chance here to see firsthand the fish they want to buy," he said, overseeing what is perhaps one of the largest indoor aquariums in the area. "They can see how pretty and how big some fish can get."

The $20,000 fish tank is 33 feet long, 18 feet wide, and 6 feet deep. It is fully equipped with overhead lights and a temperature-controlling system.

The tank, home of about 100 species of fish, is also the home of a large albino catfish called "Whity."

"That one is not for sale," said Ford, pointing to the half-pink, half-white catfish. "Whity is our mascot."

Ford's fish business started first as a hobby when he was in elementary school but it wasn't until recently that the native of Columbus, Texas, decided to think com-mercially. "Nyassa Cove, home of the (Rio Grande) Valley's largest aquarium," reads the sign erected on the front lawn off Boca Chica Boulevard.

The 24-year-old Ford, a political science student at the University of Texas-Pan American, recalls the days he owned his first 30-gallon fish tank.

"I have had aquariums since I was in elementary school," he said, "but I never thought I was going to have something like this."

Ford said it took a lot of planning, dedication and persuasion to convince his parents, Jane Ford and John Ventura, to lend him the money to undertake the project.

"It has been kind of interesting watching him build the place up and working with the landscaping," Ms. Ford said. "We bought this place three years ago ... and are happy to see the way it has turned out."

Ford designed most of the tanks, and drew the architectural plan of the place he likes to refer to as a tropical paradise.

He carried out the project in three steps: the fish pond, the waterfall and the fish tank.

His hobby-turned-business is beginning to pay off, Ford says. Depending on the specific variety, his fish range in price from $1.25 to $100 each. He plans to offer a full line of aquarium products.

He credits his success to friends who help take care of the place during the week.

Ford intends to become a lawyer, but says he intends to keep the fish business.

On weekends, Nyassa Cove is open free to the public.

"We have no plans to charge," Ford said. "We want out potential clients to see for themselves how elegant some of these fish are."

Neighborhood recovering from summer's homicides

By CYNTHIA POMMIER
Beaumont Enterprise

PORT ARTHUR (AP) — In the wake of a triple homicide in Port Arthur's Vietnamese community in July, residents literally feared for their lives.

Since that time, officials with the Port Arthur Police Department's Asian Task Force have worked around the clock in an attempt to ease the mood among residents in a community they call the "Area of Peace."

The shooting at the Pho Tau Bay Restaurant on July 12 forced employees and customers to run for their lives. Three men were killed during the morning hours as they sat at a table eating breakfast in the crowded restaurant, located at 720 Ninth Ave.

Some say the nightmare continues to haunt them. Others say they have tried to put the flashbacks to rest.

The victims, Dung Van Vo, 34; Ben Van Le, 30; and Lam Van Huynh, 33, were gunned down with a 12-gauge shotgun. Two of the men died instantly from gunshot wounds to the head. The third victim died later at St. Mary Hospital in Port Arthur from a wound to his back. Police said the shootings were the result of a spillover from an argument the men had the night before at a drinking establishment.

Initially, police arrested and charged Phuc Dinh Tran and Dac Van Tran, both 29, in connection with the shootings.

In September, the Jefferson County District Attorney's office dismissed the murder indictment against Phuc Dinh Tran. Dac Van Tran remains in the Jefferson County Jail in lieu of a $500,000 bond. Dac Van Tran cleared Phuc Dinh Tran in statements he made to authorities, a spokesman for the district attorney's office said. Authorities also gathered other witness statements about the shooting before dismissing the charge.

Loan Tran, manager of the restaurant, said business has "drastically" declined since the shooting in July. "Every now and then you may see a large crowd in here, but mostly it's nobody," Tran said. "We were making $150 a day before all this happened, and now we're down to $70 and $80 a day."

She said the restaurant has lost about $5,000 since July. "I was in the back, in the kitchen area, when the shootings happened," she said. "My son came out in the back and said, 'Momma, momma, a man has a gun in here.'"

"I said, 'Oh yeah!' And then I heard boom! boom!, and everyone ran out through the back door."

Tran said the restaurant closed for about a month after the shooting. "We were all just scared. I'm still scared," Tran said. "My daughter used to come here after school; she don't come no more."

Tran said she does not think time will help them forget what happened.

"The owner is thinking about closing the place," she said.

Joe Tran, owner of Thu's Gift Shop on Ninth Avenue, said his business has increased recently. "Everything is pretty much back to normal here," Tran said. "Right after the shooting, a lot of people were nervous about coming to this street. 'Most Americans didn't want to come on this street,' he said. "But they come a lot now."

Another Vietnamese man, who did not want his name published, was eating in the restaurant at the time of the shootings. "It was wild. For a while I thought I was watching a movie," he said.

"I can still see it like it was yesterday, but I don't scare no more. It's not like they were trying to get me."

Sister Quang, a nun at the Buomon Buddhist Temple, said the church has public services and invites all residents to attend.

Volunteers receive service credits for helping elderly and disabled

By CATHERINE WILSON
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI (AP) — Cassie Brown cooks breakfast and lunch for Josh Thomas every other day when he's not on dialysis, and does laundry for his grandmother.

"I understand elderly people because I'm 63 years old and I have an older father, too. He's 90," said Ms. Brown, a team leader with the Greater Miami Service Credit Consortium, a volunteer program for the elderly and disabled.

She collects one service credit for each hour she volunteers. Working three to five hours a day, she takes clients for doctor's appointments, fixes meals and runs errands. She can save the credits for herself or donate them.

"It's kind of like insurance. The best kind is the kind you never have to use," said a volunteer in Missouri. Other states with programs are California, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, Oklahoma and the District of Columbia. Only in Michigan and Missouri are they statewide.

Service credit programs, operating much like barter banks, are run by groups ranging from a health maintenance organization serving the Hassidic and Italian communities in New York to the Area Agency on Aging in San Francisco's Mission District. In Michigan, they range from Detroit to the Upper Peninsula.

Volunteers are most commonly used for respite care, giving a break to the person with the primary responsibility for a sick or disabled relative.

Federal studies show families provide about 80 percent of care to the elderly.

Service credits "can be used to target specific needs that are a public priority," said Edgar Kahn, a Florida International University professor and head of the project at the Southeast Florida Center on Aging.

Kahn, a speechwriter for then-Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy and later for Sargent Shriver in the War on Poverty, devised the idea of service credits nine years ago while teaching law at the University of Miami.

He worked out the economic implications during research at the London School of Economics.

"The purchasing power of a service credit may or may not be that important, but just accruing them seems to make people feel better," he said.

In Missouri, 26 agencies from churches to hospices and neighborhood groups send service-credit volunteers to play checkers, read, go for walks and write letters but not get involved in household chores, bathing or medical services.

In Miami, 515 volunteers are working up to 6,000 hours a month, mostly performing services that were never done before and are not funded by Medicare or other federal programs.

The average age of volunteers in a program run by the HMO in the New York borough of Brooklyn is about 75.

Credits are recorded, usually on a computer, and depending on the program, monthly or quarterly statements are mailed, given at meetings or on the phone.

"The beauty of it is that it says everybody's time is valuable. We just can't put people on the scrap heap," said Kahn. "I think we're really talking about a redefinition of the roles of the market economy and what it does well and the non-market economy and what it does well."

Pressure on the government to provide more services can be resolved with service credit programs at little or no cost, said Kahn, who also helped write the blueprint for the Legal Services program, led an American Bar Association citizens watchdog group that produced a pioneering report on hunger in America, and served as special counsel to the chairman of the Navajo tribe.

The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation invested $1.2 million in six groups as a test of the concept. Miami is in the second year of its three-year grant.

"The programs are feeling that they're riding a crest now, that everybody feels the money isn't there to solve social problems so there's got to be another solution," Kahn said.

The mobility of the American family also played a role in his thinking.

"It fills a critical gap in a community where we live as strangers" by giving a way for people to help. "If this didn't go on, neighbors could live next to each other in abject need with no mechanism to being them together."

Michigan, which offered its first services in January, has recruited young volunteers who can offer their credits to grandparents as Christmas or birthday presents. Miami is working with schools to recruit teen-age volunteers.

"We are not attempting to reinvent the volunteer services," said Eric Berry of Michigan's Volunteer Incentive Service Credit Accounting Program. "Our programs are asked to network with the existing volunteer programs, so if we are alerted to a caregiver at such and such an address, if there is a church group that already has volunteers available, that volunteer receives the service credits."

Quilt Guild makes doll quilts for Salvation Army

The Panhandle Piecemakers Quilt Guild wanted a community project to do involving quilts and someone came up with the idea of making doll quilts to go along with the dolls that the Salvation Army gives away at Christmas time. Members of the Guild made over 80 doll quilts to help make some little girl's Christmas a little brighter this year. The four ladies who made the most quilts are from left: Eleanor Crossland, 7; Trudy Davis, 5; Alma Goodner, 14; and Billie Williams, 8. In April, the Guild plans to sponsor a quilt show in Pampa. All area quilters will be invited to show their handiwork. The Guild meets the fourth Thursday of the month at the Hobby Shop.

Dear Santa,
I am only 8 months old, so my Grandma W. is writing this for me. Since it is my first Christmas, I don't know what I want — so just bring me some little toys that you think I would like. My momma said I am growing so fast that I am out growing all my clothes, so I guess some new clothes would be okay too. I would also like for you to leave things for all the little boys and girls in the world. I know momma and daddy will leave you some milk and cookies. I hope you will like them and that you will have a nice Christmas too.
Thank you,
Colby Stevens
Pampa
Dear Santa,
My name is Karesa Kathleen Spalding. I helped my PaPa work on sink and I am starting to pick up my toys, so I think I've been a good girl. I also love everybody. This year for Christmas I want Ninja Turtles and Shark Attack. I would also like some candy and my own set of keys (like big people have).
Love,
Karesa

Good nature makes up for man's bad grammar

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I never thought I would find myself writing to you. Still, I just can't let the letter in today's paper from "In Love" pass without comment. She complained that her otherwise perfect husband embarrassed her with his bad grammar.

I graduated from college with majors in journalism and English literature, focusing on the Shakespearean tragedies. I am a free-lance writer and I delight in excellent grammar.

I am married to a general contractor who is in constant demand because he is a fine craftsman and an honest man, and his gentle personality is such that most of his clients become personal friends. I should add that he just barely graduated from high school.

"Ray" is the best person I have ever met, so generous and loving. He produces solid, spectacular work in this age of mediocrity. Sometimes I feel so fortunate he chose me I get tears in my eyes.

He also says, "I ain't got none" or, "I don't never want to do that again." But I have never been embarrassed by it in front of friends, family or anyone. If people can't look beyond this one triviality, it's their loss!

In the many years I have been with him, I never noticed anyone slighting him because of his grammar. It is part of his charm, and the idea of sending him off to an adult education program to "correct" a "lapse" in this magnificent man repels me. Perhaps "In Love" would be happier if she showed her love for the man she married, and not for the man she wants him to become. Sign me ...

AIN'T I LUCKY!

DEAR LUCKY: You are indeed lucky. And so is your husband, because you are able to accept him just the way he is. Good for you!

"In Love," however, said she never noticed her husband's bad grammar before they were married and now it's driving her crazy, and she can't see herself spending the rest of her life being embarrassed before her friends and family.

As I told her, if he is not willing to learn — for his sake or hers — then the marriage is doomed.

DEAR ABBY: My boyfriend and I have decided to do something this Christmas that we have never done before. Through some friends who work with the homeless and indigent, we found a family whose primary provider had been out of work for some time. We will provide Christmas dinner and gifts for the mom and dad and children in that family with the money we would have spent on gifts for each other.

I am looking forward to Christmas this year with a new kind of excitement, knowing that we will have made Christmas special for a family who has not been blessed with the same prosperity we enjoy now.

So if any of your readers are tired of the mad rush and spending frenzy we all make ourselves crazy with each Christmas, perhaps they may want to follow our lead. I'm sure there are plenty of needy families out there who would love to know that there are people who remembered what Christmas is supposed to be about — giving, not receiving. It's good to be reminded.

BLESSED IN BOSTON
a beautiful idea.

DEAR ABBY: As a real estate broker and accountant, I can tell you that there are a lot of horror stories these days concerning wills. Most of the stories concern people with enormous estates whose wills were prepared by lawyers who were not estate lawyers.

Asking a trial lawyer or real estate lawyer to draw up a will is like asking a podiatrist to do brain surgery. Drawing up a will is a specialty. Please tell your readers that they should not let a neighbor or a relative who happens to be a lawyer draw up their wills, even if they offer to do it for free or at a discount. You get what you pay for.

IRA IN YONKERS

DEAR IRA: That sounds like good advice to me — even if it is free. Thanks, Ira.

Civic Ballet sponsors poster contest for "The Nutcracker Suite" production

This year in conjunction with the production of "The Nutcracker Suite" the Pampa Civic Ballet sponsored a poster contest at the elementary schools.

Copies of the Nutcracker story donated by the Civic Ballet were made available to the school libraries and through the library or the school music department, students were able to experience the ballet before the production.

First, second and third place winners were awarded tickets to see "The Nutcracker Suite" on Dec. 2.

Judges for the contest were Cile Taylor, Chleo Worley, Mary Duenkel and Melanie Smith.

First place winner from Horace Mann was Amy Rainey, fifth grade; second place — Marisol Resendiz, fifth grade; third place — Eddie Soto, first grade; honorable mention to Willie Hathaway and Stephanie Morris.

Woodrow Wilson winners include: first place — Chris Lockridge, fourth grade; second place — Angel Armstrong, first grade; third place — Matt Cook, first grade; honorable mention to Michael Moore and Brian Sealman.

First place winner at Austin was Kandi Chilton, fifth grade; second place — Lori Lindsey, third grade; third place — Laura Reynolds, third grade; honorable mention to Laurie Berzanskis and Brandy Kempf.

Borger resident honored at pre-publication gala

J. Franklin Publishers of Tulsa, Okla., announced Dec. 15 the national release date of the publication: Ashes & Sparks, "Tales from Indian Territory" by long time Borger resident and author Ruby Dell Davis.

A pre-publication gala champagne reception to honor Davis, hosted by Ed Benz, director of the Hutchinson County Historical Museum, will take place Dec. 10 from 4 to 6 p.m. at the museum. A limited edition of Ashes & Sparks, numbered and signed by the author will be available to invited guests.

Ashes & Sparks is a work of historical fiction, a moving portrait of a girl, her family, a community and a time. The book is human and humorous as Davis paints a complex composition of hope, with its dependency and deception, that links "Elaine" and the people whose lives she touches in the promised land of Indian territory. The reader will share the perplexing wonderment of a child in a time when children were to be seen and not heard and sense the tender early sprouts of the women's liberation movement.

The illustrations — photographs, tints, letters and post cards of the period collected by Davis and artfully incorporated into the book design by Carol Haralson — enhance the reader's immersion into the era.

Ashes & Sparks is handsomely slipcased in two volumes along with Tales from the Indian Territory. This second volume contains popular tales, ballads and traditions of pre-state years. The writings, along with the simple telling of original stories heard in the author's own voice on audio tape blend and hearken to simpler perspectives, a return to basics that results in a rejuvenating effect for all who read or hear the stories told.

Davis was born in Octavia, Indian Territory. She is an avid reader and natural storyteller whose impressions, keen observations and remarkable eye for character have delighted many listeners.

Borgans have enjoyed her work through the years. During World War II, readers throughout the Texas Panhandle looked forward to her weekly column for the Red Cross in the Borger News Herald.

Davis, twice president of Twentieth Century, a member of the National Women's Clubs of America and a nominee for Texas Mother of the Year, was responsible for the establishment of a Girl Scout Council in Hutchinson County and Borger's "Girl Scout Little House." She devoted many hours as an early Borgan to her community, as did her late husband, Hudson Davis, who was named Outstanding Civic Leader of America in 1968, a result of years of work in the economic development of Borger, the Plains and Texas.

Her most recent prize was first place in the "Texas Federated Women's Club Annual Short Story Competition." Davis is frequently called on to provide readings, book reviews, writings and dramatic skits for her club and area gatherings.

October Carrier of the Month

Chris Teakell, 12, son of Tony and Therisa Teakell, was named Carrier of the Month for October. His territory are routes #201 and #207. Teakell is a sixth grader at Pampa Middle School and he likes basketball, football, fishing and hunting. Teakell is saving his money for college. He hopes to go to Texas A&M and become a doctor. Having the paper route has taught Teakell how to meet people and take responsibility. Congratulations, Chris!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) This is not a good day for you to go window shopping at expensive stores in the mall. You might be tempted to buy something costly which you'll instinctively know is not a good deal. Get a jump on life by understanding the influences which are governing you in the year ahead. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions today by mailing $1.25 to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You're going to be very closely observed by others today, so be extra mindful of your behavior and manners. If you do anything anti-social, you'll be stuck with an unflattering label.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) It's important today that you don't evaluate problems or challenges from an emotional perspective. If your feelings rule your mind, you're not apt to be successful.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Don't move too fast to try to develop a relationship between you and someone you recently met. Proceed slowly so that you'll be able to determine how much you have in common.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) It's going to take a concerted effort today if you hope to achieve what you feel is a vital objective at this time. If you fail to psyche yourself up properly, you might miss the boat.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Your greatest ally is your common sense, but today you might not use it as you should. It's important you strive to be realistic instead of rationalizing.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) There's a possibility that material considerations may come between you and a close friend today and create a disagreement. However, this can be avoided if you guard against it.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Today it may be easier for you to make promises and commitments than it will be for you to fulfill them. Sincerity is essential in what you agree to do.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) If you have doubts today about a subordinate's ability to perform, it is best not to assign a task that requires special skills. Give this individual a minor role instead.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) A social situation might not live up to your expectations today, especially if it is a gathering that may contain one or two individuals who make you feel uncomfortable.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) You might have to deal with a person today who is extremely difficult to please. Do the best you can, but if it doesn't work, don't collect guilt from your efforts.

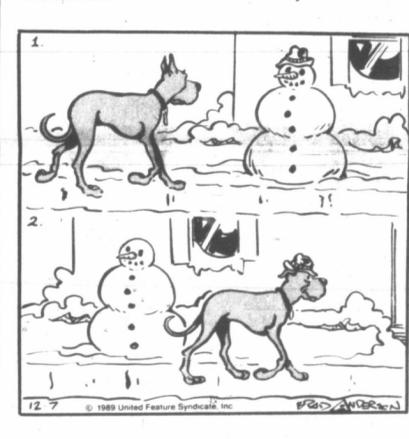

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) People you'll be involved with today will instinctively know whether or not your statements are sincere, so don't attempt to use flattery in order to achieve your purposes.

Leonard, Duran meet for one last showdown

By TIM DAHLBERG
AP Sports Writer

LAS VEGAS — Sugar Ray Leonard and Roberto Duran, two young warriors when they provided the decade of the '80s with its first major fight, close it tonight when they meet in a rubber match of aging but still fiercely competitive fighters.

The two old adversaries, both 15 pounds heavier than when they last met nine years ago, fight for Leonard's World Boxing Council super middleweight title in a scheduled 12-round bout in the chilly night air at the glittering new Mirage hotel.

The title, however, is mere window dressing in the third fight between two boxers whose places were permanently etched in boxing lore when Duran — who had beaten Leonard in a close decision six months earlier — uttered the infamous "No mas" and suddenly quit against Leonard on Nov. 25, 1980 in New Orleans.

"I will take his heart from him," vowed the 38-year-old Duran, who carries on his shoulders not only his own personal redemption but the nationalistic fever of his Panamanian countrymen.

"I want to beat him and redeem myself. It is my pride. I need to beat him because of me."

Leonard, 33, coming off less-than-impressive performances against Donny Lalonde and Thomas Hearns, has motivation of his own.

"This is a fight for me, a fight I want," Leonard said. "I am my own worst critic. If I have a less-than-average performance, it bothers me until I find out what the reason was."

Leonard is a 2-1 favorite to win a fight that for years seemed to have little chance of ever happening but now stands to be one of the biggest — if not the biggest — money-grossing fights of all time.

Ironically, it took Leonard getting knocked down three times in his last two fights to make it sell.

"That's the intrigue of it," Leonard said. "Can I move? Do I have my legs?"

A live gate of more than $8 million and strong pay-per-view and closed-circuit sales may push the fight close to the $76 million generated by Leonard's win over Marvin Hagler.

"This will be the biggest event in the history of boxing," promoter Bob Arum claimed.

A near-sellout of 16,000 is expected for the outdoor arena at the Mirage, a $630 million Strip resort that opened five weeks ahead of schedule just for the fight. The fight is scheduled to begin about 7:40 p.m. PST.

Leonard is guaranteed $15 million and could make another $4.5 million in percentages that kick in after the promotion grosses $50 million. Duran is guaranteed $7.5 million and could make another $3 million.

If Leonard makes just $15 million, he would have made $32 million for his three fights against Duran — or about $1 million per round.

Duran has never fully explained why he suddenly quit against Leonard. But most think Leonard, who fought him toe-to-toe and lost five months earlier in Montreal, simply frustrated him with his dancing and movement and taunted Duran into quitting.

N.D. fan meets Irish face to face

NEW YORK (AP)— Growing up near Detroit in an Irish Catholic family, Bill McCartney was a big Notre Dame fan.

"I remember sitting in our new 1947 Plymouth listening to the Notre Dame-Southern Cal game on the radio," he said. "Every time they called a penalty on Notre Dame, my dad would yell, 'That's highway robbery! Who's refereeing this game, Jesse James?'"

On New Year's night, McCartney will try to steal a game from the Fighting Irish when his top-ranked Colorado Buffaloes play for the national championship in the Orange Bowl.

"Notre Dame is the class of college football," he said Wednesday during a promotional stop in New York. "To beat them is the ultimate conquest. It doesn't get any better than that."

Colorado, the only major undefeated team in the country, will be playing for its first national championship. Notre Dame has won eight titles, more than any other school.

McCartney knows the Fighting Irish have more than history on their side. As a Michigan assistant in 1980, he learned the hard way about the luck of the Irish.

That was the year Harry Oliver kicked a 51-yard field goal on the last play of the game to beat Michigan 29-27. A strong wind was blowing against Notre Dame on the last drive, but it died down seconds before Oliver's kick.

"The ball barely made it over the crossbar," McCartney said. "If the wind's blowing, there's no way he makes it."

The winds of change have been blowing in Boulder this season. Colorado won its first outright Big Eight championship since 1961 and completed its first perfect regular season in 52 years.

"This is a new experience for us," McCartney said. "It would be easy for us to say, 'We're going to the Orange Bowl,' and be satisfied with that. But that's not going to happen because we realize what's at stake."

"This is a very special time for Colorado. We haven't been in this position before. The entire state and the city of Boulder are electrified."

The Buffaloes have dedicated their season to Sal Aunese, their starting quarterback in 1988. Aunese died of cancer on Sept. 23 after watching Colorado's first three games from the sidelines.

"Sal wrote a letter to the team the day before he died, and the last words were, 'Bring back the Orange Bowl,'" McCartney said.

It won't be easy, though. Notre Dame, which had its 23-game winning streak snapped by Miami on Nov. 25, can stake its own claim to the national championship with a victory.

Notre Dame coach Lou Holtz said his fourth-ranked team could make a strong case by beating Colorado even if No. 2 Miami defeats Alabama in the Sugar Bowl and No. 3 Michigan downs Southern Cal in the Rose Bowl.

Mustangs need another dose of stingy defense to halt Sudan

By L.D. STRATE
Sports Writer

Coach Ronnie Karcher recites an old, familiar line when asked what his Wheeler Mustangs would have to do to upset unbeaten Sudan.

"We've got to go out and play that good defense again. Sudan has been scoring so many points that you've got to be able to play tough on defense," Karcher said.

Wheeler (9-3) tangles with Sudan (13-0) in the Class 1A regional quarterfinals at 7:30 p.m. Friday night at Canyon High School.

Karcher has been stressing good defensive play from the Mustangs all season long, and it's paid off with big wins in post-season play. The Mustangs made two strong defensive stands in the fourth quarter to hold off Rankin for a 13-12 victory last week in the first round of regionals. A week earlier, Wheeler's defense forced four turnovers in a 34-11 rout of Vega in the area round.

An experienced Sudan club has rolled over Garden City, 49-6, and Sunray, 42-12, in its last two playoff outings.

"We've got 10 seniors on the team and that really makes a difference for us," said Hornets' coach Royce McAdams. "They give us a lot of leadership."

The Hornets are ranked No. 1 by the Harris Rating System and No. 2

by the Associated Press.

Sudan's high-rolling offense is led by versatile quarterback Kyle Maxfield and running back Joe Gonzales. Maxfield, who returned a kickoff 91 yards for a TD against Sunray, has combined for over 1,000 yards in rushing and passing this season.

"Maxfield is a good athlete," Karcher said. "He returns punts and kickoffs and he throws the ball well."

Gonzales, a 175-pound senior, has rushed for 1,306 yards this season.

"Gonzales is a quality 1A back and so is Jarod Bellar (Gonzales' backfield mate). They're going to be tough to stop," Karcher said.

Going up against Sudan's defense has been like running into a brick wall for hapless opponents. The Hornets, spearheaded by linebackers Charles Schovajsa, Ronnie Gonzales and Bellar, allowed just 22 points in 10 regular-season games.

"Our linebacking play has been the key to our defense all season long," McAdams said.

The Mustangs will try and crack the Hornets' hard-shell defense with senior running back Michael Kenney, sophomore fullback Mack Marshall and senior quarterback Shawn Bradstreet.

"We're going to try and run right at them. That's been our strong suit on offense," Karcher said.

Kenney has rushed for 17 touchdowns and 1,112 yards. Marshall, who was out with an injury earlier in the year, led the Mustangs in rushing with 90 yards on 15 carries against Rankin.

"Marshall has come a long way since his injury. He keeps getting better every week," Karcher said.

Bradstreet has rushed for six TDs this season while passing for 763 yards and nine scores.

Wheeler's defense, led by end Matt Smith, tackle Arthur Altamirano and linebackers Kyle Sword and Ike Finsterwald, has played consistently well all season long. The Mustangs have given up just 8.8 points per game while blanking three opponents.

Harris lists Sudan as a 25-point favorite, but tradition is on Wheeler's side. The Mustangs have won three state championships (1987, 1979, 1977) while the Hornets have never made it past the regional quarterfinals.

"Wheeler is playing well now and tradition is a big part of it," McAdams said. "Wheeler is always going to be tough. They've got the type of team that doesn't make many mistakes. They let the other team make the mistakes and then they take advantage of it."

Officials' crew helps Oilers beat Steelers

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The National Football League says referee Ben Dreith's crew mistakenly awarded Houston an extra timeout in the first half of the Oilers' 23-16 victory Sunday in Pittsburgh.

Dreith didn't record the third and last timeout called by the Oilers after Bobby Brister completed a 4-yard pass to Merrill Hoge on a third-down play with 1:14 remaining in the half and Pittsburgh leading 10-7.

Hoge did not get out of bounds and the clock would have continued running if Houston had not called time out, thereby leaving the Oilers little time to mount a potential scoring drive after the Steelers' fourth-down punt.

Afterward, Dreith told a pool reporter that official timer Lou Rossi stopped the clock on his own and that the on-field officials did not stop the clock because there wasn't a timeout.

Steelers coach Chuck Noll told reporters Monday he planned to file a report on the officiating to the league office, although such reports rarely result in any action.

Noll also was upset tapes showed Oilers' receiver Haywood Jeffries failed to get both feet in-bounds on a key 37-yard reception that set up Lorenzo White's game-winning, 1-yard touchdown run with 21 seconds remaining. The reception was upheld by the instant replay official after a 41/2-minute delay.

NFL spokesman Pete Abitante said the league admitted the timeout error after officials supervisor Art McNally interviewed crew members and studied videotape.

He did not say whether Dreith or any of his crew members would be disciplined by the league.

"Those things are handled privately," Abitante said.

Indians' slugger Carter traded to Padres

By JIM DONAGHY
AP Baseball Writer

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — The last official day of the winter meetings provided a little bit of everything.

There were trades on Wednesday. A few free agents made up their minds, too. And, there was the expected and unexpected.

The San Diego Padres got their man when Joe Carter agreed to a five-year contract for $9.2 million. To get him, the Padres had to send catcher Sandy Alomar Jr., outfielder Chris James and third baseman Carlos Baerga to Cleveland.

Padres manager and vice president Jack McKeon started talking to Carter's agent, Jim Turner, on Tuesday and it was just a matter of dollar signs.

In the unexpected, the Cincinnati Reds traded John Franco to the New York Mets for Randy Myers in a swap of top left-handed relievers.

Free agent reliever Jeff Reardon left Minnesota to sign with Boston for $6.8 million over five years. The Twins then used their savings to re-sign first baseman Kent Hrbek to a five-year deal for $14 million.

McKeon stayed busy, announcing late Wednesday night the signing of 38-year-old outfielder Fred Lynn to a one-year deal for about $600,000. Trader Jack promised more moves, too.

But it will be hard to top getting Carter.

"I'm definitely relieved," Carter said from his home in Kansas. "I know San Diego is a good ballclub and it's a chance to compete on a contender."

Carter, 29, hit 35 home runs — most for the Indians since Rocky Colavito's 42 in 1959 — drove in 105 runs and batted .243. He averaged 31 homers and 108 RBIs in the last four seasons with Cleveland.

Carter was not signed for next year and indicated he would leave the Indians when he became eligible for free agency after the 1990 season. The Padres got permission to negotiate with Carter and were given until mid-afternoon Wednesday to work out a deal.

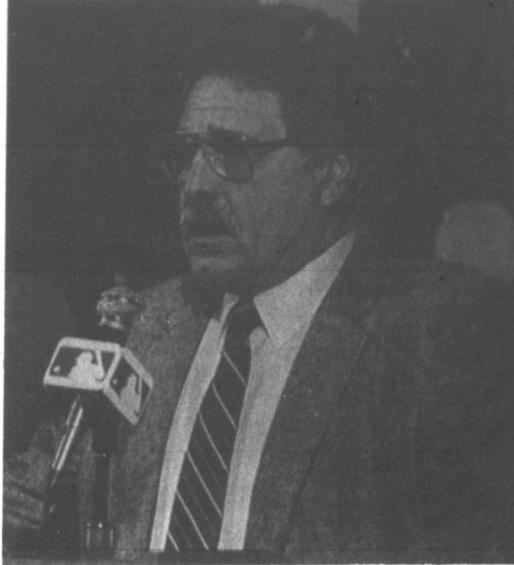

Carter is now the highest-paid position player in baseball history. "The Padres answered all of our concerns positively and it was a situation that Joe really liked," Turner said. "I'm glad everyone was able to get it done."

Carter will play center field and join an offense that includes Tony Gwynn and Jack Clark.

Alomar, 23, was never able to break into the Padres' lineup because they already had All-Star catcher Benito Santiago. Alomar hit .306 with 101 RBIs at Class AAA Las Vegas last season and Indians general manager Hank Peters said, "We've already received three or four offers for him."

Baerga, 21, is a switch-hitting third baseman who batted .275 with 74 RBIs at Las Vegas. James, 27, hit .243 with 13 home runs and 65 RBIs for Philadelphia and San Diego.

For the past five years, Franco has been the premier left-handed reliever in the NL, compiling 144 saves. The Mets came to the meetings looking for right-handed reliever to go with Myers.

Padres' manager Jack McKeon comments on the trade that sent slugger Joe Carter to San Diego.

"He has a good record against right-handed hitters, a good history of getting them out," Mets vice president Joe McIlvaine said of Franco.

Myers is one of the hardest throwing left-handers in the National League. He had 26 saves in 1988 and 24 last year. In the past three seasons, he has 249 strikeouts in 227 innings.

In other free agent action, Bill Gullickson returned from Japan to sign with Houston for one year at $1.4 million. The Astros also signed infielder Ken Oberkfell to a two-year deal for a guaranteed $1.5 million.

Also, Pittsburgh re-signed free-agent pitcher Neal Heaton for three years at $2.8 million and Philadelphia kept free-agent catcher Steve Lake for two years at $730,000. Boston re-signed reliever Dennis Lamp for one year and an option for $925,000 guaranteed.

Jayhawks corral SMU; Baylor downs UNT

By The Associated Press

The Southern Methodist Mustangs tried their hand at big-time college basketball and a rout resulted.

The No. 2-ranked Kansas Jayhawks, led by Terry Brown's 14 points, rolled to an easy 86-53 victory over the Mustangs Wednesday night. In the only other game involving a Southwest Conference team, Baylor whipped the University of North Texas, 78-67.

Brown had four 3-pointers to lead the Jayhawks.

Kansas trailed only once as it had six players in double figures. Mark Randall, Pekka Markkanen, and Kevin Pritchard each had 12 points while Freeman West and Mike Maddox added 10 each.

The Mustangs were led by Reginald Muhammad who had 13 points and Vernon Perdue, who chipped in 10.

Kansas outshot SMU 57 percent to 37 percent and outrebounded the Mustangs 33-28.

SMU's 3-2 zone bothered Kansas at times in the first half before Brown and Pritchard solved it with two 3-pointers each. Kansas rolled to an 8-0 lead, fell behind 11-10, then surged to a 34-20 halftime lead. The Jayhawks outscored SMU 14-6 to end the first half.

SMU played without its leading scorer, forward John Colborne, who was averaging 18 points and 7 rebounds. Colborne sat out the game with a sprained ankle he suffered in practice.

Ivan Jones had 21 points and Kelvin Chalmers came off the bench to add 19 more as Baylor defeated North Texas 78-67 in a non-conference game.

Baylor is 5-2 for the season while the Eagles are 0-6.

Chalmers had 15 rebounds for Baylor, and Jerald Temple had 15 for North Texas.

North Texas was led in scoring by Ray Schufford, who had 16 points.

Jones, a 6-4 senior, was 9-of-12 from the field and made both of his free-throw tries.

Melvin Hunt also was in double figures for Baylor, scoring 11 points.

Schufford, a freshman guard, made four of his eight 3-point attempts.
