The House education and labor subcommittee has approved a bill which will release some $400,000,000 in federal funds for aid to various states in their school building programs. This money is supposed to be match-if the approved bill is ultimately passed it would mean that this much money would be available to those states will do when they get tired enough of governmental in-them. The school board members, now acting as private citizens have organized the "Prince Edward Educational Corporation," a purely private group. This new group started out to raise $200,000 by private subscription so that private educational activities in the county could

By mail $7.50 per year in retail trading zone, $12.00 per year outside retail trading zone. Price for single copy, 5 cents. No mail orders accepted in localities served by carrier. The pathetic part about the article is that Professor Tenney laments the conditions in the colleges and hopes that they will change. He does this, although he seems to realize that there is some relation between the means used and the results obtained. Here is the way Professor Ten-> nev describes what he finds: "A study of mid-century ethics Is quite beyond both me and the scope of these remarks; but because I am a professional educator I am interested in its powerful presence in academica and fear the danger to us and to our students if it is allowed to develop unchecked.

"Its power over the minds of many, students and teachers alike is to be seen in the way they think and in the way they establish or discover truth.

"The most startling evidence is in the language itself. The words, vinced,' used to be standard with freshmen coming out of our public schools. These words are now being replaced by I feel, my reaction is, my feeling is, it seems to me, it is felt that.' A similar shift in language has gone on in the students' elders. 'What is your reaction?' is now more common than 'What do you think?' Just how this change came about is not our concern. The change has occurred and it may best be illustrated by the following incident.

"I asked a class of freshmen to write an essay on: Should Benjamin Franklin have been made the patron sain of the Democratic Party instead of Andrew Jackson? The class had just completed reading biographies of each man, and was being asked to argue the case for the superiority of either one over the other. A minority answered the question; almost half hedged but gave no reason; another minority hedged and gave the reason. It was this: 'Both of these Americans are national heroes by vote and common consentof the American people. It is un-American to contest the will of the people and to set one hero above another.' The unexpressed thought was that I, the teacher, had been subversive in asking

"These students were my best students, as the subtlety of their gument suggests. They cogentexpressed what the majority who hedged without giving reasons could not or would not express. In thirty years of teaching I have asked thousands of students to weigh such evidence, but never before has the request been denied because the consensus of the American people was so right and complete as to put the question beyond the pale of thoughtful thought. Notice the denial of the possibility of right reason: a good American must feel as the majority of Americans felt as determined by a consensus of feelings registered at the polls and in the press. (When I lectured my students on their moral and intellectual cowardice, they smiled benignly on me; for they, well-adjusted, feel for a teacher temporarily off the beam. They hold no grudges; my words represent to many of them 'a typical deviation from the norm in one who is a holdover from the days when people got excited over merely

"My students are the natural produce of the teachings of the age; and when they reflect its predominant creed, I blame them not. But I do blame those administrators and leaders in positions of responsibility and power who, knowing better, have not gone down fighting. By this I mean those who have permitted the present situation to develor by compromising their intellectual primary laws.

"The first principle of education (as basic to this science as the principle of means and ends is to the science of ethics) is that education is a discipline and that the ideally educated man is he who possesses a disciplined imagination, a disciplined memory, disciplined emotions, and a disciplined intelligence. In proportion as any person has made these faculties his servants is he free. They serve him, and not he them. Similarly and in the same proportion is he 'knowing' or 'unknowing.' If this basic principle is not true, then education is impossible even as ethics becomes impossible when its prime law is abandoned, or as arithmetic ceases when the laws of addition are denied. And yet we professional educators up and down the line deny as often as not the principle which makes our profession a profession. Illu-

So, they argue, 80 or 90 per cent emotive words like moral and of the peoule finance tax-free power for the other 10 or 20 per cent, although they derive no benefits from these remote projects. Opponents also point out that lower costs for power lead industries to migrate from their areas to the Federally supported regions. Irrigation of additional acres, in view of current farm surpluses and support prices, they contend, tend to increase urban cost of living.

Opponents of the Upper Colorado Project, for instance, have cluttered the Congressional Record with a breakdown of the amounts which the 48 states will contribute in taxes to this undertaking. As they figure it, here is what a few nonbeneficiary commonwealths will pay:

New York, $161,217,500; California, $100,774,600; Pennsylvania $82,302,500: Michigan, $63,175,400; Illinois, $83,505,200; Texas $44,266,-500; New Jersey $39,566,600. The four beneficiary states would pay approximately $25,000,000, according to these critical estimates.

Naturally, this is an extremely effective argument, Had it been resorted to many years ago, it might have blocked many projects which, when completed, mean that the Federal government will be genera-

THE QUESTION THAT IS up before the league fathers of the West Texas-New Mexico League now concerning whether to allow non-playing coaches on the field will not effect the Oilers' Grover Seitz or any other club who has a non-playing manager.

This situation deals only with the clubs who have hired a non-playing coach in addition to their regular field manager.
