NAACP Worst Of White South's Race Woes An example of retaliatory moves

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is another dispatch on the big issues of the desegregation controversy written by the United Press Atlanta bureau chief who is touring the states of the Deep South.

By AL KUETTNER GREENVILLE, Miss. "-UP-The letters NAACP have become a symbol to the white South of the worst of its woes in the race problem. The letters stand for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Organized in New York 48 years ago, it is now in the forefront of the Negro battle for equality. Many sincere Southerners are convinced that the NAACP has Communist leanings.

Conservatives hate it passionately. Many moderates, while sympathetic with some of its aims argue that the NAACP is carrying the banner of racial integration so fast and recklessly that bloodshed may result.

Whites who join or endorse the NAACP do so at the risk of community abuse. Negro leaders of the organization find themselves subjected to all sorts of pressures, usually economic ones.

But Grows Steadily Nevertheless, the NAACP is growing steadily in the South. Practically all the large cities and towns have organized offices. Even in this Mississippi delta country, with great expanses of flat plantation land separating Negro settlement houses, the NAACP has its members.

The organization's aim is to crumble segregation barriers wherever they exist. It has scored some notable victories, its greatest being the part it played in the Supreme Court ruling on desegregating the public schools.

tt was Thurgood Marshall, the association's brilliam $15,000-a-year counsel, who made an impact on the court with words like these: "Those same kids in Virginia and South Carolina play in the streets together, they separate to go to school and then they come out of school and play ball togeth-The NAACP has been influential in opening a number of all-white colleges to Negroes and geting integrated recreation facilities in some cities. Task Will Be Tougher But its task in the South has been tough and will get tougher.

Right now race relations are at a new low in the core of the Deep South - Georgia, South Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisi-Louisiana has filed suit to outlaw the NAACP on the ground it failed the old Ku Klux Klan. Georgia Attorney General Eugene Cook gave the white citizens councils an effective propaganda weapon - a research project that Cook claims proves a Communist front tie-in with NAACP. The organization calls Cook's findings a is the case of George Patterson, a Negro undertaker in Vicksburg, Miss. Patterson says that after his name appeared on an NAACP school integration petition he was told that a new ordinance would make it impossible for the city to install water and sewer lines to a new building of his. He said other builders had no such restrictions.

Mushroomed in Past Year The South didn't hear much or care much about the NAACP until after World War II, It was then that the organization, joined by homecoming Negro servicemen, began its real drive in Dixie. And in the past year, since the death of its best-known officer, Walter White, the NAACP has mushroom-

In the year 1955 the NAACP took in $634,756 in dues and contributions. It built a membership of over 20,000 in Virginia, more than 10,000 in Louisiana, North Carolina and Alabama, 8,260 in South Carolina, 7,658 in Georgia 5,430 in Flor-

of the state to outlaw the group

South Behind Nation The fact is that the South dragged its feet on providing adequate schools and recreation facilities for Negroes until the NAACP went into court to fight for them. Outstanding exceptions exist, but as a region the South is far behind the rest of the nation. Part of the reason was economic - cured by a post-war industrial boom - but

part was the old notion that Negro (See NAACP, Page 8)

Love That U.N.

There is one job done by the United Nations which is being done extremely well. That is the job of convincing people generally that it is a fine organization. The half-truths, apologies, outright untruths and distortions resorted to by the U. N. in accomplishing this objective are startling.

We have recently received a little booklet which bears the imprint of the Department of State and which is a fine example of the self-adulation and self-praise put out by this international swindle. The booklet is entitled: "You and the United Nations." It consists of a series of questions, apparently directed to Henry Cabot Lodge Jr., U. S. representative to the U. N.

Almost without exception the answers to these questions are so slanted as to create an entirely erroneous impression of the value of the U. N. There are 19 questions and answers all told. Let us begin with question one.

"Mr. Lodge, how effective has the United Nations been in deterring or stopping aggression?"

In his answer, Mr. Lodge cites six instances in which the U. N. was allegedly successful in this respect. They are:

1. "Extinguishing the threatened communist aggression in Iran in 1946 and causing the withdrawal of Soviet troops there."

2. "Preventing war between Israel and the Arab countries from expanding into a far greater war." 3. "Ending the communist hostilities against

4. "Preventing the outbreak of war over Kash-

5. "Mediating the conflict which led to an independent Indonesia.'

6. "Our resistance to communist aggression in Korea, with material, moral and manpower support from the United Nations, was successful."

Let us examine these claims in turn.

1. Was the threat of communist aggression "extinguished" in Iran as a result of U. N. action? It was not. The threat still exists there. However, the threat changed its complexion, not so much because of U. N. action, but because the Soviet adopted a much more subtle and successful method of procedure. Instead of relying upon its troops, it withdrew them and concentrated upon subversion and infiltra-

The U. N. not only made no effort to prevent such subversion and infiltration, but through its unwieldy, complex and contradictory agencies, actually aided and abetted such activities. The communist threat in Iran, instead of being extinguished, is larger today than it was in 1946.

2. The war between Israel and the Arab countries has been on and off ever since the U. N. created the cause for the war by helping to oust more than a million Arabs from their homes. There is now an excellent chance that this seething area of hatred bred by the U.N. may flame up into one of the biggest wars yet.

3. The communist hostilities in Greece were ended because of resolute action taken by the United States, not by the United Nations. The truth is that the U. N. commission which was attempting to intervene was stopped at the Greek border, Instead, American General James Van Fleet moved into Greece at the invitation of the anti-communist forces there and gave invaluable advice and assistance so that the U. N. sponsored compromise was scuttled and the anti-communist forces won a victory.

4. The Kashmir incident gives good indication of how far the U. N. will stoop to try to scrounge credit. There is no indication that the alteration in Kashmir would necessarily have resolved itself into a war. A settlement of the dispute was virtually assured before the U. N. took any action. There is no proof that the action taken by the U. N. in this instance gave any assistance.

5. The Indonesia mediation may have resulted in an independent nation there, but it also resulted in the acquisition of a vast and rich new territory by the communist orbit. There was no gain for the so-called free world. There was a large and lucrative gain for the communists, considerable loss of prestige and "face" to anti-communists. Incidentally, even the U. N. lost face over this one.

6. The most revealing of the claims is the last If the Korean debacle can even remotely be labeled a "success" then we should be warned in time. How many more "successes" like Korea can we afford? The plain facts of the case, amply documented by Generals MacArthur, Van Fleet, Clark and Admiral Joy, are that the forces against communism had at least two, if not three opportunities to win and defeat the communists. It was the United Nations which earnestly worked to prevent just such a victory.

This is the "line" put out by the United Nations. How do the facts square up with the propaganda?

The Rights of Property—
A Refutation Of Socialism And Communism

I want to continue to quote from the chapter "On The Universality of Property" in Adolphe Thiers' great book, "The Rights of Property; A Refutation of Communism and Socialism."

In the last article, Thiers was showing that men universally believed in movable property. Then he proceeds to show that land that is not movable is also property. He does it in this manner:

". . . Then to the movable property of the nomad succeeds the immovable property of an agricultural people; the second property arises, and with it complicated laws, indeed, but still such as time renders more just, more foreseeing, but without changing the principle, which is applied by judges and by the public force. Property resulting from a first effect of instinct becomes a social contract, for I protect your property in order that you may protect mine; I protect it either by my person as a soldier, or by my money, by devoting a part of my revenue to the support of a public force.

"Thus in proportion as a man expands, he becomes more and more attached to what he possesses, or in other words, more proprietary. He is scarcely so at all in a barbarous state: in the civilized state he is eminently so.

"Among the ancients, the land was the property of the republic; in Asia, it belongs to the despot; in the middle ages, it was the property of a few lords. With the progress of the ideas of liberty, by arriving at the enfranchisement of man, his possessions, his goods, were enfranchised also; he was declared proprietor, owner of his land, independently of the republic, the despot, or the lord. From that moment confiscation was abolished. The day that restored to him the use of his faculties, individualized his property still more; it became still more attached to the individual himself, still more property than it had

"Let us take another example. In the middle ages, or in despotic states, the surface of the earth was conceded, but not what lay beneath. The right of excavating mines was a royalty, leased out for money and for a season to certain workers fo the metals. With the progress of time it was understood, that as the interior of the earth might become the scene of a new kind of labour, it ought to become the scene of a new property, and the property, of mines was constituted; so that now there are two properties connecthusbandman above, of the miner "Property is therefore a general and universal fact, increasing and not decreasing. When naturalists observe an animal which, like the bee or the beaver, constructs a habitation, they declare unhesitatingly that the bee and the beaver are constructive animals. On similar grounds, cannot philosophers, who are the naturalists of the human race, say, and say truly, that property is a law of man, that he is made for property, and that it is a law of his kind? And it is not enough to assert that it is a law of his kind, it is a law of all living things. Has not the rabbit his burrow, the bird his nest, the beaver his hut, and the bee his hive? Has not the swallow - that joy of our climate in the young spring-time her nest, to which she returns, and which she will not yield without a struggle; and if she had the gift of thought, would she not be disgusted by the theories of our sophists? Grazing animals live peacefully in a body, like the wanderers of the desert, in certain pastures, from which they never remove, for in them property is manifested by habit. Carnivorous animals, as the lion, like the savage hunter, cannot live in herds: they would incommode one another; each has around him a circle of destruction, in which he dwells alone, and from which he expels all of his like habits who might wish to share his spoil. He also, if he could think, would declare himself a proprietor. And now, returning to human beings, observe that child, governed by instinct no less than the lion. Notice with what simplicity the inclination for property is revealed in him."

Property the Reward of Labor After having seen that in all times and in all countries man appropriates all that he touches, first his bow and his arrows, then his land, his house, his palace, - invariably establishes property as the necessary reward of labour .if we reasoned concerning him. as Pliny and Buffon have reasoned on animals, we should not hesitate to declare, after having observed so general a manner of being, that property is a necessary law of his kind. But this animal is not an ordinary animal; he is a king, - king of the creation (as would have been said formerly.) and yet his titles are contested. This is reasonable; we must examine them more closely. Fact, it is said, does not constitute right: tyranny also is a fact, a very general fact. We must therefore prove that the fact of property is a right, and deserves the title. We have, however, done something by showing that this fact is increasing instead of diminishing, for tyranny decays and disappears instead of extending. Let us proceed, however, and you will see that this fact is the most deserving of respect, the most fertile of

If their cold cash negotiations are deemed to be 'improper but not illegal," the Gore investigations will come upon only slim pickings.

The behind-the-scenes intrigues all, the most worthy of being called a right: for by its means God has civilized the world, and led men from woods and wilds into cities, from cruelty to gentleness from ignorance to wisdom, from harbarism to civilization."

Atomic Energy Commissioner Thomas Murray has urged that the Government take over and ramrod a $6,000,000,000 program to build some 12,000,000 kilowatts of atomic power here and abroad This program, Thomas declared, is needed now despite the fact that atomic power generally is not competitive with electric power from conventional sources. "If you put it on the basis of economics," he is quoted as saying, "you don't go ahead."

Well, well! What other basis is there to put it on than the basis of economics? An atomic power plant is hardly an aesthetic achievement. And there is certainly no consideration that calls a "crash program" of atomic power plant construction. The only valid reason for building such a plant is to supply electric power at a competitive rate, And, when conditions are such that atomic power plants are justified on the basis of economics, they will be built-by private enterprise.
