Fallible Statistics

We have remarked from time to time that one of the important advantages of a free market over a controlled economy is that the former is flexible, the latter rigid. Whenever the government attempts to determine what should be produced by whom, and in what amounts, all such prognostications are based on statistics.

It might seem to the uninformed that such a footting for production is much more to be relied upon than the rather haphazard approach of free enterprise.

Not that free enterprise ignores statistics utterly. But the entrepreneur who invests his own money and stands to win or lose on the basis of his own energy and judgment isn't the devotee of the statistical curve to the degree the bureaucrat offers obeisance.

In short, the free enterpriser uses statistics when he wishes to do so and avoids them utterly if he has a "hunch" to the contrary. The bureaucrat can permit no hunch to enter into his calibrations. Everything is based on statistics, period.

But what if the statistics are wrong? Impossible?

Author Darrell Huff has written a dandy little treatise on the subject of figures which is entitled: "How to Lie with Statistics." Unfortunately, statistics are rarely totally reliable. Ask any poll taker of political opinion, Huff makes good reading.

In his work, "Life on the Mississippi," Mark Twain saw through the fallacy. At one point in his description of river boating he pointed out, "In 176 years the Lower Mississippi has shortened itself 242 miles. This is an average of a trifle over one mile and a third per year. Therefore, anyone can see that 742 years from now the Lower Mississippi will be only a mile and three-quarters long, and Cairo and New Orleans will have joined their streets together.

Back in the early days of this country, the population was growing with tremendous rapidity. As a matter of fact, from 1800 until 1860, the population doubled every 20 years. If this statistical curve were reliable, it takes only a moment of time to figure out that by 1960 the population of the United States will equal 1,006,000,000 persons. Not even the birth-conscious government educational system will make so fantastic a

However, it seems only yesterday that statisticians were deploring the falling birth rate in this country. In 1936 things seemed to hit a low in American ability to reproduce. Then it was revealed in numerous magazine articles and newspaper accounts that by 1960 the majority of Americans would be over 60 years of age; nurseries and schools would be empty, factories closed for lack of workers

Apparently neither statistical curve provided an infallible guide to the future. Yet the government acted in both cases as though such curves were entirely plaus-

One ambitious poll taker, as a result of a survey, established that every woman who graduated from Vassar would have one and a third babies. And it wasn't long ago that the Army inveigled new recruits by reciting that life expectancy in the military was greater than in any big American city. Figures proved that there were fewer deaths per capita in the Army than in civilian

Every one of these "absolute" conclusions was based on statistics and, of course, every one was and is

The truth of the matter is this. No person, however he bolsters his opinion with figures, curves and graphs, can foretell with accuracy just how much wheat Americans can and will consume; how many sugar beets ought to be raised; or how many new motor cars will be snapped up by a dazzled driving public.

The free enterpriser knows this and takes his chances. The government can never learn this and chains us all to its own statistically-drawn finalities.

This is just one of the reasons America has prospered under free enterprise whereas other countries relying on governmental decrees and decisions, are now so largely dependent upon our largess.

A Good Question

I have a letter from J. Rupert Mason of San Francisco who asks a question that has puzzled men down through the ages. He writes:

"Being advised that you believe governments should be supported on a 'voluntary' basis, I am wondering how you would know, or even be able to guess how much you should put in the federal, state, county, city, school district treasury to help balance their respective budgets?

"Would you invest in bonds issued by a county or city based on 'voluntary' collections from residents of the community?

"The growth of federal, state and local budgets since Congress and the States restored to other than the traditional American direct, annual ad-valorem land tax, suggests a 'leak' somewhere along

"Public budgets are now measured according to 'need,' regardless of where the money is coming FROM

"The Henry George principle was put into the California Irrigation District Act. in 1909. (St. 1909, P. 461) I am told you doubt the 'theory will work.' Please read the enclosed. "You have districts governed by

"Too few editors are clear, about this. Marx & George are the opposite poles of their era. Kindly explain your 'voluntary' policy. "Very sincerely, J. Rupert Ma-

Evidently Mr. Mason is a believer in the Henry George theory. I have read Henry George and come in contact with many Georgians. It seems to me they all have different solutions; that their theory is so unthinkable that they cannot agree. Of course, we can not ask George because he is dead. But their agents have about as many ideas as to how the George theory would work as there are agents. My Answer To His Question

I would buy from a protective association, protection for my life and property from the association that would give me the most for the money, just as I buy life insurance and fire insurance from the agency that I believe is the soundest and would give me the best protection, I must have the right to discontinue buying from think will give me most for my money. In other words, there must be competiton or the threat of competiton in order to have a service. When there is no competion there is no true value, as is the case when the government has the right arbitrarily to confiscate a man's property and call it a tax. Then there is no way of knowing how much each man should contribute to the government as his just share. Competiton would be the protection as to the agency overcharging me. I hear the objection that are protective agencies would come in conflict. I do not believe there would be nearly as much conflict when the insured had the right to dismiss the agency and the agency had a right to refuse to insure an individual who was to great a risk as there is now. We have conflicts between competitive arbitrary monopoly governments now - federal, state, county, city, school districts and many other taxing units-promising protection with the right to arbitrarily collect taxes that the individual does not have the power to refuse to pay.

Certainly I would buy bonds if I believed in owning credits from such protective associations, just as I would buy bonds in an insurance comapny or any business that is supported on a voluntary basis if I preferred bonds to being a stockholder or a partner in the business.

For thousands and thousands of years people have believed in the divine right of governments to plunder or rob the individual. For thousands of years people believed in slavery. We abandoned it about 90 years ago in the United States. Maybe in another 90 years people will adopt the ideologies first set forth in the Declaration of Independence that governments derive their just power from the consent of the governed. That means that the government would have to render service officiently enough that people would voluntarily pay for the protection. To the degree that we approach this ideal form of government as set forth in the Declaration of Independence, to that degree do we develop character and prosperity.

Since that is the cae, it seems reasonable to believe that if this ethical just system was put into effect, we would have the best society ever devised by the mind

There were important arguments for and against it in their case but in practical effect it gave a militaristic clique of politicians and generals power to bleed the nation almost to death for a slogan, "Liberty, Equality and Fraternity."

This liberty was abolished for the duration and the equality was an illusion. "Fraternity" was a word implying that the lower ecoomic and the intellectual classes were the salt of the earth and were affectionate brothers. This was no more true there than it is here today. The Nation's Press (Chicago Tribune)

The conviction of Harvey Matusow for perjury will be read across the nation as another testimonial to the good name of Roy M. Cohn. Matusow was a witness for the government in the 1953 trial in which 13 Communists were convicted under the Smith act. Mr. Cohn, then an assistant district attorney, played an important role in the prosecution. Later, Matusow testified that Cohn had induced him to bear false witness.

After listening to the evidence for 10 days, it didn't take the jury long to decide that Matusow lied in his accusation against the young lawyer.

This was no surprise to those who remembered the televised Mc-Carthy hearings in which Roy Cohn distinguished himself. For weeks before these hearings, persistent efforts were made smear him as, at best, a lightweight and a smart aleck and, at worst, a man without scruples. Millions of people all over the country watched him day after day during the hearings and came to the conclusion - some of them reluctantly - that the young man was, as Willard Edwards had pictured him in The Tribune, remarkable alike for the steadiness of his character and the quickness and force of his intellect.
