MATURE PARENT SOCIAL CALENDAR

By MRS. MURIEL LAWRENCE Miss E. is an unmarried, middle-aged professional woman. In another day, her successful life would have won her community respect. As the elder sister of an invalid brother, she's helped educate his children. As a loyal daughter, she's made her parents' old age comfortable. As an understanding woman, she's the favored confidante of young nieces and nephews. As a worker for underprivileged children, she merits the gratitude of all of us. But her 1957 community regards her with suspicion rather than respect. It's made her so ashamed of not having a husband that she's always hurting herself in empty little flirtations with married men. This low regard for the unmarried woman is new. Partly it's due, I think, to popular psychology's suggestion that marriage's "heterosexual" love is the only evidence of our maturity. It seems a pretty rigid and limited view. Not only has it embittered the unmarried woman's single state with a wholly new kind of humiliation and loneliness. It has also contributed to parents forcing of premature dating on children. "teen-agers" anxieties for the security of the "steady" date and their current rush into the early marriages whose "heterosexual" love can prove them well-adjusted. As American females outnumber males by more than a million, the unmarried woman will remain with us for some time. Perhaps, as anthropologist Margaret Mead recently suggested, we'd better reconsider the wisdom of making a husband the only socially approved goal for every girl. She says, "Women today are anxious to marry at any cost. The fact that one has been married has become the defense against accusations of abnormality, perversity and psychological maladjustment." Marriage's "heterosexual" love is indeed one evidence of our human worth. But it is not the only one. By making it our exclusive standard for psychological respect, we are reacting to the extremism of the last generation's feminist fanaticism. We become extremists, too. Balanced parents will keep this in mind. And rejecting this new kind of regimentation, they will rear girls to regard marriage as an enrichment of experience, not the sole purpose of life. A baby's skin has moisture and so is beautiful. But adult skin is, by and large, dry skin. Science is replacing the moisture through many lotions now on the market. Help around to find the right one for your skin.

Terry hand towels are just as practical for kitchen use as they are for the bathroom. They wash easily and need no ironing.

Sheets should be changed twice a week to prevent them from becoming too soiled. This saves wear and tear since they won't need drastic laundering to get them clean.

Never use pillow cases or sheets as laundry bags. This is hard on them, both in strain and soil. Buy a heavy duty laundry bag and use it regularly.

Book Review And Homes' Tour Report Given Parent Education Club Meeting

Dr. Emily Teed Hicks was guest speaker at Parent Education Club's first May meeting, presenting the book, "God's Psychiatry" by Charles L. Allen, to the members. The program was presented in the home of Mrs. Homer Johnson, with Mrs. Harold Meador as hostess. Finally, a psychologist gave them a piece of bread to hold when they went to bed at night. This piece of bread gave the assurance of food for tomorrow and so made for calm and peaceful rest. "This Psalm of David," concluded the report, "has sung its way across the barriers of time; it is more beloved now than ever before, not just because it is great literature, but because it tells that above all strife and fears, the hungers and weaknesses of mankind, there is a Shepherd." During the business meeting, conducted by the president, Mrs. Tom Rose, a vote of thanks was extended to the committee in charge of the club's "Tour of Beautiful Homes" and, also, to the people of Pampa, who toured the homes, for their courtesy and cooperation toward the homes and the hostesses. The project committee, with Mrs. Julian Key as chairman, outlined plans for the fall installation of a record-player with earphones in the Lovett Memorial Library, and of a television set in Mrs. Raison's class at Woodrow Wilson school. This equipment was made possible by funds from the tour. It is moved that the constitution committee, headed by Mrs. Myron Marx, recite four sections and submit to the club for a vote at the next meeting. Last meeting of the current club year will be at ten o'clock in the morning of May 21, in the home of Mrs. Robert Vall. New officers for the coming year will be installed.

Need Budget Cut

While the mammoth federal budget is still in a state of flux, it might be wise to emphasize the costliness of this colossal money extravagance in a homely manner.

According to the Tax Foundation, Inc., of New York City, every billion taken off this budget will result in a savings of $19 for every family of four in the United States. And while $19 may not seem like a great deal in terms of a year's expenses, when the possibilities are seen it will be noted that the sums involved are very great indeed.

Proposals have been made to reduce the budget by sums ranging from $2 to $8 billion. Personally, we would favor a reduction much beyond even the $8 billion figure.

Even if we left our monstrous defense efforts precisely where they are, we could cut the budget by close to $30 billion by simply getting the government out of the enterprises in which it has no business being. The elimination of such things as federal aid to schools, federal construction of highways, federal aid to farmers, federal operation of more than 400 different businesses, federal dams, and so forth, would cut the requirements by this sum and still leave ample for the military and for the essential operations of government.

Let us see what $19 saved for each family on each billion would do in any of these cases.

Let us suppose that the budget is reduced by a mere $2 billion. This would bring about a personal saving to each family of $38 dollars. This money could be applied to the private debts of these families, or it could be used to purchase, say, a clock radio, a power tool set or two portable humidifiers.

If the budget were reduced by $8 billion, each family would have $152 more to spend in 1957-58. This could provide a hi-fi phonograph, an upholstered chair, a sofa, three of 'y' rugs or a 26" table model TV set.

Suppose the budget were really reduced as we suggest, by about $30 billion. This would result in a saving of $570 per family. And in many cases this would be sufficient to get an entire family right out of debt. It would provide a down payment on a car, or a house. It would equip a whole room with good furniture. It could provide a two weeks' vacation for the whole family, or even a trip abroad on a limited scale.

All of these things would be available to Americans with their own money if only the government weren't quite so predatory.

The posturing of the President and his advisers over this budget is reminiscent of the tale about peeling the cat. Every mouse thinks the cat should be belted. But who among the mice will do the belting?

With a rare show of pretended courtesy, Mr. Eisenhower has bowed and suggested that the Congress wield the knife. With equal grace the Congress has bowed and suggested that Mr. Eisenhower, himself, perform the finance-ectomy. Meanwhile, the citizens are in a clamor and the men in government are learning, to their surprise, that the supposed docile taxpayer has a voice and perhaps a bite.

Will a remedy be found? It is doubtful. The pork in the barrel is too closely related to each congressman's election for him to move to cut out his own constituency. Since we now have a government based on universal bribery, no one wants to make the first move which would tend to turn him into a political pariah. The argument is frequently made that if the government didn't get its hands on this much loot, a depression would be in the making. It is presumed that if the government spends the money, prosperity will follow: but that if private people spend their own money, or do with it as they see fit, bankruptcy yawns.

As though this argument had any validity, The economy is no respecter of persons, $500 spent is $500 spent, whether it goes to relieve a debt or to purchase more consumer goods, or whether the spender is a government bureau or the man who earned the money in the first place. And this is to assume that government spending is always in the line of production, and is not merely a wasting of substance by bolstering parasites in their chosen sinecures.

From the standpoint of principle and in conjunction with the Golden Rule, it could be noted that for each man to spend what he earns himself as he sees fit, is honest. But for each man to be plundered of a part of what he earns, however the money is then used, is dishonest.

We can only hope that the politicians on the Potomac will awaken to the danger we face which is now dramatized for them by this grassroots uproar. The paring of the budget is a must. Won't some political surgeon please step forward and say: "Here, hand me the knife"?

BETTER JOBS

The Opiales Of The Labor Unions

I want to point out some of the opiales the labor unions have been using for many, many years; how they have dwarfed men's ability to recognize a contradiction; means the labor unions use require them to opiate their members and the public.

They get the members to believe they are going to protect them from competition. They are going to do this by seniority and by limiting apprentices. What they do not point out and what most people who believe in labor unions do not seem to see is that they also put the union members on a treadmill. They prevent a member from having the right to learn other trades, or at least make it very difficult for a man to change from one job to another.

When a man is protected by seniority and limiting apprentices, then he is on a treadmill in his own job. Then he stops using all the talents God intended him to use. The opiate that has been fed to him for so long causes him to fail to realize for a long time what he is really up against. It deadens his initiative.

The best way to develop a man's faculties is to let him experiment, to let him find out what he is best qualified to do. Let him try this kind of work and see whether he is best fitted for that. If he is not, let him try some other work. But this is practically impossible under the means used by labor unions to protect their workers from competition.

What they do not seem to see is that they are slaves to the labor unions. Emerson said the man who owned a slave was also a slave to the slave because he had to watch and see that he didn't get away. Just so, the labor union member has to devote a great deal of time preventing others from having the right to learn his trade.

Labor unions are constantly in a turmoil trying to determine whether this trade or that trade has a right to do this work or that work. This jurisdictional dispute and limiting apprentices and seniority, causes members to lose their own integrity. They become unprincipled individuals that are not guided by such great moral rules as the Decalogue or the Golden Rule or the Declaration of Independence. They are contending, in reality, that the Declaration of Independence did not mean what it said, that all men are endowed by the Creator with life, liberty and the right to pursue happiness. They contend that men get their inalienable rights from the labor union, from those who have seniority and are permitted to learn that particular trade.

Thus they are opiated as far as morals or principles are concerned, and they greatly reduce production because they are quite often kept in jobs that are easy for them to do. They are capable of doing much more difficult jobs but are prevented from doing them because of the rules of labor unions.

Success In other words, every man can be a success to the degree that he uses his talents, but labor unions stand in the way of men being successful in life because they make it difficult for them to experiment and find the job that nature intended them to do. Remember Emerson said every individual can do some particular job better than any other individual. But the seniority, limiting apprentices and jurisdictional disputes prevent workers from being able to try this and try that until he finally finds the niche that he is best qualified to fill. When he finds this niche he is able to benefit himself better and benefit everybody else in the world.

Labor unions are like socialism. The only way they have of benefiting anybody is by hurting someone else, by keeping somebody else from developing his faculties. This, of course, greatly reduces production and makes the total wages of all workers a lot less than they would be if we did not have labor unions that insisted that they had the right to bargain for other people who wanted to make individual bargains or have another agent than that specified by the union.

Labor unions, of course, would not have been able to get such a stranglehold on the American people if they had not been able to opiate so many voters, and these opiate that they have indoctrinated into the minds of people who have resulted in a lot of laws that give members of labor unions special privileges at the expense of not only their own members but every other human being in the world.

Yes, labor unions operate by opiate. They dare not answer questions because they would have to contradict themselves or evade.

The Doctor Says

By Edwin J. Jordan, M. D.

Several questions raised by mothers show clearly that medicine does not have all the answers. Mrs. N. for example, says that her daughter had German measles the first month of her pregnancy and that she was greatly frightened by what the doctors told her might happen to her daughter's baby. However, the baby was born and seems to be all right. She does wonder, however, why people do not know more about this subject, if it is really as dangerous as she has been told.

'Mailsters' On Order For Post Offices

WASHINGTON (UP)—Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield will put all 27 mailmen in nearby Bethesda, Md., Wednesday aboard motorized three-wheel Mailsters costing almost $1,000 apiece.

Postal officials, plagued by congressional budget-cutting and demands for economy, declined to say whether the gadgets will cost or save the taxpayers money in the long run.

A Post Office Department official spokesman, asked about possible savings, told a reporter: "Presumably we will be pinned down to a point where we will have to show some savings." He noted the news release about the Mailsters said they are expected to provide "more economic service."

The Post Office said altogether it has 1,500 Mailsters on order. That would be a total cost of close to $1,500,000.

Apart from cost, the Mailsters apparently are the answer to the tired postman's dream.

The three-wheeled vehicle is protected from the weather, has an enclosed carrying area in the rear and is fully equipped with electrical starter, directional signals and a 7/4-horsepower motor.

Couple To Give Up Treasure

MANILA (UP)—An American couple reported to have found a 50 million dollar sunken treasure has offered to give up all rights to it, the Philippine News Service said Monday.

The same service reported Sunday that professor Vincent Palmer and his wife, Lucie, had found the treasure in gold bullion while studying marine life in the Sulu Sea in the southern Philippines.

The news service said Monday it had received a telegram from the "Washington Masias Scientific Artist Suboceanic Society Expedition" from Bongao, Sulu.

It quoted the Palmers as saying in the telegram:

"We have found the Filipinos and Moslems so pleasant and friendly to Americans we offer our rights to three objects your (the news service's) dispatch describes as worth 50 million dollars to the Philippine people."

'Never Trust The Other Driver!'

"Never trust the other driver!"

In these words, a bulletin of the Texas Safety Association, warned Texans to be on their driving-guard against the unpredictable behavior of pedestrians and other drivers.

"It isn't enough to obey the law and mind your own business," the bulletin reads. "You have a moral responsibility to prevent an accident if you can even if the other fellow is at fault."

A few of the other fellow's more common blunders were listed as being:

Failure to heed a stop sign or sneaking across on the "Yellow-light."

Making a turn from the wrong traffic lane.

Failure to signal a turn, or giving the wrong signal.

Stopping suddenly (Of course this won't bother you if you're not too close).

Trying to pass on a curve, hill or other no-passing zone.

Traffic weaving or double-parking.

Drivers were also warned to watch for pedestrians who are foolish enough to jay-walk, get out of a vehicle on the street side, walk along the road at night and wearing dark clothing, or for children playing near the street.

"That's not true at all," he said. "I'm just trying to make the jail a bit more cheerful."

Divorce Helped To Get 'Monkey Off His Back'

By GAY PAULEY
United Press Staff Correspondent

NEW YORK (UP)—Mrs. Barney Ross, who divorced her husband while he was a narcotics addict only to remarry him two years later, believes her action helped him get the "monkey off his back."

"If I had to do it over, I still would do the same thing," said Cathy Ross, whose husband boxed his way to two world championship titles.

"I believe Barney would have beaten the habit without me," she continued. "The same thing that made him a champion would have taken over eventually."

Needed Jolt

"But I think he needed the jolt. As long as he thought he would not lose the wife and daughter he loved, I don't think he realized how sick he was. Love can be only so much help to the other person."

The story of Ross' fight to shake the narcotics habit, of his marriage to Cathy Howlett, a former Ziegfeld Follies dancer, and of his career in the ring and in the Marine Corps in World War II is told in a movie, "Monkey on My Back," to be released in June.

Holds Star

Ross, former lightweight and welterweight champion, met Cathy while she was dancing in an Ed Wynn musical in Chicago. A month after their marriage, he was on his way to the Pacific war theater.

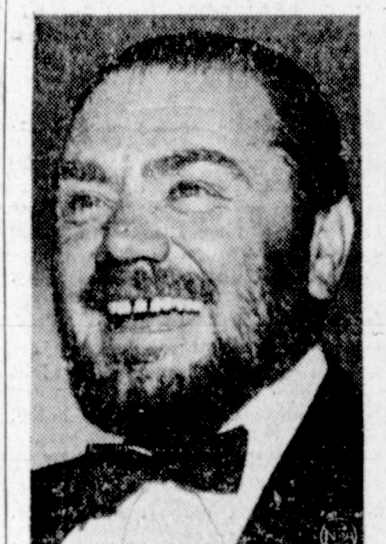

She explained that her husband's craving for morphine (the monkey on his back) began in the hospital while he was recuperating from shrapnel wounds and malaria acquired in the war.

"It still hurts to talk about those terrible years," she said. "It may seem strange, but it took me a long time to realize he was a victim of the drug habit. I felt a horrified shock."

"The worst of it was I wanted to help him, but didn't know how."

BEAVER!

The grin amid all that chin shagginess belongs to Actor Ernest Borgnine, of "Marty" fame. He's showing off his new whiskers at a Hollywood night club. Borgnine grew the foliage for his next film, "The Viking."

Hog Prices To Go Up, Say Ag Men

By GAYLORD P. GODWIN
United Press Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON (UP)—The Agriculture Department predicted Tuesday farmers will get higher prices for hogs this summer than at any time in the past three years, but that prices will drop sharply in the fall.

In a report on the outlook for livestock, the department also forecast that retail pork prices will be higher this year than last until close to the end of the year.

It said retail prices of choice beef, now above a year ago, may continue high for a few months more.

The department forecast total consumption of meat in this country in 1957 at an average of 159 pounds per person, 8 pounds less than the record 167 pounds per person in 1956.

Pork Will Drop

It said the usual fall hog price decline will be greater this year than usual and by December prices may be somewhat under those of a year ago. However, December prices will be well above the low of December 1955, it added.

Farm prices of all meat animals have improved significantly, the department said. Some of the gains are seasonal "but so long as the demand for meat stays strong, prices are expected to continue above depressed levels of the last two years."

The department said the break in the Southwest drought coupled with reduced cattle and hog inventories are contributing to higher livestock prices. Prices of stocker cattle, already on the up-trend, increased more rapidly as ranges improved and in early
