McEwen is registration chairman for the West Texas chamber of commerce convention to be held here May 16-17-18, and he has been assigned the goal of 1,000 $1 registrations. Wearers of these badges will be admitted to any and all convention features, which include four dances and two nightly revues.

Heart Ailment Is Fatal To J. R. Creath

J. R. Creath, resident of Big Spring for more than a quarter-century and active worker in church affairs, succumbed late Tuesday, the victim of a heart ailment. Mr. Creath, who would have been 65 next May 15, was stricken during the afternoon, and arrangements were made to take him to Dallas by ambulance.

He succumbed as the ambulance neared Colorado City, and efforts to revive him at a hospital there were futile. Operator of furniture stores, a mattress factory and laundry establishments, Mr. Creath, who also served at one time as city commissioner, was held in high esteem in the city as a friendly and charitable man, one given to kindness toward all he met.

Cite Need Of Friendliness

Active steps will be taken soon to make Big Spring a "friendly city" in the hopes that tourists will want to make Big Spring a stopping place when they again travel through this section. In a series of straight-forward and pointed remarks, R. H. McEwen, chairman of the chamber of commerce tourist development committee, outlined constructive action toward cultivating the tourist trade.

AUSTIN, April 17. (AP)—No man has an inalienable right to drive a car, simply because he can own one, C. J. Rutland of Dallas, president of the Texas Safety Association, asserted before 300 delegates attending a statewide safety conference today. "Driving isn't a right," the speaker declared as the conference went into its second day. "It is a privilege. For instance, the public should recognize a drinking driver as a potential murderer and treat him as such. No longer should it be considered smart to be reckless or fashionable to ignore the possibility of injury."

Legislative Boards Start Work Here

Nearly 300 Registered As Joint Meeting Of Brotherhoods Opens A resolution adopted by the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen group and urging Texas support of the New Deal highlighted the opening of the biennial joint legislative committee sessions of the four railway brotherhoods of Texas here Wednesday morning.

The resolution will be passed to other legislative groups assembled here for study and action at the hands of the joint legislative session on Friday. The Brotherhoods for Locomotive Engineers, for Railway Conductors and Railway Trainmen seated delegates during the morning and completed organization preparatory to plunging into business during the afternoon. The Trainmen adopted a resolution memorializing Ed Hanks, Denison, as one of the organizers of the Texas legislative board.

As soon registration for the biennial event had reached 271 and the number was rapidly moving toward the 300 mark. On the program for the afternoon were business periods for each of the four participating groups before a tour of the scenic Mountain state park and the city park.

Feature of the first day's program will be a banquet session at 8 p. m. in the Settles ballroom with addresses due from W. H. Gallagher, Denison (engineer); J. M. Shields, Kingsville (conductor); O. L. Kinsey, San Antonio (fireman and engineman); and Joe Steadham, Austin (trainman). Entertainment was to be furnished by local talent.

Among other special representatives here were Joseph E. Myers, Houston, commissioner for the U. S. conciliation service; J. A. Lawson, federal safety board; H. L. "Bob" McKeenley, Austin; and Ed Dooley, San Angelo. The latter three have long records of service with the trainmen's unit. Local leaders were anxious to have a large attendance at the open house meeting in the city auditorium at 8 p. m. Thursday when state and national political candidates will speak. Several already had arrived or sent word they would appear here. Charley Lockhart, state treasurer, and Judge Marshall Formby, and candidate for state senator, were among those here. All citizens are invited to participate in the meeting, said E. L. Deason and Frank Shoite, committee leaders.

Majors Get Away To A Fast Start

Hare Opposes Guernsey At River Oaks

By WILLIAM T. RIVES
HOUSTON, April 17 (AP)—He won't like it but Bobby Riggs may have to persevere a little today.

As the River Oaks tennis tournament entered its third round, Riggs was scheduled against an opponent who figured to make him get out of a slow trot—Lefty Brown of Waco, a hardy campaigner. Riggs, criticized for loafing through his first match, shot back, "Why should I work? I can beat lots of these guys with a balloon."

Riggs defeated Champ Reese of Atlanta, 6-3, 6-4, yesterday in his second round match, but was relegated to a side court, out of the view of all but a handful of spectators. The toughest tests listed appeared to be the matches between Jack Tibball of Los Angeles and Wilmer Allison of Austin, and Charles Hare of England and defending champion Frank Guernsey of Rice Institute.

Elwood Cooke, Portland, Ore. player seeded second to Riggs, met Norman Bickel of Chicago, and Bitzy Grant, Atlanta's pride engaged Frank Froehling of Chicago. A close contest was predicted between Bobby Curtis of Rice Institute and Edward Alloo of Berkeley, Calif., No. 19 in national rankings.

The women's division moped along, with several first round matches still to be played. Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Fabyan of Boston, seeded No. 1, safely got by her first enemy, Mrs. Rylvin Kivlin of Houston, 6-0, 6-1.

Postal revenues of the United States for the last fiscal year were the highest on record.

The day's biggest turnout, 49,417 at Detroit, had to watch their Tigers take a 5-1 lashing by the St. Louis Browns behind the seven-hit hurling of George (Slicker) Coffman.

At St. Louis it was the other way round, with the Cardinals getting crushed 6-4 under the 15-hit bombardment of the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Bobby Feller Says Curve Not At Best

By TOM SILER
CHICAGO, April 17 (AP)—Robert William Andrew Feller stood there in the dressing room, strangely composed but happy, and said "My curve wasn't breaking the way I wanted it to."

He wasn't popping off and he wasn't being facetious. There is no false modesty in the makeup of this 21-year-old Iowa farm boy who yesterday entered baseball's hall of fame with a no-hit, no-run game, first ever recorded in the season's opener in modern major league history. He struck out eight batters and walked five. Another reached base on an error.

"I think I've been faster several times," he explained. "Of course that strong wind behind me helped make me faster. But I couldn't seem to throw a curve very well."

A matter of fact, hard working country boy, that's Feller. He congratulated his Cleveland mates just as warmly as they praised him for the 1-0 decision over the Chicago White Sox.

Rollie Hemaley, Feller's catcher and closest friend on the squad whose triple sent Jeff Heath home with the winning run, said he had seen the young right-hander a lot faster but "he was never a better pitcher—he's got everything."

His great speed, eagerness to learn, and increasing composure under fire has given him a running start toward joining baseball's all-time pitching heroes. He joined the Indians in 1934, a lad of 16 without ever having pitched in a minor league game.

Since then he has won 55 games while losing 30. He led the American league in victories last year with 24 and has led in strikeouts the past two seasons.

There are few who doubt that Texas will finish the season undefeated. Yesterday they walloped Texas Christian University 16-4. The teams meet again today at Austin. The Texas Aggies were upset 3-2 by the lowly Rice Owls, dropping the Cadets two games behind the Longhorns.

The Lamesans put together singles by Eddie Guynes and Harry Riorden, a double by Red Beeler and a base on balls with two errors by Ran Berndt to take their big lead in the initial frame.

Riorden was the big noise at bat, collecting a home run in the fifth inning and a double in the third with his first frame single.

The team awaited the arrival of four players from the west coast, all of whom are due to arrive in time to get in uniform for the Barons' afternoon clash with the Lubbock Hubbers here.

Three weeks in this sector has enabled him to regain more than 10 pounds.

Welcome, Railroad Men

Big Spring is host this week to a group of folk it has an extraordinary interest in, as the Joint Railway Legislative Board of Texas, representing the Four Brotherhoods, convenes for its biennial conference.

This city has an extraordinary interest in these visitors and their organizations because it prides itself on being a "railroad" town, always recognizing the important part the railroad workers and their families have played in the development of this community.

The railroad men long have been welcomed into the integral development of the town as owners of homes, as payers of taxes, as citizens interested in maintaining a decent and progressive city.

The Legislative Boards of the Four Brotherhoods—the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the Order of Railway Conductors, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, and the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen—are the policy-making groups for these potent labor unions, groups that chart future operations and functions of the major bodies.

The Herald joins every individual and organization in Big Spring in wishing the Joint Legislative Board a profitable and pleasant meeting in this West Texas railroad town.

George Tucker

Man About Manhattan

NEW YORK—George Balanchine is a thin, slight Russian with enough hair on his head to cover half the baldness of Moscow. Were he to comb the hair on the right side of his head straight back and bring it around behind his head it would drape over his left ear.

Balanchine is not an easy man to talk to. Perhaps it is because he speaks English, but badly. His accent is difficult to follow. And at rehearsal, he is the only times I have encountered him, his mind is too suffused with visions of the dance to permit him to indulge in very much small talk.

It may be that you remember a show in New York a couple of years ago called "I Married An Angel." Balanchine directed it. He now is directing the dancing for Lee Shubert and Harry Kaufman in "Keep Off the Grass." In "I Married An Angel" was a girl who became more nearly a toast of New York than has any girl in recent years, with the possible exception of Mary Martin, the Texas "Daddy" girl. Her name was Zorina. Balanchine met her and married her.

"How is he?" I asked Kaufman at the Broadhurst theater during the early morning rehearsal. Kaufman grunted and said, "After four years on Broadway a lot of that artistic fluff has been knocked off him, and he is down to earth. Watch him work."

Balanchine was on the stage, giving each member of the chorus personal instruction. He was dancing with each individual and all but marking the places on the stage where they were to step. They were apt pupils. They caught on fast. But it is Balanchine's reputation that any dancer under his instruction catches on fast.

While this nervous, intense Russian was bringing some order out of chaos, another director, a carrot-topped Irishman with a cleft chin, was similarly engaged in another theater a few blocks away. This was Edward Duryea Dowling, not to be confused with Eddie Dowling, the star of "The Time of Your Life."

Director Dowling had in tow Jimmy Durante, who arrived with a black shirt and a turned-up brown felt, plus a cigar between his teeth, and the droll, long-necked Ray Bolger, whose collars seem to be at least four inches high. I imagine Bolger is the highest priced man in the show ($3,000 weekly), although this is not verified.

When Dowling takes an actor through a scene he stands up with him like a best man at a wedding. Some directors like to bowl their instructions from the orchestra pit. Others float into and out of scenes, instructing their suggestions. Dowling takes it step by step, line for line. One scene, in which Bolger plays the part of a timid census taker, he got perfectly on the first reading. None of the others was so fortunate. I commented on this and some unidentified observer interpolated, "Sure, he's an artist; it is only after this that he's an actor and a dancer."

Broadway shows come together much in the manner of many-jointed snakes that have been worked into a thousand pieces and then reunited. "Keep Off the Grass" is backed by energy, money, and talent. But money in the theater was never so difficult to come by. The answer won't be known until the first audience files out and the critics write their opinions.

LITTLE SPITFIRE

Chapter Five MAC'S CHAMPION What Mac had said to Brenda had been innocent enough in intent; merely that Hugh Saltus might consent to act as critic, collaborator, or illustrator, or all three, if he were properly approached on the subject.

Mac had regarded the idea as a positive inspiration. What writers' magazines dub "the genesis" of it had descended on him at the sight of the usually unapproachable cartoonist conversing so affably with Brenda. Mac himself knew what it was to break ground in new fields of literary endeavor. He had remorseful recollection of the mocking way he had received the little newcomer's confidence about her work that first day.

"Thank you," she said coldly. "You are too kind!" He realized unhappily that she meant just that. "But for 'kind' read 'officious,'" he told himself, backing swiftly away and doing his best to lose himself among the guests.

In this, however, he did Brenda an injustice. Her sensitiveness toward her writing had become almost an obsession with her. Aunt Anne had discouraged it; older writers had smiled indulgently at her ambitious plans. Her interviews with editors have already been described. All this opposition had had the natural effect of making her more determined than ever to succeed.

She still seethed with wrath when she remembered Mac's blithe description of her imaginary labors. And now, just when she was congratulating herself that she had found a place where people, if somewhat queer and given to minding their neighbors' business as well as their own, were at least tolerant, Dion MacKelvey must needs come skating across the floor to suggest ironically (or so she believed) an impossible partnership between herself and the famous artist. It was too much!

"Mac's A Nuisance" "This Mac person is going to be a real nuisance if I don't suppress him," she told herself, smiling her sweetest as she let Dr. Wilson tell her about an epidemic of pink eyes that had swept Teh Street nineteen years before. "Why doesn't he marry his Isobel and be content with her? Anyone can see she's mad about him. Eric Mason now is another story; too absorbed in his own concerns to do more than cast flirtatious glances about now and then. I wonder..."

The dimples dipped so deeply that the old doctor stopped in the middle of a sentence, staring at her appreciatively. "No, you're to behave yourself!" her thoughts ran admonishingly. "You're here to work, and for no other reason." Again the doctor was bewildered by her change of expression. She drew down the corners of her mouth, wrinkled her smooth forehead warningly. "Did you say she's studying to be an actress, my dear?" the old man asked his daughter as they made their way home. "I should think she might make a very excellent one!"

"No, a writer." The brief answer was given disapprovingly. Miss Wilson had literary aspirations herself. She wrote poems which invariably began with "Faint!" and contained such beautiful words as "mine" and "monody"; and at least every fifth one ended with "receive this from my hand!" It was very sad for her that all the poems came back with neatly printed rejection slips. "Ridiculous to think a child like that can write!"

This, Brenda soon discovered, was more or less the opinion of The Street. As time went on and she grew to know intimately the ten families which comprised the neighborhood, she was chagrined to discover that only Hugh Saltus and the Abernathy twins sympathized at all with her ambitions. And the Abernathy twins did not count, since everyone on principle frowned upon their opinions.

"They were, as they themselves confessed, a scatterbrained pair; Alain said Abner ("and what can you expect of people with names like that?"). They lived in the old Abernathy house, "surrounded by law and order," to quote them again. By this they meant that on one side dwelt old Judge Harper who kept a more or less watchful eye on the grandchildren of his former partner, and on the other, Miss Judith Ormond, now in her seventy-sixth year but nonetheless alert and energetic, directed the gaze of two singularly strong optics on the activities of her young neighbors.

"Mac's Tops" Miss Ormond had been a school teacher in her day; and her day had been a long one. When she had been retired upon reaching the age limit her fury knew no bounds. The Street resounded for weeks to the echoes of her denunciations against the school board. Finally she settled down to a task which was never neglected merely because it had been self-imposed: the guardianship of the morals, manners and general activities of the young people on The Shortest Street.

"She can't be bluffed, fooled, or outwitted," Isobel Burke told Brenda mournfully. "We've all tried it, you may be sure. Once Eric and I left her car two blocks from here and slipped in the back way. She telephoned Adelaide before breakfast to say I'd got a ticket for overnight parking. Mac usually adopts a simple system: he calls her up just before he starts out and tells her where he is going, and when he expects to be back, and what route he intends to follow. He says it saves them both wear and tear on the nervous system."

"Isobel, you're joking!" The red-haired girl said grimly: "Am I? Well till you've dived among us a little longer! Wait till you go to a dance with Eric and don't get home until after three in the morning! The Ormond will call and inquire—ever so sweetly!—to ask if you caught cold coming in so late!"

"Why with Eric?" Brenda was diverted. "You always mention Eric as a possible cavalier on social occasions. How about the other men in the neighborhood?" Isobel shrugged. "There's Hugh Saltus—you know about him. A married man and therefore taboo as an escort. Ab Abernathy's loads of fun but he's so devoted to Elaine they're rarely separated. That leaves only Mac and Eric—which leaves only Eric."

Brenda inquired carelessly: "Anything the matter with Mac as a companion, I mean?" An expression she had seen several times on the other girl's face shadowed it now. "Mac is—" Isobel began, checked herself and swallowed. "Mac's tops, Brenda," she said quietly. "Don't make any mistake about that!" And then as Brenda did not reply, she went on: "He's terribly ambitious, for one thing; all wrapped up in his work. He does enough for two men. For another—" Again she paused. The younger girl looked at her in surprised question.

Washington Daybook

WASHINGTON—The boys from the South rule our navy and if any enemy is blasted off the seven seas with an American war cry, it'll be the Rebel yell.

Investigation by one of the government departments recently disclosed that three out of every four jobs call Dixie home. A federal labor department investigator found that there were more applicants for enlistment in the navy from Raleigh, S. C., and Macon, Ga., than from either New York or Chicago.

The same holds true of the army, but to a lesser degree. The reason, of course, has to do with unemployment in the army and navy enlistment age range.

Gordon Dean, of the department of justice, without making a single slip of tongue or memory, found himself confronted with one of those embarrassing moments the other day that should only best the bedeviled.

Before a large assembly of august district attorneys, Mr. Dean was called upon to introduce brassy, nervous O. John Rogge, assistant attorney general in charge of criminal prosecution. Mr. Dean glanced briefly at Mr. Rogge, sitting a row or two in front of him, took the rostrum and launched into an encomium—praising the accomplishments of the man who has directed many of the government's recent important prosecutions.

At some length, he finished with: "Gentlemen, I give you Mr. O. John Rogge. . . . The moment of silence lengthened to agonizing seconds. Mr. Dean stared wildly at the spot where Mr. Rogge should have been and saw only an empty chair.

Utters in the back of the room scurried into the halls. A block away down the long department of justice building corridor, Mr. Rogge was found arguing a point of law with an acquaintance. Unable to sit still any longer, the big, restless prosecutor had walked out on his own introductory address.

Travelog: In the halls of the Bureau of Investigation, every few yards present a big sign: Quiet, Please—School in Session. In the old Ford's theater—which now is a Lincoln museum in commemoration of the 75th anniversary of the assassination of the Civil war president, there recently were placed all the items connected with Lincoln's death and the trial of John Wilkes Booth. One of the exhibits is a boot, supposedly hacked from Booth's leg as the injured murderer paused in flight from the scene of his crime.

One of the capital's most famous sea-food restaurants is an old-fashioned river-front building which was a renowned bawdy house during the presidential reign of General Grant. Only remnant of its days of infamy is a huge painting of a nude that startles all newcomers when they cross the threshold. Otherwise all is quaint respectability and good food at moderate prices. It's a favorite haunt of legislators.

If you want to learn all about the army's new guns, don't go to the Munitions building. Drop into the corridors of the department of commerce. There, hour after hour, expert gunners in uniform spiel the qualities of machine gun, anti-aircraft guns, howitzers and such. Spies are also welcome.

Alexandria, Va., the historic Washington suburb (when the folks over there hear I called it a suburb, there'll be mayhem, murder and arson—but how else could you describe a town that is knitted closely to a city), is holding its annual open house. One of America's most famous ports 200 years ago, Alexandria is one of the most fascinating spots hereabouts. Every year, in the spring, residents of the famous old houses throw their homes or gardens open for a tourist trek that sends historians and antique collectors into a swoon. This year, on the itinerary, is the beautiful old Georgian home of Mr. Justice and Mrs. Hugo Black and the narcissus-clouded garden of Mr. and Mrs. Norman H. Davis.

Hollywood Sights And Sounds

HOLLYWOOD—"Stardust." Screenplay by Robert Ellis and Helen Logan, from story by Jesse Malo, Kenneth Earl and Ivan Kaha. Directed by Walter Lang. Principals: Linda Darnell, John Payne, Roland Young, Charlotte Greenwood, William Gargan, Mary Beth Hughes, Mary Healy, Donald Meek, Harry Green, Jessie Ralph.

"Stardust" is a bright and ingratiating piece about the youthful quest for fame in Hollywood, in particular about a couple of youngsters played by Darnell and Payne. With Mary Healy, the romantic leads are "discoveries" of a studio talent scout who brings them to Hollywood for screen tests.

As a picture of the processes surrounding such tests, talent scouting in general and the idiosyncrasies of movieland, "Stardust" would hold interest for all the screen-struck. Adorned as it is with humor, with good performances and amusing situations and lines, the picture should provide a pleasant time also for those whose interest in filmland is more impersonal. "A Star Is Born," hit of a few seasons ago, exploded the industry with a more serious eye. "Stardust" focuses its beams on the comedy angles, few of which it neglects. Like Miss Darnell in real life, the heroine is rejected temporarily, only to click later. In the film, her rejection is the result of favoritism by a low casting director (Meek), and her triumph comes from the kindly offices of the talent coach (Greenwood) and the talent scout (Young). Gargan plays a Zanuck-like producer with vim, and young Payne, as a handsome, conceited football player who is forever breaking his nose before tests, delivers easy-to-take comedy. Darnell, playing her age, is more impressive—and luscious—than ever. Greenwood's return to films is welcome, especially when she sings, and Mary Healy delivers a couple of blues tunes punchily. "Florian." Robert Young, Helen Gilbert, Irina Baronova, Reginald Owen, Florian. When those Lippians (white horses of the old Austrian imperial stables) are on the screen, "Florian" is a marvelous picture—a thing of beauty and grace. Florian himself (he's the horse hey!) is worth the tedium involved in following a trite yarn of courtly intrigue and romance—the devoted groom hopelessly in love—with the pretty duchess who must marry the nobleman who has an affair with the ballerina. After the war (No. 1), horse and girl and boy are separated. Boy crosses the ocean in search of his horse, finally saves him in the familiar nick from the glue factory. At this point, the girl shows up, rather startlingly, if you have forgotten there ever was a girl, which gives you an idea what Florian was up against in his first starring picture. For sorry dialogues, for phony plot and for the most beautiful horse sequences ever filmed, "Florian" is a stand-out.

Important for Women

A weak, run-down condition often gives a foothold to functional dysmenorrhea, causing much physical distress from headaches, nervousness, cramp-like pain for women. CARDUI so often helps in such cases, for it sharpens appetite, boosts flow of gastric juices; so improves digestion, helps build physical resistance. CARDUI, taken a few days before and during "the time," is another way to help periodic distress. Used 50 years. (adv.)

MISS LANEUS NOTES

By Mary Whaley

Dominating social conversation these days is the subject of vaccinations. There are those who have, those who are about to be, and those who won't be vaccinated. All in all, it forms a lively topic of chatter.

Course, we scare easy and were among the first to get a stick (pun) and have watched tenderly as each new symptom came along.

We blame general laziness, cussedness and giddiness on our vaccination and we intend to use it for some time as an excuse for most anything.

We have met so many nice strangers, too, just by comparing our scratch with others; and even reticent souls are anxious to tell about how long it was since they had been vaccinated and how it would or wouldn't take on them.

Then, too, everybody thinks theirs is the sorest, the biggest or the worst and some pretty hot arguments can be staged over that point. Nobody really knows, but the discussion is fun.

Our private opinion is that the doctors are getting a big kick out of it too. To vaccinate or not to vaccinate, that is the question. And whether it is better to have a sore arm or the smallpox is a matter that two schools of thought are taking seriously.

But our girl scout training got the better of us and we've got the sore arm now and can hold a spirited conversation on whether it hurt, whether it will take or whether it is better to have one or not. In fact, when our arm gets well, we will be sunk for entertaining (?) remarks. The health subject is much more interesting than the weather.

England Welcomes Back Old Time Middy Blouse

LONDON, (UP)—Guess who's back again? The old middie blouse. Remember? Not since the early 1900's, when American women brought this fashion to England, has anything like a middie been worn here.

The new middie is cut straight and worn over a skirt without a belt. The square sailor collars are braided.

A new spring "three-piece" ensemble, including a white middie blouse with blue braiding and scarlet silk lanyard, navy skirt and reefer jacket, is being shown. A red sailor hat with navy and white ribbon provides the finishing touch. Brass buttons are worn on the jacket, which has high revers and plenty of pockets.

The handsome redbrick structure with a Greco-Roman facade was sold for more than $23,000 to an investor who will lease it to Franco's representative.

Timothy H. McCarthy, a millionaire lumberman, built the home in 1905 at a cost of $100,000. He insisted on the best woods and building materials, even to the extent of a solid mahogany staircase.

Do you keep your friendships in constant repair?

All who knew the old Sam Johnson, the author of the first great English dictionary, were awed by his capacity for hard work and charmed by the witty company he drew around him to relax when work was done. Sam Johnson said that a man should always keep his friendships in "constant repair." He was right. A man is known by the company he keeps. Friends. You know what friends mean... how they rally 'round you when your skies are gray... help untangle your thoughts and restore clear thinking... squelch your foolish fears... bolster your confidence and give new strength to your courage. And when skies are bright again, what a pleasure it is to gather your friends together to laugh over the past, enjoy the present and plan for the future with fortitude. With your friends about you, if you feel that you're rich... you're right. * * * Because of the companionship that Budweiser offers, it has been the center for circles of friends for generations. One sip tells you that it was making friends that made Budweiser, the Perfect Host.
