King's birthday observed with celebrations

Eugene Jackson, chief executive officer of the Black Entertainment Network, and Coretta Scott King view an African tapestry of the late civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr. in Atlanta. The tapestry was presented to Mrs. King on Sunday.

By DEBRA ELLIOTT
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — Worshipers at Martin Luther King Jr.'s church were urged today on the slain civil rights leader's birthday to keep alive his memory and his philosophy of non-violence.

"This is a man who is a deep current in our memory," said the Rev. Cecil Williams, pastor of Glide Memorial United Methodist Church in San Francisco. "Let us live then not only his dream, but let us live the practice of non-violence and unconditional love."

Williams spoke at the annual ecumenical service at Ebenezer Baptist Church.

Church services, parades, and other celebrations were held nationwide during the weekend before the federal holiday, which for the first time falls on the slain civil rights leader's actual birthday.

He would have been 61 today. Also planned today in Atlanta was a "March of Celebration" parade, being televised nationally for the first time.

A former King lieutenant, the Rev. Hosea Williams, stood in front of an Atlanta housing project to criticize the day's activities for making a travesty of King's dream of equality and justice.

Williams, King's field organizer in the civil rights movement, complained that people were starving in the city while thousands of dollars were being spent on the parade. "I am really upset with all this gaiety," he said.

This year's holiday follows a series of bombings and threats, apparently racially motivated, in the Southeast, and a flareup of racial tensions in Boston after an apparent hoax in which a white man had claimed a black mugger fatally shot his pregnant wife.

It also comes at a time of gains for blacks — the election of David Dinkins, first black mayor of New York City, and the nation's first elected black governor, L. Douglas Wilder of Virginia.

There were plans in all 50 states and 144 other countries for bells to ring and for a moment of silence in honor of King at 11:30 a.m. CST. The Liberty Bell in Philadelphia was to be tapped, and the New York Stock Exchange planned to pause.

King, the son of an Atlanta Baptist minister, led non-violent marches in the South in the 1950s and 1960s in a quest to end discrimination against blacks and other minorities. He was assassinated on April 4, 1968, in Memphis, Tenn.

On Sunday, Coretta Scott King delivered her annual "state of the dream" address at Ebenezer Baptist Church.

King's widow applauded pro-democracy shifts worldwide and said the civil rights movement would not be deterred by the recent wave of bombings and threats against blacks. A federal judge and a black Savannah lawyer were killed in two bombings.

"In the last year, we've seen hundreds of thousands of people marching through the streets of Berlin and Beijing, Budapest and Pretoria, Moscow, Warsaw and Prague, all singing 'We Shall Overcome' in a host of languages," she said.

"We're not going to be turned around by letter bombs or threats or any kind of violence," she said. "Instead, we're going forward, with unity and courage and commitment."

Also in Atlanta, more than 500 students and teachers at Booker T. Washington High School joined civil rights leader Rosa Parks to paint a mural dedicated to King. The mural displayed, "Let Freedom Ring."

In Boston, where blacks have complained about aggressive police tactics in their search for the killer of a pregnant white woman in October, about 25 activists planned to demonstrate at a King memorial breakfast today to protest the presence of Mayor Raymond Flynn.

Tensions have been heightened after revelations that Charles Stuart himself probably killed his wife. He committed suicide this month.

"We don't feel Mayor Flynn should have a seat of honor at this occasion," said Sadiki Kambon, director of a group called the Community for Human Rights.

"The mayor came on the scene that (October) night and was told by police that an African male killed a white female," Kambon said. "The mandate was 'Get me someone,' and the police proceeded to roust black males in Mission Hill and the entire city."

Columbia astronauts continue medical and scientific experiments

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Columbia's astronauts settled into a day of medical and science experiments today after their sleep was interrupted by an alarm signaling a brief problem with a navigation system.

The five phantom signals that triggered the buzzing alarm posed no threat to the mission, and the five crew members went back to bed.

After waking at the normal time, commander Dan Brandenstein successfully tested the system and brought it back on line.

Mission Control reported the fleeting signals were in a speed-measuring accelerometer that is part of what's known as an Inertial Measurement Unit, a key component of the shuttle's guidance system.

When the alarm sounded in the cabin as the astronauts slept, Brandenstein woke up and asked the control center if there were anything he could do.

Controllers told him the spaceship computer had shifted automatically to a second IMU, that everything was OK and to go back to sleep.

There are three such devices aboard. Only one is needed for a safe flight, but flight rules dictate that if one failed, Mission Control would consider bringing the astronauts home as soon as possible because of the possibility of a common problem in all three units.

When the astronauts were wakened at the regular time two hours after the alarm, they were told that scientists on the ground had monitored the suspect unit and had detected no further problems.

Brandenstein was told to put it back in operation and realign it by aiming at two stars. "The crew successfully did some celestial navigation," said Mission Control commentator Brian Welch. "We just got word that all looks good. IMUs 1, 2 and 3 are all chugging along in good shape."

Flight director Al Pennington said that five transient signals were received in a 10-minute program, each indicating either a lack of acceleration or a minus acceleration.

The problem may not be with the accelerometer but with one of the systems that transmits the data to Mission Control, Pennington said. Specialists were attempting to find out what went wrong, he said.

Weather over North Africa was clear today and the astronauts snapped pictures of Lake Chad, the Nile Valley and fires in Kenya for an IMAX film called Planet Earth, which will document damage that man and nature are doing to the planet.

They also probed and poked one another with medical instruments, seeking information on how the human body adapts over time to space weightlessness.

Officials earlier had reported that if Columbia had to come home early, weather could pose a problem at the primary landing site at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif., and a secondary site at White Sands Space Harbor, N.M.

But Pennington said a new forecast calls for good weather both days at both places.

He also said the weather was good today over the runway at the Kennedy Space Center launch site at Cape Canaveral.

Mission Control said the weather for Friday's planned landing at Edwards looked good.

A nighttime touchdown is scheduled for 2:59 a.m. PST (4:59 a.m. CST).

The wakeup music today was the University of Washington fight song. One of the crew members, mission specialist Bonnie Dunbar, is a Washington graduate.

"Good morning for your second wakeup of the morning," the control center said, referring to the earlier alarm.

Brandenstein, Dunbar, pilot Jim Wetherbee and mission specialists Marsha Ivins and David Low are devoting the final days of the flight to experiments after accomplishing their main goals during the first half of the mission.

They deployed a Navy communications satellite on the second day, and on the fourth day they snagged an errant 11-ton science laboratory, and stowed it in the cargo bay for return to Earth.

One experiment that suffered a mishap on Friday was restored to health on Sunday. It involves melting and resolidifying a metal, indium, to determine how the material reacts to the process in weightless space.

Unusual clothes line

A young Panamanian refugee boy passes an area in Panama City, Panama, where refugees have used the barbed wire surrounding their camp for a clothes line Sunday at Allbrook Air Force Base, which is their new location. Refugees who lived at Balboa Soccer Stadium were moved Saturday to the new location.

DEA worked with Noriega while indictment was readied

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — While federal prosecutors were moving to indict Panama's Manuel Antonio Noriega on narcotics charges, the Drug Enforcement Administration was maintaining close ties with him and offering praise for his cooperation in the war against drugs, a congressional report shows.

"The DEA has long welcomed our close association and we stand ready to proceed jointly against international drug traffickers whenever the opportunity arises," drug enforcement administrator Jack Lawn wrote to Noriega less than a year before the indictment was entered in federal court in Miami in February 1988.

Lawn had special praise for the work of Luis Quiel, Noriega's liaison to the DEA, as "integral to the success of fighting international drug trafficking."

But according to the final report of the Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee on narcotics, issued in December 1988, Quiel was also Noriega's liaison to the Medellín drug cartel and "thus in a position to alert the drug traffickers to whatever information the DEA had provided him."

Quiel also acted "as Noriega's enforcer to eliminate competitors of the Medellín cartel by turning them over to the United States," the panel said.

The report, issued in December 1988 after a three-year investigation, paints a vivid portrait of Noriega and his involvement with drugs, money laundering, gun running and other illegal activities over his 20-year rise to power as Panama's military strongman.

The first links between Panamanian officials and narcotics traffickers were forged while Gen. Omar Torrijos ruled Panama, the report said.

The report ... paints a vivid portrait of Noriega and his involvement with drugs, money laundering, gun running and other illegal activities.

But after Torrijos died in an airplane crash in 1981, Noriega took charge of the country's most important institutions, using them to generate revenue for officers of the new Panamanian Defense Force and to exercise control over the drug traffic.

Before he was ousted last month by the U.S. invasion of his country, Noriega controlled the customs, immigration and passport services, civil aeronautics, the National Bank of Panama and the attorney general's office.

He pushed legislation through the national assembly consolidating the National Guard, navy, police and customs into a unified Panamanian Defense Force under his command.

"As head of the PDF, Noriega now controlled all elements of the Panamanian government essential to the protection of drug trafficking and money laundering, increasing his control over Panama and enriching himself," the panel said.

One witness, Ramon Milian Rodriguez, a Miami-based, Cuban-born accountant, testified he negotiated an agreement with Noriega in 1979 on behalf of the Medellín cartel which gave Noriega a commission to provide security and handling for drug money arriving in Panama to be laundered through its banking system.

PDF soldiers met planes ferrying billions of dollars in cash from Miami, guarded the money as it was loaded into armored cars and delivered it to the Banco Nacional de Panama, according to the subcommittee.

Milian Rodriguez said Noriega eliminated him as a middleman in 1983 by arranging to have information about his money laundering operation passed on to the DEA. The tip resulted in his arrest and eventual prison sentence.

The panel said it had evidence to corroborate Milian Rodriguez' story that Noriega's cronies then took control of the money laundering business.

Ethnic war threatened in Azerbaijan as Christians and Moslems clash again

By ANDREW KATELL
 Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) - Azerbaijanis and Armenians appeared on the verge of open warfare today after a spasm of ethnic clashes and pogroms in the southern republic of Azerbaijan claimed at least 32 lives, Soviet media reported.

The Kremlin flew reinforcements of internal security troops to Azerbaijan to try to stop the bloodletting, the worst between the two ethnic groups since their long-simmering feud in the Caucasus boiled over nearly two years ago.

High-level troubleshooters were dispatched to the Azerbaijani capital of Baku, where the killing began Saturday night, and to Yerevan, capital of the neighboring republic of Armenia, Soviet radio reported today.

"Armenia is in a state of battle readiness," Karen Shakhbazyan, an Armenian activist, said today by telephone from Yerevan.

Igor Kudrin, a commentator for state-run Soviet TV, said in a news broadcast today that the latest reports from the region "are reminiscent of news from the war front."

A witness in Baku described a street awash in blood and said victims there included two women tossed from balconies. Soviet media said most of the victims were Armenians.

Azerbaijanis and Armenians are locked in a feud over who should govern Nagorno-Karabakh, a mainly Armenian enclave of 160,000 people controlled by Azerbaijan since 1923.

Most Armenians are Christians; most Azerbaijanis are Shiite Moslems.

In Yerevan, 300,000 people rallied Sunday night, demanding authorities take more resolute action to protect their brethren, Soviet media said.

At least 100 armed police massed at the Yerevan airport today hoping to fly helicopters to villages in Azerbaijan to defend Armenians under siege, said Shakhbazyan.

Eduard Shakhnazaryan, a journalist at the republic's official news agency Armenpress, and Felik Avakian, an editor at Armenia's state-run broadcasting service, said the death toll in Baku had risen to 32.

Others were killed in other parts of Azerbaijan, the official Tass news agency reported without giving figures.

The Kremlin dispatched Yevgeny Primakov, a non-voting member of the ruling Politburo and chairman of one of the two chambers of the Supreme Soviet legislature, to Baku, and Nikolai Sliyunkov, a full Politburo member, to Yerevan, to try to end the bloodshed.

A Soviet reporter said by telephone in a live radio and TV broadcast from Baku this morning that the capital was quiet, and a secretary at the republic's official news agency Azerinform said she saw no troops or tanks on the streets as she walked to work. But the Soviet reporter said trouble continued elsewhere.

Radio Moscow said the strife was kindled in Baku, a major petroleum-producing center, when two Azerbaijanis visited an Armenian family at midday and demanded they leave town. The Armenians had an axe, and the Azerbaijanis were hurt in a struggle and taken to a hospital. One died and the other was in serious condition, the radio said.

The news enraged a crowd of about 150,000 that gathered later in Baku's central square, and speakers called for driving the Armenians out of the capital, a Caspian Sea port of 1.7 million people. The "pogroms" then began in Baku and exploded elsewhere in the republic.

About 20,000 ethnic Armenians, mainly elderly people, live in Baku, although ethnic violence in the last two years has caused an exodus of Azerbaijanis and Armenians back to their home republics.

Late Sunday, Tass reported violence in the Shaumyanovsk and Khanlar regions of Azerbaijan, near Nagorno-Karabakh, saying there were "tens of dead and wounded from both nationalities."

Soviet TV said thousands of armed Azerbaijani militants had massed in the two districts and that Armenians also bearing arms were being transported there.

State officials acknowledge low benefits for children, pregnant women

By JENNIFER DIXON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — State officials acknowledge the figures are shocking: nearly one in four Texas children lives in poverty, one in three pregnant women receives no early prenatal care, only the poorest of the poor qualify for some government help.

"We're a low-tax, low-benefit state," says Human Services Commissioner Ron Lindsey. "We have a tradition in Texas of 'help yourself' and we're fiercely protective of that tradition. Other folks with other traditions can judge that. But that's us."

In the judgment of two studies, however, Texas does a poor job of taking care of some of its most vulnerable citizens — its children and disadvantaged pregnant women.

While Texas improved its infant mortality rate in the 1980s, in comparison with the rest of the country it has done worse in curbing childhood poverty and in making sure pregnant women receive early medical attention, according to a study by the Children's Defense Fund.

Both studies, released last week, also found that Texas has been unable to reduce the number of low-birth weight babies, who are at higher risk for medical or developmental complications.

The Children's Defense Fund, which lobbies for social welfare programs, and the Center for the Study of Social Policy, a Washington-based research organization, used 10 indicators to judge the state's performance in meeting children's needs.

The center ranked Texas 43rd overall out of the 50 states and the District of Columbia, while CDF had no such rankings.

Lindsey said Texas ranks 47th nationally in per capita taxation, and correspondingly, anything above 47 means it is doing "relatively well."

Still, it is "clearly not acceptable to have nearly one in four Texas children in poverty," Lindsey said.

Both studies ranked Texas 39th in childhood poverty, and in another area with implications for the state's economic future, ranked it 43rd in the percentage of students graduating from high school.

"If as a society we're not successful in making sure that the folks coming out of Texas come out with the skills that equip them to successfully compete in the job market, we're going to have a problem," Lindsey said. "That's a problem that's coming."

According to the center's study, 18.7 percent of Texas children were living in poverty in 1979, but by 1987 that figure had increased to 23.3 percent. The center said 34.9 percent of Texas students had not finished high school in 1987.

Although the Surgeon General's goal is to make sure 90 percent of all infants are born to women who begin prenatal care in the first three months of pregnancy, the center found 34.2 percent of Texas women were receiving no such medical attention in 1987.

Marian Wright Edelman, president of the Children's Defense Fund, called the mounting crisis of children and families nationwide "a rebuke to everything America professes to be."

A failure to correct the situation "will bring America to its economic knees and increase violence and discord within this country unless we confront it," she said.

Paul Root, who works in the forecasting and demographics section of the Department of Human Services, said a 1985 state survey also found 24 percent of Texas children were poor, compared with a poverty rate of 18.3 percent for the general population.

"Any time you have anybody in poverty it's shocking," Root said. "It's a statistic (the 24 percent figure) and it's not a pleasant statistic."

The poor in Texas, meanwhile, must be extremely poor to qualify for Aid to Families with Dependent Children, although the state has recently made it easier for pregnant women and children to qualify for health-care assistance through Medicaid.

A family must be at 25 percent of the federal poverty level to qualify for AFDC assistance, Root said. In 1990, the federal poverty level for a family of four is $12,750, meaning a Texas family generally must have an annual income of less than $3,200 to qualify for AFDC.

Figures from the Texas Health Department's bureau of vital statistics, meanwhile, show 7 percent of children born in Texas in 1980 had low birth weights, compared with a 6.8 percent rate in 1988.

The Surgeon General's goal is to bring the percent of low-birthweight babies to no more than 5 percent by 1990. Texas, however, has met the Surgeon General's goal of reducing the infant mortality rate to nine or fewer deaths per 1,000 births. The Texas mortality rate was nine births per 1,000 in 1988, down from 12.1 in 1980.

The book, a popular seller in the late 1960s and early 1970s, discussed "Peter's principle" that company executives always rose to their level of incompetence.

Teen formerly from Soviet Union wins essay contest on state justices

AUSTIN (AP) — To a 17-year-old who remembers an oppressed childhood in the Soviet Union, there are particular things a Texas Supreme Court justice should be.

"The ideal justice would have wisdom. He would be able to discern right from wrong and truth from lies. He would be quick to act for justice and quicker still to act against injustice," says Vadim Mozyrsky.

"He would understand the language of honesty and be deaf to the voice of corruption. He would see the souls of men and know whether they are cleansed by honesty or soiled by deceit," the Houston student writes.

The words are part of Mozyrsky's essay on the ideal Texas Supreme Court Justice, which recently won him honors as an outstanding young citizen.

The statewide essay contest was to commemorate the 150th anniversary of the Texas Supreme Court. Mozyrsky's essay was named the best of more than 200 from high school students across the state.

Mozyrsky received a $500 scholarship and was flown with 70 finalists to Austin to meet members of the Texas high court and to hear judicial dignitaries honor the Supreme Court's first meeting in 1840.

More than 10 years ago, when he was 6, Mozyrsky's family renounced their Soviet citizenship and came to the United States after Soviet officials in Kiev branded them traitors.

In an application letter accompanying his two-page essay, Mozyrsky described his family's life in the Soviet Union as a bleak existence where persecution and fear were commonplace.

"Before we left, they went around to all our neighbors and told them not to have conversations with us because we were traitors," Mozyrsky recalls. "Nobody spoke to us for a month."

At the Texas Capitol, Mozyrsky said he believes his Soviet heritage gives him a better perspective than American students on the ideals Americans hold dear.

"I think I have a different viewpoint than some of the other students because I know what it's like to live in a communist country where there aren't these freedoms," he said.

Mozyrsky hopes to study either law or medicine, is a straight-A student, and a member of the National Honor Society.

His mother is a nurse and his father an electrical engineer. His other relatives, including both sets of grandparents, still live in the Soviet Union.

Other students honored Saturday for outstanding essays were: Robin Marks of Lockney, Catherine Simmons of Jasper, Norma Garcia of Rio Hondo, Rene Reyes of Bastrop, and Kristina Rouw of Gainesville.

Ancient Texans preferred mammoths over mastodons

By DAVE PEGO
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Barbecue is a much older Texas tradition than most people could ever imagine, says the curator of a Dallas museum.

And early Texans apparently had a discriminating palate, too, preferring mammoth meat to that of the mastodon.

Charles Finsley, the earth sciences curator of The Dallas Museum of Natural History, says plenty of evidence exists that shows those who lived in Texas some 10,000 to 15,000 years ago killed and cooked a variety of animals.

He is fairly certain that was the fate of a huge mammoth whose fossilized bones went on display for the first time Sunday.

"There is a suspicious number of charred areas, places apparently blackened by fire and pieces of charcoal were found under the bones," Finsley said.

The mammoth remains were discovered in November by Barry Leon, an amateur paleontologist. Finsley said more excavations are planned at the site along the Sulphur River in northeast Texas.

The animal, a large elephant-like creature, is believed to be about 12,000 years old, and the material will be carbon-dated for a more precise age at sometime in the future.

Finsley said two sets of spear points were found alongside the mammoth, which would have stood 14 1/2 feet tall and weighed about 14 tons. By contrast, an extremely large elephant runs about nine tons, he said.

"I think it would have taken about a 55-gallon drum of barbecue sauce," said Finsley, tongue planted firmly in cheek.

Although there have been no formal studies, Finsley said scientists chatting casually have advanced the theory that prehistoric man had a

Lack of judges stalling drug war in Texas

HOUSTON (AP) — The war on drugs has sparked a battle for courtroom space as federal judges along the Texas Gulf Coast juggle the largest felony drug caseload of any counterparts in the country.

"It's insane to carry out a drug war and not expand the judiciary," said U.S. District Clerk Jesse E. Clark of Houston. "How in the world are you going to get these people off the streets? Once you get them arrested and indicted, that's not the end of it. That's only the beginning."

The Southern District of Texas, which stretches from Houston to Brownsville and includes 43 counties, tops the nation's 94 districts in volume of drug cases.

In the year ending June 30, there were 1,394 drug cases pending in the courts of the Southern District of Texas — more than 2 1/2 times the number in the Southern District of Florida, which includes Miami.

Only four years ago, South Florida drug prosecutions outpaced South Texas cases by a nearly 2-to-1 margin.

"The increase has been almost staggering," said U.S. District Judge David Hittner, a Houston federal judge for 3 1/2 years.

Judges in the district had an average of 69 felony drug cases in 1989, compared to an average 17 such cases for their counterparts in the Southern District of New York and 32 in the Southern District of Florida.

"If this were just an aberration, just a one-time thing that some task force brought in a lot of criminal cases, that would be manageable," said U.S. District Judge George P. Kazen of Laredo. "But what's been happening for the last couple of years is that it's just grown and grown and grown."

A series of factors — not the least of which include tough new anti-drug laws, beefed-up law enforcement and a "zero tolerance" policy — have prompted a heavier caseload.

Private investors pour more funds into energy

HOUSTON (AP) — Insurance firms and other private investors' renewed interest in the energy industry has eased fund-raising efforts for petroleum developers, officials say.

"It is not a stampede, but people are getting more comfortable that oil prices are on an upward trend," said William Kinsley, senior investment officer with John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co., in Boston.

The private placement market includes such investor possibilities as venture capital funds, money managers, other oil companies, pension funds, endowment funds and insurance companies.

Under such transactions, companies sell their stocks or bonds directly to investors, usually large institutions that do not have to be registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Companies use such financing to expand, make acquisitions, restructure their balance sheets, fend off takeovers or accomplish almost any goal that requires long-term money.

While banks have shied away from many petroleum investments in recent years, some private placements provided funds to keep things rolling. Now petroleum companies say they're seeing a surge in investor interests.

"We're bullish on energy right now," said Connee Sullivan, who heads the Houston office of Prudential Capital Corp., the merchant banking arm of giant Prudential Insurance Co. of America. "It accounts for about one-third of our dollar volume of loans" in the region.

Last year, Prudential Capital Corp. invested about $1.2 billion in the Southwest of about $3.9 billion that it spent in all its nine regions of the country.

"The private placement market for oil and gas has expanded greatly," said Edward Story, chief financial officer for Houston's Conquest Exploration. "It is a whole lot easier to attract debt financing than a year ago."

For the lenders, the energy investments promise "greater opportunities now," said James Spann, vice president of Cigna Corp., in Hartford, Conn. Spann said companies that once

Coupled with judicial shortages and stringent mandatory sentencing guidelines that have stalled plea-bargain arrangements, the courts have been jammed.

The Southern District has 11 active trial judges with seven in Houston and one each in Brownsville, Corpus Christi, Laredo and McAllen. One seat in Houston and another in Galveston are open.

Three more judgeships were approved for the Southern District in 1984, but Congress never has allocated the money for the positions.

And, said Chief U.S. District Judge James DeAnda who oversees the district, now that the war on drugs has escalated, the area needs at least seven more jurists.

DeAnda said if more judges are not brought to the bench, "this powerful, well-funded assault will grind to a halt because of the gates of the judiciary cannot open wide enough to admit this giant vehicle."

Dwindling reserves may bring higher gas prices

HOUSTON (AP) — Despite an improving outlook for Texas refineries, analysts said dwindling reserves could spell higher gas prices for consumers from a possible summer shortage.

Recent cold weather and a push to produce heating oil for Northeast markets forced refiners to draw down about 16 million barrels from gasoline stocks in a three-week period to meet rising demand, industry analysts said.

"Inventories are around 18 million barrels behind what they were last year," said Jim Jordan, market analyst with Lovett Underwood Neuhause & Webb. "The odds favor going into the spring with limited inventories, which suggests refiners could have a pretty good year."

The Christmas freeze "was like a double cold spell — it created more demand in the Northeast and it disrupted production down here because Gulf Coast refineries aren't built to operate at those record low temperatures," said Bob G. Gower, president of Houston-based Lyondell Petrochemical.

"I would guess that the refining markets will stay relatively tight, but not extremely tight," Gower said.

"If there is the normal amount of unscheduled refinery outages this year, gasoline could be tight," said John Doshier at Pace Consultants Inc. "Another cold snap in February would make it worse because refiners would have to cut gasoline output again to produce as much distillates as possible."

But Ken Miller, a principal with the Houston consulting firm of Purvin & Gertz Inc., foresees no gasoline shortage.

"I think the capacity is there to produce what is required," Miller said. "We have a tighter balance going into the summer, but that will be made up shortly."

Meanwhile, Houston refineries, which represent about 25 percent of the nation's refining capacity, could be in for a great year.

Dale Steffes of Planning & Forecasting Consultants says growing demand and higher fuel prices could pump an additional $5 billion to $10 billion this year into the economy of Houston.

Steffes, who predicted the oil bust of the mid-1980s, said he expects Houston to boom while higher fuel prices slow the rest of the U.S. economy.

"This will bring another $5 billion (from investment capital), which will inflate the depressed property values of Houston maybe 5 to 10 percent across the board this year," Steffes said.

But some analysts caution a gasoline shortage could drive up refiners' profit margins, while others said margins would remain strong, but below the 1988-89 levels. Either way, consumers could be paying more at the pumps this summer.

If you're bothered by headache that seems to have its origin at the base of your skull, you may be suffering from tension headache.
Tension headaches can be caused by an irritation of the nerves in the area of the spine immediately under the skull. These are called the suboccipital nerves. They pass through small openings in the spinal column to muscles in the surrounding area. Any abnormal pressure or dysfunction of neck and muscles can irritate the nerves, causing tension.
The tension doesn't cause the headache. To treat this form of headache, attention should be paid to the bone and muscle structures. They should be returned to normal balance so they can function properly again.
Medication is not the answer to tension headaches. Aspirin and other painkillers may give you temporary relief-but they won't solve the problem. Once the source of the problem is found and treated, THEN you can get the relief you need.

Opinion

ACLU finds itself on the wrong side

The 4th District Court of Appeal has ruled that the American Civil Liberties Union violated the civil rights of a Newport Beach, Calif., police officer back in 1980. ACLU officials identified Sgt. Richard Long, who was attending an ACLU meeting, as a police officer, accused him of being a spy and ordered him to leave. That was using speech to "achieve evil," and the First Amendment doesn't protect it.

The ruling is bizarre, but perhaps there's poetic justice here. The ACLU should have been fully within its rights to ask anyone to leave its meeting. But the ACLU has been undermining the rights of other private organizations to conduct their affairs as they choose, so it didn't defend itself on what should have been legitimate grounds.

The ACLU is a private, voluntary organization. It has the right to control its membership and run its meetings as it prefers. So it should have been within its right in asking the policeman to leave—even if, as Sgt. Long testified, he was there as a community-affairs officer to learn about ACLU concerns rather than acting as a police spy. A private organization has the right to make decisions based on incomplete or mistaken information, or even wrong decisions.

But the ACLU has not taken that position consistently. It has instead favored, for example, forcing some private clubs to admit women or members of governmentally designated minority groups, blurring the distinction between governmental and private institutions and eroding private rights.

So the ACLU had to rely on freedom of speech—presumably, the freedom to say "this guy's a cop," or "get out of here"—thus creating an opening for the court to limit freedom of speech. The ACLU says it will appeal to the California Supreme Court.

The appellate court ruled that asking Sgt. Long to identify himself and revealing his presence was protected by the First Amendment, which says that "Congress shall make no law... abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press..." But when an ACLU lawyer told him to leave, that led to his being discriminated against arbitrarily because he was a police officer. Thus the speech was used to "achieve evil."

The interpretation undermines an important distinction between speech and action. Our constitutional framework allows government to intervene or regulate when one person's actions injure another person. But free speech—even foolish, misinformed, stupid, venal and, yes, evil speech—is every American's right. If action follows speech, the action may be subject to prosecution, but the speech itself shouldn't be.

That's not such a tough distinction. Assuming the ACLU had no right to throw Sgt. Long out of the meeting—which we dispute but the ACLU might not—actually throwing him out could be actionable. The speech leading to the action shouldn't be.

If you let government define and control whether speech has an evil intent, you're opening a chink that can lead to the kind of censorship the First Amendment sought to prohibit. The 4th District Court of Appeal, to its discredit, leaped into the opening to expand government power.

The ACLU should appeal. It also might reconsider its position on the rights of private organizations.

Justice can be terribly wrong

James J. Kilpatrick

WASHINGTON—Two federal judges now have found something rotten at the Justice Department. They have found the ugly case of INSLAW Inc., and that case is beginning to smell to high heaven. The question is, What does Attorney General Dick Thornburgh propose to do about it?

Over the past five years, a good deal has been written about the INSLAW affair in legal and business publications, but not much has appeared in the daily press. Now two recent developments command attention: On Nov. 22, Senior U.S. District Judge William Bryant handed down a startling opinion here in Washington; and on Dec. 20, INSLAW filed a petition for a writ of mandamus against Thornburgh. The petition seeks an independent investigation of his department's conduct.

The story is not complicated, and it is not pretty. It has to do with a young inventor, William Hamilton, who set out in 1973 to develop a computer software system that would increase the efficiency of federal prosecutors. He came up with PROMIS (Prosecutor's Management Information System). It worked well.

Building on his original invention, Hamilton then greatly enhanced the software program. In 1982 he sought and won a three-year contract with the Department of Justice to install the improved PROMIS in 20 of the largest U.S. Attorney's offices. He fulfilled the contract in February 1985. Simultaneously he went into a Chapter 11 bankruptcy.

What had gone wrong? A great deal had gone wrong. For a period of 18 months, from November 1974 to April 1975, Hamilton had employed C. Madison Brewer as his general counsel. It was a bad relationship. Personalities clashed. Hamilton thought Brewer was doing a poor job; Brewer thought Hamilton was "crazy." In the end, Brewer was fired.

The contract with Justice was virtually the sole source of INSLAW's income. And who wound up at the Justice Department as deputy attorney general, assigned to manage the PROMIS project? C. Madison Brewer. In 1986 Hamilton brought an adversary proceeding in the District of Columbia Bankruptcy Court, alleging that Brewer had led a conspiracy within the department to drive him out of business.

Bankruptcy Judge George F. Bason Jr. conducted prolonged hearings on the matter. On Sept. 28, 1987, he handed down a stunning decision. The court upheld Hamilton's charges right down the line. Bason found that Brewer had worked with colleagues at the Justice Department to achieve the "ruination" of INSLAW. They had held up payments on the contract "in bad faith, vexatiously, and in wanton disregard of the law and the facts, and for oppressive reasons." From the bench, Bason ruled that the department "took, converted, stole INSLAW's enhanced PROMIS by trickery, fraud and deceit."

Brewer and his associates, the court found, evidenced "a complete lack of impartiality." They were "utterly hostile" to Hamilton. They sidetracked or ignored his repeated complaints. Brewer was "consumed by hatred and by an intense desire for revenge" against Hamilton. Subsequent to the Chapter 11 filing, the department, acting through its employees, "unlawfully, intentionally and willfully sought to cause the conversion of the petition to a Chapter 7 liquidation without justification and by improper means."

Bason's opinion was sweeping. The evidence was clear and convincing; in some instances the evidence was "overwhelming or even irrefutable." Part of Brewer's testimony was "a deliberate fabrication." Other testimony for the department was "totally unbelievable" or "absolutely incredible." He entered a judgment against the department of $6.8 million plus nearly $1 million dollars in attorneys' fees. The department appealed. Three months after he dropped his blockbuster, on Dec. 28, 1987, Bason was denied reappointment as a bankruptcy judge. Let us draw what inferences we may.

In the summer of 1988, Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., tried to investigate the INSLAW affair. He ran into a stone wall. Nunn told a Justice spokesman that "you have had us jumping through one hoop after another." The spokesman, Assistant Attorney General John R. Bolton, scoffed at Bason's opinion. He was certain it would be reversed. Bason himself was biased: "We are confident that we will be vindicated."

Famous last words. On Nov. 22, Senior Judge Bryant came to the same conclusion Judge Bason had reached: "The government acted willfully and fraudulently to obtain property that it was not entitled to." Further, "There is convincing, perhaps compelling support for the findings set forth by the bankruptcy court." These findings "will not be disturbed."

What now, Dick Thornburgh? Is Hamilton still "crazy"? Or were your own people terribly in the wrong?

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Monday, Jan. 15, the 15th day of 1990. There are 350 days left in the year. This is the Martin Luther King Jr. holiday.

Today's Highlight in History: On Jan. 15, 1929, civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr. was born in Atlanta.

On this date: In 1559, England's Queen Elizabeth I was crowned in Westminster Abbey.

In 1777, the people of New Connecticut declared their independence. The tiny republic later became the state of Vermont.

In 1870, the Democratic party was represented as a donkey for the first time in a cartoon by Thomas Nast in Harper's Weekly.

In 1919, pianist and statesman Ignace Paderewski became the first premier of the newly created republic of Poland.

In 1943, work was completed on the Pentagon.

Women likely to make history

Homer McKee, the Hoosier philosopher, once said, "When dealing in the human equation, one plus one does not equal two. One and one, side-by-side, equal eleven."

My own experience confirms that. Albert Gore is the senator from Tennessee. Tipper Gore is his wife. I suspect that she is mightily significant in his success.

The other day Tipper Gore was speaking to the School Board Association in her home state of Tennessee. She was explaining that the so-called "drug cult" that threatens to consume our young people has thrived in direct response to the demise of the American family.

She noted that one never sees the so-called "traditional American family" on television anymore except in ancient reruns of Leave It to Beaver. Mrs. Gore remembers the ideal life as a two-parent family with mom at home and dad at work and grandma in the same town.

Today that describes fewer than 7 percent of American families.

The recent evolution—or revolution—relating to women's rights may have taken away as much as it has given.

But that today's woman "has a choice" is an undeniable manifestation of civilization.

Subservience by whatever and for whatever reasons belongs to the past.

Women over the centuries, required by circumstances to adopt and to accommodate, have developed a character quality that is sometimes construed as devious or as designing.

On the contrary, the chameleon quality becomes them.

Rembrandt's favorite model for his portraits was his own wife.

Once he was speaking to a group of soliders and one of them asked why. At the time Rembrandt had been married for seven years and still preferred to paint his own wife.

And the soldier asked why.

Rembrandt said, quote, "When one woman gives herself to you, you possess all women—women of every race and clime. You possess the brown-skinned girls who inflame your senses with their play—the cool, yellow-haired women who entice—and then escape—you. You possess the gentle ones who serve you, the slender ones who torment you, and the mothers who bore and suckled you. All of the women whom God created out of the teeming fullness of the earth are yours when you have the love of one woman."

"Throw a purple mantle over her shoulders and she becomes the Queen of Sheba; lay your tousled head blindly upon her breast and she is Delilah waiting to enthrall you; take her garments from her, strip the last veil from her body and she is a chaste Susanna covering her nakedness with fluttering hands..."

"Gaze upon your life-wife as you would gaze upon a thousand strange women. Never call her 'yours'; her secrets are inexhaustible. You will never have time to know them all."

What Rembrandt could not have foreseen is that today's "women," in the office, shop, medical facility or schoolroom, can wear quite as many mantles.

And side-by-side with a complimentary teammate, they are likely to make history.

Cold War's end will affect South Africa

By WILLIAM A. RUSHER

Recently I pointed out some of the implications of the apparent end of the Cold War for various Soviet client states around the world. However brave and defiant such second-string communist stooges as Fidel Castro, Daniel Ortega and Angola's Eduardo dos Santos may pretend to be, their days are numbered and they must know it.

But the end of the Cold War will have almost equally important implications for certain "controversial" nations that have identified themselves with the cause of the West.

Take South Africa, for instance. Its white government is well aware that it is under heavy attack throughout the world for its alleged sluggishness in dismantling apartheid. But Pretoria has always calculated, with some justice, that the major Western powers would be reluctant to see the present South African government go under if its successor was likely to be communist-dominated, or even merely sympathetic to communism.

For South Africa possesses the lion's share (outside the communist bloc) of a number of highly strategic minerals. And its key position, athwart the vital shipping lanes around the southern tip of Africa, is obvious. Let South Africa fall into the hands of the African National Congress—the exiled organization that even the U.S. State Department a few years ago identified as largely communist-dominated—and the whole global balance of power would tip perceptibly toward Moscow.

Or would have, until Mikhail Gorbachev in effect threw in the sponge. If the West has won the Cold War, there is clearly much less need for it to make sure that southern Africa isn't dominated by forces sympathetic to communism. By the same token, there is also more reason for the ANC and other previously pro-communist organizations to orient their policies in the direction of Washington.

That is one good reason why South Africa's new state president,

F.W. de Klerk, is stepping up the pace of change in his complex, polyglot country. And there is another, linked to it. As "freedom fever" sweeps Eastern Europe and even the Soviet Union itself, the pressure to liberalize mounts also in nations that haven't yet "gotten the message."

This has already happened in Nicolae Ceausescu's Stalinist Romania and is happening in the so-called People's Republic of China. And while there is no valid analogy between such totalitarian states and South Africa, the general trend toward greater political freedom in the world is bound to have an impact there as well.

Luckily all indications are that President de Klerk is well aware of the recent changes in the world scene and intends to press forward with the process of dismantling apartheid begun by his predecessor, P.W. Botha.

Botha seldom gets credit outside South Africa for his steps in that direction but in his period in office he repealed such pillars of the apartheid system as the Influx Control laws, the Pass laws, the Jobs Reservation Act, the Mixed Marriages Act and the Immorality Act; enfranchised 3 million "coloureds" and 1 million Indians; legalized black and multi-racial trade unions; and invited all black groups willing to forswear violence to confer on ways of bringing blacks fully into the national political process.

With so much of the rest of apartheid already dismantled, it is largely on this latter objective that de Klerk is concentrating. Outside observers would be ill-advised to assume that he, or any other president elected by the National Party, is likely to agree to "one man, one vote, in a unitary state."

In South Africa, that would simply result in a black despotism at best and chronic tribal warfare at worst. But de Klerk knows that the old excuses for inaction will no longer work, and he seems determined to do what he can to solve, or greatly ameliorate, his country's problems.

Bulgarian Parliament votes to end Communist Party monopoly

By TONY SMITH
Associated Press Writer

SOFIA, Bulgaria (AP) — Parliament voted today to abolish the Communist Party's political monopoly and agreed to discuss further constitutional changes with the opposition, which is demanding a swifter transition to democracy.

Lawmakers voted unanimously to delete clauses in the constitution that guaranteed Communist supremacy in Bulgaria for 44 years, following the lead of colleagues in East Germany and Czechoslovakia.

On Sunday, more than 50,000 people rallied in Sofia to keep up the pressure on legislators and demand the immediate dismissal of old guard Communists still in the leadership. They chanted "Communists resign! Resign!"

Parliament was also expected to adopt a declaration backing the restoration of the rights of the Turkish-speaking minority that arose from talks last week among Communists, opposition figures, nationalist leaders and ethnic Turks.

The declaration aims to defuse ethnic tensions between Slavic nationalists and members of Bulgaria's estimated 1.2 million ethnic Turks.

They also adopted a proposal by Andrei Lukanov, the No. 2 official in the Communist Party, to set up the group that is to join lawmakers and opposition figures in drafting proposed further constitutional changes.

The changes are likely to include scrapping the reference to Bulgaria as a "Socialist state ... headed by the working class" and be voted on when Parliament next meets in February.

The country's new President and party leader, Petar Mladenov, is under pressure from pro-democracy opposition forces to speed reforms.

The demonstrators on Sunday demanded a "government of national accord" and the resignation of Premier Georgi Atanassov, a holdover from the hard-line rule of Todor Zhivkov, who was ousted Nov. 10 after 34 years in power.

Leaders of the pro-democracy opposition Union of Democratic Forces also read excerpts from a declaration agreed upon Friday by nationalists, Communists and opposition representatives aimed at ending ethnic discord.

Last month, the country's new leaders struck down a Zhivkov decree under which Turks were forcibly assimilated. Thousands of ethnic Slavs reacted by taking to the streets in protest and staging strikes.

Petko Simeonov, president of the Glasnost and Democracy Club, has accused orthodox Communists of manipulating nationalist sentiments in an attempt "to smash democracy."

At Sunday's three-hour rally, opposition leaders announced a list of demands that include: two-stage legislative elections in May and November; removing Communist cells from the army, police and workplace; and scrapping the constitutional guarantees of Communist supremacy.

Petar Beron, a leading opposition spokesman who read the demands from the steps of Alexander Nevski Cathedral, called for some parliamentary seats held by Zhivkov cronies to be contested in May, with a full general election in November.

"We're hearing of changes in nearby countries like Romania, even Albania, so we demand democratic guarantees," Beron shouted to the crowd, who sang and cheered in almost a holiday mood.

He also called for a full report on the finances of the secret police and the removal of all former Zhivkov collaborators from the government.

In explaining the call for two-stage elections, the opposition movement's president, Zhelio Zhelev, told reporters the opposition had no time to prepare for full general elections provisionally slated for May.

"We couldn't win full elections in May, but in November we have a good chance," he said.

"How can we win elections in May when Department-Six (the secret police) still exists and the mass media are still under dictatorship?" asked Ljubomir Sobajiev, another UDF speaker.

The opposition will demand May elections for 100 to 120 parliamentary seats occupied by "those compromised under Zhivkov," Zhelev said.

The demands were to be presented at talks with the government that are to begin Tuesday.

Hard work and luck led to capture of suspect in murders of 11 women

By HILARY APPELMAN
Associated Press Writer

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — The paroled child killer accused of murdering 11 women during the past two years was not even a suspect until the morning police spotted him sitting in a car near the frozen body of one of the victims.

Arthur J. Shawcross fell into the hands of police the way most serial killers are caught: after months of grueling investigation — and a dose of good luck.

Serial killers often fall prey to their mistakes, said Jack Levin, a sociology professor at Northeastern University who has written a book on multiple slayers.

"Not because of a multimillion-dollar task force, not because of the skillful investigative techniques of the police ... but because of a mistake he made. That is typical."

David Berkowitz, New York's "Son of Sam" killer, was caught in 1976 after he was ticketed for parking in front of a fire hydrant during the shooting of one of his six victims.

Ted Bundy, who eluded police for four years following his escape from a Colorado prison, was arrested in 1978 after being pulled over by a Florida policeman for erratic driving.

Atlanta child killer Wayne Williams was caught when police heard him dumping the body of one of his victims off a bridge in 1981.

Capt. T. Michael Nault of the King County, Wash., police department, agrees that investigative muscle alone usually doesn't solve such cases. Since 1982, King County authorities have hunted for the Green River killer — blamed for the deaths of up to 49 young women.

Investigators said Shawcross' arrest was an unusually quick resolution to a serial-murder case, one of the most difficult to crack.

Rochester police, after concluding in November that they were dealing with a serial killer, were prepared for a long investigation. Up to 60 officers were assigned to the case.

"Short of some miracle, I would anticipate a very long, tedious, drawn-out investigation," Chief Gordon Urlacher said in early December.

Shawcross was one of hundreds of potential suspects identified by appearance, but not by name, through interviews and surveillance of an area frequented by prostitutes and their customers.

Sgt. Roland Marchetti, a police spokesman, said investigators had received routine information about Shawcross' background when he was paroled to the area in 1987. Marchetti declined to comment about how that information was reviewed in an effort to find the serial killer.

In all, there are records of 86 paroled killers in the Rochester area.

Edward Elwin, executive director of the state parole division, said Shawcross would not have been a likely suspect in the killings because people convicted in sex-related killings of children generally do not also attack adult women.

Shawcross served 15 years in prison after confessing to killing an 8-year-old girl and a 10-year-old boy.

Until state troopers conducting a helicopter search spotted Shawcross in a county park on Jan. 3, the case seemed far from being solved.

"We were just on a search, just going over an area that we had covered previously," said Sgt. Ken R. Hundt, one of the two pilots. "As far as I'm concerned, it was just a matter of luck."

But without laborious investigations, police would not have had the evidence to make a case against Shawcross, said Jim Martin of the district attorney's office in New Bedford, Mass., where nine women were found slain in 1988 and 1989. Those slayings are not solved.

And it wasn't just luck that allowed Rochester officials to stumble upon Shawcross that wintery morning, Martin said.

"They knew where to look," he said. "They were in the right place at the right time — but they had reason to be there. Certainly, luck may have played a small part, but they did some darn good police work."

Jury in computer hacking trial comprised of software illiterates

By WILLIAM KATES
Associated Press Writer

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — Robert T. Morris has been described as a genius, yet the jury judging his computer hacking trial is comprised of software illiterates — and deliberately so.

Morris, 25, a suspended Cornell University graduate student, is charged with computer tampering for allegedly unleashing a wildly replicating "worm" program that temporarily immobilized a U.S. computer network in November 1988.

Lawyers say it's not uncommon to fill a jury with people unfamiliar with a subject that is central to a trial, but it can be a gamble.

"It's a trial strategy one has to decide," says Theodore Hagelin, a computer law professor and director of the Law Technology and Management program at Syracuse University.

"But you run a real risk of losing them in the flood of information and definitions they must listen to."

U.S. Justice Department lawyers Ellen Meltzer and Mark Rasch and defense attorney Thomas Guidoboni interviewed 23 prospective jurors to hear the case, and both sides focused on computer literacy.

So did U.S. District Judge

Howard Munson, who asked potential jurors if they owned a computer or knew how to use them.

"No, I don't know a thing about them," said a woman who then was selected.

The only three prospective jurors who said they owned a personal computer were rejected, although two jurors who worked with computers at their jobs — an airline reservation clerk and insurance claims processor — were accepted. Twelve jurors and one alternate were seated.

During much of the first three days of testimony last week, jurors listened as witnesses painstakingly tried to simplify the high-technology world of computers, explaining alien terms like "e-mail," "finger demons" and "decompilation," or the differences among source codes, assembly codes and binary codes.

Even the court reporter has struggled to keep up with the jargon.

Rasch and Guidoboni declined to talk about the jury selection, but Hagelin said there is sound reason behind the strategy.

"By choosing jurors that are not particularly sophisticated about technology you create a juror pool with an open mind, or at least you hope so," he said.

Harold L. Burstyn, a lawyer specializing in computer law, said one computer expert could contaminate the jury.

"You'd have to be deathly afraid that one individual, claiming to be an expert or being an expert, would get all the other jurors to follow him because of his knowledge, rather than because of their belief in guilt or innocence," Burstyn said.

In the end, the case may be decided by which attorney can provide the most succinct and powerful metaphor to translate the case to its most simplest terms, Burstyn and Hagelin agreed.

Morris, of Arnold, Md., is the first person charged under a section of the 1986 Computer Fraud and Abuse Act dealing with federal computer networks. He faces up to five years in prison and a $250,000 fine if convicted.

Prosecutors allege he designed and unleashed a "worm" program that immobilized an estimated 6,000 computers linked to the Internet research computer network, including those at National Aeronautics and Space Administration and Air Force facilities and several universities.

The defense has said Morris created the "worm" as a computer security experiment, but that he made a programming mistake that let the worm go berserk. He has said Morris did not intend to cause any damage.

Soviet diplomat sentenced to death as spy

By JOHN-THOR DAHLBURG
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — Authorities have captured and sentenced to death a diplomat who began spying for the United States nearly 30 years ago, passing classified information on topics ranging from chemical arms to politics, Pravda said.

The Communist Party daily did not identify the man or say whether he had been executed.

In its report Sunday, Pravda said the man, code-named "Donald," was one of the most important of about 30 Western spies caught by the Soviets in recent years. It said he had confessed, but did not say when he was arrested.

In today's editions, the New York Times quoted an unidentified U.S. official in Washington as confirming that an American agent "from deep within the Soviet bureaucracy" had been arrested. It said the American official expressed mild surprise that the Soviets had made the capture public.

In Washington, a FBI press duty officer, Greg Jones, told The Associated Press he had no comment on the Pravda story. CIA spokesman Bill Devine also refused to comment. "It's our standard procedure that we neither confirm nor deny such allegations," Devine said.

The report was apparently intended, at least in part, to enhance the prestige of a KGB official whose name has been mentioned in connection with a corruption scandal.

It reserved a glamorous role for the KGB official, Col. Alexander S. Dukhanin, who has been criticized by a legislative commission investigating charges of official corruption extending all the way to Politburo member Yegor K. Ligachev.

Pravda claimed that "Donald" began spying for the Americans in November 1961, when he was a high-ranking Soviet representative at U.N. headquarters in New York. He supposedly met an FBI agent, John F., in the street after making his acquaintance at a party.

"Donald" gave the Americans political and economic information, data on chemical and bacteriological defenses, and even information about diseases of rice, corn and wheat, Pravda said.

During his career, "Donald" worked for the CIA in India, the newspaper said, where he was allegedly equipped by a U.S. spy with sophisticated espionage devices that enabled him to send information from unlikely places, for example a bus as it passed by the U.S. Embassy.

While in India, "Donald" was warned that the CIA had leaked to the media a report that a Soviet official at the United Nations had been recruited as a spy by the Americans in the 1960s, Pravda said.

The news put the man on his guard, but he failed to notice he was under heavy surveillance and was caught red-handed in an unspecified act of espionage, Pravda said.

Study shows older women as likely as men to be risks for heart attacks

By PAUL RAE BURN
AP Science Editor

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — By age 55, women are as likely as men to have high blood pressure, and more than half of American women that age have elevated cholesterol levels, the American Heart Association says.

In its annual statistical report, the association said Sunday that by age 65 women are more likely than men to have high blood pressure.

The most recent figures show that heart disease and strokes killed 976,706 Americans in 1987, almost as many as died from all other causes combined. That amounts to penning of the association's annual science writers' forum, where scientists report on recent heart disease research.

This year's statistics focus on the risks of heart disease in women. The tally shows that more than half of all women ages 55 to 74 have blood cholesterol levels above 240, at which heart disease risk increases substantially.

Only one-third of men in that age group have cholesterol levels over 240, the association said.

Men remain more likely than women overall to have heart attacks.

But women have a much higher rate of strokes, which occur when cholesterol plugs an artery supplying blood to the brain.

Cigarette smoking seems to pose a greater risk for women than for men, the figures show. A 55-year-old woman who smokes is in more danger of a heart attack than a 55-year-old male smoker.

A 55-year-old woman who smokes and has high blood pressure and elevated cholesterol has a one-third higher risk of heart attack than a 55-year-old man with the same risk factors.

The association estimates that heart disease costs the United States $94.5 billion a year in medical expenses and lost productivity.

The good news is that heart disease continues its gradual decline. In 1950, the death rate from heart disease was 226 for every 100,000 people. By 1986, it had fallen to 129 per 100,000.

Nevertheless, an estimated 67 million Americans — one in every four — have some potentially dangerous form of heart or blood-vessel disease.

Heart attacks will strike about 1.5 million Americans this year, and some 500,000 will suffer from strokes, the association said.

NASA scientists facing challenge of data deluge from probes

VALERIE MEEHAN
Associated Press Writer

GREENBELT, Md. (AP) — After 10 years of focusing on shuttles, NASA plans 64 space explorations in the next decade, creating a data deluge that could swamp an agency already drowning in information that's never been studied.

"We will acquire in the next three years what it's taken 25 years to get," said James Green, director of the National Space Science Data Center at Goddard Space Flight Center. The volume will double every two years after that, with a virtual explosion in 1996 from the Earth Observing System.

EOS is expected to transmit more data in 30 hours than is already stored from 25 years of space travel. Before EOS, the next three years should see the launch of the Cosmic Background Explorer, the Galileo mission to Jupiter, the Hubble Space Telescope, Gamma Ray Observer, Ulysses mission to the sun, the Mars Observer and the TOPEX Poseidon ocean-sensing satellite.

Scientists are eagerly awaiting EOS, hoping for undreamed-of discoveries, as well as data to solve such threats to the Earth's survival as global warming and the thinning of the earth's protective ozone layer.

The critical question is whether the data will be in a form they can use.

Industry hasn't developed hardware or software to serve the demands of disciplines as diverse as anthropology, zoology and atmospheric physics, so it has been up to government scientists to pioneer solutions that have put NASA at the cutting edge, but still short of making computerized data easily usable.

NASA traditionally has been most willing to cut funds for archiving data if it ran short of money when launching a space mission. It is undergoing a change in focus, too, moving from an era of general space exploration to one of information gathering — and funding for that lags.

In the fiscal 1990 budget, the data center received $4.7 million for managing, archiving and distributing data. The 1989 budget allocation was $3.2 million. By comparison, NASA's entire 1990 budget was $12.5 billion.

"The thing is you don't put the space probes up there for no reason," said David Dickerson, an aide to Rep. Bill Nelson, D-Fla., chairman of the House space science subcommittee. "The distance they travel is not what's important. It's the information they send back. They're going to have to put increasing amount of thought and resources to that."

Alan Robock, a University of Maryland meteorologist who is testing NASA techniques for improving accessibility to data, said the fault isn't just with the space agency. "Computers and data analysis are not nearly as sexy ... they're harder to sell to Congress."

William Campbell, a NASA artificial intelligence expert, is developing techniques to build intelligence into the data gathering. Increasingly fast and sensitive instruments can gather data faster than anyone can analyze or catalog it, Campbell said. "It's not just the volume, it's the complexity."

He and other NASA scientists believe they are on the brink of developing systems that would put the data in usable form almost from the time instruments capture it in space by analyzing it with the users' needs in mind.

"The idea is to build intelligence into the whole system from the back end to the user," he said. "This is a whole new way of thinking about the problem. I contend it is the only hope."

In the five years since Green took over, the Space Science Data Center has gone from a "tape landfill" to concentrating on data accessibility.

But as it struggles toward answers to the pending data deluge, it is burdened with catching up from years of neglect.

Of approximately 80,000 magnetic tapes dating to the early 1960s that are in a climate-controlled federal warehouse in Suitland, about half need to be restored, said Robert McGuire, who heads the project. About 9,000 have been restored since the effort began in July 1988. Another 30,000 to 40,000 tapes are at the Space Science Data Center.

If the technology doesn't exist to manage data beamed back from EOS, the instruments should be monitored only some of the time — or not launched, Green said. "It doesn't do anybody any good if we can't manage the data."

Pilgrim's Pride pecks at Hightower

MOUNT PLEASANT (AP) — An East Texas poultry company has had its feathers ruffled by accusations from Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower that the company pays its suppliers "chicken feed."

"He is whistling through his nose," said Cliff Butler, vice chairman and chief financial officer at Pilgrim's Pride. "And you can quote me."

Butler's comments were in response to the release of a report accusing major poultry corporations in general and locally-owned Pilgrim's Pride Corp. of "plucking" farmers who provide chickens.

The report, released last week by Hightower, singled out Pilgrim's Pride as the firm paying the lowest to poultry producers holding short-term contracts.

"With the economic and geographic control of the poultry industry concentrated among a half-dozen large corporations, hundreds of Texas poultry raisers are little more than indentured servants scrambling for short-term contracts that literally pay chicken feed," Hightower said.

Butler told the Mount Pleasant Daily Tribune the accusations by Hightower are "ridiculous."

"Many growers are building new chicken houses, 40-foot by 300-feet. If we weren't paying a reasonable contract and paying for their services, they wouldn't be building," Butler said.

Butler also said that comparing prices between Pilgrim's and Tyson's Foods, as stated in the report, is comparing apples to oranges.

The report says growers on eight-week contracts to Pilgrim's Pride received an average contract price of 14 cents per bird.

In contrast to Pilgrim's Pride, the report said, Tyson Foods has hundreds of Texas producers under contract at 18 cents per bird.

Butler pointed out that Tyson growers keep and feed their birds weeks longer than Pilgrim suppliers.

"We buy smaller chickens," Butler said.

Pilgrim producers may sell six batches per house per year. Tyson growers on the other hand, may sell only four groups per year.

Butler said smaller birds are purchased because of a marketing standpoint. The customers prefer it that way.

At least one local chicken raiser supported Butler's position.

"Everybody wants more money," Tommy Kings said, "but there is no fairer company than Pilgrim's Pride."

King said he is building 18 more 40-by-300-foot chicken houses for Pilgrim's.

"We surely wouldn't be building those if we didn't think we would be making money," King said.

Give thirsty evergreens a drink of water

It has been over three months since we have had any good beneficial moisture. Normally, around our homes there is not very much green and growing at this time of the year so we don't usually think about watering.

Now is the time to water all evergreen type of trees and shrubs, whether it be junipers, cedars, pines and etc. Large trees such as pines need a lot of water applied slowly. If you haven't watered them in a couple of months, you will be surprised at how much water the soil will hold. Get your water hose out of winter storage and turn it on about halfway and let it run for several hours or all day - checking occasionally to see if the water is on too fast or needs moving.

The relative warm temperatures and dry conditions have maintained high water usage rates by our "evergreen" plants. Give them a good deep soaking and they will dearly love you for it. Infrequent deep waterings can be very beneficial to your trees and shrubs. This encourages root development in order to find moisture. Just remember too much water from frequent, shallow waterings can be harmful just like not enough water.

Insects Found in Firewood

With the cold winter upon us,

For Horticulture

homeowners begin to supplement heating costs by using their fireplaces and wood burning stoves. Wood burned in these fireplaces and stoves serves as an excellent harborage site for insects. Insects may be found inside the wood and emerge once wood is brought inside the home or they may take refuge in firewood stacked too close to the home and more inside later.

There are a large number of wood infesting insects and wood is subject to attack while trees are standing as well as after they are cut and wood is stacked and stored. Infested wood that is stored inside the home is often the source of wood boring beetles and other insects that are found by homeowners. The insect's life cycle is accelerated by temperatures found inside the home. The insects develop rapidly and when adults emerge from the wood, they cause great concern to the homeowner.

The majority of insects found in firewood are harmless to structural timbers, furniture, and other wooden structures found inside the home. Homeowners can consider most firewood dwelling insects as merely nuisance pests. Powder post beetles (lyctids and anobids) emerging from firewood stored inside the home will not attack seasoned wood or woods that have been painted, varnished or sealed. Cockroaches, psocids, spiders, earwigs, and scorpions may also inhabit firewood, but will seldom damage home structure.

How to Avoid Insect Problems in Firewood

- Prevention
1. Store firewood away from the house to eliminate a convenient harborage site for pests.
  2. Keep firewood off the ground. Wood in contact with the ground provides an attractive harborage area.

3. Stack firewood to accelerate the drying out process. Wood should be stacked so that air can flow through and around the wood. Stacking wood in alternative rows also permits easy access by predators and parasites to many of the inhabitants of stored firewood.

4. Do not store large quantities of firewood inside the home. Bring wood inside the home in a short period of time.

5. Purchase wood that has been out during the fall or winter. This wood will be dry enough by spring to discourage infestation by many of the wood infesting insects.

Chemical Control

1. Do not treat firewood with insecticides. Treating firewood with insecticides is not a safe practice and will not result in any measurable control. Most insects inhabiting firewood live in the wood or between the wood-bark interface. An insecticidal spray will seldom, if ever, reach these insects.
2. It may be necessary to occasionally treat the soil under and around firewood stacks to prevent insects from inhabiting the area. Many insecticides with long residual are available for this purpose. Read the label and follow direction on application rates.

Words of brotherhood are prophecy

DEAR READERS: Today we pay tribute to a great American, Martin Luther King Jr. His words of wisdom are even more meaningful today than they were 23 years ago, when he said: "One day, somebody should remind us that even though there may be political and ideological differences between us, the Vietnamese are our brothers, the Russians are our brothers, the Chinese are our brothers, and one day we've got to sit down together at the table of brotherhood."

DEAR ABBY: My girlfriend and I have been living together for 19 years and have a 16-year-old son. He was born in Wisconsin, and therein lies the problem.

His mother cannot get a birth certificate for him. It seems that good old Wisconsin has an archaic law that forbids issuing birth certificates to unwed mothers!

At the time of our son's birth, I acknowledged that I was the boy's father, but that didn't help.

We live 2,000 miles away and can't seem to get a satisfactory answer by mail. We have had several occasions on which we needed a birth certificate.

I would like to know what is so awful about a mother having a birth certificate, whether or not she is married. Thank you.

BAFFLED IN EVERETT, WASH.

DEAR BAFFLED: Don't knock "good old Wisconsin." America's Dairyland exuded the milk of human kindness when I contacted Sen. Herbert Kohl's office. The senator's assistant, Peter Lewis, advised me that there had been such a law, but it no longer exists, so it's now possible to obtain a birth certificate for your son.

Write to: The Department of Health and Social Services, Vital Statistics, P.O. Box 309, Madison, Wis. 53701.

Enclose a check for $8 made out to the DHSS. State the child's name, date of birth and the county in which he was born. Also give the mother's full name at the time of the child's birth.

You should then receive some forms to fill out. The boy's mother must clearly state that she is requesting her son's birth certificate; otherwise her son would have to wait until he is 18 to make the request on his own.

DEAR ABBY: I recently read a letter in your column about quitting smoking. It made me think back to when I finally quit after at least 20 attempts. I was the mother of two very small children and I desperately wanted to quit. (I had to, for my health's sake.)

What finally made me quit — 15 years ago last New Year's — was a little clipping I cut out of the newspaper. It read: "You pay for cigarettes twice; once when you get them, and once again when they get you."

I stuck that clipping on the front of my refrigerator and read it every time I wanted a cigarette. It helped me, and I hope it will do the same for others who sincerely want to quit.

FINALLY MADE IT

DEAR ABBY: First of all, "Cat Lover in Maine" should either buy — or ask a vet for — a cardboard cat carrier with air holes in it. The cat will feel more secure in a small, dark carrier than he will looking out the window of a speeding vehicle. Also, cats roaming free in the car will climb on your shoulders, wedge themselves between your foot and the brake pedal, or squeeze out of the tiniest opening in the car window, and in a matter of seconds, it can dive out the window and get killed on the highway. So, steel yourself, and keep the cat in the carrier if it's at all possible.

Our cat howled for three hours straight on the first day of our trip and then slept for the remainder of the day. On the second day, he howled for only half an hour, then he settled down. If you can endure the first day, you'll be home free. Be sure to put the carrier somewhere in the car where the cat can see you and hear your voice. This will reassure him. And if you place the carrier on the floor of the car, be sure that no fumes or heat will blow directly on your cat, or you will have one sick pet.

If you stop for meals, never leave the cat locked in a hot car, especially in the sun.

Finally, get all your cat's inoculations before you start out for your trip — especially the feline leukemia vaccination. A pet moving to a new state is especially vulnerable to new germs. Be assured that the cat will adjust to the car once you have traveled far enough for him to realize that he is not headed for the vet's office.

Behavior change is one treatment for hypochondria

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Viewers of "Sanford and Son" will recall watching Redd Foxx clutch his chest nearly every week, groaning that he could feel the "big one" coming on. The "big one" was the heart attack he was sure would strike Fred Sanford dead.

But the sturdy junkyard dealer always survived for the next episode of the 1970s television sitcom until slipping viewer ratings delivered the "big one" that canceled the series.

Sanford, some would say, was a hypochondriac — someone who falsely believes he is suffering from a disease.

Hypochondria was diagnosed at least 2,000 years ago, yet there is no effective cure. Today, conservative estimates put the cost of testing and treating it at about $20 billion a year or about one-tenth of the average annual American medical bill.

In the past 25 years some new approaches have been tried. Jeffrey Levenkron, a clinical psychologist and director of the Stress Clinic at the University of Rochester's Pain Treatment Center, has found that behavior modification is helpful with many patients, some severely disabled.

Illness, says Levenkron, is a way of coping with situations individuals don't want to face. "If you're sick, people think you can't help it," he says. "They don't blame you for behaving in a way that they would find unacceptable if you could help it."

Enter a case of hypochondria. Levenkron tries to find what the patient is trying to escape and train him to face the problem.

Stress can also lead to hypochondria in some people, he says. These are people who are conscious of body sensations but who find it difficult to identify and describe the associated emotions. Though on the surface they seem well adapted, Levenkron says, they appear on closer inspection to act almost mechanically, as if following an instruction manual. Because they can't read feelings as signals of inner conflict or responses to external situations, they concentrate instead on the associated physical sensations, which they mistake as signs of disease.

Levenkron works to help such patients relieve tension through relaxation training and biofeedback, and he helps them associate experiences with emotional states they generate. For example, a shy person who must socialize for business reasons may suffer anxiety which creates the tension that gives him a headache.

Finally, he helps them get in touch with their emotions — both good and bad. "You can't exclude some emotions, especially the negative ones, without paying a price."

"It's like going to the dentist. You can get Novocaine to deaden the pain, but it will deaden all feeling. If you then went out to the most exquisite lobster dinner in the world, you couldn't enjoy it."

49ers, Broncos earn Super Bowl Trip

Montana, defense too much for Rams

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Football Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — On the third play from scrimmage, Joe Montana did the unthinkable. He threw a pass wide of Roger Craig. "Oh God, no," Montana said to himself. "Is this the way it's going to be?"

With Joe Montana? Of course not. Three hours later, Montana had finished a 30-3 NFC title game victory over the Los Angeles Rams with just three more incomplete passes — 26 of 30 for 262 yards were the precise totals — and the San Francisco 49ers were on their way to New Orleans.

There, in two weeks, they will meet Denver and attempt to assure their place in NFL history by becoming the first team in a decade to win two straight Super Bowls and emulate Pittsburgh's feat of four Super Bowls in a decade.

And despite a defense that shut down the Jim Everett-Henry Ellard-Flipper Anderson combination that nearly matched San Francisco's passing statistics, and the running of Craig and Tom Rathman, the day belonged to Montana.

In addition to his overwhelming completion and yardage numbers, Montana threw touchdown passes of 20 yards to Brent Jones and 18 to John Taylor. Montana was 12 of 14 for 156 yards in the second quarter alone, when the 49ers blew the game apart with 21 points to go off 21-3 at halftime.

So well did his offensive line protect him that even on a muddy field he hardly had a mark on him — the most visible was a hand print where a teammate had patted him in congratulation.

And the defense led by Ronnie Lott limited Everett, the league's third-rated passer to just 16 completions in 36 attempts for 141 yards while picking off three passes. In fact, San Francisco outgained Los Angeles 442-156.

"It was," said Rams coach John Robinson, "as good a performance as I've ever seen from a 49er team."

The victory seemed to put the 49ers, 14-2 in the regular season and now 16-2 after two playoff victories by a combined 71-16, in a class with the three NFC champions considered the best of the decade — the 49ers of 1984, the Chicago Bears of 1985 and the New York Giants of 1986. They all had Super Bowl walkovers, the 49ers 38-16 over Miami, the Bears 46-10 over New England and the Giants 39-20 over the Denver team San Francisco will face in two weeks.

Sunday's game, in fact, was supposed to be a test for the 49ers against a team it had split with during the regular season — the Rams won 13-12 at Candlestick Park and the 49ers had to come back from two 17-point deficits to win 30-27 at Anaheim Stadium.

It started like it might be. Mike Lansford's 23-yard field goal on the Rams' first possession gave them a 3-0 lead and it looked like it might be 10-0 later in the first quarter when Anderson broke wide open at the San Francisco 5 and Everett lofted the ball toward him. But the ball floated too much and Lott broke all the way across the field to knock it down.

"He could have put a little more zip on it," Robinson said of the pass and Anderson added: "Lott came out of nowhere. I thought it was a touchdown but the ball was in the air too long."

The only things in the air after that were Montana passes.

He hit Jones 3:33 into the second quarter at the end of an 89-yard, 13-play drive on which Montana went 5 for 5 for 67 yards. Tim McKyer's interception led to a 27-yard drive on which Craig, who finished with 93 yards in 22 carries went over from the 1 four minutes later.

Then came the killer — the 87-yard drive capped by Montana's TD pass to Taylor that made it 21-3 at halftime and left the outcome a foregone conclusion.

Montana was 8 of 10 for 90 yards on the drive, which included a 15-yard unsportsmanlike conduct penalty against the 49ers' Jesse Sapolu. It also was marked by two completions to Mike Sherrard, the first in three years for the one-time No. 1 draft choice of Dallas, who has been out since his rookie season with a leg broken twice.

"It seemed to put us on our heels," said cornerback LeRoy Irvin of the Rams, who made the playoffs as a wild-card team with a win in New England, then completed nearly 18,000 miles of travel with playoff victories over Philadelphia and the Giants. "Joe is one of the best at the two-minute offense," Irvin added.

And at just about everything else — he shut down a bit in the second half, when San Francisco settled for field goals of 28, 36 and 25 yards by Mike Cofer. Craig and Rathman, who had 63 yards in 10 carries, did the bulk of the work.

Elway rises to the occasion

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

DENVER (AP) — This time, it will be different. This time, there will be no Super Blowout.

At least that's what the Denver Broncos believe. Never mind that they are 0-3 in the Super Bowl — only the Minnesota Vikings are 0-4. Forget that the San Francisco 49ers are 3-0 in the big game — only Pittsburgh has won four — and have been overwhelming all season.

Who cares that the 49ers are 10-point favorites after they blew out the Los Angeles Rams 30-3 while the Broncos were beating the Cleveland Browns 37-21 Sunday in the championship games? Or that the decade's most successful Super Bowl team will face its biggest flop in the NFL title game?

"I think our past Super Bowl experience will help us this year," John Elway said after his greatest playoff effort — 20-for-36 for a career playoff-high 385 yards and three touchdowns.

He might need another one to reverse Denver's habit of flopping with the NFL crown on the line.

"I've just got to try and repeat today's performance two weeks from now," he said. "I'll give it everything I've got and leave everything on the field."

"This is a new year and a new team," insisted Sammy Winder, who came off the bench to score two touchdowns against the Browns in his final home game.

"This is the best Denver team I have been associated with," said five-year veteran Steve Sewell. "We can do more on offense and more on defense."

Indeed, the Broncos were the stingiest team in the AFC, allowing 226 points. And they found a running game behind rookie Bobby Humphrey, who had 1,151 yards this season.

"We have a great deal of confidence," Vance Johnson added following Denver's third AFC championship game victory over Cleveland in four years, "and we're going to be very tough to beat."

So, of course, will the 49ers, beaten only twice all season. But the Broncos have made San Francisco their patsy lately, winning four straight against the 49ers.

And the Browns have been Denver's patsy in the AFC title game. First, there was The Drive, followed by The Fumble. On Sunday, it was The Superstar, Elway, aided by The Substitute, Winder.

"John was unbelievable," said Coach Dan Reeves, headed for a record eighth Super Bowl — one as a player with Dallas, four as a Cowboys assistant coach and three as head man in Denver. "People don't realize how great an athlete he is."

The Browns certainly do. Every time they pressured Elway, he scrambled and found a receiver. His biggest such play came on a 70-yard touchdown pass to Michael Young, making it 10-0.

"Part of the defensive plan was to put a lot of pressure on Elway, the way you want to pressure any great quarterback," linebacker Clay Matthews said. "The pressure worked. We flushed him out of the pocket a few times."

"But being as great as he is, he managed to make the great plays even with the pressure on him. It was frustrating having guys breaking through, looking like they were ready to make a sack, but he'd slip away and complete a long pass on the run."

Elway also hit Young for a 53-yard gain that set up a 5-yard scoring pass to Orson Mobley in the third period. The other touchdown pass came on a 39-yarder to Winder, who replaced the injured Humphrey (two broken ribs) in the second quarter.

"Michael Young is a great player," Elway said of the Plan B free agent signee. "I had a lot of confidence in him going into today's game, but after his performance today, I have even more. He is a big part of this offense."

Winder decidedly was not this season. He rushed for 800 fewer yards than Humphrey and didn't expect much playing time Sunday.

But he made the best of his opportunity for the 76,046 fans — the 8-year veteran has said he will retire — with his TD catch after Cleveland pulled to 24-21, and a 9-yard scoring run.

It was yet another bitter defeat for the Browns, who have never been to the Super Bowl. Denver's defense held Bernie Kosar to 19-for-44 for 210 yards, three interceptions and sacked him four times. His only starring moments came on TD passes of 27 and 10 yards to Brian Brennan.

The other Browns TD was on a 2-yard run by Tim Manoa after Felix Wright return a fumble 27 yards to the 1.

"Much has been written about the Broncos' improved defense and they deserve credit for it," Kosar said.

District-leading Harvesters take on Borger

Pampa High School's basketball teams jump right back into action Tuesday night when they take on District 1-4A foe Borger at Tex Hanna Fieldhouse.

The Harvesters are fresh off a hard-fought victory over Levelland on Friday night. After trailing for much of the game, Pampa overtook the Lobos in the closing minutes for a thrilling, 59-53 win.

The Harvesters enter Tuesday's game with a perfect 7-0 record in district, two games ahead of Levelland and Lubbock Estacado, who are tied for second place with identical 5-2 records.

Borger is tied with Frenship for third, each with 4-3 marks. The Bulldogs are coming off a 55-54 victory over Hereford on Friday.

Tuesday's game signals the end of the first half of district play for both Pampa and Borger. The tipoff is set for approximately 8 p.m. in Borger.

The Lady Harvesters suffered a 57-27 loss to Levelland on Friday to run their record to 5-4 in district, 9-9 overall. They are all alone in fourth place in the league standings, one game ahead of Borger.

The Lady Bulldogs lost a close, 50-48 decision to Hereford on Friday to fall to 4-5 in district, 16-8 on the season.

The Pampa girls defeated Borger, 53-51, during the first half of district play on Nov. 28.

The game is scheduled to begin at 6:30 p.m.

Tickets for Tuesday's varsity basketball games in Borger went on sale this morning at 8:30 in the Pampa High School athletic building.

Only 500 tickets are being offered — 300 for students and 200 for adults.

NOTES:
 Δ Pampa High School's fall athletic banquet, originally scheduled for tonight at the Pampa Middle School Cafeteria, has been postponed indefinitely.

Δ Pampa High School athletic director Dennis Cavalier made the announcement Friday evening.

Δ The basketball teams of Clarendon College and Howard County College (in Big Spring) will square off tonight at McNeely Fieldhouse in Pampa.

Howard County enters the game ranked nationally and undefeated. The men's game will tip off at 8 p.m.. The women will play at 6 p.m.

The public is encouraged to attend. Admission is free.

Moon named Travelers NFL Man of the Year

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Warren Moon, quarterback for the Houston Oilers, has been named the 1989 Travelers NFL Man of the Year, the insurance company announced.

The Hartford-based Travelers Companies on Saturday announced the winner of the annual award, which honors an NFL player for demonstrating a balance of civic and professional responsibilities.

Moon will receive a $25,000 award from the Travelers. Moon said he will donate the money to the Crescent Moon Foundation, which Moon established last year to help disadvantaged youngsters and the homeless in Houston. The Travelers said in a press release.

"Winning The Travelers NFL Man of the Year Award is one of the greatest honors I have achieved because it recognizes a player's contributions to society and salutes the spirit of volunteerism," Moon said in the release.

In addition to his foundation, Moon works with the Kingdom Builders Community Center in Houston. He donated $200,000 to help construct the center, which supports small businesses, youth activities and the elderly.

Moon was chosen from a field of 28 nominees — one from each team — by a panel that included Secretary of Housing and Urban Development Jack Kemp, Travelers officials and sports writers across the country.

As the Oilers' quarterback, Moon has thrown for 18,300 yards and 101 touchdowns since 1984. Both totals are second only to George Blanda in the Houston record book.

He succeeds Steve Largent of the Seattle Seahawks as Travelers NFL Man of the Year.

Area gridder earn all-state recognition

Matt Martin of Canadian and Zach Thomas of White Deer are first-team defensive selections on the Texas Sports Writers Association all-state football team.

Martin, a 215-pound senior nose-guard, was a key player for the Wildcats, who went 9-2 this season and tied Quannah for the District 2-2A championship.

"Our defense was the reason we won most of our games and Matt was the catalyst. He's a very dedicated player because he's had to play hurt throughout his high school career," said Canadian coach Paul Wilson. Thomas, a 185-pound sophomore linebacker, was the only underclassman named to the Class 1A first team. Thomas, a two-year all-district pick, has been the team's leading tackler the past two seasons.

"Zach is definitely all-state caliber. He has the physical skills and knowledge, coupled with the intensity, to be that kind of player," said White Deer coach Dennis Carpenter.

Martin is a member of the Amarillo Globe-News Super Team. Thomas was the Super Team Newcomer of the Year in 1988.

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Credit 66-year-old Art Wall with an assist for the runaway triumph in the Tucson Open by first-time starter Robert Gamez.

Wall, the 1959 Masters champion who lives an hour's drive away, was offered a spot in the tournament field but declined and told tournament chairman Bud Corr "to give it to one of the kids."

And it was that spot, a sponsor's exemption, Corr said, that went to the 21-year-old Gamez, a former University of Arizona star not otherwise qualified for a place in the tournament field.

The youngster made the most of the opportunity, cruising to a four-shot triumph Sunday to become the first player since Ben Crenshaw in 1973 to score a victory in his first start as a member of the PGA Tour.

Gamez also had some help — unintentional help — from 14-year veteran Jay Haas and defending champion David Frost, Gamez' playing partners and closest pursuers over the final 18 holes.

"We couldn't put any pressure on him. He just kind of put it on coast," Haas said of the young man who passed up his final year at Arizona to join the pro tour.

"He's outstanding," Haas said. "He's a very decisive player. He doesn't stand around and toss grass. He knows what he wants to do and he does it."

Playing on the TPC at Star Pass, a rolling expanse of desert highland that served as his home course during his college days, Gamez took command with a two-stroke swing on the seventh hole.

A birdie by the rookie and bogeys by Frost and Haas gave Gamez a five-shot lead and shifted the pressure from him to the more-established players.

"We didn't make any birdies and he didn't make any mistakes, not until the last hole and by that time he certainly could afford it," Haas said.

No one got close. Frost began to hit it all over the desert. He took himself out of it when he put the ball in an unplayable position on the 15th. It led to a double bogey and took him out of contention.

Haas simply couldn't make a move. His putter wouldn't let him. He missed 6-foot putts on the 12th, 14th and 15th.

Gamez, with 18-year-old brother Randy serving as his caddy and parents Tony and Clara in the big, enthusiastic gallery of friends and former teammates, had a six-shot lead until he chipped up the final hole with a double bogey.

It may have been embarrassing, but it wasn't meaningful.

"I got to thinking about what winning would mean to me; put me in the Masters and the World Series and the invitationals," he said after completing the tournament in 270, 18 under par.

Foreman, Cooney bout tonight

By ED SCHUYLER JR.
AP Boxing Writer

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. — George Foreman decided a couple of years ago to practice what he preached.

"I tell people it's never too late to start all over again," said the former heavyweight champion who retired in 1977 and became an evangelist.

In 1987, Foreman, embarrassed by what he considered to be begging to obtain operating funds for his youth center in Houston, decided to resume boxing.

Foreman will make at least $1 million Monday night when he fights Gerry Cooney in a scheduled 10-round bout at the Convention Center. Cooney also will get $1 million.

Cooney retired after an inept performance in which he was knocked out in the fifth round by Michael Spinks on June 15, 1987.

He sees this fight not as a chance at redemption but as a fresh start. Pushed into boxing by a father he says he could never please, Cooney often worried about pleasing other people.

When he was stopped in the 13th round of a title bid against Larry Holmes in 1982, he grabbed the ring microphone and sobbed, "I'm sorry."

This time, he said, he's fighting for himself. New attitudes and past reputations, however, do not necessarily add up to a good fight.

Foreman vs. Cooney. Fight or farce? Critics note that Foreman, who will be 41 or 42 Jan. 22, depending to whom you talk, is too old to be engaging in a risk sport such as boxing. Cooney is 33.

It is a matchup that offends boxing purists — two aging fighters whose skills have had to suffer the erosion of time. To some, it smacks of the burlesque of professional wrestling.

Criticism has been a companion of Foreman since he began his comeback. He's been called too old to fight, while at the same time being criticized for not fighting tougher opponents.

Cooney is the best-knocked and, because of his punching power, also appears to be the most dangerous opponent for Foreman, who has a comeback record of 19-0, with 18 knockouts.

Of the criticism, Foreman said, "You've got to know yourself, enjoy yourself. Skepticism is a necessity, but I'm not going to be converted. I'm an optimist."

Anger was very much a part of the makeup of the George Foreman who was the heavyweight champion in 1973-74 before being stripped of his cloak of invincibility when he lost the title on an eighth-round knockout by Muhammad Ali in 1974.

Foreman retired after being knocked down and outpointed over 12 rounds by Jimmy Young on March 17, 1977, in Puerto Rico.

Foreman was hospitalized for heat exhaustion which, a physician said, caused him to hallucinate. Foreman saw it as a religious experience, retired from boxing and founded the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ at Houston. He continues to preach.

"This time around it is more of a pleasure," said Foreman, who often was sullen in his dealing with press and public when he was champion.

"One of my role models — now think about this — was Sonny Liston," Foreman said.

The late Sonny Liston, an ex-convict who became heavyweight champion, was a menacing figure.

Foreman recalled that Liston once asked him if he wanted to become champion and that he replied that he did.

"I thought he was going to give me some good advice," Foreman said, "but he told me, 'When you're champ you can spit on the sidewalk.'"

"I'm not in the anger thing anymore. I never throw a shot in anger. It's more of a competitive thing now. The idea is to win and it's easier to win by a knockout. I try to land a proper punch to get a knockout."

Brooding, not anger, was a hangup for Cooney.

"I've gotten rid of a lot of things that were holding me back," Cooney said.

He has a new manager in Tom Mara while remaining in litigation with former managers Mike Jones and Dennis Rappaport. Gil Clancy is training Cooney in place of Victor Valle, who publicly has accused Cooney of excessive drinking and dabbling in drugs.

Cooney said he hasn't touched drugs or alcohol for almost two years.
