County commissioners approve subsidy for employing of city marshal in Lefors

By BETH MILLER
Staff Writer

Gray County is to begin subsidizing the city of Lefors by $1,000 a month to provide law enforcement protection to the city as soon as a city marshal is hired.

At a regular meeting of the Gray County Commissioners' Court on Thursday, the group unanimously agreed to provide the $1,000 subsidy. The action came after a Texas Legislative Council decision was sought on the legality of the matter following a Jan. 15 meeting.

According to a Jan. 31 letter sent to State Rep. Warren Chisum, it was the opinion of the Texas Legislative Council that the contributing to the salary of a city marshal by Gray County is legal.

"The Interlocal Cooperation Act, enacted in 1971 ... permits various local governments, including cities and counties, to contract among themselves for the performance of governmental functions and services of mutual concern," the letter stated.

The letter went on to state that Subsection 3(2) of the Act defines governmental functions and services to include "police protection and detention services."

"Thus the Act authorizes a city to agree to provide to a county law enforcement services through the city marshal. Payments made by the county to the city for those services must be equivalent to the value of the services," the letter states.

The city of Lefors, through Mayor Gene Gee, and a Lefors contingent had first brought the issue of needing help regarding law enforcement at a Jan. 2 Commissioners' Court meeting. The ideal situation, Gee told the Commissioners' Court at that meeting, would be to have a full-time deputy stationed at Lefors and for the city to continue with its part-time city marshal position.

However, the county was looking at a $25,000 a year expenditure for an additional full-time deputy, and to cut costs proposed the $1,000 a month subsidy.

The city of Lefors has had problems retaining a city marshal, due to the small salary the city pays. It can afford only $600 a month, Gee said, for a part-time position. A city marshal must be a certified law enforcement officer and most with that training cannot afford to work for only $600 a month. Lefors has been without a city marshal for about 120 days, when the last marshal resigned.

Precinct 1 Commissioner Joe Wheeley, who sought the Legislative Council opinion, said Thursday, "We realize the need in Lefors for full-time law enforcement to be represented there, especially at night."

Wheeley said he believed the subsidy would help both the county and Lefors, since it would not require the county to have an additional $25,000 a year expense and would allow Lefors to retain control of its law enforcement. The salary for the city marshal would be $1,600 a month under the plan.

Mayor Gee said at Thursday's meeting, "The city

De Klerk agrees to legalize African National Congress

By BARRY RENFREW
Associated Press Writer

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — President F.W. de Klerk today legalized the African National Congress after three decades of guerrilla war against white rule and said imprisoned activist Nelson Mandela will soon be freed.

Thousands of blacks surged into the streets to celebrate the legalization of the ANC, a milestone in their epic struggle for change. Black activists greeted de Klerk's bold stroke with jubilation, but pressed him to go further and completely scrap the system of racial apartheid.

"The season of violence is over. The time for reconstruction and reconciliation has arrived," de Klerk said.

The ANC said de Klerk's speech "goes a long way to creating the climate conducive to negotiations," but did not indicate immediately how soon its exiled leaders would return home and begin legal political activity.

De Klerk announced the ANC's legalization in a watershed speech opening a new session of Parliament. He said he would lift bans or restrictions on more than 60 other opposition groups, free most prisoners jailed for belonging to these groups, declare a moratorium on executions, and scrap most of the restrictions imposed during more than three years of a state of emergency.

These were the principal steps demanded by Mandela and the ANC as conditions for negotiations on a new constitution that would end the black majority's exclusion from national politics. De Klerk's announcements, reversing decades of National Party policy, set the stage for such talks to begin, probably with the government accepting Mandela's offer to serve as mediator.

Despite the jubilation unleashed by de Klerk's pronouncement, it makes no immediate change in the system of apartheid that establishes a racially segregated society in which the 28 million blacks have no vote in national affairs. The 5 million whites continue to control the economy and maintain separate districts, schools and health services.

In his speech, de Klerk said the alternative to negotiations "is growing violence, tension and conflicts."

The president declined to give details on what the government's position would be in negotiations. Government spokesmen would not comment on whether the administration was ready to abolish major apartheid laws, saying that would have to wait for formal talks.

Foreign Minister Pik Botha said negotiations can begin any time. "As far as we're concerned, we've removed the obstacles," he said today on ABC television's Good Morning America.

Mandela, 71, has been jailed since 1962 and is serving a life sentence for helping plan the start of the ANC's sabotage and bombing campaign. He has met with de Klerk, other government officials and anti-apartheid leaders over the past several months in talks aimed at clearing the way for negotiations.

De Klerk said "personal circumstances and safety" were among the factors affecting Mandela's release date.

"I want to put it plainly that the government has decided to release Nelson Mandela unconditionally," he said. "The government will take a decision soon on the date of his release. Unfortunately, a further short passage of time is unavoidable."

At the perimeter of the parliamentary complex, 5,000 demonstrators, many chanting "ANC, ANC,"

County awards law officers insurance bid

By BETH MILLER
Staff Writer

Gray County Commissioners' Court on Thursday awarded a bid to the Texas Association of Counties for law enforcement officers professional liability insurance coverage.

The action joins Gray County in a pool with about half of the state's counties — or 117 — in seeking the insurance coverage. Precinct 4 Commissioner Ted Simmons, a member of the TAC board, urged the Commissioners' Court to go with TAC's bid.

Simmons said Thursday at the meeting, "I'm on that board."

He disputed claims from another insurance agent present at the meeting that since TAC is only three years old, it might not be stable and could go under in years to come, leaving counties in a bind.

"I'm on that board and I think they're increasing and getting better every year. This is just now getting off the ground, and I think the more counties participate the stronger it's going to be," Simmons said.

Three companies, including TAC, presented bids to the Commissioners' Court.

Service Insurance Agency presented a bid of $8,604.19 for the coverage, including a $15,000 retention for each loss. A retention was explained as much like a deductible. The bid had a $1 million policy limit.

Duncan Insurance Agency presented several different options with the main one considered by the Commissioners' Court being a bid of $20,956 plus a $140 engineering fee, a $5,000 deductible and $1 million in coverage.

The bid by TAC unanimously awarded by the Commissioners' Court was for $11,878 with $2 million coverage and a $5,000 deductible.

Kevin Mabus, field representative with Markel Service Inc. and representing National Casualty Co., said the bid by Duncan was the only one that was an "occurrence policy." The others are "claims-made" policies, he said.

Mabus explained that an occurrence policy covers everything that occurs in the year the company has the contract, regardless of when it is reported. A claims-made policy only covers those claims reported during the year of the insurance contract.

He said the danger of going with a claims-made policy is that the county would be "locked in" to that coverage from now on if it wanted to be covered for prior years. An additional premium would be added each year to cover the past year, he said.

Greenhouse effect: Something in the future, or something to worry about now?

Editor's Note: This is the last in a six-day series on the environment, which promises to be a leading public forum issue in the new decade. Today's story focuses on the greenhouse effect.

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

It's called the greenhouse effect, and while lots of people talk about it, very few are sure what its long-term results could be on the earth.

Unchecked, scientists predict, the temperature on earth to just the right level to maintain life.

Without some greenhouse effect, the earth would be a ball of ice floating through space.

But too many greenhouse gases in the environment cause heating that can drastically affect rainfall levels, oceanic patterns, smog levels and other weather extremes, scientists claim.

Dr. Robert Sawvell of West Texas State University said while he is opposed to "horror story" tales, he believes residents of planet earth must deal responsibly with the gases they pump into the environment.

Those gases include carbon monoxide, methane and hydrocarbons and are produced by the burning of carbon-based fuels from gasoline to wood. A less prominent gas is fluorocarbon, which comes from spray cans and such appliances as air conditioners.

"This is a long-term thing," Sawvell said. "Since it has been sprung on us in the last few years, we tend to think it's new. It's not. We just didn't have so many people to put gases into the air."

Like virtually every scientist in the world studying greenhouse effect, Sawvell noted that the massive burning of the Brazilian rain forests is a primary contributor to a greenhouse effect crisis.

"The wilderness is 60 percent of that country," Sawvell said. "They've made a choice that is good for their economy but bad for the environment."

Estimates on how quickly the rain forest is being burned off for development of cities and industry range from 30,000 to 80,000 acres a day.

Environmentalists blame the World Bank for encouraging the destruction with massive loans for development. However, representatives of the Brazilian Embassy in Washington said in a brief, prepared statement, that the matter was an internal one that does not concern the United States.

Sawvell said he understands that kind of reasoning.

"Nobody was telling us to stop burning off the forests when we were clearing the eastern United States, and if they had, we would have laughed at them," he said. "We have to offer them alternatives and we're not prepared to do that."

Dave Ryan of the Environmental Protection Agency said, "They may say it's an internal issue, but the results are not internal. The results are not internal."

the greenhouse effect could lead to a heating of the earth to such extremes that life on the surface is virtually unbearable.

The phenomenon is naturally occurring through incidents such as volcanic eruptions or wild fires, where carbon dioxide is released into the atmosphere. It acts like the glass of a greenhouse, amplifying the sun's rays.

Robert James Bidinotto, writing in this month's Reader's Digest, explains that under natural conditions the greenhouse effect brings Sawvell said some of the worst-case scenarios environmentalists offer up are "to pressure us. We only respond under pressure."

That is especially true in this region, where, as one city manager recently pointed out, "We tend to think we live on Planet Panhandle."

Since there are any number of "easy" things that can be done to curb greenhouse effect, Sawvell said it is important to see them carried out before "it comes to enacting the hard things."

Easy things would include using a landfill instead of burning trash and making a solid switch to non-fluorocarbon spray cans.

Pat Bragan of the Texas Air Control Board said concern for the environment and greenhouse must be considered a long-term commitment.

"You want to maintain your status of clean air," Bragan said. "Even though emissions may not accumulate here, they contribute to pollution other places."

While she admitted the TACB is not worried about why the Environmental Protection Agency does what it does or the philosophies behind reducing greenhouse, Bragan said her agency will enforce whatever rules the federal government gives them.

"EPA just banned the outdoor burning of waste. The incinerators in Hereford and Dumas were shut down," she said. "It was part of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act."

Search continues for missing plane in Oklahoma

ARDMORE, Okla. (AP) — Authorities say they haven't given up hope, but it's likely that a missing plane carrying four people, including two children of 3rd District congressional candidate Bill Brewster, crashed somewhere on its way to Ardmore.

"We feel we've checked all the airports that they could have landed at — unless they went way out of their way," Trooper Rick Robinson, a spokesman for the Oklahoma Highway Patrol, said Thursday. "It is likely (that the plane crashed), but there's the possibility the plane landed in a field someplace."

The rented 1968 Cherokee Piper 6, which left McAlester about 7:30 p.m. Wednesday bound for Ardmore, has been missing since late Wednesday night, authorities said.

Highway Patrol Lt. Byron Lamb said the search for the plane would resume at about 7 a.m. today.

"We've been unsuccessful today," Lamb said Thursday evening. "We're going to call it off for the evening because of darkness, and resume in the morning."

Poor weather early Thursday made difficult an aerial search near the Ardmore area, where the plane was headed when it disappeared. When planes and helicopters finally got off the ground by early afternoon to search, precious daylight hours had been lost, officials said.

Robinson said Highway Patrol and National Guard helicopters and several search planes were on the scene.

Teams of law enforcement officers, dispatched from a command post in Ardmore, searched for the plane from the ground early Thursday.

"Mostly what we've got to do at this point in time is locate the aircraft, which can be done more efficiently in the air," Robinson said.

The Highway Patrol, the Civil Air Patrol, the National Guard and local sheriffs and police departments joined in the ground search.

De Klerk

joined a march demanding Mandela's release.

When news of de Klerk's speech reached them, the crowd cheered. Mandela's wife, Winnie, said the legalization of banned groups "is simply a recipe for further problems" unless additional changes were made. But Popo Molefe, a prominent anti-apartheid leader, said de Klerk "has emerged as the most courageous" of all of South Africa's white leaders.

The Rev. Frank Chikane, a black who heads the militantly anti-apartheid South African Council of Churches, said he welcomed the speech "with enthusiasm." He said, "We must now move immediately towards genuine negotiations."

In Washington, the White House hailed the decision to free Mandela and called for his release "as soon as possible." Presidential press secretary Marlin Fitzwater also praised the ANC's legalization. "They are both positive steps," he said.

The groups to be legalized, in addition to the ANC, include the smaller Pan Africanist Congress guerrilla movement, the South African Communist Party and the United Democratic Front, a nationwide anti-apartheid coalition which recently declared it would defy 2-year-old restrictions on it.

De Klerk also announced he was lifting restrictions imposed on 374 activists following their release from detention.

He said emergency restrictions on the media would be removed completely, and state-of-emergency detentions would be limited to a maximum of six months.

at Coronado Hospital during treatment for the cut.

Hall explained that Broadbent lay on the top bunk of a bed rack to reach the ceiling. He said Broadbent was the only prisoner in the cell during both incidents.

"He was transferred from city to county jail to a more secure cell," Hall said.

Bond on the three charges against Broadbent had not been set through press time today.

In an unrelated case, an 11-year-old black girl told police Thursday night that a white adult male had threatened to kill her and chased her across the playground at Baker Elementary around 8:15 p.m.

Hall said the child was crossing the playground by herself on the way to a friend's house.

"She said a white male hollered at her and said he would kill her," Hall stated. "She ran away from him, and when she got to the friend's house, the police were called."

Police said no suspects had been identified in the case and that they were unaware of anyone routinely making threats of that nature to children in the city.

Consumer advocates say Bell settlement should lower local service rates

By PEGGY FIKAC
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — The state-paid advocate for utility consumers says any settlement of Southwestern Bell's rate case should lower basic local service rates because those charges are the highest on average in Texas.

"The only way to put the money back in the hands of the people of Texas directly and fairly is to reduce the basic local service charges," said Public Utility Counsel C. Kingsbery Ottmers, who represents residential and small commercial customers at the Public Utility Commission.

"I believe every single consumer should receive a rate reduction from Southwestern Bell," Ms. Ottmers said Thursday.

But Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. spokesman Bob Digneo disputed Ottmers' figures, saying she didn't take into account additional charges paid by residential customers of local telephone companies other than Southwestern Bell.

"We believe that those (local) rates are already well below the national average," he said. "Basic local service is a bargain. It doesn't come close to paying for itself."

Ottmers was backed by consumer groups — including the American Association of Retired Persons, Consumers Union, Gray Panthers and a coalition of about 80 cities — in opposing a proposed settlement being negotiated by the PUC staff, Southwestern Bell and other parties, including a number of cities and long-distance telephone companies.

The proposal would reduce customer rates overall by $1.2 billion over four years, freezing local rates but reducing such items as the rates long-distance companies pay for access to Southwestern Bell's network.

Ottmers said that in cases involving GTE Southwest Inc., Contel, Centel and United, residential rates for local service have been lowered after a public hearing or through negotiations.

But Digneo said Ottmers made an "apples to watermelons comparison" between Southwestern Bell's rates and those of other companies.

For example, Southwestern Bell's average residential charge for local service of $9.70 was compared to GTE's $7.37 charge. Digneo said the GTE rate cited by Ottmers doesn't include a mandatory extended area service charge paid by GTE customers living in suburbs outside metropolitan areas.

For a Plano GTE customer with the ability to call Dallas, that would mean a total monthly charge of $14.75, compared to a $10.40 charge for a Southwestern Bell customer in Dallas, Digneo said. The charge is necessary for other companies to gain access to Southwestern Bell's network in the cities.

Ottmers acknowledged the discrepancy, but said that there are different charges for mandatory extended area service and that the average holds true in areas without such service, such as San Angelo. She asserted that when comparing Texas rates to those of other states, Southwestern Bell and the PUC staff "compare apples to watermelons also."

"No two telephone companies have the same demographics, in terms of customer service, consumers," said Bob Orozco, PUC executive director.

Orozco said special interest groups are charged with lobbying for the groups they represent, while the PUC must consider the best interests of all consumers as well as the utility.

"It is their job to advocate their position for their constituents and I think they do so quite well," Orozco said.

Parties in Southwestern Bell's rate case have until 4 p.m. Friday to reach a settlement, or a hearing will begin Monday in the case. If an agreement is reached among some parties but not others, the partial settlement will be part of a hearing process.

Lefors school trustees study proposed improvements

By BETH MILLER
Staff Writer

LEFORS — Lefors Independent School District Board of Trustees were given "wish lists" of teachers and administrators in the district at a special meeting Thursday night and a proposal of how to finance the proposed improvements.

Business Manager Jimmy Butler said the state school districts have at their disposal a Capital Acquisition Program (CAP). School districts are pooled throughout the program to make a substantial bond issue, making it cost effective for the school districts.

Only certain items can be financed through CAP. They include air-conditioning and heating units, athletic equipment, audiovisual equipment, automotive vehicles, band instruments and uniforms, buses, cabinets, cafeteria equipment, classroom equipment, computers, copiers, data processing equipment, energy management systems, fire extinguishers, furniture, library books, maintenance equipment, music, office equipment, relocatable buildings, science equipment, security systems, stage systems and telecommunications systems.

At the end of last year, about 95 school districts were participating in CAP, according to a program update.

Butler said that once a school district is accepted into the program and receives its money, the district has six months to make the first expenditure, with the last expenditure made within three years. However, any money not used can be applied to the principal.

Superintendent Ed Gilliland said, "It's still a bond and you still pay money back, but you do not go and put it on a vote."

Butler said it is estimated the district would pay a 6.27 fixed interest rate on any money received.

Thursday's special meeting was set to bring the CAP idea before the school board so it could study the issue and make a decision at the next meeting on Feb. 13. To be on the next bond issue, the paperwork would have to be in Austin by March 1, Butler said.

Items at Lefors ISD suggested for purchase under a CAP program include computers, student desks, audiovisual equipment, a drawing table, science laboratory equipment and athletic equipment. Gilliland said any items could be added or deleted by decision of the school board.

"When you go into the program you tell them basically what you'll spend the money on," Butler said. "And they tell you the term they will finance."

In other business, the school board:

- Unanimously approved a color design on a new activity bus to be purchased. The design was submitted by Gene Gee, a teacher in the Lefors ISD and mayor of Lefors.
- Discussed the 1990-91 budget and finance issues.

All board members were present for the two-hour meeting.

Gorbachev's summit meeting proposal gets qualified approval

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's proposal for a 35-nation summit meeting next year now has the qualified approval of the Bush administration — provided a treaty is completed to reduce troops and tanks in Europe.

Secretary of State James A. Baker III told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on Thursday the summit could be the forum for signing the treaty and also provide a framework to deal with the question of German reunification.

But he said the Soviets first must agree to the principle that free elections are a human right.

A treaty to reduce NATO and Warsaw Pact troops and non-nuclear weapons in Europe is nearing completion in Vienna. However, Baker said there is disagreement on how to deal with combat aircraft and helicopters.

The Soviets insist that some of the planes the West wants to restrict are defensive in mission and should be excluded from limits.

President Bush's proposal on Wednesday night for deeper cuts also could complicate completion of the pact.

The 35-nation conference would bring together the United States, Canada, the Soviet Union, the Vatican and all the countries of Europe except Albania. The same 35 signed the Helsinki agreement of 1975 that promoted human rights and, in effect, recognized the post-World War II borders of Europe.

Sen. Joseph D. Biden Jr., D-DeL.,

had urged the Bush administration to accept Gorbachev's proposal.

"If we don't provide a framework that accommodates East and West German concerns to resolve the unification issue, events could seize the day," Biden said.

The senator earlier had urged the Bush administration to accept Gorbachev's offer and to use the 35-nation conference to discuss further cuts in troops and weapons, the German question and a timetable for the removal of all foreign forces from Europe.

Baker will hold talks next Thursday and Friday in Moscow with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze and possibly Gorbachev. His endorsement of the summit proposal — although qualified — represented another attempt by the Bush administration to back the Soviet leader.

Also, U.S. officials are trying to develop a strategy for dealing with the German issue.

On Tuesday, Gorbachev appeared to soften the Soviets' longstanding opposition to reunification. "It is essential to act responsibly and not seek the solution to this important issue on the streets," the Soviet leader said during a visit to Moscow by Hans Modrow, the East German premier.

Baker said the prospect of a 35-nation summit could serve as "a carrot" to encourage completion by NATO and the Warsaw Pact of a treaty this year to reduce troops and weapons in Europe.

The treaty would set a ceiling of 275,000 for U.S. and Soviet soldiers on foreign soil.

Residents say water well contaminated

MIDLAND (AP) — State health and environmental specialists are studying a site just south of Midland where residents believe the cancer rate is abnormally high.

Some residents of the unincorporated area, south of Interstate 20 and just outside Midland city limits, think their well water might be contaminated with the same toxic chemicals that are polluting wells just north of I-20 in Midland.

But the 500 to 1,000 residents of the 2-square-mile area probably are not suffering high rates of cancer and diseases of the liver and kidneys, said state Health Department epidemiologist Dr. Carl Torres. Instead, he said, the people simply are more aware of environmental hazards.

Nevertheless, Torres said Tuesday his office will study the results of a door-to-door survey by residents and college students to document the incidence of cancer and of problems affecting the liver and kidneys.

Residents say they know of eight leukemia deaths and 40 cancer deaths in the past 10 years.

"We have a high index of cancer here," said Lillian Smith, a retired medical doctor who moved from Houston 13 years ago. "There has to be a reason."

Ralph Johnson of the Texas Water Commission's Odessa field office met with Ms. Smith and other residents Thursday and gathered well water samples to test for pollutants.

Residents draw their water from private wells. Fears of poisoned wells have been fueled since the Jan. 10 announcement by Dowell Schlumberger, an oil field service company, that it had found industrial solvents in water wells surrounding its plant just north of I-20. The company is developing a cleanup plan.

Two of the chemicals found — 1,2-dichloroethane and carbon tetrachloride — exceeded Environmental Protection Agency standards for drinking water in some wells sampled, said Larry Mitchell of the Texas Health Department.

Both chemicals cause cancer in laboratory animals and are classified as potential human carcinogens. If swallowed, they can damage the liver, kidneys and nervous system.

OCAW reaches agreement with Amoco

DENVER (AP) — The oil workers union reached a tentative agreement with Amoco Corp. that is expected to pave the way for negotiations with the oil industry nationwide.

The offer was presented to union representatives Thursday at various Amoco refineries. The Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers International Union represents about 40,000 workers, including about 4,500 employed by Amoco.

Strikes at individual oil companies had been a possibility since midnight Wednesday, with the expiration of some 300 contracts between oil companies and the union.

Union leaders never planned a nationwide walkout, but said they might strike individual companies.

Amoco spokesman Mike Thompson confirmed from Chicago that a tentative agreement for a new three-year labor contract has been reached at at least two Amoco refineries in Casper, Wyoming, and Yorktown, Virginia.

Union Vice President Robert Wages said he expects the Amoco offer providing a general wage increase of $2.36 per hour over three years to set a pattern for the current round of negotiations with the oil industry.

The contract calls for an imme-diated 80-cent-per-hour wage increase, a 5.3 percent hike based on the refinery worker's current average pay of $15.18 per hour.

Amoco agreed to increase its contribution to health care premiums by $55 per month for family coverage in the first year. The company will add an additional $45 a month in the second year of the agreement and another $50 in the third year.

A $250,000 death benefit for workers killed in work-related accidents also was negotiated into the contract.

Amoco agreed to provide up to 26 weeks of full pay for workers absent due to occupational illness or injury, and an additional 26 weeks at half pay.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Opinion

One less death squad would aid El Salvador

Through the past decade the people of El Salvador have suffered through two scourges: the FMLN communist terrorists, financed and armed by the Soviet Union, Cuba and the Nicaraguan Sandinistas; and the esquadrones de muerte, the death squads. The FMLN was dealt a serious blow last fall when its offensive failed. And the collapse of communism around the world also mean that its ideology has lost most of its force.

Unfortunately, the death squads will not be so easy to deal with. They are often called "right-wing death squads," even though the thugs that run them hardly have any political principles above power and murder.

For 10 years the death squads have murdered with impunity. Most of their members are former or current members of the Salvadoran military. As such, the civilian government, which heavily depends on the military, has always been reluctant to prosecute suspected death squad killers.

But last month the government of President Alfredo Cristiani arrested four officers and four soldiers in connection with the murder of six Jesuit priests, their housekeeper and her daughter, on Nov. 16, during the middle of the FMLN terrorist offensive. The top officer detained is Colonel Guillermo Alfredo Benavides, former head of Salvadoran military intelligence and the commander of its military school.

The killings were apparently in retaliation for FMLN attacks on members of the government, including the assassination of nine Salvadoran mayors. But the retaliation was both a brutal murder and a severe blow to the Cristiani government's legitimacy. Ironically, the top priest murdered, Fr. Ignacio Ellacuria, had recently shifted from supporting the FMLN terrorists to urging their disarmament.

Two recent developments will advance the chances that, this time, the esquadrones de muerte will finally be brought to justice. First is the decreased power of the FMLN. In the past, the Salvadoran military could always maintain that prosecuting death squad members would hurt military morale and thereby damage the war against the FMLN. But as communism declines everywhere, including in Latin America, this no longer is a credible claim.

Second, the march of democracy throughout Latin America provides a strong bulwark against any coup the military, allied with extremist members of Cristiani's ARENA Party, might contemplate to sabotage vigorous prosecution of the death squads. Even Chile's Gen. Augusto Pinochet has given up power. The only dictatorships remaining in Latin America are the FMLN's communist supporters in Havana and Managua, themselves standing a good chance of going the way of the late Nicolae Ceausescu's regime.

The threat of war remains in El Salvador. The FMLN isn't dead yet. But the Cristiani government can now best advance its legitimacy by vigorously pursuing justice of all victims of the death squads. A decade of bullet-riddled corpses from the esquadrones de muerte is too much.

He got what he asked for ...

WASHINGTON — On Jan. 11, The Wall Street Journal went into editorial lamentations over the case of John Pozsgai, who had been sentenced to three years in prison and fined $202,000 for violating the wetlands provisions of the federal Clean Water Act. On Jan. 12, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 3rd Circuit upheld the sentence. Thereby hangs this tale.

To the Journal, Pozsgai was a "flabbergasted truck mechanic" who discovered to his sorrow "how little regard the Environmental Protection Agency has for property rights." The Journal depicted Pozsgai as a hardworking immigrant who sought only to improve an illegal dump next to his home. Poor abused, mistreated Mr. Pozsgai! He could be forgiven "for wondering why he ever fled communist Hungary in 1956."

Balderdash! The Journal's indignation should be focused on a better cause. The only flabbergasting aspect of this case can be found in the defendant's flabbergasting contempt for the law.

Back in October 1986, when the chronology begins, Pozsgai was operating his diesel truck-repair business on West Bridge Street in Morrisville, Bucks County, Pa. He wanted to expand by purchasing an adjoining 14-acre tract. Douglas Mason, the real estate broker representing the owner, gave Pozsgai the first of a dozen warnings he would receive: The property probably was a protected "wetland" that could not be developed.

Pozsgai consulted three engineering firms. They confirmed Mason's opinion: The tract was indeed a wetland. They told him he could not fill it without getting a permit from the Army Corps of Engineers. Pozsgai paid no attention. He began to deposit fill, even though he didn't own the land.

In April 1987, Martin Miller, an inspector for the corps, learned of the fill operation. He examined the site and found typical wetlands vegetation. Soil borings and hydrological tests were positive. On April 29, Miller advised Pozsgai that he could not continue to fill without permission. The advice was ignored.

The record shows that Miller repeated his warnings on May 14. The warnings had no effect. On June 19, Pozsgai bought the property at a reduced price (because of the wetlands determination). Miller came back on Aug. 17 and saw that additional fill had been deposited.

On Sept. 3, the Corps of Engineers issued a formal cease and desist order. Pozsgai ignored the order. On Dec. 2, the EPA issued a written notice. Pozsgai ignored the notice. On Dec. 17, the corps filed a notice of violation. Pozsgai ignored this notice also.

Seven months passed in which the owner made no attempt to apply for the necessary permits. The violations continued, and meanwhile adjoining properties began to suffer flood waters. The natural drainage into the Pennsylvania Canal had been disturbed.

On Aug. 24, 1988, the Department of Justice concluded that this defiance had gone on long enough. The government obtained a court order directing Pozsgai immediately to cease and desist his fill operation.

On the very next day, Pozsgai was back at his forbidden task. An indignant neighbor, Joan Sevits, allowed EPA agents to install video equipment in her home. Over the next 10 days the camera documented 32 violations of the order. Chief District Judge John P. Fullam imposed a fine of $5,000 for contempt of court.

Indicted on 40 counts of unlawfully destroying protected wetlands, Pozsgai went on trial before a jury. The evidence against him was overwhelming. He challenged the Clean Water Act as an unconstitutional abridgement of his property rights; he complained on appeal of ineffective counsel; he sought to show that the property was not a wetland after all.

In a presentence report, the U.S. probation officer described the defendant as a stubborn man: "No one, not even the government, will tell him what to do." The U.S. attorney "strongly recommended" a prison sentence because of Pozsgai's blatant disregard of the law. "The defendant is a willful and knowing criminal to the environment."

So much for the Journal's poor little flabbergasted immigrant.

This correspondent knows enough of bureaucracy to know that bureaucrats sometimes abuse their power. The wetlands provisions of the Clean Water Act are not models of draftsmanship.

There are ambiguities that need better definition. But protection of our remaining wetlands is absolutely vital to the national ecology, and in this case there was no abuse. Pozsgai went looking for trouble. He got what he asked for.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Friday, Feb. 2, the 33rd day of 1990. There are 332 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Feb. 2, 1653, New Amsterdam — now New York City — was incorporated.

On this date:

In 1536, the Argentine city of Buenos Aires was founded by Pedro de Mendoza of Spain.

In 1848, the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, ending the Mexican War, was signed.

In 1870, the "Cardiff Giant," supposedly the petrified remains of a human being discovered on a farm in Cardiff, N.Y., was revealed to be nothing more than carved gypsum.

In 1876, the National League of Professional Base Ball Clubs was formed in New York.

In 1882, the Irish poet and novelist James Joyce was born near Dublin.

In 1893, the first motion-picture close-up was filmed at the Edison studio in West Orange, N.J., as cameraman William Dickson photographed comedian Fred Ott sneezing.

In 1912, Frederick R. Law jumped with a parachute from the torch of the Statue of Liberty in a stunt filmed by Pathe News.

In 1943, the remainder of Nazi forces from the Battle of Stalingrad, surrendered in a major victory for the Soviets in World War II.

Japanese share their prosperity

During the 1960s our nation's industrial Northeast was throttled by escalating union demands for more pay for less work. One after another, industries began moving to the West and South.

In the West and South those industries found men and women — many from farms — eager and willing to work harder, longer and for less.

And thus those businesses were able to become competitive again.

This is the opportunity that the Japanese may now see and seize in Eastern Europe.

The Japanese will be unable to buy property in those countries as casually as they have bought up real estate in the United States.

Paul Harvey

But it's noteworthy that when the Japanese buy a chunk of Hawaii, they don't put up a billboard reading, "God bless Japan!"

Instead, smiling all the while, they pass the word around that, "This corner would be a nice place for your Tastee Freeze."

And thus the Japanese encourage prosperity while — as landlords — they share it.

In Eastern Europe the laws that now limit foreign investment will soon be modified.

Lech Walesa, during his visit to the United States, urged American businesses to get involved in his country.

The Japanese, recognizing this, are quietly, efficiently moving all over the world to generate prosperity and share the profits.

Will Soviet Union be next to topple?

By WILLIAM A. RUSHER

Having seen the Soviet Union's East European satellites topple their communist regimes and opt for democracy and free enterprise one after another, it is only natural for us to wonder if the Soviet Union itself will be next.

It certainly seems inconsistent for Mikhail Gorbachev to insist on a double standard, actively encouraging rebellions in the satellite states while demanding different rules and results in the Soviet Union.

His actions in Eastern Europe, astonishing as they were, are at least consistent. Clearly, Gorbachev, for whatever reason — probably the desperate weakness of the Soviet economy — decided to write off the communist regimes of Eastern Europe and save himself the cost of subsidizing them.

But where the Soviet Union itself is concerned, Gorbachev's enthusiasm for reform has much narrower limits. He has allowed quite a lot of glasnost, or open discussion, and a fair amount of perestroika, or actual economic restructuring. What he seems to be aiming at is a society that is half communist and half capitalist — "communism," you might say (or "capitanism") — in which the rewards of a free market will somehow be available to spur to greater productivity in an economy still basically state-controlled.

Meanwhile, the constituent republics of the Soviet Union, including the Baltic states, which not long ago were independent, and Ukraine, which is culturally quite distinct, must apparently accept that independence isn't in the cards for them.

And the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, of which President Gorbachev is the general secretary, will remain, for the indefinite future, the sole leading force in the Soviet state and society.

Can he get away with it? I very much doubt it. What's sauce for the Hungarian goose is sauce for the Lithuanian or Ukrainian gander. The distinction may be clear to Gorbachev, but it is thoroughly obscure to others. But if we assume that pressures for radical change are therefore likely to continue to mount in the Soviet Union, and eventually become overwhelming, will the scenario follow the East European model?

Will there be huge rallies for freedom in Red Square? Will the Red Army refuse to shoot at the demonstrators, and join them? Will some dissident political figure like Boris Yeltsin replace Gorbachev and push hard for genuine economic and political freedom?

According to all reports, Yeltsin is a popular man in Moscow, so he ought not to be counted out (despite that recent curious episode in which he admitted he had falsely reported being kidnapped and dumped in a river.) But, again based on the reports of first-hand observers, the Russian masses don't yet seem ready to rebel — for freedom.

The Russians have virtually no experience of democracy and almost equally little of free enterprise. They are, however, among the world's foremost authorities on long lines and empty store shelves, and that is what is behind most of the current unrest in the Soviet Union.

It is possible, therefore, that they might rebel enthusiastically in favor of some demagogue who promised them an avalanche of consumer goods.

Moreover, everyone now alive in the Soviet Union has grown up under a regime that taught them that individual profit of any type is affirmatively evil. They are far more likely to be jealous of a successful free-market businessman than eager to follow his example.

In short, Gorbachev is almost certainly not going to be able to keep the lid on the Soviet Union while tossing it joyfully into the air everywhere else. But the ensuing disruptions in the Soviet Union, fueled by the jealousies and hostilities of a long-deprived and hungry people, make it possible that his successor will be someone we will find notably less agreeable than the new leaders of Eastern Europe.

South Dakota proclaims Year of Reconciliation with its Indian residents

By CHET BROKAW
Associated Press Writer

PIERRE, S.D. (AP) — Gov. George Mickelson, recognizing the historical hurt suffered by Indians, smoked a peace pipe with tribal leaders and proclaimed a year of reconciliation in 1990, a century after the Wounded Knee massacre.

The governor and representatives of eight Sioux tribes drew deeply and passed the pipe Thursday as they sat in a circle around a buffalo skull and other items in the center of the state Capitol rotunda.

The members of the South Dakota Legislature and hundreds of other spectators applauded as Mickelson and the tribal leaders completed the ceremony.

They then signed a proclamation designating 1990 as a time for healing wounds that have festered between Indians and non-Indians for a century.

During the state's centennial celebration last year, Indians refused to take part, claiming they had nothing to celebrate. They have been at odds with state government over issues such as hunting and fishing rights, law enforcement on reservation highways and contracts for state services.

The governor decided it was time to bury the tomahawk.

Mickelson said he gathered the state lawmakers and the Indian leaders together to "make this truly a year of reconciliation that marks a new beginning."

"I believe it places a responsibility on all of us throughout this year to make a personal commitment," the governor said.

Indians are going through especially tough times in the state. On South Dakota's nine reservations, unemployment approaches 80 percent, and alcoholism, drugs and health care are severe problems.

Four reservation counties rank among the nation's very poorest in terms of per capita income.

Tim Giago, publisher of the weekly Lakota Times, had challenged Mickelson to proclaim 1990 as a year to help ease racial discord between Indian and white people in South Dakota. Mickelson thanked the Indian publisher for issuing the challenge.

In the proclamation, Mickelson said that as South Dakota begins its second century of statehood, people must also remember that the creation of the state was a sad time for Indians.

In December 1890, a little more than a year after South Dakota became a state, Sioux leader Sitting Bull was killed and nearly 300 Sioux men, women and children were killed by U.S. government troops in the Wounded Knee massacre.

"Strife between the cultures in South Dakota has, for 100 years, been of grave concern and continues to be of grave concern," the governor said in the proclamation.

The 100th anniversary of the tragic events offers an opportunity for Indians and non-Indians to put aside their fears and mistrust, build friendships, cooperate, learn about each other's culture and develop a respect and understanding that will grow in the next century, Mickelson said.

More than 6 percent of the state's population — or about 45,000 people — are Indians, according to the 1980 U.S. Census.

Mickelson said he realizes state government and the tribal governments won't settle all their disputes in the next year, but many of the problems might be resolved.

A council of Indians and non-Indians should put together a broad plan by March 1 for celebrating the year of reconciliation, the governor said, and each South Dakotan should think about ways to bridge the cultural gap between Indians and non-Indians in the long run.

Women indicted for baby sale

DALLAS (AP) — A Dallas County grand jury has indicted a woman on a charge accusing her of buying a baby from a woman who needed to raise money to go to Mexico where one of her other children was sick.

The indictment returned Wednesday names Marie Hill Allison, 44, a Richardson apartment manager, as being accused of buying the baby.

The mother, Concepcion Galan Gonzaga, 32, is accused of selling the year-old girl.

Ms. Gonzaga, a recent immigrant who doesn't speak English, was manipulated by an unidentified intermediary and "was not aware of what was going on," said her attorney, Alicia Burkman.

Authorities ordered Gonzaga held at Lew Sterrett Justice Center on $3,000 bond. Mrs. Allison was free on the same amount.

If convicted, both women face two to 10 years in prison.

Both Allison and her attorney, Tracy Holmes, declined to comment on the case.

The child, Burkman said, was turned over to state child protective services.

Prosecutors have said they'll recommend a 5-year prison term if her client pleads guilty to the sale-of-a-child charge, Burkman said.

According to court records filed by prosecutors, Gonzaga reportedly signed in October a notarized paper transferring custody of her daughter to Allison and her husband.

On Nov. 28, 1989, Richardson police detective Billy Prewitt contacted the Allison, who confirmed they had custody of Gonzaga's daughter, prosecution reports say.

Allison said that although Gonzaga had requested $5,000 for the child, she paid only $50 for a bus ticket to Laredo, according to court records.

Greenhouse

nator for the environmental group Greenpeace, which has gone from appearing radical to being considered prophets of impending environmental disaster over the last five years, said Texas Air Control Board's stance is a reflection of ecological apathy from the top down.

"I would not say under any conditions that the TACB even begins to do its job. Neither does the Region 6 EPA, which is based in Dallas," Liebman said. "That's why Texas has some of the highest air pollution in the nation. But it's not reported as being all that bad because the Air Board and EPA aren't doing their job."

Greenpeace activists have matured from their "Save the Whale" days, Liebman said, to a point where they have open-door access to most members of the U.S. House and Senate.

"We are getting respect and industry is beginning to work with us," he said. "But more has got to be done. The problem is that as long as there is a market for the kinds of products of which the manufacture produces ozone and other harmful chemicals, they will be manufactured."

Liebman added, "You don't have to look as far as the rain forests to see problems with greenhouse. It's the cars we drive and the products we buy, like styrofoam, which produces harmful greenhouse gas when it's manufactured. It is our responsibility as much as anyone's."

Dave Ryan of EPA in Washington said a chief rural contributor to greenhouse is livestock. Unfortunately, the issue tends to be so humorous it is hard to take it seriously.

"Basically, what we are talking about here are cow (gas) and burps," Ryan said. "Now there's a rural angle. Methane is an important greenhouse gas and livestock account for 15 percent of all methane."

Changing livestock diet could reduce the problem, he stated. He also suggested that reducing the total number of animals could be an answer. Ryan said that could be accomplished through the genetic increase of animal milk or meat, thus reducing the total number of animals on the planet.

"Of course there is some controversy even within the Bush administration on greenhouse because of conflicts. You have to weigh the economic benefits of development against the cost to the planet," Ryan said.

"We just had a big meeting in the Netherlands in which many countries agreed to slow down CO<sub>2</sub> (carbon dioxide), but many Third World countries see it as impeding their economic growth," Ryan said.

But Ryan said there are any number of things the United States can do to reduce greenhouse gas even without the help of other countries.

"Landfills can be dangerous sources of methane," he explained. "If it is deep enough and a big enough pocket, it (the methane) can even explode and be released."

Ryan agreed with Sawvell that nothing significant will be done to curtail greenhouse until public pressure either reaches the boiling point or the world is on the verge of catastrophe.

By then, however, it could be too late.

"We've got to do something about the number of cars on the road and the carbon dioxide," Ryan said. "Even with the car-pooling you see in urban areas, there are so many people it is still a problem."

Since many major cities, including Dallas and Houston, are facing roadway gridlock — bumper to bumper traffic so thick no vehicle can move anywhere — cars are on the road longer, sometimes for two or three hours just to get a person home.

"There is a growing consensus that due to man made gases, there is an increase in global warming," Ryan said. "It's just a matter of being prepared to do something about it."

Sawvell pointed out, "It's difficult to tell people in a democracy that they can't cook out of doors or drive their car. If it ever comes to that, it will be a difficult situation."

Reader's Digest pointed out that "some have suggested a gasoline tax ... (with) huge increases to discourage use of fossil fuels" and that "some foreign debts could be swapped for protecting forests."

That article also contained a vague, but scary, single sentence stating that some governments may be considering population control to help curtail manmade gases.

Ryan and Sawvell said it is too early for panic, but time for a reasonable course of action and study.

However, industry lobby groups are on record as opposing any federal or state legislation that would address clean air or greenhouse until more is known.

Theresa Pugh, of the National Association of Manufacturers in Washington, paints her own worst-case scenario regarding government attempts to curtail greenhouse.

She is telling groups around the nation that if the government has its way, bakeries, grills, gas stations and dry cleaners across the country will be forced to spend millions of dollars on pollution monitoring devices, just to measure how much greenhouse gas is going into the environment.

"If you put a monitor in the wrong spot, it could mean up to a year in prison," Pugh said in opposing monitoring. She also said businesses simply cannot afford that kind of expense.

Ryan countered with the livestock study, saying it was expensive.

"If cows produce that kind of methane gas, what kind of other greenhouse gases could be going into the atmosphere from business or cars?" he said. "That's why we need to get a handle on it."

William Megonnell of Washington's Clean Air Working Group has taken a decidedly non-global approach to the problem, which he said is no problem at all. Instead, he said the focus must be on the simple matter of affordability.

"We don't think it's fair that people in the Panhandle be forced to pay for problems in the Midwest or other areas," Megonnell said recently. "Last year we spent $33 billion in the United States on clean air." He said if proposed EPA standards are adopted to curb greenhouse, those costs will skyrocket to over $50 billion.

"Rather than being a scientific issue," said Kenneth Ladd of Southwestern Public Service, when asked about greenhouse, "it has become a political issue. We think that spending money on anything more than research would be a mistake."

He and Pugh were quick to add that research should be on a laboratory basis, not requiring monitoring devices on private business.

But Ryan said until the enormity of the problem is known, viable solutions cannot be found.

And until it becomes a major public concern, taxpayers will insist their money be spent on areas deemed more crucial.

The void between the two positions suggest Sawvell's words may seem like prophecy in a few years.

"We need to be informed so we can make choices before it's too late," he said. "But what I predict is we will probably make changes just as we drop over the edge."

Highway safety authorities dispute dangers from back seat lap belts

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — A private institute's contention that back seat lap belts can be more dangerous than no seat belt in many car crashes is being disputed by highway safety officials meeting here.

The private Institute for Injury Reduction said Thursday morning in Washington that lap seat belts in the back seats of cars, when unaccompanied by shoulder belts, cause more than 1,000 serious injuries a year.

Institute president Benjamin Kelley said that in a typical crash other passengers in the car, even those not wearing seat belts at all, tend to be less severely injured than the person seated in the rear and wearing a lap belt.

Officials at a National Highway Transportation Safety Administration conference here held a hasty press conference to counter any suggestion that rear lap belts are unsafe. "The claims made at the Washington press conference can cause many needless deaths and serious injuries," said Beverlee Anderson, spokeswoman for the Fort Worth meeting and director of the Tennessee Traffic Safety Coalition.

She was one of about 200 participants in the National Highway Transportation Safety Association meeting that wrapped up Thursday.

Kelley said that the lap belt injuries cause crippling head and spinal cord injuries, primarily to children, that could be prevented.

The Institute for Injury Reduction was founded two years ago by a group of lawyers who specialize in representing accident victims.

The NHTSA said the "larger body" of evidence shows that more lives are saved by properly fastened rear lap belts than by no restraining device at all.

"We estimate that lap belts in passenger cars saved about 90 lives and prevented over 1,400 serious injuries in 1988," their statement said.

CLOTHED FOR COMFORT

The north wind strikes, and the blizzard howls. We clothe ourselves for maximum warmth and comfort from the cold... for an all encompassing comfort, put on the Lord's mantle.

"The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; he leadeth me beside the still waters. He restoreth my soul; he leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me. Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies; thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever."

The Church is God's appointed agency in this world for spreading the knowledge of His love for man and of His demand for man to respond to that love by loving his neighbor. Without this grounding in the love of God, no government or society or way of life will long persevere and the freedoms which we hold so dear will inevitably perish. Therefore, even from a selfish point of view, one should support the Church for the sake of the welfare of himself and his family. Beyond that, however, every person should uphold and participate in the Church because it tells the truth about man's life, death and destiny; the truth which alone will set him free to live as a child of God.

Salvation Army to be in revival series next week

The Pampa Salvation Army, 701 S. Cuyler, will be holding revival services Sunday through Wednesday.

Featured speaker will be Lt. Don Wildish, local commander. His topic for the revival series will be "Faith."

Services will be at 11 a.m. and 6 p.m. Sunday and at 7 p.m. Monday through Wednesday.

A special spaghetti supper will be served at 6 p.m. Monday, at a cost of $2.50 per person, to raise money to send youths to conference at Corpus Christi in March.

Lt. Wildish invited the public to attend the special revival services next week.

His Touch

By Charlotte Barbaree

Scripture: In my Father's house are many rooms; if it were not so, I would have told you. I am going there to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come back and take you to be with me that you also may be where I am. (John 14:2-3 NIV)

When I was a little girl, I liked to lie in bed at night and listen to the sounds of my parents talking and laughing and moving about busily. They were sounds of home and love and safety.

Before I knew it, I was the mother putting my little girls to bed, and bedtime was even more, the sweetest time of the day. Once, the girls were in bed, I knew they were safely where they belonged, until the next day of the risky business of living.

During the girls' adolescence, my nocturnal vigil took on a whole new meaning. Their banging of doors as they prepared for bed after an evening out was music to my ears. Having them home in bed meant God had once again been with them when I couldn't be and had delivered them unscathed from the daring, rebellion and poor judgment so characteristic of teens.

My nest is empty now, and all three daughters are happily and capably on their way into adulthood. However, when they were recently all home for the holidays, they came in late one night. I lay in bed listening while they joked, and talked, and banged doors. As the house became quiet, I was washed once again by that delicious sense of having my babies safely home and tucked into bed.

Our Heavenly Father watches over us Christians as we navigate through a world where life is risky spiritual business. We don't always use good judgment; too often we are daring and rebellious children. Over and over, God delivers us in spite of our foolishness. Can you imagine how much God wants us safely tucked away where we can't harm or be harmed?

God and we are waiting for the completion of his plan. Christians have a heavenly home awaiting us which Jesus went ahead of us to prepare. When God's ready, Jesus is going to come back to get us and take us home where we will be supremely safe in the presence of Jesus himself!

For the first time in our eternal lives, we will experience perfect assurance and peace and rest, tucked away where we belong in heavenly mansions.

Religion roundup

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Milwaukee's Roman Catholic Archbishop Rembert Weakland is going to hold hearings to gather women's views on abortion.

He wrote in the archdiocese's newspaper, Catholic Herald, that he hoped "a more systematic hearing and listening process... will help me understand and articulate better my own moral insights" on abortion.

CHAPPAQUA, N.Y. (AP) — Randall A. Terry, who founded the anti-abortion movement "Operation Rescue," has been named for the Christian Herald magazine's annual "James 1:22 Award" as a leading "doer of the Word" in 1989.

His "controversial and dramatic tactics have forced Christians to either join the fight over abortion or turn their backs on the babies and mothers," said Bob Chuvale, editor of the 113-year-old evangelical magazine.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The policy-making general board of the American Baptist Churches has urged the U.S. administration to re-establish full diplomatic relations with Cuba and to lift the trade embargo on the country.

West Texas born-again artist brings her beliefs to her painting

By JOHN McMILLAN
Big Spring Herald

STANTON, Texas (AP) — A born-again Christian in this West Texas town has discovered born-again art — so much so that she abstains from painting the wine bottles she once included in her work.

To depict wine bottles in one's paintings would risk glorifying wine, says the artist, Jannie Linney. The spirits have been linked to alcoholism, broken homes and neglect of children's material needs, she said.

It is true that Jesus drank wine, Mrs. Linney said, but "at this time, I believe in total abstinence from alcohol."

When Mrs. Linney first began to paint years ago, she painted wine bottles because they seemed "pretty."

Today, obedience to God, it seems, guides the life and art of the 55-year-old West Texas woman. "I wouldn't want to do anything on canvas that would not please the Lord," she said.

In particular, Mrs. Linney said, paintings with nudity in them are "extremely vulgar."

Although some people attempt to justify such paintings by claiming that they celebrate natural beauty, she said, that argument is wrongheaded. "In First Corinthians, the Lord tells women to dress with humility."

Mrs. Linney said she develops religious themes in her artwork, such as by depicting a valley cited in the Bible or the crown of thorns placed on Christ's head before his crucifixion.

The results are something to behold. Prints of her paintings appear in Christian bookstores around the country. Her stature is such that next year, Mrs. Linney will be mentioned for the first time in American Artists, a reference book of the nation's leading artists. But Mrs. Linney is not one to boast.

"There are people meaner than hell that can paint better than I can," she said recently. "They don't know it's from God, but God is the one who gives them the ability to paint. They just don't use it to glorify him."

When Mrs. Linney began as an artist 22 years ago, her outlook was decidedly more secular. But that was before Mrs. Linney became born-again as a Christian, she said, a spiritual awakening that occurred during a city-wide crusade in Stanton in 1971.

"I told him, 'Lord, if this (art) will stand in the way of what you want me to do, I will throw it away or burn it up,'" she recalled. "Just a few days after that, he showed me in my mind's eye a painting that would glorify him. And that's when my Christian art started."

Mrs. Linney's zeal for Christianity is not limited to the canvas, either. She and her husband, Leroy, are active in evangelical Christian groups, and Mrs. Linney said she recently felt complimented when a grandson who lives in her home compared it with a church.

"We pray together," she said. "There's a real strong Christian emphasis in this home."

Though she now believes she was not truly a Christian until 1971, Mrs. Linney is disinclined to condemn her earlier artworks as heretical. "They were still nature and God's creation, whether I realized it or not," she said.

But as a born-again Christian,

Mrs. Linney believes her art has undergone a renaissance.

"My eyes were opened to see more color," she said. "I saw more detail, more depth and I realized that God was the ultimate artist because he did all things in exactly the right color."

Although she began with oil painting, Mrs. Linney has expanded into a variety of media, including acrylic, pen and ink, and pastel.

Leroy Linney offered a testimonial of his own concerning the transformation of his wife's art.

"After she got saved," he said. "I could see her work change. It became softer, more peaceful."

But Mrs. Linney repeatedly avoids any statement that might hint at excessive pride in her work.

"I realize it's a God-given talent ..." she said. "A Christian doesn't have pride in themselves. It's pride in what Christ does through them, and that's not an arrogant pride."

"I believe the Lord gives her things to paint that's good for the world to see," Linney said of his wife. "I think she paints what is revealed to her by the Lord."

Samaritans caught between Israelis and Palestinians

By ELLEN SCHECHET
Associated Press Writer

MOUNT GERIZIM, Occupied West Bank (AP) — The Samaritans, known mainly for Jesus' parable of the Good Samaritan, use a Hebrew saying to describe their lives in the midst of the Palestinian uprising against Israeli rule.

They say it's like being caught "between a hammer and an anvil."

About 275 Samaritans, whose day-to-day language is Arabic, live on Mount Gerizim or in nearby Nablus, a Moslem Arab town of 120,000 which has been a focal point of anti-Israeli unrest in the uprising.

An equal number of Samaritans speak Hebrew and live in Holon, a Jewish city of 144,000 just south of Tel Aviv.

"In Nablus, there are those who understand what the Samaritans are, and say we always have lived with them. And there are those who say we are Jewish," said Itamar Cohen, seated behind the counter of his small grocery, the only shop on the mountain.

"But with all this, we are not Jews, and we are not Moslems. We have our own religion," said

Cohen, 52, who also works for the Israeli government as a guide to the historical sites here.

The Samaritan religion is an offshoot of Judaism. The Samaritans claim to be descendants of three of the 12 tribes of ancient Israel and believe that Mount Gerizim, not Jerusalem, is the place chosen by God for the true temple.

Although Samaritans base their faith on the Old Testament, they're best known for an account in the New Testament (Luke 10:30-37) of the tale told by Jesus to fellow Jews about the Good Samaritan.

At that time, Jews resented Samaritans as distorting the faith.

Jesus' story was about a Samaritan who helped an injured Jew ignored by passing Jewish priests — the Samaritan thus proving himself a good neighbor.

Samaritan Scripture, a mixture of ancient Hebrew and Aramaic, consists of their version of the first five books of Moses. The Samaritans consider Moses to be the sole prophet of God.

While they celebrate most of the same holidays as the Jews, many of their rituals are profoundly different, including the slaughter of sacrificial lambs on

"Our goal is to continue our lives until the end of the world. We believe in the resurrection of the dead," Cohen said.

But the Samaritans say — quietly, cautiously, nervously — that they are increasingly having trouble assuring their survival as a result of the nearly two-year-old Palestinian uprising.

Several Samaritan homes in Nablus were burned last fall during the Jewish and Samaritan holiday of Sukkot, which commemorates the desert wandering of the Israelites during the Exodus.

Nablus leaders have condemned the attacks and promised compensation, the Samaritans say.

Most Nablus Samaritans are employed by the West Bank military government.

Zevolon Altif, 60, a retired high school English teacher, said about 10 in the transportation and tax offices received telephone threats from Palestinians ordering them to quit. Two army cars now take them to and from work.

Although the Samaritans do not consider themselves Jews and are not considered to be Jews by the Israeli rabbinate, the Samaritans of Holon go to Jewish schools and serve in the Israeli army.

The Samaritans of Nablus study in Arab schools and do not serve in the military.

Some learned Hebrew after the 1967 Six-Day War, and many now choose between a Hebrew or an Arabic first name, depending on the listener.

"We were two parts of the same nation. Because of that, some people are suspicious," Altif said.

St. Mark to have pancake breakfast Saturday morning

St. Mark CME Church, 406 Elm, is sponsoring another of its Saturday morning pancake breakfasts from 8 to 11 a.m.

Members of the church will be serving pancakes with bacon or sausage, eggs, coffee and orange juice.

Donations will be accepted, with the proceeds benefiting the activities and services of the church.

Rev. H.R. Johnson, pastor, invited the public to attend for breakfast and fellowship at the church Saturday morning.

The Harvesters to minister Sunday at First Assembly

The Harvesters of Southwestern Assemblies of God College at Waxahachie will be ministering at the First Assembly of God, corner of Cuyler and Amarillo highway, at 10:30 a.m. Sunday.

The Harvesters have gathered from across the United States to blend their talent in music, forming what many critics have called one of the most outstanding and versatile groups in contemporary music today.

Representing Southwestern Assemblies of God College, the musicians usually travel in two groups in order to extend their coverage throughout the Southwest region.

These young collegians feel they are involved in a definite ministry of reaching young people for the Lord Jesus Christ. They are chosen not only for their musical ability but also because of their Christian character and academic ability.

The Harvesters travel weekends and make two tours each year — one at spring break and one during the summer.

Rev. Herb Peak, pastor, said, "This concert is something you will want to attend. If you love good music, love to worship and love to become acquainted with young people consumed with a vision and a purpose, you are invited to attend this event."

There is no admission charge, Rev. Peak said, inviting the public to attend the special service Sunday morning.

Sulking could mean sickness to those depressed

DEAR ABBY: Thank you for your answer to the wife of the man who "sulked" on and off for 25 years. As you pointed out, the man could be suffering from a major depression of biochemical origin. Perhaps my own experience could shed some light on this disorder:

For years, I went through times of terrible, seemingly unexplainable depressions. I, too, was additionally burdened by the cheap-shot accusations that I was "sulking" or "feeling sorry for myself" for no apparent reason. Such accusations succeeded only in antagonizing me and alienating me from those who thought they were helping — including some mental health counselors and non-physicians who couldn't prescribe medications.

What was so mysterious and unbearable about those episodes was that they seemed to happen for no reason. The truth is that 1 to 5 percent of the population suffers from inherited conditions in which major depressions — sometimes even resulting in suicide — occur, and these depressions may have no apparent cause. Certain chemicals in the brain go out of whack, and the person falls into moods of despair and gloom.

Some people have these depressive mood swings exclusively. Others (like myself) have them as part of manic-depressive illness in which our depressions switch over to periods of great energy, high spirits and enormous creativity. We are frequently called "geniuses" during these high times, but we are also accused of being "on something" (drugs) because no "normal" person switches moods so quickly, right?

Well, we're not entirely normal. We can function normally by taking medications such as non-addicting lithium (not to be confused with the potentially addictive Librium, please) and anti-depressants.

And most of all, we can be helped by loved ones who realize — as you pointed out — that "sulking can be caused by a chemical imbalance."

Abby, I hope this isn't too long for your column.

TOM IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR TOM: No letter as important as this is "too long" for my column. I thank you for sending it.

sulked off and on for 22 years. When I would ask her what was wrong, she always had the same answer: "If you don't know, I'm not going to tell you."

The night our youngest son graduated from high school, we drove home in silence. My wife had been sulking for a week. I asked her: "What's the matter? Did I say or do something to upset you? Please tell me what's the matter." Her reply was, "If you don't know, I'm not going to tell you."

When we got in the house, I got my suitcases out and started packing my clothes. She looked at me in disbelief. I finished packing, then loaded my bags into my car and said goodbye.

She asked, "What is this all about? What are you doing?" My response: "If you don't know, I'm not going to tell you."

That was 20 years ago. Since then, I have been happily married to a wonderful woman for 18 years.

These second grade students of Travis Elementary school place snowballs on the wall outside of the school library. Each snowball represents a book read by the students, said Librarian Marilyn Kirkwood. The snowballs surround a Cowboy Snowman and the words "Read, Partner." Earlier in the year, students covered a turkey with feathers, pasted colored squares on a dinosaur, and used green handprints to spell out "Peace," Kirkwood said.

Giants plan to leave Morris unprotected

NEW YORK (AP) — While some of the very familiar names in the NFL were expected to become Plan B free agents, union chief Gene Upshaw expects players to challenge the concept.

"Obviously, I'm not in favor of Plan B," Upshaw said Thursday night in a telephone interview from Washington. "This will definitely be challenged in court."

Upshaw's argument is that the better players in the league, with perhaps the exception of New York Giants' running back Joe Morris, are not free. Morris, New York's career rushing leader, missed all of last season with a broken foot.

The Giants will choose not to protect the 29-year-old Morris when NFL teams announce their 37-man lists of players who cannot become free agents, according to a published report.

"I'll explore every opportunity and see what's best for my family," Morris told Newsday after learning last Thursday that he would not be protected today by the team he helped lead to a Super Bowl victory in 1987.

Ironically, the Giants also will not protect 32-year-old Otis Anderson, who replaced Morris and rushed for 1,023 yards in leading New York to the NFC East title.

The Super Bowl champion San Francisco 49ers reportedly will leave nine-year defensive back Eric Wright unprotected. Wright is one of five 49ers who played for the team's four Super Bowl winners in the 1980s.

Other well-known 49ers not being protected are linebackers Jim Fahnhorst, Matt Millen, Keena Turner and Riki Ellison, and defensive linemen Jim Burt and Pete Kulger.

The Seattle Seahawks were not expected to protect running back Curt Warner, whose production has slipped due to injury and the decline of the team.

Tight end Ozzie Newsome, who has caught more passes than any player ever at that position, and defensive back Hanford Dixon were not protected by the Cleveland Browns.

Defensive lineman Ed "Too Tall" Jones, defensive backs Bill Bates and Everson Walls and center Tom Rafferty, the last links to the championship years of the Dallas Cowboys, also may change teams.

Tight end Clarence Kay, running back Sammy Winder and offensive linemen Keith Bishop and Bill Bryan were not protected by the Denver Broncos.

The New England Patriots may be saying goodbye to two of their most popular players, quarterbacks Doug Flutie and Steve Grogan.

Quarterback Bobby Hebert, who lost his job last season to John Fourcade, and defensive back Dave Wayner are not expected to return to New Orleans.

Wide receiver Mike Quick, a Pro Bowler until a knee injury put him down last season, was not protected by the Philadelphia Eagles.

Quarterback Doug Williams, who led Washington to a Super Bowl victory in 1988, heads a list of unprotected Redskins. Others longtime Redskins on their way out are defensive back Barry Wilburn, offensive linemen Russ Grimm and Joe Jacoby and linebacker Monte Coleman.

Morris reportedly was unhappy that the Giants put him on injured reserve, feeling that he could have contributed in the second half of the season.

Aside from Morris' presence as a Plan B free agent, most players left unprotected are past their prime or players of less than star status.

"They still punish players who play well," Upshaw said. "Any time you have a system that punishes players who play well, it isn't a very good system."

Upshaw was not speaking for the players, because the NFLPA, as part of its labor battle with owners, has said it is decertifying itself as their representative. He predicted a lawsuit against Plan B.

"It's like saying Larry Bird can't be a free agent because he scores too much," Upshaw said. "Or, how about Rickey Henderson being told he can't be a free agent because he steals too many bases?"

Plan B free agents can negotiate with any team other than their own prior to April 1. After the April 1 cutoff last year, many players decided to take pay cuts to remain with their teams.

TABC

"If they don't call us we have to call them," Ballard said. On Saturday mornings he "crawls out of bed" and begins a routine that will last most of the day and into the night.

"I must hear from the coaches every week or else the list doesn't get updated," he said. "It's hectic."

A friend in Brownfield helps by giving Ballard the scores from that area, but the majority of the 12 lists, each with 10 teams, must be updated by Ballard and his secretary.

By 3 p.m. on Saturday 95 percent of the work is complete. But there are always those coaches who are not dependable, he said.

One in particular was angered years ago when an incorrect score was reported to Ballard. He vowed never to call TABC again.

But an ever-diligent Ballard persisted, and now he avoids the situation altogether by calling a different coach at the same high school.

But sometimes even the well-meaning coaches forget. That's when Ballard resorts to "Plan B" — calling where the kids hang out.

"I know all the local DQ numbers," he said.

Once when he called the local Dairy Queen the clerk did not know the previous night's basketball score. But she did know where the team's star player worked.

Ballard called the player at his supermarket job. "I stack 'em down," he said.

There are times, though, when even Ballard must put the basketball aside, if even for a minute, and concentrate on another hobby — playing the piano at church.

Last week he was in a quandary, though, when a church revival conflicted with the boys and girls Panther games. Ballard had to sneak off to the pastor's study during breaks to tune in on his portable radio.

"I grieve with them when they lose and I rejoice with them when they win," he said.

It is feasible Ballard could retire from MISD and work for TABC full time one day; he draws a part-time salary for his efforts.

He enjoys the working relationship he has with Texas sportswriters and he likes knowing that Monday's poll is the result of his diligence.

"You put it all together — all the coaches, all the sportswriters, all the DQ people — and that's what you end up with," he said.

But on second thought, maybe not. "If I had to do this all year long I'd throw my hands up and quit."

Thomas Gioiosa claims he saw Pete Rose placing bets on the Reds.

SWC baseball starts

DALLAS (AP) — Although Texas battled Wichita State for the 1989 NCAA baseball championship less than seven months ago, Southwest Conference teams swing back into 1990 baseball activity on Friday to begin the 76th season of league competition.

Texas Tech and Rice get off first. The Red Raiders host New Mexico of the Western Athletic Conference at 2 p.m. Friday while Rice travels to Tempe, Ariz., to tangle with Arizona State in a 5:30 p.m. CST encounter.

SWC round-robin play doesn't begin until March 16, the consensus prior to conference play have a strong bearing on possible NCAA at-large invitations and national prestige.

Arkansas is the last SWC team to open its baseball schedule. The Razorbacks open two weeks from Friday.

Arkansas, which tied Texas A&M for the SWC baseball title last year, have a solid pitching nucleus returning from last year's 51-16 unit, which tied for fifth in the NCAA World Series.

Pre-season ratings in a couple of publications — "Collegiate Baseball" and "Baseball America" exude confidence that SWC teams can play up to the potential demonstrated by a nation's best record of 244-61 (.800 winning percentage) against all outside opposition last season.

Charges against Rose still flying

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Suspended Cincinnati Reds manager Pete Rose denied new allegations from a former housemate that he bet on baseball games, including those involving the Reds.

"That's a closed issue as far as I'm concerned. I can't prove that I didn't. Obviously you can't prove a negative," Rose said during a news conference Thursday prior to a speech to about 1,000 University of Florida students.

Rose's former housemate, Tommy Gioiosa, said during a Cincinnati television interview on Thursday that he watched Rose call bookies and place bets on Reds' games.

Gioiosa made the new accusation just before being sentenced to a five-year prison sentence for transporting cocaine and hiding Rose's racetrack winnings from the Internal Revenue Service.

Rose, who was banned for life from baseball last Aug. 24 after admitting to illegal gambling, got a standing ovation before and after his speech to the students, many of them wearing Cincinnati Reds hats and shirts.

The former Reds player-manager said he hoped to persuade baseball officials to let him rejoin the league through clean living.

"I made some mistakes and I'm paying for them. I guess I'm just asking people to give me time to clean my act up. I'm doing the things the commissioner wants me to do. I don't gamble anymore. I regularly talk to my doctor. I don't hang around undesirable," he said.

Baseball's career hit leader said he's not planning at the current time to seek reinstatement this fall.

"I'm not foaming at the mouth to get back into baseball," he said. "My utmost goal is not to get back into baseball. My utmost goal is getting my life to go in the right direction."

Rose said it has been difficult dealing with all the allegations and charges in the past year.

"I'm the guy that sent the iceberg that got the Titanic. I was responsible for the Lindbergh baby. That's the type of allegations I had to deal with last year," he said.

Rose, whose nickname is Charley Hustle, said he still hopes to get into the Hall of Fame.

"I'd hate like hell to think I wouldn't go to the Hall of Fame because I bet on the Super Bowl," he said.

During a lighthearted speech peppered with wisecracks, Rose recited a litany of baseball greats he had played with and against, but made only passing references to his problems.

"I'm a golfaholic now," Rose said, adding that he plays golf all day.

Rose has made few public appearances since being banned, although he has appeared in more controlled television interview settings.

Before the speech, which university officials said earned him $11,000, Rose said he had little sympathy for Gioiosa, his former housemate of 5 years. Gioiosa was sentenced on Thursday to five years in prison for his conviction on drug and tax-evasion charges.
