Gorbachev invites radicals to debate on reform

By ANN IMSE
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — President Mikhail S. Gorbachev invited radical reformers to a high-level Communist Party debate today on further political changes, which one top official warned could destroy the party.

In the first challenge he faces in his new, more powerful post as president, Gorbachev also tried to calm the heated emotions over Lithuania's attempt to secede from the Soviet Union.

Gorbachev began his first full day as president by chairing today's Communist Party Central Committee meeting. In response to this week's legalization of alternative political parties, the top Communists are considering changing the party's structure. They also are debating a bill they plan to propose on the regulation of political parties.

"In the current wording, the law could place obstacles to the active work of the party in workplaces," complained Moscow party chief Yuri Prokofiev.

The text of the law was not available.

Radicals say real political freedom cannot emerge while Communist Party groups remain in government agencies, farms, army units, police precincts and virtually every other institution. Those units give the party control over Soviet life and an advantage over any new political party.

In remarks carried by the official news agency Tass, Prokofiev added that in the proposed law, "there exists a real basis for liquidating the party organizations in businesses and institutions. This could bring the organizational destruction of the party. And we have the sad experience of the Polish United Workers Party right before our eyes."

He was referring to Poland's Communist Party, which was the first to lose power in the revolution that swept Eastern Europe last fall.

Prokofiev also said the new law should limit the activities of political parties and create a process for abolishing them if they advocate something dangerous like nationalism or incite racial hatred.

The president of Kirgizia, A. Dzhumaganov, warned party leaders that some people "are calling for the party to leave the political arena, to throw to oblivion our fundamental science, Marxism-Leninism."

The party for decades has been run with strict control by its highest leaders, and a promotion system ensured that they and their supporters would remain in charge.

Gorbachev has suggested allowing local party organizations to decide how to choose their delegates to a critical party congress, which he said should start July 2. Party reformers want secret-ballot elections in which they could force out the old guard.

Radicals want even more, urging the abolishment of Communist Party cells in government agencies, farms, army units, police precincts and virtually every other institution. Those cells give the party a control over Soviet life and an advantage over any new political party.

Gorbachev brought to the closed-door Central Committee meeting representatives of about 40 groups of rank-and-file Communists, according to the Soviet news service Interfax.

Among the groups represented was the radical Democratic Platform, which threatened to form a competing Social Democratic Party if the Communists fail to reform from within. It was denied access to a Central Committee meeting in early February in which party leaders agreed to abandon their monopoly on power and permit legalization of alternative parties.

The Democratic Platform was formed in January by a group of progressive members of Congress and members of Communist Party "clubs" that have brought reformers together in cities across the country. It also supports independence for the republics, individual Communist parties in each one and abolition of the privilege system that provides the party elite with chauffeur-driven cars, special food and summer homes. Gorbachev on Thursday held only his second news conference in Moscow, and promised to hold "a respectful dialogue with the people of Lithuania" and their government. This is what the Lithuanians are seeking, given the complexity of trying to sever relations after 50 years of Soviet rule.

A resolution passed by the Congress of People's Deputies stated clearly the Soviet intention of ignoring any attempts by Lithuania to back its defiance with actions until the conflict has been resolved. It said the Soviet Constitution and laws remain in effect in the Baltic republic.

But Gorbachev asked the deputies to drop the most confrontational rhetoric and simply direct him to protect the rights of Soviet citizens and the Soviet Union in the Baltic republic, pending resolution of the conflict.

Gorbachev ignored a demand from one deputy that he immediately impose presidential rule on Lithuania and a threat from another to search out growing numbers of Lithuanian deserters from the Red Army.

The one Lithuanian who took the floor, Nikolai Medvedev, was met with scattered cries of "Enemy of the People!" when he spoke. The epithet was widespread during the witch-hunting days of dictator Josef Stalin.

Medvedev accused Bolshevism of causing hundreds of thousands of deaths in Lithuania in Stalin's repressions and mass deportations. He warned that the origi-

County awards bids for items in buildings at site of new jail

Gray County Commissioners' Court awarded bids Thursday for removable items in three county-owned buildings on the site where the new county jail will be built.

The group also discussed a modified drawing of the new facility.

The site at Russell-Francis, where the new jail and sheriff's office is to be built, has three buildings on it that will be demolished after items are removed and offices relocated.

Bids for removable items were received from three groups: Andrea Mitchell, Melvin L. Hammon and the local Veterans of Foreign Wars. Each was high bidder on at least several items.

The Commissioners' Court awarded the following:

- To Mitchell — seven doors, the front door and the rear door of 125 W. Francis for a total bid of $177.

- To the VFW — electrical plugs, boxes, wall covers and wiring in all three buildings and all duct work and vent covers at 216-218 Russell for a total bid of $80.

- To Hammon — exterior doors and windows, ceiling tile and frame, four interior door units and duct work at 115 W. Francis; paneling and trim, kitchen cabinets, bathroom cabinet and commode, central heating and air-conditioner unit with duct work, ceiling tiles with frames and insulation, carpet and pads at 125 W. Francis; and kitchen cabinets, two commodes, ceiling tiles with frames and insulation, three exterior door units, 10 interior door units, a six-gallon water heater, paneling and carpet and pad at 216-218 Russell. Total bid price on the above items was $2,245.

Hammon also submitted a $6,000 bid to demolish the three buildings. No action was taken on that bid. County employees will likely do that work, commissioners said Thursday.

Commissioners also discussed letting the VFW examine the buildings after the removable items are taken out to see if there was anything left the VFW wanted that the county could donate to the group.

During jail discussions, Precinct 2 Commissioner Jim Greene expressed concern about the proposed exterior of the new facility. Greene said he was not sure the finish would hold up in Texas Panhandle weather.

County Judge Carl Kennedy said he would notify the architects, Maxey and Associates Inc. of Austin, of a few other minor changes commissioners discussed Thursday and give the OK for the architects to proceed with the final plans and specifications.

In unrelated business, the Commissioners' Court heard a report from Precinct 1 Commissioner Joe Wheeley on the status of three tests at the annex building that are required by the federal government on lease space. The building is currently used to house the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service (federal government), the Soil Conservation Service and the County Extension Office.

The results of the radon test are not known at this time, Wheeley said, and the test for another chemical (PCB) was negative.

However, the test for asbestos turned up positive in two locations in the building, he said. A written report has not been received by the county, but Wheeley got his information verbally from the company who conducted the tests, he said.

The two areas of the building are the floor tile, which Wheeley said he has been informed can be treated with a heavy coat of wax. Nearly all floor tile put in during the 1950s and 1960s contains asbestos, Wheeley said.

The other area containing asbestos is the blown-on material in the entry way foyer and in a meet-

J.P. election recount set for 6 p.m. today

By DEE DEE LARAMORE

A recount of ballots set for 6 p.m. today in the Gray County courtroom will decide the official winner in the Precinct 2 Justice of Peace Democratic primary.

Margie Prestidge, challenger to present Justice of the Peace Wayne Roberts, narrowly edged out her opponent by seven votes in Tuesday's primary election.

Roberts, who is completing his first term in office, filed for a recount of the ballots with local Democratic Party Chairman John Warner Wednesday.

Roberts said earlier that he was concerned that some of the Precinct 2 ballots had not been counted.

Precinct 2 has 115 voters, but only 111 were counted in the justice of the peace contest. Of the 80 voters registered in Precinct 10, only 79 were counted in the J.P. race, he said. And in Precinct 15, only 110 of the 117 voters were shown as having voted in the justice of the peace race, he added.

Warner said he has appointed a recount team, consisting of a chairman and three others, which will count the ballots from Precincts 2, 10 and 13 and absentee. Also to be present for the recount will be Gray County Clerk Wanda Carter, both candidates, their chosen representatives and Warner.

The recount team members were chosen from employees in the Gray County Clerk's office, Warner said, adding that anyone who had served as an election judge is not eligible to be on the recount team.

The team consists of Jody Finkenbinder, chairman; Virginia Greer, Lou Dean Cotten and O'Neta

Brewer, Carter said.

Carter said her duty is to protect the ballots, which will be returned to her and locked up after the recount is complete.

Although the order of the recount is not specifically set out in any statute, Warner said he intends to pick up each ballot and announce the vote. He will then hand the ballot to one of the candidates to verify the vote. This candidate will then hand the ballot to the other candidate. The ballots may also be shown to the candidates' representatives to verify the tally, Warner said.

Gray County's Democratic Party officials were to meet at 2 p.m. today in the Gray County courtroom to canvass the votes from Tuesday's primary election. The county's Republican Party officials were scheduled to canvass votes in that primary at noon today.

Walter A. Shed speaks Thursday to the Gray County Appraisal District Board of Directors concerning $24,000 in taxes he owes.

Appraisal District board hears complaint on taxes, audit report

By BETH MILLER
Staff Writer

A complaint from a taxpayer was heard during a Thursday meeting of the Gray County Appraisal District Board of Directors.

And the board also received a report on the audit for 1989 from Lewis Meers, a certified public accountant.

Gray County resident Walter A. Shed, representing himself and his business, Shed Realty & Associates Inc., said while addressing the board, "I have a major problem trying to make enough money to pay my bills."

Shed said he currently owes $24,000 in taxes, penalties and interest and was recently notified by Ronnie Babcock, area manager of Calame, Linebarger and Graham law firm, that there would be increased costs in title work and court costs if a lawsuit was filed against Shed by the Appraisal District. The law firm is the delinquent tax attorney for the Appraisal District.

Shed said he signed an agreement with the Appraisal District in 1989 that he would pay $630 a month for as long as he could and "not be sued on my taxes."

"A suit would put me in bankruptcy and puts me out of business," Shed said. "I haven't been paying my taxes because I haven't had any money."

Shed said that during the last 1 1/2 years he had purchased four properties for $20,500 and the appraised value placed on them was $72,700. "I'm overtaxed by 250 percent. I've been facing this all along with the board."

Board Chairman Samuel Haynes said he appreciated Shed coming before the board, but the board's hands were tied because they have no control on appeals.

Chief Appraiser Pat Bagley said the board of directors has no legal authority to reduce taxes. And Bagley said the time had expired for Shed to appeal the taxes to the proper authority — the Appraisal Review Board. Bagley said some of the taxes Shed was complaining of went back several years.

Slapping paperwork down on the board table, Shed said, "I'll sell it for what I've got in it and pay you what I owe in taxes. There it is, you can have every penny of it."

Shed said that of $11,000 in taxes he paid last year, $5,500 went to taxes and $5,500 went to penalty and interest.

"At 27 percent interest charged me, I'll never catch up ... I'd like to find a way a man can stay in business."

Shed did say an appraiser with the Appraisal District had worked with him some after he got his tax bills and reduced some of the bills.

"If a tax lien is filed against me I'll lose everything I've got," Shed said.

Haynes said, "You have to go through the proper procedure."

As of March 1990, Shed owed $24,019.81 in taxes on 30 properties that have a taxable value of $430,164.

Regarding the audit, Meers commended the administration and board of the appraisal district for good fiscal management.

Yair Levy, left, one of the six members of the Shas religious party, confers with Shimon Peres shortly before the vote of no confidence against Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir.

Peres loses vote of confidence by Israel's parliament

By EILEEN ALT POWELL
Associated Press Writer

JERUSALEM (AP) — Labor Party leader Shimon Peres, after winning a parliament victory to unseat Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, now faces the difficult prospect of forging a new government to renew the peace process.

The parliament, or Knesset, on Thursday sided with Peres in a 60-55 vote of no confidence against Shamir, head of the right-wing Likud bloc.

The dispute between the two parties centered on the future of the Middle East peace process. Shamir for weeks had balked at U.S. proposals to get talks started with the Palestinians.

In the end, a small but powerful religious party settled the dispute by voting with Labor, which backs the U.S. peace effort.

It was the first time in Israel's 42-year history that a prime minister was turned out of office on a no-confidence vote. Shamir listened to the vote tally with his head down, glumly shuffling papers on his desk.

The balloting ended a tense 15-month coalition between Labor and Likud, the nation's two largest political parties, and set the stage for what could be weeks of wheeling and dealing to form a new coalition.

Peres, a left-center politician, is expected to be asked to form a new government by President Chaim Herzog. Shamir will remain as caretaker premier until a new government is in place.

Fashioning a new coalition government may take months. Peres would have a maximum of six weeks to assemble a coalition. If he fails, Shamir or another Likud leader might be chosen to form a government; if that fails, new elections may be called.

The vote to oust Shamir followed 10 hours of often caustic parliament debate and came after Shamir rejected a compromise offered by the ultra-Orthodox Shas Party.

The compromise by Shas spiritual leader Rabbi Ovadia Yosef called for reinstating Labor ministers that Shamir fired earlier in the week and accepting U.S. proposals for a Palestinian-Israeli dialogue.

When Shamir rejected the deal, five of the six Shas parliament members boycotted the vote, swinging the ballot in the 120-seat parliament to Peres.

For Peres, trying to mesh leftist secular parties with conservative religious factions will be a major test.

In the past, Orthodox parties have demanded tougher laws to deal with restaurants and stores that open on the Sabbath, a major source of friction with liberal factions.

Shamir gave no clues to his future strategy as he left parliament.

"These are the results," Shamir said. "We are not surprised ... and I am not sorry."

District reinstates principal suspended for paddling

HOUSTON (AP) - Houston school officials reinstated an elementary principal after he agreed that spanking a special education student was a mistake.

LaSalle Donnell, principal of Douglass Elementary School, returned to school Wednesday after being suspended with pay for two days for spanking a special education student.

Parents supporting the principal kept their children from attending classes Monday and protested outside the school, but school administrators said Donnell violated a specific policy by spanking the boy.

Black appointed as district judge

AUSTIN (AP) - Gov. Bill Clement today named a black district judge, Louis Sturns, to the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, the state's highest criminal court bench.

Clements appointed Sturns, of Tarrant County, to fill the unexpired term of Judge M.P. "Rusty" Duncan, who was killed in a traffic accident Feb. 28, said Rossanna Salazar, the governor's press secretary.

Sturns, 40, becomes the second member of a minority group to hold a statewide office. One Hispanic, Texas Supreme Court Justice Raul Gonzalez, has twice won that post after initially being appointed by former Gov. Mark White.

Black appointed as district judge

In the first two years of his current term, Clements appointed 33 Anglo judges and three Hispanics to Texas courts. None was black, and the Republican governor was sharply criticized by Democratic legislators over that record.

In announcing the appointment, Clements said his staff's research indicates that Sturns becomes "the first black Texan to serve in any elective statewide office in Texas history."

The governor called Sturns "an individual of absolute integrity and proven ability. He is widely respected for his reason, his fairness and balance - all fundamental to an effective judicial system."

"In Judge Sturns, the people of Texas will find a man of honor and wisdom, a Texan who has distinguished himself as a dedicated public servant."

Sturns practiced law for 10 years before Clements appointed him to the district court bench in Tarrant County during the governor's first term.

Police investigating sexual assault case

A 45-year-old Pampa woman reported a sexual assault Thursday morning at her residence in north central Pampa.

An incident report by the Pampa Police Department said the incident allegedly occurred about 9 a.m. and was reported to police at 10:20 a.m.

The suspect in the case was apparently an acquaintance, Detective John Goes said this morning.

Goes said the case is under investigation at this time and he has not received the initial report taken by police officers. Goes said he interviewed the woman on Thursday.

Counselors, researchers say inhalant abuse 'silent epidemic'

By KELLEY SHANNON
Associated Press Writer

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Leaders of the first national inhalant abuse conference say young people use household substances like spray paint or rubber cement more so than crack cocaine to get high.

And counselors, educators and law officers here Thursday traded strategies on battling the often unrecognized problem.

"It's an issue that's certainly been overlooked," said Bob Dickson, executive director of the Texas Commission on Alcohol and Drug Abuse. "I feel certain that there's been an increase (in abuse)."

Inhalant abuse can lead to brain damage or death, often from heart failure. Use of inhalants involves sniffing such household substances as markers, hair spray or paint thinner that contain potent solvents. The fumes can produce a quick high that usually does not last long.

Correction fluid is the most frequently used inhalant because it comes in small, easily hidden bottles, officials said.

Roy C. Nickell, program services director with TECADA, said there are perhaps three to four times as many young people using inhalants to get high as there are young people using crack cocaine.

"It probably is the biggest entry-level drug that we have," Dickson said. "I'm afraid that parents tend to discount it when they see their kids playing with these things."

About 300 people are attending the four-day National Inhalant Abuse Prevention Conference, the first national seminar on the subject. Organizers had expected only 150 people this year.

Dickson said the turnout shows there is a need for more information on inhalant abuse and strategies to fight it. He said there currently are no treatment programs for the addiction as there are with addiction to some illegal drugs.

Some of the conference participants dubbed inhalant abuse a "silent epidemic."

Several counselors talked about cases they've dealt with in which inhalant abusers have turned to desperate means to get the substances.

Jesse Flores of Youth Advocacy Program in Austin said in one case a 41-year-old man kept three teen-age women in a sort of harem. They stayed with the man and had sex with him in exchange for being supplied with inhalants, Flores said.

Jaime Garcia, a drug prevention supervisor with Aliivane Inc. of El Paso, said he knows of some parents who have bought inhalants for their children to keep them satisfied.

Chevo Quiroga, a gang interdiction counselor with Aliivane, said inhalant abuse often is associated with gang violence in his area.

Dickson said in the past there has been a false notion that inhalant abuse primarily is a Hispanic problem, but he said people of all races are using inhalants to get high.

A survey conducted by the commission in spring 1988 indicated about 27 percent of seventh-graders questioned had used inhalants. Of those questioned in twelfth grade, about 17 percent had used inhalants.

Researchers said the lower percentage among high school seniors may reflect that inhalant users are more likely to drop out of school and thus not be surveyed.

Juan Pena, head counselor at the West Dallas Community Center, runs a support group and other programs to help young people stop using inhalants.

Pena described trees in west Dallas where inhalant abusers leave plastic bags hanging to have quick access to them when sniffing. He said he goes there often and tears the bags down.

"I'm constantly like a mother hen. I'm always there," Pena said.

Zachary S. Thompson, the program's project director, said the organization takes a "holistic approach" by also visiting an inhalant abuser's home and school.

Contributing to the problem, Pena said, are merchants who continually sell inhalants to young people, sometimes even when they've been warned not to.

"We have people out there that just don't care. They're selling the spray to our kids," said Pena, who helped organize a merchant awareness campaign in Dallas.

Pena, 32, is a former inhalant abuser himself and said he had a cousin who died of inhalant abuse. Pena served time in state prison for a crime he said he committed while high on inhalants.

He said after prison he went back to his old neighborhood, saw inhalant abuse still was taking place and decided to do something about it.

Greyhound chairman says talks probably won't settle bus strike

By JOHN A. BOLT
AP Business Writer

DALLAS (AP) — On the eve of renewed negotiations with striking bus drivers, Greyhound Lines Inc. Chairman Fred G. Currey said he is not expecting the talks to produce a settlement in the two-week-old walkout.

Federal mediators scheduled separate meetings with the two sides today in Tucson, Ariz., with face-to-face negotiations to begin Saturday.

Neither the union nor Greyhound indicated if they had new proposals to offer.

"We're going back to listen to see what the council has to say," Currey said in an interview Thursday.

"We have high hopes since the union has pressed for these talks that they're ready to talk about what the company can afford to pay as opposed to dreaming about days gone by."

Jeffrey Nelson, a spokesman for the Amalgamated Council of Greyhound Local Unions, said, "We have high hopes and high expectations. ... Hopefully this will be a freewheeling, honest, fair give and take."

The company's 6,300 drivers, plus some 3,000 office and maintenance workers, walked out March 2 after talks broke down over wages and job security.

Greyhound says it cannot afford more than the $63 million pact it is offering, while Nelson said the two sides are "not that far apart" on financial aspects, but differ on grievance procedures.

Currey said the violence that has surrounded the strike has undermined his optimism at reaching a settlement.

"I guess the best way to characterize my feeling is that I have high hopes but very low expectations," he said.

"I believe these union leaders ... think they can win this strike through violence, terrorism and intimidation and if they think that, then I have very low expectations," Currey said.

"Union leaders do not believe violence will solve this problem," Nelson said.

Conceding union members may be responsible for some violence, Nelson said, "We have repeatedly gone to union officials at the local level, imploring them to let their own members know that this is not a way to solve a strike."

Since the walkout began, there have been at least 14 gunshot attacks on buses, 46 bomb threats, and numerous other incidents of vandalism or threats, including vacant buses set on fire, Currey said.

"I am in a controlled state of anger about it because violence and intimidation are a sort of flashback," said Currey, who led the buyout group that bought the bus company three years ago.

Greyhound has won court orders against the violence in more than a dozen cities, and Thursday said it reached agreement with the union to ban picketing and demonstrations at three Greyhound facilities in Jacksonville, Fla.

A state judge was expected to sign the order late Thursday.

Also Thursday, Greyhound said it agreed not to recruit, interview or train replacement drivers at the New York Port Authority terminal until a new hearing on an earlier injunction.

The company said it will continue to use replacements in New York, however.

The latest violence occurred Wednesday evening when at least two shots were struck a window on a bus traveling outside Chattanooga, Tenn., police said. No one was injured, police said, although the two passengers nearest the window got off.

Earlier this week, eight passengers were injured when a sniper fired on a bus traveling to Jacksonville, Fla.

Also in Florida, St. Petersburg police said a striking bus driver is being investigated after a security guard interrupted an apparent attempt to set an unoccupied bus on fire.

Nelson suggested the company is positioning itself to walk out of the negotiations.

"It takes two parties to negotiate," he said. "If one party is not prepared to negotiate then there can't be negotiations."

Currey said the company was returning to the bargaining table only because federal mediators indicated it might help end the strike. He would not say if the company has a new offer, but repeated past statements Greyhound can afford no more than the $63 million, three-year contract it first suggested.

Greyhound, the nation's only intercity bus company, has been operating at reduced levels since the strike began, using permanent replacements and union members willing to cross the picket line.

Spokesman George Gravelly said the company had carried more than 600,000 passengers since the strike began, including 44,364 on Wednesday, 41.7 percent of the load on the same day last year.

Gravelly said 37 percent of union-represented employees have crossed the picket lines, most of them mechanics and office workers.

The company says 394 union drivers are at work, joining 1,002 permanent replacements.

The union says only 94 of its drivers have crossed the line.

Paper work piles up on the table of the Senate subcommittee on education Thursday as, from left, committee members Carlos Truan, D-Corpus Christi; co-chairs Kent Caperton, D-Bryan, and Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, and an unidentified aide deliberate amendments for a school finance reform bill.

Senate panel proposes $1.2 billion bill for school finance reform plan

By SUSAN HIGHTOWER
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — A school-finance bill approved by a Senate education subcommittee was called a "giant step forward in equalization" among rich and poor school districts, but key lawmakers and Gov. Bill Clements say its $1.2 billion price tag may keep it from being adopted by the state.

The cost of the legislation was raised Thursday from $817 million for the 1990-91 school year by an amendment requiring the state to give extra funding to school districts for students who need special education, including bilingual, vocational and remedial programs.

Without the amendment, the bill would have considered only the basic allotment given to school districts based on the size of their populations of students with special needs. As amended, the bill also would consider the guaranteed yield, or "second tier," funds allotted to school districts by the state based on the rate of their property tax.

The full Senate will vote Monday on the bill.

The amendment, which was sponsored by Sen. Carlos Truan, D-Corpus Christi, was approved by the subcommittee 9-7. Truan said the measure is necessary because poor districts often have more students with special needs.

"As a result of the passage of this amendment, we are seriously considering equalizing education in the state of Texas," said Truan. "If we want to have a school system that meets the constitutional test, we must talk about dollars."

The chair of the subcommittee, Sen. Carl Parker, said he is not hopeful about the chances the more expensive bill will have when the Senate begins negotiations with the House, which is considering a $450 million measure.

"I'm still somewhat pessimistic that the House will jump up and do this much for us," said Parker, D-Port Arthur.

He said the bill could allow lawmakers "to do right by Texas" and lower property taxes. But he said if it is not fully funded, it could lessen the amount of money the state guarantees to each school district.

"My greatest fear and concern about this bill is that if the House fails to fund it at the $1.2 billion or thereabouts, then what we will end up with is having to reduce the basic allotment ... which delivers more money to fewer districts," he said.

Sen. Kent Caperton, a sponsor of the Senate bill and chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, agreed with Parker.

"The cost — We just don't have it," said Caperton, D-Bryan, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee. "You know, $1.2 billion really strains your credibility."

The Legislature is meeting in a special session to address a Texas Supreme Court ruling that the school finance system is unconstitutional because it allows disparities between property-rich and poor school districts.

The $13.5 billion-a-year system relies on a combination of state aid, local property taxes and some federal funds.

Clements, who favors a plan that would pump $234 million in additional money into public schools in 1990-91, has vowed to veto new taxes for school-finance reform.

"School districts wouldn't be able to plan for the efficient use of a billion dollars more by next year," Clements said in a Thursday speech to the United Way of Texas Volunteer Leaders Conference.

Speaker Gib Lewis said the House's $450 million education proposal will be ready for debate before the full House no later than Tuesday, adding, "the train wreck could happen any time."

Nicaragua aid could cost Texas $30 billion

By JENNIFER DIXON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Spending on military construction projects across Texas would be slashed by $30 million to help pay for $300 million in aid to Nicaragua under a Defense Department plan pending in Congress.

Texas Democrats, however, say they'll fight efforts to make Texas pick up one-tenth — more than any other state — of the aid package's cost.

California, which has a greater share of the total defense budget than Texas, would see military construction cuts amounting to half of what Texas would give up under the DOD plan.

"Foreign assistance proposals should stand on their own. The attempt to use Texas military construction funds for foreign aid is inept," Rep. Ron Coleman, D-El Paso, said Thursday.

"That's not the way we fund these programs and I'm going to oppose it," said Coleman, a member of the House Appropriations subcommittee on foreign operations and military construction.

Rep. Albert Bustamante, D-San Antonio, said the Pentagon appeared to be singling out Texas for cuts. The Defense Department's list of Army National Guard units targeted for military construction cutbacks includes only Texas facilities — in Dallas, San Antonio and Temple — for a total reduction of just over $9 million.

The Pentagon also proposes cutting $21 million in military construction at Fort Hood in Killeen and $650,000 in military construction at Carswell Air Force Base in Fort Worth, according to a Pentagon document.

"I think that they're picking on Texas — they just feel we had too much DOD money," Bustamante said.

Bustamante, a member of the House Armed Services Committee, said the cuts to Texas would be far more than $30 million because of the impact of a personnel freeze expected to generate $83 million in savings.

"We told our civilians we couldn't hire them anymore, but we find money out of their backs at the expense of rationing their monies for this other effort," Bustamante said Thursday.

"In mid-January we told military civilians that we were going to have a freeze because we don't have any money," Bustamante said. "Come March, we decide to help Nicaragua with $300 million."

Bustamante said Congress must still approve the Pentagon's plan and that he would fight it when it comes before the Armed Services Committee.

The cuts are not the first time this year the Pentagon has singled out several installations in Texas for reductions or closure. In January, Defense Secretary Dick Cheney recommended closing Bergstrom Air Force Base in Austin, the Longhorn Army Ammunition Plant in Karnack, and the Navy's Chase Field in Bee County.

Cheney is also recommending reducing troop strength by more than 12,000 personnel at Fort Hood and cutting the mission at the Red River Army Depot in Texarkana.

Stormie Jones cleared to go home

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Stormie Jones, the world's first and longest surviving recipient of a heart-liver transplant, was cleared to go home after nearly a month of hospital care, her mother said.

"She's doing fine. She had her last checkup today," Susie Purcell said Thursday from a Ronald McDonald House near Children's Hospital, where 12-year-old Stormie was operated on twice in two days.

Stormie and her mother, who live in the Fort Worth, Texas, suburb of White Settlement, were scheduled to return home today.

Stormie arrived in Pittsburgh Feb. 19, nearly six years to the day after her historic first transplant. Ten hours of surgery were needed Feb. 20 to replace Stormie's first donor liver, which was damaged by hepatitis caused by an unknown virus.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political graft from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Competition can benefit consumers

Right now a number of proposals for private or "public-private partnership" commuter trains are circulating. Several sound promising. The key to facilitating a successful project is to keep it as private as possible, with subsidies from taxpayers kept to a minimum approaching zero. From this perspective, a proposal by High Speed Surface Transportation of Japan sounds very interesting.

The Japanese company has built magnetic-levitation trains — which actually hover a fraction of an inch above tracks — for short demonstration projects or entertainment purposes so far. It has proposed to start with a short project in Southern California, with the goal of eventually building a 155 mile loop connecting the Los Angeles and Orange County airports into a loop that follows existing freeways into the San Fernando Valley and back. The elevated monorails would travel above and down the center of present freeways.

HSST is not immune to the idea of taxpayer funding, but recognizes that it may be difficult to get in this era. Spokesmen think they can raise the $30 million-per-mile construction cost privately. But they would want free use of street and freeway rights-of-way, sole rights to develop the system, technical assistance, and ridership research and cooperation in minimizing red tape.

As some of these projects move closer to reality, policy-makers should keep several principles in mind. The first is keeping subsidies to a minimum. The reason for this is not mean-spiritedness or a conviction that mass transit is not important; far from it.

When providers of any good or service are required to rely on the marketplace — on voluntary payments from consumers — they must then tailor the product to meet the real needs of consumers — what consumers actually want rather than what some group of experts think they should want. Thus, consumers are more likely to get a closer approximation of what they really want, more often than not at a lower price.

The second principle is to preserve flexibility. The High Speed Surface Transportation Company, for example, says it wants free use of freeways rights-of-way and exclusive rights to build there. It might not be a bad idea, however, to auction off those rights to the highest bidder, or to reserve the possibility of selling the right to put privately-built second decks above some freeways, to the same company or a different bidder.

Finally, competition isn't magic, but it tends to focus entrepreneurial attention wonderfully on cost reductions, innovation and consumer desires. Whenever competition can be built into or allowed to remain in any new system, from initial contracting to operations, consumers will benefit.

Handicapped bill limps along

WASHINGTON — By late May, if everything falls into line, the House will pass its own version of the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA). It will be a deservedly great day for the millions of persons who suffer from severe physical or mental handicaps.

Meanwhile, the bill is sort of limping along. It is coming under fire from small businesses and from large transportation companies. The bill has cleared the House Education and Labor Committee; it has gone through hearings before the Committee on Small Business. It yet must get over hurdles in three other committees. This is a slow and painful process. Persons with handicaps will understand.

Back in September, when the Senate's bill swept to approval by a vote of 76-8, this observer was among those who gave startled yelps of alarm. On barely one day's notice, the leadership rushed the bill to roll call. Many senators had no opportunity to learn of its sweeping provisions.

Some of the language appeared to be highly disputatious. For one example, the bill would prohibit discrimination against persons "regarded" as having a disability. It would require employers to make "reasonable" accommodation to the needs of the handicapped. Courts could order an employer to remodel his premises in ways that would not demand "significant" expense. This is legislative gauze; one sees through it dimly.

Further reflection persuaded me that the bill is not as ominous as it seemed last fall. The measure is indeed sweeping. Unlike some civil rights acts, which apply when there is some involvement of federal funds, the ADA applies to employers and institutions directly. But if the act is sensibly enforced and fairly interpreted, the financial burden upon American business will not be intolerable. The benefits to the handicapped will be immense.

James P. Turner, acting assistant attorney general for civil rights, made these points in testimony before a House committee on Feb. 22. Many of the terms that struck critics as vague and undefined are terms drawn from existing civil rights laws — laws that business has been able to live with. As it passed the Senate, in Turner's view, the bill is "a practical, workable, credible piece of legislation."

"Under the ADA, a restaurant would not be required to provide menus in Braille for blind patrons, if the waiters in the restaurant were willing to read the menu. A clothing boutique would not be required to have Brailled price tags. A bookstore would not be required to maintain a sign language interpreter on its staff..."

"Similarly, a neighborhood convenience store would not be required to have all of its shelves reduced in height; store personnel can provide in-store assistance for removing articles from high shelves for those in wheelchairs. And small businesses would not be bankrupted by the ADA's barrier removal requirements because they need only eliminate architectural barriers when it is 'readily achievable' to do so."

Lobbyists for the small-business community have been seeking to exempt employers of fewer than 15 workers from the public accommodations requirements. Speaking for the Bush administration, Turner objected to such a weakening. Such an amendment would exclude disabled persons from almost all doctors' and dentists' offices, from many hardware stores, barber shops, bar and beauty parlors, from some laundries and specialty food stores.

If the act is to achieve its compassionate aim of "mainstreaming" the handicapped, it has to be broadly applied. In any event, the public accommodations provisions would not take effect until 18 months after enactment.

The ADA still needs some fine-tuning. Explicit language should be added to make it clear beyond any misunderstanding that employers may not be sued for punitive damages. This is an understandable apprehension in an area fraught with the probabilities of emotional litigation. If an employer willfully discriminates against a disabled person, remedies should be limited to back pay, reimbursement for expenses, reinstatement and the like. In the highly subjective area of mental disabilities, the ADA has to be tightened.

But overall this is a good bill — and be assured that some bill will be enacted before this Congress ends in October. This is an idea whose time has come. Most disabled persons, in my observation, bear their burdens with amazing grace. The business community ought to be able to bear its lighter burden in the same cheerful fashion.

THE HUNT IS ON

They're never paid enough

Making you safer is a dangerous job. One hundred fifteen police officers were killed in the line of duty last year.

Twice that many killed themselves!

Policemen are now twice as likely to die in their own living rooms and by their own service revolvers than out there in the naked city.

Why?

The loneliest man in the world is the man who walks with a gun. The outlaw's arrogance, conceit and vanity are always superficial. He is never for an instant unaware of the cold steel bulge at his belt.

One day that gun is going to kill him. One way or another, his own gun will shorten his life.

For the gunfighter who fights on the side of the law it's little different. He, too, has been set apart from other men by his own choice. He has a special place in society.

The policeman goes his way with the usual worries about family sickness, the youngsters' education and the dentist's bill.

And on top of this he has to carry through life the weight of that gun.

Paul Harvey

A policeman has been vested with a part of the responsibility and the power of God — to judge men and to terminate human life. For all our legal checks and balance, often the choice must be his.

The nearest thing to companionship a policeman can know is that of another policeman, for these men are linked by the "big iron" which otherwise sets them apart.

A man can get used to his wife's good-night kiss maybe meaning goodbye, but it worries him sometimes that she has to help carry the weight of that gun. It sets her apart, too.

And so those men and women in law enforcement suffer disproportionately more divorce, drinking and drugs — and one of the highest suicide rates of any profession.

Ed Donovan, as a Boston police officer, was once on the edge of killing himself. Now retired from the force, he has created a special treatment center for active and retired lawmen.

There's another private mental health facility in Davie, Fla. — just for lawmen. Yet, most resist treatment — and suicides among cops increase.

Compounding the frustration inherent in this unlovely job is the recent generation's preoccupation with the "rights" of wrongdoers.

A life-risking pursuit and a ton of paper work may eventuate in a conviction that gets overturned on a trivial technicality.

And the cop who dares to shoot first — whatever the circumstances — may face demotion, suspension or be busted out without a pension.

In four decades of living very close to the police beat — and as the son of an early-days Oklahoma lawman — I have never met a policeman who is paid enough for what we expect him to do.

River dam dispute keeps on flowing

By ROBERT WALTERS

BUFFALO CREEK, Colo. — The decade-long controversy over whether to build the Two Forks Dam typifies the difficulty in resolving fundamental disagreements about how we use the nation's resources.

Although the site near the confluence of the South Platte River and its North Fork, 24 miles southwest of Denver, was considered a logical location for a dam as early as 1921, serious planning for the project did not get under way until 1981.

The politically powerful Denver Water Board and municipal water supply agencies in approximately 40 suburban communities, united as the Metropolitan Water Providers, then began pressing for the dam they argued was crucial to sustaining regional growth.

The cost of building the concrete structure 615 feet high and 1,700 feet wide was estimated at $500 million to $1 billion, but the local consortium was committed to pay all of those expenses.

The dam's proponents devoted eight years and $40 million to completing the environmental impact studies required by federal law. In June 1988, Colorado Gov. Roy Romer gave his qualified approval to the project. In March 1989, the Army Corps of Engineers issued a construction permit.

But the Two Forks Dam always had more than its share of critics, largely because the 7,300 acre reservoir created by it would engulf 25 to 30 miles of spectacularly beautiful Cheesman Canyon, unsurpassed for its recreation opportunities, particularly its trout fishing.

Opponents of the dam also noted that it would endanger the water flow to a unique sandhill crane habitat along the banks of the Platte River in central Nebraska, probably disrupting the birds' migration patterns.

In addition, they pointed out that at least one-third of impounded water was to be used not to slake the thirst of the region's growing population but to keep the Denver area's lawns and golf courses lush.

The country's leading conservation organizations made the future of Two Forks Dam an early test of President Bush's commitment to protecting the environment — and in March 1989 the head of the Environmental Protection Agency dramatically blocked further work on the project.

Arguing that the dam could result in "the very heavy, final and irremediable loss of an environmental treasure of national significance," EPA Administrator William K. Reilly took jurisdiction from his agency's regional office and ordered a special review of the project.

Reilly's decision was widely interpreted as marking the end of an ambitious dam-building era in the West that began more than a century ago and provided potable water to residents of thousands of communities.

Indeed, 37,000 of the nation's 68,000 dams span waterways west of the Mississippi River. But the Interior Department's Bureau of Reclamation, the agency that built many of them, announced in 1987 that it would phase out dam construction in favor of environmental protection and conservation activities.

Almost a year has passed since Reilly personally intervened in the Two Forks Dam dispute. Public hearings were held in Colorado and Nebraska last autumn, but no final decision has been forthcoming from EPA.

Moreover, there is no reason to believe that EPA's action will end the dispute. Officials of the Denver area's water supply agencies, for example, have threatened to secure the right to revive the project.

Just as surely as the icy waters of the South Platte's North Fork have roared through Buffalo Creek for decades, the struggle over the river's future — and countless similar disputes throughout the country — will continue unabated. If there is a quicker, more efficient way to resolve public policy disagreements that divide well-intentioned people, nobody seems to have identified it.

Family marks fifth year of captivity for hostage

By JOAN MOWER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Terry Anderson's friends and family are marking his fifth year as a hostage in Lebanon today as President Bush tries to dampen speculation the captives might be released soon.

"I wish I could tell you that there was a serious immediate effort that would pay off, but that isn't the case," Bush told members of the National Newspaper Association on Thursday.

He said he was perplexed by the "wave of speculation" a week or so ago that hostages might be released.

"I was wondering if it was some private initiatives on the part of lawyers or those representing the families of individuals held hostage," the president said. But he said his administration is "trying every avenue to free the hostages."

Bush's comments came as Anderson's relatives and the families of the other hostages arrived in Washington for a commemorative ceremony today in Lafayette Park, just across Pennsylvania Avenue from the White House.

Anderson, 42, the chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, is the longest-held of the American hostages in Lebanon. All told, 18 Westerners are believed to be captives there.

Anderson was kidnapped on a street in Beirut on March 16, 1985, after playing an early-morning game of tennis. Since then, he has been held in windowless rooms in the slums of Beirut, according to other hostages. Sometimes he has been chained and blindfolded.

During his five years as a hostage, Anderson's daughter has been born and his father and brother have died.

"Who would have ever thought in their wildest nightmares that this would last so long?" asked Peggy Say, Anderson's sister, who has traveled to the Middle East and Europe trying to free her brother.

Penny Anderson, his sister-in-law, and Carl Anderson, a cousin, were among those who attended an interfaith church service Thursday evening in the Buffalo suburb of Orchard Park, N.Y., about 40 miles from Anderson's boyhood home of Batavia.

The congregation signed pledges to sacrifice food or something else of importance in honor of Anderson and the other hostages. "Our commitment is to see the hostages released from their captivity and reunited with their families without any further delay," the congregation recited during the service.

No Greater Love, a Washington-based humanitarian organization, was sponsoring today's ceremony, as it has other observances on behalf of the hostages. Most recently, the group honored Anderson on his 42nd birthday.

In Tokyo, the Foreign Correspondents' Club of Japan was holding a ceremony tonight to honor Anderson, who was assigned to the AP Tokyo bureau from January 1977 to August 1981.

Members of the club were to raise symbolically empty glasses in a toast to Anderson, a salute that planners said also would be made at the National Press Club in Washington, D.C., and at the Association de la Presse International in Brussels.

"Obviously our hearts are with Terry, a friend and former colleague here," said Mike Tharp, club president and bureau chief of U.S. News and World Report, "but our efforts are also directed at encouraging those who hold all hostages to release them. That would clearly be in everyone's best interests."

Recent speculation about the hostages stemmed in part from statements attributed to Iranian President Hashemi Rafsanjani that he would like to see the hostages freed.

Mrs. Say said her impression from talking to various people is that Iran knows it will not get Western aid to rebuild its economy until the hostages are released. Iran's economy was devastated by its eight-year war with Iraq.

The hostages are believed being held by elements within Hezbollah, an umbrella group of radical Shiites. But the captives apparently are kept by different factions of Hezbollah.

Prosecution may conclude case against Poindexter by Monday

By PETE YOST
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Oliver North gave such valuable testimony that the government may conclude its case against John Poindexter by Monday, Iran-Contra prosecutor Dan Webb said Thursday.

Webb said North's testimony "went well" and that the government "got a lot" out of the former White House aide, who testified that he witnessed Poindexter tear up a politically embarrassing presidential document.

Earlier, during North's four days on the stand, U.S. District Judge Harold Greene called North a "hostile witness" and said getting him to answer questions on the stand was like "pulling teeth."

But Webb said Thursday that North's testimony "cut off two or three weeks" of the prosecution's work and that "I could rest as early as Monday."

During his testimony, North said Poindexter sent him to a meeting with members of Congress where North lied by denying he was assisting the Contras. Before the meeting, Poindexter assured North that he could "take care of" the matter.

After Webb's remarks, the prosecution called as a witness the former general counsel to the CIA, Stanley Sporkin, who drafted the presidential finding that Poindexter subsequently destroyed.

Sporkin explained how he was contacted in late November 1985 by the CIA's deputy director, John McMahon, and was briefed by agency staffers on a Hawk missile shipment to Iran that the CIA was assisting.

"It was my preliminary view ... that ... for the CIA to provide help that I would require that the president of the United States" sign a document approving the action, Sporkin testified.

Federal law requires that "before the CIA can undertake" such activity in a foreign country "it must have a finding," said Sporkin.

The document wasn't drafted until after the Hawks were delivered, so Sporkin included a sentence saying that "all prior actions taken by U.S. ... officials" in the operation "are hereby ratified."

The document, which depicted the Iran initiative as a straight arms-for-hostages deal, was torn up by Poindexter a year later when the arms sales were exposed.

Sporkin is now a U.S. district judge serving in the same courthouse where Poindexter is on trial.

The hurriedly drafted document, known as a "finding," depicted the U.S. government as being involved in a straight arms-for-hostages deal with Iran. Poindexter presented it to President Reagan for his signature two weeks after the missiles were sent to Iran.

Poindexter tore it up when the administration's Iran initiative was exposed a year later.

He destroyed the paper the same day he told the House and Senate intelligence committees that he hadn't known about the Hawk shipment until five weeks after it occurred.

Pro-Iranian kidnappers threaten to kill hostages

By FAROUK NASSAR
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Pro-Iranian kidnappers say they will kill three American hostages in Lebanon unless the United States meets their demands. It also attacked the Soviet Union and threatened flights carrying Soviet Jews to Israel.

Today, Beirut newspapers published a letter to American hostage Terry Anderson from the mother of his child on the fifth anniversary of his abduction in west Beirut.

The threats Thursday from Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine drew fire from a State Department official, who denounced the call as a "cynical manipulation" of the hostage relatives timed to coincide with today's planned ceremonies for Anderson.

A kidnappers' message and statement, each with a picture of one of the hostages, said the fanatical Moslem group is "holding agents and spies against our people and they will be executed if the American administration fails to meet our demands."

The group did not specify its demands. It previously offered to trade professors Robert Polhill, 55, of New York City; Alann Steen, 50, of Boston; and Jesse Turner, 42, of Boise, Idaho, for 400 Arab inmates of Israeli jails. Israel said no, and the Reagan administration refused to pressure Israel.

The three American educators were kidnapped at gunpoint on Jan. 24, 1987, from the campus of the U.S.-affiliated Beirut University College.

A handwritten statement in Arabic was delivered to the independent newspaper An-Nahar, accompanied by a new photograph of Steen. A statement to a Western news agency came with a recent picture of Polhill.

Steen and Polhill are among 18 Westerners, including eight Americans, held hostage in Lebanon. The longest held is Anderson, 42, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, who was abducted March 16, 1985.

In a letter published by seven Beirut newspapers, Madeleine Bassil told Anderson that she and their 4-year-old daughter, Sulome, also feel like hostages.

"We are in as much captivity, Terry, only our living space is bigger here and it's shared by millions. I know you will keep well, I know you will never give up," it said.

In the Islamic Jihad statement, the group threatened to kill its three hostages and accused the United States of responsibility for the emigration of Soviet Jews to Israel

"after pressure on the Soviets who succumbed and collaborated in this big conspiracy."

The statement warned, "Our people shall not stand handcuffed in front of this conspiracy. We shall not at all suffice ourselves by watching but shall begin taking the adequate measures to prevent the arrival of the Soviets."

"All airports facilitating the transport as well as airlines, their jetliners and offices, will be direct targets for us. This is a warning and a threat."

The Kremlin has lifted restrictions on Jewish emigration and hundreds of thousands of Soviet Jews now are expected in Israel, creating a huge stir in the Arab world.

The Arabs fear the Soviet Jews will settle in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, where Palestinians hope to create a homeland.

"Teach me thy way, O LORD, and LEAD ME IN A PLAIN PATH..."

How beautiful are the paths and wagon trails. The gate is open and the pathway clearly marked. Many such trails are rapidly becoming memories as super highways take their place. It is good to know that God's way is still the same and will never change... for "God's word will endure forever." His love is clearly defined and his ways are well marked. Depend on the Lord to direct you each day. Attend church each Sunday and worship the Lord in his holy temple.

The Church is God's appointed agency in this world for spreading the knowledge of His love for man and of His demand for man to respond to that love by loving his neighbor. Without this grounding in the love of God, no government or society or way of life will long persevere and the freedoms which we hold so dear will inevitably perish. Therefore, even from a selfish point of view, one should support the Church for the sake of the welfare of himself and his family. Beyond that, however, every person should uphold and participate in the Church because it tells the truth about man's life, death and destiny; the truth which alone will set him free to live as a child of God.

"Hold up my goings in thy paths, that my footsteps slip not."

Meeting set for Baptist Young Women

BORGER - Fairlanes Baptist Church in Borger will host a meeting of the Baptist Young Women from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday at the church.

Baptist Young Women is an auxiliary to the Palo Duro Baptist Association. The topic of the Saturday meeting is "Lovely Feet Exploring Their Roles in God's World Today."

A nursery and lunch will be provided to those attending. The meeting is open to the public.

Sonja McAninch, director of the Baptist Young Women, said the group is not activated in the Palo Duro Association of the Top O' Texas area because they do not know what they could do for Jesus in changing the communities.

A tentative list of speakers for the day includes Phyllis Berg of the Texas Department of Human Resources, a Red Cross speaker, J.V. and Berline Selmon of Mission Services Corps in Amarillo, Steve Vernon of Christian Life Commission in Panhandle and Susan Edwards of the Baptist Crisis Center in Midland.

McAninch said the Association covers 21 Southern Baptist churches.

"We need to activate. The meeting is to decide what projects we want to work on," McAninch.

The church is located at 3000 Fairlanes Blvd.

His Touch

By Charlotte Barbaree

Scripture: We must pay more careful attention, therefore, to what we have heard, so that we do not drift away. For if the message spoken by angels was binding, and every violation and disobedience received its just punishment, how shall we escape if we ignore such a great salvation? (Hebrews 2:1-3a NIV)

My husband comes from a huge family, and he had the pleasure of growing up among a throng of grandparents, aunts, uncles and cousins.

One steamy Arkansas afternoon when my husband was a small boy, he was playing on the porch of his grandparent's house. He was joined by his "Big Daddy" and Big Daddy's brother, Uncle Tom. The old men sat in their favorite rocking chairs in a shaded corner of the porch and swatted flies and shot the breeze.

Though it was winding down, World War II was still going and Big Daddy was serving as Senior Warden of Civil Defense. In the course of the conversation, something brought this position to Uncle Tom's mind who knew what he was talking about though he had the words wrong. Thus began an exchange fit for an Abbott and Costello sketch.

Uncle Tom asked, "Jim, are ye a seener wardman?"

"Now, I ain't seen nobody," replied Big Daddy.

Uncle Tom persisted, "I said, are ye a seener wardman?"

Irritated with Uncle Tom's apparent denseness, Big Daddy snapped, "Dad bern it, Tom, I done tol you I ain't seen nobody!"

The two old men got so hot under the collar that the little boy playing on the porch thought a fight was going to break out. Uncle Tom never managed to make himself clear, and Big Daddy's mind was so locked into his misinterpretation that the problem was never cleared up.

Oh, how we mortals lock ourselves into our deliberate misunderstanding of the terms of salvation! As I've heard many times before, I recently heard a woman in a talk show audience say, "I believe as long as we are nice to others, are good citizens, and are decent people, we will go to heaven."

The audience applauded wildly in eager acceptance of her open-mindedness. They howled hostile objections to the guest Christian who was trying to share the plan of salvation. How we want to believe good intentions and common decency will be our ticket to heaven!

But God has told us that Jesus is the one and only way to eternity in his presence. He has filled a book with all the right words presented repeatedly in every way possible to make that fact clear to us. But, tragically, we prefer to misinterpret the message and to argue in defense of a lost cause.

If we don't pay attention, we will spend the Great Judgment Day having our misunderstanding explained to us in the most hellish of terms.

Houston Catholic schools succeed against the odds

By JULIA DUIN
Houston Chronicle

HOUSTON (AP) — Catholic schools nationwide are suffering from economic problems and plunging enrollments.

"Catholic high schools educate students better than public schools do," said sociologist James Coleman in an interview published in the July 1989 U.S. Catholic magazine. Coleman's findings were based on studies of 58,728 Catholic high school students around the country. "Catholic high school students score higher in academic tests, especially in math and English; they attend college 20-30 percent more, and they succeed in college more often than public school students with similar backgrounds," he said.

But academics is not a strong enough lure to the nation's largest alternative school system.

In 1964, the nation's Catholic school system enrolled 5.6 million students in 13,000 schools. By 1989, that number had dropped to 2.5 million students in 8,867 schools.

Fewer school-age students is one reason for that drop, according to the National Catholic Education Association.

Many Catholic schools have been especially hard-hit in large inner-city dioceses. But the Diocese of Galveston-Houston's school system is an exception. This school year, enrollment rose by 100 students in the diocese's 54 schools. Last year, enrollment increased by 250. Total enrollment is 14,050.

In the past five years, the diocese has closed one high school and opened two elementary schools, one demanded by parents.

Parents packed a hall at St. John Vianny Catholic Church a few years ago to discuss starting a school in far west Houston. "However," said development director Janie Hengst, support dwindled as it was made clear the school's beginnings would be humble.

Furthermore, Galveston-Houston

Bishop Joseph Fiorenza decided the school would not follow the traditional route of being linked with one parish.

His reason was that the cost of a new school — $229,262 for John Paul II in the 1988-89 school year — is prohibitive for one parish. Instead, it would be "regionalized," a new trend in Catholic education that allows schools to draw students and support from several parishes.

Parents still were wary. John Paul II started in 1988 with 58 students, way below projections of at least 100. This year, enrollment jumped to 122 students meeting in six portable classrooms on a vacant two-acre lot.

The small school already has a sense of community fostered by daily morning prayer sessions around the school flagpole.

"Parents are appreciative that their children are learning prayers they didn't know before and that they're going to Mass regularly," said principal Karen Pacheco.

Tuition is $1,580 at John Paul II, much of which goes to pay the school's staff.

None of the teachers is a nun because of a national shortage within religious orders.

As the number of nuns has declined, tuition fees have risen, partly to draw laity who demand higher salaries.

Diocesan minimum salaries for a beginning teacher with a bachelor's degree are $10,200 a year and $10,500 yearly for a beginner with a master's degree.

The elementary principals interviewed said salaries rarely rise over $15,500.

Holy Name Catholic School struggles to survive urban blight.

Years ago, the Italian founders of this near north Houston parochial school left for greener suburban pastures.

Holy Name found itself adrift in a sea of immigrants and the very poor.

experiencing a renaissance through commuter parents who once attended the school. They bring their children by on the way to work.

"I really like the school because the classes are small and the kids get a lot of attention," said Martha Montemayor, a Holy Name alumna who brings her 6-year-old son, John, to Holy Name each day from their home near Greenspoint Mall.

Holy Name's teachers have few resources. The school has no science equipment, no counselors, no competitive sports and no overhead projectors. Classes make do with newsprint paper and chalkboards.

Students have a gym with a peeling ceiling and a scoreboard that doesn't work.

Vice principal Zena Tamborello's dingy, unheated office resembles a garage containing a beaten up desk and a padded blue chair.

Four years ago, the Sisters of the Sacred Heart took on Holy Name and Immaculate Heart of Mary school in the East End so Hispanics, who live in the neighborhood around the schools could get a Catholic education.

Ninety-five percent of Holy Name's 140 students are Hispanic.

"We chose this school to express the mercy and tenderness of God, especially to the poor," said Sister Elizabeth Ann Vasquez, principal and a member of the order.

Holy Name depends heavily on Friday night bingo games and eight yearly fund drives that raise one-quarter of their $230,000 budget.

Together they founded a gospel singing group called Vicki and the Royalheirs. The group was popular throughout the Southwest and showcased Mrs. Patterson as the lead singer from 1972 to 1974. Mr. Patterson took care of the arranging and speaking and sang baritone in the group.

The Pattersons also founded and pioneered a church in West Houston that was tabbed as the fastest growing church in the South in 1983-84.

The Pattersons

The couple now resides in Guymon, Okla., where their son, Clint, is a student leader in Guymon High School. The 6-foot-4-inch sophomore played point guard this year on the varsity basketball team.

Children in restaurants cause sour looks

DEAR ABBY: So "Indigestion in Anaheim" has had it with all those "cute" little toddlers in restaurants whose yelling and screaming make it impossible for other diners to carry on a conversation? Well, I have a message for her: Parents of toddlers like to eat out occasionally, too. It's nice when you can take the family out to eat and have someone else clean up the mess (and toddlers do make a mess).

Don't criticize toddlers for whining and crying — that's what children that age do. You were no different when you were a toddler. (Ask your mother.) Adults can be loud and irritating, too, so please don't pick on toddlers.

OFFENDED IN PHILLY

DEAR ABBY: I agree with "Indigestion in Anaheim." I, too, am tired of going to restaurants and having my evening ruined by families with small children. Here are some tips for parents:

(1) The party at the next table does not want to say "hi" 20 times to your toddler. (2) If a baby needs a shopping bag of toys to keep him busy, he is too young to be eating out. (3) If your child acts up, don't wait until he starts screaming at the top of his lungs. Take him outside immediately. Your waitress will be happy to pack up your leftovers and get you out of the place.

You say the reason you take your child to restaurants is to teach him how to conduct himself in a public place. Fine. There is something else your child needs to learn at an early age — respect for other people.

ROYAL OAK, MICH.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Sad to say, several times a week, we read in the newspapers about families having lost all their possessions as the result of a fire and having no insurance.

This, of course, is most often true of people who rent their homes or apartments. Don't they realize that fire insurance for renters is available for a very nominal fee? Fire alone is a terrible tragedy to endure without financial hardship added to one's woes. Passing this on to your readers and urging them to insure their personal possessions could be a great service. Perhaps some people don't know that renter's insurance is available — or the thought of getting it never occurred to them.

Remember, things like that don't always happen to the "other guy."

TAKING NO CHANCES

DEAR TAKING: In my book, insurance is not a luxury — it's a necessity. To some, paying premiums month after month may seem like betting on a long shot, but when a dreaded calamity becomes a reality and you're covered — it's like winning a lottery!

DEAR ABBY: This is for "Indigestion in Anaheim": People like you give me indigestion. We have three children under 5 years old, and we take them out to eat once a week. They are not always angels, but whose kids are? We are tired of the long sighs and dirty looks we get from other diners if one of our kids acts up.

We purposely avoid the "family" restaurants because they're full of kids, and it just doesn't work out. Where we come from, sitters charge by the child, which is too expensive. So when you see families with small children eating out, give us a break and don't treat us like we have some kind of contagious disease.

PARENTS WITH CHILDREN

DEAR ABBY: You may have noticed that the parents of children who misbehave in restaurants are the fastest eaters in the world. My wife and I enjoy eating out but we can't always find sitters; therefore, we have to take our children with us and hope they behave.

Children are unpredictable. At times, ours behave so well that strangers compliment us. Other times, we end up gulping our food and running out of the place red-faced.

SPEED EATERS

DEAR ABBY: You reach more people in your column than anyone I can think of, so please publish this. Baby sitters who sit in a parent's home and earn more than $50 during a calendar quarter must pay Social Security tax and income tax on their earnings, if the parent who employs them chooses to claim a Child Care Credit on her tax return. Why? Because in order to claim the Child Care Credit, the parent must fill out a "Form W-10 Dependent Care Provider's Identification and Certification," which lists the baby sitter's name, address and Social Security number.

If the parent decides to claim the Child Care Credit, the baby sitter's pay should be increased enough to cover the resulting taxes (at least 32 percent) when federal, state and Social Security taxes are figured in.

When you consider that the Child Care Credit is only 20 percent to 30 percent (depending on your income) of the amount actually paid out for child care, wouldn't it be less expensive for everyone if the parent decided not to claim that credit?

A KENTUCKY TAXPAYER

DEAR TAXPAYER: Yes. And when many mothers on limited incomes realize that — they will probably forgo the "credit." Thanks for pointing it out.

Spartans win in OT

Michigan State edges Murray State in first-round action

By SKIP LATT
AP Sports Writer

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Kirk Manns found himself in midair under the basket, holding the ball and Michigan State's season in his hands.

"I didn't know what I was going to do," he said. "I got myself in a bad spot, getting myself up in the air like that. I don't stay up in the air that long once I get there, so I had to do something."

Manns decided to do what came naturally, spinning a blind shot off the backboard and in to give Michigan State a two-point lead on the way to a 75-71 overtime victory over 16th-seeded Murray State in a first-round NCAA Southeast Regional game on Thursday.

"I feel like we got a reprieve today," Spartan coach Jud Heathcote said after his Big Ten champions, the region's No. 1 seed, outscored Murray State 8-3 in the final 2:19 of overtime.

Michigan State (27-5) survived to advance into the second round against another team that benefited from late heroics, UC Santa Barbara.

The Gauchos (22-9) slipped by Houston 70-66.

On the other side of the bracket, LSU (23-8) beat Villanova 70-63, handing Wildcats coach Rollie Massimino his first-ever loss in 10 first-round NCAA games, and Georgia Tech (25-6) dumped East Tennessee State 99-83 to run its record outside the Atlantic Coast Conference to 17-0.

Michigan State survived a 37-point performance by Murray State's Popeye Jones, whose basket gave the Racers a 68-67 lead with 2:52 left in overtime.

Steve Smith, who led Michigan State with 22 points, hit consecutive jumpers for a 71-68 lead.

A 3-point basket by Frank Allen tied the game before Manns pulled off his aerial basket to put the Spartans ahead for good at 73-71 with 42 seconds to play.

"A game like this should help us. We overcame some adversity and we can build on it," Manns, who scored 21 points, said.

The loss ended a dream season for Murray State, champion of the Ohio Valley Conference.

"Our guys took us on a magic carpet ride this year," said Coach Steve Newton, whose Racers (21-9) began the season 1-5.

Santa Barbara led most of the way against Houston, but fell behind 66-65 on a jumper by the Cougars' Craig Upchurch with 1:17 to play.

Eric McArthur hit a follow shot to put Santa Barbara up 67-66 with 59 seconds remaining, added a free throw with 28 seconds left and then came up with a steal with 10 seconds left.

The final-minute plays capped a game in which McArthur, the Gauchos' career rebounding leader, had 20 points, 11 rebounds, five blocked shots and four steals.

"We came in with two goals: to hold them under 70 points and to play well on the defensive end. We did both," McArthur said.

Santa Barbara coach Jerry Pimm said he could not have asked for better execution.

"Our plan was to be patient and look for the quick shot. We took them out of their game. They had only one layup," Pimm said. "We had a very successful game. These guys believe in what we want them to do and that will help us win."

Carl Herrera topped Houston (25-8) with 19 points.

LSU hurt itself with 26 turnovers, but held Villanova to 30.4 percent shooting and outrebounded the Wildcats 47-38.

LSU bolted to a 25-8 lead, held a 44-31 advantage in the second half, then withstood a rally that saw Villanova get to 63-58 late in the game.

The Tigers have blown large leads in several games this season, but LSU coach Dale Brown said he took heart in his team holding off the Wildcats for 40 minutes.

"We came into the game with our lunch bucket. We played good defensively and we had the best (offensive and defensive) balance we've had all year," Brown said.

"I was pleased to see we did not lose our composure tonight. Although we are young, I never once saw us panic in the huddle. We could have lost our composure, but we didn't."

The Tigers got 16 points each from All-American guard Chris Jackson and Maurice Williamson, who hit four 3-point jumpers in the first half.

Massimino, who won an NCAA title in 1985, thinks LSU is a team with a chance.

"I give LSU a very good future in this tournament. They have an outstanding rebounding team and they are very aggressive," Massimino said. "We have played with some of the best teams in the nation (in the Big East Conference) and LSU certainly fits into that category."

Chris Walker led the Wildcats with 20 points.

Georgia Tech had no trouble with East Tennessee State, which in last year's first round took Oklahoma to the final second before losing 72-71.

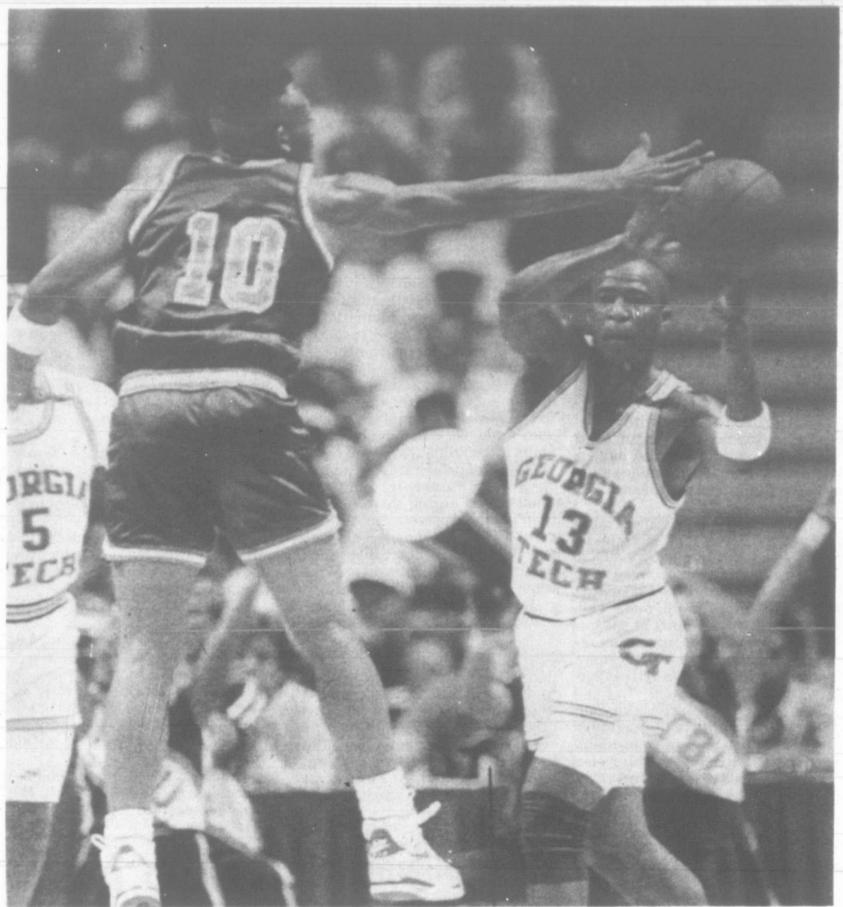

The Atlantic Coast Conference tournament champion led throughout, jumping to a 14-4 lead in the first four minutes and building a 49-24 halftime lead behind Dennis Scott's 21 first-half points.

Scott scored 36 and Kenny Anderson added 21 points and 10 assists.

"We respected East Tennessee State and we came out ready for them," Georgia Tech coach Bobby Cremins said.

"Kenny is our key," Cremins said. "He shot the ball extremely well (eight of 11 from the field, including three of four from 3-point range) and runs the show. It was a great start into the NCAA tournament."

Calvin Telford and Keith Jennings topped East Tennessee (27-7) with 17 points each.

Tagliabue: An NFL mover

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Football Writer

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — If the five days of the NFL meetings are any indication, the league is in for a lot of changes in the Paul Tagliabue era.

Tagliabue's first meetings as commissioner adjourned Thursday with his stamp in evidence — on television, labor, officiating, realignment and a steroids policy. Now he will focus on items as varied as street drugs and corporate ownership.

Tagliabue not only got $3.64 billion over four years from television but was able to save instant replay for another year in the face of heavy odds, to implement random year-round steroid testing, to bridge the gap between coaches and officials, and to put into place a new committee that he hopes will end the labor impasse.

He also took the first step in two decades to realign divisions into more realistic groupings when he appointed a committee on expansion and realignment.

"With a little bit of luck, things kind of fell into place," Tagliabue said of a week that went just about as well as he could have planned.

The next step will come May 23-24 at Dallas, when the owners will meet again to tie up loose ends and perhaps break new ground in keeping with the slogan, "Carry the NFL into the 21st century."

One item yet to be resolved is hiring of a drug adviser to replace Dr. Forrest Tennant, who resigned under much fire before the meetings began.

Tagliabue said he had interviewed several candidates and would interview others before making a decision. He also said that he was working with a Minnesota drug counselor Peter Bell, although Bell is not a candidate for the job because he is not a physician.

Corporate ownership, which lacks the pizzazz of drugs, is almost as controversial among the league's owners.

For years, league bylaws have prohibited corporate ownership for fear of selling NFL stocks over the counter and because a wealthy corporation would have far more money to spend on players than a family-owned team.

Tagliabue said he might favor such ownership under the right circumstances. He noted that NHL and NBA teams have been owned by corporations and cited what he called responsible corporations "like Disney and Coca-Cola" that might be brought in.

Asked if he envisioned teams someday being called the 3-M Vikings or the Coca-Cola Falcons, he replied: "That's when I will no longer be commissioner."

The main order of business Thursday didn't involve the NFL, but the World League of American Football, the overseas offshoot that will begin next March. The WLAF awarded its first United States franchise to Orlando, New York will have a team and four other American franchises will be selected by June 1.

The overseas franchises are likely to be located in Mexico City, Montreal, London, Barcelona, Milan and Frankfurt.

PHS girls on track for another state run

Lady Harvesters entered in Hereford track meet

By SONNY BOHANAN
Sports Editor

Though the 1990 track and field season has barely begun, the Lady Harvester thinclads appear well on their way to upholding the strong tradition they built in the decade of the 1980s.

With only three meets under their belts, the Lady Harvesters already have one championship and two runner-up finishes to their credit. And they're likely to add another team title to that list when they travel to Hereford Saturday.

"Plainview and Hereford will be the ones to beat," said girls coach Mike Lopez, whose team will face five others Saturday, including Plainview, Hereford, Randall, Canyon and Clovis. "If we're going to win, we'll have to do well in the field events, because that's our strong point right now. We're not placing that many on the track."

"It will be a good battle. Hereford has the advantage on the track and we've got the advantage on the field."

Indeed, the Lady Harvesters have at least one girl on the area track honor roll in every field event except shotput. Sophomore Nikki Ryan is currently the No. 1 long jumper in the Panhandle-area, regardless of classification, with a leap of 17 feet, 2 1/2 inches.

That jump is ranked seventh in the state in Class 4A, according to the latest issue of the Track and Field News, published the first week of March.

"We're really pleased about that," Lopez said. "I think she'll go 18 feet this year. We just haven't had good jumping weather yet. Last year she had a 17-foot jump, and she'll be able to go 18 I bet."

"It's her favorite event."

Ryan also made the honor roll in the triple jump, 400 relay and 800 relay.

Tara Hamby, a senior discus and shot thrower, recorded a throw of 120-10 last weekend in the disc, bettering her previous best by seven feet and leaving her in third place on the area honor roll. At present, she has the No. 1 throw in the state in Class 4A.

"That gave her a lot of incentive," Lopez said. "We've been stressing her discus throwing a lot more than shot because she has a better chance in the discus."

Jennifer Bailey is among 10 high jumpers tied for seventh on the honor roll. She has cleared 5-0 consistently in all three meets.

strength of the Lady Harvesters and all three are presently in the area's top 10.

The 400 relay, made up of Ryan, Tonya Osby, Christa West and Lisa Jeffery, has a time of 51.8 to check in at No. 5 on the honor roll. Ryan, West, Jeffery and Shanna Molitar ran the 800 relay in 1:49.6 to capture the No. 4 spot.

The 1600 relay, consisting of West, Molitar, LaTonya Jeffery and Michelle Whitson, are in seventh place on the honor roll with a time of 4:22.5.

"I expect those times to go down considerably over the next couple of weeks," Lopez said. "We're right on schedule as to where we were last year. We broke 50 seconds in the 400 relay and 1:49 in the 800 relay on this weekend last year."

"We ran a 4:21 in the mile relay this time last spring, then dropped to 4:15 the next weekend, so we're right where we should be."

Sophomore Bridgett Mathis, who made the honor roll in the triple jump and provided a leg on two of the relays earlier in the season, is out for at least three more weeks with a pulled hamstring.

"It hurts us to be without Bridgett, but Lisa (Jeffery) has come in and done a good job," Lopez said. "I feel like we have four pretty good legs on the relays."

Heart trouble caused Gathers' death

By JOHN NADEL
AP Sports Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An autopsy confirmed that heart trouble caused the death of Hank Gathers, but other questions were unanswered.

The Loyola Marymount basketball player died of inflammation and scarring of the heart muscle, the Los Angeles County Coroner's office said in its autopsy report released Thursday. The report also stated there were no traces of illegal drugs in Gathers' system.

How long he had the heart problem before his death on March 4, or what caused the scarring and inflammation probably will never be determined, although doctors said a virus such as flu may have caused the damage.

"It probably was a virus he had sometime before Dec. 9 (when Gathers fainted during a Loyola Marymount game) and will never be pinpointed," said Bruce Fagel, a physician and lawyer who has been hired by Gathers' family.

"Whatever happened was not an ongoing process. We have from the autopsy an answer we knew already. But the findings don't answer the question which is the critical issue here, which ultimately is whether he should have been playing under the circumstances."

Fagel, who had spoken with the coroner's office earlier in the day to discuss the autopsy, added, "Nothing in the heart showed that he had a problem that would have prevented him from playing, such as a major defect in his heart. There was no evidence of a congenital problem."

Dr. Stephen Berens, a cardiologist in Santa Monica who had no contact with the Gathers case, said, "He could have had a very mild case of flu and in a small percentage of people, they get a significant inflammation of the heart muscle and it doesn't go away. He could have been completely healthy before getting the flu, absolutely."

Also left unanswered was whether Gathers had faithfully taken Inderal the medicine prescribed for his irregular heartbeat. Further tests are being conducted that could detect the medicine in his system.

Gathers, who was 23, collapsed during a West Coast Conference tournament game at Loyola Marymount and was pronounced dead less than two hours later.

He had been diagnosed in December as having an irregular heartbeat. He had collapsed during a game against UC Santa Barbara on Dec. 9, but left the court under his own power. After extensive medical tests, he was prescribed Inderal and was allowed to resume playing.

In the days before he died, Gathers was said to have asked doctors to reduce the dosage because it made him sluggish. He reportedly complained that he was unable to perform at the level which made him college basketball's leading scorer and rebounder during the 1988-89 season.

Dotti shares first-round lead in Tucson Open

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Marta Figueras-Dotti smiled knowingly when she thought of the golfers who would be facing a course she had just played.

"The wind was perfect this morning," said Figueras-Dotti, who shot a 5-under-par 67 Thursday morning. "It picked up on us on the 12th hole. It's really blowing out there now."

Wind gusting to 25 mph took a bite out of most scores Thursday afternoon, and Figueras-Dotti's early round stood up for a share of first-round lead in the LPGA Tucson Open. The 32-year-old from Spain, winless in seven seasons as a pro, withstood the rising wind late in her round, getting four birdies over the last six holes on the 6,243-yard North course at Randolph Park to catch Nancy Rubin at 67.

The wind actually helped Rubin avoid disaster on No. 8, when the wind carried her tee shot on the par-

3 hole into the bleachers. The ball bounded into a clearing, allowing Rubin to chipped within 10 feet and sink a par-saving putt.

Only nine players from the afternoon group managed to break par, with Kate Rogerson's 69 the best of the session. The other eight were all at 71.

Tammie Green was among the players from the afternoon group who had bids for the lead spoiled by the wind.

O'Connor hopeful of ending lockout

By RONALD BLUM
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Today is a big decision day for baseball. The leagues must decide what to do about opening day, and players and owners must decide if they want to deal with each other.

Management negotiator Chuck O'Connor said he thinks the plan he will give the union today will result in an agreement. Union chief Donald Fehr questioned whether there would be a session. He said he didn't know what the plan would entail and called O'Connor's announcement "silly and amateurish."

That's where things are on the 30th day of the spring training lockout. Opening day is in limbo, as are the talks.

The American and National Leagues will make an announcement about the April 2 openers following today's events. O'Connor said he expected some games would be canceled even if there was an agreement today.

Several sources close to the negotiations, all of whom spoke on condition they not be identified, said they did not expect owners to move in today's proposal on the issue of salary arbitration eligibility, the key to the stalemate.

According to some, owners would propose a $100,000 minimum salary and a $54 million annual pension contribution. In addition, sources said the proposal would offer 25-man rosters this year after expanded rosters at the beginning of the season, and definite dates for adding six expansion teams during the 1990s.

The sources cautioned that things were changing rapidly, and could change again after a meeting of the six-owner Player Relations Committee in New York today. The proposal also could change after it initially is presented, the sources said.

"It is substantial and beyond what the industry has seen before," O'Connor said, in describing what he called "a wall-to-wall proposal."

"But I have to tell you, this is a funny business. What would normally lead to optimism does not give me total confidence that we will get (an agreement)."

Management's proposal for a $4 million bonus pool was rejected and the union's proposal to have half the 2-to-3-year players eligible for arbitration was rejected, too. That's where things stood when talks broke down last week.

"There are some areas we need to finalize," O'Connor said of the new plan. "There are some areas we are discussing with the union as we speak."

Fehr, speaking later in his office, was angry about the way it was announced.

"Usually before somebody says they have the deal-maker proposal, they ask somebody on the other side if they think it is that," Fehr said.

Fehr said he spoke with O'Connor several times Thursday and said, "I have no reason to believe there is any movement at all in the two-to-three area."

O'Connor said the meeting was scheduled for the union's office, four blocks from the commissioner's office, and said it would be there at the union's request. Fehr denied that a meeting was set, calling O'Connor's statement "the most extreme discourtesy yet during the negotiations."

Asked to answer if he believed the proposal contained enough for the union that he thought it would lead to an agreement, O'Connor said he believed it would.
