President Bush, right, greets South African leader Nelson Mandela on the south lawn of the White House Monday.

Mandela asks Congress to fight apartheid policy

By JOAN MOWER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nelson Mandela appealed to Congress today to support the struggle for a multi-racial democracy in South Africa and said his country "continues to bleed and suffocate" under the repression of white-minority rule.

"Our people continue to die to this day, victims of armed agents of the state who are still determined to turn their guns against the very idea of a racial democracy," the South African black leader told a rapt audience of lawmakers, diplomats and Cabinet officers in the House of Representatives chamber.

Envisioning a day when the white-minority government has been replaced, Mandela said the country's economy must be transformed. But he added, "The ANC holds no ideological positions which dictate that it must adopt a policy of nationalization." The African National Congress' socialist economic views have concerned some administration officials.

If lawmakers were uneasy over Mandela's refusal to rule out violence in the struggle in South Africa, they did not show it in their reception for the man who spent 27 years in jail in his homeland.

Mandela was greeted with prolonged applause as he made his way into the chamber. He beamed a wide smile as he mounted the podium and began his speech.

The deputy president of the ANC credited white President F.W. de Klerk with being committed to peaceful transition in South Africa.

But he said, "We would be fools to believe that the road ahead of us is without major hurdles. ... Too many among our white compatriots are slaves in the ideology of racism to admit easily that change must come."

He added, pointedly: "For those who care to worry about violence in our country as we do, it is at these forces that they should focus their attention."

He said the economic sanctions imposed earlier against South Africa should remain in place, and received thunderous applause when he said, "Peace will not come to our country and region until the apartheid system is ended."

Mandela thanked those who helped impose the sanctions in the first place, and asked for "material assistance which will enable us to promote the peaceful process." President Bush has been reluctant to provide direct financial support for the ANC because the group has refused to renounce violence.

"Here we have friends. Here we have fighters against racism who feel hurt because we are hurt, who seek our success because we, too, seek the victory of democracy over tyranny."

In their struggle for democracy, Mandela said, black South Africans are following the examples of George Washington, Abraham Lincoln and Thomas Jefferson, as well as black American leaders like Martin Luther King Jr.

"Our people demand democracy. Our country, which continues to bleed and suffocate, needs democracy," he said.

Mandela, who met with Bush on Monday, was to wrap up his visit to Washington later in the day after several other public appearances, including an afternoon outdoor rally and an evening speech to a crowd that paid $10 or $25 per ticket. In between, he was meeting with congressional leaders.

He was traveling to Atlanta on Wednesday, the next stop on his eight-city tour of the United States.

Mandela, 71, was honored at a dinner Monday night hosted by Sens. David Boren, D-Okla., chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, and Terry Sanford, D-N.C.

"I am so deeply touched by what has been said here that I find it difficult to express my gratitude to the senators," Mandela told the group, which included about three dozen senators from both parties, their spouses, plus Jesse Jackson and other prominent blacks.

Mandela discussed the future economic model for the country. While seeking equality for all races, Mandela said the ANC also "wants cooperation of businessmen in this country."

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, told Mandela, "We will heed your call for sanctions to continue until the evil system of apartheid is abolished."

But others said they were disappointed by Mandela's public support for radical governments. Rep. Larry Smith, D-Fla., a backer of economic sanctions who is active in foreign policy issues, said he would boycott Mandela's speech.

"He comes here and espouses support — not just casual, offhand support, but significant support — for people whose methods and backgrounds are terrorists, outlaws or communist dictators," Smith said. These are people "who practice every day what Nelson Mandela has fought his whole life against," he said.

Conservative Rep. William Dannemeyer, R-Calif., said the invitation to address Congress was a "national disgrace." "Nelson Mandela is no Martin Luther King," Dannemeyer said. "He is more like H. Rap Brown or Willie Horton."

Bush invoked King's name on Monday in urging Mandela and the ANC to reject revolutionary armed struggle as a tactic to end racial segregation in South Africa, a country where 5 million whites dominate 78 million blacks economically and politically.

Testimony concludes in trial of police station assault case

and BETH MILLER

Evidence in the aggravated assault trial of Lawrence Ray Grant ended this morning in 31st District Court. Closing arguments were scheduled to take place after lunch.

Grant, 40, 453 Pitts, was indicted on a charge of aggravated assault by threat with a deadly weapon by a Gray County grand jury last March stemming from an incident at the Pampa Police Department on Feb. 26.

The charge is a second-degree felony, enhanced by a prior felony conviction. If convicted, Grant could receive a maximum of life imprisonment.

In testimony Monday, former Pampa Police Department dispatcher Beatrice Mireles said she was working alone in the police station at approximately 5 a.m., Feb. 26, when a black man armed with a shotgun entered the lobby area and threatened her life.

Mireles said she looked up from paperwork when she heard the bell chime indicating that the front door of the police department had been opened.

She saw a black man wearing a green shirt and fatigue-type pants standing in the doorway with a single-shot shotgun pointed at her. She described the man as being between 5'4" and 5'8" tall and weighing 200 to 215 pounds.

The man told Mireles to, "Back up, b——," three times as he crossed the room toward her, she told jurors.

The third time, he was standing at the counter in front of her with the shotgun pointed through the glass window, approximately one foot to 18 inches from her face, Mireles testified. This time, she said, the man told her, "Back up, b——, I'm going to kill your a——."

Mireles had been half standing, half sitting, broadcasting a distress call to the patrol officers during the encounter, she said. When the man threatened to kill her, she dropped to the floor and "lunged" under the desk, dragging the telephone cord down with her, the former dispatcher said.

While crouching under the desk, Mireles called the Gray County Sheriff's Office and asked Deputy James Walker for help.

As soon as she heard the door bell chime a second time, indicating the suspect had left the police station, Mireles came out from under the desk and picked up papers she had knocked to the floor, she said.

Later that morning, Mireles identified her assailant as Lawrence Ray Grant in a photo line-up prepared by police detectives Charlie Love and Donnie Brown.

In the cross-examination by defense attorney David Holt, Mireles testified that she did not know the man who threatened her, nor had she ever seen the man prior to the encounter.

"Assuming that what you have told me is correct and that it was Lawrence Ray Grant," Holt asked, "could you tell me why would Lawrence Ray Grant want to harm you?"

"I don't know," Mireles responded.

District Judge Graeme McElhany did not allow Holt's efforts to include possible litigation between Mireles and the city of Pampa in regard to the incident.

Holt said Mireles' request for a cash settlement from the city was relevant to Grant's trial, claiming that Mireles had a "direct monetary motive in the outcome of this case."

Comer argued that the information fell under the exceptions to the Freedom of Information Act on the grounds of right to privacy and because the matter concerned pending litigation of a governmental body.

McElhany also denied Holt's motion for a mistrial after Detective Love testified that Grant had been detained in city jail prior to the Feb. 26 incident and that he was a suspect in several armed robberies that had occurred shortly before that time.

Holt told jurors today that on the morning of Feb. 26, Grant had walked with two friends to Continental Credit Corp. at Foster and Frost streets to complete paperwork for a loan.

He said that the credit company is close to the police station and that Grant and his friends even walked near the police station and City Hall on the way to the probation office across from Gray County Court-house.

Grant went to see his probation officer, Wade Gardner, about 9:15 that morning, Holt said.

"It's not reasonable for a person accused of what he's been accused of doing to have conducted himself in that manner," Holt said of Grant walking near the police station and City Hall.

"The state, solely relying on Ms. Mireles' testimony, has come up short," Holt said.

Gardner testified that he had sent Grant a letter on Feb. 22 telling him to report to the probation office by Feb. 26. He said Grant was on probation for theft of more than $200, but less than $750. He said he saw Grant about 9:15 a.m. on Feb. 26.

Asked what Grant was wearing, Gardner said, "A greenish colored shirt with greenish colored pants."

However, James Smith, who lives with Grant and who said he was with Grant on the morning of Feb. 26, said Grant was attired in a "brown, long-sleeved velour shirt with blue jeans and tennis shoes."

Grant's father, Luther Grant, testified that he saw his son on the morning of Feb. 26 at the Pitts Street residence. Luther Grant said he had gone to pick up his granddaughter from the Pitts Street residence after his son did not return her to her foster home at the appropriate time.

Under cross examination by Comer, Luther Grant said he had not told the story he presented in court

Paramedics issue hot weather tips to avoid stroke or heat exhaustion

As the current heatwave wears on through the summer, paramedics with Rural/Metro-American Medical Transport are warning that prolonged exposure to the sun could bring on a stroke or heat exhaustion.

Rick Fry, an emergency medical technician, said the young, elderly and persons in poor physical health run the greatest risk of succumbing to the heat.

Fry said when the body is heated more than it can be cooled by perspiration, results could include permanent damage and, in some cases, death.

"Avoid direct exposure to sunlight from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m., the most intensely hot period of the day, although the heat can remain just as severe throughout the day," Fry said. "And limit vigorous outdoor activity to the cooler morning and evening hours."

Fry said it is dangerous to leave children or pets in a car when adults run even brief errands, since the heat in a vehicle can reach much above a hundred degrees very quickly.

Brain damage and/or death can occur under those conditions in a very short time.

Drinking a cup of water every half hour when outside in the summer is good way to prevent dehydration and reduce chances of over heating, Fry said.

Though beer and wine coolers are often associated with outdoor activities, Fry said consumption of alcohol only contributes to dehydration of the body.

Rural/Metro-AMT officials said heat exhaustion, the excessive loss of water and salt from the body, can be detected by the following symptoms: headache, fatigue, dizziness, nausea, a weak but rapid pulse and/or cold, clammy skin with a pale or grayish color.

"To treat heat exhaustion, move the patient to a cool environment, removing as much clothing as possible," Fry said. "Force the individual to lie on his or her back with the feet slightly elevated."

Fry said the person should then be sponged off with cool water, but should not be chilled. He emphasized that only small amounts of water should be given at a time to the patient.

He stated that if the person does not respond instantly, emergency help should be gained by calling 911.

"Though heat exhaustion does not represent a life-threatening situation in itself," Fry said, "when left untreated it can progress into heat stroke, the most serious form of heat exposure."

He described heat stroke as a condition during which the body temperature rises past 104 degrees.

"If heat continues to build inside the body beyond this range, permanent injury to brain cells, and even death, can and do occur," Fry stated.

Symptoms of heat stroke include hot, dry, red skin; a strong, bounding pulse; headaches and dizziness, and unconsciousness or vomiting.

"After activating the emergency medical system (calling 911), use any means available to decrease the patient's body temperature, but do not give any liquid or food by mouth," Fry emphasized. "Wrap the victim in a wet sheet and direct a fan blowing onto the patient. Administer CPR if the victim stops breathing and/or goes into cardiac arrest before the paramedics arrive."

Fry said when heat exhaustion is treated immediately, "you can usually guarantee a rapid recovery at home instead of at the hospital."

Rescue efforts continue as officials say quake death toll could hit 70,000

By NEIL MACFARQUHAR
Associated Press Writer

MANJIL, Iran (AP) — The interior minister said today that "99 percent" of the victims from a devastating earthquake have been counted, but a Red Cross official said the death toll could reach 70,000.

Officials say at least 50,000 people have been killed, 200,000 injured and half a million rendered homeless from Thursday's quake in northern Iran.

Bone-weary rescuers are losing hope of finding more survivors in the rubble of nearly 350 earthquake-flattened cities and towns. But some took heart when a 1-year-old girl was found alive in her bedroom four days after the quake.

Foreign aid continued to pour into the capital, Tehran. More than 130 planes carrying relief supplies, medical volunteers and financial contributions have arrived since Sunday. Much of the help comes from countries including the United States that Iran considers sworn enemies.

Interior Minister Abdullah Nouri said 99 percent of the bodies of quake victims have been recovered, but said there was still no definitive casualty count.

Christian Brauner, a relief worker with the West German Red Cross, said the death toll could reach as high as 60,000 to 70,000.

Nouri, who is in charge of relief operations, thanked the hundreds of foreign relief workers, saying their presence was "useful." Some Iranian hard-liners have opposed the presence of Western rescuers.

French and Iranian rescue teams said an Iranian team from the Red Crescent the Islamic version of the Red Cross — found the baby girl alive in the family's wrecked home in the mountain village of Kelishom, 30 miles east of Manjil. They had believed the 1-year-old was dead, and were digging into the rubble of what had been a bedroom believing they would find her body.

Manjil, on the border between the stricken provinces of Zanjan and Gilan, was virtually destroyed. It lies in the heart of the quake zone, about 125 miles northwest of Tehran.

Col. Gholamreza Gohari, head of police in Gilan province, said as many as 7,000 people had died in Rudbar, a nearby town of 100,000.

Christian Brauner, a relief worker with the West German Red Cross, said that since large extended families live together, the wreckage of even a small home can yield a horrifying number of dead.

He said in one village he visited, he was told that two-thirds of the 3,000 residents were dead.

The quake region has been jolted by about 360 aftershocks since Thursday's jolt, some measuring up to 6 on the Richter scale. Tehran University's geophysics center said. The main quake measured between 7.3 and 7.7.

For survivors, the aftershocks are a constant terrifying reminder of Thursday's quake. For rescuers, they have foiled desperate efforts to pluck life from the devastation.

A French rescue team related the story of one such near-rescue. The team, using sound detectors, picked up the sound of a knock on Sunday morning. They quickly set to work removing debris piled several yards deep.

But then a strong aftershock struck, sending dirt and debris cascading back into the excavated area.

When the team was able to resume digging, the knocking had stopped, said the team leader Andre Laska. They found a woman dead in what had once been a closet in her home.

Workers carry relief goods from foreign countries for victims of last week's earthquake in northern Iran at Tehran's Mehrabad Airport.

Assault

today before last week.

"I was woken up early, around 5, by the lady that keeps the girl. I was gripped out and she told me to get over there and get that girl back."

"I blew my horn and then banged on the door. He said, 'Daddy, daddy, keep your pants on.' I said, 'They won't stay on too long if you don't get that child out here.'"

Luther Grant said he remembers his son wearing "shorts" that morning around 5:45 to 6 a.m.

Comer asked Grant's father, "Is it true you never told this story until today?"

Grant said he did relate the story late last week.

Asked by Comer why the elder Grant did not go to the police or district attorney's office earlier with information he had seen his son on the morning of Feb. 26, Grant said, "They didn't contact me ... I'm 62 years old and haul junk iron to Amarillo. I was pretty bushed, too tired."

When Comer asked Grant if he was too tired in March, April, May and June to notify the authorities of the testimony he was giving today, Grant replied, "Yes."

He said he was not sure what the charge was against his son, although he had visited him in the Gray County Jail. "I just know what I read in the paper ... I do not volunteer to stick my nose in their (children's) business unless I'm asked."

Several of the defense witnesses testified that to their knowledge Grant did not own any firearms.

Lt. Roy Denman testified that the police had never recovered the weapon and did not get any fingerprints at the police station.

"One good eyewitness is worth a ton of prints," Denman said. "When you have an eyewitness, that's pretty good strong evidence," he said of Mireles.

Denman said it would have been difficult to find fingerprints on the glass due to the large volume of people traveling in and out of the building.

Grant's 11-year-old daughter also testified that she saw her father on the morning of Feb. 26, after she had spent the night at his residence.

Comer asked the girl, "Have you talked with anybody about what you were going to say? Your testimony seems a little memorized or rote."

The girl responded that she had not talked to anyone about what she was going to say other than Holt and that he told her only to speak the truth.

Bush delays offshore drilling

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush today barred new oil leasing off much of California and Florida, the North Atlantic coast, Washington and Oregon until after the year 2000.

Bush also canceled planned government oil lease sales in an area stretching south from San Francisco to Monterey Bay.

The president also said he would permanently block any drilling in a 2,200-square-mile proposed marine sanctuary that lies within that region.

However, Bush said tracts in the Santa Maria Basin and Santa Barbara Channel of Southern California would be available for leasing consideration at the beginning of 1996 if studies show the environment can be protected there.

"The combined effect of these decisions is that the coast of southwest Florida and more than 99 percent of the California coast will be off limits to oil and gas leasing and development until after the year 2000," Bush said.

The area covered by Bush's decision includes a 6.7-million acre section of ocean off Southern California, 1.2 million acres off Northern California, and 13 million acres in the Gulf of Mexico near the Florida everglades.

T. Boone Pickens, Japanese target square off this week

By JOHN A. BOLT
AP Business Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Oilman and investor T. Boone Pickens expects to lose his battle with Koito Manufacturing Co. Ltd. at Thursday's annual shareholder meeting.

The war, however, will go on. "As long as you can hold out, remain on the right side of the issue, you'll eventually prevail," Pickens said in a recent interview in his downtown Dallas office.

Pickens, whose request for a seat on the company's board of directors was denied last year, is asking for four seats on the board at this year's annual meeting.

Pickens says his fight with Koito, which makes automobile headlights chiefly for Toyota Motor Corp., is about open investment in Japan. The company's refusal to put him on its board, Pickens says, is an example of Japanese unwillingness to allow outside investors into the country.

"This is about the long term. This is about the future of trade relations between Japan and the United States, about the future of the Japanese shareholder, consumer and working family," Pickens said at the Foreign Correspondents Press Club today in Tokyo.

He has sought help from Trade Representative Carla Hills and Congress, with little visible impact.

"It has nothing to do with trade issues," Hamilton

(AP Laserphoto)

Pickens ponders a reporter's question at a press conference Tuesday in Tokyo.

Loeb, Koito's American lawyer, said in a telephone interview from Tokyo. Loeb represented Unocal Corp. when the oil company fought off Pickens' advances in 1985.

Koito has rebuffed Pickens by saying he is after greenmail — having the company buy back its stock at a premium to avoid a takeover attempt. The company also has suggested he is simply the front man for Kitano Watanabe, whom the company also brands as a green-mailer.

The latest salvo in the battle came Monday. Koito issued a statement saying Pickens really is not the company's biggest stockholder as he claims, a charge Pickens quickly denied.

Pickens bought his Koito shares from Watanabe, described by Koito president Takao Matsuura as "an infamous Japanese greenmailer."

"We are confident there is a secret agreement. The terms of it we can only speculate about," Loeb said.

Pickens repeatedly has said he is not after greenmail but is a long-term investor in Koito. The company says his investment does not make financial sense.

Although he is a multimillionaire, Pickens' $1 billion investment in Koito is sizable even for him. But he refuses to tell how he financed his purchases of the stock.

"It isn't management's option to question that," he said.

"If he were doing this in the United States," Loeb said, "he would be obligated to make disclosures of any agreement he had with anybody about the stock."

If Pickens owns the 26 percent of the stock he claims, Toyota would be the second-largest shareholder.

Pickens contends Toyota leads a keiretsu, or business alliance, and forces Koito to sell its auto parts at depressed prices to the advantage of Toyota profits and the detriment of Koito shareholders.

"I'm a geologist, not an economist, but I do know that whatever you call it — a cartel, a trust, a monopoly, a keiretsu or a zaibatsu — it's wrong," Pickens said in Tokyo today.

Since being denied a board seat at last year's shareholder meeting, Pickens has sought to inspect Koito's books and increase its dividend.

Koito last year agreed to increase the dividend, but only by about half what Pickens sought.

Aside from seeking four seats on the 20-member board, Pickens has proposed an anti-greenmail resolution; an annual statement on whether Koito has been forced to engage in anti-competitive activities; an annual shareholder vote on salary and retirement benefits of board members; an annual report on pricing policies; a further increase in the dividend, and an accounting of the "shito-fumeikin fund," which Pickens suggests amounts to an illegal slush fund.

Record dip

Anz. Phoenix had its all-time hottest day at 120 degrees Monday. The previous record was 118, equaled as recently as July 4, 1989. Tucson broke its record for the date with 113 degrees. Searing heat hovered over the desert Southwest and western Plains today, with temperatures forecast as high as 120 degrees between California and western Texas. The heat was caused by a combination of warm air from a high-pressure system and heating caused by the sun's high summertime angle.

Warrant issued for TV reporter

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — An arrest warrant has been issued for a KMOL-TV reporter who has been cited for contempt of court for refusing to reveal confidential sources in a capital murder case.

Brian Karem was ordered last week by a federal judge to surrender his notes containing the names of confidential sources to defense and prosecution lawyers in the capital murder case.

Lawyers for the station said Monday they have requested a stay of the contempt order from the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

Attorney Larry Macon, who represents the station and Karem, said he expects a ruling from the appeals court today.

Macon said that if the appeals court will not stay the contempt order, he will take the matter to the U.S. Supreme Court in an attempt to keep Karem out of jail.

Karem will surrender if a stay is not obtained today, Macon said.

State District Judge Pat Priest in February ordered Karem to surrender the notes and found him in contempt of court when he refused to.

The sources named in the notes, Karem says, assisted him in obtaining a jailhouse interview with Henry David Hernandez, 25, who is accused with his brother of killing San Antonio Police officer Gary Lee Williams.

In the interview, Hernandez said he shot the officer in self-defense.

Lawyers say they must have the identity of Karem's sources in order to give Hernandez and his brother, Julian, a fair trial. They are scheduled to stand trial in November.

U.S. District Judge H.F. "Hippo" Garcia ruled against Karem in an appeal last week and ordered him to surrender the notes. The judge then ruled on Friday that he would not extend an earlier stay of the contempt order as the appeal is continued to higher courts.

Priest has sentenced Karem to six months in jail and ordered him to pay a $500 fine for refusing to turn over the notes.

San Marcos orders water conservation

SAN MARCOS (AP) — Mandatory water conservation, including limitations on lawn watering and car washing, will go into effect today for the first time in this city of 37,000, according to Melissa Millican, public information officer.

San Marcos relies on the Edwards Aquifer for its water, and that aquifer currently is 40 feet below normal level, Ms. Millican said.

Under the order signed by City Manager Larry Gilley, lawn watering would be allowed from 7 p.m. to 10 a.m., only by hand-held hoses with a trigger that automatically shuts off when it is not pressed, she said.

The use of automatic sprinkler systems also will be restricted. Non-commercial car washing will be allowed only if residents use a hand-held hose or bucket.

Restaurants will not serve water by the glass unless specifically asked by customers; nurseries and sod farms will be allowed to water only from 6 a.m. to 10 a.m., by hand-held hose, bucket or drip irrigation.

Planting of new lawns will be prohibited, as well as non-recirculating fountains. Recirculating fountains are prohibited from noon until 6 p.m.

Golf course tees and greens may be watered only from 7 p.m. to 10 a.m.

In addition to complying with the order, industrial water customers would be required to implement individual water conservation plans.

Cold fusion debate heats up over Texas A&M

AUSTIN (AP) — The controversy over cold fusion has raised plenty of temperatures at Texas A&M University.

A&M's dean of science, John Fackler, said an article in Science magazine this month alleging fraud in fusion research was based on conjecture and provided no evidence.

The reporter stands by the story. Fackler called the article "factually accurate," but criticized its approach. The story was in the news and comment section of the June 15 issue of Science.

"It's damning by innuendo," Fackler said. "My general feeling is that it did a disservice to the scientific community." He said he would write the magazine with his complaints.

The author of the article, Gary Taubes, said his story was accurate and persuasive.

"The article left out a lot of facts I gathered because of space and legal reasons but, nevertheless, there is a lot of evidence there," said Taubes, a freelance science writer from California who is writing a book on the cold fusion controversy.

Fusion is the merger of hydrogen atoms into helium with the release of substantial energy. It is the principal reaction of the sun and of thermonuclear weapons, and is believed by most scientists to require hydrogen atoms to be compressed and heated to millions of degrees.

"Cold" fusion, in which the reaction would take place and liberate energy as heat at ordinary temperatures, would be a stunning and unexplained scientific breakthrough.

Cold fusion experiments in the A&M laboratory of John Bockris last year were among the first in the world to report finding tritium, a form of hydrogen that can be key evidence of a fusion reaction.

Bockris reported the tritium within weeks after Stanley Pons at the University of Utah, and his colleague Martin Fleischmann, announced to a stunned scientific community that they had achieved fusion in a laboratory jar.

The Utah announcement set off a worldwide scramble to confirm the possibility of cold fusion, but most experimenters could not duplicate the Pons-Fleischmann results and the concept now has few supporters among scientists.

Science said A&M's quick findings of tritium gave early support of the Pons-Fleischmann findings, and were instrumental in a decision by the state of Utah to invest $5 million in cold fusion research: A&M, the magazine said, received an additional $150,000 from the Electric Power Research Institute.

Yet, Science said, "suspicions were raised almost from the first that the tritium in the A&M cells (experiments) was put there by human hands."

Science said Bockris and his team reported finding tritium on numerous occasions — including six different experiments in one week — while scores of other laboratories around the country could find nothing, or reported tritium at levels of only a fraction of that reported by A&M.

Two other professors at Texas A&M whose labs devoted some time to researching cold fusion, and who both were quoted in the article, agreed with Fackler about the Science article.

Kevin Wolf, a nuclear chemist, said the article contained several errors and was generally unfair. John Appleby, an electrochemical engineer, said he was saddened that the article was published.

But scientists at other schools around the state are taking notice of the allegations surrounding the cold fusion experiments, attempts to reproduce the sun's energy in a jar.

"Any article like that, in that depth, raises questions in one's mind," said Robert Boyer, dean of natural sciences at the University of Texas at Austin.

James Kinsey, dean of natural sciences at Rice University in Houston, told the Austin American-Statesman. "It is a devastating kind of thing."

Monitor faults treatment of mentally ill in boarding homes

AUSTIN (AP) — The state Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation says it is working to improve the treatment of mentally ill Texans living in Medina County boarding homes.

"We know there are some problems there. We're trying to address them ... and we believe they are being addressed," said Shari Massingill, MHMR spokeswoman.

Court monitor David Pharis, who is overseeing treatment of the mentally ill in the state, on Monday criticized a lack of rehabilitation services in the boarding homes.

But he said the state's corrective plan could improve matters.

Pharis is court monitor in the long-running lawsuit challenging conditions in state mental hospitals and community programs.

In his second report on Medina County to U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders, David Pharis reiterated concerns about the handling of patients discharged from mental hospitals to boarding homes.

Pharis said he inspected Medina County boarding homes because a large concentration of state hospital patients — about 274 — were discharged in the area.

Most of the patients are from San Antonio State Hospital, he said. Medina County is southwest of San Antonio.

In his first Medina County report, filed in January, Pharis found inadequate care being provided to boarding home patients. He cited a "total lack of psychosocial and rehabilitative programs available to these clients."

In a follow-up visit, Pharis examined treatment plans for 50 patients in the boarding homes. He said several criteria approved by Sanders are being met, such as medical treatment and some follow-up services.

However, he added, "It is rare that other rehabilitative and psychosocial programs are provided ... Why can't all of these people use rehabilitation? They are documented as being severely impaired so they do need rehabilitation."

Among specific concerns, Pharis listed: — No evidence that patients have a choice about coming to the facilities, and some evidence that help is not provided to unhappy patients to find alternative living situations.

— No apparent expectation that people will improve and move to a less restrictive setting.

— Treatment decisions often being made without the documented involvement of the patient.

— Mentally retarded patients whose needs are not being met.

— Young patients who, without adequate programs, are "doomed to a life of inactivity and unproductiveness."

— No evidence of a staff member reporting one patient's complaint that he was made to stay outside until his face blistered and burned from the weather.

Pharis said the patient records substantiated his conclusion that the state has not been complying with a 1984 court order by Sanders that patients could be moved from state hospitals to community facilities only if their treatment needs are met.

But he said the MHMR Department's corrective plan, developed after his first report on Medina County, "should certainly improve the situation through the inclusion of assessments of the need for rehabilitative services."

In a telephone interview, Pharis said his next step will be to review the corrective plan's impact on services to patients.

The MHMR Department denies that the state has failed to comply with any court order, said Ms. Massingill.

Bell loses Yellow Pages lawsuit in federal trial

AMARILLO (AP) — A federal jury awarded more than $15 million in damages to two telephone directory publishing companies who complained of unfair competition by Southwestern Bell Corp. and several subsidiaries.

The jury on Monday awarded actual damages of $5 million requested by Great Western Directories, Inc., and $9,400 by Canyon Directories.

Under antitrust law, damages are automatically trebled.

The jury also awarded more than $1 million in attorney fees.

Great Western publishes telephone directories, including yellow pages, in the Texas cities of Amarillo, Arlington, Clear Lake City, Grand Prairie, Pasadena, Temple, Waco, Wichita Falls and Alvin-Pearland-Friendswood, plus the Oklahoma cities of Lawton and Enid.

Canyon Directories publishes telephone directories, including yellow pages, for the Amarillo-area towns of Canyon, Gurley and Cleta-Umbarger.

Great Western and Canyon Directors said Southwestern Bell exerted a double squeeze on their profitability by increasing the fee to directory companies for Bell's listings while decreasing advertising rates 40 percent in its own white and yellow pages, which it improved.

The companies said Southwestern Bell required them to buy many unwanted listings and updates as part of a purchase agreement.

The telephone company contended that Great Western and Canyon directories were seeking relief from lawful competition. Antitrust law does not punish companies for superior efficiency and better products and skills, company lawyers said.

The lawsuit, filed Dec. 5 in U.S. District Court in Amarillo, listed defendants as Southwestern Bell Telephone Co., Southwestern Bell Corp., Southwestern Bell Publications, Inc., Southwestern Bell Media

Inc., and Southwestern Bell Yellow Pages, Inc.

Southwestern Bell Telephone, headquartered in St. Louis, supplies local telephone service on a monopoly basis to communities in Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Missouri and Kansas.

In addition to the antitrust damages, the jury awarded punitive damages of $50,000 to Great Western Directories and $10,000 to Canyon Directories for violation by Southwestern Bell and its subsidiaries of deceptive trade legislation and for interference with business relations.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Our Opinion

Government grants aren't free of cost

How often do we hear local governing officials announcing, eyes beaming and hands outstretched, that they have managed to acquire another grant from the federal or state government levels? Too often, it seems.

The officials, rushing to make the grant acquisition a matter of public knowledge, assure us that the grant is well needed to finance one deserving project or another and that — and this is always the kicker — "it won't cost us anything." Unless, of course, it happens to be a matching funds grant, and then the officials assure the public that local funds are already available, or can be found readily with some shifting around from one fund to another, or by implementing a mere "minor tax increase" at the local level.

Sometimes, certainly, the money may be justified as being needed for worthy projects on a local level, whether for a criminal justice program, assistance to prevent more school dropouts (from the public school system, naturally), or nutrition care for needy mothers and infants. But sometimes, also, the money seems to be acquired just because it is there and because it seems to come so easily.

And then there's that oft-cited excuse: "Someone is going to get it, so it might as well be us. After all, it's returning some of our tax dollars back to us."

Yes, that may be true. But often ignored or slighted in that argument is that if the state and federal governments had not seized the money from us in the first place, then we wouldn't have to be out begging for it along with all the myriad others applying for such grants. Also, if that money had not been taken from the local levels, the funds probably could already have been used to take care of our needs. And then we wouldn't have to go fawning before the state and federal agency officials who smile so graciously as they hand back to us the money that had been snatched from us earlier.

That's like a victim bowing and thanking the thief for returning part of the goods the thief had forcibly stolen earlier.

But those grant monies are out there, and it's hard to blame someone for trying to receive "their share" from the flowing fountain of silver pieces. And with the state and federal governments so readily handing out those grants — though the fountain is bubbling forth at a slower pace under the auspices of the Reagan/Bush administrations — there's not much we can do to keep officials from applying for and receiving those grants, unfortunately.

Still, it's a bit much for the public to be told that the grants have been acquired without costing the local taxpayers anything. Who are they kidding? Where did that money come from in the first place? Where else but from taxes and excise fees. If there were fewer taxes and fees, then local public officials wouldn't have to go running to Austin and Washington, D.C., so often to beg for money to take care of perceived local needs. If the tax monies were permitted to remain at the local levels, then the local governing entities could take care of more needs without having to turn to higher entities for assistance. And if there were also fewer local taxes and fees, then more people could take care of themselves without having to expect some governing entity to do so.

So go ahead, take those grants. But don't insult us by telling us it is costing us nothing. There's no such thing as a free lunch, and there's no such thing as a free government grant.

GOP seizes star-spangled issue

Republicans in Washington, constitutional scholars all, have greeted the Supreme Court's latest decision on flag burning with defiance.

If this is how the justices read the Constitution, they declare, we'll give them a different Constitution — one spelling out in capital letters and bold-face type that Congress can slap iron on anyone who so much as looks cross-eyed at Old Glory. This goes to show that there's no law so terrible that it wouldn't be worse as a constitutional amendment.

Humorist Artemus Ward wrote in 1862 that preserving the Union was so important to him that "I have already given two cousins to the war, and I stand ready to sacrifice my wife's brother." Likewise, Republican leaders are bravely prepared to protect the flag even if it means the loss of Democratic seats in Congress.

Not all Democrats have been profiles in courage: 229 of those in the House and 49 of those in the Senate voted for the Flag Protection Act of 1989, which had as much chance of surviving constitutional scrutiny as Eddie Murphy has of preaching in Billy Graham's next crusade.

But many of them grow queasy at the thought of mutilating the Constitution. Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell said he was opposed to a flag-burning amendment: "The question before us is whether or not, after 200 years, the most effective statement of individual liberty in human history is to be changed for the first time." House Speaker Tom Foley found the idea equally unappealing.

The Republicans have stronger stomachs. Apparently most GOP officeholders, if asked to sell their immortal souls for short-term political advantage, would reply: What's the catch?

"This is one of the value conflicts that allows us to make a true comparison between parties and candidates," gloated Marc Nuttle, head of the National Republican Congressional Committee. "This is a real opportunity." Wendy DeMocker, a spokeswoman for the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee, salivated over this "very powerful, very potent, very emotional issue."

Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, whose defeat in the 1988 presidential primaries didn't improve his disposition, said a Democrat might be able to make the case against a flag-burning amendment "at a bar association meeting, but not before real people."

Hear that, artificial people? The American Civil Liberties Union is now organizing a group called Androids, Robots and Department Store Mannequins Against the Flag Amendment. Those composed of flesh and blood need not apply.

And then there's President Bush, who clings to the Stars and Stripes like a fraternity brother to a beer can. He assures us that "amending the Constitution to protect the flag is not a matter of partisan politics. It's an American issue." Americans in favor of a flag-burning amendment, say ay; aliens opposed, nay.

Besides, announced the president, "the law books are full of restrictions on free speech and we ought to have this be one of them." Uh, George, that's Albania's annotated criminal code you're reading.

The Louisiana legislature, unwilling to wait out the interminable process of altering the Constitution, came up with a quicker way to protect the flag: Let Bubba do it. The day after the Supreme Court announced its verdict, a state Senate committee voted to reduce the maximum fine for battery to $25 in cases where the assailant attacked someone who was burning a flag.

While we're making major changes, why not replace the current national anthem with "The Fightin' Side of Me?" What did American boys die for in the jungles of Okinawa and on the beaches of Normandy, if not the sacred right to beat the day-lights out of anyone who doesn't think right?

It may not look like fun to resist this tide of sentiment, but Democrats may find the political risks are less than meets the eye. Lots of Supreme Court decisions that were wildly unpopular when they were issued became accepted as they became understood. Not many senators have gotten elected lately making prayer in schools their main issue.

Politicians who show some courage now may find the public moving their way or at least losing interest in the issue. Those who scurry for cover under the nearest constitutional amendment may lose respect without gaining votes.

And if the political risks of upholding the Bill of Rights in its pristine form turn out to be grave, well, aren't some causes worth grave risks? Leaders who abandon their highest principles merely to save their hides aren't treated kindly by history. If they were, the term "quising" would be a compliment.

In 1917, the first troops of the American Expeditionary Force arrived in France during World War I.

In 1945, the charter of the United Nations was signed by 50 countries in San Francisco.

In 1948, in response to the Soviet blockade of West Berlin, the United States announced it would increase its daily cargo flights to the western sector of the isolated German city.

Donald gets trumped-up tale

Donald Trump's chief accountant, Fillmore, sat down in The Donald's plush office.

"What is it this time, Filbert?" asked The Donald.

"It's Fillmore," said the accountant.

"Details. What do you need to see me about?"

"I have some bad news for you, sir."

"What is it, Philpot?"

"We're out of cash, sir."

"What do you mean, 'We're out of cash, sir'?"

"I mean just what I said — we don't have any money."

"Well, you idiot, call the bank and arrange for them to send some over."

"I've already tried that, Mr. Trump. The bank won't loan us any more money until we've paid back what we already owe them."

"Pay them back, Fennimore?"

"Yes, sir. That's how banks make their money. They loan money to you and then you pay it back with interest."

"I always wondered how that worked. Well, there's another solution. Sell off some real estate."

"I'm afraid that's impossible, sir. The real estate market is very soft, and there's the matter of your pending divorce. The court would likely stop us from selling off anything until you settlement with Mrs. Trump is completed."

Lewis Grizzard

"What else could we do?"

"May I be perfectly frank, sir?"

"You can be anything you want to be as long as you know the art of the deal."

"What I mean, sir, is, can I be completely truthful?"

"Certainly, Frank."

"There's nothing you can do. You're finished. You're tapped-out. It's Negative Cash Flow City."

"But how could this happen?"

"It was your extravagance and greed, sir."

"Extravagance and greed?"

"Like the time you spent — and I have the exact figures here with me — $17,478.66 to fly to Rio with Miss Maples for dinner."

"That much? But we didn't even have dessert."

OK, so that's a little extravagant, but I've never been greedy."

"I beg to differ, Mr. Trump. Remember when you tried to buy New Hampshire?"

"But I've always wanted my own New England state since I was a little boy."

"Yes, and if the deal had come through you were going to make everybody in New Hampshire move to Iowa so you would have some privacy."

"I forgot why that deal didn't come through."

"You decided to spend the money on your hotel and casino in Atlantic City."

"How's that doing, Fenneman?"

"Snake eyes."

"No matter, Finkelstein, I've still got a good woman to stand by my side during the hard times."

"Not anymore, sir."

"You mean Marla has ..."

"Her exact words were, 'I don't do ex-billionaires.' But there is some good news, sir."

"What is it, Phinezy?"

"There is a concerted effort in this country to do something about the homeless. I'm certain they'll have shelter for you within the month."

"I'm a street person?"

"You start in the morning at 8. Goodbye, Mr. Frump."

Barbara Bush's speech benefited all

By SARAH OVERSTREET

For several weeks now, columnists have been pretty uncharitable to the Wellesley grads who didn't want Barbara Bush to speak at their commencement exercises on the first of June. The grads objected to her selection because they felt that her prestige came from being married to an important man, not from her own accomplishments. Columnists called them uppity, spoiled, childish and everything in between.

While I might not have agreed with the protesting grads, "lighten up" is the commencement message I'd like to have given the columnists who were so angry with them.

Come on, awready. These young women are in their early 20s — a time when idealism is strong but as yet untempered by much real experience. Young women — and men — at this age are fierce and fervent about their ideals.

And thank heavens for it. Age brings us a more global view of issues, but it's the passion of youth that keeps us caring about them.

And how fortunate for these young women that they did protest. Without it, they'd have never received the lesson Barbara Bush gave them.

She showed them a splendid portrait of a happy, fulfilled human being, one with a sense of humor. "I know your first choice for today was Alice Walker, known for The Color Purple," she told them. "Instead you got me, known for the color of my hair."

She told the graduates their careers were important, but that their relationships with the people in their lives were the most important investments they would ever make. She told them to search for joy.

"At the end of your life you never regret not having passed one more test, winning one more verdict, not closing one more deal. You will regret time not spent with a husband, a friend, a child or a parent."

Those young graduates have no way of knowing what Bush was trying to tell them, but successful people who graduated 15 to 20 years ago are discovering it with a passion. People to whom careers meant everything are flocking to career counseling classes looking for a change, because they find no meaning or fulfillment in their work.

In early February, long before the Barb brouhaha at Wellesley, 37-year-old New York Times columnist Anna Quindlen told an audience at Washington University in St. Louis that in the 1990s, Americans will learn to "live our lives, rather than use them as vehicles to get somewhere, we know not where."

Removed from Barbara Bush by more than 30 years, and after a career that had all but consumed her in her 20s, Quindlen has already discovered what Barbara Bush was trying to tell the Wellesley grads.

"Family responsibilities are as important as corporate responsibilities," Quindlen said. "I've never read of anyone on their deathbed who said, 'I wish I'd spent more time with my business.' Our children are not going to wait to grow up until we make time for them. We have to change our focus at least from deferred gratification to foreseeable, if not immediate, gratification."

Barbara Bush told it like it really is. If all our studying and degrees don't help us to be happy and fulfilled, what good are they? And what difference does it make whether you've chosen to devote yourself to a paying career, to a career and children, or entirely to rearing children, if you're not happy and your life seems to have no meaning?

Well done, Barbara. Go to the head of the class.

U.S. recalls Peace Corps volunteers into Manila due to threats

By ROBERT H. REID
Associated Press Writer

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The U.S. Embassy has ordered all Peace Corps staffers to leave their posts and report to Manila because of reports that Communist rebels plan to attack volunteers, American officials said today.

Ambassador Nicholas Platt issued the order last weekend but delayed the public announcement for security reasons, said embassy spokesman Stanley Schrage.

He said no decision had been made on when the 261 volunteers would be allowed to return to their posts in rural areas.

Schrage said the embassy had received a report that Peace Corps volunteers had been added to the target list of the New People's Army, which has been waging a 21-year insurgency to establish a Marxist state.

"This became an issue because recently we received information suggesting that Peace Corps volunteers may be targets of political violence by the NPA," Schrage said.

He refused to identify the source of the report but said the embassy took it seriously.

Communist rebels claimed responsibility for killing two American airmen last month near the U.S.-run Clark Air Base and had vowed to kill more until all American troops leave this country.

Eight Americans are believed to have been slain by Filipino Marxist extremists since April 1989.

The rebels have made no specific public threats against Peace Corps volunteers but have charged that U.S. and Japanese aid workers were secretly assisting the Philippine government in its counter-insurgency operations.

Both Washington and Tokyo deny the charges. Last month, rebels on the central island of Negros kidnapped an official of a private Japanese aid mission.

Negros authorities have appointed a negotiating team to secure the release of the official, Fumio Mizuno, but no talks have been held.

Last month, the U.S. government authorized "imminent danger pay" for diplomats, troops and other federal employees because of Communist threats.

Because of the security threat, the U.S. military has allowed dependents of U.S. troops to return home at government expense before the service member's tour of duty ends.

Recently, the embassy warned all Americans to be on alert for terrorism in the Philippines before U.S. and Philippine officials resume talks in August on the future of the six U.S. military bases, whose lease expires in September 1991.

The rebels want the bases closed.

Peace Corps volunteers are stationed throughout the main island, Luzon, and the central Visayas chain, including Negros. Volunteers were recalled from the southern island of Mindanao in 1985 because of lawlessness and never returned.

Volunteers are involved in projects including education, environment, agriculture and community development.

Witnesses tell of sex, drug use, drinking by Barry

By RICHARD KEIL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mayor Marion Barry coerced a woman into having sex with him and made repeated advances toward others during a string of drug parties in the Virgin Islands, witnesses in his cocaine and perjury trial say.

Witnesses on Monday painted a sordid picture of the mayor's 1986 and 1988 visits to the Virgin Islands. They described drug use, drinking and the alleged sexual encounter with one of them, Linda Creque Maynard.

In an interview later with Washington station WJLA-TV, Barry insisted that the jury in his case should be allowed "to decide on the credibility of each government witness."

He has pleaded innocent to 10 misdemeanor counts of cocaine possession, one count of conspiracy and three felony counts of lying to a federal grand jury about involvement with drugs by himself and a friend, Charles Lewis.

Maynard, a Virgin Islands resident, testified that she was forced into having sex when she visited Barry in his Virgin Islands hotel room in March 1988.

The incident allegedly occurred when Lewis left the two together for about 10 minutes after Maynard and Lewis had smoked crack cocaine together in front of the mayor, Maynard testified.

She said Barry, dressed only in a robe, had been "after me" from the moment she entered the hotel room.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Judith Retchin asked her whether Barry had "limit(ed) himself sexually with you at all."

"No, he didn't," Maynard replied.

"Did you have sexual relations in the hotel room?" Retchin asked.

"Yes," Maynard said softly.

"Did you want that to happen?" Retchin continued.

"No," Maynard gasped, unable to fight back tears.

Throughout this section of testimony, Barry sat expressionless at the defense table, staring at the witness.

Defense attorney Robert Mance then asked Maynard whether she had fought Barry "all over the room" in order to avoid the incident.

"No," Maynard replied, "he already had me down on the bed."

Maynard, who said earlier that she had considered it "an honor to meet the mayor of Washington D.C.," testified that she did not report the incident to Lewis or local authorities.

"I just wanted to get away from there," she said.

Another witness said Barry puffed on marijuana cigarettes while he was in the Virgin Islands and went into a bathroom out of sight to use crack cocaine.

The mayor sat on his hotel room bed and smoked marijuana during the March 1988 trip, according to taped testimony by Dixie Hedrington.

"I smoked it a little and gave it to the mayor" who was sitting directly across from her, said Hedrington.

"He smoked it" and passed the joint to another woman, she said.

Hedrington said that during the same outing, Barry and Lewis went into the bathroom where smoke she recognized as that from crack cocaine came from behind the closed door.

Hedrington's testimony was tape-recorded from her grand jury appearance last December in Washington. She is pregnant and unable to travel to the Barry trial from the Virgin Islands.

Another prosecution witness, Jonetta Vincent, testified that Barry, former model Rasheeda Moore and Lewis, who was later convicted of drug charges, stood in a circle on a 1986 boat trip passing marijuana cigarettes between them.

"Mr. Barry took a puff and passed it back to Mr. Lewis," Vincent said of the incident aboard the sailboat Brigadoon in the Virgin Islands.

Barry's lawyers emphasized that Hedrington did not witness Barry using cocaine. Nor did Vincent see him using the drug, they brought out during questioning Monday.

Conferees delete AIDS provision from civil rights bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Language in a civil rights bill that would have allowed employers to move AIDS sufferers away from food-handling jobs is being removed from a civil rights bill because it "flies in the face" of scientific evidence, proponents say.

The action on Monday came as representatives of the House and Senate discussed changes made on the respective floors in the landmark civil rights legislation aimed at ensuring the rights of 43 million disabled.

Earlier this month, the Senate had accepted a House-added provision placing the limit on work assignments of AIDS sufferers — a move that was seen at the time as a major victory for Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C.

But sponsors of the legislation, including Sen. David Durenberger, R-Minn.; Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., and Thomas Harkin, D-Iowa, argued that no such restrictive language was necessary. They said it could not be justified in view of existing scientific evidence indicating that the AIDS virus is not transmitted through such casual means as the preparation and handling of food.

Kennedy said in a statement later that he was happy the conferees turned back the food-handlers amendment.

"This amendment flies in the face of all scientific and medical evidence and is a step backwards in our public understanding of and compassion for this nation's AIDS crisis," he said.

The Senate, by voice vote on June 6, had approved a non-binding motion by Helms to have the Americans with Disabilities Act include an exemption that would allow employers to reassign infected workers from food-handling jobs.

Helms' motion instructed Senate negotiators to accept a House-adopted exemption when they worked out a final version of the bill.

But the so-called Chapman amendment, named for Rep. James Chapman, D-Texas, was deleted from the bill during Monday's conference committee work.

Harkin had said earlier that the amendment would "codify ignorance" about AIDS and how it is transmitted.

The House had approved the exemption 199-187 last month before it finally passed the entire act 403-20. The Senate passed the bill 76-8 last September.

The conference report is expected to go first to the Senate, possibly as early as Wednesday, and then to the House, and sponsors said they expected final congressional passage before a Fourth of July recess.

The House had adopted the amendment even though Health and Human Services Secretary Louis W. Sullivan said it was unnecessary. The White House had not spoken out against the amendment, however, although it specifically endorsed another, unrelated change.

It was endorsed by the restaurant and food-service industry as well as by the National Federation of Independent Business, a chief critic of the entire disabilities bill.

Arkansas mass murder, Texas killer executed

By BILL SIMMONS
Associated Press Writer

VARNER, Ark. (AP) — R. Gene Simmons, who murdered 14 relatives and two other people in a Christmastime 1987 rampage, was put to death by injection after refusing all appeals and pleading for a swift execution.

Simmons, 49, was pronounced dead at 9:19 p.m. after a brief statement: "Justice delayed finally be done is justifiable homicide."

In Texas, James Smith, 37-year-old former taxi driver and tarot-card reader who killed a Houston businessman man in 1983, was executed by injection at 12:31 a.m. today. He, too, had refused all appeals.

"I go to my death without regret for my life," he said in a statement. "I will not humiliate myself. I will let no man break me."

The two executions brought to 132 the number of people put to death since the U.S. Supreme Court in 1976 allowed states to resume use of capital punishment.

The execution of Simmons was the second in Arkansas in a week. The June 18 electrocution of John Edward Swindler was the state's first execution in 26 years.

Unlike Swindler, Simmons was convicted after the state's method of execution was changed to lethal injection.

Simmons shot, clubbed, shot at or strangled 21 people, 16 of whom died. The dead included his wife, Becky; four of his daughters, three of his sons and four of his grandchildren. Eight victims were children, ages 1 to 17.

The killings were believed to have occurred between Dec. 22 and Dec. 28, 1987.

After his first conviction, Simmons said he would not appeal and asked that no one interfere. "I only ask for what I deserve," he told the court. "Let the torture and suffering in me end. Please allow me the right to be at peace."

Death penalty foes intervened and delayed Simmons' execution for about two years.

Simmons went to his death without giving a motive for the slayings. When he was arrested at the end of the killing spree, he reportedly told a woman he had held hostage, "It's all over now. I've gotten everybody who wanted to hurt me."

In Texas, Smith was put to death in Huntsville for the slaying of Larry Rohus. He winked, smiled to reporters and muttered "Hare Krishna" as he was injected.

He denied being a killer and said that when people "wake up to the reality of executions the price to be paid will be a dear one."

Witnesses said Smith showed up at Rohus' insurance office and demanded money. When Rohus, 44, complied and began walking away, Smith summoned him back, then shot him through the heart as Rohus begged for his life.

Smith came within six hours of dying in 1988 before death penalty opponents persuaded his mother to seek legal help to save her son. The U.S. Supreme Court stayed the execution.

However, in a recent ruling in an Arkansas case, the high court said that inmates have the right to refuse appeals and may volunteer to be put to death.

Smith's mother, Alexine Hamilton, failed again last weekend to delay her son's death when a Texas appeals court and a federal judge rejected arguments that Smith is incompetent to decide whether he should die.

Mennonite immigrants make a home in West Texas town of Seminole

EDITOR'S NOTE: Thirteen years ago several hundred Mennonites came to the Seminole area from Mexican and Canadian colonies hoping to practice their fundamental Anabaptist beliefs and rural, conservative lifestyle. They have become a part of Seminole while clinging to their own way of life.

By ELIZABETH KAUFMAN
Lubbock Avalanche-Journal

SEMINOLE (AP) — It is as though Frank Wiebe is shuffling the cards of memory, plucking out his ace.

"Feb. 22, 1977," Wiebe recites in soft, German-accented English.

That was the date when Wiebe, one of about 500 Old Colony Mennonites, moved his family from Canada to Seminole.

Other Mennonites came from Mexico that same year, amid highly publicized chaos of possible deportation and lost money in a convoluted farmland purchase.

At the time, Wiebe told a People magazine reporter, "We wanted to live here where the laws are good, and we could make one big family and educate our children in the way we believe is right... All we want to do is work and be citizens of this country. If they let us stay, this will be a new land. It is nothing but dust now; but someday you will see."

Impressions made by Wiebe and his fellow Mennonites, who today are estimated to number as many as 3,000 in West Texas, are tractor marks in the 320 acres of farmland owned by cotton farmer John Froese. Imprints also run across other fields where Mennonites work as farmhands.

Wiebe, one of several elected pastors of his church, has joined the small but increasing group leaving farming for other work. He and his wife, Susan, install siding for a New Mexico-based construction company. He said a few Mennonites work on oil rigs. Others drive trucks or repair cars.

In the Raymond Restaurant, Mennonites meet for morning coffee and converse in their traditional dialect of Low German. Families sometimes eat at Little Gomez restaurant, which serves Mexican-style food.

Many of the Gaines County Mennonites came from Mexico. They paid $2.6 million for 6,400 acres in West Texas, mistakenly believing the land ownership would make them eligible for permanent residence.

Their land was repossessed when they ran into financial difficulties, but many remained in the Seminole area. Members of the Texas Congressional delegation sponsored special legislation to allow them to stay in the country.

Wiebe's Old Colony congregation, also known as the Gaines County Mennonite Church, was joined by three other churches in the late '70s: The Evangelical Mennonite Conference Church (EMC) or the Seminole Mennonites, the Reinlander Church, and the Gospel Mennonite, or Evangelical Mennonite Mission Conference (EMMC) church. A fifth church, The German Church of God, is composed of former Mennonites.

Both the EMC and Old Colony recently have replaced weathered, small buildings with spacious, modern frame structures, and the EMMC church is building a new facility.

The Mennonite movement, which is named for pioneer Menno Simons and is called Anabaptist for its adult baptisms, began in 1525 in two branches.

The Swiss-South Germans migrated to North America. The Dutch-Germans went to Prussia, then moved to the Ukraine and eventually split between the midwestern United States and Manitoba, Canada. Colonies are also in South and Central America.

"We preach about drugs, drinking and smoking. We believe in salvation through grace. Your life has to show what you believe in," said Wiebe, 38.

So the women — who say they are following scriptures — aren't supposed to cut their hair and, once baptized, are to keep their heads covered. Clothing is dark, at least among congregations like Wiebe's and Bishop Henry Reimer's Reinlander Church, which are considered conservative.

Rempel's Gospel Mennonite church is considered more "modern" than Wiebe's or Reimer's church. "We have been named liberal by some," Rempel said. He countered the label by contending that "We want to live a simple lifestyle. We don't encourage gaudy dress. When the inner man is not that important, the outer becomes that much more important."

Unlike EMC, Reinlander and Old Colony, Rempel's church does not have its own school.

Private school teachers are non-certified congregation members. In the Reinlander and Old Colony churches, children aged 6 to 13 or 14 learn basic math, Low German, reading and spelling. The EMC church uses a more expanded lesson plan devised by a Christian education company.

"Our background is that you aim to earn a living and you don't necessarily need schooling to do that. Once the old fear of becoming swallowed up and the attempt to remain isolated is changed, it's a whole different thing," said Rempel, who has a partial high school education and a Bible school degree.

Froese, who also moved to Seminole in 1977, said the town is completely different from his colony in Mexico, where he had no chance to get home electricity. Froese said he prefers the life he has here.

The Mexican-reared Wiebe, who rode his first bicycle and spoke on his first telephone at 20, said he is far more modern now.

"In Old Mexico, there are some that like their women barefooted and pregnant. I don't believe in that. In our house, if there is a big decision to make, Susan and I make it together.

"You're supposed to live for God, but if you do nothing else but just think of Him, that is not good either.

"I read the newspaper. Our kids are great music lovers, gospel, country music. No hard rock. I don't like it."

Wiebe thinks such music leads to drinking and dancing.

"For the convenience of it, a computer would be nice, but there has to be a stopping point somewhere. One thing leads to another. A telephone led to an answering machine, which led to a microwave oven, which led to a deep freezer.

"I used to have television. I'm sort of sorry I did; if I hadn't maybe I would know the Bible better for teaching," he said, laughing wryly.

"I'm still not against public schools," he added. "But after they took the prayer out of the school, that was it. We try to accomplish, when the kids come out of school, that they will know how to read, write and know what's right and wrong. I went to school until the third grade, and I'm making more money than some people who went to college."

Wiebe said he would not stop any of his four children from choosing to attend high school and college.

Most Mennonites here live in two outer pockets of town, along winding, unpaved roads called villages. Often two mobile homes on a bare stretch of land house two generations of a family.

Wiebe admits there has been some drug abuse in his community. He said the troubled ones generally are 24 or 25 years old, and don't have parents in the area.

Night adult education teacher Wilma Stanley has seen few changes in Mennonites since she began working with them 12 years ago. "They live within their clan, and they don't get out," she said. Students' ages range from 18 to 45, reflecting those of the general Mennonite population, but most students are in their 20s.

The South Plains Health District Maternity Clinic for low-income pregnant women brought prenatal care and hospital deliveries for Mennonites who traditionally have had their children at home.

Of the 319 clients, 83 have been Mennonites. The oldest was 40. Mennonites said the tradition of having as many children as you can has been downgraded.

Still, an extended family is found under the umbrella name Mennonite — members of each congregation attest that every settlement contains many churches. A recent Mennonite's funeral brought 600 mourners.

When Wiebe says, "The Mennonites have no homeland," he is referring to the 400 past nomadic years. Wiebe, the American citizen, personally feels differently.

"In 1985, we came back from a trip to Canada. We were driving up the road to our house. I told Susan, 'I feel like we're home.' She said, 'We've been coming here for years.' But somehow, that time, for the first time, it really felt like I was coming home."

Exactly how will farm bill change price supports?

By DIANE DUSTON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Private farm groups as well as government officials are wading through the settling dust to see exactly what is in the compromise 1990 farm bill completed last week after weeks of wrangling and compromise.

The massive bill changes price supports on wheat and feed grains and fine tunes many other areas of the nation's farm law, but it will take experts who were not in on drafting the bill several days to decide how the changes affect various sectors of the farm community.

The members of the committee, meanwhile, are either congratulating themselves for finally reaching a compromise or preparing for a fight once the bill gets to the floor, probably in July.

The House version of the farm bill also is expected to be debated on the floor in July.

Sen. Thomas Harkin, D-Iowa, for example, has already promised an effort on the floor to raise price supports.

Others on the committee say the compromise bill agreed to Thursday on a 15-4 vote is the best that can be accomplished given intense competition among various farm interests.

Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., who wanted to freeze target prices, loan rates and acreage reduction, said he was satisfied.

Sen. Bob Kerrey, D-Neb., who led the negotiations for the Plains states senators to raise target prices and loan rates for commodities, said he thought the result was a balanced approach.

"I think it is a good bill," said Kerrey. "We got a compromise and it's out there. It's fair."

He said it provides protection farmers wanted, though it's packaged differently than the original proposals.

Sen. Thomas Daschle, D-S.D., said he couldn't be as enthusiastic as Kerrey because conditions for farmers in his state are worse.

"It depends on your crop mix," said Daschle, who voted against the bill. "The degree to which you are not farm bill dependent is the degree to which you like this bill. My farmers are not going to greet this with any kind of enthusiasm."

Kerrey said he knew some would try to change it on the floor, but said that was less important than whether the Bush administration was planning an attack on the proposals.

Immediately after the bill was approved by the Senate Agriculture Committee, Bruce Gardner, assistant secretary for economics, said he didn't understand the rationale for some of the provisions in the commodities section.

Agriculture Secretary Clayton Yeutter had no immediate comment and other department officials spent the weekend reviewing the bill.

Officials at the American Farm Bureau Federation, the nation's largest farm organization, also were studying the commodities section of the bill.

"It would make the current farm program in relation to wheat and feed grains more complicated and we're not sure in doing that whether it really helps farmers," said John Datt, executive director.

Larry Gray, of the National Family Farm Coalition, said his organization opposed the wheat and feed grains section and is trying to work with senators to seek changes on the floor.

"The programs devised in the House and Senate are full production programs with systematic reduction of prices received in the market place," said Gray.

"It's a scenario that virtually assures the loss of family farm operations. The mega-farms who can afford to produce at a loss can outlive the family farms and corner the market."

The bill continues the philosophy of the 1985 law. Both the administration and members of Congress have said farmers wanted only minor adjustments. However, advocates for small- and medium-sized farms say the law favors corporations and exporters and will eventually lead to demise of smaller operations and the buffer they provide against monopoly control of food prices.

Grain elevator fire smolders

HOUSTON (AP) — A grain elevator that exploded in Spring Branch is expected to smolder for several days, fire officials said.

The 17-story elevator exploded Sunday, blowing off its roof and igniting a fire that burned throughout the day.

The privately owned Shadowdale Grain Elevator exploded about 4 a.m. when static electricity apparently sparked volatile grain dust, said District Fire Chief J.C. Caswell.

No one was injured in the blast, but the explosion could be felt several miles away, Caswell said.

"I thought it was a loud clap of thunder, very loud, and it rumbled for a little while," said Sheryl Lentini, who lives about a half-mile from the elevator.

"I heard this big blast. It felt like my windows had moved," said Carol Weaver, who lives a mile away. "I thought it was thunder, but it lasted too long" and rumbled too much," she said.

Firefighters allowed the blaze to smolder and expected it to burn itself out over the next several days, Caswell said. Firefighters were unable to use douse the flames with water because the elevator contained the pesticide photoxin. When mixed with water, photoxin creates toxic fumes, Caswell said.

The elevator was one-third filled with milo and wheat, but officials said some of the stock may be salvaged. Caswell said damage was substantial, but had no estimate.

Harry Rosen, owner of the elevator, said new shipments would have to be diverted while repairs are made.

Program gets parents into schools

By TAMARA HENRY
AP Education Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Carlos Sheriff brought home a red-and-white folder every week telling his mother everything she needed to know about his education.

So did nearly 160,000 other students in two states.

Those folders have become a trademark of a program that seeks to assist schools in getting parents involved in the education of their children. School districts in Mississippi and California are participating in the Quality Education Project, and negotiations are underway to establish programs in Illinois.

Carlos completed sixth grade this spring in a Jackson, Miss., school participating in the project. His mother, Juanita Sheriff, said, "I really like that red folder because then I can see what he's doing (each week) — if he's not doing as well as I think he should, even if he's been a little talkative."

"You can send back comments. I tell them 'you have my permission to take him behind the green board' (for a whipping). Or, I tell them to give him some extra work as punishment."

Nancy Honig, president of the project, says increased parental involvement is a key to improving and sustaining academic achievement.

"There's a lot of talk now about parental involvement but no one really knows what that means," said Honig who developed the program in 1982 as a grass-roots movement to improve California's public school system.

"It sounds so simple. I mean it's not sexy at all, parental involvement. People want to talk about curriculum reform, drug abuse babies — those are all important issues — but here is an issue where we have a window of opportunity to address and nothing is happening. Everyone's researching, not acting."

The project has several objectives:

—Get parents to actively support the school.

—Encourage school administrators to institute activities that would keep parents informed about their children's progress and about what's going on in the school.

—Train school administrators to work with parents.

—Train teachers in the specifics of enlisting parent support at home for the school's efforts.

—Train parents in what to do at home to further educational process, both at home and at school.

—Get civic, business and religious groups to support the schools and their program of parental involvement.

—Promote reading at home as a key way for parents to help their children with school work.

Couple's love lusty even after 20 years

DEAR ABBY: I just read the letter from "Losing Patience" whose husband announced that his 14-year-old daughter (by a previous marriage) will be spending the summer with them, so they'll have to put their lovemaking on "hold" all summer because he's not comfortable making love if there's anyone else in the house.

You suggested counseling to get rid of his "hang-ups." Abby, he doesn't need counseling. I'm willing to bet that the majority of couples feel the same way.

My wife and I have been married nearly 20 years, and we enjoy sex as much now as we did when we were first married. However, we must have total privacy, because my wife gets very carried away. Bluntly put, she moans and sometimes cries out loudly from sheer ecstasy. And I love it!

She's tried stifling her feelings, so our kids — ages 16, 11 and 9 — can't hear, but that only leads to frustration. We make love in the mornings, afternoons or whenever we have the house to ourselves, so we can really let loose and enjoy ourselves.

So, Losing Patience, send your stepdaughter to a movie or whatever, and take advantage of your private time and enjoy yourself.

Abby, if you print this, go ahead and use the name of my town. The people here will go crazy wondering who the "Moaner in Cohasset" is.

LIKES PRIVACY
IN COHASSET, MINN.
DEAR LIKES PRIVACY: Un-

Dear Abby

less you live on a 20-acre estate, chances are your neighbors already know who the "Moaner in Cohasset" is.

DEAR ABBY: Can you stand one more letter of complaint about hairdressers? I quit going to my neighborhood beautician whose work I like and whose prices are unbeatable.

Why? Because she kept stopping her work to use her hands to gesture while she talked to me. That was bad enough, but while she talked and gestured, she kept looking at herself in the mirror! That used to drive me crazy. I don't have time to waste while she "talks to herself" in the mirror, as I have to get back to work at 2 p.m.

Now I go to another shop. It costs more, but I get out faster. I suppose you wonder why I just didn't say something to her? Well, I didn't have the nerve and was afraid of hurting her feelings.

LOUISIANA LADY

DEAR LADY: You could have done her a big favor by telling her what was driving you crazy instead of dropping her cold and taking your business to another shop. Had she known that her time-consuming gesturing irritated you, she might have corrected it, and by so doing kept a good customer. And you could have saved a little money.

DEAR ABBY: I'm in my late 60s and profoundly deaf, but that is not the worst problem. I have a severe case of tinnitus, which is a chronic ringing sensation in my ears. My case is unbelievable. The sounds might be compared to a bad LSD trip without the psychedelic visions. They last sometimes as long as four days.

You, like most people, will probably think I'm a nut case. I hear music or singing, or both — the same compositions over and over. Would you be good enough to consult one of your authorities to verify the fact that I am not crazy? I believe that would be an otorhinolaryngologist. This small town does not have such a specialist. Hoping you can help me...

HEARING THINGS
DEAR HEARING: Write to: The American Tinnitus Association, P.O. Box 5, Portland, Ore. 97207. It will refer you to the specialist nearest you. It will be worth the trip. Please enclose a long, stamped (45 cents), self-addressed envelope.

Panhandle Bird Watch

by Jan Elston

Red-headed Woodpecker

With the relatively few trees in the Texas Panhandle, it is surprising that we have so many different members of the Woodpecker Family, ranging in length from the sparrow-sized Downy Woodpecker to the 11 inch Red-Shafted Flicker.

We have the Red-Bellied Woodpecker (which doesn't have any red, except on its head, but so named because Ornithologists discovered that the skin was red, under the feathers on its stomach); also the Golden-Fronted, the Ladder-backed, the Red-headed, the Yellow-bellied Sapsucker, the Hairy Woodpecker, and all three Flickers—the Yellow-shafted, the Red-shafted, and the Gilded Flicker (which may be a hybrid, from the Red-shafted and Yellow-shafted).

Information about Flickers seems to vary from one bird authority to another, with the latest books classifying all of them as "Northern Flickers" with color variations of the different subspecies.

The Yellow-shafted Flicker is easily identified by the yellow undersurface of its wing and tail feathers, a red crescent on its gray nape, and a black "mustache" on each side of the face of the male and the immature.

All flickers have a brown barred back and wings, a black crescent bib, a white breast with black spots, and a conspicuous white rump spot. Flight is usually undulating, with wings folded against the body, during the glide after each series of flaps. The stiff tail of a woodpecker is used as a prop, and if you bird-watchers will get used to noticing dead trees, you may see one or more Flickers propped against the tree trunks.

Woodpeckers are considered non-migratory birds, but it seems like we see more of them during the Fall and Spring. Flickers usually live in wooded areas, but they may come to your birdbath, or may be seen on your lawn, probably looking for ants, grubs, or other larvae.

They eat an enormous amount of ants, but during the winter they will eat fruits and berries, and are also attracted to suet.

Having a Yellow-Shafted Flicker in your yard can be a "mixed blessing." It is beneficial when it is riding your trees and lawns of insects and larvae, but destructive when it is going after insects in the wood of your house. (One Flicker drilled a hole about 4" in diameter on the back of our house, and the only way we could prevent its continued drilling was by covering the hole with copper).

Flickers have called "Yellow Hammers", or "Wake-ups", both names being descriptive of their loud drumming, which may be on resonant limbs, telephone poles, or drainpipes.

We knew one family whose house was built around a gigantic metal fireplace. One day they heard a deafening noise resounding throughout the entire house, and they finally located a Flicker, drumming inside the metal-flue.

These birds have been reported during the last couple of weeks:

Swainson's Hawks; many Blue Jays; Avocets; Redwing Blackbird at feeder in town; Eastern Kingbirds; Lark Sparrows; many Mississippi Kites; flock of about 40 Black crowned Night Herons standing in playa lake about 5 miles west of Pampa.

Paint your house* by computer

NEW YORK (AP) — With the help of interactive computerized machines, homeowners now have the ability to plan their color schemes on an in-store computer that displays interior and exterior scenes similar to their own homes.

According to researchers at New York-based Intermark Corp., the new units allow experiments with virtually unlimited color combinations, enabling homeowners to see how the paint job will look beforehand.

The sensitive computers even depict different shadings of color under shadows, sunlight and lamp-light, explains Intermark, a pioneer design-producer of the interactive units.

In using the system, homeowners first select an on-screen image of the home exterior or room that most closely resembles their own from a variety of home decor styles. They then "scroll" through color groups to view up to 21 colors at a time.

After selecting a color, they move an arrow to the section of the room or home exterior where the color is to be used. Once the colors are decided, the computer prints out those choices with the corresponding commercial paint numbers and suggested appropriate primers and topcoatings.

Lendl, Becker survive first-round challenges

By ROB GLOSTER
AP Sports Writer

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Ivan Lendl won ugly. Boris Becker won dirty.

The top two seeds survived surprisingly tough challenges in Monday's first round at Wimbledon. And they weren't particularly concerned about the lack of beauty in their efforts.

Lendl, the top seed, lost four of the opening five games against 22-year-old Christian Miniussi, an Argentine ranked 116th in the world. Though he recovered to win 3-6, 6-4, 6-3, 6-4, he seemed to struggle at times with the low bounce of the ball off the carefully manicured grass courts.

"I just had a terrible time with the timing," said Lendl, beginning his annual quest for the only major title that has eluded him. "Every court plays differently and I just couldn't get any rhythm on the return of serve."

Lendl skipped the clay-court season and has concentrated on grass for the past few months to prepare himself for Wimbledon. But he seemed to be suffering from his traditional aversion to grass in the opening set.

"I was a bit nervous at first," he said. "I was not feeling comfortable with the low bounces I was getting. But I got used to it a little bit and I hit some good returns."

Wimbledon

While Lendl was battling the bounces, Becker was simply trying to stay on his feet. The three-time winner repeatedly slipped and skidded on the grass, often while charging the net.

"It was very, very wet and soft," Becker said after his 7-6, 7-6, 7-5 Centre Court victory over Luis Herrera of Mexico. "The first round is always difficult, but on such a court it is more difficult."

Becker made his task more complicated by getting off to a slow start with 10 double faults in the opening set. But he came through in crucial moments, capping the first tie-breaker 7-2 with a pair of aces and claiming the second tie-breaker 7-4.

The second seed got so used to flopping on the slick grass that he even took an extra dive late in the third set to mimic Herrera, who had lunged for a shot.

Herrera, 18, ranked 199th in the world, displayed fine touch but did not have the power to contend with Becker.

Lendl and Becker were not the only men who struggled Monday. Former champion Pat Cash recovered from a 2-1 deficit in sets and a leg injury to defeat 253rd-ranked Dimitri Poliakov of the Soviet Union, while seventh seed Brad Gilbert of Piedmont, Calif., overcame a similar deficit against Yugoslavia's Bruno Oresar.

Frenchman Yannick Noah, the No. 16 seed, was not as lucky, losing in three quick sets to qualifier Wayne Ferreira. Noah, who has always had trouble on grass, said he was not able to move well on the slippery surface.

"Wimbledon isn't really a place where I feel comfortable," he said after falling 6-4, 6-3, 6-2 to the 18-year-old Ferreira. "This year I tried to block out all the negative thoughts I have about playing on grass."

Several other men's seeds had easier afternoons. Ninth-seeded American Jim Courier, No. 10 Jonas B. Svensson of Sweden and two Frenchmen, No. 11 Guy Forget and No. 15 Henri Leconte, all won in straight sets.

Only two seeded women played Monday, and one was a loser. Seventh seed Katarina Maleeva defeated Italy's Barbara Romano 6-2, 6-4, but 16th seed Barbara Paulus of Austria was eliminated 6-2, 3-6, 6-4 by crowd favorite Sarah Loosemore of Wales.

Hana Mandlikova, a four-time Grand Slam tournament winner who announced last week that she would retire from singles play following Wimbledon, came within a whisker of retirement on Monday. She fought off three match points before defeating Italy's Laura Lapi 6-3, 3-6, 11-9.

Twins' rookie baffles Ranger hitters

Erickson limits Texas to four hits

By MIKE NADEL
AP Sports Writer

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Kirby Puckett has already surpassed his 1989 home run total. Considering he only hit nine last year, that's not too surprising.

Here, however, is a fact much more difficult to fathom: One game into his major-league career, 22-year-old Scott Erickson already has half as many victories this season as alleged staff ace Allan Anderson.

Puckett's three-run homer and Erickson's four-hit pitching over six innings Monday lifted the Twins to a 9-1 victory over the Texas Rangers.

"It's not a big deal to me," said Puckett, whose 10th homer snapped a scoreless tie in the fourth inning. "If the home runs are there, they're there. I'm doing everything I usually do."

Like jumping all over a waist-high pitch and sending it 437 feet.

"If I could take that pitch back, it'd be a different game," Mike Jeffcoat said. "I threw him a fastball that ran back over the plate. I certainly didn't want it over the heart of the plate."

Of course, a pitch doesn't have to be perfect to be to Puckett's liking.

"I go up there and hack," said Puckett, who averaged 28 homers from 1986-88. "I've got no technique. I just swing the bat, man."

Opponents like to take their hacks at the Rangers. The loss by Jeffcoat, 1-3, dropped Texas' starting left-handers to 1-9 with a 6.28 ERA.

Meanwhile, the Rangers' batters were having little success against Erickson, who just four days ago was pitching in Double-A and just last year was winning 18 games at the University of Arizona.

"He got the ball and was ready to go," Puckett said of Erickson, the first starter to go from Class AA Orlando to the Twins since Brad Havens in 1982. "He was pretty impressive. He showed people he belongs here."

The right-hander allowed only four singles and two walks before giving way to John Candelaria, who pitched three perfect innings for his third save.

It was the third time this season Texas faced a pitcher making his major-league debut and the second time the Rangers were gracious enough to lose.

"Their kid looked good, with a good sinker and slider," Rangers manager Bobby Valentine said. "But we had him on the ropes and didn't cash in."

Erickson survived two jams. In the fifth, he got

Scott Coolbaugh on a one-out grounder with runners at second and third before retiring Jeff Huson on a fly with the bases loaded. And in the sixth, when Texas scored its only run, he struck out Ruben Sierra and Pete Incaviglia.

"Two things impressed me," Twins vice president Bob Gebhard said.

"First, you never know how a young kid will react early and, even though he got behind a couple of hitters in the first inning, he came back and got them out. Second, he got out of two tough binds and showed a lot of poise."

Erickson admitted being nervous.

"You're in the spotlight pretty good at Arizona but not quite like this," said Erickson, who was 8-3 with a 3.03 ERA at Orlando before his call-up. "I just had to avoid thinking where I was, with all these people around me."

The Twins were coming off Sunday's 11-2 loss to Kansas City. The Royals got 10 of their 23 hits off Anderson, who fell to 2-10. The Twins entered Monday's game with a 4.36 ERA — 12th in the 14-team AL — a big reason they are 5-17 in June.

So Erickson was a welcome addition.

"He's just what we needed," catcher Junior Ortiz said. "I like him. Good fastball. Hard slider. Throws strikes. I think he'll help us the rest of the year."

Scott tough at home against Padres

Yelding, Ramirez lead Astros' hitting attack

HOUSTON (AP) — It doesn't seem to make much difference who the characters are, whenever Houston's Mike Scott faces the San Diego Padres at the Astrodome he usually comes away with a victory.

Scott was the winning pitcher in the Astros' 5-3 victory over the Padres Monday night. It marked the 14th time in 15th decisions Scott has beaten the Padres at home.

"For something like that to happen you have to get a lot of breaks," Scott said. "I don't remember them all but I know I've had my share against them."

Scott, 5-7, allowed two earned runs before leaving with two outs in the sixth. Dave Smith pitched the ninth for his league-leading 15th save.

Eric Yelding had two hits, stole two bases and scored two runs and Rafael Ramirez drove in a run and had two hits as the Astros jumped ahead 5-0 by the fourth inning at the expense of Andy Benes, 6-5.

San Diego had home runs from Fred Lynn, his fifth of the season, and Mark Parent, his first. Of Parent's 14 career homers, 10 have been in San Diego and three have come at Houston. The other was at Chicago.

"He's always had good success here, he's one of the few of our guys who has," San Diego Manager Jack McKeon said. "We just couldn't get anybody on base in front of him."

Scott allowed only one hit through the first five innings and retired 11 in a row until Parent led off the sixth with a homer.

"When he (Scott) gets a 5-0 lead after five you're not going to come back on him too often," McKeon said. "He was just putting it up there and making us hit it. You notice he didn't walk anybody when during our rally."

The Astros were playing without their leading home run hitter, Glenn Davis, who was out with a bad back.

"Sometimes when a team loses a key player it puts a spark in everybody else," Benes said. "I was looking over the stats of those guys and they aren't bad at all. They've got a bunch of guys who get on base and run on you."

McKeon shuffled the Padre lineup in an effort to get something going against Scott. Roberto Alomar, normally a second baseman, started his first game at shortstop.

Bip Roberts played second. His fielding error on a potential double-play ball with the bases loaded in the third paved the way for Houston.

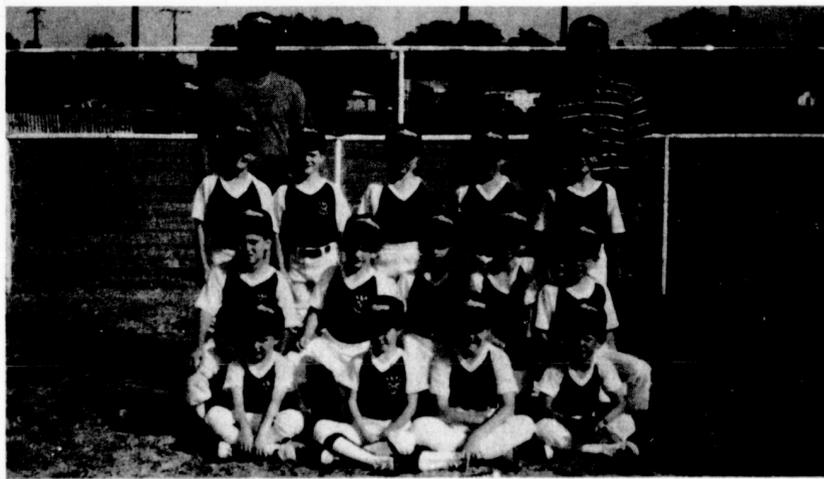

"I wanted to make that play and get us out of the inning, but unfortunately I made a big error and it cost us the game," Roberts said.

Amidst all the lineup changes, Scott was a constant. After an 0-5 start, he has now won five of his last seven decisions.

"This park is an advantage for us," he said. "A lot of teams don't like to play here, but we do. It just has an aura about it."

"It's strange the way things go for us here," Benes said. "We just can't seem to get a break. We had chances tonight, but give (Houston) credit. They didn't have the one big guy (Davis) but the other one (Scott) really did the job for them."

Texas-El Paso coach denies allegations made by former basketball recruit

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Texas-El Paso basketball coach Don Haskins scoffed at claims by a former recruit who said he was given housing, transportation and money.

"We've done nothing illegal," Haskins said. He has called a news conference today to discuss the allegations.

John Staggers told the NCAA that he received favors from UTEP in 1988, the Los Angeles Times reported. Staggers also implicated UTEP assistants Rus Bradburd, now at Ball State, and G. Ray Johnson.

"I came out to (El Paso) with money, but I never spent my money because ... I didn't have to pay for anything," Staggers told the Los Angeles Times. The charges come six months after the NCAA began an investigation of UTEP's basketball program.

During his senior year of high school in California, Staggers was considered one of the top 50 college prospects in the nation. But he had so many unexcused absences that he failed to graduate.

Staggers signed a letter of intent to play for UTEP, even though other schools looked at his transcript and shielded away. But Staggers failed a General Equivalency Diploma certificate test.

He now attends Columbia Community College in California. Officials of that school said Staggers, faced with virtually no other options, buckled down and did the work for his GED.

"You know," Haskins said, "had John Staggers passed his GED here, I think the NCAA would be a lot more concerned we'd done something illegal."

Staggers was not at home when called Monday by The Associated Press. Haskins did not return calls from the AP Monday.

Bradburd refused to respond to the allegations Monday. Johnson denied buying meals or giving rides to Staggers.

The Times has also reported that former UTEP player

Shelton Boykin boasted of boosters loaning luxury cars during the 1987-88 school year. A March 1989 story in Newsday said some players talked of a "sugar daddy" program through which athletes received favors from fans.

Haskins said he believes the NCAA is looking into reports that former guard Tim Hardaway drove a Cadillac while at UTEP. Haskins said he drove the Cadillac while his Mazda was in the shop.

Haskins said he is adamant in warning his players not to take favors from anyone. "I sit my players down and tell them not to take anything, anyplace."

Italy, Ireland continue World Cup streaks

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

ROME (AP) — Italy doesn't allow goals. Ireland doesn't lose games.

Both continued their streaks Monday in entirely different ways. The host Italians, seeking an unprecedented fourth World Cup, beat Uruguay 2-0 on goals by Salvatore Schillaci and Aldo Serena. Ireland, in its first appearance at the world soccer championships, survived 120 minutes of scoreless play and won a penalty kick shootout over Romania 5-4.

The teams meet in the quarterfinals in Rome on Saturday. "This is the World Cup and every game is hard, every team is hard," Schillaci said of the matchup with the Irish.

It will be hard for anyone to beat Italy's defense, which has an unblemished record so far. The Italians have beaten Austria and the United States 1-0, Czechoslovakia and Uruguay 2-0.

"I think our midfield is our real source of strength," said Luigi De Agostini. "We have mobile players and never give other teams a fixed point of reference that they can attack."

Italian coach Azeglio Vicini almost seems to take the impenetrable defense in stride.

"It is something we depend on," he said. "We always attacked and created quite a few plays. In the second half, we were able to break the tie. It was an important step against a very difficult opponent."

The next opponent not only will be difficult but inspired. It has been 19 months since the Irish were beaten and, even though they have not won in regulation time here, nobody has defeated them, either.

"Just think," Coach Jack Charlton said, "we are through to the quarterfinals in our first World Cup. I promised Soccer them at the start that we would take them to Rome and we've made it."

Barely. The heroes this time were the goalie and the gunner. Goalkeeper Paddy Bonner guessed right, dived right and stopped the fifth penalty kick in the shootout, by Daniel Timofte.

"I read the way he walked up to the ball," Bonner said.

David O'Leary, known as "Gunner" with Arsenal of the English first division, then walked up to the ball and put it into the right corner of the net for the victory.

"To walk on and score the winner, it was a dream," O'Leary said. "The lads said: 'Take the fifth one.' So I did." "I left it completely to them," Charlton said. "There were plenty of willing takers. David O'Leary has had to wait a long time to get on to the team, but he accepted without hesitation the responsibility of scoring the final goal. He did Ireland proud."

When O'Leary scored, the players surged onto the field and mobbed him, while nearly 20,000 Irish fans sang, waved flags and hugged each other in celebration.

The Romanians also could be proud. They played well under the most difficult of circumstances — unrest back home.

"It could be that the events had some effect on the players," Coach Emerich Jeneci said.

"Football also helped keep the calm at home because everyone was excited about us."

The excitement of the second round concludes today with Yugoslavia against Spain at Verona and England playing Belgium at Bologna.

Flutie signs contract with Canadian Football League

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — Doug Flutie will be throwing footballs and selling fax machines for British Columbia Lions owner Murray Pezim.

Flutie, the 1984 Heisman Trophy winner, signed a one-year contract with an option year with the CFL team that includes a two-year personal services contract with Pezim.

"I worked some unique contracts in the past, especially with the USFL," Flutie said. "We have another unique deal here."

Terms of the contracts were not disclosed, but Pezim said his business deal with the former Boston College star would include the marketing of a product that allows personal computers to function as fax machines.

"He's a sharp boy," Pezim said. "I'm going to make a hell of a businessman out of him."

He said the two contracts could make Flutie, released by the New England Patriots in the off-season, the highest-paid player in the CFL.

Lions president Joe Kapp said the proposed contract would fit within the team's salary structure — the CFL has a $3 million salary cap for each team — because of the non-football business deal with Pezim.

The flamboyant stock promoter is no stranger to big-money deals.

Pezim controls or has interests in more than 50 companies listed on the Vancouver Stock Exchange. His companies accounted for one-quarter of daily trading volume and one-third of the trading value on the exchange last year.

He is also a major player in the Eskay Creek gold property in northwestern British Columbia.

Nets going after Coleman

By TOM CANAVAN
AP Sports Writer

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Some old Magic, a couple of second-round draft choices and, hocus-pocus, the No. 1 pick in the NBA draft seems obvious for the New Jersey Nets.

Come Wednesday night, Derrick Coleman of Syracuse should be the first player taken in the draft, provided the Nets' keep the top choice.

On Monday, the Nets seemed to the remove all doubt that Coleman would be the first player drafted when they acquired veteran guard Reggie Theus from the Orlando Magic for second-round draft choices in 1993 and 1995.

The trade fulfills the Nets' need for a proven shooting guard and has the added bonus of giving them a player who can also play the point. It also clears house for the Magic and clears the way for second-year pro Nick Anderson, a No. 1 pick a year ago, to move into the starting lineup.

What the Nets need now is a rebounder, and by selecting Coleman in the draft they would get the NCAA's all-time leading rebounder.

"All that appears to stand in his way of becoming a Net is a blockbuster deal."

"It could go down to the last minute," said Bob Casciola, the Nets' executive vice president and chief operating officer. "We've gone through all the scenarios. We know what people have and what they have to offer. The worst scenario that would happen to us is that we would go with the pick."

Until the trade, Casciola said the Nets had considered taking either Coleman, forward Dennis Scott of Georgia Tech or guard Gary Payton of Oregon State with the No. 1 pick. All three had visited with team officials in the past few weeks and all fulfilled a need.

Coleman, 6-foot-10, was the rebounder. Scott was the much-needed shooter. Payton could drive the lane.

But the Theus trade seems to rule out all but Coleman.

Theus, who will be 33 in October, gives New Jersey a durable guard who has a 47.2 career shooting average. The 6-7 two-time All-Star was the second leading scorer for the Magic last season, averaging 18.9 points per game while leading the team with 407 assists in 76 games. He shot 439 from the field and 853 from the foul line.

"Reggie is a player I have known and competed against for years and I like his competitive juices," Nets coach Bill Fitch said. "I understand what he has gone through the past couple of years with all the moving that he's done, and it doesn't concern me."

Theus, who came to Orlando in the expansion draft, started his career in the 1978-79 season with Chicago and played with the Bulls for 5 1/2 years before bouncing between Kansas City and Sacramento. He was shipped to Atlanta for the 1988-89 season and was picked up by Orlando in the expansion draft.

"This is a move, regardless of the draft, we felt we had to make," Magic general manager Pat Williams said. "After a year of apprenticeship, the coaches felt we had to let (Anderson) play major minutes. We have to force feed him some playing time."

With Theus gone, three shooting guards remain on the Magic roster — Anderson, Otis Smith and Morlon Wiley.

The Magic have the fourth pick overall in the draft.

Casciola said the Nets are still considering trading the top draft pick.

Oilers' Rozier named in two paternity suits

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Oilers running back Mike Rozier has been named in a paternity suit for the second time in a month by women who each claim he is the father of their unborn child.

The latest suit was filed Monday by Rita Baldwin, 25, who claimed Rozier is the father of her baby, according to lawyer Glenn Lilly, who also represents Pamela Gobert, 23, who filed a paternity suit against Rozier earlier this month.

Ms. Baldwin, an unemployed student in Dickinson, claims in the suit filed in Harris County Family District Court that she is, expecting a baby in September.

Ms. Gobert is four months pregnant, Lilly said.

Both women are seeking medical costs and child support for their children, he said.

"These women need the financial help that he can provide," Lilly said. "It's not legally required in Texas that he pay for pre-natal care, but it's the morally correct thing to do."

Rozier has 21 days to respond to Baldwin's suit and until July 16 to respond to Gobert's petition. If he contests fatherhood of either child, Lilly will ask the court to order medical tests to determine paternity.

Rozier so far has paid for the initial doctor's visits for both the women, Lilly said.

Ms. Baldwin was apparently unaware of Rozier's relationship with Ms. Gobert, Lilly said. He described the Baldwin-Rozier relationship as "girlfriend on and off for some time."

"Rita (Baldwin) obviously feels lied to and deceived by Mike Rozier," the lawyer said.

Ms. Baldwin initially consulted Lilly's father, prominent Houston attorney Earle Lilly, in her case against Rozier. Since Glenn Lilly was already handling Gobert's claim, Lilly referred the case to his son.

The elder Lilly earlier this year successfully represented flight attendant Sandra Renfro, who won a $1.6 million judgment after a jury found she had a common-law marriage with New York Yankee outfielder Dave Winfield.

Neither woman is claiming a common-law marriage with Rozier, Lilly said.

Rozier signed a one-year, $600,000 contract with the Oilers last week. The contract includes several lucrative incentive bonuses and is expected to match the previous year's $625,000 base salary and $25,000 signing bonus.

Oilers General Manager Mike Holovak tried to trade Rozier last season but could not get what he thought the running back was worth.

Reform Jews vote to accept gay rabbis

By CARRIE FIGDOR
Associated Press Writer

SEATTLE (AP) — Reform Judaism, the most liberal of the religion's three main branches, broke with 4,000 years of Jewish tradition and voted to accept gay and lesbian rabbis. But it stopped short of endorsing homosexual unions.

The decision Monday by the 1,550-member Central Conference of American Rabbis makes Reform Judaism the biggest religious group to officially recognize homosexual clergy. The decision applies in the United States and Canada.

Participants said Reform Judaism already has rabbis who are homosexual and that the vote merely recognizes reality.

"It's a breakthrough for our Reform movement," said Rabbi Yoel Kahn of Sha'ar Zahav in San Francisco, a primarily homosexual congregation.

"It is certainly a breakthrough for gay and lesbian Jews and I think it's an important step for religious liberalism in this country."

There are about 1.5 million Reform Jews worldwide, including about 1.3 million in the United States.

The voice vote came after 45 minutes of debate at the conference's 101st annual convention, attended by about 500 rabbis. A 17-member committee studied the issue four years before issuing a report endorsing gay and lesbian rabbis.

Jewish law, embodied in the Torah and other texts, condemns homosexuality as an abomination.

But "out of concern for human dignity one is permitted to violate the prohibitions of Torah," said Rabbi Samuel Karff of Houston, conference president and a member of the committee.

The committee's minority inserted a statement affirming that homosexual unions can fulfill a Jew's religious duty to create a traditional Jewish home. But the report states that heterosexual marriage remains the Jewish ideal.

In Reform Judaism, many Jews do not observe traditional dietary laws or cover their heads in prayer. These are among key differences with Conservative and Orthodox Jews.

The Union of American Hebrew Congregations, which represents Reform Jewish congregations, overwhelmingly endorsed homosexual rabbis last fall.

In 1972, Reform Judaism became the first major branch to ordain women rabbis.

Some Reform rabbis said they will push for greater acceptance of homosexuality in their congregations. More traditional rabbis said Reform Judaism has gone far enough and they are not comfortable endorsing gay role models.

"I am not here to state that homosexuality is a sin ... but that there are individuals who are not appropriate as rabbis," said Rabbi Philip Bregman of Temple Shalom in Vancouver, British Columbia.

"It's a first step. ... I'm hoping we'll be able to do more education to build a foundation of more support and education about gay and lesbian Jews and rabbis," said Rabbi Denise Eger, lesbian leader of Beth Chayim Chadashim, a primarily homosexual congregation in Los Angeles.

In its report, the conference recognized that many congregations might find themselves unable to accept gay or lesbian rabbis. The conference helps place rabbis in congregations, but congregations can dismiss them.

"We do not encourage our gay and lesbian colleagues to come out of the closet because we cannot protect them," Karff said.

The Conservative Jewish movement has had women rabbis since 1985 but does not openly accept homosexual rabbis. Orthodox Judaism opposes ordination of women or homosexuals.
