Citizens requested to write letters in prison bid support

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

Pampa area citizens are being asked to participate in a massive letter-writing campaign to Texas Department of Criminal Justice prison board members as a demonstration of local support for locating a corrections unit here, said Bill Waters, president of Pampa Industrial Foundation.

On Saturday, Waters and employees of the Pampa Area Chamber of Commerce were immersed in a beehive of activity, informing Pampans of the letter-writing campaign and handing out window signs indicating prison support.

"We need to send out hundreds of letters to each prison board member," Waters said, "to show them the width of community support of our prison proposal."

Waters said letters to Jerry Hodge, a prison board member in Amarillo, should be mailed, but that all other letters should be delivered to the chamber building, 200 N. Ballard, by 2 p.m. Monday. He said they will then be sent in bulk by overnight delivery.

Letters must be received by board members on Tuesday in order to possibly affect their decision, officials have said, since Wednesday is a holiday and a "short list" of prison prospects will be announced Thursday by the TBCJ.

Pampa is one of 20 contenders for four new prisons around the state. Between 450 and 800 new jobs are attached to a city winning a prison.

Jim Morris, chamber president, said the letter campaign will show TBCJ members around the state the massive support the prison bid is receiving locally.

MacAdoodles, a T-shirt shop at 514 S. Russell, is printing shirts that read, "A Prison for Pampa: Two P's in a Pod!!!!" They will be sold at the business.

In addition, posters with the same logo are available at the chamber office for display in windows around the city.

"We've got signs at the Chamber of Commerce and also yellow ribbons to tie on their cars or trees or places of business," Morris said. "We feel like this is something that is real catchy."

He said, "If the city makes the short list and goes to Austin on the 10th (of July for final selection), we will be wearing these" T-shirts.

In the meantime, Waters stated, wearing the shirts and displaying the signs increases local morale and tells the prison board of the widespread support a prison would get in Pampa.

"They look at the response of a community," Morris said of the prison board, "to see if the entire community is really in favor of them bringing in a prison. With the competition we've got, they don't have to put a prison where they are not wanted. This is just another indication to the board and staff that we are in fact interested in them locating another prison up in the Panhandle."

Dozens of businesses around the city were featuring the green prison signs by Saturday afternoon. In addition, a number of businesses used impromptu messages of their own to get across prison support.

"We're looking forward to making the short list on the fifth and then having our pep rally and rap session on Friday (at the Pampa Community Building, 200 N. Ballard).

The Chamber of Commerce office will be open today from 1:30 to 5 p.m. for the letter campaign.

"Also, we're having a prayer vigil on Sunday (July 8 at 2:30 p.m. at the M.K. Brown Civic Center) and look forward to having a large turnout at that."

Morris and other community leaders said they recognized the emotionalism involved with supporting a prison for Pampa.

"I think we all were very disappointed last time when we made the short list and then saw it not come our way," Morris said.

"But we looked at it again and said to ourselves that we did have a good package, and do have a good package for the state of Texas.

"This is something we as a community can present again to the state. If they bring all the prisoners into the system that are in county jails now, they are going to have to build some more prisons after these four."

"We need to keep our ideas before the state so they know we definitely want them up here."

Morris agreed with other community leaders that the city of Childress is a good example of perseverance.

Taxes, fees going up in 12 states today

By KENT KILPATRICK
Associated Press Writer

People in at least 12 states, including Texas, don't have to wait for President Bush and Congress to get together on raising taxes. They'll begin paying higher state taxes or fees Sunday.

Other new laws taking effect on July 1 include a "scarlet letter" measure in Iowa requiring repeat drunken drivers to get special license plates, and laws in three states allowing the suspension of driver's licenses for drug-use offenses unrelated to driving.

Connecticut is phasing in a family leave law that will require many businesses to give unpaid leaves of at least 12 weeks for employees to care for newborns or ill family members.

Indiana and Maryland are implementing flag desecration laws despite the U.S. Supreme Court ruling throwing out a federal statute.

New Jersey is boosting its sales tax from 6 percent to 7 percent, making it the second highest of any state's, after Connecticut's 8 percent and just ahead of Washington's 6.5 percent.

The sales tax also is being extended to some previously exempt goods and services. The excise tax on a pack of cigarettes is going up 13 cents and a tax on petroleum products will add about 2 cents to the cost of a gallon of gasoline.

Those changes are designed to raise $1.5 billion in revenue for the state, which was faced with a big deficit despite spending cuts.

"We cut close to $2 billion," Gov. Jim Florio said. "We cut out jobs, scaled down programs. Everyone will feel the pinch." A $1.3 billion income tax increase for next Jan. 1 is awaiting Florio's signature. Nearly all of that will go to school aid.

The Texas sales tax goes up a quarter point to 6.25 percent, primarily for a court-ordered reform in school financing.

The increase put Texas in a tie with Illinois for the fourth-highest state sales tax. Gov. Bill Clements fought the boost, but gave in to the Legislature to avoid having the court implement its own plan.

"I don't like it today. I don't like it tomorrow. And I'm not happy about it, but, nevertheless, that's the way the system works," Clements said.

Texas' cigarette tax is jumping 15 cents a pack and the tax on mixed drinks was raised two points to 14 percent. (See related story below.)

The increases are expected to bring in nearly a half-billion dollars.

Kentucky's sales tax will jump a full point to 6 percent. The increase will provide a significant portion of $1.3 billion in new revenues this year.

Florida is implementing several new or increased taxes to raise $780 million. They include a 10-cent-per-pack increase in the cigarette tax

Texas sales tax hits all-time high today

By MICHAEL HOLMES
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) - The sales tax, which Texas did without until 1961, has increased more in the last six years than during its first 23. Today the state sales tax rises to an all-time high of 6 1/4 percent, giving Texas the nation's fourth-highest rate.

The boost was approved by lawmakers and Gov. Bill Clements to provide more money for public schools.

It is the second tax increase approved by Clements since he campaigned on a "no-new-taxes" pledge in 1986. The Republican governor approved a sales tax increase to 6 percent in 1987 to help make up a $6 billion budget deficit caused by the 1985-86 oil price collapse.

Then, after vetoing one proposed tax increase, he approved boosting the rate to 6 1/4 percent to meet court-ordered public school finance reform.

"I had to agree to the quarter-cent sales tax (increase). I didn't like it when I did. I don't like it today. I don't like it tomorrow and I'm not happy about it, but, nevertheless, that's the way the system works," Clements said when he signed the latest tax hike into law June 7.

The sales tax is levied on most merchandise Texans buy and on many of the services they use.

By reaching 6 1/4 percent, the Texas levy now is tied with Illinois and trails only Connecticut, New Jersey and Washington state.

What's more, many cities levy an additional 1 percent tax, and some metropolitan transit authorities assess a 1 percent tax as well. In Dallas, Houston and San Antonio, the total sales tax paid by consumers is 8 1/4 percent.

Other taxes go up today, too.

The levy on a pack of cigarettes rises from 26 cents to 41 cents. The tax on other tobacco products, including snuff, chewing tobacco and smoking tobacco, rises from 28.125 percent to 37.13 percent.

The gross receipts tax on the sale of mixed drinks rises from 12 percent to 14 percent.

The new taxes were approved by the Legislature to help provide an additional $528 million for public education. The Texas Supreme Court has ordered the state to give more money to poor school districts.

The sales tax was 2 percent when it was first enacted in 1961. In 1968, it rose to 3 percent. The 1971 Legislature raised the rate to 4 percent, where it stayed until lawmakers boosted it to 4 1/8 percent in 1984 to pay for school reforms.

In 1986, cash-short lawmakers raised the tax to 5 1/4 percent, and the 1987 Legislature fixed the rate at 6 percent.

The latest increase came amid continuing talk about the state's overall tax system.

Texas is one of a handful of states without a corporate or personal income tax. But since the oil bust of 1985-86, the state's reliance on sales taxes has increased every year.

In 1983, the 4 percent sales tax generated $3.3 billion, or 38.9 percent of all state tax collections.

In 1987, the sales tax generated $4.6 billion, or 45 percent of all tax collections. Last year, it brought in $6.9 billion, or 53.6 percent.

Projections for 1990 say the sales tax will account for about 58 percent of all collections, said Mary Jane Wardlow of the comptroller's office.

At the same time, oil and gas production taxes have played a shrinking role in the state budget.

In 1985, those levies accounted for 20.2 percent of all state revenues, or $2.1 billion. Last year, they counted for less than half that share: $1.2 billion, or 9.1 percent of the state's total tax take.

Following the 1987 budget crisis, the Legislature appointed a select committee of government and business leaders to examine "tax equity" in Texas.

So far, little has changed. But House Speaker Gib Lewis, D-Fort Worth, said lawmakers continue to study the tax system. "Our tax structure is not a fair and equitable system," Lewis said.

'Golden Horseshoe' hunt returns for rodeo season

The "Golden Horseshoe Treasure Hunt" returns this week in conjunction with the annual Top O' Texas Rodeo scheduled July 12-14.

Organizers of the event said a golden horseshoe has been hidden in the area. New clues will be given each day at selected Pampa businesses until someone finds the horseshoe.

Whoever finds the horseshoe will win box seats to all three rodeo performances, a $144 value.

The clues also will be given in The Pampa News and on KGRO/KOMX radio stations the day after it appears in local stores.

Names of participating stores are not being released. Event sponsors said one of the keys to finding the horseshoe is to visit several stores and find out which ones have the clues.

No clues will be given over the telephone, and merchants have been asked to not give any information, even regarding their participation as a clue site, officials said.

The first clue is provided below the photo above. Other clues will appear daily with the Golden Horseshoe photo until the horseshoe is located and the winner claims the prize.

Prison

ance paying off. After 10 unsuccessful years of seeking a prison, the city struck gold in 1989, bringing new economic life to that Panhandle city.

Waters said the chamber will be open from 1:30-5 p.m. today to drop off letters of support for prison board members. Waters said those letters should be addressed to:

- Charles Terrell, Unimark Co., P.O. Box, 3594, Dallas, TX 75235.
- Allan B. Polunsky, One Forum,

Sixteenth Floor, 8000 IH-10 West, San Antonio, TX 78230-3894.

- F.L. Stephens, Town and Country Foods, Inc., P.O. Box 5581, San Angelo, TX 76902.

- James M. Eller, P.O. Box. GJ, College Station, TX 77841.

- Mamie Procter, Westlayan, 24 Greenway Plaza, Suite 1822, Houston, TX 77046.

- Robert A. Mann, P.O. Box 8436, Waco, TX 76714.

- Ben Gallant Jr., 13501 Royal Fifth Court, Corpus Christi, TX 78418.

- Pete Diaz, 4350 East Hwy. 83,

Rio Grande City, TX 78582.

While each of those letters should be addressed, Waters reiterated they should be delivered to the chamber for mailing.

Letters to board member Jerry Hodge, who lives in Amarillo, can be mailed because of his nearness, officials said. His address is c/o Maxor Drug Co., 25 Medical Drive, Amarillo, TX 79106.

Sources around the state have confirmed local claims that community support, or rejection, of a local proposal is a key ingredient in the board's selection of new sites.

Pampans' grandson dies in accident

AMARILLO — A Tascosa High School student whose grandparents live in Pampa was killed early Friday morning in a one-vehicle rollover northwest of the city.

Jerry Keith Soukup, 16, whose grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. A.L. Soukup, live in Pampa, was pronounced dead at the scene, three miles outside Amarillo on Dowell Road.

Also killed in the accident was Ryan Stanley Henderson, 17, also a student at Tascosa High School.

Troopers for the Texas Department of Public Safety said a 1983 Chevrolet the two were occupying was traveling at high speeds and failed to negotiate an "S" curve. Both teen-agers were ejected from the vehicle, troopers said.

Henderson survived the initial crash but was later pronounced dead at Amarillo Emergency Receiving Center.

Officials said the accident happened about 12:20 a.m. It remained unclear which youth was driving the pickup at the time of the accident, authorities said.

Services for Soukup are scheduled for 2 p.m. Monday, July 2, 1990, at Schooler-Gordon Bell Avenue Chapel with Rev. David Edwards, pastor of First United Methodist Church in Panhandle, officiating. He will be assisted by Rev. Jimmy Evans, pastor of Trinity Fellowship in Amarillo.

Burial will be in Llano Cemetery.

Soukup was a member of the Spanish Club at Tascosa High and assistant manager of Sunglass Co. in Westgate Mall. He was also a member of 10th Avenue United Methodist Church. He lived in Amarillo for 15 years. He was born in Pampa.

Survivors include his parents, Jerry Wayne Soukup of Amarillo and Mr. and Mrs. Dave Barton of Amarillo; brother, Jeffrey Soukup of the home; grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Rice of Amarillo, Mr. and Mrs. A.L. Soukup of Pampa, Hazel Barton of Saratoga, N.Y., Clarice Soukup of Hoisington, Kan., and Ruby Rice of Memphis, Texas; a stepister, Charlene Merryman of San Antonio; a stepbrother, David A. Barton of Fort Worth; several uncles and an aunt.

The family requests memorials be to the American Lung Association.

Taxes

tax and a new tax on alcohol sold by the drink — 10 cents for a glass of wine or liquor and 4 cents for beer.

People moving to Florida also will have to pay a $295 "impact fee" on cars or light trucks on which Florida sales tax was not paid.

Lesser increases in taxes or fees take effect in Connecticut, Kansas, Maine, New Mexico, New York and Virginia.

Iowa's license plate law will require repeat drunken driving offenders to get new auto tags that carry special prefixes to alert police of the owner's status. The law permits officers to stop those cars at random to check the driver.

Although the law goes into effect Sunday, the first plates will not be issued until next July 1.

The law didn't draw much opposition during legislative debate, but Chrys Farley of the Iowa Civil Liberties Union predicts problems with the measure because it "potentially attaches that 'scarlet letter' stigma to other members of the family" using the same car.

New laws in Indiana and South Dakota permit the suspension of the driver's license of anyone convicted of a drug offense, whether or not driving is involved. A similar new law in Wyoming affects only minors.

Two days after President Bush vetoed a bill that would guarantee American workers up to 12 weeks unpaid leave for childbirth, adoption or family illness, Connecticut is phasing in similar provisions.

Dr. Matia Finn-Stevenson, associate director of the Bush Center in Child Development and Social Policy at Yale University, said Connecticut's law is the most liberal in the nation. She said about half the states require leaves for mothers of newborns but set much shorter periods.

And only a few days after a proposed constitutional amendment against flag burning failed in Congress, laws banning desecration of the U.S. flag go into effect in Indiana and Maryland. The Indiana law was modeled after the federal law thrown out by the Supreme Court, but Maryland officials contend theirs is different because it bans desecrating the flag in a manner likely to incite violence.

Other laws taking effect Sunday: Pennsylvania rolls back auto insurance rates for all drivers by 10 percent and by 22 percent for people who give up their right to sue in most cases. Motorists also will have more flexibility in deciding coverage.

Idaho becomes the 48th state with a formal holiday honoring Martin Luther King Jr. Because of a legislative oversight, however, the holiday doesn't apply to the state's public schools.

Summer Recreation

Mandela greets California crowds, raises California millions for ANC

By STEVE GEISSINGER
Associated Press Writer

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Nelson Mandela arrived here Saturday to a rousing welcome, but disappointed supporters learned that the 71-year-old black South African hero of the anti-apartheid movement would cut his visit short.

"I feel like an old battery that has been recharged," Mandela said upon arrival. "Our visit to the United States has succeeded beyond our wildest dreams."

Mandela, with his wife, Winnie, at his side, was greeted by area politicians, including San Francisco Mayor Art Agnos and Oakland Mayor Lionel Wilson. Some in the cheering crowd of about 300 waved small green, yellow and black flags of the African National Congress.

Mandela went directly to the Oakland-Alameda County Coliseum, where more than 58,000 people in a sold-out stadium awaited his speech.

Tour director Roger Wilkins said during the flight from Los Angeles that the Mandelas would leave the area Saturday afternoon so they can reach Ireland in time to meet with Prime Minister Charles Haughey on Sunday.

That meant the Mandelas, who had planned to leave the San Francisco Bay area Sunday, would bypass a reception for Mrs. Mandela in Berkeley and a reception and dinner in Oakland.

Hundreds gathered at the Coliseum hours before Mandela's scheduled appearance, paying $5 each to see Mandela.

"This is history!" said Jeff Humphrey, 19, an Air Force airman who traveled the 50 miles from Travis Air Force Base to see Mandela. "I want to tell my kids that I was here."

Mandela, deputy president of the African National Congress, hoped to raise $1 million from his Oakland stops for the ANC treasury.

Saturday morning, Mandela took a stroll through downtown Los Angeles streets. He stopped several times to shake hands with admirers, including a homeless man in a wheelchair.

Oakland was the final stop on an eight-city, 12-day U.S. tour. Mandela is touring 14 countries on a round-the-world fund-raising trip.

He raised at least $1.7 million on Friday in Los Angeles, where he received an enthusiastic welcome everywhere he went.

Mandela's busy Friday included speaking to 15,000 people at City Hall, meeting former Soviet dissident and Jewish leader Natan Sharansky, attending an Armory Building fund-raiser and appearing at a huge rally at the Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum.

As Mandela took the stage, people in the crowd of 75,000 thrust their fists in the air, chanted his name, cheered and applauded wildly.

"While the world slept and apartheid ravaged us, it was the noble sons and daughters of California who rallied to us," Mandela said, citing Hollywood's production of anti-apartheid films and Oakland longshoremen's refusal to handle South African goods.

Mandela said he was "on the last leg of an exhausting but exhilarating tour," adding: "Wherever we went, we were met with the milk of human kindness and the outpouring of joy."

At the Armory fund-raising dinner, celebrity guests included Danny Glover, Quincy Jones, Diana Ross, author Ron Kovic and singers Billy Davis and Marilyn McCoo. The event cost $1,000 to $50,000 a plate.

Kidnapped American miner released in Ecuador

QUITO, Ecuador (AP) — Colombian guerrillas who kidnapped an American gold miner two months ago freed their captive after accepting $60,000 raised by the folks back home in Illinois — one-tenth the ransom the rebels had demanded.

Scott Heimdal, 27, who had been held in the Colombian jungle across the border from Ecuador, was reunited Friday evening with his parents, who flew to Quito from Peoria, Ill., last week to take charge of negotiations for their son's release.

Roy and Marge Heimdal had said they would not leave the South American nation until he was freed.

Patricia Norman, the U.S. Embassy press attache, said Heimdal was "with his family here in Quito, with his mother and father."

She said the family was in seclusion at an undisclosed site in this capital city 9,000 feet high in the Andes mountains and had no immediate plans to leave.

Heimdal was turned over to Ecuadorian authorities on the San Miguel River, which runs along the border with Colombia, said Luis Felix, vice minister of the Interior.

Heimdal was kidnapped in the same area, about 100 miles north-east of Quito, on April 27.

Felix said Heimdal, who arrived in Quito on a government plane Friday evening, was examined by doctors and appeared in good health.

He said the kidnapers — who had been demanding $612,000 for Heimdal's release — settled for the $60,000 in Colombian pesos. Heimdal's parents had raised the ransom mainly in community donations from Peoria residents.

"This situation that was a cause for public worry has ended happily, thanks to the collaboration of Heimdal's family and the national police," Felix said.

In Peoria, Heimdal's sister, Linda, said she was overjoyed by the news.

"I can't believe it, I just can't believe it," she said, unable to hold back tears and laughter.

Heimdal was in charge of starting up dredging operations for IMINCO, a gold mining company. He was abducted as he left the company's camp in a dugout canoe to return to Quito.

In the attack, the guerrillas shot and killed the captain of the boat and wounded one passenger. A second passenger was kidnapped along with Heimdal and was later released with the ransom demand.

Bishop excommunicates abortion clinic director

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — An abortion clinic director who was formally excommunicated by the Roman Catholic Church says the decision devastated her but she does not plan to battle her bishop.

"I don't plan to appeal or fight this," said Rachel Vargas, director of Reproductive Services Inc. But she added, "If anyone else has been excommunicated simply because they worked at an abortion clinic, then we should band together."

Ms. Vargas was excommunicated by Bishop Rene H. Gracida of the Corpus Christi Diocese.

"Your cooperation in procuring abortions is a sin against God and humanity and the laws of the Roman Catholic Church," read the formal excommunication decree that was sent to Vargas on June 1.

An abortion-rights leader said Friday the action may be unprecedented, but church officials said it isn't the first time.

Bill Ryan, a spokesman for the National Conference of Catholic Bishops in Washington, said Bishop Louis Gelineau of Providence, R.I., said in a 1986 letter that a woman had excommunicated herself by directing Planned Parenthood in Providence.

He said Mary Ann Sorrentino was sent a letter by a priest on the bishop's behalf, saying she had brought excommunication upon herself.

Francis Kissling, president of Catholics for a Free Choice in Washington, D.C.

"This is part of the stepped up campaign on the part of the bishops to attempt to silence Catholics. What tends to happen when you do this is Catholics become angry and tend to stop listening to the church," Ms. Kissling told The Associated Press.

"It threatens the moral voice and authority of the church," she said.

"This situation that was a cause for public worry has ended happily, thanks to the collaboration of Heimdal's family and the national police," Felix said.

In Peoria, Heimdal's sister, Linda, said she was overjoyed by the news.

"I can't believe it, I just can't believe it," she said, unable to hold back tears and laughter.

Heimdal was in charge of starting up dredging operations for IMINCO, a gold mining company. He was abducted as he left the company's camp in a dugout canoe to return to Quito.

In the attack, the guerrillas shot and killed the captain of the boat and wounded one passenger. A second passenger was kidnapped along with Heimdal and was later released with the ransom demand.

The time to live in Pampa is now

People around these parts used to talk a lot about the "Good Ol' Days," when oil flowed free and so did money.

Those days might have been good. But the time to live in Pampa is now.

Spirits are running high over the possibility of getting a state prison for the city, the rodeo is right around the corner, the Crazy Days shopping blitz has encouraged retailers and enthused shoppers, and, for the first time in a bunch of years, the city is having a big fireworks display on the Fourth of July.

Before this gets too rosy, I know news-types are supposed to be cynical, hardened disbelievers who scowl at almost anything, no matter how wonderful it might be to "normal people." (That condition develops as the result of reporters being lied to so much over the years that they often cease to trust anyone.)

But what I see happening in Pampa right now is downright exhilarating, even to a news-type.

Like a hungry lion or a football team on the verge of its best season ever, Pampa is moving rapidly toward perhaps its greatest days.

Does it all rest on whether or not we get between 400 and 800 new jobs with a prison? Nope.

It lies in the fact that Pampa is not quite as haughty as it used to be, with its big money and big ego. We have been hurting for a while and it has brought us into touch with the real world.

Though the oil bust was a heartbreaking thing, it shook Pampa out of what it was once famous for: an isolationist shell that covered the city like a blanket.

Talk to people in Amarillo or Borger about why they don't like Pampa and they will tell you that the vanity they once found here stuck in their throats like a chicken bone.

To those people I have a suggestion: come and try us out again.

For years they said to themselves, "Just you wait, those Pampanians will get theirs." We have, in spades. We lost friends and neighbors in the Celanese explosion, we lost fortunes in the white oil crisis and, for a while, we lost our spirit and our vision.

Now the city and its people are rebounding. People in other areas often felt our egos needed to be pruned. Maybe they were right.

But that pruning, when it came, almost killed our will to survive. Nonetheless, we are slowly pulling ourselves back up.

This time, when Pampa is back on top of its game, it won't be because we have money in our pockets or drive a hotshot car. It will be because of who we are and how we feel about ourselves. It will be because of what we have in our hearts.

Off Beat
By Bear Mills

Nowdays in Pampa there is a confidence that does not infringe on arrogance, a desire for good jobs that no longer reeks of greed and a community spirit that shows pride in Pampa while not rubbing anyone else's nose in it.

"Tough times don't last, but tough people do," is a saying that has been burned into the hearts of every Pampan. It, along with the Marine Corps saying, "The things that don't kill us make us stronger," have become our mottos.

They are good mottos to have if you believe them and we do.

I have lived in a lot of places, but never have I been so proud to call a city home as I have since we moved to Pampa.

Fort Worth, Dallas, San Diego, Childress and other places I've pitched my tent were all fine and I have fond memories. But there is a feeling here I have never experienced anywhere else. It is a feeling that makes me believe I have lived here all my life, though, in truth, it's only been three years.

Instilling that kind of pride in its people, including the transplants like myself, is something Pampa can feel good about.

Later this week we'll find out if we made a prison "short list." Next week we find out whether we get a corrections unit. If the state locates a prison here, it will find out, as I have, there are no better people on the face of the planet.

If it doesn't, I will still feel just as good about this town and the spirit I see. We've learned from the oil bust that our success doesn't lie in what other people think of us, but what we think of ourselves.

As we can rightfully look ourselves in the mirror and say, "We've made this a great town to live in," others will say the same thing about us. And they will move here, too.

It may not happen tomorrow. But it will happen. Because people like being associated with a winner. And Pampa is that, in spades.

Home sales up slightly

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sales of new homes inched upward 0.4 percent in May, their first increase in six months, the government said today. Still, sales remained at their lowest level since the economy emerged from its last recession.

The Commerce Department reported that new home sales totaled a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 532,000 units in May after falling 5.2 percent the previous month.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Opinion

Baltic breakthrough gives Gorbachev hope

The Baltic nations moved a bit closer to freedom when their presidents met last month in Moscow with Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev. The meeting itself was a breakthrough. Even two years ago, the three presidents could have met in Moscow only in a jail cell in the Lubyanka, the infamous KGB prison.

But here were President Anatolij Gorbunov of Latvia, President Arnold Runtel of Estonia, and feisty President Vytautas Landsbergis of Lithuania, being treated as the true leaders of their people. And all three had one advantage over Gorbachev: the endorsements of their own people in democratic elections. Gorbachev still refuses to put his power to the test of a national plebiscite.

Landsbergis has been boldest in pushing for freedom from Moscow, going to Moscow again last week and returning with a suggestion for delaying Lithuania's declaration of independence. After the earlier meeting a spokesman for Landsbergis had said, "This is the first time I have heard him sounding optimistic about the way things are going with Moscow." After last week's visit, Landsbergis is sounding even more optimistic. Some measure of success was also shown when Moscow began easing economic sanctions it had imposed on Lithuania.

Gorbachev, for his part, called for a new Soviet "federation" under which all republics would be "sovereign states." This might mean that the departing republics would be effectively "Finlandized." The old term describes how Finland, after World War II, was given sovereignty from Moscow, while Moscow continued to control its foreign policy. Finland has fared quite nicely under "Finlandization." Its capitalist economy built a living standard comparable to the level of other free nations of Western Europe.

So if the Baltics and other republics are "Finlandized," along with such other captive republics as Armenia, Georgia and Azerbaijan, they will keep their own parliaments, make their own laws, restore a free market economy and trade with the West.

Other factors may make this course attractive to Gorbachev. Also last month, the Parliament of the Russian republic declared its sovereignty and said that Russian law now takes precedence over Soviet law. Russian President Boris Yeltsin led the vote for the declaration. Again, unlike Gorbachev, Yeltsin's power rests on a free election of the people.

Of course, Gorbachev's Soviet Union still controls the organs of terror, the Red Army and the KGB. But he may realize he cannot prevent the breakup of the Soviet "Union"; and that his "federation" idea, perhaps resembling the European Economic Community/NATO or the British Commonwealth, is his only hope for maintaining any position at all.

Watch the president's lips now

The economic policy statement most strongly associated with President Bush is: "Read my lips; no new taxes!" On that promise, he was swept into office by a landslide vote.

Five will get you 10, that, as Bush negotiates the budget with Congress, he will sign off on some kind of a tax increase and blame the Democrats. That's why my rule is: If you want to tell whether a politician is lying, watch to see whether his lips are moving.

The art of politics is the art of deception. Think back to 1982 when the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act was making its way through Congress.

President Reagan signed this massive tax increase on the congressional promise to cut spending by $3 for every $1 tax increase. That was a boldfaced lie. What actually happened was that for every $1 tax increase, Congress increased spending by $1.29.

You can bet the rent money that it won't be any different this time. You'd wonder why we have a deficit in the first place. In 1978, Congress passed the Balanced-Budget Act. Congress cannot be trusted.

Let's look at what has been happening. In 1980, federal tax revenues were $517 billion. By 1990, they had more than doubled to a whopping $1,074 billion, increasing at an annual average rate of $75 billion.

In 1980, federal expenditures were $591 billion. By 1990, federal spending also had more than doubled to nearly $1.2 trillion, which does not include underground government—off-budget expenditures like loan guarantees and the savings and loan (S&L) bailout.

Adequate tax revenues are not the problem; reckless spending is. In 1989, when George Bush took office, tax revenues were $991 billion, and federal expenditures were $1.143 trillion, giving us a deficit of $152 billion.

Had federal spending been frozen at that level, with economic growth bringing in $1,074 trillion in tax revenues this year, our budget deficit would be $69 billion instead of $124 billion. Keeping spending frozen, while tax revenues grew another $75 billion, we would close 1991 with a slight budget surplus.

What if we had elected a president with the guts to confront America's spending addicts? That president would have started off by submitting a balanced budget to Congress along with a warning of a veto should Congress send an unbalanced budget for his signature.

You say, "Williams, that's impractical; government programs might come to a halt in a down and dirty fight between the White House and Congress."

I say it's a safer bet that the earth will stop rotating before government programs come to a halt. More important, some principles are worth down and dirty fights.

Under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings (G-R-H) Act's sequestration provisions, if the president and Congress fail to meet 1991's target deficit of $64 billion, automatic spending cuts begin. A modicum of presidential guts would see Bush to sequestration rather than sanction any tax increase.

Recent changes in Europe shift sequestration in favor of the White House since Congress can't use the defense budget as blackmail. That's why some in Congress are considering the repeal of G-R-H's sequestration provisions.

Just a teeny-weensy bit of presidential guts would see Bush launching an all-out effort to support a balanced budget/spending limitation amendment to our Constitution. Thirty-two state legislatures have already called for reconvening the constitutional convention for that purpose.

George Mason, author of the Virginia Declaration of Rights which inspired our Bill of Rights, got it right, saying Washington was: "This 10-mile square, set at defiance the laws of surrounding states, ... [will] become the sanctuary of the blackest crimes."

Something even more shocking

They will laugh at us 20 years from now for all the stir and commotion The 2 Live Crew, the rap rascals with the dirty mouths, have caused.

Sure they will. We look back and laugh at our parents and our teachers and our lawmakers and our ministers for how they reacted to Elvis, don't we?

Remember that? All Elvis did was shake his pelvis.

He did a little grind with his hips, is what he did, and you would have thought he had uncovered his privates on stage, which is what one of today's rock stars did not long ago.

With every Elvis move, the teen-age girls screamed with delight, and the adults decried the Sideburned One as vile and evil.

"It's the devil's music," I heard the Baptist preacher back home say.

"Listen to that music," he continued, "and you are on a path headed straight to hell!"

I was 10 or 11 at the time, and I certainly didn't want to get on the freeway to hell—and I still don't—but I took a chance.

I went home after church, took out my 45 of "Don't Be Cruel," listened to it a couple of times and then prayed, "Don't hold it against me, Lord, I just like the beat."

Lewis Grizzard

There are people now who want The 2 Live Crew's concerts and records banned.

When I was growing up, the old men called Elvis's offerings "jungle music," and then said worse about him.

But we look back on Elvis now, and if he were still alive, we could invite him to sing in church. They play his music on country music stations, for crying out loud. Fifty-year-old women visit his grave and cry.

Eventually, the same thing will happen to The 2 Live Crew. Today they get arrested and the cops monitor their concerts.

And that just makes the kids even more anxious to buy the group's music and see them perform. They flock to the record stores and they think the dirty lyrics are a hoot, as we did when we heard the unintelligible words to "Louie, Louie" were really filthy if you could hear them. And the kids flock to see The 2 Live Crew perform, and although I think The 2 Live Crew and their music—if you can call it that—are enough to make you puke, if I were 16, I wouldn't miss a performance.

We've gone from Elvis to The 2 Live Crew in my lifetime. Twenty years from now The 2 Live Crew will, like Elvis, seem absolutely harmless.

God knows what they'll be doing 20 years from now. Singing on stage in the nude, probably. Madonna sings in her underwear now.

They'll be singing naked and probably having sex on stage, and the kids who liked The 2 Live Crew will have their drawers in a serious bundle because their kids will be determined to hear and see "Stark Nakkid and the Car Thieves" singing their controversial hit, "I Want to Kiss You on Your Woo-Woo in the Nude."

The point is, you ain't seen nothin' yet. Elvis seems like an angel now and, a generation from now, The 2 Live Crew probably won't be able to get a gig playing a Tupperware party. So, nobody have a cow over The 2 Live Crew. This, too, will pass for something even more shocking.

It always does.

PARTIALLY PREGNANT

Ecopiety blocks needed water project

By VINCENT CARROLL

Could life in America as we know it get on without the Colorado squawfish?

If that question has not given rise recently to a night of insomnia for you, rest assured that it is not the fault of the squawfish.

If may simply mean you lack your full share of environmental piety, since the squawfish is one of a trio of supposedly endangered creatures—the Mount Graham red squirrel in Arizona and the spotted owl in the Northwest being the other two—that offer the latest litmus test of environmental rectitude.

All those in favor of any development in these animals' habitat rate, in the eyes of the environmental priesthood, as pillagers on a par with the Huns.

All those opposed to development can, of course, pick up their halos on their way to the Pearly Gates.

This is a satisfying formula and plays well to many audiences. Yet on closer examination, it is muddled by a host of inconvenient facts. It turns out, for example, that the federal officials who rule on whether a project endangers a species often do so on the flimsiest imaginable evidence, their opinion being little more than a hunch.

Consider the case of the squawfish, which the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service recently said could be threatened by the Animas-La Plata water project in southwestern Colorado. If the agency stands by its opinion, the project will die, even though it was meant to provide water to Indians who have been struggling for decades to capture their rightful share of streamflow under historic agreements.

The only squawfish habitat that would be affected by the project is in the San Juan River, where the fish barely survives even now. In 1987, federal officials found just three adult squawfish in the San Juan; in 1988, four; in 1989, one. The main populations of squawfish exist in the Green and Colorado rivers, where they'll remain undisturbed. That's why the Fish and Wildlife Service approved the Animas-La Plata project back in 1979.

Once upon a time, it is true, the San Juan harbored many squawfish, but that was before the days of the Navajo reservoir. Short of dynamiting a major dam, there is no going back to that era.

So why is an already marginal habitat so critical for a fish that thrives in two other rivers? The closest official opinion comes to explaining this is its suggestion that an "enhancement" of the population in the San Juan would provide an "additional buffer against a catastrophic event ... or future developments elsewhere."

It all sounds mildly plausible, until you realize that "future development" couldn't possibly get federal approval if it threatened the main concentrations of squawfish. A natural "catastrophe" couldn't wipe out the fish, either, since they're bred by the thousands in hatcheries. One state hatchery alone lost 135,000 squawfish last year during a study. Why such a prolific fish that's so easily bred is even considered endangered raises an interesting question in itself.

Whatever the answer, the closer you look at the Fish and Wildlife opinion on the Colorado squawfish, the more you suspect that agency biologists simply don't like the proposed project. Which is their privilege. But they shouldn't dress up their prejudice in phony scientific garb and expect the rest of us to believe them.

Letters to the editor

Celebrate the 4th at community event

To the editor:
The 4th of July is fast approaching, and we, as Americans, have a great deal to be thankful for as well as proud of. As a result of the blood, sweat, tears and enormous sacrifices of those that have gone before us, we have been blessed with the greatest, most productive country the world has ever known.

Our citizen soldiers have fought on battlefields around the globe to insure that our freedom and democratic form of government would be everlasting. Our fighting men have followed the "Stars and Stripes" into some of the worst infernos the horrors of war can produce. Our flag and what it stands for has been an undefeatable inspiration for the finest fighting men the world has ever known.

After a 15-year absence, the city of Pampa will once again sponsor a 4th of July celebration and fireworks display. The return of this special event to Pampa is the result of a lot of hard work from many people, and your local VFW is very proud to be part of this event. We were asked to provide an inspirational, flag-waving guest speaker, and by a phenomenal stroke of good luck, we were able to convince Sgt. Maj. Leon Van Autreze, former sergeant major of the Army, to deliver a very special, patriotic message to all of us on the 4th. As we stated earlier, the VFW will be selling very special T-shirts at our fireworks stand, and we hope everyone will wear their T-shirt out to the fireworks display at the rodeo grounds.

We want to invite everyone out to what will most assuredly be a memorable event and one that should bring a lump to our throats and maybe even a few tears of pride. If we don't love and appreciate America, who will?

Fireworks can be harmful to the land

To the editor:
Our family lives out in the country north of town by choice. Nothing compares to the peace and contentment our family receives from our little spot of earth. We enjoy spectacular sunsets almost every night; our view of the millions of stars is unobstructed at night. On clear nights we can see the glow of the lights of many towns west and north of us. During the day we enjoy the rolling hills west, and from upstairs we can see the breaks of the river north. This morning the view west is heartbreaking. The earth is black, and the scent of smoke lingers in the air because of a grass fire, caused, as I understand, by someone's carelessness.

Our family and our neighbors were lucky because the wind direction held and the flames were driven west and north of our homes. We all spent anxious hours watching the fire.

My purpose in writing this letter is twofold. First, to express my gratitude to the firefighters, both professional and volunteer, who spent hours controlling the fire. When we went to bed, there were still headlights seen patrolling the fire area.

The second purpose is to ask the citizens of Pampa to please not come out our way to shoot off their fireworks. The grass is very dry and any spark would set it on fire.

Our family will be content to celebrate the 4th of July grateful that our country is free and its people are caring.

Courts can better judge Celanese case

To the editor:
A letter to the editor was printed in The Pampa News on Sunday, June 24, and was signed by Don Carter.

I have received both praise and negative criticism this week because of the views and opinions made public in the above-mentioned letter. However, there is more than one Don Carter living in the Pampa area, and I did not author or sign the letter mentioned.

My reason for this clarification is that I do not want to be labeled "PRO" or "CON" on the issue of Celanese and those involved against Celanese in the pending lawsuit.

My decision to remain publicly neutral will be questioned by many who have already chosen sides, so I shall now give my simple reason: I, myself, as well as the vast majority of our community, do not know all the facts that are necessary to make a wise decision based on true knowledge.

Thank God that our judicial system demands unbiased judges and juries to make final decisions concerning our disputes. They, too, must remain neutral, hearing all the facts before they make a judgment.

A wise man of God once told me, "We can disagree, but let us disagree agreeably." Many people in Pampa and the surrounding area voice concern for our economy, many voice concern for our health/environment, and there are those of us who are concerned about all of the above.

Since all of us are concerned about what is best for our community, let us all pray to God for His will to be done. If we stop and think about it, who loves and cares more about each one of us and our community than Almighty God? And who is a more knowledgeable and fair judge in the affairs of mankind?

Since the issue has been placed before the courts, let us live in harmony with each other without anger and strife, putting our faith in God to preside over the courts and putting our trust in their rulings.

Our best interest has always been, is and will be of great importance to our Father God because he loves each and every one of us.

Remember the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, "... it is the Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Luke 12:13-19.

Earl Davis leaves precious memories

To the editor:
A great friend, Earl Davis, has slipped away in the past few days to a better land. I was privileged to work with Earl on Radio Station KPDM for 27 years on the Ole Fashioned Gospel Song Hour.

Earl was a true and faithful friend indeed. We learned to esteem him for his kindness and thoughtfulness in promoting our program (the Gospelaire) for these many years. Earl will be missed in the city of Pampa and surrounding area. Earl was a man of integrity and character. He was always a pleasure to be around. He would always call if something was not in place for program time.

Shelby Ruff, Ramona Hudgins and myself originated the Ole Fashioned Gospel Song Hour, and later, after Ramona married, our daughters Mackie, Glena and Sharon Bruce continued with me on the program. When I moved from Pampa to the West Coast, Earl continued the Ole Fashioned Gospel Song Hour.

We wish to pay tribute to this outstanding man of the community and to his wife and loved ones. The things that Earl and I shared in common ... we both loved baseball, fried apple pies and hot dogs. We will always have precious memories. "The Lord willing and the creek don't rise," we will meet again in another land.

Family not pleased by care at hospital

To the editor:
On the morning of April 3, 1990, at approximately 7 a.m., my mother was taken to Coronado Hospital with a probable stroke. The nurse in the emergency room was very nice and efficient, but, I'm sorry to say, that was the only efficient and concerned thing that was done while she was there.

The doctor who was on call in the emergency room never saw my mother until around 10:05. I would be interested to know, as I'm sure many Pampa residents would, why my mother never saw a doctor for three hours!

After she was finally in a room, my sister had to ask for a pillow case for the pillow. She was then asked to put it on the pillow herself, because the nurse was going on a break. A little later, another nurse came in with an IV, but was called out of the room before she started my mother on it. One hour and thirty minutes later she returned to start the IV. When my sister told the nurse not to bother because she was moving my mother to another hospital, the nurse was quick to say that we would be required to pay for the IV because she had broken the seal the first time she came in. There were many more problems that would take pages to discuss.

My mother did have a stroke, but thanks to a wonderful ambulance staff, a concerned doctor and an efficient hospital staff in another city, she is recovering nicely.

Pampa residents deserve a better, more efficient hospital staff for their tax dollars. I think it's time to take a stand before something tragic happens. Thanks to the Good Lord and fast action of my sister, my mother wasn't the tragedy.

The hospital administration is aware of the gross negligence at the hospital as a copy of this letter was also sent to them. Until some changes are made and some questions are answered, my advice to Pampa residents would be stay away from Coronado Hospital.

She appreciates concern of others

To the editor:
I would just like to say thanks to the paramedics, neighbors and the couple who stopped to help me when I fell at 1608 N. Sumner last Sunday.

It's refreshing to know that there are still people who care enough to stop and help someone in need in such a fast-paced world as today.

I don't know the name of the couple but would appreciate their letting me know their identity so I could thank them more appropriately.

Thanks again to the paramedics, Dr. Benson, X-ray technicians and neighbors who assisted. It's people like you who make Pampa a community worth living in.

Firefighters gain ground in battle against California fire set by 'terrorist'

By RICHARD DE ATLEY
Associated Press Writer

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — Firefighters gained ground against an arson fire that destroyed more than 400 homes and killed two people.

Most of the brush fires that have scorched more than 20,000 acres in six Southern California counties over three days headed toward control or containment Saturday, authorities said.

Property losses in Santa Barbara, San Bernardino, Los Angeles, Orange, Riverside and San Diego counties have been estimated at more than $280 million. But one official said damage in Santa Barbara alone could reach $500 million.

The deaths of a Santa Barbara County woman and an inmate-firefighter were reported Friday, the first caused by the fires that started Wednesday.

The body of Andrea Gurka, 37, was found Friday in a creek bed behind her home in the San Marcos Pass area where the fire started. Because the fire was arson-caused, her death is considered a homicide.

An inmate-firefighter died Thursday of burns from a blaze in Riverside County near Hemet, about 65 miles east of Los Angeles. Victor Ferrara, 22, was burned when his crew was overrun by wind-driven flames in the now-controlled fire.

Of the 15 other firefighters injured fighting the 150-acre blaze, one remained in critical condition.

"Whoever started this fire is, in my opinion, not only a terrorist, but a murderer," said Rep. Robert Lagomarsino, whose district includes Santa Barbara.

Authorities have recovered an incendiary device in San Marcos Pass that they believe started the blaze, but have declined to provide further details. The New York Times reported firefighters found a match in the field where the blaze began.

Rewards totaling more than $150,000 have been offered for information leading to the arrests and convictions of the arsonists.

Elsewhere across the West: — Officials said a fire started by lightning in Arizona's Tonto National Forest was expected to be contained by Saturday night. It has burned nearly 25,000 acres and 50 homes and killed six firefighters.

— A 4,020-acre blaze in Guadalupe Mountains National Park in Texas gained strength with rising winds, and showed no immediate signs of abating.

Rugged brush country and hard-to-reach terrain hampered the efforts Saturday of more than 750 firefighters to control a 5,068-acre blaze in the national wilderness park.

High winds that sent the blaze roaring into the pristine McKittrick Canyon on Friday were expected to abate Saturday, fire information officer Jim Payne said, though that had not happened by Saturday afternoon.

"It's almost impossible to tell where the fire is at any given time because of the rough country," Payne said. "Until it burns itself out in some of the ridges ... it'll be a while before we have a handle on this."

He said the blaze was 43 percent contained Saturday morning, but officials were unsure when it would be fully under control.

Payne said 772 firefighters from 26 fire crews, some from as far away as North Carolina and Alabama, are battling the blaze. It was dubbed the Frijole Fire after lightning struck Frijole Peak on Monday afternoon.

Crews were using air tankers to drop fire-retardant material on the flames and six helicopters doused hot spots from overhead.

"If we put people down there, it would be a real hazard and a death trap because you've got some sheer cliffs out there," Payne said.

Payne said firefighters are hoping they can contain the fire before it travels too far into the canyon because of the endangered plants and animals at its bottom.

Firefighters were flanking the fire, rather than fighting it from in front because of winds.

The Frijole Fire, the largest in the park's history, sent flames shooting 6,000 feet in the air early in the week.

— Colorado firefighters battled three fires covering 4,200 acres, including a 3,500-acre fire in the Uncompahgre National Forest that officials said was about 50 percent contained.

Brush fires also burned this week in Montana, New Mexico and Utah.

Soviets resume oil shipments to Lithuania

By ANN IMSE
Associated Press Writer

VILNIUS, U.S.S.R. (AP) - The Soviet government told Lithuania it would resume oil shipments to the republic Saturday, one day after its parliament agreed to freeze its declaration of independence, Lithuanian media said.

The reported move would be the Kremlin's biggest step toward lifting the economic blockade it imposed on Lithuania to try to get the Baltic republic to back off its independence drive, which began with a declaration on March 11.

A spokeswoman for Lithuania's Mazhickiai Refinery said in a telephone interview with The Associated Press in Moscow that Soviet officials promised to resume oil shipments to the facility later Saturday. The phone conversation was cut before the spokeswoman's name or other details could be learned.

Vilnius Radio and Lithuania's official news agency, ELTA, said Soviet First Deputy Oil Minister Lev Churilov made the announcement in a phone call to the republic's Council of Ministers, or Cabinet.

ELTA said Soviet officials asked refinery operators if they could accept the maximum amount of oil.

Virtually all Lithuania's oil flows through the Mazhickiai Refinery, which the news agency said was preparing for resumption of shipments.

Consumers won't start receiving oil refined at the facility for a few weeks, Vilnius Radio said in a report monitored by the British Broadcasting Corp. No explanation was given for the delay.

The Lithuanian parliament on Friday voted 69 to 35 to accept a compromise with the Kremlin. It placed a 100-day moratorium on its declaration of independence, but left in place all of the laws passed since then.

In exchange President Mikhail S. Gorbachev promised to end the 10-week-old blockade and start negotiations with the republic, Lithuanian leaders said.

Lithuanian President Vytautas Landsbergis had said he expected the blockade of the republic's oil and most of its natural gas supplies to be lifted Saturday.

However, by Saturday afternoon there was still no official comment from Moscow on whether Gorbachev had accepted the compromise with the breakaway republic.

Lawmakers on Friday agreed to a 100-day moratorium on their declaration of independence in exchange for an end to the economic blockade ordered by Gorbachev.

Gorbachev ordered the embargo after Lithuania rebuffed his demand to rescind the republic's March 11 declaration of independence.

Lithuania and its Baltic neighbors Latvia and Estonia were independent from Moscow between the two world wars, but were absorbed back into the Soviet Union by Josef Stalin in 1940.

Under the resolution, which lawmakers approved 69-35, the 100-day moratorium would take effect at the start of talks with Moscow over the status of the republic of 3.8 million people.

Landsbergis did not say when the negotiations might begin.

Soviet officials have not commented on Lithuanian reports about the resolution, but Lithuania's leaders assured lawmakers the main elements had been approved by Gorbachev.

Asked if he was happy with the outcome of the long debate, Landsbergis said he was not.

"It's too complicated," he told reporters.

Parliamentary endorsement of the plan came after Landsbergis dropped his earlier objections to freezing the independence declaration.

Top Lithuanian officials said that in two face-to-face meetings with Landsbergis last week, Gorbachev gave up his demands Lithuania completely rescind its declaration of independence.

Gorbachev's willingness to work out a deal with the Lithuanians comes just days before a critical Communist Party congress, where there may be a challenge to his party leadership.

The moratorium applies only to the declaration of independence itself, not to other laws passed since then.

Lithuanian lawmaker Jonas Tamulis said the moratorium will have little effect because many provisions of the independence declaration are incorporated into subsequent legislation.

Famed writer Irving Wallace dies of pancreatic cancer at 74

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Irving Wallace, whose steamy novel Chapman Report about sex in suburbia catapulted him to the ranks of the world's most widely read authors, has died of pancreatic cancer. He was 74.

Wallace died Friday afternoon, three days after entering Cedars-Sinai Medical Center in serious condition, said hospital spokesman Ron Wise. His wife, Sylvia, and son, David, were at his bedside.

Literary critics dismissed Wallace's best-selling novels such as The Prize and The Word as potboilers, but the public loved his books. Even Jacqueline Kennedy acknowledged she read the Chapman Report, a fictional Kinsey Report-style narrative inspired by the sexual exploits of women in Wallace's West Los Angeles neighborhood.

Wallace also edited many popular non-fiction books, including The People's Almanac and The Book of Lists.

He sold more than 194 million copies of his 33 books. The Saturday Review magazine considered him to be one of the five most widely read authors in the world, along with Barbara Cartland, Louis L'Amour, Harold Robbins and Janet Dailey.

"Obviously he was a marvelous storyteller," said novelist Leon Uris, author of Exodus.

Before his fame as a novelist was established with The Chapman Report in 1960, Wallace wrote screenplays for The West Point Story in 1950; Desert Legion, Gun Fury, Meet Me at the Fair and Split Second with William Bowers in 1953; and Bad for Each Other with Horace McCoy in 1954.

Uris recalled sharing Wallace's early success.

"I met Irving in 1953 when we were both at Warner Bros. I had written Battle Cry, and he had written some ... literary books that weren't going anywhere. He came out with The Chapman Report just shortly after that, so we both ran a victory lap at the same time in Hollywood and kissed the studios goodbye," Uris said.

Author Sidney Sheldon, a close friend for three decades, said Wallace was "a very good writer" whose novels were painstakingly researched.

Wallace once spent 10 days in the White House during the Kennedy administration to get material for The Man, a novel about a black president published in 1964.

Born in Chicago in 1916, Wallace was particularly proud of his independence as an author.

"The big motivation for me was the desire to be independent, to get up when you want, write what you want and work where you want," he said in a 1984 interview with The Associated Press.

He said he'd had only two bosses in his life - Ronald Reagan, his superior officer in the Army's wartime propaganda film unit, and Jack Warner, who hired him to write scripts for Warner Bros.

Wallace said he loved his work. "Writing is what I enjoy. I'm a person of ideas and I like to spread them around."

Some of Wallace's titles include: The Fabulous Originals, 1953; The Sins of Philip Fleming, 1959; The Fabulous Showman: The Life and Times of P.T. Barnum, 1959; The Plot, 1967; The Word, 1972; The Pigeon Project, 1979; and The Celestial Bed, 1987.

Supporters uncertain of overriding parental leave veto

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) - Supporters of a bill assuring workers unpaid time off for the birth of children and serious family illness acknowledge they'll have a difficult time trying to override President Bush's veto of the measure.

Bush's disapproval of the family leave bill Friday set the stage for a new confrontation with Congress, and came despite substantial support for the measure among Republicans as well as Democrats.

"If we don't succeed this time, the president is going to see this bill every year as long as he's in the White House," said Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn.

A group of 25 Republicans had written Bush asking for a chance to discuss their support for the bill with him, but the chief GOP sponsor, Rep. Marge Roukema of New Jersey, said they never got their meeting before the veto.

"I don't believe the president understands the implications of this veto," said Roukema. "The American people will not understand this action."

She called the veto an overreaction to business opposition and predicted it will create a politically difficult issue for Republicans. "I think we run the danger of being perceived as the party that supports capital gains (tax) reduction and turns its back on working families," she said.

In a written statement released just before he left for a Maine vacation, Bush said he opposed establishing family leave as a federal requirement.

"I strongly object ... to the federal government mandating leave policies for America's employers and work force," he said. "We must ensure that federal policies do not stifle the creation of new jobs, nor result in the elimination of existing jobs."

Backers said they would attempt to override the veto but would need a demonstration of wide public support during the Fourth of July congressional recess if they were to prevail.

The 237-187 vote in the House last month for the family and medical leave fell 46 votes short of the two-thirds majority that would be needed to override Bush's veto.

Bush made his comments at a news conference before departing for a long holiday weekend at Kennebunkport, Maine, and trips to London and Houston for two summit meetings with Western allies.

His last piece of business was to veto the landmark parental leave legislation guaranteeing workers up to 12 weeks of annual, unpaid leave for childbirth, adoption or family illness.

On other topics at his news conference, the president said he knew he would be skewered for flip-flopping on tax increases but, comparing himself to Abraham Lincoln, declared "I'm thinking anew" for the good of the country.

Bush said he had changed course on the politically explosive issue to break a deadlock in deficit-reduction talks with the Democratic-controlled Congress.

"Look, I knew I'd catch some flak on this decision," said Bush, who has been harshly criticized by many Republicans for abandoning the "read-my-lips, no-new-taxes" slogan that helped him win the presidency.

"I've got to do what I think is right and then I'll ask the people for support," Bush said.

Justifying his change, the president said the economy was slower and the deficit now was worse than "any of us visualized" when he made his pledge two years ago.

Bush was asked by reporters if his reversal on taxes would damage his credibility.

"No, not in the long run," Bush said.

Acknowledging the heat he has taken for his decision, Bush said, "I think that the arrows have been flying - front, back, sideways - but that's what I get paid for. ..."

Hydrogen leaks ground shuttle craft

WASHINGTON (AP) — NASA technicians are trying to find the cause of hydrogen leaks in two space shuttles that have grounded the fleet for at least two weeks.

The second leak was detected Friday while engineers were test-loading hydrogen rocket fuel into the propellant tank of shuttle Atlantis. A similar leak found in Columbia last month forced postponement of its mission.

"There's no question that we won't fly until we understand it (the leak), have it fixed, have tested it, verified it and we're ready," said Bill Lenoir, space-flight chief for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Once the leak has been found, Atlantis will be rolled back from the launchpad to the hangar at Cape Canaveral, Fla., so engineers can remove its fuel tank and make the necessary repairs.

Atlantis' mid-July launch will be delayed at least two weeks, but possibly longer if a new design is needed for the assembly of fuel pipes, Lenoir said.

Columbia is already back in the hangar, where it was taken after its leak was discovered on the launch pad, just six hours before its scheduled May 30 liftoff. Its mission was postponed until August.

As NASA officials were explaining the leaks at a news briefing Friday, other agency officials were on Capitol Hill explaining troubles with the Hubble Space Telescope.

Sen. Albert Gore Jr., D-Tenn., charged that design flaws discovered last week in the $1.5 billion spacecraft were symptomatic of broader problems at the agency that include a weak quality control system.

"NASA's eyes are bigger than its stomach," Gore said.

Referring to the space telescope, he said: "We have been assured now for 12 years that everything was all right. We owe it to the taxpayers to find out what went wrong, how to fix it and make sure it never happens again."

Since both shuttle leaks occurred while the vehicles were being fueled on the pad, "it seems likely that these are related and of a similar class," Lenoir said in a news conference at the Kennedy Space Center in Florida.

They involve what is called the "umbilical" of the space shuttle, an assembly of pipes and valves that directs the flow of propellants into the tank from a ground supply and, at launch, from the tank to the shuttle engines.

The safety of the umbilical system on shuttle Discovery is also now in question. The third member of the three-shuttle fleet is scheduled to launch a science spacecraft called Ulysses into a polar orbit of the sun in October.

The timing of the Ulysses mission is sensitive because its launch window depends on the alignment of the planets. A delay could mean that the craft could not be launched for years.

Lenoir said he would "keep my eye on" the launch schedule, but "we are not going to let the fact that we've got Ulysses and we want to get to flights off before that affect the rigor with which we attack the problem."

"And if that costs us a flight, that's a shame, but that's what it's going to take," he said.

Colombian policemen in Medellin are profitable targets for gunmen

By TOM WELLS
Associated Press Writer

MEDELLIN, Colombia (AP) — A policeman in the Medellin cartel's hometown goes to work each day with an assault rifle, a bullet-proof vest and a prayer. The drug lords will pay $4,300 to anyone who kills him.

So far this year, more than 120 have been slain.

Policemen say they live on nerve and in fear of being the next victim.

Some routinely arrive home with pistol drawn in case an assassin lurks in the shadows. Dozens of the victims were murdered while off duty.

Police in Medellin are part of a national force of 80,000 men, which is part of the military and under Defense Ministry jurisdiction.

The government, which declared war on drug traffickers last year, has sent 1,800 reinforcements in recent weeks to augment the normal force of 2,600. The killings continue at an average of one a day in this city of 3 million, Colombia's second-largest.

An Associated Press reporter talked with 30 Medellin policemen

(AP Laserphoto)

A policeman crosses a street in Medellin, holding the hands of his little girls and hoping he won't be a target for gunmen hired by drug lords.

and accompanied seven on a patrol of a dangerous part of Medellin. An officer pointed out the spots where six comrades had been killed in the past two months.

"I get scared out here," one said. "I see a movement in the shadows or hear a motorcycle moving toward me and the hair stands up on the back of my neck. I wonder if this is it. I wonder if I'm the next victim."

None wanted his name used, figuring it would be a death warrant. High-ranking Medellin police officials refused to be interviewed about the dangers their men face. The patrolmen said the drug cartel's tactics had caused 300 police resignations in three months and recruiting was difficult.

"I'm ready to quit if I don't get a transfer out of here soon," a 20-year-old policeman said. "We're just statistics."

He and the others said they were frightened, and exhausted by working up to 18 hours six days a week, but most said they would not quit.

"You can die of hunger, too," a 12-year veteran commented.

Their families are destroyed along with the policemen. An officer's widow gets only half his $95 monthly salary as a pension, said a spokesman for the national police in Bogota.

Three widows said they could not support their children on that.

"My children don't get milk, they don't get meat, they don't know what eggs taste like," Ruth Duque said. "When they get sick, we just pray. There isn't any money for medicine."

Mrs. Duque's situation is even worse because she gets no pension at all. Her husband was killed March 23, 1988, before the pension law was passed.

She said she makes the equivalent of about $102 a month working in a drugstore. She feeds her son and daughter, aged 4 and 3, one meal a day of rice and beans.

Colombia's minimum wage equals about $100 a month. A quart of milk costs 75 cents and a one-pound loaf of bread $1.

Unemployment is over 30 percent in Medellin, according to sociologists at the local university. The government says the rate is 10 percent, but doesn't count thousands of people who mow lawns, work as sidewalk peddlers or have other part-time jobs.

"I've been looking for a job ever since my husband was killed," said Socorro Rua. Her husband was killed May 19 by a man who stuck a gun in his ribs on a crowded bus.

Her 15-year-old daughter, Liliana, turned her head away and tears coursed down her cheeks. Mrs. Rua also has a 6-year-old son, Carlos.

They live in an apartment complex built by the government for policemen. The shabby three-room apartment costs only $20 a month, but even that may be out of reach because officials have told her the pension paperwork will take a year.

Another widow, Carmen Montoya, said she had high hopes for their children when her husband was alive, but "now we just try to get by day to day. My little boy wanted a toy car for his birthday. I cried when he asked me, because I knew I couldn't afford it. They don't get anything at Christmas."

"My little girl used to chatter and sing all the time before her daddy was killed," she said. "Now she just stares and hardly says a word."

Lawyer claims TV reporter conducted another interview with prison inmate

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A defense lawyer for one of two brothers accused of killing a police officer says a Bexar County deputy arranged for a television reporter to interview his client while other deputies were attempting to arrest the reporter on a contempt of court warrant stemming from an earlier jail house interview.

Defense lawyer Mark Stevens said that the interview of Henry David Hernandez by KMOL-TV reporter Brian Karem was a blatant violation of Hernandez' civil rights and an aberration of jail policy.

He said he will seek a court order to prevent Karem from doing another interview.

Bexar County Sheriff Harlon Copeland told the San Antonio Express-News that he knows nothing about the call.

Karem surrendered to Copeland Wednesday to begin serving a six-month jail term for contempt for failing to turn over his notes to defense and prosecution lawyers involved in the capital murder trial of Hernandez and his brother, Julian.

The brothers are accused in the March 1989 shooting death of officer Gary Williams.

In the first interview, Henry Hernandez told Karem he shot Williams in self-defense.

Defense lawyers contend that if the first interview was set up by county deputies or officials, the confession could not be used against him.

An autopsy revealed that the officer was under the influence of heroin a cocaine at the time of his death.

Karem lost his latest attempt for immediate freedom from jail Thursday when the U.S. Supreme Court denied his request for a stay of the contempt order while the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals considers his appeal.

State District Judge Pat Priest had ordered Karem jailed for six months unless he reveals the names of sources who helped him get the interview.

Karem went then to federal court, and on June 22, a federal judge ruled that Karem had to turn over the documents. The judge refused to extend a stay that had kept Karem out of jail during the appeals process.

The 5th Circuit agreed to hear Karem's case but also refused to keep Karem out of jail while the appeal is pending.

In court documents filed Thursday, defense lawyer Stevens claims that Hernandez was removed from his jail cell Tuesday, while Karem was still free, and taken to a phone by jail Capt. Guadalupe Saldana.

The lawyer said Saldana dialed the telephone and handed it to Hernandez and said Karem was on the other end.

Saldana told Stevens that he found a note on his desk directing him to make the call for Hernandez, according to court papers.

Saldana told the San Antonio newspaper that he did not make the call and then hung up on a reporter.

Copeland said it is not unusual for inmates at the jail to receive messages under emergency circumstances.

Stevens said that in his 10 years as a San Antonio lawyer he has never heard of anyone being able to call the jail and speak to an inmate.

"Why does the Sheriff's Office accord this privilege to a television reporter?" Stevens said.

Accountants search 'cooked books' for financial fraud

By JOHN A. BOLT
AP Business Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Robbers do not need guns. Pencil and paper will do. Opportunity and greed are thievery's driving forces.

So say two accountants who have built a business of finding financial fraud.

"Put enough zeroes behind a number, and it's amazing how flexible morals become," said James A. Smith, a partner of Smith, Sibley &

Co. accountants. "How many years in prison would you do to accumulate a half a billion dollars in your bank account?"

The firm is one of many hired by the federal government to help clean up the savings and loan industry. While others concentrate on finding fraud, Smith and Sibley will use the traditional accounting methods, tallying assets and estimating losses, to detect the value of S&L property.

They said their expertise in fraud may help them sniff out illegal schemes.

Most of the work is tedious.

"It is in fact ... very laborious, number-crunching ... meticulous attention to detail," Smith said. But there have been times.

Once a distraught executive was told the home office had ordered him to hand over his books to Smith & Sibley, and he began pacing around the office with a baseball bat.

He never swung the bat, Sibley said, but it was close.

Smith was introduced to forensic accounting via Watergate. He helped unravel a slush fund through which Braniff Airlines Inc. funneled money to pay bribes to gain South American landing rights.

Accountants discovered Braniff used the same fund for an illegal contribution to Richard Nixon's 1972 re-election campaign.

Over the years, forensic accounting has grown to about 15 percent of the firm's work. Sibley is one of 3,000 members of the National Association of Certified Fraud Examiners.

As part of a team working under contract with the Resolution Trust Corp., Smith and Sibley now help determine the value of assets held by insolvent thrifts that are under government conservatorship.

The partners have seen their forensic speciality take on more importance as companies, especially small ones, realize their profits are being stolen.

"Our clients suspect," Smith said. "The financial statements say I'm making a profit. Where's my money?"

They're frequently right.

Fraud occurs in a lot of small businesses because their owners don't take care to protect their assets, Sibley said. "They do not mind the store."

He likes to tell of the doctor who turned over all the bill-paying to a nurse. She took advantage of his trust to use his charge account number to buy things for herself.

The doctor never bothered to look at the bills and only discovered he was being robbed when his accountant asked why his interest payments were so high.

But small businesses are not the only victims.

Smith and Sibley dubbed one escapade "The Liquid Paper Capers."

A teller at a Dallas bank was convicted of making false entries on the books of a savings and loan and sentenced to prison.

Two months out of jail, he was working for a construction company as a controller.

He would make out false invoices to fictitious vendors. After the owner of the company signed the checks, the thief would blot out the fictitious vendor's name, substitute his own and deposit them into his own account via night deposit.

The checks were always paid despite the obvious altering, and $600,000 was stolen before the crime was discovered, Sibley said.

It was too late to save the business; the losses broke the company.

The thief fled Texas, but turned up later in the offices of an international accounting firm.

"He was again convicted and sent to the Wynne Prison in Huntsville, where he wound up participating in the prison farm accounting office," according to Smith & Sibley's history of the case.

"Not surprisingly, a huge shortage was found in the prison accounting office."

The convictions in the Liquid Paper Capers are unusual, Sibley said. Many businesses want only to recoup their losses and won't go to court.

Such reluctance, he believes, has led to increased white collar crime, although he said he senses a change in attitude.

"Management is more and more realizing that they have to send people to jail," he said.

That realization creates a growing demand for his speciality. "If you're going to prosecute, you need somebody who'll make a good witness," he said. And if there is a potential prosecution, "you don't want to blow the case because of the way you gathered the evidence."

Gathering the evidence, in most cases, means following the money.

"The money is the trail. The way you put away people is by tracing the money," Sibley said.

He hesitates when asked for specifics about tracking money, preferring to talk in generalities about access to sales receipts, bank records and numerous other sources.

"Documentation, or in some instances lack of documentation, builds the case," Sibley said.

He believes the attention given to multibillion-dollar savings and loan scandals has spurred law enforcement agencies' interest in white collar crime.

"In the past, it has not been publicized," Sibley said, and "the lack of prosecution makes it more attractive."

Sibley hopes increased attention leads to an understanding that "we are not going to let people steal from us."

Sears opens 'Brand Center'

Sears Catalog announces the debut of "Sears Catalog Brand Center" in more than 2,200 of their catalog stores across the country, including the Pampa store.

Located within each store is an ordering station called "Brand Center," offering more than 300 brand-name appliances in addition to what is currently available in the HOME catalog.

Customers can shop from a product information book, select brand name appliances and then place their order. Some of the brand merchandise will also be available in the store to view.

"We are offering big store selection within the convenience of our own community," said Jack Jackson, local Sears manager.

"National brands were introduced almost two years ago in many of our larger retail stores. Now an increased selection of brand-name appliances is being made available through the Brand Center located in the Pampa catalog store," he added.

Besides Kenmore, Sears own brand, the assortment offered includes Amana, GE, Jenn-Air, Speed-Queen, Tappan and Whirlpool.

IRS exam deadline set for end of July

July 31 is the application deadline for persons who wish to take the Internal Revenue Service annual two-day special enrollment examination for tax preparers who wish to qualify to represent their clients before the IRS on tax return examinations.

For the first time, the examination will include questions on IRS collection procedures. The examination is set for Sept. 24-25 and will be conducted in Lubbock and Dallas.

An application packet can be obtained by calling (214) 767-1432.

Italy, Argentina advance to World Cup semifinals

By The Associated Press

ROME — Salvatore Schillaci continued to carry Italy through the World Cup, scoring the only goal Saturday night in a 1-0 victory over Ireland that put the hosts into the semifinals.

Italy, which has gotten four of its five game-winning goals from Schillaci, plays Argentina on Tuesday at Naples. Argentina won a penalty kick shootout against Yugoslavia earlier in the day.

The Italians, who have not surrendered a goal in their five victories, had their staunchest test against the Irish. Both teams displayed solid defense and aggressive midfield play. But Ireland, losing for the first time in 18 games and 19 months, could not put one in the net.

Schillaci could.

His fourth goal of the tournament came in the 38th minute off a brilliant passing display. Giuseppe Giannini made a creative run down the middle and passed to his left to Roberto Donadoni. His hard shot was too hot for goalie Paddy Bonner to handle. He stopped it, but the rebound fell to Schillaci as Bonner fell to the side of the net.

Schillaci had a wide-open target and he didn't miss. He rarely has in this World Cup.

He nearly got another goal in the second half when his 30-yard kick bounced off the crossbar and onto the goal line, but not across.

Ireland, with support from about 10,000 fans in the crowd of 73,303 at Olympic Stadium, was eliminated after reaching the final eight in its first World Cup.

FLORENCE, Italy — Defending champion Argentina beat Yugoslavia 3-2 on penalty kicks today to advance to the World Cup semifinals.

Argentina now faces Italy in the semifinals.

Both Argentina and Yugoslavia squandered scoring chances during the 120 minutes of scoreless play. The shootout was a similar comedy of errors.

Diego Maradona and Pedro Troglio both missed for the world champions, while three Yugoslavs, Dragan Stojkovic, Dragoljub Brnovic and Faruk Hadzigebric failed to find the net.

Argentine goalkeeper Sergio Goycochea made the crucial final save on Hadzigebric's low shot.

Yugoslavia played most of the match with 10 men after midfielder Refik Sabanadzovic was sent off in the 32nd minute for a foul on Maradona. He earlier had been given a yellow card for refusing to move back at a free kick.

Argentina scored in the final minute of overtime, but Swiss referee Kurt Rothlisberger disallowed the goal, ruling Jorge Burruchaga handled the ball. Television replays of the incident were inconclusive.

Argentine captain Diego Maradona celebrates.

Area cowboys close out high school rodeo careers at Nationals

By L.D. STRATE
Sports Writer

Jim Boy Hash of Canadian is preparing to put an end to a standout high school rodeo career.

Hash travels to Shawnee, Okla. later this month to participate in the National High School Finals, scheduled for July 22-29. He qualified for Nationals by placing fourth in steer wrestling at the Texas High School State Finals in Abilene.

Hash hopes to walk away with the national title. However, he's not making any predictions.

"You never know what to expect at a rodeo. You just go and do the best you can," he said. "I'm looking forward to it."

Hash's best efforts this year resulted in winning both the year-end Tri-State High School titles in steer wrestling and saddle bronc. He placed second in steer wrestling at the Tri-State Finals in Dumas.

Those honors helped earn him a rodeo scholarship to Murray State College in Tishomingo, Okla. Hash was also presented with year-end saddle and buckle awards in steer wrestling and saddle bronc, along with a $500 scholarship from a Texas construction company.

In the past, Hash couldn't quite come away with a Tri-State year-end title. He was third in steer wrestling as a sophomore and second last year as a junior. This year the top spot belonged to Hash, who held a comfortable lead in the points standings entering the Tri-State Finals. He was leading by 23 points going into the Finals and clinched the title with a second place in the second go-round.

Hash just missed qualifying for Nationals in the saddle bronc competition at Abilene last month. He had to finish among the top 10 to qualify and wound up 11th in the final standings.

"At Abilene, it was hard telling how I was going to finish. When I go to Shawnee, I'll be bulldogging against some people from Oklahoma I know," Hash said. "That might help me try a little harder."

In the steer wrestling event, Hash was third in the first go-round (4,786), sixth in the second go-round (6,943) and fourth in the short-go (5,253) at the State Finals.

Hash, who weighs in at 200 pounds, was also an outstanding football player at Canadian High. He started at tackle on both sides of the line for the Wildcats this season.

Hash will be working toward an Associate of Applied Science degree in Horse Management and Training at Tishomingo.

He is the son of Jim and Davie Hash of Canadian and the grandson of Ada Whatley and the late Sam Whatley of Pampa.

(Special Photo)

Jim Boy Hash (right) and his father Jim display the saddle and buckles that Jim Boy won in steer wrestling and saddle bronc at the Tri-State High School Rodeo Finals in June.

Mrs. Hash is a typical proud parent.

"Jim Boy loves to rodeo. He works very hard at it," she said.

Hash won't be the only area or Region I performer entered in the Nationals.

Brothers Shane and Travis Goad of Briscoe finished an impressive second in team roping at the State Finals.

"We went to the Finals feeling like we could do pretty good," Shane said. "We practice every chance we get."

Practice certainly paid off for the Goads at state.

Following the first two go-rounds, the Goads were among the top 10 teams that went into the short go-round. The Goads were fourth, placing them second in average.

The only other Region I national qualifier was Shawna Davidson of Lubbock.

Farm chores keep the Goad brothers busy, but they usually rope until dark after each day's work is done.

"Roping is such a big part of it. It takes quite a bit of practice," Shane added.

Shane teamed with River Road's Twister Cain to win this year's Tri-State team roping crown. They also won the year-end title.

Shane graduated this year and Travis will be a sophomore.

Their parents are Mr. and Mrs. Mike Goad.

Rangers run streak to four with 6-5 win

By DAVE O'HARA
AP Sports Writer

BOSTON — Big Pete Incaviglia took a head first dive — and the Texas Rangers sank the Boston Red Sox.

Incaviglia foiled an inning-ending double play with his dive into first base Saturday as the Rangers rallied for three runs in the ninth inning for a 6-5 victory over Jeff Reardon and the Red Sox.

"No, it wasn't close," Boston manager Joe Morgan said of the 220-pound Incaviglia's hard-nosed effort. "He can run, and his grounder took a big bounce that slowed the force at second."

Jeff Huson tied the score with a two-run single off Reardon (3-2) in the ninth and Rafael Palmeiro kept the rally alive with a single for a career-high 5-5 game.

"Reardon just didn't have it," Morgan said after using his bullpen ace for the fifth time in six days. "He said he felt good, but I guess he just has been worked too much this week. He's definitely out of there tomorrow."

The Rangers out-hit the Red Sox 17-9, including a solo homer by Harold Baines, while beating the AL East leaders for the second time within 15 hours.

Texas ended Boston's seven-game winning streak in rallying for a 4-3 victory in a rain-delayed game completed at 1:27 a.m. Saturday.

"It was a long night and you have to say that it was a rather long afternoon, to put it mildly," Morgan said.

Texas left-hander Mike Jeffcoat (2-3) withstood a five-run Boston second and allowed nine hits in eight innings to get the victory with relief help from Brad Arnsberg and Kenny Rogers, who earned his fifth save by striking out Wade Boggs with the tying run on third to end the game.

"Jeffcoat got a 'W', as deserving a win as there is," Texas manager Bobby Valentine said. "He kept pitching."

"It's a big lift for me and the club," Jeffcoat said. "It's a big win for us, four in a row and coming back from a 5-1 deficit."

Mike Greenwell capped a five-run second inning with a two-run single for Boston, which finished June 20-9. The Red Sox lost their second straight game, falling short of their best June ever, 21-8 in 1912.

Rookie Dana Kiecker allowed 11 hits, but only three runs in 5 1-3 innings.

The Red Sox had four of their nine hits and two walks in the second against Jeffcoat.

Texas took a 1-0 lead on an RBI single by Sierra in the first before Boston went ahead to stay.

Dwight Evans walked to start the second and Ellis Burks beat out an infield hit. Carlos Quintana fouled out, but John Marzano singled to score Evans.

Luis Rivera fouled off nine pitches before walking on a 3-2 count to fill the bases. Boggs hit a sacrifice fly, Marty Barrett followed with an RBI double and Greenwell with a single to right.

Baines hit his ninth homer to start the fourth and Texas scored in the sixth on doubles by Sierra and Jack Daugherty.

Palmeiro doubled and Sierra singled off reliever Jerry Reed to start the eighth.

With runners on first and third, Rob Murphy replaced Reed and struck out Incaviglia and Daugherty. The Reardon came on to end the threat by retiring Kevin Reimer on a fly to right.

Notes: The Rangers boosted their win streak to four games Saturday ... Mike Jeffcoat's victory improved the Rangers' record to 2-9 when they start a left-hander... The Rangers were 16-13 in June, the 11th time in 19 years they've been over .500 for the month.

Chang, Edberg survive third-round scares

By STEVE WILSTEIN
AP Tennis Writer

WIMBLEDON, England — Tennis players talk about "the big points," the few dramatic shots that make all the difference in a match, the ones champions such as Stefan Edberg and Michael Chang win and losers don't.

Boxers have the 15th round, thoroughbreds the final furlong, tennis players the fifth set — the moment of truth when ability, desire and strength combine to produce victory.

Such was the case Saturday, when ominous, whipping winds up to 30 mph bent trees around Wimbledon, played havoc with balls and carried the threat of upsets from court to court.

Chang and Edberg escaped with five-set victories to set up a meeting in the fourth round.

Wimbledon

Chang, the 1989 French Open winner, rallied to beat hard-hitting Australian Mark Kratzmann 3-6, 4-6, 6-4, 6-2, 6-2. Edberg, the 1988 Wimbledon champion, downed Israel's Amos Mansdorf 6-4, 5-7, 3-6, 6-2, 9-7.

"Always the top guy is going to play better on the big points,"

Mansdorf said.

The tournament opened against the backdrop of a bombing at a London club, and the week ended with a bomb scare that caused the evacuation of Centre Court probably for the first time in history. Thousands of fans were ordered to leave and a doubles match was halted.

The suspected bomb — a briefcase left under a seat — turned out to be harmless, just as a camera case did Wednesday during a search that halted play on three outside courts.

Steffi Graf, the women's two-time defending champion, avoided the chaos and the controversy surrounding her family problems. Graf, questioned repeatedly about her father's involvement with a model under investigation for allegedly extorting him, flew back to West Germany for a weekend's rest before her fourth-round match Monday against Jennifer Capriati.

No. 2 Martina Navratilova, an eight-time Wimbledon champion, also reached the fourth round by beating Karin Kschwendt 6-1, 6-1. Navratilova will meet Judith Wiesner, who beat Laura Gildemeister 6-2, 7-5. No. 4 Gabriela Sabatini also won and will face Nathalie Tauziat.

Ivan Lendl, the men's top seed, had his match with Bryan Shelton suspended by darkness after each had won a tie-breaker. The match will be resumed on Monday.

June 1990: A month like baseball has never seen

By The Associated Press

Four pitching arms — two left, two right — were thrust into the air during June, punctuating a historic month for baseball.

Each of those arms threw no-hitters in the same month, something that had never been done in a sport that traces its ancestry to 1869.

Three of the June no-hitters occurred in the American League, another record.

Making it all the more amazing was Friday night's double no-hitter, the first time this century that two pitchers produced nine-inning, complete-game no-hitters on the same day.

Oakland's Dave Stewart, baseball's winningest pitcher the last three years, beat Toronto 5-0, the first no-hitter ever in that Canadian city. And Fernando Valenzuela of the Los Angeles Dodgers, considered by some to be wasting his time after two years of arm miseries, beat the St. Louis Cardinals 6-0. It was the first no-hitter in the National League since 1988.

"This was the highlight of my career," Stewart said. "Winning 20 ballgames, that's something because they don't have to vote on 20 wins. But I thought after winning a World Series and an MVP that you couldn't top that. This does."

June didn't figure to be Stewart's month. He's been unbeatable in April, winning all 19 decisions in the first month of the season since he joined the Athletics in 1986. He was 5-0 during this April, only 4-6 since until Friday.

Valenzuela

Stewart

Of all the teams that Valenzuela could have aced, the Cardinals figured to be the last. He hadn't beaten St. Louis since 1988, about the time serious trouble beset the left arm that won him rookie of the year and Cy Young Awards in 1981.

"In my last game in Cincinnati, I gave up eight runs in five innings," Valenzuela recalled. "It's great to get this game. ... I've been working for two years and this game is great because it shows all the work I've been doing."

Two no-hitters in one day is about the only way to eclipse what Nolan Ryan of the Texas Rangers accomplished on June 11. Against Stewart's Oakland team, considered the best hitting team in baseball, the game's strikeout king threw an unprecedented sixth no-hitter. No other pitcher has more than four.

Ryan, at 43, became the oldest to throw a no-hitter nine days after Seattle's Randy Johnson, at 6-foot-10, became the tallest. Johnson, something of a left-handed Ryan with a 95 mph fastball and fits of wildness to weaken any hitters knees, gave the 14-year-old Seattle franchise its first no-hitter about six weeks after teammate Brian Holman came within one out of throwing a perfect game.

Los Angeles manager Tom Lasorda plugged his organization by reminding that Stewart is a former Dodger, a teammate of Valenzuela from 1981 through 1983. Perhaps that's why Valenzuela was glued to a TV set as Stewart chased the ace Friday night.

"Fernando even said after watching it on TV, he said there might be another one tonight," Lasorda said. "So that was a pretty good prediction."

It was a joke, Valenzuela insisted. "Yeah," Lasorda said, "but it happened."

In June 1990, a month like baseball has never seen.

Reds halt Mets' 11-game win streak

NEW YORK (AP) — Cincinnati ended the Mets' 11-game winning streak as pinch-hitter Joe Oliver broke an eighth-inning tie with a two-run double to help the Reds beat New York 7-4 Saturday.

The Mets, 21-8 in June, were trying to set a club record for consecutive victories. New York also won 11 straight in 1969, '72 and '86. Also ending was Darryl Strawberry's career-high 18-game hitting streak.

Jeff Musselman (0-2) replaced

David Cone with the Mets leading 4-3 to start the eighth. Ron Oester tied the game with an infield single to second and after Wally Whitehurst relieved, Oliver doubled to put the Reds ahead.

Oester entered the game in the sixth when second baseman Mariano Duncan was ejected for arguing after he struck out.

The Reds, who have come from behind this season for 23 of their 46 victories, added a run in the ninth on Eric Davis' 11th homer

Blue Jays .....4

TORONTO (AP) — Bob Welch became the first 13-game winner in the major leagues and Dave Henderson hit a pair of two-run doubles as the Oakland Athletics beat Toronto.

The loss was the Blue Jays' sixth straight.

Welch, following teammate Dave Stewart's no-hitter against the Blue Jays on Friday night, allowed four runs on nine hits to win a career-best 10th straight decision.

LeMond fares well in opener

By SALVATORE ZANCA
Associated Press Writer

POITIERS, France — Defending champion Greg LeMond shook off a winter full of distractions and a spring full of question marks on Saturday with an impressive opening performance at the Tour de France.

Tour de France

LeMond finished a driving second in the 4-mile prologue, just four seconds behind French short sprint specialist Thierry Marie.

"There were some questions whether I would come back," LeMond said. "But I've been confident for two weeks."

He should be. In just four appearances in the Tour, he has won twice. The other times, he finished second and third.

On Saturday, Marie won the opening sprint around the high-tech theme park called Futuroscope in 7 minutes, 49 seconds. But LeMond, rigged up again with special handlebars, was right behind the winner.

More important, LeMond gained valuable seconds on his chief competitors, all former Tour de France champions like LeMond.

Stephen Roche, the 1987 winner, was 14 seconds behind LeMond in 10th.

France's Laurent Fignon, who lost to LeMond by eight seconds in last year's thrilling final time trial, was 15th Saturday, dropping 15 seconds to the American. Fignon won in 1983 and 1984.

The 1988 winner, Spain's Pedro Delgado, was 26th, 20 seconds behind LeMond.

Greg LeMond was second in Saturday's prologue.

Dean's downs Duncan, Holmes in city tournament

Dean's Pharmacy advanced in the 11- and 12-year-old league city tournament this week with consecutive wins over Duncan and Holmes.

On Wednesday, Dean's edged Duncan, 14-12, in a hard-fought tournament opener. Jerren Miller went 4-1/3 innings to collect the mound win, giving way to T.J. Davis, who pitched the last 1-2/3 innings for the save.

Leading the way at the plate for Dean's were Miller, three singles; Ernie Cruz, single and double; Davis, single; David Collier, two singles; Kenny Fritz, single.

First baseman Gabriel Jaramillo hit his second home run of the season to help in the win.

Collecting hits for Duncan were Clint Curtis, two singles; and Phillip Bernal, Matt Rheams, Jeremy Barnes, Wes Lang and Jeff Henderson with one single each.

On Friday night, Dean's jumped out to an 11-0 lead in the first inning and never looked back in a 21-10 victory over Holmes that was halted after five innings.

T.J. Davis and Gabriel Jaramillo led the charge for Dean's. Davis clobbered his second homer of the year, a double and single for 5 RBI.

Jaramillo smashed his third round-tripper of the year, along with two singles, to collect four RBI. Jerren Miller legged out his fourth infield hit in four games, while Ernie Cruz, David Collier and Avery Taylor contributed a single apiece.

Davis, Cruz, Miller and Jaramillo each scored four times with aggressive base running. David Collier and Adam Conner plated two runs apiece.

T.J. Davis earned the win on the mound and Cruz pitched the final inning to get the save. Jeremy Knutson suffered the loss for Holmes.

Top hitters for Holmes were Jeremy Knutson, two singles; Trent Davis, double; Billy Thomas, double and single for three RBI; and Blake Crockett, double.

Softball Tournament

The Kelton seniors of 1991 will sponsor a men's and women's softball tournament Friday through Sunday, July 6-8. The tourney will be played under USSSA rules and teams must furnish their own softballs.

Entry fee is $100 and entry deadline is 3 p.m. July 5. For more information, contact Susan Davidson at 826-5296, or leave a message at 375-2541.

Rangers Tune

ARLINGTON (AP) — They're singing the same old song in Arlington these days: Keep the Texas Rangers where they are.

On Thursday, a Dallas-area radio station unveiled "Keep 'Em in Place," a not-so-subtle jab at not-so-subtle hints by Dallas officials that the Rangers baseball team would be better off playing in Dallas.

Sung to the tune of Billy Joel's "Keeping the Faith," it almost provides directions to Arlington Stadium, the home of the Rangers.

The song also promotes nearby restaurants and the stadium's relative freedom from crime.

So why is a Dallas radio station playing a pro-Arlington song?

"We're not a Dallas station," we're a Dallas-Fort Worth station," said Chuck Rhodes, program director for KVIL. "We have parodied many things like this the last couple of years."

Arlington Mayor Richard Greene found the song inspiring.

"I sat in the parking lot at work and listened to it, then I called (the radio station)," said Greene.

Dallas officials have an agreement with a private developer for a mixed-use project near Dallas' Farmer's Market that could include a baseball stadium, and another is proposing a sports complex in west Dallas.

Arlington is the only city so far that has acknowledged making a specific offer to the Rangers, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported.

Pair of Aces

ANNA, Texas (AP) — Until this week, Thomas Vardasco "Tony" Robello was known for another game. But on Thursday, the 79-year-old Robello made his mark in golf by making two holes-in-one in a single round.

Robello has been in baseball for 61 years and gained recognition as the man who signed Hall of Fame catcher Johnny Bench to his first contract with the Cincinnati Reds.

Robello pitched from 1933 to 1934 with the Reds.

Robello's first hole-in-one at the Hurricane Country Club came on the 179-yard, par-3 No. 5. The ace with a 3-wood was the first he had made in his life.

Nine holes later, he got his second career hole-in-one. He used a 4-wood to ace the 151-yard, par-3 No. 14.

Route 66: The Mother Road

(Tom Snyder, Chicago Sun-Times)

Funks Grove Country Store in Funk's Grove, Ill.

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

On Route 66 — Social scientists often complain that yesterday's "we" generation has become today's "me" generation.

Best-selling author Michael Wallis, whose Route 66: The Mother Road is a winner, said a tragedy of spirit happened when he traded the "us" for "I" — US for I-40, I-55, I-15 and I-10.

Wallis' poetic, sensitive narrative, published by St. Martin's Press, takes readers on a cross-country tour from Chicago's Grant Park to Ocean Ave. in Santa Monica, introducing them to the people and places that made Route 66 special.

He paused between bites at the Big Texan Steak Ranch, a Route 66 tradition that survived by relocating on I-40, to describe what made the highway so special: The people were more real, more friendly, more colorful than anywhere else on the map.

"I was born very close to Route 66 in St. Louis and I grew up with the Mother Road very much a part of my psyche," Wallis said of the motivation behind his undisputed masterpiece.

Unlike today's interstates, he pointed out, Route 66 was a two-lane blacktop that went through towns, through neighborhoods, not around them. Traveling down that road meant seeing the people up close, interacting with them and learning what they were about.

"The Mother Road"

by Kevin Welch and Alan Rhody from the debut album by Kevin Welch
©1990 Warner Reprise

There used to be a main street 'cross the country
And that good ol' road would take you all the way
From Clark and Ogden Street up in Chicago
To Lincoln and Olympic in LA

I was raised up somewhere in the middle
Me and my daddy'd watch 'em roll through town
I saw license plates from states I'd only dreamed of They'd just wave goodbye and put that hammer down
Well the restless and the desperate
The young ones and the old

All together like a river flowed
Lord I hope they got where they were going
All the children of the Mother Road
The Dust Bowl Okies stopped in Arizona
To trade their family things on gasoline
Just to find themselves outnumbered by the thousands

Who'd already traveled down that road of dreams
When the war was over all the baby boomers
Loaded up their cars and grabbed their kids
Just to count the miles and cuss those big freight liners
Across twenty-two hundred miles of Route 66
Now the hot top is just ranch roads and runways
And a way of life for some folks all but gone

You can almost see the ghost towns from the fast lane
Of this super highway we're all a ridin' on (1985 Cross Keys Publishing)

It was traveling with Merle Haggard, John Steinbeck, Jack Kerouac, Woody Guthrie, Mickey Mantle, Bobby Troup, Tod and Bud, and Bob Willis.

Country music songwriter Kevin Willis, who has penned hits for the likes of Gary Morris and Don Williams, among others, said he learned to read on Route 66.

"We traveled from town to town the first seven years of my life because my father was revamping the highway signs," he noted.

As a young marine I hitchhiked home from Camp Pendleton on Route 66," Wallis said of his experience with the road. "I've driven trucks down Route 66, hitchhiked with all kinds of characters.

As a journalist, for the past 17, 18 years, I've been writing about Route 66 — the barbecue joints, soiled doves, old cowboys, c o d g e r s , grease monkeys, waitresses, all of them."

And those reflections of the people are what make Wallis' book so endearing. He is introducing you to America. To what we were and what we should not lose touch with.

Peppered into the work are a gold mine of photographs of the highway and its people.

For those who have complained that the Panhandle has been slighted in most accounts of the Lone Star State, they need pine no longer.

Forget Dallas and Houston. Chapter six, the one about Texas, delves into the really important aspects of life between the T and the S: the Regal Reptile Ranch in Alanreed, Shamrock's U-Drop Inn, Cowboy Drive In in McLean and, of course, The Big Texan, where easterners can sample real frontier eating like rattlesnake, buffalo steaks and mountain oysters.

As an Ernest Tubb record played in the background and Wallis wiped handkerchiefs from his mouth, he said that it is that draws people to Route 66, though it has been a non-road for over a decade.

Interstate 40 is a fine, serviceable route and I have nothing particularly against it," he explained. "I like all five of the interstates that took 66's place. But, what they are is predictable. The interstate is about as predictable as you can get.

"The Mother Road is not predictable. When you and I go into a cafe on Route 66, we don't know if we're going to get ptomaine poisoning or find a feast. A Golden Arches on the interstate is generic. A Big Mac in Pampa is a Big Mac in Seattle is a Big Mac Boise."

In his book, Wallis gives the food along 66 almost as much

(Chicago Sun-Times, courtesy St. Martin's Press)

On January 17, 1977, Illinois Department of Transportation workers removed Route 66 signs in Grant Park, Chicago, marking its end as the nation's most traveled roadway, a victim of the new interstate system of super highways.

Tulsa, where there's "nothing instant but the service" and "the fry cook can flip four eggs at a time without breaking a yolk." As 66 wound through Clinton, Pop Hicks' Restaurant was also a sure bet.

Heading west past Texas, a must-stop, Wallis insisted, was the themselves. We decided to choose some candidates who were well-known like Bobby Troup and Michael Martin Murphy, but also some people like Anne Remington whose aunt owned the Corn Crib Cafe and Pancake House in Springfield, Mo.

Remington recalled, "... we lived in a converted liquor store. It had four rooms and there was a gravel drive and it was right by Highway 66, on the strip where all the clubs and joints were located. Some of those places were notorious and there were lots of floozies. My mother hated it."

There's also Angel Delgadillo, a barber in Seligman, Ariz., whom Wallis describes as a great poet who has yet to realize his gift and a host of others.

"I don't want to sound haughty, but I just even mention the town of McLean (Texas) and the people there is important," Wallis said. "They are just such great people. Deibert Trew, who started the Old Route 66 Association there, is somebody people should meet because he is so interesting."

When asked why his narrative on 66 is drawing so much attention that other, similar projects have not, Wallis said, "My book is not a death knoll for Route 66. It's written in the present tense, not mourning a loss."

He's right. A traveller could easily begin in Chicago and, using Wallis' work, have the vacation of a lifetime seeking out Old 66 as it appears in bits and pieces off and around the interstates, meeting the people, sampling the food and seeing the sites.

Recognizing that a coffee table book is a little awkward for that purpose, Wallis said he is planning a glove-box size accompaniment book that will show how to get onto 66 in the easiest possible manner. It will be released following his next book, already in the works: Pretty Boy, The Life and Times of Pretty Boy Floyd.

These days, Wallis and his wife Suzanne are traveling up and down the highway with various newspaper reporters and camera crews from the networks, showing them firsthand why he loves Route 66 so much.

Yes, he insisted, he is eager to move on to other projects. No, he said, he will not miss his close relationship with the current project.

"But," he said in almost the same breath, "it's really going to be something, getting those sourdough biscuits Sunday night at the Club Cafe in Santa Rosa! That's some of the best damn eating you'll ever do."

Suddenly all thoughts of other work was gone and Wallis got a glazy look in his eyes. He was lost in the "US" of America, somewhere on Route 66.

attention as the people. There's Funk's Grove Pure Maple Sirup (sic) in Funk's Grove, Ill.

"Now that is good syrup," he moans, rolling his eyes in ecstasy.

While in the Land of Lincoln, Dixie Truckers Home in McLean and the Pig-Hip of Broadwell, are also tasty memories from a by-gone day.

In Missouri it's Ted Drewes' Frozen Custard or the Steak 'n' Shake in St. Louis, Pecan Joe's in Newburg and the famous Red Chaney's in Springfield. Chaney features the world's first drive-through window and a "sooper red-berger" for $1.90.

When in the land of the Okie, Wallis said it was a Route 66 tradition to eat at Route 66 Diner in Club Cafe in Santa Rosa, N.M., a place he still visits at every opportunity for "the best sourdough biscuits on the face of the planet."

While food was, and is, important, especially to weary travellers heading from the dust bowl of Oklahoma on 66 to the sunshine and opportunity of California, Wallis goes back to the fact that he wrote his book for and about the people of the road.

"They are common folk, but I don't mean that pejoratively. There are a lot of people within the text of each chapter that are quoted," Wallis said. "To me Route 66 is not the concrete and asphalt, it's the people. We used ... Route 66 portraits (also) to let the people speak purely for

(Suzanne Fitzgerald Wallis, courtesy St. Martin's Press)

The Big Texan Steak Ranch in Amarillo, which moved from Route 66 to I-40 in 1968 when travelers began to no longer use the Mother Road, remains a constant reminder of the best the famous highway had to offer.

Tributes to "Mother"

"I never realized when I was putting (the song) together that I was writing about the most famous highway in the world."

— Bobby Troup songwriter and actor
"Get Your Kicks on Route 66"

"They used to say that the whole world went down this highway."

— Steve Funk
Funk's Grove Pure Maple Sirup (sic) Co.

"On the road, don't drink too much liquid, because your kidneys will soon proclaim the strain."

— Jack D. Rittenhouse
author of first Route 66 guidebook, 1946

"I didn't want to go to military school. The only way to get there was Route 66. Every autumn from 1959 until 1963, Route 66 represented the road to hell for me."

— James B. Sloan
Morton Grove, Ill.

"It's heritage we're talking about here. We're part of history. We're a Route 66 institution. That has to be retained."

— Ted Drewes
Ted Drewes Custard Stand
St. Louis, Mo.

"At Highway 66's peak, I had five mechanics, two body men, and a colored boy who greased cars and fixed flats."

— Howard Litch
Retired garage owner
Galena, Kan.

"66 is the Mother Road."

— John Steinbeck
The Grapes of Wrath

"Everybody talks about the Okies — those folks who packed it all in and went on down the road. I'd like to know about the ones who stayed put and spit in the dust and stuck it out. They were the tough ones. They were the real Oklahomans."

— Old farmer commenting on The Grapes of Wrath

"I'll never forget that trip out West. It was very hot and my mother would get some ice and dampen cloths to keep our faces cool. It was midsummer and the temperature was well over 110 degrees."

— Will Rogers Jr.
On traveling to California

"Remember, Amarillo is not a cultural mecca, and the Cadillac Ranch is a piece of abstract art. But the folks out here have come to feel very affectionate about it."

— Stanley Marsh
Owner, Cadillac Ranch

"For many years people have been passing through this place. Indians were coming this way long, long ago and then the Spanish explorers and the white soldiers and settlers and finally the tourists."

— Nyal Rockwell
Adamana, Ariz.

"As far as my music, the singers from the old highway ... were a major influence on me."

— Michael Martin Murphy singer/songwriter
Taos, N.M.

"The idea was for everybody to rediscover the United States through our characters' eyes."

— Martin Milner
star, Route 66

"I still have my memories — bitter and sweet — of Highway 66 and I know it's there. You just have to know how to find it."

— Anne Remington
Beverly Hills, Calif.

"A stop in one of the small towns most anywhere along old Route 66 offers evidence that life begins at the offramp. Away from the superslab you can still get a piece of pie from the person who baked it, still get your change right from the shop owner, still take a moment to care and to be cared about, a long way from home."

— Tom Snyder
Old Route 66 Association
Oxnard, Calif.

Cleanliness is essential to food safety

Has the urge to "clean" hit you? Sorting through the kitchen may not sound exciting, but cleanliness is essential to food safety.

In addition, following the proper storage times for perishable foods protects you from taste changes that occur when items stay frozen too long and food poisoning that can strike when foods sit in the refrigerator too long. Canned and dry foods don't last forever either. So arm yourself with a rag and an apron and get ready to attack that kitchen!

Let's start with the refrigerator. First check the frozen food. If the freezer is jam-packed and frosted over, it can't work well. Also ice crystals can invade food causing quality loss. Discard old, frozen-over goods.

Keep other packages if they are not past the use-by date. Defrost the freezer if necessary. Date the packages you save and place them up front for early use. Is "forgotten" meat or poultry still usable? Thaw it in the refrigerator. If it smells and looks okay, cook it right away.

Now check refrigerated foods. This part should be easier since refrigerated items usually announce their need to be discarded.

Remember, though, that fresh poultry only keeps 1 to 2 days; fresh meat, 3 to 5 days. Most leftovers will keep 3 to 4 days. Canned hams needing refrigeration last about 9 months. Vacuum-packed meats last 2 weeks unopened; 5 to 7 days opened.

Discard mayonnaise or salad dressing if the oil has separated, or if it looks or smells odd. See some mold? You can cut a small spot from hard cheese, salami, and firm fruits and vegetables. Keep your knife out of the mold and cut out an inch-wide square around and below it. Discard other moldy foods.

Safety check the refrigerator and freezer temperature. The freezer should be 0 F., and the refrigerator section not over 40 F. Be sure to clean it out before putting food back. Baking soda in water will cut most mold inside the refrigerator or freezer. Bleach in water will take mold off rubber casings.

Then move on to countertops and cabinets. Start by checking flour, sugar, tea, and spices on your countertops. Clean under and around canisters and boxes. Now look inside your canisters: In a tight-lidded canister, sugar will last 2 years.

Likewise, properly stored, flour should last 6-8 months. Discard flour if you see weevils, small brownish-black bugs. In an air-tight tin, teabags maintain good quality for about 18 months. Unopened ground coffee in a can lasts 2 years. Opened ground or freeze-dried coffee crystals last about 2 months, after that refrigerate it. Don't store spices over stoves. Put them in a cabinet away from heat. Whole spices last about a year; ground spices, 6 months.

Check your canned goods, bottles, pasta, macaroni, and mixes. Check items on the shelf for "eating fitness." Boxed spaghetti pasta should last a year or more; dry cake or similar mixes, about one year. Check packages for use-by dates.

Low acid commercially canned goods (meat, poultry, and most vegetables, except tomatoes) last 2 to 5 years in a healthy can - no dents, holes, rusting, bulging, or leaking. High-acid canned goods (tomato products, most fruit and fruit juices) last 18 months in sound containers.

Check glass jars, especially home-canned goods, for cracks, bulging lids or cloudy liquid around the product. Never taste suspicious-looking or smelling canned goods or anything that spurts liquid when opened. Wrap such things in heavy plastic and discard them in a secure trash can. They could contain deadly botulism food poisoning.

Never store food under the sink. Leaky pipes can drip on food causing mold and spoilage. Household chemicals or poisons stored there could spill. Plus, pipes are a typical entrance to homes for mice and roaches.

For additional information or answers to questions related to meat and poultry products, call USDA's Meat and Poultry Hotline, 1-800-535-4555. Their hours are 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. weekdays, Eastern Time.

For more information on food storage and safety, contact your Gray County Extension.

The Point Is Pets

by Ron Hendrick D.V.M.

FIREWORKS AND PETS DON'T MIX!!!

With July 4th coming up, I'd thought I'd mention a few things:

Please keep plenty of fresh, cool water available to your pets. (Make sure the water is kept in the shade, as it will get too hot for them to drink.)

Older dogs, and young pups are more susceptible to heat stroke. Keep a closer eye on them. If you think your pet is having a "heat stroke", call your veterinarian immediately, but, in the meantime, sponge cool water on it, to try to cool it down.

Many pets are extremely frightened by the sounds produced by fireworks. Some even require tranquilizers to keep them from acting irrationally, e.g. going through screen doors, and or running away. If you feel your pet falls in this category, have your veterinarian prescribe a tranquilizer. He must have records on your pet to do this, as he will need to know the breed, weight, etc.

By all means, leave your pets at home, and not transport them to the store, ball park, etc. This extremely hot weather can literally cook a pet in a very short time if it is kept in a closed car.

Have a safe, happy 4th of July.

665-2319 Expires July 31 613 N. Hobart

Senior voice students of Susie Wilson will perform in recital on Monday, July 2 beginning at 7:30 p.m. at St. Matthew's Episcopal Church.

Seniors are Krystal Keyes, Rhonda Miller and Mark Stephen Bridges.

Keyes is the 17-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Keyes of Pampa. She is a member of the First Baptist Church and senior high church choir.

Throughout high school, Keyes was a member of district, region and area choirs; a two-year member of All-State Choir; and a member of TMEA Honor Choir.

Keyes was also section leader in the high school choir and choir accompanist. She was a member of the Show Choir for three years, contributing both musical arrangements and choreography in addition to over 140 performances.

Keyes has competed in UIL solo and ensemble contests since seventh grade and received a total of 14 superior ratings in vocal and piano performance.

She was named outstanding pianist at the Greater Southwest Music Festival.

Keyes plans to attend Southwest Texas State at San Marcos in the fall majoring in physical therapy while continuing her music interests.

Miller is the 18-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gary Miller of Wheeler. She participated in basketball and tennis in high school for two years; was named homecoming queen one year and served as queen candidate for three years.

Miller played in the band for three and a half years. Her junior year she was president when the band went to state in marching and concert.

Miller, who was academically third in her class for her high school career, was also named Key Club Sweetheart her junior year and was a cheerleader her senior year.

Miller has taken voice lessons for two years and was a member of All-Region Choir. She plans to go to college in the fall majoring in psychology.

Bridges is the 18-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Bill Bridges of Pampa.

In high school, he was a member of All-Region Choir for four years; All-Area Choir for three years; and was third chair in All-State Choir one year.

Bridges was a member of the National Honor Society for two years and named to Who's Who Among American High School Students, ranking 13 in his class.

Bridges performed with the Concert Choir and Show Choir for three years, serving as vice president of concert choir his senior year.

All through high school, Bridges was a member of his church choir and church youth group. He has been a student of Wilson's for three

Tammy Joan Kelley & David Wayne Parker

Kelley - Parker

Kurt Kelley announces the engagement of his daughter, Tammy Joan, to David Wayne Parker, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Rose of Pampa and Bob Parker of Borger. The bride elect is the daughter of the late Gayle Kelley.

The couple plan to exchange wedding vows on Aug. 25 at Highland Baptist Church.

The future bride is a 1989 graduate of Pampa High School. She has attended Clarendon College, Pampa Center and plans to continue studies at Amarillo College this fall majoring in physical therapy. She is employed at Mrs. Bairds.

The prospective groom graduated from Pampa High School in 1988. He attended Clarendon College, Pampa Center for two years and plans to attend Amarillo College this fall majoring in business.

Gregory Scott Finney & Debrah Ann Browning

Browning - Finney

Marian and James Allen announce the engagement of their daughter, Debrah Ann Browning, to Gregory Scott Finney, son of Sharron and Eugene Finney.

The couple plan to be wed in an afternoon ceremony on July 21 in the First Assembly of God Church.

The bride-elect graduated from Pampa High School in 1990. She was previously employed by Braum's Ice Cream Store.

The prospective groom graduated from Lefors High School in 1987. He is employed by Topographic Engineering in Oklahoma City.

Woman's secret lover won't trade darkness for the light

DEAR ABBY: For four years, I was in love with a married man. He's very handsome, well-to-do and a wonderful lover. I was single, and still am. We had to sneak around to see each other because if his wife caught him, she'd take him to the cleaners. Their marriage was in bad shape when I met him, so it's not as though I broke up his home. I can't count the times he moved out after a fight. But he always went back — "money" or "the kids" were his reasons.

Well, she finally gave him a divorce. I thought, "Hooray, now we don't have to sneak around anymore." Wrong! He still says it's not wise for us to be seen together in public.

Why? He's not married anymore. Abby, I can't understand this. He doesn't give me a reason; he says, "It's better if we're not seen together in public."

When I mention marriage, he says, "It's too soon." Abby, I love him and have never looked at another man since he came into my life.

What would you do if you were in my shoes?

BAFFLED IN BALTIMORE

DEAR BAFFLED: I'd run like the devil was after me — then I'd start to wonder who the other woman was.

***

DEAR ABBY: Why do the news media report that someone is "elderly," when age has absolutely nothing to do with the news item? Example:

On television: "Hotel fire in Miami claimed many lives. Most were elderly."

such-and-such an address is on display for its artistic decorations. It is owned by an elderly woman."

Abby, are elderly people different or less valued than other humans? Talk about discrimination! Elderly people pay taxes, spend money to keep the economy going and make doctors richer. So, does being elderly make them less of a citizen?

I suggest that the media just report the news and leave out the word "elderly." What do you think?

OFFENDED

DEAR OFFENDED: Sorry you're offended; there's no need to be. Describing someone as "elderly" is not intended as an insult or put-down. It merely gives the reader more information about the person referred to in the news item. And in some cases, were it not for the age, it wouldn't be newsworthy. Example: "15-year-old girl to wed elderly man." The story went on to say that the groom was 78 years old. A news item simply stating that a 15-year-old girl was getting married would not have been newsworthy.

Tomato plants are being infected with Spotted Wilt virus

The annual Sick Plant Clinic will be Wednesday, July 11 in the Pampa Mall from 1:30-6:00 p.m.

There will be two Extension Specialists on hand to assist homeowner and farmers with any sick plant problems. Bring a good specimen of either plant or insect problems. Try to bring more than just a single leaf - bring several - enough to be representative of your problem.

For the Plant Clinic, the specialist on hand will be Dr. Carl Patrick, Entomologist; and Dr. Harold Kaufman, Plant Pathologist. They will assist anyone with problems relating to insects, diseases, soil fertility, gardening and general landscape plants as well as any farm crops. Bring any sick or trouble specimens.

Tomato Problems

A lot of home garden tomato plants are being infected with the Spotted Wilt virus disease. This disease has really spread over the area in the last four years and is very commonly found among tomato plants.

This disease causes streaking of leaves, stems and fruits. Numerous small, dark circular spots appear on the newest, younger leaves. Leaves may have a bronzed appearance and later turn dark brown and wither. Fruits show numerous spots about one-half inch in diameter, with concentric, circular markings. On ripe fruit, these markings are alternate bands of red and yellow. The virus also affects other vegetables and many wild hosts and ornamental plants. Thrips can transmit the disease from plant to plant and from the wild host plants.

Control is next to impossible since thrips feed on a wide host of plants. Remove infected plants as soon as possible so they do not serve as a host for further spread to adjoining plants. Being a virus disease, it will spread throughout an infected plant. The virus diseases generally start at the top of plants on new growth and move downward.

If you only have a few tomato plants and one of them gets the Spotted Wilt Virus, then you may not want to totally remove that sick plant, especially if it is loaded with tomatoes. If that is your situation,

For Horticulture

then follow these suggestions. Check your tomato plants every two days for the first sign of Spotted Wilt.

At the first sign of infection, small dark spots, trace the infected limb down as far as possible and cut it off where it joins a main stem or branch. By doing this at the first sign, hopefully you will have cut off the infected limb before the virus has had a chance to spread to other parts of the plant.

This is not the only disease that affects tomatoes, and some of the others are fungus caused diseases which are treatable with fungicides. Most of the fungus diseases start with the lower leaves and move upward.

When the fungus causes a disease, a spray program on weekly intervals using one of the following fungicides will be helpful: chlorothalonil, mancozeb, benomyl or captan.

Another virus disease that we don't see much of is Curly Top. This is characterized by the upper leaves on the plant, curling upward and the underside of the leaves will display a purplish color in the veins. Leaves of normal plants may develop curls but only when the veins develop the purple appearance is the plant infected with Curly Top. Here again a plant with this disease needs to be pulled up and discarded before beet leafhoppers transmit the virus to other healthy plants.

Blossom-end rot is where the fruit develops a dead area at the blossom-end. Generally in our area this is caused by the lack of adequate water to the plants' roots everyday.

If the roots cannot extract enough water from the soil, then the plant gets moisture from the fruit and a dead spot occurs in the fruit. If adequate water is supplied to the roots thereafter, then the fruit will develop normally except for the dead spot. It can be eaten when ripe by merely cutting out the dead area. Mulch well around tomato plants and check soil moisture conditions at least every two days in this kind of heat. Water by soaking the area well around the tomato roots.

Also spider mites are giving my tomatoes fits this past week. The mites are very different to control since they are located on the underside of leaves. This makes it very difficult to get spray on mite infected areas.

Mites cause tiny white spots which can develop into yellowing or bleaching of the leaves. It takes magnification in order to see the tiny spider mites. However, you can more easily see their webbing on the underside of infected leaves.

Watering

This extreme heat is causing record water use. Believe it or not, I have only watered my yard once this summer, about two weeks ago. Now I did give it a soaking through some drip irrigation lines I originally made for watering part of my garden. It took several days to get it watered this way but I wanted to restore moisture in the deep soil profile. We'll see how long before it needs watering again.

I just mentioned this point out that infrequent, but really slow soaking watering can help plants with good root systems go several days between waterings.

However, be careful using that method now if you haven't been watering that way in the past. Your plants may not be able to adjust to a sudden change in watering habits when it is near 100 degrees everyday.

Pampans keep cool and busy with lots of visitors, vacations and parties

A cool, happy and safe Fourth of July to all! The cool part is a big item, huh?

Bill Waters found a solution to the above 100° temperatures of last week. Bill chose to be seen in public in short sleeves and no coat.

Friends of Johnnie Crocker told him and then showed him how much they missed him while he spent three weeks near Jackson, Miss. with his mom and family with a mini "Welcome Home!" cake and coffee party at Furr's Cafeteria. For the occasion Susie Spoonmoore baked her famous official Texas birthday cake, chocolate with snow white shiny icing. After Johnny insisted it must be someone's birthday, not his, he finally realized the party honored him. Sharing the cake with Johnny were Susie, Mike Conroy, Marilyn and Curtis Craddock, former Pampans in town from Breckenridge, Polly and Gene Sidwell, Sarah Alexander and three friends, and Viola Hulsey. Marilyn and Curtis took the last few crumbs with them to their motor home.

Johnny has a multitude of local friends of all ages from all sections of town and the surrounding oilfield territory. Young people, aware of his admiration, respect and support, always stop by his table to share a few words and smiles and often seek his wise counsel. He'll never admit to the many favors and kindnesses he shows other; so, please, don't try to thank him!

Retha and Ray Jordan have had as their special out of town guest Ashley Hicks, their granddaughter. Ashley, a beautiful young girl, sailed through her recent checkup at St. Jude's Hospital in Memphis, Tenn. Hooray! Hooray! Retha and Ray, two more Pampans who spend lots of time helping others, must be perfect grandparents. Ask Ashley!

Spied Eva Dennis and Sarah Newman having lunch at Danny's Market in honor of Eva's birthday.

Beta Delta chapter representatives attend state convention in Lubbock

Over 1,200 members of the Texas State Organization of The Delta Kappa Gamma Society International met in Lubbock June 21-23 to celebrate their 61st anniversary.

Incoming presidents of Texas' 299 chapters participated in a leadership development workshop conducted by Ruth Johnson of Dallas and Dr. Jane Knapik of Uvalde.

Local members attending the convention included the president of Beta Delta Chapter, Sandra Morgan of Shamrock and Jeanna Miller, vice president and Debbie Robertson, past president, both of Pampa.

The international society of women educators was started in Austin on May 11, 1929 when Dr. Annie Webb Blanton invited 11 other teachers from all over Texas to join the new organization.

From the nucleus of a dozen members, the organization has grown to over 18,500 members in Texas, and over 176,000 members in 3,100 chapters throughout the Eva just returned from Dallas where she watched her granddaughters, Jonna and Janna Hamel perform with the Dallas Children's Theatre in "Winnie The Pooh." Jonna was a little rabbit and Janna was a bee.

Belated birthday wishes to Margaret Nicols, who recently celebrated her 88th birthday. You may see Margaret, smiling and visiting at the grocery store, and there by her own power, no less. Her eyes are sparkling, bright, yet ever so soft. Another sweetheart everyone loves. Many of Margaret's wonderful ways show up in her daughter, Joyce Roberts, former Red Cross secretary.

Winnie Sweatt served as coordinator and ramrod for the annual get-together of former employees of Highland General and Worley Hospitals. Former employees met for a covered dish dinner and heavy visiting at St. Vincent's Catholic Church cafeteria.

Lis. Bill and Helene Wildish of the Salvation Army returned earlier this week from a three-week vacation spent with family and friends in Florida. Was there a high school reunion of Helene's classmates?

Glennette Dawkins Goode had a special guest, Donna Schenck, her college roommate at the University of New Mexico at Albuquerque. Donna, owner of Restaurant Accounting System, was on her way to Dallas to speak before the Texas Restaurant Association. She is also working on a special computer program for Freedom Newspapers.

Wanda Watson, Carolyn Hall, Alicia and Manessa with their mother and sister from Plainview are still enjoying the memories of the Blanton family reunion at Ravenna. They visited in the home of Linda Fewell Tingle, former Pampans, and with Robert and Marguerita Fewell, former Pampans, who came from Ft. Worth. Included in the activities were visits to their birthplace, a cemetery, and a chapel designated as a Texas National Monument landmark that had been pastored by an ancestor. Reunion memories are special.

Peeking at Pampa By Katie

The 1950 graduating class of Miami held its first reunion before the Cow Calling. The class of seven boys and one girl was represented by six men plus two men and one woman who attended but moved before graduating. Frank Craig, former teacher, was presented with the paddle the class had stolen from him over 40 years ago. Class members came from everywhere. Another former teacher, Flora Corbin, attended. Plans are already in the making for a repeat in five years.

Several members of the class of 1944, Pampa High School, are beavering away to get $35,000 to landscape the campus of PHS. Letters went out only a few days ago to all class members. So far the class has raised $14,912. Working on the project are Julia Dawkins, Margaret Washington, J.D. Williams, Archie Maness, James Hart, John Paul McKinley, Margie Moore, Ruth Barrett, Keith Robinson, J.C. and Pat Hopkins, Bettye Bates, Mona Franke, Joyce Roberts, Jim McCracken plus Larry Fuller, Clarence and Allene Shillings of Amarillo. All contributions are appreciated.

Belated birthday congratulations to Priscilla Alexander. Friends chose to have a "50 is nifty party" rather than the black balloon style. Nearly 60 friends and relatives, many of them dressed in clothes of the era, gathered at St. Vincent's Cafeteria for the party of the year.

Wanetta and Richard Hill and Cindi Epperly sang appropriate songs and led the group singing. A hoola hoop contest was done by teams with no real winners. Herman Vinson was Buddy Holly. Hostesses were Betty Lou Marak, Dana Epperly, Helen Burns, Joyce Peters, Jane Knox, Colleen Hamilton, Nancy Brown, Brenda Condo, Jana Vinson, Ione Simmons. Refreshments were sandwiches, chips, dips, pickles, and banana splits, make-your-own. The best part of all was a real-jitterbug dance by Priscilla and her son Mark.

Steve Porter and his son John attended the baseball camp at Oklahoma State University. Steve served as camp coach. Sounds like a good father-son outing.

Mr. and Mrs. Randall Harden (Shana Schuman) honeymooned in Acapulco. Romantic!!!!

A few of Don Nelson's intimate friends, nameless, hosted a "whacker" party in his honor. Activities were nameless, too.

Special thanks to Larry Beck Electric for setting the flagpoles at Coronado Nursing Center. The flag is ready to fly!

Shirley and Harold Haines are still excited over the recent marriage of Harold's mother, Grace Haines, 85, to her high school sweetheart, Roy Holt, 90. The wedding took place in Canadian with Shirley as matron of honor, Laurie Daniels and Andrea Haines, singers, Kelly Haines and Deeanna Lay, candlelighters. Shirley and Harold followed them to Las Vegas and introduced Grace to the bright lights. When Roy returned to Canadian, he vowed to Gracie that she wouldn't get away from him again! The two honeymooners are on-the-go people, especially when they are in Roy's little white sports car! The couple moved to Las Vegas, but plan to return to the area often.

Bryan South, formerly of Pampa, now serving as youth minister at First Baptist Church in Jasper, took a group of young people and adults on a mission trip to Colorado. His parents, Jerry and Barbara South, met them for a barbecue dinner and the show "Texas". Jerry and Barbara fixed the group breakfast before they headed for Jasper.

Royce Jones celebrated his 72nd birthday by making a hole in one on number 8 at Bay Forest Golf Course, La Porte, Tex. He used an 8 iron on the 135 yard hole.

Two local ladies recently received Awards of Merit Certificates and honorable mention in the "World of Poetry Contest" from Sacramento, Calif. Helene Hogan and Georgia Holding are the talented ones.

Carolyn and Price T. Smith celebrated their 38th wedding anniversary last week with many close friends on hand to "wish them well."

Can you believe several hundred people kept a secret from John Glover to honor him with a "Surprise Appreciation Banquet" last Saturday evening? A fun skit, written by Wanetta Hill entitled "A week in John's life at church" was presented. A number of other members also lent their talents to the occasion. John was presented a membership in the new golf course and a few extras to go with it. He is one busy man.

Close to 150 gathered in M. K. Brown Auditorium's Heritage Room Tuesday to help longtime Pampa businessman Coyle Ford celebrate his 80th birthday. His son, Jerry, of Dallas - who bears a marked resemblance to his father, particularly the blue eyes - coordinated the happy event. Guests shared a barbecue dinner catered by Dyer's and then finished the evening with dancing to Frankie McWhorter and the Over-The-Hill Gang.

Coyle, dapper in a dark blue suit and light blue shirt, asked Erma Barber to join him in the first dance, after he blew out the candles on his birthday cake, decorated with yellow flowers. Each table was lined with yellow daisies and in the center of the room was a sculpture of live plants, yellow flowers and balloons.

Known throughout the community for his quiet, good works, Coyle was recently honored with the Seven Who Care award for community service. He has served as a Pampa city commissioner and continues to head his business of many years, Ford Body Shop. Congratulations to a wonderful man and best wishes for many more birthdays to come!

See you next week, Katie.

Peter Weller — 'RoboCop' star

'RoboCop' star gained experience in traveling

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A friend once told Peter Weller that he was "really overqualified for this kind of thing," referring to the actor's most noted role, as RoboCop.

"What do you mean?" asked Weller.

"Well, you come from the theater, Actors Studio, (drama teacher) Uta Hagen, Shakespeare and what-have-you. Why do you always have a pistol in your hand? Why don't you re-create some strong human dilemma?"

"I'll let the chips fall where they may," Weller replied. "If I read a good script and I like it, I don't look at the label on it."

Weller recounted the exchange during an interview to promote RoboCop 2.

He makes no excuses to his theater pals who deprecate his portrayal of a once-deceased cop who returns in an armored, automated body to avenge himself against the Detroit underworld.

"The first RoboCop was the best script I'd ever read," he declared. "Plus which I was a huge fan of (Dutch director) Paul Verhoeven. I had written his name down some years before on a list of people I wanted to work with. I really, really wanted to do it."

Verhoeven was not convinced. He insisted that Weller make a test on videotape. Weller insisted that he would not.

"I am absolutely lousy in auditions," he pleaded. No amount of Dutch persuasion could change his mind. Finally, the director cast him, no test.

Was he reluctant to attempt a sequel?

"Sure. Sure. You want to think that it would be good, but there's an apprehension about being stuck in a form with no content — stuck in the same can of beans with none of the charge that turned you on to the first one.

What convinced him was "a great script." In RoboCop 2, which was directed by Irvin Kershner, Weller is fighting not only the crime barons but his own obsolescence. Omni Consumer Products, which created the original machine, has devised a new model without a human inside, and it is programmed to wipe out its predecessor.

At least in the first film, Weller had early scenes as patrolman Alex J. Murphy. In the new one he is inside the RoboCop suit, acting only with his eyes and voice.

"I didn't give that much thought," he said. "I figured if I was doing the right thing, people would get it. If I didn't, they wouldn't."

'I'll let the chips fall where they may. If I read a good script and I like it, I don't look at the label on it.'

Nancy Allen, who portrays his ex-partner, Anne Lewis, agrees that Weller did the right thing.

"Peter made my job a lot easier, because he is very convincing. The costume is very convincing. There's just that tiny little strip that I'm constantly trying to see, searching for him in his eyes."

Weller had an ever-moving childhood. The son of an Army helicopter pilot, he was born in Wisconsin and was repeatedly uprooted as his father changed stations.

"I'm sure it's a good background for an actor, makes you pretty resilient," said the slim, tall, 43-year-old actor whose bland face is dominated by intense blue eyes.

"Albert Camus said the only real existentialist is either the traveler or the actor, because they are constantly superimposing their existence moment-by-moment on other existences. Maybe they're hand-in-hand: the traveler and the actor."

Test-tube band New Kids on the Block make it big

By MARY CAMPBELL
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — This really is a scary town. Just ask New Kids on the Block. They felt safe in their midtown hotel, confident their fans had camped out elsewhere, and even considered slipping out for pizza.

But it wasn't safe. Fourteen girls had staked out the right hotel. "Jennifer, I know they're in there right now," one girl said urgently to her comrades as they camped on the street.

Be brave Kids, don't panic. In a few years, those girls won't even remember your names.

Jordan Knight and Donnie Wahlberg, both 20, and Jonathan Knight, 21, agreed to an interview while Joe McIntyre, 17, slept and Danny Wood, 20, worked out at a gym. Jordan and Donnie arrived almost two hours late, ready to drop from the tight tour schedule.

"Today we hosted MTV and Saturday Night Videos and did a lot of IDs for different radio stations across America and for a lot of video outlets," said Jordan. "It was a busy day. Tomorrow morning we fly to London."

New Kids on the Block is the biggest-selling band in the land, with a new record and video and another leg of a seemingly endless tour. Columbia Records shipped a new single, "Step by Step," on May 9. It sold more than 1 million copies in less than a week.

The company's initial release of the Step by Step album on June 5 was more than 2 million. A 50-minute video also was released June 5, the biggest initial release in CBS video history.

The tots who love to scream along with New Kids' tunes will have plenty of time to learn the lyrics because the group will be touring stadiums through Sept. 15.

New Kids on the Block, the idea of Boston-based music entrepreneur Maurice Starr who also started New

Edition, is discounted by some as a "made" group, and derided by others as another example of white people taking black music and making the big money from it.

Despite all the acclaim and fame and money, Wahlberg is bugged by the group getting what he considers a bum rap. They work hard, always have; they've been on the road for most of the last four years. Before they were famous, they toured as an opening act for Tiffany. They don't play instruments but dance and do their own singing. The group's top management people are black. So are on-stage musicians, presenting visible racial harmony.

Wahlberg eats oysters he has ordered from room service and launches into a monologue: "As I find myself growing up, I find myself focusing more on trying to speak out and fight more for things I believe in. I like to show older people I'm not just a brainless little puppet of Maurice Starr."

"I think the media has turned our image into the image of milk and cookies. I'm not necessarily about milk and cookies. I'm about positivity."

"I haven't been contrived, brain washed or molded by anyone but my parents. I'm nobody's puppet," Wahlberg says.

"I think a lot of critics see us as Maurice Starr's brainchild and any success we have is ... not due to us. He writes songs. I wrote two songs on the album. I've written on every album. Jordan and myself produced two songs on Tommy Page's album.

I feel like I shouldn't have to sit here and bring these things up and say I've done this and that to get critics' respect. If I don't write and produce every song, why does that irk people so much? Most actors don't write and direct their movies."

Wahlberg wants it known that he's interested in important things. "The issue I find myself dealing with most is racism. America isn't a racist society the way it used to be, but racism is still flourishing in our society."

"The most important thing anyone can do today is try to be open-minded and try to educate themselves on things like racism."

'Forbidden Broadway' spoofs stars and their shows

By MICHAEL KUCHWARA
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Andrew Lloyd Webber in Mickey Mouse ears. Patti LuPone, late of Anything Goes, singing "I Get a Kick Out of Me." Kathleen Turner vamping in something Tennessee Williams never wrote called Dog on a Hot Metal Spike.

If they've made it big on Broadway in the last 10 years or so, chances are they've felt the sting of Gerard Alessandrini, who has carved a full-time career out of spoofing stars and their shows in his long-running musical revue Forbidden Broadway.

Even Sting has been stung by Alessandrini and company. The British pop idol flopped on Broadway last season in a revival of Kurt Weill's 3 Penny Opera. But that didn't stop Forbidden Broadway from doing its own version called The Three-Hundred-Million Penny Opera with a leading man who couldn't sing.

Nothing is sacred, although some targets are easier to shoot than others, concedes Alessandrini, a quiet man with a shy but slightly wicked smile.

"I look for shows that are hyped a lot," he was saying the other day. "I think of Forbidden Broadway as spoofing more of the hype of Broadway than the actual shows. What it really comes down to is puncturing the balloon."

"It's almost impossible to spoof a show that's a flop and is gone after a few weeks, unless that show had incredible hype like 3 Penny. Likewise, it's hard to spoof any show that is prestigious and a hit like The Heidi Chronicles or The Piano Lesson.

That's because they are not hyped as much as a musical like Phantom of the Opera or Les Miserables.

Forbidden Broadway in its various editions — there have been eight — has run longer in New York than most of the shows it has spoofed.

Not bad for a show first produced on a shoestring, born out of the desires of a frustrated performer to create a nightclub act for himself and some friends.

The performer was Alessandrini. The friends were Pete Blue, who still works on the show, and Nora Mae Lyng. The trio performed in friends' living rooms. Then they got a booking in 1982 at Palsoson's, a now-defunct West Side nightclub.

Two more people were added to the cast. There were no producers or backers or budget. The show was just done on a lot of odds and ends. For his spoof of Yul Brynner, Alessandrini wore an old costume from Kismet that his aunt had made.

Lyng found a dress that was sort of Ethel Merman-ish in her closet, and she wore it in the show.

In the beginning, Forbidden Broadway ran only weekends, but then theater people started to come. That brought the critics and good reviews. Its playing schedule was expanded to eight shows a week. Alessandrini and his cohorts stayed at Palsoson's nearly six years. Then they decided they needed a bigger space.

In the fall of 1989, Forbidden Broadway moved to Theater East on the East Side near Bloomingdale's, an intimate space that had the ambience of a nightclub and yet was bigger than Palsoson's.

The show now looks as if it has settled in for a long run there. But Alessandrini's work is never done.

"It's not like a show that you write once and then let go," he says. "There's constant rewriting. So far, there have been more than 200 numbers in the show."

And most of those victims skewered seem to like it.

Composers Stephen Sondheim, Maury Yeston and Martin Chamin have cheered on the show. "And I've never had a complaint from any of the stars — at least to my face," he laughs.

Over the years, Forbidden Broadway has changed as much as Broadway has changed, Alessandrini says. Every edition has had its own flavor and its own point of view.

"Originally, I think the show was much more quick blackouts and solos," he says. "Now we do more elaborate spoofs of the shows themselves that involve a number of scenes and a number of songs. For example, people portraying many different characters like in that parody of Grand Hotel or Les Miserables."

"I think that's because now musicals are mostly ensemble shows, but back in 1981 and 1982 when we were first doing this, there were a lot of star vehicles like Patti LuPone in Evita."

The quality of the theater season does influence the show. Two years ago were lean times on Broadway with Jerome Robbins' Broadway as the only musical of note.

"But this past year, it's been a different story," Alessandrini says. "There were almost too many targets. We've had to be selective about the ones we take."

The grape debate: Fort Davis vineyard blamed for neighbors' illnesses

By SUZANNE GAMBOA
Associated Press Writer

FORT DAVIS (AP) — Elisa Aguilar's relatives like to brag of the strength and vitality she showed raising nine children. But today her strength is gone.

Elisa Aguilar takes 17 pills and four injections a day. She has trouble walking and sleeps with an oxygen machine hooked to her nose.

Her family blames her lost health on the pesticides used by a neighbor, Blue Mountain Vineyard. And the Aguilars are not alone in their fears.

Twenty-one people in this Davis Mountain town of about 900 are suing the vineyard's former owners and its managers over weedkillers that were sprayed on grapes.

"When they started spraying, she started to get sick," said Ms. Aguilar's son, Adan.

State officials say it's clear people are having health problems in Fort Davis, but say that doesn't necessarily mean Blue Mountain did anything wrong.

A former vineyard owner said the business is being made a scapegoat for pollution encroaching on the remote town, known for air so clean that it's home to the University of Texas McDonald Observatory.

Many retirees are drawn to the solitude and open spaces of Fort Davis, about 170 miles southeast of El Paso. Some doctors have advised their patients to move here for the fresh air.

Vineyard critics say their suffering began in 1987, the year that four rows of the 40-acre vineyard were sprayed with Gramoxone, a herbicide, similar to the highly toxic and restricted Paraquat.

The Texas Department of Agriculture investigated the vineyard's spraying in 1988 and found no violations of state pesticide laws.

But in a May 15 letter, the Agriculture Department said it is convinced Fort Davis residents have legitimate health problems.

"It is a difficult issue for us," said Max Woodfin, Agriculture Department executive assistant. "We have found these people are so sensitive to pesticide that a pesticide application may have been done to the letter of the law, yet because of the volatility of the pesticide and the sensitivity of their bodies they are affected."

"This one is a puzzling one to Ag Department allocates $11 million more for WIC

WASHINGTON (AP) — An additional $11 million has been reallocated to 46 states for the Agriculture Department's special supplemental food program for women, infants and children.

About half the states were running out of money for the program, known as WIC. Higher food costs, especially for dairy and citrus products, were said to be the main factors.

Officials said the department regularly reallocates unspent and carryover WIC funds to states in need or in danger of running out before the end of the fiscal year.

Nationally, the reallocated money will allow states to provide an additional 300,000 food packages to participants over the final three months of this fiscal year, Nelsen said.

The funds will be available to states July 1 and will supplement more than $2 billion allocated for WIC in the current fiscal year that began last Oct. 1. More than 4.5 million women, infants and children participate.

us," Woodfin said.

A survey mailed two weeks ago asks residents if they suffer any of 44 problems including depression, mental confusion, tooth and nerve loss, Bell's Palsy, arthritis, severe headaches or nose bleeds.

"The pesticide laws and regulations do not protect people. They gave them a clean bill of health in terms of laws and regulations, but that doesn't mean it's not hurting anybody," said Susan Pitman, director of The Chemical Connection. The Wimberly-based advocacy group for chemically sensitive people is conducting the survey.

The loudest complaints about the vineyard, one of five in the town, come from residents who consider themselves chemically sensitive, such as Kari Pratt. They say their bodies can detect agricultural chemicals that the Agriculture Department's equipment cannot.

Ms. Pratt said a doctor told her to move to Fort Davis after she was exposed to a herbicide sprayed in a neighbor's yard. She said she had nearly recovered when the vineyard was sprayed with Gramoxone.

"I have lung problems now that I've never had in my life, and I have trouble breathing," said Pratt, 41.

Former resident Colleen Roberts said her allergy-prone husband seemed to recover his health when they moved to Mission after 16 years in Fort Davis.

Byford Roberts, who was a plaintiff in the suit until he moved, had been sick on days the vineyard was sprayed, Mrs. Roberts said.

"I don't know if that vineyard up there was the problem, but that environment up there is getting really toxic," Mrs. Roberts said. "Since he's been here in Mission, he's a brand new person... Before he was a huffin' and a puffin' and couldn't breathe."

Former vineyard owner Lee Hereford said he believes people are sick in Fort Davis. But he doesn't think the vineyard is to blame.

"I think we got picked because we're the only commercial vineyard in the mountains," Hereford said. "I'm really sorry these people are sick, but I know it's not us doing it to them. Some of the chemicals we're using, I've used in our garden."

Hereford bought the vineyard in 1983. He said he was forced to sell it this year because the lawsuit drove away investors and used up his capital.

The other plaintiffs are Hereford's former general partner in the vineyard, Stephen William Lipscomb; vineyard consultant Tom Childs and managers Juanita and Cesar Castaneda. The vineyard, whose attorney is in Conroe, recently won approval to move the suit there.

Hereford points out that Fort

Davis is only about 70 miles from the Mexican border. Westerly winds bring some of the pollution that taints the border from unregulated burning on the Mexican side, he said.

"I think we have a group of people here who were sold a bill of goods," Hereford said. "They were told to go to Fort Davis to get well. That was going to be their nirvana. But they didn't get better and they had to get somebody. And we drew the black bean."

Hereford said he wonders if the sicknesses are exaggerations or stem from something else. Some days when the critics claimed to be sick, nothing was being sprayed at the vineyard, he said.

"Have they surveyed their neighbors? What are their neighbors spraying? Have they done any research about what sort of crop dusting is being done in the area? What about the highway department and the ranchers in the area?" Hereford asked.

The current vineyard owner, Nell Weisbach, said herbicides no longer are used there.

"We use a little fungicide; that's all we do. It's done all over the country. We do nothing that's harmful," Ms. Weisbach said. She is not named in the suit.

But the vineyard critics say fungicides, which kill fungus and parasitic plants, are just as toxic. They would like to see local grapes grown organically as they are at some California and New York vineyards.

"We're not just doing this for ourselves; we're doing it for the community," said Anita Bishop, who also believes she was poisoned by the pesticides. "People have been sent here for years and years and years because its so pristine and beautiful and clean. But it ain't that way anymore."

Astro-Graph

by bernice bede osol

CANCER (June 21-July 22) If you have to make decisions today that affect others as well as yourself, let your compassionate instincts guide you. Sometimes softness represents true strength. Major changes are ahead for Cancer in the coming year. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions today. Mail $1.25 to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) The requirements of those you love are likely to take precedence over your own interests today. In situations where you feel truly needed, no sacrifice will be too great.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Your ability to view things from an unprejudiced perspective could find useful expressions today. You might end up being a middle person in several arrangements.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) You're entitled to do something nice for yourself occasionally so why not make this one of those days. If conditions warrant it, splurge on yourself a bit.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) You won't have to make any special efforts today to attract attention to yourself. Whether you walk into a room full of people or just walk down a quiet street, you'll be noticed.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Instinctively today you might feel it is better to give than to receive. Interestingly, however, your unselfishness may enable you to take in more than you give out.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Realistic hopefulness is the greatest gift you have to give to others today. You can help friends envision things as they could be and not just as they are.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Instead of seeking counsel from associates today regarding career matters, tune into your own intuition. Your hunches could be extremely revealing and helpful.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) The valuable lessons you learn today may not come from books but from personal experiences. Put this knowledge on file, so that you can access it for a constructive use later.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) In joint endeavors today be more supportive than assertive. If you encourage your counterpart to use his or her best abilities, mutual benefits will result.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Your greatest asset today is your spirit of cooperation. A willingness to work with others will stimulate a similar response from persons with whom you'll be involved. Togetherness succeeds.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Involvements that challenge your imagination and creativity could be the ones you'll find most pleasing and rewarding today, especially if you're working with a nimble-witted cohort.

Agriculture

In agriculture

Joe VanZandt

Wheat harvest should be completed when you read this. This was one of the earliest wheat harvests. I would guess, after showers slowed harvest a few mornings but that was about the only slowdowns except for the usual equipment breakdowns.

Yields were generally real good but the price is sure depressed at this time.

EASTERN GAMAGRASS FIELD DAY

There always seems to be a "new" grass for cattlemen to get excited about when it comes to "improved pasture grasses."

Eastern Gamagrass has been around this area for a long time but only in small isolated and protected areas. It is generally found along wet, bottom sites.

It is one of our "ice cream" grasses as cattle readily relish it when given the chance. That is the main reason we don't see much of it on rangeland - it gets overgrazed.

A field day will be held near Iuka, Kan., on July 17 at 2 p.m. Two circles of the grass being grazed by yearlings will be observed.

This is another grass developed at the USDA Woodard Experiment Station. Dr. Chet DeWald will explain the history and development of 'Iuka' Eastern Gamagrass.

The field day will be held 2 miles west of Iuka, or from Pratt, Kan., 2.5 miles north on US Hwy. 281, 2 miles west and 3 miles north.

If you want a copy of the field day program, come by the Gray County Extension Office. I may try to attend this program myself - if anyone is interested, let me know.

PANHANDLE PEST REPORT

Dr. Carl Patrick, Extension entomologist, reports on the following crop insect conditions.

CORN

Southwestern corn borer pheromone traps operating in corn growing areas on South Plains indicate that peak emergence of first generation moths has occurred in that area. Overall populations appear to be light. Field checks in Deaf Smith, Moore and Sherman counties tend to bear this out.

Eggs were very difficult to find in fields checked in these counties. Corn next to last year's unplowed corn stubble may have the only detectable levels of southwestern corn borer infestations.

European corn borer moth activity continues. Eggs can be easily found in northern corn growing areas of the Texas Panhandle. Eggs are flat like fish scale in masses of 15 to 30 eggs, and usually on the underside of the leaves. Eggs will be creamy white when first laid, but will later develop a black dot as they near hatching.

European corn borer larvae will have black heads, pinkish-gray bodies and light spots, while southwestern corn borer larvae have brown heads, white bodies and black spots.

SORGHUM

Very little insect activity reported in grain sorghum. An occasional greenbug colony can be found, but nothing to get concerned about this time.

GRASSHOPPERS

Check crop margins for grasshoppers. We may see a big problem with this pest invading crop margins this year.

The hot, dry conditions that have existed the past month or so have dried up the grass and weed hosts of these grasshoppers and now they are moving into crops in large numbers.

BEWARE OF 'FRIENDLY' WILD ANIMALS

It's summer time, and more folks are heading for the parks, lakes and beaches.

But as people heed the call of the wild, they should also watch out for being bitten by animals, wild or otherwise, said Dr. Bruce Lawhorn, veterinarian with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

"Animal bites may cause rabies," he warned, explaining that human beings and all warm-blooded animals are susceptible to rabies, a virus disease of the central nervous system that without treatment is invariably fatal.

"But rabies can be controlled," he said, "if people understand the problem and know what to watch out for."

Lawhorn said to watch out for these situations:

- Bold, "friendly or apparently tame" wild animals.
- Night animals such as skunks or foxes that are seen during the day.
- Pets that have difficulty walking, eating or drinking.
- Signs of excitement or viciousness in normally quiet animals.

He said a veterinarian should be consulted immediately if any of these signs are noted.

If a person is bitten by an animal, treat the bite as if the animal were rabid and follow these steps:

- Identify the animal - by kind, size, color and location. Caution children to seek the help of a policeman or other adult.
- Have the animal caught and immediately report the incident to animal control officials or police. Keep the animal in sight until it is apprehended. Trying to catch the animal without professional help means added risk.
- Cleanse the wound immediately and thoroughly by washing with soap and water. Rinse well and disinfect with alcohol, iodine or other disinfectants. This lessens the chance of contracting the rabies virus.
- See a doctor immediately after washing the wound. The physician will decide on the need for treatment to prevent rabies.
- If possible, have the biting dog or cat tested for rabies or placed under observation. If it is alive and normal after 10 days of observation, the animal was not infective at the time of the bite.

A veterinarian should be consulted concerning all aspects of this confinement period. The 10-day observation period is not valid for animals other than dogs and cats. Wild animals such as skunks, bats, foxes and raccoons should be immediately submitted by a veterinarian for laboratory rabies examination.

Lawhorn said major steps toward community control of rabies can be achieved by:

- Immunizing all dogs and cats three months of age annually.
- Registering and licensing all owned dogs and cats.
- Impounding all stray dogs and cats.
- If there is no animal control officer, appointing one and providing pound or shelter facilities.
- Testing all biting dogs and cats or quarantining them for observation for a period of 10 days.

Man concentrates milk, removes fat

URBANA, Ill. (AP) - Milk is an excellent source of calcium, which people want. It's also an excellent source of fat, which many people don't want.

There's skim milk, but many think it's too watery or turns gray in coffee.

Now, a researcher says he may have found a way for consumers to have just what they want - high-calcium, low-fat milk with the body of whole milk.

"This isn't an alien product that is as good as milk - it really is milk," said Munir Cheryan, a University of Illinois food scientist.

Jerry Dryer, an independent dairy consultant in Arlington Heights, Ill., said:

"People want the good stuff but not the bad stuff - they want the milk and its calcium, but not its fat. But when you take out the fat solids, the (skim) milk looks blue. So, I think he's got a good concept."

It's milk with a price, however. If it gets to stores, Cheryan's milk, named Pro-Cal, could cost twice as much as the standard. And to produce it, dairies would have to buy equipment that could cost $10,000 to $1 million, depending on the size of the dairy.

That's the biggest problem Pro-Cal would face - most consumers buy based on price, said Ed Coughlin of the National Milk Producers Federation.

Cheryan said his milk - created by filtering it through sophisticated membranes - has 75 percent more protein and 66 percent more calcium than whole milk. But it has 75 percent to 90 percent less fat and cholesterol, he said.

"Instead of fat giving body, it's the protein," Cheryan said. "The consumer will be getting a nutrient-dense product."

Lester Evans, a dairy

Study shows people mistaken about bacon's nutrition

WASHINGTON (AP) - A study financed by the meat industry says consumers may have a false perception about the nutritional value of bacon.

"The findings suggest most consumers would be surprised at the difference between their perceptions and reality," said Pat Pines, vice president of the American Meat Institute. "For the bacon industry, it shows a need to do a better job of educating consumers."

For example, a three-slice cooked serving of bacon "contains no more fat or cholesterol than an ounce of cheese," the trade group said. "And while most people consider three slices of bacon a realistic serving size, they view an ounce of cheese as significantly less than a realistic serving size."

The study was conducted for the Institute by Directions Research Inc. of Cincinnati, Ohio.

Tangled roots: Genealogy search leads to colonial America families

EDITOR'S NOTE - With the approach of the Fourth of July holiday, a reporter set out to explore a family legend, kinship with a signer of the Declaration of Independence. He found his ancestral roots were tangled. But in the untangling he learned a lot about two different families in colonial America at the time of the Revolutionary War.

By DAVID L. LANGFORD
AP Newsfeatures Writer

YORKTOWN, Va. - The search for Peggy Nelson led to this charming colonial town on the bluffs of the York River, to the redoubts and trenches where the Continental Army won America's independence.

It was a genealogical wrong turn, the kind I had been warned about, a textbook example of the pitfalls encountered in pursuing one's pedigree. You can't always accept what your elders tell you as fact.

Peggy Nelson, you see, was my great-great-grandmother, the wife of one Matthew Langford, an adventuresome South Carolinian who was forever pushing on to new frontiers.

In the early years of the 19th century, according to family tradition, Matt and Peggy followed old Indian trails across the South, traveling by ox cart and on foot, young kids in tow. Their moves every few years took them from the backwoods of western South Carolina to southern Illinois to Tennessee to Alabama to Mississippi and finally to Arkansas.

So what was I doing in this beautifully restored Virginia village, a shrine to colonial America, the site of the decisive battle of the Revolutionary War?

Family tradition, passed on in letters to my father, held that Peggy Nelson was a niece of Gen. Thomas Nelson Jr. of Yorktown, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, the governor of Virginia during the Revolution and commander of the Virginia militia during the Siege of Yorktown in 1781.

Born into a wealthy family of planters and merchants, Thomas Nelson Jr. was educated in England. He was named for his grandfather, "Scotch Tom" Nelson, an immigrant from England who became one of Yorktown's most prominent citizens. His father, William Nelson, served for years as president of the King's Council.

A rotund man who suffered asthma, Thomas Nelson was a delegate to the Continental Congress in 1775 and was among the first of the patriots to sound the call for independence.

During the Revolutionary War he helped bankroll the Virginia militia by borrowing heavily on his own considerable assets. As a consequence, Thomas Nelson Jr. died a pauper in Hanover County, Va., in 1789. He was buried without a tombstone at the foot of his father's grave at Grace Episcopal Church in Yorktown. Not until this century was a stone marker provided.

Quite a guy, Thomas Nelson was. And quite a handsome ornament in one's family tree, if it could be proven.

A few months ago I started to get serious about tracing family roots. I started spending a lot of time in libraries, thumbing through indexes of censuses, deeds, wills, military records, family histories. I joined the National Genealogical Society.

"It can become addictive," a colleague had warned.

I bought a home computer and computer software from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, which has perhaps the world's largest store of genealogical information. While family history is an important part of the Mormon religion, they welcome an exchange of information from non-members as well.

In Instructions for Beginners in Genealogy, the NGS had warned, "Invariably you will come across the belief that the founders of a particular family were three brothers who came here at an early date."

Strike those "three brothers from England" in my father's notes.

The NGS booklet also warned against "association with a famous person or event."

"Stories like this may have some foundation," the booklet said, "but often they are impossible to verify."

I pushed on looking for the Yorktown link anyway.

My father's notes identified Peggy Nelson's parents as Dr. Robert Nelson and his wife, Rebecca, presumably from Virginia.

In the library of the New York Genealogical Society in Manhattan, I found a yellowed and fragile copy of the Genealogy of the Page Family in Virginia, published in 1893. (The Pages and the Nelsons committed considerable matrimony together in those days.)

According to the Page document, Thomas Nelson did indeed have a brother named Robert. But neither of Robert Nelson's two wives was named Rebecca, none of his children was named Peggy, and there was no "Dr." before his name.

So who was Peggy's daddy?

I came on to Yorktown, hoping perhaps to find some old records at Grace Episcopal Church to prove the Page genealogy inaccurate or incomplete. Besides, the NGS instructions had warned against believing everything you read.

I toured the beautiful old homes of Yorktown, including that of Thomas C. Nelson Jr., which is supposed to have a couple of cannon balls lodged in its walls, but I couldn't find any.

It's part of the family tradition, upheld by some historians, that Nelson ordered artillery fire on his own estate because the British commander, Lord Charles Cornwallis, was holed up there. Cornwallis, it is said, then took refuge in a cave down on the river bank below the town. The cave is still there, the entrance guarded by iron bars.

I toured the battlefield where Gen. George Washington and the Continental Army, with no little help from the Marquis de Lafayette and the French fleet, on Oct. 19, 1781, forced the trapped British and Hessian armies to surrender, 8,300 troops in all. It was the last major battle of the Revolutionary War.

I saw the Surrender Field and the restored Moore House where the terms of the surrender were negotiated.

But I found no records linking my family with all of this rich history.

Since there are no libraries in Yorktown, my next stop was the library of the National Genealogical Society in Arlington, Va.

When I suggested that my lost ancestor must have been of age to serve in the Revolutionary War, the head librarian, Susan Canby, suggested looking through some rosters.

Sure enough, in John H. Gwathney's Historical Register of Virginians in the Revolution, 1775-1783, there were TWO Robert Nelsons.

The first was described as an adjutant in Gen. Nelson's Corps, Light Dragoons. The other was identified as a corporal in the 9th Virginia Regiment, Continental Line.

Then, from back in the stacks, Ms. Canby called out, "Did he have a wife named Rebecca?"

Bingo!

"The D.A.R.'s got him," she said, looking up from the D.A.R. Patriot Index. That meant that one or more women had shown ancestral links with this same Robert Nelson to qualify for membership in the Daughters of the American Revolution.

At the D.A.R.'s imposing library near the White House in Washington I was allowed (for a $5 fee) to look at microfilm of three of those applications.

Another bingo!

Not only did this Robert have a wife named Rebecca, but he had a "Dr." before his name. He served in the 9th Virginia Regiment, commanded by Col. George Matthews, from January 1777 to February 1778, attaining the rank of corporal. (But why just corporal, if he was a doctor?)

And there was a third clue. While this Robert Nelson lived in Stafford County, Va., during the war, he later moved to Greenville County, S.C.

Enter Matthew Langford. Matthew Langford, born in 1775, was the eldest son of Eli Langford Sr. and his wife, Sarah. Eli Langford, shown in the 1790 federal census as having three sons, three daughters and one slave, obtained four land grants in western South Carolina between 1786 and 1802, mainly in the 96 and Pendleton Districts. He also bought several hundred acres on the Broad River in nearby Franklin County, Ga.

By 1802, Matthew Langford, now married to Peggy Nelson, was living in Greenville County, S.C. One transaction recorded that year shows him buying 50 acres on South Tyger Creek in Marietta, S.C., from one Robert Nelson Sr.

Five years later, shortly after the birth of their fifth child, Matthew and Peggy put their show on the road, first to southern Illinois where Matthew's brother, Eli Jr., had a boat landing and ferry on the Mississippi River.

Then for several years they moved through Tennessee, to Overton County and Lincoln County. In 1822 they showed up in Marion County, Ala., where they apparently lived until moving to Choctaw County, Miss., in 1836. They appear in the 1850 census as residents of Holmes County, Miss.

Family tradition holds that they wound up in White County, Ark., where they died.

As church-going Methodists they gave their seven children biblical names - Eli, Rebecca, Elijah, Anne, Elisha and John. They named my great-great-grandfather Lorenzo Dow for the famous circuit-riding preacher, the one who invented camp meetings.

Lorenzo Dow Langford would become a circuit rider himself, appointed a preacher-at-large by the Methodist Conference in Natchez, Miss., in 1837. He was a preacher for 60 years, working territory along the Natchez Trace and eventually holding pastorates in French Camp, Louisville, Coffeeville and Fletcher's Chapel, Miss., and Greensboro, Ala.

Three of Lorenzo Dow Langford's sons - Peggy Nelson's grandsons - would fight on the Confederate side in the Civil War.

For them, there would be no glorious victories. For them, the Fourth of July would not be celebrated. It would be remembered as the day Vicksburg fell to the Yankees.

Humor and pride help carry oil field worker to recovery from severe burns

BEAUMONT (AP) - Don't pity William Thomas Snider, W.T., as he's known, doesn't want it.

Surviving a flash fire explosion that seared flesh off more than half his body isn't a big deal to this man. Six skin graft operations and scars that make him appear years older than his 46 years isn't, either.

What the former oil field worker really went through is probably masked by a sense of humor and fierce pride.

It's been two years since burning oil erupted like a volcano out of a tanker he was treating at a Winnie lease site. Fumes ignited and created a human torch.

"I was caught in a ball of fire that didn't last but a split-second. If I'd have had the oil on me when it was coming out of the tank, I wouldn't be here today," he said.

Peeling off his dead skin to see how badly he was burned, W.T. made his way over to a construction crew and his helper, who fled the scene when he felt oil burn the back of his neck. Snider remembers it vividly but the other men would later describe him as delirious.

"I lay down on my all fours in a ditch after the fire was burning in the tank battery itself and got up and walked out to the pasture," he said.

"They had no idea where I was, or how bad I was burned. I got to the ditch and I couldn't get across the ditch because it was too deep and I slowed down. So they came across the ditch to the other side and grabbed me by my belt loops that was the only place they had to hold me and then helped me across the ditch. And I squatted down there, waiting for the ambulance."

Snider suffered third-degree burns over 50 percent of his body, which destroyed sweat glands on his torso, a diagnosis reached by doctors at the University of Texas Medical Branch Burn Center in Galveston. Snider eventually would undergo six skin graft operations there, including an unsuccessful attempt to graft skin from a cadaver.

"They had to cut down from my waist up, they had to cut all the way down to my fat and regraft. What little bit of fat I had, regraft, from my stomach and back, my neck and my arms," he said.

His physician later would describe in a deposition how Snider was dipped in a tub of Clorox bleach every day to combat infection and how his extreme sensitivity to temperature will prevent him from doing virtually any work.

Snider sued the owner of the lease, Solatex Resources Ltd., and the company settled the case two months ago. Snider received $1,775,000 in cash and is guaranteed annuity payments for the next 20 years totaling $5.1 million.

Recovery started after a month and a half of morphine-induced oblivion in a hospital bed, with Snider's wife, Jeannie, by his side.

"You're really out of your mind. I stayed out of my mind for a long time," Snider said of that time. "I could look through her and see how bad it was. Her trying to treat me, and trying to be careful with me, and not touch me in certain places, I realized that I was in bad shape."

Jeannie helped rebandage Snider every day when he returned home to two teen-age sons who were unsure how to react.

"This is the worst ordeal I've ever even seen, much less been around," said Jeannie Snider, 39.

"It's hard to adjust to for a while. They didn't know how to approach him about the way he looked. They just talked to him about the weather for a while. They got used to it, started talking and asking him questions, how he felt and different things. It don't even bother him. It's like it never happened."

That sums up Snider's attitude. His independence remains intact. He spurns the idea of psychological counseling. He answers the curious with honesty.

"I loved life before I got burned. I'm the same person I was before, except I'm three years older," he said.

Snider's life is on an even keel. He bought a new home for his family in Dayton, and piddles around the house a lot. He seems mystified by anyone who wonders how he's made it, what with a family that cares about him.

"Willpower. You've also got to have something else. Something to live for," he said.
