Explosion at ARCO chemical plant kills 15

By RUTH RENDON
Associated Press Writer

CHANNELVIEW (AP) — An explosion and fire ripped through a section of a chemical plant "like a rocket just took off," killing at least 15 workers, authorities and witnesses said. One person was missing.

The explosion occurred around 11:30 p.m. Thursday at the Atlantic Richfield Co. chemical plant in this Houston suburb. The 564-acre complex employs about 350 people.

"It's a terrible tragedy," plant manager Earl McCaleb said this morning, his voice breaking with emotion.

None of the victims was immediately identified. Harris County Sheriff's Department spokeswoman Linda Prouse said 15 fatalities were confirmed by late this morning. One worker remained unaccounted for, she said.

The blast occurred in a utility area, a remote section that provides cooling, water and steam for plant operations. The exploded tank contained wastewater and some hydrocarbons, McCaleb said.

Usually, only five ARCO employees are assigned there, McCaleb said. Outside contract employees also were there Thursday night, but McCaleb was not sure of their numbers.

"I don't know why there were so many other people there," McCaleb said. "It's an overwhelming sadness, the loss of friends and co-workers."

Authorities had not determined a cause for the explosion. Assistant Secretary of Labor Gerard F. Scanell was en route to Houston this morning, the U.S. Department of Labor said.

Kathryn Cox, a member of a plant cleaning crew, said she and several fellow workers had just finished working when they heard the blast.

"We didn't look back," she said. "We just started running and we just kept running."

"We just heard a big explosion and everybody said 'Run!' and we all took off," Marlene Viscus said.

"We didn't have time to talk to anybody," Dean

Delgado, a worker who was inside the plant, said. "They told us just to run. We started running toward the gate."

"I seen a big flash cross in front of my eyes. I looked over to my left and I saw a big ball of fire. ... It looked to me like a tank run off, you know, like a rocket just took off," Mike Zugel, a truck driver who witnessed the explosion, told Cable News Network.

Initially, authorities had described the blast and fire as relatively minor and said no injuries were reported. Shortly after midnight, Channelview fire dispatcher Karen Ragsdale had said that the plant's own firefighters were putting out the fire and added: "It's not really a big fire."

Ms. Ragsdale said the fire was handled by the plant's fire department.

There were no evacuations from the area around the plant, about 15 miles east of Houston. The plant was shut down today as a precaution.

Investigators from the Harris County Medical Examiner's office and the Channelview fire department were at the scene.

The blast is the second major loss of life at a Houston petrochemical plant in the past nine months.

On Oct. 23, a Phillips Petroleum Co. plastics plant in nearby Pasadena was hit by series of explosions that killed 23 workers and injured 130.

On June 8, two people were injured in a spectacular explosion and fire at a chemical packaging plant in Pearland, south of Houston.

ARCO has been running the plant since 1980, three years after it went into operation.

The plant produces 560 million pounds of propylene oxide, used to make flexible foam for seat cushions and bedding. The substance also is used for cleaning compounds, according to a company brochure.

The plant also annually produces 1.3 billion pounds of styrene monomer, used for insulation, foam drinking cups, packaging materials and automotive parts.

Also produced at the plant is 1.7 billion pounds of methyl tertiary butyl ether, a high octane blending component used as a replacement for lead in gasoline.

Congress nears completion of double hulls tanker bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — House and Senate negotiators are a few pen strokes from requiring double hulls on oil tankers, but industry officials say preventing oil spills carries a high price tag — and some risk.

With shipyards already receiving orders to build an extra layer of steel around the outside of oil tankers, Congress moves into the final stages of negotiations next week over provisions of a major oil spill bill that has been 15 years in the making.

Already set are key provisions to increase penalties for shippers found liable for spills and to establish Coast Guard oil spill response centers along U.S. coasts. The bill also establishes a $1 billion cleanup fund through a five-cent tax on each barrel of oil produced in or imported to the United States.

Environmentalists hail the double-hull requirement as a safety net capable of preventing some of the major oil spills that have soiled coasts from Alaska to Rhode Island. "Double hulls work," said Clifton Curtis, an ocean specialist with the environmental group Friends of the Earth. "The evidence shows that they do add an important additional protection against spills occurring and they reduce the amount of oil that is released."

Oil interests, while resigned to a law requiring double hulls, warn that it comes with a price tag: $30 million per ship — a cost increase that will likely trickle down to consumers' wallets.

Concessions won from Congress to allow time to build double-hulled ships are an attempt to keep those costs under control.

Details remain to be worked out, but sources said the final bill will require that new tankers and ocean-going barges weighing over 5,000 gross tons have double hulls, which consist of a second layer of steel and an air space between the sea and the cargo.

Older vessels would have to be either phased out of operation or refitted with second hulls.

Refitting the 153 U.S.-flagged tankers with double hulls would cost nearly $4.6 billion, or $30 million each, Taylor said. The same amount would be added on to the cost of building new tankers, meaning a 15 percent cost increase.

The roughly 900 foreign-flagged tankers that call in U.S. ports would cost $20 million apiece to refit at lower-cost foreign shipyards, Taylor said.

In addition to the added cost, shipping interests contend it is uncertain whether double hulls work.

The National Academy of Sciences is working on a study expected to detail some of the weaknesses of double hulls. The Senate wants to give the secretary of transportation authority to review that study along with other data to see if alternatives to double hulls would work as well or better.

Ernie Corrado, president of the American Institute of Merchant Marine Shipping, said preliminary results of the study show that gases trapped between the hull walls could cause an explosion and a breach in the outer wall could allow water in the cavity between the hulls, capsizing the vessel.

City battles fire at landfill

A Thursday night fire at the city of Pampa landfill was expected to be covered by noon today, said Nathan Hopson, director of public works.

The fire was reported to Pampa Fire Department at 8:24 p.m. Thursday.

Hopson said the fire was in the main pit that the city is using now for garbage.

"It was so hot we had to let it burn out. We couldn't get any equipment in that pit," Hopson said. "There wasn't anything we could do."

The cause of the fire was unknown, Hopson said, but could have been started by the dumping of contents of a hot barrel or any number of things, he said.

"It was a pretty good little camp fire," he said of the blaze that he estimated covered ground about as wide as half of a football field. He said all of the exposed debris was on fire.

"It's just one of those things that happens occasionally," he said.

The city will notify the Texas Air Control Board and Texas Department of Health.

Hopson said this fire is the first the city has had in a big pit in some time.

City personnel with dirt moving equipment stood around by around the clock Thursday night and early this morning at the landfill to make sure the fire did not spread to surrounding grass areas.

Travel plans announced for prison bid trip

By DEE DEE LARAMORE

Pampans are urged to join the delegation flying to Austin Monday for the presentation of the prison proposal to the Texas Department of Criminal Justice Board.

"The more that can go to Austin, the better," said Bill Waters, president of the Pampa Industrial Foundation. "We need a sizeable delegation in Austin."

Those who go to Austin are encouraged to wear similar clothing such as the "Two Ps in a Pod" T-shirts and caps as a visual way of indicating the consensus of support for the prison in this area, Waters explained.

Waters said he has learned that Pampa will be sixth in order of presentation before the Texas Board of Criminal Justice, which "will put us going before the board at about 11 a.m." He said the placement should be advantageous for the Pampa proposal.

Organizers of the prison project met this morning to finalize strategy for the proposal Tuesday, he said. The steering committee includes representatives of the Pampa Area Chamber of Commerce, the Industrial Foundation, and the city and county.

A prison rally is scheduled at 5:30 p.m. today at the M. K. Brown Room of the Pampa Community Building, 200 N. Ballard.

"The public is invited and urged to come," Waters said. "We'll have an update of where we are in the prison proposal and also information on the trip to Austin and finalizing arrangements for the proposal."

NATO leaders agree to change nuclear strategy

By MAUREEN JOHNSON

LONDON (AP) — Western leaders agreed today to transform NATO's nuclear strategy, and President Bush said the alliance is offering a "solemn commitment to non-aggression" to the Soviet Union and the new democracies of Eastern Europe.

"NATO is changing," Bush said, and the Soviet Union should now realize that the military alliance "no longer is a threat."

At a news conference wrapping up a two-day NATO summit, Bush called for a series of negotiated agreements to reduce conventional forces in Europe, including for a unified Germany.

The president renewed his support for Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's program of reform, but said he continues to have "big problems" with direct financial aid so long as Moscow is spending billions of dollars for Cuba and for military modernization.

NATO leaders made a dramatic overture to the Soviet Union, expressed by Bush this way, "We say to President Gorbachev, come to NATO." He said he planned to speak by phone with Gorbachev.

The NATO meeting was called to consider the shifting face of European security in light of the move of Warsaw Pact nations away from Communism. One nation, Hungary, has asked about possible admission to the NATO alliance.

NATO Secretary-General Manfred Woerner told reporters, "We matched the historic challenge," and said:

"At long last we have the Then we'll have some fun after that."

Pampa's Harvesters Four will provide musical entertainment for the rally, followed by Waters' presentation of the status of the prison bid. Pampa Mayor Richard Pect and Gray County Judge Carl Kennedy are also expected to speak at the event.

A highlight of the rally will be the "Rap Session" featuring a mystery rapper and a group of dancers who performed at the city's Juneteenth Celebration, Waters said. "We'll be poking a little fun at each other in some of the lines of the rap," he added.

Reservations for a travel package to Austin are being accepted by Debbie Musgrave at the Chamber of Commerce office until 5 p.m. today. The chamber is offering the trip to Austin for $220 per person based on double occupancy and $242 per person based on single occupancy, provided by Travel Express.

The package includes airfare, accommodations and transportation from the airport to hotel and back. Room reservations are at Austin's Radisson Hotel. Travel Express will also host a hospitality hour beginning at 6:30 p.m. Monday for the Pampa delegation.

Flights are available through American Airlines and Delta Airlines. American has two flights departing Amarillo at 10:50 a.m. Monday and 12:46 p.m. Monday. Return flight will leave Austin at 8:10 p.m. Tuesday. Delta has two flights leaving Amarillo, one at 8 a.m. and the other at 10 a.m. The return flight will depart from Austin at 8:45 p.m. Tuesday.

El Paso police making auto theft roadblocks

EL PASO (AP) — El Paso police set up roadblocks on international bridges and on entrances to Interstate 10 to find stolen cars, but none was recovered.

Police say they will continue the unannounced checks through the rest of the week.

"We want to jump around so the auto thieves don't know where we will be," said Lt. Dennis Shelley, commander of the police Auto Theft Division.

"We want to surprise them a little bit."

Thursday, about 20 officers set up the roadblocks for about an hour.

Police stopped only cars that are frequent targets of car thieves.

Officers checked drivers licenses, vehicle registration, vehicle identification numbers, license plates and proof of insurance.

That information was radioed back to police headquarters, where it was entered into the computer to see if the car was stolen.

Lefors Fun Festival kicks off Saturday

North Korea to open border

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — North Korea announced Friday that it will open a portion of its border with South Korea next month to encourage unification, a South Korean news agency said.

Naewoe Press, a semi-official news agency specializing in communist affairs, said North Korea's Committee for the Peaceful Reunification of the Fatherland made the announcement in a broadcast monitored in Seoul on Friday.

The North Korean announcement said the communist sector of the truce village of Panmunjom inside the Demilitarized Zone (DMZ) will be opened Aug. 15 to allow free travel between the two Koreas.

In Seoul, South Korean officials denounced the communist move as propaganda. Officials claimed it was aimed at encouraging South Korean radical groups to hold a unification rally at the border village on the country's national liberation day, which is Aug. 15.

"The North Korean move also is insignificant because it affects only its sector of Panmunjom, which is very small," said a senior Seoul government official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Panmunjom is an oval-shaped joint security area straddling a portion of the 155-mile border between the two Koreas. It is where military officials of both sides irregularly meet to discuss alleged armistice violations.

The North Korean action would affect about 800 yards of the border. The North Korean announcement came while officials of both sides were holding talks at Panmunjom village to discuss an accord that would outline terms for the first meeting between the prime ministers of the two Koreas.

At a border meeting on Tuesday, the two Koreas agreed in principle to hold the first prime ministers' meeting, possibly in August in Seoul.

BORDER STATES
Oklahoma — Tonight clear to partly cloudy and warm with widely scattered thunderstorms western Panhandle. Lows from upper 60s to upper 70s. Saturday, clear to partly cloudy and very warm with widely scattered thunderstorms western Panhandle. Highs from 93 to 100.

New Mexico — Partly cloudy central and west through Saturday with scattered mainly afternoon and early nighttime thunderstorms. Locally heavy rain possible western mountains tonight. Partly cloudy southeast through Saturday with widely scattered thunderstorms on Saturday. Highs Saturday in mid 70s and 80s mountains with 80s and 90s at lower elevations. Lows tonight in mid 40s to near 60 mountains with upper 50s to near 70s south and east.

Lefors trustees to consider principal selection

LEFORS — Lefors Independent School District Board of Trustees is set to consider the selection of a principal for the school district during a Friday meeting.

The board's meeting is set for 7 p.m. in the elementary school library.

Last year's principal, Mike Jackson, resigned to become the high school principal in Canadian.

Other items on the school board's agenda include discussion of a contract with the city of Pampa and Lefors ISD for students to play on the Pampa Hidden Hills Golf Course and discussion of paying professional personnel for extra work this summer.

The board will also consider approving the school calendar for 1990-91 and discuss the use of the gym for the Lefors Lion's Club Arts & Crafts Fair on Aug. 3-5.

Television reporter kept in jail even after sheriff reveals source

By SCOTT ROTHSCHILD
Associated Press Writer

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The only reason authorities are keeping television reporter Brian Karem in jail is to punish him, since the source he's protecting apparently has been made public, says a freedom of the press organization.

"I can't see how the interests of justice are being served by keeping Brian Karem in jail at this point," said Jane Kirtley, executive director of The Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press in Washington.

"Once you've got the name of the source, you don't have to keep the journalist jailed, unless you're just offended that the journalist wouldn't buckle under to you," Ms. Kirtley said Thursday.

"That's not what the Founders had in mind. They abhorred the notion of journalists being jailed," she said. The Reporters Committee is a non-profit organization providing free legal advice and assistance to journalists.

Bexar County Sheriff Harlon Copeland on Thursday announced the alleged name of the source that Karem, a KMOL-TV reporter, has refused to reveal to prosecutors in a police killing case.

But it appeared the disclosure wouldn't affect the status of Karem, who has been in the Bexar County Adult Detention Center since June 27 serving a six-month term for contempt of court.

Karem has repeatedly refused to identify the person who arranged a jailhouse telephone interview with Henry David Hernandez, accused of killing a San Antonio police officer last year. In the interview, Hernandez said he shot the officer in self-defense.

Defense attorneys and prosecutors say they have to know who arranged the interview to determine if the Hernandez interview is admissible in his trial.

On Thursday, Karem's attorney Larry Macon immediately asked state District Judge Pat Priest to rescind the contempt-of-court finding, but the judge said in chambers that the sheriff's statement was irrelevant, said Cathy Granados, Priest's court coordinator.

A formal hearing will be set for the dismissal motion.

Beth Taylor, who is prosecuting the murder case, said the district attorney's office still wants the disclosure from Karem.

"We have to hear it from Karem," she said. "He still has to produce a piece of paper of his sources. We need to see that."

But Karem said, "That's not going to happen in my lifetime."

"I'm not going to say who my source is," Karem said in a telephone interview from the jail. "I have a promise between myself and that source. That source has not absolved me of my promise."

"I'm sure as hell not going to be intimidated by a judge, or by a prosecutor or by a defense attorney," Karem said.

Macon has appealed, for the second time, to the U.S. Supreme Court for a stay of the contempt order. He said Justice William Brennan was expected to consider the motion today. The first request was denied by Justice Byron White.

Copeland announced the alleged source's name to about 60 reporters gathered at the jail to show support for Karem. Copeland identified the source as Deborah Ledesma, a cousin of Hernandez, but he wouldn't say where he got the information.

"I'm a sheriff and I have a whole department of investigators and we investigate. Our investigation revealed certain facts," he said.

Copeland said he learned the name last Friday and tried to tell the judge but was told Priest could not discuss the case with him.

He said he didn't tell prosecutors because of "innuendos" from the district attorney's office that one of Copeland's employees had been the mediator.

"Why should I?" Copeland asked. "If they think I'm the third party, what makes them think that I didn't cook up the allegation?"

There is only one D. Ledesma listed in the San Antonio phone book. A woman who answered the phone at that number said she was Della Ledesma and that she did not know a Deborah Ledesma. Copeland said he did not know where Deborah Ledesma lives.

The sheriff said Hernandez called Ms. Ledesma, who used third-party calling to contact Karem.

Fire erupts in landmark Gilley's club; blaze, legal matters may keep it closed

By LAURA TOLLEY
Associated Press Writer

PASADENA (AP) — Gilley's, the landmark country western honky-tonk left vacant for more than a year because of a bitter legal battle, was devastated by a fire that may have snuffed out any hope of reopening the giant club.

A fire erupted in the club Thursday afternoon, sending black smoke billowing through sections of the steel roof. The interior was gutted but the structure was left standing.

"I've seen Gilley's club grow from nothing," said Pasadena Fire Chief Jay Boyer. "Now it's back to the ground again."

The blaze swept through the 70,000-square-foot warehouse-like structure, and fire units from several area departments rushed to the scene. Firefighters had trouble getting into the building because its doors were welded shut and its windows were boarded up.

The fire was brought under control in two hours, but firefighters remained at the scene Thursday night.

"The fire is out at this time, but they're going through the building looking for hot spots. The don't want a reflash," fire dispatcher J.D. Bordelon said Thursday night.

"It's not destroyed. It's not burned completely to the ground," Bordelon said. The cause of the fire is under investigation.

The story of Gilley's could make a hit country western tune. The club rode the boom-and-bust rollercoaster along with the rest of the oil-dependent area, but it failed to make a comeback after it fell on hard times.

It is the hard-luck story of fortunes made and friendships lost.

Country singer Mickey Gilley joined Sherwood Cryer in ownership of the club — which had been known as Shelly's — in 1971.

Gilley's was just a local popular honkytonk club in this Houston suburb until it charged into the national limelight after being romanticized in the hit movie Urban Cowboy.

Much of the 1980 movie, which starred John Travolta and Debra Winger, was filmed in the club.

Gilley's became the hot spot for Houstonians and many visitors anxious to get a peek at what the cowboy life was like.

In its heyday, Gilley's was packed with thousands of "drug-store cowboys" who wanted to listen to live bands, dance alongside real rednecks and test their skills on the mechanical bull.

But the urban cowboy craze couldn't live forever.

According to Mickey Gilley, trouble began in 1983 when he complained to Cryer that the club was deteriorating.

"He said, 'Don't tell me how to run my club, and I won't tell you how to sing.' I told him, 'I helped you build this club, I can help destroy it.' It turned into a war," Gilley told the Houston Chronicle in an interview last year.

The friends' war advanced to the courtroom. Gilley emerged victorious, while Cryer left with a court order to pay almost $16 million in damages for breaching his financial duty to Gilley.

Cryer later declared bankruptcy. The surprise shutdown of the world-famous club last March followed a break-in and theft of electronic equipment at Gilley's Recording Studio adjacent to the club.

Mickey Gilley's attorneys and a court-appointed receiver, suggesting that the burglary was an inside job, obtained court permission to close the bar to protect assets.

After the club was shut down, Gilley said he was out of the club business for the moment. He added, however, that he might lend his name to another nightclub if the right investor came along.

But then the fire erupted Thursday, leaving behind a twisted, blackened mass of metal and wood that seemed to douse any thoughts of revival.

"It's history. It's not going to be there anymore," said one woman who went to see what was left of the Texas tradition. "It's sad."

"You know, I spent 18 years there," said resident Kathy Wahl. "It's like your home going up."

Johnny Garner was more optimistic.

"There'll always be a Gilley's. Nobody can change that," he said.

Teachers union decides to accept non-traditional certification rules

By TAMARA HENRY
AP Education Writer

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The nation's largest teachers union abandoned its resistance to allowing engineers, scientists and other midcareer professionals into the classroom while they study to become teachers.

The 2 million-member National Education Association had opposed so-called alternative certification programs because it said recruiting non-teachers to combat faculty shortages undercut traditional licensing programs.

The policy adopted Thursday during the first day of the union's four-day convention won passage because it established standards like mandatory bachelor's degrees, supervision by certified teachers and enrollment in teacher accreditation courses, officials said.

"I'm not in favor of blanket alternative certification," said Rosanne Bacon, president of the Massachusetts Teachers Association, a former opponent of such teacher recruitment efforts.

"This proposal sets up clear, high standards for teachers coming in on a non-traditional route. It carefully opens access to the teaching profession," she said.

The policy statement said alternative-route certification can attract sorely needed minorities and experts in math, science, foreign languages and special education.

Rising teacher shortages in recent years prompted officials to begin luring professionals from fields outside education, but teachers objected to allowing them into the classroom before they completed teacher certification programs.

According to the NEA, there will be a demand for 1.3 million new teachers by 1994. In a survey of 191 of the nation's largest school districts, 48 percent reported a shortage of teacher applicants.

A new study by the National Center for Education Information found that 33 states are implementing alternative routes — up from 23 less than two years ago. Eight states hired such instructors in 1983.

Not everyone agreed with the vote.

Bernard Anderson of Reno, Nev., said non-traditional certification routes mask the real issues behind the nationwide teacher shortage.

"Had they raised teacher salaries, then we would have been able to attract people with proper credentials into our profession," said Anderson, speaking for the Nevada delegation of about 70 teachers.

The NEA document is the first official support by the entire union for the concept. It takes a middle ground between outright opposition to alternative certification and those who feel that any college graduate can teach school.

"The National Education Association remains committed to ensuring that there is a fully licensed, qualified teacher in every classroom — but recognizes that there may be more than one way to prepare such teachers," the policy statement said.

NEA President Keith Geiger said the union succeeded in getting the policy adopted mainly because it emphasized those taking alternative routes would have to meet strict standards.

The policy statement stresses that the objective of both a traditional and non-traditional route is "to rigorously prepare an individual to obtain a standard, full teaching license."

"A non-traditional route does not lead to an alternative license," the document said.

Shrimping season to reopen Sunday

AUSTIN (AP) — The Gulf shrimping season for Texas' offshore waters will reopen Sunday, the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department says.

Department officials said Thursday that the season would open at 30 minutes after sunset.

The Gulf season was closed on May 15 and initially scheduled to reopen July 15.

However, biological surveys indicated that brown shrimp this spring matured faster and migrated from the bays into the Gulf of Mexico earlier than normal, said C.E. Bryan, fisheries resource program director.

The department is allowed to adjust the opening and closing dates of the annual, 60-day closure to protect undersized shrimp during their migration offshore.

Texas lobbyists take different approaches to new farm bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress may freeze government support to farmers at 1990 levels for the next five years, a move Texas farm supporters say could be harmful.

But the Texas Department of Agriculture and Texas Farm Bureau will take different lobbying approaches when the bills reach the House and Senate floors later this month.

"It's a difficult situation," said Steve Pringle, national affairs director of the Waco-based Farm Bureau. "Farm Bureau policy would allow us to support target price increases. But we're extremely cognizant of the budget constraints that face not only farmers and ranchers but everyone in the country."

He said the state's largest farming organization would not oppose the freeze, which is in both the House and Senate versions of the farm bill.

The five-year, $55 billion measure updates many programs of the 1985 farm bill. To keep the cost down, the committees decided to freeze target prices for cotton, rice, wheat and feed grains at 1990 levels.

"Congress is simply going along with the status quo and not addressing the real need for boosting farm income," said Barbara Meister, agricultural economist with the Texas Department of Agriculture.

The target price is the amount the government sets as the ideal price for a commodity. The government pays the farmer the difference if the target price is higher than the market price.

A Texas A&M study this spring said that a target price freeze would strengthen the widespread trend toward fewer but larger farms.

Ms. Meister said the study illustrates that small and moderate-sized farm operations will have difficulty maintaining income levels if 1990 target prices prevail for five years while production costs rise.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Opinion

This time let's keep our spies in the dark

As the United States stands down from the Cold War, we must scrutinize our government to make sure that it does not turn the machines of war to other purposes. Already the military has been drafted into the "war" on drugs, sending equipment and military advisers to Latin America. At first the military opposed this effort, but it has now embraced it, keeping money flowing to the Pentagon.

But even more ominous is a debate going on within the National Security Agency on whether it should train its vast spy apparatus to advance economic policies. NSA is a little-known supersecret agency headquartered in a suburb of Washington, D.C. It is nicknamed the Puzzle Palace. It eavesdrops on virtually every important military communication in the world, including voice and electronic messages. Its computers can crack almost any code.

This is very valuable for keeping tabs on the thousands of Soviet nuclear warheads aimed at the American people, or on the positions of Soviet Navy ships. But it would be very dangerous to turn this weapon loose to advance civilian projects.

Reports the New York Times: "There is a consensus among intelligence officials that the agency should gather more economic data, both to assist government agencies involved in commerce and to detect coming economic disruptions that could affect American interests, like a collapse of financial markets or major banks."

"National Security Agency eavesdropping outposts are also said to stumble routinely across foreign corporate trade secrets and national industrial strategies that could be of immense value to American companies competing abroad."

The best way to prevent the abuse of intelligence data would be for Congress to pass a law prohibiting the collection or dissemination of any such data by government spy agencies. Perhaps we could encourage our state congressmen to spearhead the effort.

Collection of such data would hurt us in two ways. It would give our government immense power in what is clearly a civilian concern, paving the way for even more government spying against civilians. And if the data is given to American industries, it would give them a false sense that they can beat the competition by relying on spying, instead of building better products.

Certainly, businesses must research the competition to put out a better product. But that is far different than getting data from government spies.

NSA and its sister spy agency, the CIA, were set up in the late 1940s to protect us against the Soviet military threat. They have largely succeeded, and too often intruded upon the internal operations of other nations in addition. Now their dark resources should not be converted to new purposes, but reduced, the budget funds returned to taxpayers.

CEILING ON FEDERAL BORROWING

"Er — we may be forced to raise the ceiling ahead of schedule."

How do you feel about $1 coin?

WASHINGTON — Would you like a question for dinner table debate? Try this one: Resolved, that Congress should replace the $1 bill with a new $1 coin. Let us hear from the affirmative side.

Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., and 28 colleagues have introduced a bill (S. 814) that is titled the United States Coinage Reform Act of 1990. At a public hearing on June 20, the senator testified in the bill's support.

The coin he has in mind would be minted in 1992. On one side it would commemorate Columbus' discovery of the new world; on the other it could honor space exploration. The coin would be made mostly of a copper alloy, but it would be gold in color; its edges would be as smooth as those of a nickel, and it would be the same size as the Susan B. Anthony dollar.

Two principal arguments support the bill. The first is convenience: "The $1 coin will be convenient for bus riders, for drivers parking at a meter, for those using vending machines, for the visually handicapped, for those making long-distance calls from pay phones, for those buying Sunday papers from street-corner boxes, and countless other purposes."

The second is an argument of savings. It costs about 2.6 cents to print a $1 bill. The bill has an average life of 16 months, after which it is shredded for trash. By contrast, the proposed coin would cost 6 cents to mint, but it would stay in circulation for 20 years or more. In a recent report the General Accounting Office estimated that the government could reap $318 million in savings every year, once the coins were fully phased in.

Domenici has support from the Coin Coalition, a group of 21 trade associations. He cites the favorable experience of other nations. Spain, Switzerland, Japan and Denmark have coins with a U.S. equivalent of more than $3. Our Canadian friends have accepted their 11-sided, gold-colored $1 "loonie" (it bears the image of a loon) with good grace. The British like their 1 pound coin.

Unlike a similar House bill, the senator's bill does not demand a phasing-out of the paper dollar, though he believes the idea has merit. Finally, the senator argues that his $1 "Chris" is so different from the ill-fated Susan B. Anthony dollar that no one should confuse the two. The affirmative side rests its case.

For the negative we turn to Donna Pope, director of the mint, and to L. Nye Stevens of the General Accounting office.

Mrs. Pope is flat-out opposed to the idea. She finds little indication of public support. Indeed, a recent Gallup Poll found that 59 percent of the respondents opposed the idea. The public is especially opposed to outright elimination of the $1 note. Machines may like coins, but "people like bills."

Without substantial public support, the proposed "Chris" of 1992 would be doomed to the dismal fate experienced by the Susie of 1979. Half of the 857 million Susies remain in storage. If they were melted down, the Treasury would have to write off $415 million in bookkeeping "seigniorage." No one is yet proposing to get rid of the Susies, but no one wants the things either.

Nye agrees. Speaking for the GAO, he contends that Domenici's new coin would be accepted only if the paper dollar were phased out in a reasonably short transition period. This is "crucial." Foreign governments, such as Great Britain's, can impose unpopular measures through the parliamentary process. The American Congress enjoys no such power.

Yes, says Nye, the savings from a $1 coin would be substantial, but again, the savings would depend entirely upon withdrawal of the $1 note. Sen. Alan Dixon, D-Ill., who was presiding at the hearing, asked why the note and the coin could not happily coexist.

Nye held his ground. If a customer offered a $5 bill to pay for a $1.25 purchase, would the customer want three Christophers and three quarters in change? An experienced cashier automatically would reach for three $1 bills to go with the silver. If there were no $1 bills, the change might come in the form of one $2 bill, one Chris and three quarters. The prospect, Nye indicated, is not appealing.

The debate may be purely academic. At the time of Susie's debut 10 years ago, the Treasury floated the idea of abolishing the $1 bill. Nearly 100 members of the House promptly ganged up on a resolution of opposition. The Treasury crawled back in its vaults. Don't hold your breath until the affirmative side prevails.

Scientists building super cow

Congressmen and newsmen are blabbermouths. No secret is safe.

Even when national security is involved, some can't be trusted.

When media people learn and start reporting what scientists are doing in the field of genetic engineering, expect some of them to respond with dire warnings: "Mad scientists trying to create super race."

But because most media people don't know beans about agriculture, scientists are able to experiment with the manipulation of individual animal cells without alerting the scare-mongers.

With controlled breeding practices, our farm animal herds have been improved for generations.

Now we are learning to expedite the process, to accomplish in the laboratory improvements that would take years of evolution.

In a University of Wisconsin laboratory, a single artificially inseminated cow egg has been coaxed to grow into an embryo.

In that embryo are the genes of a prize Holstein bull and a prize Holstein cow. Their identical offspring could populate hundreds of farms.

In laboratories all over the world we are quietly learning — with animal engineering — to create cows that give milk with a low fat content, chickens that lay low-cholesterol eggs and pigs that produce more lean pork.

Edwin Andrews of the University of Pennsylvania calls genetic engineering "a technology which promises ... the most powerful tool we have ever had to change the biology of this planet."

But not without resistance.

Chicago Tribune reporters Peter Gerner and Ronald Kotulak recently undertook a responsible, comprehensive progress report on genetic engineering. They discovered a debate that ignites volatile emotions among religious, environmental, animal welfare groups — and even some farmers.

Example: Cows injected with bovine supplemental somatotropin (BST) will produce between 10 and 30 percent more milk almost overnight, offering the prospect of lower prices for consumers and rising profits for farmers.

According to the Federal Drug Administration (FDA), BST is entirely safe. It is a growth hormone produced in the pituitary glands of humans, cattle and other animals. It occurs in all mix, is digested as any other protein.

Thousands of people have consumed milk produced with synthetic BST with no reported complaints.

Four multinational chemical/pharmaceutical companies — Monsanto, Lilly, American Cyanamid and Upjohn — have invested hundreds of millions in BST research. Different versions of the drug have been tested on 100 herds in six states — without one negative response.

Yet there are protesters even from dairy farmers that we are already producing too much milk, that BST is unsafe, "might cause cancer."

Interesting: In the 1930s, when now commonplace artificial insemination of dairy cattle was first proposed, because most cattle semen is diluted using an egg yolk base, it was argued by some that "calves are going to be born with feathery!"

Nuclear whistleblowers lose their voice

By ROBERT WALTERS

In an era when nuclear power plants are plagued by construction defects, operational lapses and other flaws, whistleblowers have assumed a crucial role in alerting the public to health and safety hazards.

Without those warnings, the potential dangers probably would go unreported — and nowhere is that more apparent than in Glen Rose, the community 80 miles southwest of Dallas that is home to the Comanche Peak nuclear power plant.

Like most other nuclear generating stations built in recent decades, Comanche Peak was far over budget, way behind schedule and beset by scandal when it finally received its operating license from the Nuclear Regulatory Commission in mid-April.

Construction of the facility was announced by Texas Utilities in mid-1972 and started in late 1974. At the time, TU said the cost of building a pair of 1,150 megawatt units would be less than $780 million and the work would be completed by the end of the decade.

When the first unit was recently licensed, 10 years late, the second was still only about 85 percent complete and not expected to be finished until 1992 or 1993. TU's most recent estimate of the cost to complete the project is $9.1 billion, but the Texas Public Utility Counsel places the figure at $11.6 billion.

That abysmal record is largely attributable to a construction effort so astoundingly sloppy that scores of plant workers blew the whistle about hundreds of deficiencies.

Problems were uncovered in the concrete poured for the foundation and containment dome of the first unit, the plant's ability to withstand an earthquake, the welds in the liner of the pool required to hold spent fuel rods, the plants pipe supports and even TU's quality control program.

Whistleblowers also raised questions about the durability of approximately 1 million bolts — many of them possibly counterfeit — and the quality of valves, wiring, insulation and other components.

In an extraordinary private settlement in mid-1988, TU agreed to pay

$10 million to the Citizens Association for Sound Energy, an organization of whistleblowers, public interest lawyers and local residents who oppose Comanche Peak.

Of that total, $5.5 million went to 50 whistleblowers, some of whom had lost their jobs. The remaining $4.5 million went to CASE to pay for its expenses incurred in monitoring Comanche Peak problems during the prior decade. CASE also was given a seat on the plant's nine-member safety oversight committee. In return, it agreed to withdraw its challenge to the issuance of an NRC operating license.

Because the payments were characterized by some critics as bribes, the NRC asked utilities elsewhere in the country if they had engaged in any actions that might be interpreted as buying whistleblowers' silence.

The federal regulatory agency received affirmative responses from three other operators of nuclear power plants — Duke Power in North Carolina, Omaha Public Power in Nebraska and GPU Nuclear in New Jersey.

In other instances, however, the NRC has appeared to be more concerned about protecting the reputations of inept or uncaring utility companies than following leads provided by whistleblowers.

At the South Texas Nuclear Project outside Houston, for example, the NRC placed a higher priority on identifying more than 50 anonymous whistleblowers than on probing their allegations that workers who complained about defective materials or failures to abide by federal safety standards were harassed or intimidated by the plant operator.

At Comanche Peak, one conscience-stricken worker told the NRC about defective welds after securing a pledge that the agency would not reveal his identity to his employer. The NRC broke its promise and he was fired.

After almost two decades of anguish, Comanche Peak's integrity is still uncertain. CASE says it "sincerely wishes that we could tell ... the public that Comanche Peak is safe," but adds: "Unfortunately, we cannot."

Alaska battling 159 threatening wildfires

By ROSANNE PAGANO
Associated Press Writer

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — More than 150 wildfires raced across Alaska's interior, forcing the evacuation of a town of 900 people and blocking the Alaska Highway, the main road into the state.

Gov. Steve Cowper declared a statewide state of emergency, and called on the Alaska National Guard to help fight the 159 fires that raged over 172,500 acres of forest and open tundra. An elite firefighting team from California was being flown into the region later today.

No one was reported injured by Thursday night, officials said.

The biggest fire covered about 30,000 acres near Beaver, about 110 miles north of Fairbanks, but no structures were threatened there.

Flames swelled up over trees and drew to within a mile of homes and airport buildings on the southeast edge of Tok, a town about 175 miles southeast of Fairbanks.

As sirens blared, emergency workers went from door to door Thursday afternoon urging people to leave their homes for the safety of a school about 10 miles to the north.

But hours after most residents left, the blaze changed course and skipped north into open country, said Sue Mitchell, a spokeswoman for the Bureau of Land Management.

Dozens of cars lined up in the heat as the Alaska Highway, the main road from the Canadian border, was closed off for a 10-mile strip from the Tok Airport to the Tanana River Crossing.

State troopers in Tok said the halted drivers — many of them tourists hauling campers — went north about 10 miles to the village of Tanacross, and camped out overnight in the clearing of the village airstrip. Authorities said early today it was unclear when the road would be reopened.

A few abandoned structures east of Tok were burned, but so far the fire has been kept from the downtown business area and no structures there had been destroyed, Mitchell said.

"It's better news than we thought," she said.

The fire burned mainly black spruce, birch, aspen and brush on the flat terrain around the town. Some residents wore masks to filter out smoke.

"What's bothering us the most is breathing. There's burnt spruce needles falling out of the air," resident Mellie Terwilliger said. "You can see but you go around with your lights on."

Earlier reports that the town's Coast Guard navigational station had been burned were incorrect, Mitchell said. Power had been cut off to the evacuated station, which provides electronic radio signals to help guide aviators and mariners, but the structure remained standing, she said.

A 17-member team of firefighter managers from California was expected to arrive at Tok later today. The team battled the Yellowstone National Park fire that claimed more than a million acres in the summer of 1988.

About 400 firefighters, each working 20-hour shifts, had been assigned to fight the fire at Tok, she said.

"The fire is out of control. We're throwing everything at it we have — tankers, bulldozers, people — and it isn't working," said state forester Bob Dick.

Chuck Johnson, left, and Tom Walyer watch a fire on Pedro Dome Wednesday about 15 miles northeast of Fairbanks, Alaska, one of nearly 160 fires reported in the state.

Homeless advocate found hanged in shelter in D.C.

By ALAN FRAM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mitch Snyder is being remembered as a "man of action" for the nation's homeless after his body was found hanged, victim of what police called an apparent suicide.

Snyder, 46, was discovered dead Thursday afternoon in a 1,400-bed homeless shelter in a ragged neighborhood a few blocks from the U.S. Capitol. An autopsy was performed but results were not made public.

The Washington Post reported today that police believe he died Tuesday night or Wednesday, and that he had not been seen since Tuesday.

A funeral is scheduled for Tuesday outside the homeless shelter.

The gray, three-story building where Snyder's body was found symbolized the cause in which he achieved national prominence and the tactics he used in his fight.

His group — the Community for Creative Non-Violence — was given the rundown government building by the Reagan administration only after he staged a hunger strike in 1984 to demand federal aid and publicize the plight of the homeless.

After heart scare, Hackman advised to exercise, eat better

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Actor Gene Hackman has been told to exercise and improve his diet after he narrowly avoided a heart attack.

Hackman was listed in good condition early today at St. Vincent Hospital & Medical Center, said nursing supervisor Marymae Zimmerman.

"He feels much relieved," said Dr. Herber Semler, the cardiologist who treated Hackman. "The pain is gone. He is up and around and ready to make another movie."

An artery leading to Hackman's heart narrowed dangerously and doctors had to reinflate it with a balloon catheter, Semler said at a news conference Thursday.

If Hackman hadn't entered the hospital when he did, "the artery would have completely shut down and he would have possibly had a heart attack," Semler said. "We think we got him just in the nick of time."

Hackman, 60, was admitted to the hospital Tuesday.

Semler said the rest of Hackman's coronary arteries look good and the actor can return to an active life.

He said Hackman is not overweight, doesn't smoke and has no history of medical problems.

However, Semler said he is recommending an exercise and diet plan for Hackman, who lives in Beverly Hills, Calif.

Hackman had just finished filming a movie in Europe called Dinosaur and was vacationing on the Oregon Coast when he began suffering chest pain.

His film credits include The French Connection, The Conversation, Superman and Hoosiers.

Upcoming releases include Postcards from the Edge and Narrow Margin.

housing issues, called Snyder "a man of action" who at times became depressed by the problems of the homeless.

He was a "man on the edge — at the cutting edge of the homeless and the street people and his own ethos and rationale for existence," said Gonzalez.

A police statement called the death "an apparent suicide by hanging." Spokesman Lt. Reginald Smith said a note containing "suicidal references" was found near Snyder's body.

"It was a domestic situation, something to do with his girlfriend," one source said. "The note indicates there were problems there."

Carol Fennelly, Snyder's companion of 15 years and partner in running the shelter, said in a statement that the community was "greatly shocked and saddened." She did not return telephone calls seeking further comment.

Actor Martin Sheen, who portrayed Snyder in a 1986 television movie, said he was devastated by the news of the activist's death.

"I just pray that a very special angel meets him at the gate and escorts him to paradise," Sheen told the Star-Banner in Ocala, Fla., where he was filming a movie.

Snyder first received public attention on Christmas Eve 1974, when he announced he would live with three other community members in plastic boxes on the streets to honor four homeless people who had died of exposure.

It was the first of many hunger strikes, sleep-outs and other protest actions he would be involved in over the next 16 years.

In recent weeks, he came under pressure from some volunteer staff aides at the shelter to fire other workers who they said were engaged in illegal activities such as drug use. Eight staff workers were fired, The Washington Times reported.

Neil Bush ordered to answer conflict charges

By DAVE SKIDMORE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Savings and loan regulators are ordering President Bush's son, Neil, to answer conflict-of-interest charges in public, despite objections from the younger Bush's attorney.

Regulators said Neil Bush, an officer of a Denver thrift institution, voted to approve millions of dollars in loans from the S&L to one of his business partners.

The administrative charges, filed in February, were released Thursday as part of a new policy at the Treasury Department's Office of Thrift Supervision. The agency scheduled a public hearing for Sept. 25 before an administrative law judge in Denver.

"I think it's unfortunate if it creates a political sideshow or a media sideshow," said James Nesland, a lawyer for Neil Bush. "But I'm still confident the administrative law judge will decide the case on its merits."

The judge will make a recommendation to OTS Director Timothy Ryan, who will decide whether or not to issue a cease-and-desist order prohibiting Bush from violating regulations in the future.

The agency is not seeking more serious penalties, such as financial restitution or banning Bush from working for a bank or savings and loan.

Separately, OTS said it is seeking a record $24 million from the former chairman of a large California thrift, Columbia Savings and Loan of Beverly Hills. It accused Thomas Spiegel of squandering deposits on luxury condominiums, trips to Europe and a gun collection.

Spiegel, a close associate of Michael Milken, former Drexel Burnham Lambert junk bond chief, built the institution into one of the nation's largest. It had the industry's biggest portfolio of high-yield, high-risk bonds, valued at $3.7 billion at the end of 1989.

In a statement, Spiegel denied the charges and accused the agency of conducting a politically motivated "trial by press release."

Neil Bush served on the board of Silverado Banking, Savings and Loan Association from August 1985 to August 1988. It collapsed in December 1988 at an estimated cost to taxpayers of $1 billion.

The charges said Bush voted to approve loans totaling $45 million to Bill L. Walters, an investor in and lender to Bush's oil exploration company, JNB Exploration Co. He also voted to approve Silverado's purchase of $58.4 million in properties from Walters, the document said.

The thrift office also said Bush inadequately disclosed his ties to Kenneth Good, a developer who defaulted on loans to Silverado.

Bush, in a reply a month after the charges were filed, said he had not violated his duty as a director. He denied some specific charges and, of others, said he "lacks sufficient present knowledge or information to form a belief as to the allegations."

The House Banking Committee obtained and released a preliminary draft of the charges in June.

Last week, President Bush said he had "full confidence in the integrity and honor" of his son and pledged not to interfere with the investigation.

In the Columbia case, the thrift office is seeking $19 million in restitution, which would go to the still-open S&L, and $5 million in penalties, which would go to the U.S. Treasury.

Regulators allege Spiegel improperly spent deposits on limousines, corporate aircraft, luxury resort condominiums for his own use, $7,000 in tickets for a Michael Jackson concert, a $2,000 wine-tasting course and a $55,000 gun collection that included Uzi submachine guns.

In The Church Of Your Choice

There is a need to look back occasionally to get our bearings for the future. Past experiences often guide future action. What has proved good and profitable in the past will often prove to be the same in the days ahead. Serving God and our country through our churches and through civil and community service has always elevated us as a people and contributed to our image as a free and just country. We will not go wrong in adhering to these practices.

The Church is God's appointed agency in this world for spreading the knowledge of His love for man and of His demand for man to respond to that love by loving his neighbor. Without this grounding in the love of God, no government or society or way of life will long persevere and the freedoms which we hold so dear will inevitably perish. Therefore, even from a selfish point of view, one should support the Church for the sake of the welfare of himself and his family. Beyond that, however, every person should uphold and participate in the Church because it tells the truth about man's life, death and destiny; the truth which alone will set him free to live as a child of God.

His Touch

By Charlotte Barbaree

Scripture: The eternal God is your refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms. (Deuteronomy 33:27a NIV)

I heard a young mother ask, "Have you got him?" as she relinquished her newborn son into the arms of an eager friend. The anxious new mother was not really doubting the ability of the friend to safely hold her baby; she just wanted to be sure the friend had a firm hold on him before she let go.

My three girl "babies" are all grown, and I've developed an anxiety syndrome I didn't know existed. I've discovered turning my adult children over to God is harder than allowing him to "help" raise them.

When they were home, God permitted me to believe I had some control over their lives. I took pride in their accomplishments as though I had earned the right. I was free to give advice whether they wanted it or not. I could hold them when they hurt; sometimes I could even protect them from the big, bad world or their own youthful foolishness.

But now they are floating free of the apron strings. Although I'm still proud of them, their accomplishments are their own by right, and their dangers, wounds, and struggles twist in my stomach like knives while I watch helplessly. How I wish I could do their hurting for them!

Lord, I lift each precious daughter into your arms, and I ask anxiously, "Have you got her?" I don't doubt you're capable of safely holding her. I just want to be sure you have a firm hold on her before I let go.

ST. LOUIS (AP) - Clinging to life until his book came out, AIDS victim Terry Boyd murmured when it was placed in his hands, "God and I did this." He died a few hours later.

Boyd, 39, a United Methodist and member of the denomination's Interagency Task Force on AIDS Ministries, titled the book, "Living With AIDS: One Christian's Struggle." "Having AIDS is just plain awful," he wrote. But where the Lord finds suffering in life, he provides compensating grace that somehow helps the sufferer to make it through.

ATHENS, Greece (AP) - The Greek Supreme Court, acting on a complaint by two Eastern Orthodox priests, has ruled that "Jesus jeans" and "Jesus T-shirts" cannot be sold in Greece.

Such commercial use of Jesus' name was termed an unacceptable abuse.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) - The Christian Reformed Church's governing synod has voted tentatively to allow the ordination of women as ministers and elders.

The vote followed eight hours of debate between progressive and conservative factions of the 314,000-member church.

The action would allow individual congregations to "use their discretion in utilizing the gifts of women members in all areas of the church," church spokesman Bob Meyering said.

Photo project captures images of the 'Houses of God'

By MARTHA W. RAY
Denton Record-Chronicle

DENTON (AP) — About 20 years ago, Dallas photographer Charles DeBus took a wrong turn coming back from Houston.

He ended up on a road in the tiny town of Addicks, Texas, next to a small white church. There was something special about the way the light was hitting the lovely little church, DeBus remembers, so he pulled out his camera and shot it. He didn't really think much about the Addicks church again until he went back to shoot it once more a few years ago. This time he found it enveloped by skyscrapers.

The drastic change in the surroundings of the country church started DeBus on what he now calls "the most extensive and consistent" project of his professional career — photographing houses of worship in Texas.

The end result is "Houses of God," an exhibit of 120 black-and-white photographs of churches and synagogues throughout the state, now being shown in its entirety for the first time at the Meadows Gallery at the Center for the Visual Arts through July 13.

"There was something about it. I had to do it," DeBus said recently. "I knew I had better do it now because I was starting to lose material."

Over two years, DeBus covered 30,000 miles and looked at more than 4,000 churches in search of ecclesiastical architecture.

While his motivations were to preserve an important spiritual part of Texas heritage, DeBus used his own aesthetic yardstick as the final criteria for a church's inclusion in the exhibit.

"I wanted to include a church from every section of the state. But the main reasons I picked churches were not architectural or historical. It was aesthetic reasons. If I didn't like it, I didn't take it," he said. "It was the structure and how I reacted to the structure."

The perfect cloud formation above a church or a pickup truck in its driveway were often the deciding factors that made the structure appeal to DeBus.

"I guess there are as many different reasons as there are prints in the show, but the light was primary. The way the light was hitting the building," he said.

DeBus, an adjunct professor of photography at Southern Methodist University, isn't quite sure why he acquired an obsession for Texas churches, but he is pretty sure it has to do with his years as an altar boy at Sacred Heart Cathedral, now Cathedral Guadalupe Church, downtown Dallas.

"I grew up very engrossed in the Catholic church. I was the bishop's altar boy. I went to Sacred Heart School in Dallas. I was very immersed in church ritual," he said.

Oddly, DeBus' home church is one of the churches NOT included in the exhibit.

The memories he had of the church didn't fit with the church's current look, according to DeBus.

"That church holds tremendous memories for me. It's so different now that I couldn't make it work," he said. "I had a certain image of it and it's not there any more."

The churches and synagogues that are included range from a traditional white country church in Copperfield to an ultramodern synagogue in El Paso, from mission style churches in South Texas to an ornate European reproduction in Orange. Each one has its own distinct presence and character.

"The feeling of churches is special. The church was the center of a community, and it was often the best and first building built. It preserved all the history of a town. The idea of its history appealed to me," he said. "The church reflects the community."

Getting to meet people in each community as he photographed their town's churches is one of the things DeBus says he will miss most now that the project is over. But, when he stops to think about it, he isn't sure if the life-consuming project will ever be over.

"The project officially is over, but I can't seem to stop. There are still some I want to go back and photograph," he said. "It's been a very special project. It's something I don't think will ever end."

The Unity Church in Dallas is included in Charles DeBus's "Houses of God" exhibit of 120 black-and-white photographs of Texas churches and synagogues. (AP Laserphoto)

'Way of Cross' meditations comfort hard-hit farmers

"I fall and it is so hard to get up. I feel, 'What is the use?' There are the drought of the land, emotional upheavals and spiritual droughts. I feel depression and sometimes despair. It hurts so much. Getting up is too much work. Now I am reminded how Jesus rose whenever he fell."

— Floyd and Martha Hohman, McCutchenville farmers, from "The Way of the Cross in Rural Life."

By MITCH WEISS
Associated Press Writer

TIFFIN, Ohio (AP) — When Seneca County farmer William Smith gets up at dawn, he looks out a window at his rich farm land and wonders about his family's future.

In recent years, he's seen a soil-parching drought that withered crops in the field, and rains that left farm land a muddy mess, delaying planting and cutting yields.

He has watched friends lose their farms, and helped comfort their families while their possessions were sold at auction.

Through such uncertainty, Smith and his family find strength through Jesus and "The Way of the Cross for Those in Rural Life," a 32-page religious pamphlet written by farmers and others involved in agriculture.

"We make mistakes and we fall. Jesus fell three times on his way to the cross and every time he fell he got back up. That's the way we look at trouble we're having on the farm. You have to pick yourself back up when you fall," the 39-year-old father of two said in an interview.

This is the second year the pamphlet has been published by the Roman Catholic Diocese of Toledo's Rural Life Ministries, an organization that helps farmers and migrant farm workers.

Sister Christine Pratt, ministries' director, said the booklet is popular with people engaged in agriculture. It is used in many rural parishes for devotional services.

"It is a spiritual walk with Jesus along the traditional stations of Jesus' trial, sufferings, death and resurrection, but includes meditations written by growers, dairy people, and others who are sensitive to the dependence on the growing cycles of nature," Sister Pratt said.

The idea of publishing the pamphlet came to her in the summer of 1988 when a drought threatened the livelihoods of many farmers.

Farm couples or individuals involved in food issues and migrant farm workers were asked to write their feelings, based on Scripture involving Jesus' walk to his crucifixion.

The booklet is popular with farmers because the passages are written by people who understand the pain they go through, she said.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops says the newly named papal envoy to the United States, Archbishop Agostino Cacciavillan, is a "man of broad vision" and wide experience.

"We forward to" his "sharing that vision with us" and "pledge to him our loyalty and support," said Archbishop Daniel E. Pilarczyk of Cincinnati.

Cacciavillan, 63, a veteran Vatican diplomat, succeeds Archbishop Pio Laghi as the Apostolic Pro-Nuncio in this country. A main task is advising the pope on appointment of bishops.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops said the U.S. Supreme Court decision recently on parental notification when minors seek abortion is "a victory for family unity."

Archbishop Daniel E. Pilarczyk said the court supported the "legitimate interest of parents of a pregnant adolescent to be involved in the decision whether to end the life of her unborn child."

"Parents have an obligation to give their children guidance and hope."

The court upheld Ohio and Minnesota laws requiring parents to be notified when minors seek abortion, establishing brief waiting periods before a final decision and providing a judicial bypass when parental notification is considered inappro-appropriate.

CHATHAM, N.J. (AP) — Trans World Radio says it launched on June 15 the first government-sanctioned interdenominational radio production studio ever established in the Soviet Union.

Besides the new facility in Leningrad, TWR says it plans to set up at least four other studios — in Moscow, Kiev, Minsk and Brest — before the year's end.

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The Byzantine Catholic Archdiocese of Pittsburgh, representing 150,000 members in 11 states, has installed its new archbishop, the Most Rev. Thomas V. Dolinay, 67.

Pennsylvania Lt. Gov. Mark Singel, a Byzantine Catholic, presented Dolinay with the traditional Byzantine symbols of hospitality — bread, salt and a key.

CHICAGO (AP) — The Evangelical Lutheran Church in America says a 12-member discipline committee has been appointed to rule on charges made against two San Francisco congregations for ordaining three homosexuals. The committee has 45 days to complete its findings.

MILWAUKEE (AP) — The Unitarian Universalist Association reports that its membership last year increased 1.4 percent for adults and 4.8 percent for children, the largest one-year gain in seven straight years of growth.

Carnival and yard sale

Pauline Sutton, left, and Marie Tennison, right, are getting the cakes ready for the Cake Walk, just one of many events the Salvation Army is planning during their carnival and yard sale set for Saturday, July 7, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. According to Lt. Helene Wildish, center, the event is planned to raise funds for sending area children to summer camp. Some of the activities planned include a dunking booth, sand dig, duck pond, golf putting, sponge throw, dart board and fish pond. Hamburgers and hot dogs will feed carnival-goers.

Woman's positive self-image lightens burden of her weight

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to "Looking Beyond Looks"—the fat woman who had been humiliated, insulted and ridiculed by total strangers because of her weight. I have a different story to tell:

As a 21-year-old bride, I weighed 126 pounds. (I'm 5 foot 3.) Over the years, I gradually put on weight. I'm now 65 years old and weigh 245 pounds. Although I'd love to be slim to have more choice in clothes, no diet ever worked for me, so now I just don't worry about my weight.

I've always been able to get any job I applied for, and I've never lost a day's work due to illness. People always guess my age to be at least 10 years younger than I am, and I've never experienced any rejection or rude comments because of my weight. I am well-proportioned, have a waistline—large as it is—and wear a 20 1/2 dress.

After 25 years of marriage, my husband died, and since then I've been having a wonderful love affair with a charming, slender man. I still get very positive attention from men, and I feel attractive. Last year, when I was at the beach in Europe with my boyfriend—if you can visualize me in a swimsuit—I was actually pursued by a good-looking Italian, much to the ire of my friend!

Abby, the point I want to make is this. I feel attractive, and am, therefore, treated that way. It's a matter of self-image. So let's dispel the myth that fat girls finish last. I'm fat, and I am ...

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

investigating the safety and effectiveness of weight-loss programs and products. Rep. Ron Wyden of Oregon said: "American consumers are spending more than $30 billion a year on weight-loss products and programs. All too often the results are poor, and occasionally life-threatening. And federal regulators are doing very little to assure that products and procedures are safe, and that consumers aren't being ripped off by grossly misleading advertising."

According to the newsletter published by The National Association to Advance Fat Acceptance: "There are 65 million dieters in the USA—50 percent are women and 25 percent are men. Sixty percent of all women are usually dieting in some manner. And 18 percent of all adults are constantly dieting."

I rest my case.

DEAR ABBY: Your column covers such a broad variety of interesting subjects, I find it fascinating. Please provide me with an answer to this mysterious question: Has anyone ever grown a third set of teeth?
OOPAH IN RAMONA, CALIF.

DEAR OOPAH: I asked Dr. Stan Golden, my dental consultant, who went to the root of the matter. His response: "Nature provides only two sets of teeth. Occasionally a person will grow a third tooth, but it is a rare occurrence. So, if a person is to have a third set of teeth, it will be made—by a dentist."

(Problems? Write to Abby. For a personal, unpublished reply, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Abby, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069. All correspondence is confidential.)

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Even though you and your mate will have a common objective today, instead of being supportive, each could go about it in a manner that will undermine the other's efforts. Know where to look for romance and you'll find it. The Astro-Graph Matchmaker instantly reveals which signs are romantically perfect for you. Mail $2 to Matchmaker, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Be extra mindful of common sense health procedures today. Enjoy yourself and have a good time, but don't eat or drink what you shouldn't nor overtax your physical endurance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Members of the opposite gender might not see you as charismatic today as you visualize yourself. If you behave too flamboyantly, someone might puncture your ego.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Stay well within your perimeters of authority today. If you try to throw your weight around in other areas, you could get pegged for trespassing.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) There is a possibility you may be extremely intolerant of anyone who isn't in complete accord with your ideas today. This could cause you to be testy with someone who deserves better treatment.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) You might find your wallet holding nothing but faded photographs, and this could be one of those rainy days for which you should have saved your pennies.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Strive to minimize your assertiveness in one-to-one relationships today. Others won't mind working with you, but they could be turned off if they think you want them working for you.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) What goes around usually comes around. Today you may learn of something unflattering said about you by a person you recently put down. There's a lesson in this.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) A tip by a well intentioned friend might be of little substance today. Before you gamble on what was said, check a second or even a third source.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) When dealing with family members today, strive to be cognizant of their feelings. Set the example, not the rules. Harshness will provoke responses difficult to handle.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) A philosophy that works for you is not necessarily tailored to the needs of a friend. If you impose your ideas where they are not welcomed, it could weaken the relationship.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You may have a slight edge in a commercial arrangement today, but it will be extremely thin. If you push things too far, you'll quickly discover its fragility.
