Prison prayer vigil

Gray County Judge Carl Kennedy, at podium, addresses the crowd that attended a prayer vigil Sunday afternoon at M.K. Brown Civic Center and Auditorium as part of the activities surrounding Pampa's bid for a state prison site. Others participating in the vigil included representatives of the Pampa Industrial Foundation, Pampa Area Chamber of Commerce, City of Pampa and local churches, asking for God's guidance in accepting whatever decision the Texas Board of Criminal Justice makes. A number of Pampa area residents left today to attend the board's hearing of presentations, scheduled Tuesday in Austin. Pampa is one of eight sites being considered for four prisons. The board is expected to make its decisions Tuesday afternoon after hearing the presentations.

Bush rejects funds to aid Soviets with economic recovery

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
AP Economics Writer

United States has to take a back seat to anyone."

HOUSTON (AP) — Leaders of the world's richest nations gathered today for the 16th annual economic summit and began discussions on how to bolster the fast-changing economies of Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. "Welcome to the travelers," Bush enthused as meetings began in his adopted hometown.

From Moscow came a fresh plea for financial assistance. Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze told reporters at the Communist Party Congress, "I feel it would be advantageous, for us and the West." He said Moscow was looking to the west for "credit, technical cooperation, personnel training, joint ventures and joint projects."

Before calling the summit into session on the campus of Rice University, President Bush arranged to meet separately with two leaders who are pushing a $15-billion aid package for Moscow: Chancellor Helmut Kohl of West Germany and President Francois Mitterrand of France.

Bush has said he has "big problems" with pouring cash into an anemic Soviet economy that still supports heavy defense spending and funnels $5 billion a year into Marxist Cuba.

Meanwhile, the summit partners faced a tangle of their own differences over trade and the environment. Europeans are resisting Bush's demand for phasing out farm subsidies over the next 10 years and, together with Canada, are pushing for agreement on new steps to halt global warming.

Bush's chief of staff, John Sununu, sniped at European critics of Bush's go-slow policy on curbing carbon dioxide and other pollutants blamed for warming the global environment.

"I think West Germany got a lot of good grades for rhetoric," he said on ABC. "If you take a good look at what the United States has actually done in terms of cleaning up our environment ... I don't think the Today's meeting marked the debut for Toshiki Kaifu of Japan, but it was just another reunion for the six other leaders, who also conferred just last week at London's NATO gathering.

The world has changed dramatically since the last economic summit in Paris. At that time, the West was considering a limited aid package to encourage the beginnings of reform efforts in Poland and Hungary.

Since that time the Berlin Wall has crumbled and most of the communist nations of Eastern Europe have been swept away, leaving the West groping for a way to respond to the dramatic changes.

'There's no sense in pouring money into a system that isn't ready to receive it.'

Prime Minister Brian Mulroney of Canada indicated Sunday he is increasingly sympathetic to Gorbachev, saying, "Houston has to provide the beginnings of an economic response."

Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady said today the chief message from Houston will be to urge East European nations to undertake necessary economic reforms before they receive Western assistance.

"There's no sense in pouring money into a system that isn't ready to receive it," he said on NBC.

Despite temperatures in the 90s and humidity topping 80 percent, the city of Houston went all out to welcome the heads of government, their contingents and hordes of reporters.

Bush was host Sunday night to a pre-summit rodeo, complete with bareback riding, barrel racing and a calf scramble.

The crowd — among them Kaifu, Mulroney and Margaret Thatcher of Britain — enjoyed 3 1/2 tons of barbecue and a rare, out-of-Nashville performance by Minnie Pearl and other stars of the Grand Ole Opry.

Louisiana lawmakers fashion new abortion law

By GUY COATES
Associated Press Writer

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — After failing to override the governor's veto of a stronger anti-abortion bill, the Legislature passed a measure that would ban most abortions and punish doctors who perform them with up to 10 years at hard labor.

The law, which includes exceptions demanded by Gov. Buddy Roemer, still would be the strictest state abortion law in the nation.

"This is the children's hour. Let's vote for the 15,000 unborn children who are murdered in this state every year, for the 200,000 murdered in the nation. The nation is watching us," said Sen. John Saunders, mastermind of the revised legislation.

The bill approved Sunday night bans all abortions except those to end pregnancies that endanger a woman's life and those caused by rape or incest.

The measure is intended to challenge Roe vs. Wade, the 1973 U.S. Supreme Court decision recognizing the right to an abortion.

Roemer had vetoed the Legislature's original bill Friday because it made no exceptions for victims of rape or incest. He said he would not comment on the new bill until he had a chance to read it.

The bill was created by amending a flag-burning measure the Senate had refused to consider, then eliminating the flag-burning provisions, which would have reduced the penalty for beating up a flag burner to a $25 fine. The offense currently is punishable by six months in jail and a $500 fine.

The maneuver, completed 30 hours before the legislative session ends at midnight tonight, enabled the Senate to circumvent the usual process of referring new legislation to a committee.

"I would have preferred a stronger bill, but we don't have the votes for an override," Saunders told his colleagues.

The Senate vote on the bill was 32-7. Less than an hour later, the House approved the measure 83-22.

The House had voted late last week to override the governor's veto of the earlier bill. The Senate on Saturday voted 23-16 to override, three votes short of the needed two-thirds majority.

Both abortion-rights activists and staunch abortion foes criticized the new bill.

"We've just seen the Legislature go from the most restrictive abortion bill in the nation to the most absurd," said Planned Parenthood spokeswoman Terri Bartlett. "The only thing that surpasses it is the mockery of the legislative process. Only in Louisiana could you have a flag-burning bill become an abortion bill."

Rep. Woody Jenkins, the original bill's author, voted against the new version because "the unborn is a human being from the moment of conception and we ought not make exceptions to the principle."

The bill carries a penalty of one to 10 years in prison and $10,000 to $100,000 in fines for doctors who perform abortions. It would not penalize women who get abortions.

In the House, Rep. C.R. Jones urged colleagues to reject the bill, pleading with them to resist the intense lobbying by fundamentalist Christian groups and Roman Catholics.

"I'm concerned that religious groups have taken over in Louisiana, the South, maybe this nation," Jones said.

Pennsylvania has the strictest state abortion law, but it is less restrictive than the Louisiana bill.

The Pennsylvania measure, approved in November, bans abortions based on the fetus' sex and bans abortions after the 24th week of pregnancy except to save the life of the mother or prevent "substantial and irreversible harm."

A doctor convicted under the sex-selection ban or the 24-week provision could be punished with up to seven years in prison and a $15,000 fine.

Portions of the law have been put on hold by a state appeals court.

Congress probes Arizona man's S&L takeovers

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Senate panel is investigating a federally approved deal in which an Arizona man was promised $1.8 billion in subsidies while putting up only $1,000 of his own money to buy 15 failing Texas savings and loans.

In the December 1988 deal, James M. Fail, a Phoenix insurance executive with past legal problems, purchased the insolvent savings and loans using borrowed money and the promised federal subsidies.

Fail put up only $1,000 of his own money and borrowed $60 million to purchase the institutions, Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, said. Fail consolidated the S&Ls into the Dallas-based Bluebonnet Savings.

"We have been investigating the 1988 (S&L rescue) deals that were made in the last month of 1988, and this is by far the worst of anything we've seen to date," Metzenbaum said in a telephone interview Sunday.

"The fact is, it's just an abomination," he said.

Today's hearing was scheduled by the Senate Judiciary subcommittee on antitrust, monopolies and business rights, which Metzenbaum chairs.

Metzenbaum said that M. Danny Wall, who was chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board when the deal was approved, refused to appear before the panel. Others who declined to appear, Metzenbaum said, included Robert J. Thompson, a lobbyist and former congressional liaison to President Bush when he was vice president.

Thompson, according to investigators, pushed for approval of the Fail deal, and in 1989 borrowed more than $500,000 from companies controlled by Fail.

Congressional sources confirmed an account in Sunday editions of The New York Times, which said federal payments helped Bluebonnet become the nation's most profitable large savings and loan last year.

Financial regulators have said high rates of return in such cases are indicators that the federal government failed to negotiate a good deal in the takeover of insolvent savings and loans.

Wall told the Times: "I did nothing for Bob Thompson that I didn't do for anyone else. There is nothing nefarious about it."

Efforts to contact Fail, Thompson and Wall were unsuccessful Sunday.

Investigators said Fail was allowed to acquire the institutions even though a company he controlled pleaded guilty to fraud in Alabama in 1976. Fail was indicted for securities fraud in that case, but the charges against him were dropped and he agreed not to conduct any new business in the state.

The congressional panel is trying to determine why the bidding process for the failed S&Ls was concluded quickly, why some federal bank board officials who raised questions about Fail were overruled, and what role was played by Thompson.

"The political implications of this deal need a lot of explaining," Metzenbaum said. "It appears from this particular instance the negotiators did not do their job very well."

George M. Barclay, president of the Federal Home Loan Bank in Dallas, acknowledged in a telephone interview Sunday that he wrote a letter overruling staff objections to Fail's eligibility for the deal. The letter to federal regulators was necessary for Fail's approval as a buyer.

He said he could not recall why he came to that conclusion but acknowledged he may have acted in response to telephone calls from officials in Washington. But he said "it's absolutely not true that anybody attempted to influence me," and that the letter raised a flag for regulators by mentioning Fail's past indictment.

He said the bank only certified to federal regulators "that we felt based upon the information we had that we had no objection, no legal objection, to his acquiring the institution" and that the bank would be able to properly regulate Fail's new institution.

Albanians who took refuge in embassy to leave tonight, Czech diplomats say

By TEDDIE WEYR
 Associated Press Writer

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Czechoslovak diplomats said the first of the more than 5,000 Albanians who took refuge in a dozen foreign embassies in Tirana would leave their Communist homeland tonight for Prague.

The announcement by the Foreign Ministry in Prague followed accusations by Albanian officials that foreign diplomats in the Albanian capital were deliberately slowing the emigration process to cause instability.

The Albanian leadership announced further government changes that appeared at least partly tied to popular discontent with the hard-line government.

The Presidium of the People's Assembly, the parliament, retired the ministers of food stuff industry and light industry and reassigned the ministers of public services and home trade, Albania's state ATA news agency said.

The government announced Sunday that the police and war ministers had been replaced. Today's shake-up involved ministers dealing with the economy and appeared meant to ease discontent over consumer shortages plaguing Albania's central economy.

Many of the more than 5,000 Albanians crowding foreign embassies in Tirana in an attempt to emigrate have said they seek a better economic life abroad.

In the Czechoslovak capital, Deputy Foreign Minister Vojtech Wagner said 51 refugees would arrive in Prague this evening from Tirana aboard an aircraft normally used by President Vaclav Havel, the state news agency CTK reported.

The Czechoslovak diplomat said only one or two asylum-seekers wanted to remain in Czechoslovakia and the rest wanted to go to the United States or Australia.

Other missions said that although the Albanians would travel through their countries, they did not yet know where they would settle.

The French Foreign Ministry in Paris said the formalities of obtaining passports for the 550 refugees at its embassy in Tirana were moving along rapidly, and "we hope they will be finished by the end of the day."

The asylum-seekers, some dodging police bullets, began taking refuge on June 28. Albanian authorities pledged Saturday that they would receive travel papers and be accompanied out by diplomatic personnel.

But referring to the decree that guaranteed the asylum-seekers would not be punished, the Albanian state ATA news agency on Sunday accused diplomats of not moving quickly enough to seek documents for the refugees.

"This is a stand with premeditation and certain aims to artificially create tensions and problems," the statement said. "It also arouses embarrassment and indignation in the public opinion."

In Bonn, a Foreign Ministry spokesman said today that any of the 3,000 Albanians crowding his country's embassy in Tirana who wish to travel to West Germany will be allowed to do so.

But the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, would not say whether the Albanians would be allowed to settle in West Germany.

Sometime between May 24 and May 25, a burglary was committed at the Owl Liquor Store, 217 E. Brown St. Entry was gained through the north glass door.

Stolen from the business were the following items:

- two bottles of Herradura tequila, valued at $20;
 - one bottle of Malibu rum, valued at $7.49;
 - one bottle of Pusser's rum, valued at $10;
 - three one-liter bottles of Meyer's rum, valued at $34.87;
 - three and one-half cases of Budweiser beer, valued at $39.95;
 - three cases of miscellaneous wines, valued at $250.
- Total loss in the burglary was $361.51.

Crimestoppers will pay a cash reward of up to $1,000 for information leading to the arrest and indictment of the person or persons responsible for the crime.

If you have information about the crime, or the sale, manufacture or distribution of illegal drugs, you can contact Crimestoppers at 669-2222.

Residents can remain anonymous and still be eligible for rewards.

Police arrest Pampa man in attempted sexual assault

Pampa police arrested a man Saturday evening at a local club following a complaint about an alleged attempted sexual assault.

According to a press release, police were called to the nightclub Party Zone, 600 S. Cuyler, at 7:35 p.m. Saturday in reference to attempted sexual assault.

Police arrested Lloyd Franklin Mays, 49, of 949 Barnard and charged him with attempted sexual assault and failure to identify. He remained in jail at press time today.

According to police reports, a female working at the club was approached by the suspect, who allegedly dragged her into the women's restroom and attempted to sexually assault her.

The assault was stopped after the woman's screams were heard by individuals at the club, who held the suspect until police arrived.

Police said this morning the case is still under investigation.

Death penalty sought against father who dunked 2-year-old

By JAMES MARTINEZ
Associated Press Writer

BARTOW, Fla. (AP) — A man accused of dunking his 2-year-old stepson headfirst into a toilet goes on trial on murder charges this week in a case that raised questions about social workers' failure to protect the toddler.

Prosecutors will seek the death penalty for Thomas Coe, who told police he was punishing Bradley McGee for soiling his diaper.

The boy's death brought unprecedented charges against four social workers, one of whom was convicted of child abuse.

"If nothing else, all this has made caseworkers be more careful to realize they're making life-or-death decisions here," said Pam Kirkland, the boy's foster mother before he was returned to Coe and the mother who abandoned him. "With every child, they have to stop and ask — 'Could this be the next Bradley McGee?'"

Coe, 23, goes on trial Tuesday in Fort Myers. Defense attorneys have acknowledged the dunking but say Coe did not intend to kill the boy, so it wasn't murder.

"We just want to make sure that if he's convicted, he gets convicted for the crime he committed," said attorney Robert Norgard.

The case grew beyond domestic violence as Bradley's road from abandonment to foster care and ultimately back into the hands of his troubled parents made him a symbol of failings in the state's social services system.

The boy was under the supervision of the state Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services from the time he was 4 months old, after his mother abandoned him at a shopping mall with a pretzel vendor.

He died of head injuries July 28, 1989, two months after a judge followed an HRS recommendation and ordered the child returned to his stepfather and mother, Sheryl McGee Coe.

The death prompted the Legislature last fall to allocate $39 million for more child protection workers. Legislators also changed the law to make child safety, not family reunification, the social services agency's top priority.

According to Coe's statements to investigators, the dunking came during potty training when Bradley dirtied his diaper.

After Mrs. Coe took Bradley out in the yard and hosed him down, Coe took him into the bathroom, grabbed the boy by the ankles and dunked him in the toilet bowl.

"Plunger style," a detective wrote.

When Bradley refused to stop screaming, he was put under a cold shower, then led down the hall to the living room.

Coe said he and his wife then hit the staggering Bradley in the head with pillows until he suddenly stiffened, collapsed and curled into a fetal position. Efforts to revive him failed.

Both parents were charged with first-degree murder and aggravated child abuse. Mrs. Coe, 21, pleaded no contest earlier this year to second-degree murder and is serving a 30-year prison term.

Coe is described by relatives as a brooding, angry young man in constant pain from a congenitally crippled hip and hereditary kidney disease.

In statements to prosecutors, Mrs. Coe said the toilet-dunking was the culmination of a pattern of abuse by her husband against Bradley. She claims he urinated on the child, put cayenne pepper on his genitals and dunked him in the toilet at least once before.

Defense attorneys argue Coe dunked the child to discipline him, not to harm him.

Within weeks of Bradley's death, charges were filed against four state social workers. Three were cleared before Bradley's main caseworker, Margaret Barber, 62, was convicted last month of child abuse and placed on three months' probation.

Ms. Barber had recommended that the boy be returned to his parents without showing the court a psychological report that described the Coes as explosive, infantile and unable to care for children.

"I still lay awake at night and wonder how it could have happened — how it all could possibly have been prevented," said Ms. Kirkland, who cared for Bradley for 14 months. "There's no way I can put it out of my mind."

Workers align the headstone of Albert Sidney Johnston, a Civil War hero from Texas, at the Texas Confederate Museum's new quarters at the Helen Marie Taylor Complex in Waco, where the museum is moving from its former Austin location.

Confederate Museum moves to Waco

WACO (AP) — The Texas Confederate Museum is moving to Waco after being asked to vacate its 100-year location in Austin by state officials.

The decision to move the museum came last fall after the state asked members of the Texas Division of the United Daughters of the Confederacy to move out of the 132-year-old General Land Office on the Capitol grounds. Workers are restoring the land office building the next two years.

The Confederate Museum is a collection of artifacts such as books, letters and original battle flags valued at more than $2 million.

The museum's new home is slightly smaller. Volunteers will work with part of the collection of Confederate memorabilia in two rooms, a library and an office. UDC members will rotate exhibits, keeping many artifacts in storage while others are displayed.

"I cried on the way from Austin this morning while following the moving van," Edith Williams, president of the 3,800-member UDC, said Saturday.

"I cried because the museum was in Austin for over 100 years," she said, "and it was sad to see it move. But it feels good, too, because here we'll have the proper facilities, like climate control."

The museum will open Saturday in new facilities at the Helen Marie Taylor Museum Complex.

The grand reopening weekend program includes a Confederate reenactment camp, a dinner and a golf tournament.

The museum will open for a preview on Sunday.

Pete Simmon, secretary-treasurer of the Taylor Museum board, said the Confederate Museum is a welcome addition to the larger museum, depicting a part of Waco's past.

Ms. Williams said Waco's atmosphere adds to the museum, saying it seemed "more Southern" than other Texas cities UDC members considered.

The museum's objectives are historical, educational, patriotic and memorial, Williams said. She said the museum will show the history of both sides during the Civil War.

"We'll try to present both sides as evenly as possible," she said, "but we'll know more about the Confederacy because we have more Confederate artifacts."

Protesters face off at summit headquarters

By CHIP BROWN
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Activists pushing for everything from democracy in China to increased U.S. farm trade were expected to demonstrate today at the 16th economic summit of the world's richest nations commenced.

Chai Ling, a leader of the Chinese democracy movement, was to head a gathering at a Houston park early today.

Ms. Ling, who escaped recently from China after 10 months underground hiding from Chinese authorities, was expected to rally support for improved loan policies and trade with China.

The Family Farmers Coalition and Texans United were expected to protest the farm trade tariffs in a park across from Rice University, where the summit leaders were meeting today.

On Sunday, more than 3,000 advocates of more spending for AIDS research marched through downtown Houston.

The demonstrators carried signs and flags from each of the seven countries attending the summit.

"Our message to the world leaders is 'Get off the stick and help health worldwide,'" said Bob Kunst, executive director of Miami-based Cure AIDS Now, which sponsored the march.

"There is no international plan to cure AIDS and that's why we are here — to demand it," Kunst said.

Later in the day, protesters demonstrated against protesters in a park across from the gates of Rice.

Anti-abortion demonstrators were mocked by a dozen members of a separate AIDS group, ACT UP, who in turn were derided by a similarly small contingent from the American Family Association, an anti-gay group.

Police drew their riot sticks at one point, but no violence erupted and no arrests were made.

The anti-abortion demonstrators, representing 50 Houston area churches, planted 4,400 crosses in what they called the "Cemetery of Innocents" to symbolize the number of reported daily abortions in America.

Shortly after the anti-abortion advocates began reading prayers and singing hymns, members of ACT UP stormed the mock cemetery with chants.

Police, with riot sticks drawn, immediately stationed themselves in front of the dozen shouting ACT UP members.

But the police quickly retreated as approximately 10 members of a third protest group, the American Family Association, walked up and silently stood behind the ACT UP activists with anti-gay posters.

Leslie Perez, who heads the Houston chapter of ACT UP, directed her group away from the anti-abortion gathering and began shouting obscenities at the members of the American Family Association, an anti-gay group.

The AFA protesters retreated from the demonstrations and members of ACT UP, which stands for AIDS Coalition to Unleash Power, followed them into a nearby parking lot and disbanded.

Members of the National Organization for Women gathered in Hermann Park after the three groups departed and demonstrated on behalf of women who died from illegal abortions.

Soviet rockets may send up U.S. satellites

HOUSTON (AP) — The Bush administration has agreed to let Soviet rockets be used for launching commercial U.S. satellites, officials confirmed Sunday.

Launches would be undertaken by a private Australian real estate company, the Cape York Space Agency, from a base in northern Australia operated by a U.S. firm, according to a report in Sunday editions of The New York Times.

Confirming that account, Secretary of State James A. Baker III said on the ABC television program, This Week With David Brinkley, that "the president's made a decision that an initial launch can go forward."

On another Sunday interview program, President Bush's national security adviser, Brent Scowcroft, said, "This doesn't have anything to do with the U.S. space program," which has recently seen a $1.5 billion orbiting telescope crippled by a mirror ground to the wrong formula and National Aeronautics and Space Administration engineers unable to fix a hydrogen fuel leak in its space shuttles.

The Soviet rocket program is "just another one" of several commercial launching ventures operated by China, France and U.S. companies, Scowcroft told interviewers on the CNN program, Newsmaker Sunday.

Baker and Scowcroft were interviewed in Houston where Bush and other leaders of the world's top seven industrial powers are holding their annual economic summit.

The Bush administration already has permitted the launch of an American communications satellite from a Chinese rocket.

According to the report in The Times, the National Space Council, chaired by Vice President Quayle, approved a set of recommendations under which a division of United Technologies Corp. would be granted an export license to operate a launch base at Cape York, Australia for the Australian company.

Soviet Zenit rockets could be launched by 1995, with engineers supplied by the Soviet space agency Glavkosmos, the newspaper said. Cost of the enterprise was said to be $500 million.

U.S. rocket suppliers were said to object to facing competition from a new quarter, and the space council's conditions were said to include provisions guarding against unfairly low pricing of the Soviet rockets.

ARCO, OSHA officials continue investigation into plant explosion

CHANNELVIEW (AP) — ARCO Chemical Co. administrators were scheduled to be called in today to join investigators seeking the cause of an explosion that killed 17 workers.

"We'll just bring some administrators in. Other employees will be out until a judgment is made about the safety at the plant and we will continue to pay their salaries and try to keep them informed about what's happening in the plant," said Gerald Davis, ARCO Chemical spokesman.

Company officials and representatives from the Occupational Safety and Health Administration toured the crumbled remains of a block-long area of the 564-acre chemical plant on Sunday.

Seventeen workers from ARCO and contractors Austin Industrial Inc. and Waste Processors Industries Inc. were killed Thursday night when a wastewater tank exploded in a fireball. Investigators have been unable to determine the cause of the blast.

A Houston attorney said he planned to file a wrongful death lawsuit today on behalf of a relative who was killed in the blast.

"A week before this thing happened, he was thinking about quitting that place," attorney James Stafford said of ARCO employee John Blackstock. "He had gone to his supervisor and told him that he thought that treatment area was unsafe. He said if they didn't correct it, he would quit."

Blackstock, 25, a senior operator, was killed while working at the plant.

Sandra Lucas Davis became the first survivor to file a wrongful death lawsuit against ARCO Chemical on Friday in connection with the death of her husband, Gregory Scott Davis, 27.

The widow of a millwright killed Thursday said her husband called her a half hour before the plant blew up, saying workers restarting equipment there were afraid it might explode.

Lori Davis, no relation to Sandra Davis, said her husband, Michael Davis, said they were afraid to restart a compressor that they had fixed.

"They thought it might blow," Lori Davis said.

Michael Davis, 24, had been working with Austin Industrial Inc. on the compressor for 17 hours, Mrs. Davis said.

Gerald Davis said ARCO will check out any leads in the case.

"In this investigation we will look at all aspects, all issues and address all concerns," the ARCO spokesman said. "We will conduct as comprehensive an investigation as can be done."

Stafford and Lori Davis said the employees had been working long hours in recent weeks.

"They were so short-handed that they were working them hard," Stafford said.

"He worked 86 hours last week," Lori Davis said of her husband. "They worked the guys too hard. They'd been on 16 hours and instead of waiting until things were safe and getting another crew, they rushed it. They were wrong."

But plant manager Earl McCaleb said the longer work hours did not contribute to the explosion.

"I don't think that work hours had anything to do with this," McCaleb said. "It's not all that uncommon to work 16-hour shifts throughout the industry."

Harold Sorgenti, president and chief executive officer of ARCO Chemical, earlier had said workers had been repairing an electric compressor near a 900,000-gallon wastewater treatment tank when the explosion occurred. The tank separates hydrocarbons from water and then a compressor pumps the sometimes volatile vapors into a pipeline where impurities can be removed before releasing the gases to the atmosphere, officials said.

Some legislators caught in political crossfire over savings and loan crisis

By JILL LAWRENCE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democratic Rep. James McClure Clarke is being cast by the Republican Party as one of "the worst violators of the public trust" in the savings and loan crisis.

Why? The North Carolina lawmaker voted last year to let the industry continue investing in junk bonds. So did 113 other House members, none of whom were criticized for that on the GOP hit list.

Clarke is one of the politicians caught in the crossfire as Democrats develop the theme they hope to ride to the White House in 1992, and Republicans respond with fusillades of their own.

The result is a spotlight on a handful of House members facing the voters this fall. And some of them aren't too happy about the escalating party rhetoric.

"Making a political football of it is not going to solve the problem," said Rep. Charles Pashayan, R-Calif. His Democratic challenger consulted with party strategists in Washington and came out swinging on S&Ls.

"Frankly, from my standpoint, there is enough blame to go around to everybody," said Rep. Doug Barnard of Georgia, one of the Democrats on the GOP list.

Both parties acknowledge a few members of Congress are vulnerable on S&Ls. But the Democrats aren't about to soft-pedal a promising national strategy and the Republicans can't take the assault lying down.

"To me this is apples and oranges," said Democratic Party Chairman Ronald Brown. "On the one hand, you have accusations against individuals. On the other, you have the question of whose policies allowed this mess to happen. And there is no doubt in my mind that this happened because of Republican economic policies."

The Democrats, though taking a broad-brush approach, are not ignoring individual Republicans with S&L problems. Pashayan is one example.

The Fresno congressman took $26,000 in contributions from former S&L operator Charles Keating and his friends, then tried to block restrictions on risky thrift investments. Pashayan said his actions were not influenced by the contribution, but he returned the money.

The national GOP strategy has been to defend President Bush's handling of the $300 billion-plus bailout and, when provoked, point fingers at Congress and individual Democrats.

The Republican National Committee hastily compiled its list of 10 alleged "violators of the public trust" after learning that Brown was launching an S&L offensive at a June 29-30 meeting of state party chairmen.

Among those named were the four Democrats among the Keating Five — senators under investigation for accepting hundreds of thousands of dollars from Keating and his S&L associates, then allegedly lobbying regulators to keep his failing S&L open. None of the five is up for re-election this year.

The GOP case against Barnard and Rep. Frank Annunzio, D-Ill., both Keating beneficiaries and heads of subcommittees dealing with S&Ls, is that they protected the industry while the crisis was developing. Both deny it.

Rep. Steve Neal, D-N.C., made the list for sponsoring a 1987 amendment that Republicans claimed was too nice to S&Ls. He disputes the interpretation and says he's targeted because his re-election races are always tough.

"They're going to try this stuff to confuse the issue and pass the buck, but ultimately they cannot do it, because it was their main philosophy," said Neal, another banking subcommittee chairman.

Neal's Republican opponent didn't raise the S&L issue until the GOP list appeared. But Neal says the Democrats should stay on the offensive — even if he gets hit by a stray shot.

Now is the time to end subsidies

The U.S. Agriculture Department recently reported that 1990 may be a record year for farm income. From $55 billion to $59 billion should be earned, compared with record of $57.2 billion in 1988. Even 1989's figure was a strong $54 billion.

American's farm economy is as robust as a stuffed hog, and does not need the $10 billion a year in federal subsidies seized from taxpayers. Now is the time to entirely eliminate the subsidies. This would also cut the federal budget deficit by $10 billion, and return farming to a free-market footing.

The restoration of free-market farming also would help consumers by cutting food prices. A mother now pays 20 percent more for her children's milk than she would if federal farm programs didn't constrict the market. And she pays double the market price for peanuts, a good source of protein for children's growing bodies, thanks to an elaborate system of peanut quotas that enriches a few farmers with political clout. Such extra costs especially hurt poor families, who pay a higher percentage of their incomes for food than do other Americans.

Reps. Dick Arney and Charles Schumer have proposed a bill that would go far toward restoring a free farm market. Their bill would end all farm subsidies to farms with more than $500,000 in sales per year, or farmers who earn over $100,000 per year. Federal farm welfare is supposed to help poor farmers. But as things now stand, the richest 15 percent of farmers get two-thirds of the taxpayers' money.

The reason for this is simple: Only rich farmers who can afford to play political and bureaucratic games can glom onto taxpayers' dollars. The poor husbandman is too busy ploughing his field to take jet trips to Washington to lobby for a subsidy.

Rep. Arney's plan should be passed by Congress and signed into law by President Bush. It would probably save about $1 billion a year. So more is needed. If all wealthy farmers were pushed off the farm welfare rolls, according to one calculation, $7 billion would be saved; subsidies would be reduced to $3 billion a year. But even that amount is too high. If all subsidies were eliminated, poor farmers would not be hurt, but would instead find it much easier to compete once the system was no longer rigged in favor of rich farmers.

In addition to the expected record farm income for 1990, other factors make this the year to end subsidies. With communism collapsing across the world, new markets are opening up for American farm products. As Eastern European countries reinstate free market systems, their liberated people, with new capitalist cash, will demand Yankee "beefsteak," grain and vegetables. We should meet their post-socialist gourmandism by ending our own farm socialism.

To exclude or not to exclude

WASHINGTON — Like some indecisive Hamlet, the U.S. Supreme Court has spent a good part of its now-ending term brooding over a rule of evidence: To exclude or not to exclude, that is the question.

No fewer than seven cases this term have dealt with what criminal defense lawyers love to invoke as the "exclusionary rule." It is a judge-made rule, dating from 1914, which holds that probative evidence may not be admissible at trial if the evidence has been unlawfully obtained.

The rule is basically a good rule. It embodies the spirit of the Fourth Amendment, the most widely cherished portion of the Bill of Rights.

Newsmen and churchmen love the First Amendment. Gun owners love the Second. Those charged with crime are grateful for the Fifth, Sixth and Eighth Amendments, but everybody benefits from the Fourth. It protects us against unreasonable searches and seizures of our persons and property.

Trouble is, the amendment is packed with ambiguous terms. What is an "unreasonable" search? The adjective figured recently in a Michigan case involving sobriety checkpoints. Is it an unreasonable exercise of the state's power for police to stop all cars briefly at a checkpoint so that drivers may be eyeballed for evidence of drunk driving? Six members of the court said, no, this is not unreasonable. Evidence so obtained may be admitted in court.

Another drunk-driving case arose in Florida. Martin Leslie Wells was arrested for driving under the influence. A state trooper impounded his car and had it towed in. A search of the car for inventory purposes turned up a locked suitcase in the trunk. Police forced open the suitcase and found a considerable amount of marijuana. Should the suitcase evidence have been admitted?

No, said a unanimous court. The Florida troopers had no uniform policy for inventory searches. In the absence of such a policy, too much discretion is left to the police to search or not to search.

Under the Fourth Amendment, search warrants must be issued only upon "probable cause." Warrants must "particularly describe" the things to be seized. In an Alabama case decided on June 11, the court grappled with the question of probable cause.

Acting on a wholly anonymous telephone tip, Montgomery police tailed Vanessa Rose White, stopped her car, and found both marijuana and cocaine. The court voted 6-3 that evidence so obtained is admissible, but Justice Byron White called it a "close case" and Justice John Paul Stevens, in a blistering dissent, said White's opinion made a "mockery" of the Fourth Amendment.

How particular is "particularly described"? In a California case decided June 4, the court dealt with the robbery of a coin dealer. The victim, Erwin Wallaker, described three stolen rings. He also described his two assailants. They were masked; one carried an Uzi machine gun, the other a stun gun. They handcuffed him and stole several articles of clothing. Police quickly obtained a warrant for the arrest of Terry Brice Horton.

For some reason not immediately apparent, the warrant "particularly described" only the rings, but when an officer executed the warrant at Horton's residence, behold! There in plain view were an Uzi, two stun guns, a handcuff key and Wallaker's clothing. Should the items that were not described in the warrant have been admitted in evidence?

Yes, said seven members of the court, let the evidence in. Justice William Brennan and Thurgood Marshall dissented. Even though the weapons and incriminating clothing were in plain view, the items had not been "particularly described." The two justices would go strictly by the book.

The Fourth protects the right of the people to be secure in "their" houses. A Minneapolis case decided on April 18 had to do with Robert Darren Olson, who was suspected of complicity in the murder of a gasoline station manager. Police tracked him to a duplex on Fillmore Northeast and found him hiding in closet. He made incriminating statements. It wasn't Olson's home. He was an overnight guest. Should the statements Olson made at the duplex be admitted?

No, said the court 7-2, the statements should have been excluded. As a guest, Olson had a "reasonable expectation of privacy." Police should have obtained a warrant.

I thought two of these decisions were wrong — the case of the anonymous tipster and the case of the overnight guest. The dissenting opinions made more sense to me, but these are close questions. Most of the time, most observers will agree with most of the calls.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Monday, July 9, the 190th day of 1990. There are 175 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: On July 9, 1776, the Declaration of Independence was read aloud to Gen. George Washington's troops in New York.

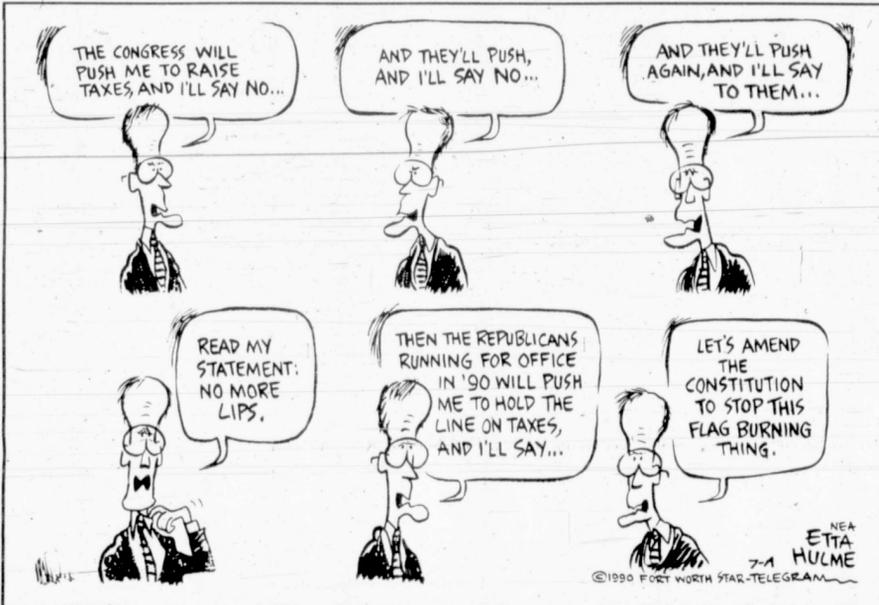

On this date: In 1816, Argentina declared its independence from Spain.

In 1819, sewing-machine inventor Elias Howe was born in Spencer, Mass. In 1918, 101 people were killed in the worst train wreck in U.S. history as an inbound local collided with an outbound express in Nashville, Tenn.

In 1947, the engagement of Britain's Princess Elizabeth to Lt. Philip Mountbatten was announced.

In 1951, President Truman asked Congress to formally end the state of war between the United States and Germany.

In 1976, Uganda called on the U.N. Security Council to condemn Israel for its raid on Entebbe Airport July 4 to rescue hostages held by pro-Palestinian hijackers.

Gorbachev's crucial challenge

There's an unwritten code for convicts in prison: "Lay low."

Any newcomer to incarceration soon learns that the only safe conduct is "don't start anything, stay in line, march in step, do as you're told.

Some cons, once out of prison, want back in. It's too overwhelming after years of dependence, to have to dodge traffic, feed yourself and make decisions.

A communist society is much like a prison, and President Gorbachev has no greater challenge than trying to get "freed communists" to learn again to think for themselves.

Remember when amateur pilot Mathias Rust flew a rented Cessna over the Iron Curtain and landed smack in the middle of Moscow's Red Square?

He flew through what supposed to be the most heavily guarded airspace in the world. He was first spotted on Soviet radar over the Gulf of Finland, so the Soviet had six hours to warn him down or shoot him down. They did neither.

Because radar operators relayed the "problems" to their superiors — and the information filtered on up through the complicated Soviet Army chain of command — with each general in turn afraid to take action on his own.

Paul Harvey

So nobody did. Communism is like that. That's why communism doesn't work.

Gorbachev, trying to reattach "ex-cons" the responsibilities of decision-making on their own, faces a monumental challenge, maybe a hopeless one.

Through Gorbachev's new open door, McDonald's Corporation personnel arrived in Moscow enthusiastically prepared to establish the first of their hamburger restaurants in the U.S.S.R.

You might be interested, someday when we have time, in a detailed chronology of the frustration suffered by American architects and builders on that project.

Such simple things as getting the right kind of concrete gravel delivered at the right place at the right time proved almost impossible.

Meetings of 40 people were scheduled — and only one came. And he came late.

Except when meetings were scheduled at noon. Then, anticipating a free lunch, more people showed up. But cooperation was still nil.

At the administrative level it was almost impossible to get anybody to make a decision. Yesterday's communists, now told they are "free," still "stay in line, march in step, do as they are told."

Open defiance in four Soviet states reflects abject impatience with this chronic recalcitrance.

When confidential surveys are conducted among Soviet citizens, 68 percent think highly of Soviet President Gorbachev but 50 percent believe there may be a public revolt against his government.

Ninety percent are unhappy over the shortage of consumer goods, 85 percent are dissatisfied with services and 76 percent unhappy about health care and about "life in general."

Communism hasn't worked. It has not responded to the heads of the people, much less to their wants.

And the still-entrenched bureaucracy remains intimidated to inaction.

Liberals trying to rewrite Reagan era

By WILLIAM A. RUSHER

It is now clear that the liberal media have launched a major drive to destroy the historical reputation of Ronald Reagan.

There is nothing surprising about this; political foes are not expected to lay posies at each others' feet. Reagan was, without question, the worst thing that ever happened to modern American liberalism. The liberals could never lay a glove on him as long as he was in the ring, but there's no law that says they have to stop trying just because he's left it.

As a matter of fact, the liberals (and this also goes for the Democratic Party, which is dominated by them) are practically compelled to try to rewrite the history of the 1980s, because, as it stands, it is an immense historical plus for conservatism and the Republican Party.

The litany of Reagan's achievements is as overwhelming as it is familiar: inflation virtually ended, interest rates cut in half, income taxes reduced dramatically, unemployment lowered, 17 million new jobs created, the longest sustained boom in post-war history launched, the nation's defenses rebuilt, every square yard of the Free World kept intact, and the Soviet Union persuaded at last that the Cold War must end.

The liberals have wisely chosen to counter this list of achievements by ignoring them. They offer, instead, a "Reagan Era" characterized by just two words: "greed" and "corruption."

They point vaguely at various administration figures who left office "under a cloud" — not bothering to note how many of them, like Ray Donovan and Lyn Nofziger, were subsequently acquitted of all wrongdoing.

They shake their heads over the criminality of such Wall Street operators as Ivan Boesky and Michael Milken — not mentioning in whose administration their misdeeds were set on the road to prosecution. They paint an impressionistic picture of rich Americans swilling at the trough, while the ranks of the homeless grew.

In this work, the liberals have now brought on-line a recent and valuable recruit. Kevin Phillips is the political analyst whose brilliant 1969 book The Emerging Republican Majority correctly described the coalition that was just then taking power in America (and which has retained it, almost uninterrupted, ever since.) He dedicated the volume to his two heroes — President Nixon and Attorney General John Mitchell, who he fondly imagined understood and would nurture the coalition.

But the Nixon administration ended in disaster, and the conservative coalition, whose rise Phillips had rightly predicted, turned out to have aspects not to his liking. By 1982, he had turned savagely against the coalition and its avatar, Ronald Reagan, and had written a book (Post-Conservative America) predicting its early demise.

Eight years further on, he is still predicting it. His newest book, The Politics of Rich and Poor, broadly exposes the old "pendulum" wheeze of Arthur Schlesinger Jr.: The Democrats have been out of power so long it almost has to be their turn.

This pleased the liberals so much that The New York Times printed a large excerpt from it in its Sunday magazine on June 17. The book's thesis is well stated by the Times in its summary: "The '80s were a capitalist blowout, says this noted conservative (sic) — the rich got richer while nearly everyone else paid the price. Cleaning up will be the task of the '90s."

Conservatives (and the White House and Republican National Committee) had better get smart and counterattack before that mass of bushwah gets set in stone. They have more to lose by it than Reagan. Their hope of future victories depends, in large part, upon a permanent national appreciation of Reagan's immense achievements in the 1980s.

Luckily, the American people are not likely to forget them. The media are powerful, but not that powerful.

Doctors, aides try to reduce AIDS among street prostitutes

By LISA GENASCI
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The streetwalker's hollow eyes gave her away: She needed a fix. Behind her on the empty street, a van approached and she glanced over. Maybe she could turn a quick trick.

The driver of the white Dodge had a different idea. He wanted to test her blood for AIDS and ask a few questions, and he offered a bag of condoms and $10 — three times the amount she might make for a sexual favor.

But more, he offered to open a rare line of communication with a world ravaged by AIDS.

"I really need your help," said Vanessa, 37, as she stepped into the van. She nestled into the comfortable back seat and stretched out her thin arm.

The inch-long track marks along its length told her tale. They also indicated a more than one-in-two chance she was infected with HIV, the AIDS virus.

Vanessa is one of 1,600 streetwalkers whom a New York doctor, Joyce Wallace, has tested and counseled about AIDS.

Ms. Wallace's van and a crew of six roam New York's red-light districts.

She has found that in the nation's largest city, a third of all streetwalkers are infected with AIDS. Equally important, she found most were infected by dirty needles or drug-using boyfriends — not by their clients.

And in a separate study, she found scant evidence streetwalkers are passing the virus to clients.

In the open back of Wallace's van, driver John Reid gently asked Vanessa about her sex and drug habits while Karen Heagarty took a blood sample.

They listened to her story.

"It's like fighting a war down here," said Vanessa, dressed in a tight skirt and white halter blouse. "Before I end up dead, I want to get out of this."

Wallace has heard this tale many times over the past eight years. In 1982, with a boyfriend in tow for protection, she began combing the 11th Avenue "stroll" in Manhattan to test street women and question them about their sex and drug practices.

In 1988, Ansell Inc., which manufactures Lifestyle Condoms, donated a $15,000 van. Last year, with a $140,000 grant from the CDC and the state Department of Health, Wallace and her staff began cruising areas prostitutes were known to frequent.

Besides the $10 and a clear plastic bag of condoms streetwalkers are given, they get an additional $20 if they stop by Wallace's Greenwich Village office to pick up their test results.

"These are throwaway women," Wallace said. "Their contact with the establishment is only occasional. It's a judge, a police officer who wants to move them off a street corner, a school that failed them."

Data from this year has not yet been tabulated. But from the 950 women tested last year, Wallace drew a startling profile:

- Homeless: 45 percent.
- Drug users: 95 percent.
- Mothers: 88 percent. The children of 90 percent lived in foster care or with relatives.
- High school dropouts: 50 percent.
- Black: 49 percent; Hispanic: 27 percent.
- HIV infected: 33 percent.

The high incidence of poverty and drug addiction brings added risk of AIDS infection for both the woman and her client, former prostitutes said.

Many streetwalkers today are amateurs, not the "professional" women of previous years, said a former prostitute of eight years and drug user of 10 who asked to be identified only as Joellen.

"They run down the price because they are basically keeping a drug habit, they don't take the time to screen their partners and they often don't use condoms," said Joellen, of Prostitutes of New York, a support group.

Women are working longer to make the same money, Joellen said. The price of a trick is $3 for streetwalkers in some neighborhoods. Prostitutes who work out of brothels or hotels earn more.

Streetwalkers used to earn up to $40 for a trick, Joellen said.

Despite the potential risk of AIDS, the clientele hasn't changed, she said, drawing a profile of the average john in New York as either an awkward college-age man or a "suburban daddy."

Johns are "just as resistant to using condoms as they ever were," Joellen said. Beverly, a 27-year-old streetwalker, said some men will pay more for sex without condoms.

"The men somehow think they are immune to AIDS," Joellen said.

On the whole, the johns are not yet being infected with AIDS, although the risk is there.

Wallace has tested the blood of 500 women who say they have had contact with prostitutes since 1978, and has found only three who apparently were infected by it. Each of the three had had more than 600 encounters with hookers and had never used condoms.

About half the streetwalkers said they used condoms with clients at least some of the time. Most did not use them with husbands or boyfriends.

Most streetwalkers were infected by their intravenous drug-using boyfriends or through their own drug use, Wallace said. At least 58 percent of the women who injected drugs were infected with AIDS.

Back on the street, Vanessa stepped from the van clutching condoms, information about drug rehabilitation programs — with waiting lists a mile long — and a number to call for her test result.

"I want to start over but there's not much chance for me," she said. "Where do I begin?"

Karen Heagarty, right, takes blood from an unidentified woman in the back of a van parked on the street in one of New York's red light districts for HIV testing.

Longtime game show host Bill Cullen dies at age 70

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bill Cullen, the dean of game show hosts whose 35 network credits include such popular series as To Tell the Truth and The Price Is Right died of cancer Saturday. He was 70.

Cullen, who had known of his condition for months, died of complications from lung cancer at 5:25 p.m. at his home, said his manager, George Spota.

As a celebrity panelist and master of ceremonies, Cullen was a down-to-earth and witty personality who was invited by Americans into their living rooms for more than 40 years.

"He certainly created the yardstick of professionalism by which all other emcees could follow," said Spota.

Cullen was a familiar face as the glib panelist on CBS's I've Got a Secret from 1952 to 1967. He also hosted the original Price Is Right from 1957 to 1964 on both NBC and later on ABC.

"He was the Frank Sinatra of game shows," said Fred Westbrook, a friend and game show agent.

"I hope never to be a big, really big, star," Cullen told The New York Times in 1958. "I may never be one in any case. But I've seen too many big names burn themselves out on television."

Cullen appeared on radio and television game shows from 1944 through 1988.

His game show resume includes The $25,000 Pyramid, Three on a Match, Pass the Buck, To Tell the Truth and The Jokers Wild.

He made the cover of the national edition of TV Guide seven times between 1954 and 1984, including twice in one month in 1964.

Bill Cullen in 1978 photo.

Cullen was working in a garage in Pittsburgh in 1939 when he got his first job in broadcasting as an unpaid assistant disc jockey. He later became a regular announcer earning $25 dollars a week.

In 1943, Cullen moved to New York and became a staff announcer with the CBS radio network. A year later, he became announcer for the Winner Take All game show.

"He's spent more time on broadcast air, radio and television, than anyone else in the business," said Spota.

Cullen is survived by his wife, Ann, of 35 years.

Spota said funeral services will be held privately. A memorial service for friends and relatives may be scheduled in a few weeks, he said.

Display: Peeking at personal congressional letters

By LARRY MARGASAK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Forget Gary Hart and Donna Rice — you don't always need a politician and the other woman to titillate the imagination. Sometimes what goes on between a lawmaker and his WIFE is just as interesting.

And no less than the Library of Congress is offering a peep through the keyhole.

From September to March, the library will display some of the most personal mail that ever traveled between members of Congress and their wives over the last 200 years.

Yes, there was sex in Washington in the nation's formative years. It's described by Rep. Job Pierson, D-N.Y., to his wife, Clarissa, on Dec. 17, 1834.

It seems Mrs. Pierson's brother, a U.S. senator, seduced a maid the first week of her employment and "cohabitated with her during the whole session."

"The other boarders were angry at this monopoly," Pierson wrote. "They enticed some four or five girls from a house of ill-fame ... who came there every night" until the landladies "ordered the servants to bar the doors against their admission."

Other letters radiate laughter, sadness, courage, love, poignancy, fear and that old bromide that a gal stands by her man. There is only one woman — the late Rep. Clare Booth Luce, R-Conn. — among the lawmakers featured in the exhibit, which is part of the library's bicentennial celebration of Congress.

The letters discuss:

- The role of women. "Always be sunshine and flowers," Pierson counseled Clarissa on Feb. 12, 1833, but never worry about "the price of wheat" because "such matters should be provided and regulated by the other sex."

- Spousal wit. "Mark my magnanimity," Elizabeth Woodbury wrote her Jacksonian Democrat husband, Sen. Levi Woodbury of New Hampshire, on Jan. 3, 1830. "I here invest you with a carte-blanche, to bow to, to smile upon, or to flatter any lady you please, without doing penance for it on paper. ..."

- Spousal support. "You have rendered the world the greatest service ... you have used the power and opportunity ... for humanity and democracy," Belle Case La Follette wrote Sen. Robert M. La Follette, R-Wis., on March 5, 1917. It was the eve of America's entry into World War I and La Follette had just fought bitterly, under tremendous pressure, against President Wilson's proposal to arm U.S. merchant ships.

- Society ladies. Sen. Woodbury writing to Elizabeth on Dec. 19, 1829 that Miss Silsbee was "flat as a pancake." Mrs. Munroe resembled "the elephant — her step an earthquake and her breath a storm." And Mrs. Polk? "Thin as a hatchet and grown almost positively ugly."

- The congressional pay raise of 1873. It was "pushed through the Senate during the final night using all sorts of parliamentary tricks," according to Sen. Carl Schurz, R-Mo. He wrote his wife, Margarethe, on March 5, 1873, "The entire operation was so shameless. ..."

- Unflattering views of Congress by those who served. "We daily go to the Capitol at about eleven o'clock, do little or nothing and return at about three o'clock to dine," Sen. Simeon Olcott wrote wife Tryphena, back in New Hampshire, on New Year's Day 1802.

Twenty-two years later Andrew Jackson, then a Democratic senator from Tennessee, wrote his wife, Rachel. "I am truly wearied with lounging here; doing nothing, but feeding on the public funds."

As the Civil War approached on Dec. 7, 1860, Whig Rep. Justin Smith Morrill informed his wife, Ruth. "I am put on the great committee to save the Union but I do not think it can be saved and I shall on Monday decline to serve. ..."

The war was under way when Electa Dawes wrote Rep. Henry L. Dawes of Massachusetts, on July 25, 1861, that "right will prevail" and "the colored man will have rights which will be recognized and respected."

Four years later, on April 16, 1965, Dawes wrote his wife that he had attempted to call on President Lincoln two nights earlier, but "found he had gone to the theater."

The news of the assassination arrived just as Dawes arrived home and he wrote, sadly, "I am at a funeral and the nation are mourners."

The exhibit opens Sept. 13, 1990 in the foyer of the Library of Congress in Washington, D.C. It will run through March 17, 1991.

Trial starts on challenge of school finance law

By PEGGY FIKAC
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — Poor school districts and the state returned to the courtroom today to wage battle anew over how to divvy up tax money for public schools.

The school districts are challenging the education reform package lawmakers approved last month in response to a unanimous Texas Supreme Court order for change.

The package adds $528 million to state school funding for the 1990-91 school year. The money is being raised through tax increases including a quarter-cent sales tax boost.

The plan is meant to even out funding differences between rich and poor school districts over several years.

Poor school districts say it doesn't go far enough in changing the $13.5 billion-a-year finance system, which relies on state aid, local property taxes and some federal money.

The 68 poor schools contend the Legislature's new plan is unconstitutional, but only 13 of those schools want the court to throw it out immediately. The 55 other districts say the plan should be allowed to take effect temporarily to avoid disrupting the school year.

"This is really only round two," in the financing battle, said Rick Gray, attorney for the 55 districts. "It's just taken a while to get here."

The poor districts challenged the funding system in state court in 1984, saying their students were being cheated of educational opportunities provided in wealthier districts that raise more money through local property taxes.

After several appeals, the Texas Supreme Court in October ruled the system unconstitutional and ordered an overhaul.

Leaders in the predominantly Democratic Legislature and Republican Gov. Bill Clements agreed to the tax-financed package after three months of special sessions this year. The Legislature approved the plan in June.

Clements and other state leaders have said they believe the system will pass muster with the court.

"I don't have any way to know what the trial court and ultimately the Supreme Court will rule," said state Education Commissioner Bill Kirby. "But I'm confident that the state made a good-faith effort and made a major commitment."

The state aims to have 95 percent of Texas students in an equalized system by 1995.

"We think that the system is significantly changed," Kirby said.

Assistant Attorney General Kevin O'Hanlon said the law provides a way to keep track of increasing education costs so the gap between rich and poor school districts won't widen in future years. The gap increased after past education reform efforts.

But Gray said "weasel words" in the law could allow state officials to skirt the real cost of education and permit "tremendous disparities" in funding.

"The bill allows the wealthiest districts to raise and spend whatever they feel is appropriate for their education while limiting poor school districts to an arbitrary figure," said a court document filed by the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund.

The fund represents the 13 districts, led by San Antonio's Edgewood, which were the original plaintiffs in the case. They want State District Judge Scott McCown of Austin to immediately throw out the new law.

The state and the other 55 poor school districts in the case say the law should take effect for this school year to prevent disrupting school district budgets. According to them, McCown has indicated he will allow a one-year implementation of the law.

Whatever McCown decides, another appeal to the Supreme Court is virtually certain. And that could take months.

Laurent new administrator at CNC

Coronado Nursing Center, owned by Beverly Enterprises, announced recently that Chuck Laurent will be taking over the duties of administrator at the Center.

Laurent, who comes to Pampa from Dallas, has been employed with Beverly Enterprises for 11 years.

For seven of those years he was a regional manager over 11 facilities and the last three years he has been an administrator in the Metroplex area.

"I am looking forward to being here," says Laurent. "There has been such a turnover in administration at this place, I want the people of Pampa to know I'm here to stay. I hope to bring lots of stability to the facility."

Laurent's three children live in Canadian, so moving to Pampa is like moving home.

"I had been traveling from Dallas to see my children," says Laurent. "They are very glad to have me closer."

Laurent has lived in Texas for 23 years. He is retired from the Air Force where he specialized in hospital administration.

Navy ship-to-shore romance launches marriage

DEAR ABBY: As my wedding day approaches, it occurs to me that I never did thank you, because if it hadn't been for Operation Dear Abby IV, I never would have met Michael.

I had sent Christmas cards with a cheery note to each of the addresses you published in 1988. Michael, who was aboard the USS Nimitz deployed in the Indian Ocean, received my card, and he wrote to thank me. There was something special about his "thank you," so I, in turn, responded. We exchanged pictures, and a friendship blossomed.

After several months of corresponding, Michael returned to San Diego and called me — in Michigan. After several more phone calls, the bond between us became stronger. Last July, Michael came to visit me — and he stayed for 10 days. Just before he left, he proposed to me.

Our wedding day is fast approaching. (It's July 14, and the one-year anniversary of the day we met.)

Again, I want to express my deepest gratitude to you and your Operation Dear Abby campaign, which has brought so much fun and joy to the men and women who are far from home serving their country. I'm looking forward to signing my name, "Mrs. Michael Rowcliffe." However, for now, sign me ...

LINDA CHRISTENSEN
DEAR LINDA: Your letter made my day. My heartiest congratulations to you and Michael. May you have many happy, healthy years together.

DEAR ABBY: To the man who hesitated to make a blind date over the phone: I've made several; two were memorable.

I managed a marine electronics service organization. The telephone operator of one large company had a cute "little girl" voice. I finally asked her for a lunch date.

We were both surprised. She was a 4-foot-11 Japanese girl — age 25. Me, a 40-year-old, 6-foot-2 Scandinavian. Seated at lunch, our height difference was not very noticeable. We had a delightful conversation about our origins and the shipping

The best time to visit Texas Hill Country is at mealtime

By GEORGE L. ROSENBLATT
 Houston Chronicle

The best time to visit the Texas Hill Country is mealtime.

Varied places purvey a plethora of palate-pleasers, often garnished generously with local color — to what, then slake, your appetite.

Here follows a little buffet of some of the temptations yielded by a recent excursion.

LLANO

When casual chatter with some folks up at the Vanishing Texas River Cruise near Burnet somehow drifted onto the subject of barbecue, the name Llano started permeating the conversation like wood smoke.

At Llano on Highway 29, within a mile or two, stretched a veritable strip of barbecue spots, with wood stacked alongside and smoke stampeding from chimneys.

Trying to pick which one to try required passing the lot of them several times.

Cooper's won.

It has three barbecue pits, each roughly the length and half the width of a pickup truck bed.

The only person in evidence lifted the lid, drawing away a thick drape of smoke to reveal a small cluster of assorted meats — small only because closing time was nigh.

A sandwich seemed the best choice.

He sliced an irresistible-looking chunk of brisket while it was still on the grill, deftly slipping it onto a tray.

"Ah, a sandwich," I reminded him with gentle panic.

"I don't make sandwich," he said. "You make sandwich."

In a moment, it became obvious that he wasn't being ornery, just pointing out the setup.

He takes the meat inside, cashes you out, then directs you to a large room furnished by six long picnic tables with benches. On the tables are whole loaves of bread, jars of pickles and enough jalapenos to keep you welded through a long winter.

In one corner of the room, a smaller table holds two enormous steel pots. One holds a spicy, vinegary, but delicious barbecue sauce. The other holds BEANS.

No, not just beans. BEANS. The brisket was delicious, but the BEANS were extraordinary.

Lorenzo, the non-maker of sandwiches, makes the BEANS every morning. Onions, garlic, a little jalapeno (not enough to burn) — a recipe of instinct and talent.

Through the day they cook down as they are depleted. By the time I got to them, what was left was a thick soup.

Less than three hours since a big lunch, less than five minutes since maybe half a pound of brisket, and I cannot keep my face out of that pot of BEANS, ultimately guzzling the nectarous broth as if tomorrow were yesterday. Some tomorrow, it would be worth returning to Llano for a few days — just to eat barbecue.

FREDERICKSBURG

During a traditional coffee stop at the Oak Ridge Smoke House in Schulenburg, I spotted a jar of onion jelly and noted that it originated where I was headed: Fredericksburg.

The brand was Fischer & Wieser, and the label said the stuff was "made in our own kitchens." A drawing on the label depicted an old-timey edifice called Das Peach Haus.

Hmmmm! This must be checked out!

Arrival revealed — sweet treats notwithstanding — a delightful little place to stop, shop, sample and see. And a bit of a tale in the bargain.

Except for a few lads, finishing the loading of a truck, Fischer & Wieser president Mark D. Wieser, a tall, quietly cordial fellow, was alone on the premises.

"I grew up on a peach orchard, and I wanted a roadside stand," he said of his original ambition. "My mother and my sister-in-law wanted to make jelly, which did better than the fruit."

The 29-year-old company operates from an unobtrusive little complex that includes kitchens, office, warehouse and testing laboratory. But the focal point of Das Peach Haus, Inc. is Das Peach Haus itself, an 1870 Pedernales log house that Wieser acquired and moved to the Fredericksburg property.

Today, the beautifully restored cabin displays the Fischer & Wieser wares, often adapted from old Texas recipes and composed, as much as possible, of Texas ingredients:

Peach preserves, a fluid jam called peach honey, mesquite bean jelly, jalapeno jellies, and Texas

1015 Onion jelly are among the dozens of items produced in kettles not 40 feet away. They are among at least 20 items sampled, all of which were very good to excellent.

Increasingly popular, notes Wieser, are the jellies of the Texas Wine Collection. The jellies are made from Texas wines, produced by about a dozen Texas wineries, whose labels are reproduced in miniature on the jelly jars.

"This is our No. 10 best seller," adds Wieser, holding up a jar of Texas beer jelly.

Wieser and his partner, Case D. Fischer, are Texas A&M alumni. They will gladly send you a mail order price-list/catalog if you write to Das Peach Haus, Inc., Route 3, Box 118, Fredericksburg, Texas 78624, or phone (512)997-7194.

NEW BRAUNFELS

Early one morning, hungry for a good breakfast, I asked a local woman's opinion on a local institution called Krause's.

"Wonnnderfulllllll," she said, her eyes glazing over wistfully.

"What's the best thing they have?" I asked.

"Biscuits and gravy," she said, (pronouncing the words as BISK-its and GRY-vec).

Taking her reaction as an endorsement seemed to justify trekking 1.5 blocks to give Krause's a try.

Impression A was that of having stumbled onto a whole herd of kindred appetites — sturdy country folk all. It's doubtful anyone in Krause's that morning would have understood the concept of anorexia; much less endured it.

Between the smell of barbecue smoke and the sulfurous scent of enough eggs to clog a traffic artery, Krause's was like a gastronomic Ruhr.

Although the biscuits were OK and the gravy was NFM (not for me), the rest of the hearty breakfast was excellent: a generous, tender pork chop and truly fresh eggs done just as ordered; hash-browned potatoes made of fresh chunks, not frozen shreds; fresh, fragrant coffee and a wovw homemade picante sauce that could detonate an H-bomb.

All around, the obvious regulars are coming and going.

"Hah! Harya doyn? Good dah seeya," roars one.

"Nothin' good left. I ate it all," cracks another.

My own plate put the lie to that one, staving off hunger until midafternoon, when lunch lust launched a quest of desperately seeking sauerbraten. Two likely sources had not, sparking a return to Krause's resigned to doing without.

And, surprise, surprise! Guess what led the list of today's specials? Sauerbraten. I ordered it, along with sweet-and-sour red cabbage.

The quality and flavor of Krause's versions surpassed even that of some sampled in Germany.

When I finally waddled out, for the second time in seven hours, I looked groundward. I could no longer see my shoes, and I was too happy to care.

Germans take World Cup

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

ROME (AP) — Franz Beckenbauer took West Germany from the depths of depression to the soccer summit. He's leaving the game at the top, and with a warning.

"We are the champions now," Beckenbauer said Sunday night after leading West Germany to its third World Cup title with a 1-0 victory over defending champion Argentina. "You can presume that we will have a broader choice of players. I think a (united) German team will be unbeatable. I'm sorry, folks."

Beckenbauer and his team have nothing to be sorry for — they were the best in the field. After two straight runner-up finishes, the Germans emphatically put their mark on a tournament beset by overly conservative tactics and too much fouling.

That's how Argentina played in the final, in which Pedro Monzon and Gustavo Dezotti became the first players to be ejected from a World Cup final. The Argentinians had one shot on net, they hardly ever ventured forward and their worst foul gave the Germans a penalty kick with six minutes to go.

Andreas Brehme took it after Rudi Voeller was brought down in the penalty area by Roberto Sensini. He put it in, sparking minor celebrations.

The big festivities came a few moments later as West Germany became the third country with three world soccer championships. Brazil and Italy also have done it.

"We knew we were the best," said Beckenbauer, the first man to captain and coach a World Cup winner; he led the Germans to the 1974 championship as a player.

Beckenbauer says he now is retired from coaching.

"There is nothing more you could win," said the man who took charge of the German program in 1974 after the team was eliminated in the first round of the European championships.

This World Cup was a showcase for the Germans' speed, savvy and power. Only in the semifinal against England, which went to a penalty kick shootout, did they falter.

Against Argentina, they set the tone at the beginning and never stopped. The goal was well-earned, although the Argentinians screamed long and loud about it — on the field and off.

"Our players ran hard, but then came this man (the referee) who ruined everything for us," captain Diego Maradona said of referee Edgardo Codesal of Mexico. "This man was scared that we would get penalties (in a shootout)."

"He wanted to make the Italian people happy," after Argentina eliminated Italy in the semifinals. "The black hand of this man expelled (Pedro) Monzon for a normal action and later he called a penalty against us from his imagination."

What the Argentinians did at the final whistle was almost beyond imagination.

The players surrounded Codesal at the center of the field and angrily disputed the penalty against Sensini.

Argentina coach Carlos Bilardo rushed onto the field and had to pull his players away from the referee, one by one.

"I don't express opinions on refs. I don't choose them, FIFA chooses them," said Bilardo, who also is retiring. "Argentina in no way asks for any refs and I don't comment on them."

It was the Germans who made the most profound statement in the most foul-plagued World Cup ever. A total of 170 yellow cards and 16 red cards were handed out.

Edberg wins Wimbledon crown

By ROB GLOSTER
AP Sports Writer

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Stefan Edberg seems almost an afterthought at Wimbledon. He lacks the macho appeal of Boris Becker or the pathos of an obsessed Ivan Lendl.

He isn't controversial or confrontational. His desire resides within, not to be flaunted before the Centre Court crowd.

All he does is win. "I think I'm quite a calm person," he said after defeating Becker in Sunday's final to claim his second men's title in three years. "I play my best tennis when I keep straight and don't get too irritated."

The forgotten man of tennis even stymied a British tabloid reporter digging for a sexy angle on the newly crowned champion. Asked if he would marry his longtime girlfriend, Edberg replied, "Perhaps, perhaps not."

Edberg's 6-2, 6-2, 3-6, 3-6, 6-4 triumph over Becker came one day after Martina Navratilova defeated Zina Garrison in the women's final for a record ninth Wimbledon singles title.

Edberg rolled calmly through the tournament, knocking off opponents while attention was focused on Becker and Lendl.

When the 24-year-old Swede defeated Lendl in straight sets in the semifinals, the spotlight was on Lendl's misery at failing again to win the tournament — not on Edberg's joy.

Edberg's victory Sunday, which he celebrated by slamming a ball high into the stands and tossing two shirts into the crowd, moved him past Becker into the No. 2 ranking worldwide and edged him closer to top-ranked Lendl.

"I know this number one spot is within reach now and that's something to look forward to," he said after winning Sunday's battle of serve-and-volley experts.

Becker, a three-time Wimbledon winner whose only previous loss in 22 trips to Centre Court was in the 1988 final to Edberg, said the Swede's consistency makes him a winner.

"He is a player who tries all the time. He never really lets himself down and that's what makes him so difficult to play," Becker said.

Edberg kept Becker off balance throughout the opening two sets by mixing crisp volleys, delicate lobs and sharp passing shots. The West German powered his way back into the match in the third and fourth sets.

On a court becoming slick enough almost to entice Olympic ice skating champion Katarina Witt from the stands, where the East German sports hero sat in the Becker guest box, the players held serve until the ninth game of the final set.

Edberg then finished off a service break with a feather-like lob and served out the match for his fourth Grand Slam title.

More important than the $391,000 paycheck was the end of a bad streak in Grand Slams that included an injury default in the Australian Open this winter and a first-round loss in the French Open this spring.

"It is never good to come in second," said Edberg, who lost in last year's Wimbledon final to Becker. "It's such a big difference from winning and losing a final. This is my second Wimbledon (title) and hopefully not the last one."

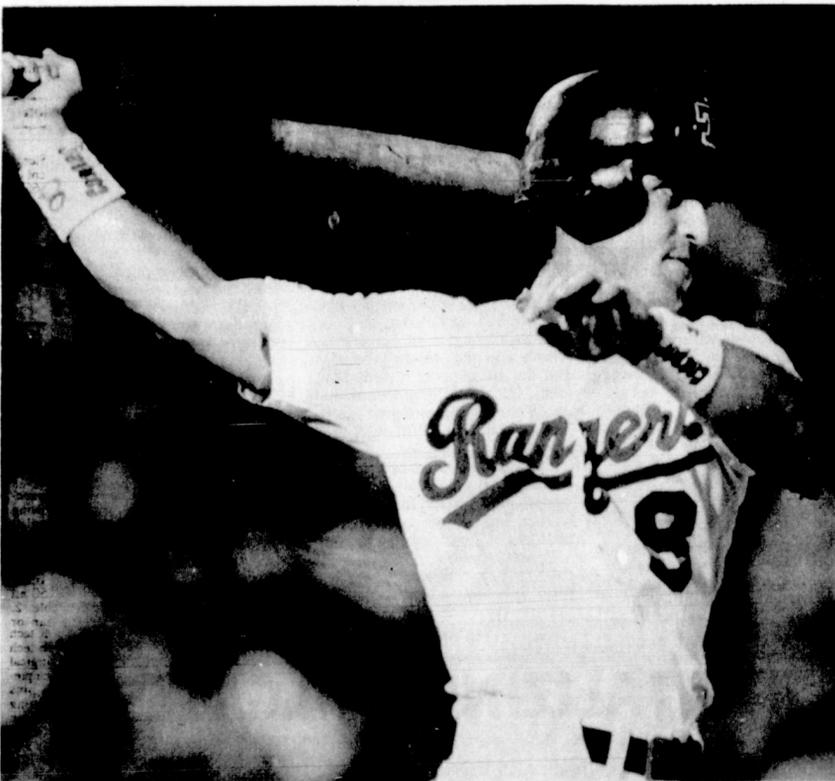

Navratilova, 33, also was talking about future Wimbledon titles after defeating Garrison 6-4, 6-1 to break the record of eight singles titles she had shared with Helen Wills Moody. "I'm going for double digits. Why not?" Navratilova said.

It was Navratilova's 17th Wimbledon title overall.

Brewers rally to blow away Angels

By The Associated Press

The Milwaukee Brewers and California Angels proved again that no lead in baseball is ever safe until the final out.

California led Sunday's game at County Stadium 7-0 in the third inning and appeared to be en route to an easy victory. But Milwaukee scored one run in the third, six in the fourth and 13 in the fifth for a 20-7 victory.

Now the blowout was in the other dugout.

"It was one of those days that no matter what they threw, everything fell in for hits for us," said Jim Gantner, who singled twice and doubled to drive in five runs.

Darryl Hamilton hit a grand slam and drove in six runs.

In the fifth, the Brewers sent 18 batters to the plate against Greg Minton (1-1), Mike Fetters and Mark Eichhorn. Four players — Hamilton, Bill Spiers, Greg Brock and Greg Sheffield — singled twice in the inning.

"We got seven early runs and felt we were in pretty good shape," California manager Doug Rader said. "We got pounded. It's the worst one I've been in."

In other games, Detroit beat Kansas City 10-4, Seattle beat Toronto 6-3, Minnesota beat New York 6-3, Oakland beat Texas 8-3, Baltimore beat Chicago 8-6 in 11 innings and Texas beat Boston 4-3 in 11 innings.

Things got so bad for California that the Angels had infielder Donnie Hill pitch the eighth. He did better than his predecessors, throwing one hitless inning.

"Donnie said he'd give us three innings with his right hand, five with his right arm and two with his left," Rader joked. "So he was the logical guy to go to."

Hill walked one and struck out Rob Deer in holding the Brewers scoreless.

Milwaukee starter Bill Krueger allowed seven runs and seven hits in 2 2-3 innings and Tom Edens (2-1) got the victory with 4 1-3 innings of two-hit relief.

AL roundup

Tigers 10, Royals 4

Mark Davis made his first start in three seasons and was knocked out in the fourth inning.

Davis, 1-5 in 35 games as a reliever with five saves and a 5.40 earned-run average, allowed four runs, three hits and walked six in 3 1-3 innings.

John Shelby, Mike Heath and Travis Fryman homered for the Tigers. Fryman's three-run homer off Jeff Montgomery in the seventh was his first major league hit.

Mariners 6, Blue Jays 3

Matt Young pitched a three-hitter and Henry Cotto hit a two-run homer.

Young (3-9) struck out seven and walked four.

Toronto starter Todd Stottlemyre (9-8) lasted just three innings, allowing six runs and eight hits.

Twins 6, Yankees 3

Greg Gagne homered and drove in two runs.

Tim Lary (3-12) lost his eighth consecutive decision since May 23.

David West (4-6) allowed five hits and three runs in six innings for the Twins, struck out six and walked four.

Athletics 8, Indians 3

Jose Canseco ended a 3-for-33 skid by hitting a 460-foot home run, a triple and a single.

Dave Stewart (11-7) allowed five hits, struck out four and walked two in seven innings. Al Nipper (2-2) allowed two runs and three hits in 2 1-3 innings.

Orioles 8, White Sox 6

Mike Devereaux hit a two-run, two-out double in the 11th inning.

Bobby Thigpen (4-3) walked Steve Finley to open the 11th. Craig Worthington bunted and both runners were safe when Thigpen's throw to second was late.

Billy Ripken bunted into a force-out and Brad Komminsk singled, but pinch runner Rene Gonzales was thrown out at the plate by right fielder Sammy Sosa. Devereaux followed with his double.

Rangers 4, Red Sox 3

Shortstop Luis Rivera's throwing error with two outs and the bases loaded in the 11th inning allowed the winning run to score.

Jack Daugherty's second home run of the game tied the score in the ninth off Jeff Reardon.

Pirates maintain slim lead over surging Mets

By The Associated Press

With the hottest team in the majors breathing down their necks, the Pittsburgh Pirates are managing to stay afloat in the sizzling National League East race — even if it's just by a nose.

"If you could paint a picture for a first half, it couldn't be much better than this," Manager Jim Leyland said Sunday after the Pirates beat the Los Angeles Dodgers 7-2.

With a 49-32 record, the Pirates hold a half-game lead over the red-hot New York Mets, who are 47-31. The Mets won their 26th game in the last 31 with a 2-1 decision over the Atlanta Braves to keep pace with the Pirates at the All-Star break.

Elsewhere, it was Philadelphia 4, Cincinnati 3; Houston 5, Montreal 3; St. Louis 4, San Diego 1 and San Francisco in a doubleheader sweep over Chicago, 5-3 and 10-4.

Barry Bonds and Jeff King drove in three runs apiece, and Doug Drabek won his first game in a month as Pittsburgh held first place.

The victory snapped a five-game winless streak for Drabek (9-4), who allowed six hits in seven innings. Dodgers rookie Terry Wells allowed seven runs on eight hits in four-plus innings, although he struck out seven.

Mets 2, Braves 1

Frank Viola became the first pitcher in the league and the second in the majors to win 13 games as New York beat Atlanta.

Viola (13-3) allowed seven hits in 7 2-3 innings, striking out three and walking three as he won his fourth straight start and tied Oakland's Bob Welch for most victories in the majors.

Darryl Strawberry had an RBI double in the first for New York, and Kevin Elster drove in the Mets' other run with a groundout.

Phillies 4, Reds 3

John Kruk drove in two runs as Philadelphia rallied to beat Cincinnati.

Kruk tied the score in the fifth with a single, then lined a two-out single in the seventh, scoring Randy Ready from third with the deciding run. Ready had doubled and taken third on a wild pitch.

Darrel Akerfelds (3-0) held the Reds scoreless on one hit and a walk through the final three innings of the victory.

The Phillies rallied from a 3-0 deficit with three runs in the fifth off Tom Browning.

Astros 5, Expos 3

Pinch-hitter Terry Puhl doubled home two runs in a three-run seventh inning.

Montreal starter Dennis Martinez (6-7) shut down the Astros on four hits through six innings, and it looked like he might work out of his only serious jam of the day when Puhl hit his two-out double.

Mark Portugal (3-8) entered the contest 0-6 with a 6.56 ERA in nine starts on the road for Houston. He pitched six innings, allowing two runs on five hits, striking out five and walking four. Cardinals 4, Padres 1

Bob Tewksbury allowed three hits, over 8 1-3 innings and Willie McGee hit a two-run double.

Tewksbury (4-1) limited the Padres to one runner in scoring position.

Giants 5, Cubs 3

Giants 10, Cubs 4

Kevin Mitchell homered twice and added a two-run double for five RBIs to power San Francisco to a doubleheader sweep over Chicago.

Mitchell broke a 5-for-33 slump with a two-run homer in the first inning of the opener and finished with five hits in eight at-bats for the day.

Gary Carter also continued his batting binge for the Giants. After sitting out the first game, Carter hit a run-scoring single in the second inning of the second and added a three-run homer in the third for a string of seven straight hits over two games.

Left-hander Trevor Wilson (6-0) remained unbeaten by going 5 2-3 innings in the first game.

Pampa Nationals advance to regionals with 13-3 win over Pampa Americans

The Pampa National 11-12 Bambino All-Stars used good pitching, tight defense and heavy hitting to defeat the Pampa American All-Stars, 13-3, Saturday at Optimist Park. The National All-Stars earned the right to advance to the Bambino Regional Tournament, beginning July 27 in Fort Smith, Ark.

Rayford Young pitched the win, allowing only two hits. He struck out six and walked five.

Eddy Pickett and Brian Coia pitched for Pampa American.

Young aided his own cause with two hits, a sacrifice fly and three RBI. Jason Lopez and Trey McCavit also had two hits for the winners.

Cota and Adam Clark had a double and home run for Pampa American's two hits.

Ray Cook opened the bottom of the second inning for Pampa National with a walk. He advanced to second on a wild pitch and scored on a single by Mike Weatherly. Floyd White and Ryan Davis drew walks to load the bases. Young followed with a sacrifice fly to score Weatherly. Todd Finney hit a three-run home run to clear the bases. Kory Harris singled and came home on Cook's second hit of the inning, a home run.

Pampa American was managed by Bill Thomas, who was the manager of the walk. He advanced to second on a wild pitch and scored on a single by Mike Weatherly. Floyd White and Ryan Davis drew walks to load the bases. Young followed with a sacrifice fly to score Weatherly. Todd Finney hit a three-run home run to clear the bases. Kory Harris singled and came home on Cook's second hit of the inning, a home run.

Purtzer claims Toledo Classic title

SYLVANIA, Ohio (AP) — Tina Tombs Purtzer kept reminding herself that everybody starts somewhere.

So Purtzer started at the first hole and didn't let up, shooting a career-best 5-under-par 66 for a four-stroke victory Sunday in the Jamie Farr Toledo Classic.

The victory was more than Purtzer's first in her three-year LPGA career. It also was the first time she had finished better than 15th in a tournament.

During introductions to the gallery before the second round, Purtzer's name had been mispronounced. It was a subtle reminder that compared to players such as Betsy King, JoAnne Carner and Nancy Lopez, Purtzer hadn't accomplished much.

Soccer camp to be held in Pampa

The Texas Soccer Academy, the premier soccer camp in the state and one of the original developmental camps in the nation, is coming to Pampa, it was announced by Miles Cook, local coordinator of the program.

The camp will be conducted during the week of July 16-21 and is open to boys and girls of all ages. The camp is being sponsored by the Pampa Soccer Association.

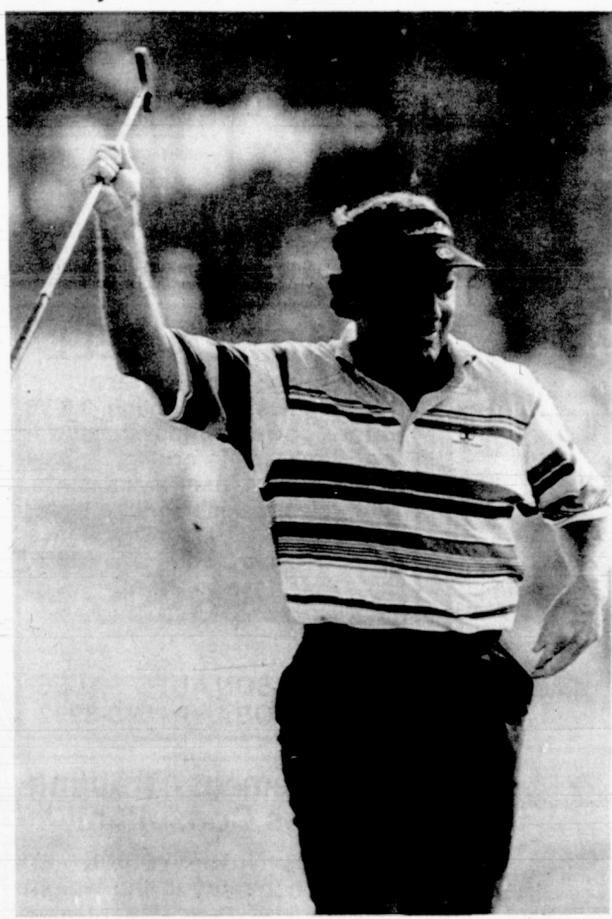

"We are very pleased to have coach Randy Noll and his staff coming to Pampa. This outstanding program is overshadowed only by the quality of his staff, most of whom have been licensed and certified by the United States Soccer Federation to teach young American soccer players the foundation as well as advanced techniques and tactics," Cook said.

The Texas Soccer Academy provides an intensive learning opportunity for youth and high school players. A ratio of coach to campers is about 1 to 10.

Parents who can house a staff member will be able to send their children to the camp free of charge.

For additional information and a camp brochure, call Cook at 665-6696 or 665-3036.

Rangers' Incaviglia strikes back

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Maybe Mike Boddicker didn't recognize Pete Incaviglia. After all, Incaviglia just got his hair cut.

Which may explain why the Texas Rangers' outfielder homered and doubled off Boddicker on Saturday just five days after striking out three times against the Boston right-hander.

Last Monday, Boddicker pitched the Red Sox to a 3-2 victory over the Rangers and Incaviglia was baffled. On Saturday, though, Incaviglia's two-run homer off Boddicker gave Texas a 4-3 lead en route to a 7-4 victory. Incaviglia added a second home run in the eighth off Dennis Lamp.

"If I owed somebody something, I owed Boddicker because he gave me quite a bit of fit in Boston with his breaking ball," Incaviglia, who had three RBIs in Saturday's game, said. "I waited on the ball well."

He also was responsible for ending Boddicker's 10-game winning streak.

"I give a tip of my hat to Inky," Rangers manager Bobby Valentine said. "He had a tough time against Boddicker last week in Boston that put him in a funk for awhile."

Incaviglia's power outing, which gave him 15 home runs entering Sunday's game against Boston, helped Nolan Ryan (8-4) win his 297th game.

"He didn't give me too many fastballs," Incaviglia said of Boddicker (11-4). "But I knew what I had to do. I just waited for the curveball, and he hung one on the homer. I hit one of his good pitches for a double."

Ryan, meanwhile, struck out 12 Red Sox in seven innings. The last time an opposing pitcher fanned 12 Red Sox was July 9, 1979, when Ryan, then pitching for the California Angels, did it.

Boddicker gave up five earned runs on seven hits in 5 2-3 innings. He struck out four and walked two.

Thirst for electrical power threatens Grand Canyon environment

By SCOTT McCARTNEY
Associated Press Writer

GRAND CANYON NATIONAL PARK, Ariz. (AP) — From the air and from the water, the urban thirst for electricity is encroaching on one of the great natural wonders of the world.

Mighty as it is, the National Park Service says, the Grand Canyon is in distress.

About 80 miles away, a huge coal-burning power plant belches 12.5 tons of sulfur dioxide each hour because it doesn't have pollution-grabbing scrubbers on its three skyscraper-tall smokestacks.

It is said to mix with Los Angeles smog — and the Grand Canyon suffers.

To the northeast, Colorado River water races through turbines in a dam during the day to meet peak demand for electricity in cities hundreds of miles away. When the demand falls at night, the river flow is cut, creating destructive "tides" downstream.

And the Grand Canyon suffers. At issue is the quality of experience for visitors to one of nature's masterpieces, and what cost utility customers might have to pay to preserve a view or save a beach. All this comes at a time when the Grand Canyon is hosting record crowds, which themselves are taxing services and even raising concerns that access might have to be limited.

On some days, a blue haze in the canyon dulls the view and occasionally obscures the opposite rim 10 miles away.

The daily rise and fall of river water, sometimes spanning 13 feet, erodes beaches and harms spawning grounds.

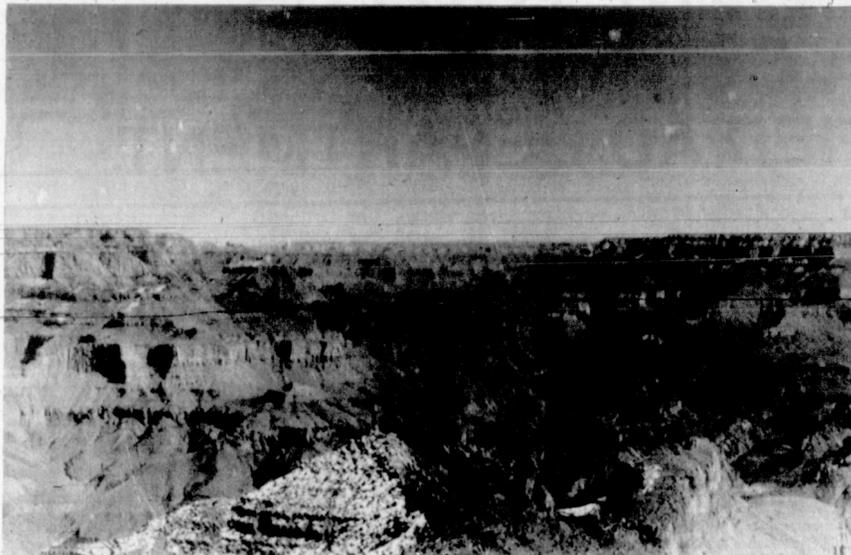

"The Grand Canyon is threatened," said Jim Ruch, vice president of the Grand Canyon Trust, a conservation group. "It is threatened by an accumulation of actions that were taken with good intentions but with little understanding for their consequences."

Adds former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt: "When you can't see across the canyon because of smog, it's as if the last symbol of the pristine West has gone the way of Los Angeles."

At the center of the canyon's woes are two power plants that generate some of the cheapest electricity in the West: the Navajo Generating Station at the northeast end of the canyon, about 12 miles from Page, Ariz., and the 27-year-old Glen Canyon Dam near the Utah-Arizona border.

The battle lines already have been drawn. What makes this man-vs-nature showdown unique is that the troublesome plants aren't blamed for health problems, only for souring the quality of experience for visitors to the Grand Canyon.

The Environmental Protection Agency concluded last year that the Navajo Generating Station contributes up to 70 percent of the canyon's haze pollution, usually worst during the winter. The EPA must decide by Feb. 1 whether to order the plant's owners to install scrubbers to reduce emissions by 90 percent.

Cost estimate: $500 million for the scrubbers, and $3.9 billion to operate and maintain them over 30 years.

If the scrubbers are ordered, it would mark the first time the EPA took action solely to protect a view; there is no immediate health danger from the smog at the canyon.

A lawsuit filed in 1982 by the Environmental Defense Fund forced the EPA to take action. After a tracer chemical placed in the smokestack emissions at the Navajo Generating Station turned up at monitoring stations in the canyon, the EPA issued its findings.

"That was enough to point the finger," said Polly Hays, a park service scientist.

But the Salt River Project, a public utility that operates the plant for electric companies in California, Nevada, Arizona and Utah, contends its coal-burning doesn't pollute the canyon and that the tracer study was flawed.

Interior Secretary Manuel Lujan has asked the National Academy of Sciences to evaluate the findings.

On clear days, Grand Canyon visitors can see about as far as the eye can see — more than 200 miles, Hays said. But a few days a month, usually in the winter, smog hangs in the canyon and visibility can drop to about 30 miles.

"People who live in cities may think 50 miles visibility is great, but for the Grand Canyon, it makes a big difference," Hays said.

Salt River Project officials contend the canyon's haze problem is more a result of smog blowing out of the Los Angeles basin and other sources. Federal officials agree, but say the Navajo Generating Station also is a prime contributor and a part of the problem that quickly can be fixed.

"SRP feels it is being unfairly singled out," Hays said. "But we have to start somewhere. ... Some people say these are sacred areas, and if we can't protect them, then the whole world must be falling apart."

The plant, one of the largest coal-fired facilities in the country, does meet existing state and federal pollution standards and captures more than 99 percent of its ash, SRP spokeswoman Teri Morris said. About 300 tons of sulfur dioxide slip through each day, however.

"We believe that Navajo Generating Station's contribution to regional haze is negligible," she said. "The amount of emission is in line with the size of the plant and the amount the state and federal regulations allow us to do."

On the other front, U.S. Rep. George Miller, D-Calif., has introduced legislation to alter Bureau of Reclamation operation of the Glen Canyon Dam to protect the canyon downstream. An environmental impact statement is being prepared this summer.

The Bureau of Reclamation, Miller said, "might as well be running hundreds of bulldozers down the canyon floor daily."

The park service says its surveys indicate there already are fewer beaches in the canyon, and that there is no way to replenish them. Some rafters have been left stranded by the swings in water flow.

"We feel we're losing those beaches in that flushing action," said Grand Canyon assistant superintendent John Reed.

Unless action is taken, he said, "this will change the entire experience that people have on the Colorado River, and the most extreme change will be that those floating on the river will not be able to stop because the beaches will be gone."

The Western Area Power Administration, an Energy Department agency that sells electricity from federal projects such as dams, opposes Miller's legislation until studies already under way determine whether Glen Canyon dam is responsible for any beach erosion.

Smoothing out the dam's operation ultimately would result in higher electric costs for customers, WAPA officials said.

"We are a part of the utility industry and we are always concerned with costs to our customers," said deputy area manager Ken Maxey.

For Lujan, both issues present a dilemma because two agencies within his department are at odds with each other. In both cases, the National Park Service has clashed with the Bureau of Reclamation, which is a part owner of the Navajo Generating Station and the operator of the Glen Canyon Dam.

The Interior secretary has yet to take a stand on either issue, asking for more study.

To environmentalists, the tide is shifting in their favor at the Grand Canyon as concern over nature grows in the country.

Babbitt, a director of the Grand Canyon Trust, used the threats to the canyon as the focal point of a recent Democratic National Committee fund-raising mass mailing.

"Ultimately, these two issues are political issues," the former presidential candidate said. "A lot of people in Arizona and the nation are no longer willing to say, 'Generate electricity no matter what the cost.'"

Denton group explores idea for hillside theater for historical drama

By MARTHA W. RAY
Denton Record-Chronicle

DENTON (AP) — Whenever Denton native Diane Duncan Mayer used to drive by Pilot Knob, the hilly knoll located just west of Denton, she would think about the Old West and outlaw Sam Bass.

She would remember the stories she heard growing up, the tales about Bass, a purported former stable boy at Denton's Lacy Hotel, hiding from the law in a cave overlooking Denton County.

But today when Ms. Mayer drives by Pilot Knob, she sees a totally different picture.

The wooded hill, flanked by a small farmhouse and windmill, now represents economic development, the preservation of North Texas history and a boon to Denton tourism in her eyes.

She hopes the Knob — or another location in Denton — will one day be the home of large outdoor amphitheater and north Texas' own historical drama, one similar to the Texas musical drama presented each summer at Palo Duro Canyon State Park.

"This idea happened one day two years ago. I was driving to Fort Worth. ... I drove past Pilot Knob, and I wondered what The Perot Group (the current owner of the Pilot Knob property) would do with this land. I wondered if they'd bulldoze it," she said recently.

"I've always thought that the West begins not in Fort Worth but on the drive from Denton to Fort Worth. And it occurred to me that Pilot Knob could be an outdoor amphitheater. It occurred to me that it could really be something exciting for Denton."

Jo Ann Ballantine, staff director of the Denton Convention and Visitors Bureau, said she wasn't surprised when Mayer came into her office with a promising new idea.

"When I picture Diane, it's with a light bulb over her head. She has such wonderful ideas, and she has the ability to get things done. She knows how to do it. But her primary attribute is her enthusiasm," Ms. Ballantine said.

Ballantine believes the amphitheater would put Denton "on the map."

Using a formula provided by the North Carolina-based Institute of Outdoor Drama, a popular amphitheater and drama could potentially bring in up to $16 million for Denton in tourist money, Mayer said.

What has surprised Ballantine — and Mayer as well — is the enthusiasm with which the project has been met across the community.

Yvonne Jenkins, director of the Denton County Historical Museum, now also sits on the committee devoted to the establishment of a large outdoor theater. Like other members of the group, Ms. Jenkins says she would choose Pilot Knob as her first choice for an amphitheater's location.

Research gathered by Mayer also indicates that Pilot Knob would be an ideal location for the amphitheater.

Data from the institute of Outdoor Drama shows that, among other attributes, pleasant geographical surroundings and easy highway access are imperative to the success of an amphitheater. The Pilot Knob location visible off Interstate 35 has both.

The University of North Texas' Small Business Institute did a feasibility study of the project, and according to Mayer, their findings indicated that the Pilot Knob amphitheater would be "an excellent venture" if the land could be obtained.

Other locations have been — and will be — considered for the amphitheater by the 30-member committee, which is now known as the Denton County Amphitheater Association.

But association members have their fingers crossed that The Perot Group will chart the amphitheater into its "master plan" for the property. Mayer and other committee members have presented their ideas to representatives from The Perot Group, and a dialogue has been established. No plans, promises or arrangements have been made, but no doors have been shut either, Mayer said.

Coincidentally, the Denton Department of Parks and Recreation also has been discussing the need for an outdoor theater, primarily to house the large crowds which attend the city's jazz festival each fall.

Steve Brinkman, director of the Parks and Recreation Department, said that the city had considered 300 acres in the North Lakes park area as a possible future site for a theater, but upon hearing about Mayer's ideas for Pilot Knob, preferred her plan.

"That is probably the nicest location for that sort of facility. It's off the freeway and the setting is prettier, where the North Lakes Park area is more of a flood plain area with mesquite trees," Brinkman said. "Pilot Knob is a much more natural setting."

Brinkman said that the amphitheater association's plans to use the amphitheater for a theatrical presentation during the summer would fit with the city's needs for that type of facility, which falls mainly during the spring and fall.

Although local voters would ultimately have to decide the city's financial support of the project, Brinkman says that the association's plans are "complimentary" with the plans of the Parks and Recreation Department.

"It has been a priority with the park board to try and get funding for an amphitheater. We realized at the second or third jazz festival that we needed more space," he said.

Mayer's group is seeking about 20 acres of the Pilot Knob area for the theater, but Brinkman would ideally like to see the entire Knob area devoted to an amphitheater and large community park. The establishment of a community park would open up the possibility of state funds, he notes.

But before the group even talks of funding — members estimate roughly $1 million will be needed — Mayer and supporters must wait on the group's official non-profit status designation.

And of course, they must wait on negotiations with The Perot Group, with which they have been in regular contact for the past few months.

While no agreements for land or funding have been made, Mayer said she sees an amphitheater in Denton's future — whether at Pilot Knob or another location.

In the meantime, the group is surviving on high hopes and big dreams, but Mayer says that just may be enough.

"The enthusiasm of the people who have heard about his project is exceptional. We know it's not going to be accomplished overnight," she said. "It's a challenge, a big challenge. And I guess I thrive on challenges."
