freedom", then Bernard Shaw's statement might be applicable.

The most important business of any parent is the education of his children. And to turn it over to politicians is to violate the first principles of parental responsibility. This is true because the schools that are based on aggressive force to control the minds of the youth of the land are big operations, and the state is not competent to educate. Henry D. Thoreau said the only thing the government could do to promote business was the rapidity with which it got out of the road. And that's all that the state can do as far as education is concerned - get out of the way and let the parents and the man who teaches for the love of mankind have a fair competitive chance to promote education that includes the difference between right and wrong

Plutarch speaks of Socrates in this way: "Socrates, the great sage of antiquity, used to say, and very aptly, that if such a thing were possible he would ascend to the loftiest height of the city and cry out: 'Where, mankind, are you heading? Upon the acquisition of money you bestow every zeal, but of your sons, to whom you will leave this money, you take little thought'. For my part I should add that the procedure of such fathers is very like that of a man who would take thought for his shoe but neglect his foot. But many fathers reach such a pitch in their love of money as
