Europeans agree to expel Iraq's military attaches

By ARTHUR ALLEN
Associated Press Writer

European nations have joined Washington in backing the expansion to air corridors of a U.N. embargo on trade with Iraq, and showed new resolve by agreeing to expel Iraqi military attaches and restrict the movement of other Baghdad diplomats.

The governments were angered by Iraq's rough treatment of Western diplomats in occupied Kuwait last week, when some had their compounds raided.

The latest picture of the situation inside Kuwait, drawn from the tales of refugees suddenly allowed to flee via the lone border crossing into Saudi Arabia, was of a wealthy nation being broken, in despair.

Stunned refugees among the thousands who have fled their homeland since the border was opened Friday told of husbands and sons pulled out of cars and hauled away by Iraqi troops.

The Iraqis were not explaining what they intended to do with the men.

Because of the apparently random seizures of men ages 17 to 40, the number of refugees crossing into Saudi Arabia had decreased to a trickle today, Iraqi soldiers were allowing one car across the border every 10 minutes or so.

Refugees said today that the Iraqis had set up six checkpoints on the 120-mile route from Kuwait City to the Khafji border crossing.

They said the Iraqis - seeking to break their spirit - had mounted an escalating campaign of torture, beatings and shootings.

One fleeing professional said the Iraqis were out "to demolish anything that has to do with Kuwait" or its ruling al-Sabah family, changing the names of streets, hospitals, traffic circles.

The al-Sababs, forced into exile by Saddam Hussein's Aug. 2 invasion, say the Iraqi leader intends to empty their oil-rich land of its people.

"It is all becoming Iraqi," the professional said, estimating that just 300,000 Kuwaiti nationals remain behind, with about half a million having fled.

Saddam has declared Kuwait part of Iraq and annexed it, and the professional said a prominent traffic circle in Kuwait City was being demolished to make way for a life-size statue of Saddam.

Meeting in Brussels on Monday, foreign ministers of the 12-nation European Community agreed to expel all Iraqi military attaches in retaliation for the Iraqi raids Friday on the French, Belgian, Dutch and Canadian embassy compounds in Kuwait.

They also restricted the movement of Iraq's diplomats and called on the Iraq to "realize the suicidal character of its behavior toward the international community."

President Bush on Monday endorsed expanding the U.N.-ordered embargo on trade with Iraq to include air traffic.

The five permanent members of the U.N. Security Council have been meeting since the weekend, but Western diplomats say it will be difficult to achieve unanimity on the air blockade issue.

The United States, Britain, France support the blockade, but China and the Soviet Union were said to oppose it. All five council members appeared to back a resolution that would take punitive measures against violators of the existing embargo.

An air blockade is considered risky because halting planes is difficult without the use of deadly force.

Some of the more than 6,000 Kuwaiti refugees who have streamed into Saudi Arabia via Khafji described harrowing scenes back home. Several related the fate of Mubarak Al-Nooi, the manager of a cooperative store who refused to put up a portrait of Saddam and was shot to death on the spot.

A computer engineer said Americans in hiding were fleeing from house to house ahead of Iraqi searchers. Seized Westerners are being held at strategic installations in Iraq as shields against a feared U.S. attack.

Pro-Saddam Arab radicals ended a three-day meeting in Amman on Monday with enthusiastic calls for terrorist attacks against American forces if they attack Iraq.

They also called for an Islamic uprising to topple Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak, who has sent troops to Saudi Arabia as part of the U.S.-led multinational force opposing Saddam.

Pampa couple files suit against county, district officials over property seizure

By BETH MILLER
Staff Writer

A Pampa couple has filed a lawsuit in state District Court against Gray County, a DPS investigator, former District Attorney Guy Hardin and former Assistant District Attorney David M. Hamilton.

The lawsuit, filed last week in 223rd District Court, alleges civil rights violations and wrongful confiscation of private property. The lawsuit claims that actual damages of $123,758 were incurred by Woodrow Wilson Mitchell and his wife, Andrea, from the taking of their property alone. Total amount of damages the Mitchells are seeking was not specified in the lawsuit.

The Mitchells filed the lawsuit alleging that an investigation begun by Hamilton and Larry Kocurek with the Texas Department of Public Safety ruined their business, Crossroads Truck and Salvage Equipment Co.

The Mitchells also claim that property that was confiscated as a result of the investigation has not been returned as ordered in April 1987 by Justice of the Peace Wayne Roberts, and that other property was damaged or stolen in the year that law enforcement officials had control of their business.

The couple had also filed a lawsuit on Sept. 10, 1987, in federal court against the state of Texas, DPS, Kocurek, Hamilton, Hardin and former District Clerk Mary Clark.

An order was entered July 19 in federal court and the case is currently on appeal to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in Louisiana. A spokeswoman in the federal clerk's office said the defendants filed the appeal.

The Mitchells, of 1105 Christine, said in their lawsuit that in December 1985 the defendants "knowingly, negligently, and without probable cause seized property belonging to the plaintiffs in total disregard for the plaintiffs' rights."

On Dec. 24, 1985, according to the lawsuit, Kocurek with the DPS Motor Vehicle Theft division said he was conducting a salvage inventory at the Mitchell's business, and "erroneously perceived that there were stolen vehicles located" at the business. The vehicles in question were confiscated and stored.

The lawsuit alleges the confiscation was completed in a "negligent and imprudent manner, without justification or excuse," and deprived the owners of their property.

The civil rights of the Mitchells were also violated, according to the lawsuit, because they were denied due process in the taking of their property.

Among the issues in the lawsuit are Hamilton's successful urging of 223rd District Judge Don Cain to get the salvage yard declared a "criminal instrument" on Dec. 30, 1985, giving the district attorney's office, Gray County and Hamilton control over the lot and forcing the Mitchells off the property. Hamilton posted a $100,000 bond for the property, but did so without authorization from Hardin or the County Commissioners' Court, according to the lawsuit.

The lawsuit also alleges that former District Clerk Mary Clark "erroneously" issued a writ of attachment that should not have been issued and caused the property to be placed in possession of the district attorney. The Mitchells were subsequently indicted in Gray County following the confiscation of the property and amid allegations of an auto-theft ring during which vehicle identification numbers were allegedly being stripped off wrecked vehicles at the Crossroads Auto Salvage and placed on vehicles and vehicle parts reported stolen from the Dallas area.

All of the indictments in Gray County were dismissed against the Mitchells in December 1986 due to insufficient evidence. However, in Randall County, Woody Mitchell pleaded no contest in April 1987 to a charge of unauthorized use of a motor vehicle. The charge stemmed from Mitchell's alleged participation in an auto theft ring.

According to the lawsuit, "Gray County is liable for the actions of its employees and agents, being designated and is not immune from prosecution."

The Mitchells allege that during the year they had their business taken away from them, there were numerous items, totaling $25,486.05, removed, destroyed or stolen. They also alleged that a total of $61,193.58 in vehicle equipment and files were removed, and that vandalism and neglect caused the plaintiffs to suffer $5,890 in damages to the building and property.

They also claim they were denied an estimated $30,000, which constitutes the rental value of the property during the year they were denied to operate during 1986, and claim the actions by the defendants destroyed the growing aspect of their business for 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990.

School trustees to discuss expulsion of boys

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

Pampa public school trustees will decide tonight on the potential expulsion of three high school boys for allegedly bringing a firearm to the campus.

School board members are scheduled to hear the matter during their regular 6 p.m. session at Carver Center.

Dr. Dawson Orr said the incident allegedly occurred on Tuesday, Sept. 11, when the trio reportedly brought a gun to the school premises.

"They are being charged under our discipline management plan with possession of a firearm," Orr stated. "That is termed a serious offense."

Orr said the gun was never brought into the school building, but declined to give specifics of the case.

"Any decision the board makes tonight can be appealed to District Court," Orr said, "so our attorneys are advising us to say as little about this as possible."

Orr did say the three were suspended from school one week ago, pending the expulsion hearing.

"Only the board can expel students," Orr said, explaining that the purpose of tonight's session is to decide if expulsion will occur.

He said that discussion will be conducted in executive session, with the outcome to be announced in open meeting.

The school system is reportedly asking the board to expel the three students for 20 days.

The district is also asking the school board to name an ad hoc committee of parents, board members, administrators, principals and counselors to study proposed district self-esteem materials.

Numerous parents around the district have voiced complaints with a self-esteem curriculum entitled "It's Up to Me," which they said endorses secular humanism, rebellion and possibly even suicide.

Several parents have pointed to a section in the material, aimed at the high school level, that includes the statement, "If I had a gun, I would ..." and asks the student to complete the statement.

Members of the proposed task force include parents Debra Gikas, Shiress Hendrick, Chris Butler, Janet Butler, Cheryl Couts, Cathy Kenner, Barbara Hanks, Judy Sutton and Donna Brauchi.

Board members Colleen Hamilton and Joe VanZandt are also recommended for the committee, as are district employees Dr. Dawson Orr, Jane Steele, Ronnie Wood, Mike Sherrer, Priscilla Alexander and Jana McKinney.

Board members will also consider a district recommendation to purchase $116,727 worth in cafeteria equipment from Nobel Sysco. The Sysco bid was the lowest of four received by the school system and includes purchase and installation of 35 new cafeteria appliances to be placed on six campuses.

Former city manager Chaney files lawsuit against city for 'wrongful discharge'

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

A former Pampa city manager has filed suit against the municipality alleging "wrongful discharge" and is seeking more than $250,000 in damages.

Jack Chaney, who resigned last year after only four months on the job, is now alleging the City Commission forced him to quit.

The $250,000 figure is based on Chaney's $50,000 annual salary and the fact that he had committed five years of his life to the city, court records show. Added to that amount is money for "damages" that Chaney is alleged to have suffered from leaving the city.

Chaney publicly resigned during a City Commission meeting on Tuesday, July 11, 1989. He and city commissioners declined to comment on the resignation at the time except to say there was a "lack of chemistry" between Chaney and city leaders.

At the time of his resignation, Chaney said, "I have enjoyed my short term as city manager and would like to thank the city employees for making this one of the most enjoyable places I have ever worked."

He also stated at the time, "It is quite an unusual situation where I can leave a city after such a short time and be able to call the commission, the staff and employees, friends."

Monday, current City Manager Glen Hackler, who was assistant to the city manager during Chaney's brief time in Pampa, said, "The suit was filed Friday, Sept. 14, in Burnet County, where he had maintained a residence. It seeks not only damages, but also compensation for five years, as the complaint alleges he had committed for five years."

When asked about statements Chaney had made in 1989 that he was resigning of his own free will, Hackler said, "That was my recollection, too."

"We are going to vigorously defend ourselves against this lawsuit on the basis that it is totally unjustified," Hackler said. "Beyond that, it will be up to the attorneys in the courtroom to make any statements."

Chaney, who is currently employed as city manager in Everman, declined comment on the case, as did his attorneys in Burnet.

However, Pampa Mayor Richard Peet was clear in saying the city manager serves at the pleasure of the commission and he believes the lawsuit to be without any grounds.

"The records will show that he volunteered this (resignation) himself. We accepted his letter of resignation in a public meeting. That, to me, is not firing, nor is it requiring him to resign."

Peet said Chaney's personal commitment to the city for five years is irrelevant because there is no contract involved in hiring a city manager.

He stated that a city manager's length of employment is based on their desires and those of the City Commission.

"The manager works at the pleasure of the City Commission. There is no contract because that is against our city charter," Peet said.

He added, "He has no just cause because he resigned. If we had offered a contract and had signed one, then I could see a legitimate cause. But he was not under contract and he resigned of his free will and I don't see any damages there."

The lawsuit reportedly was filed when the city refused to meet the terms of a "demand letter" written by attorney Ross Lavin of Burnet on behalf of Chaney.

At the time the City Commission accepted Chaney's resignation, they agreed to pay him $4,000 a month through Sept. 30, 1989, as compensation.

Prior to going to work for the city of Everman, Chaney worked for the law firm that has now filed the lawsuit on his behalf.

State probes allegations against bank owned by gubernatorial candidate

DALLAS (AP) — The state attorney general and the state's consumer credit office are investigating allegations that a bank owned by Republican gubernatorial candidate Clayton Williams forced car buyers to buy unnecessary insurance, newspapers reported today.

Williams' Claydesta National Bank of Midland came under scrutiny last week after reports that the bank required borrowers on car loans to buy life and disability insurance they didn't need or want. Williams has denied the allegations. The attorney general's office and the state Consumer Credit Commission are investigating the allegations, according to The Houston Chronicle, The Dallas Morning News, and the Dallas Times Herald.

"We're concerned there may be a severe problem," Steven Gardner, an assistant attorney general in Dallas, told the Times Herald. "It's possible that all these consumers who have complained are mistaken. (But) I tend to believe what consumers tell me," Gardner said. Bank president David N. Jones and a spokesman for the Williams campaign said they were unaware of the investigation. "Should anybody want to make an investigation, we would be cooperative and respond promptly," Jones said. "Our bank has never required a customer to buy insurance to obtain a loan," Williams said last week. "Anyone who tells you we did, that is absolutely wrong." Gardner said investigators will be trying to determine if borrowers were required to purchase the insurance, and if the insurance costs were included in the loan interest rates. The state's Deceptive Trade Practices Act says borrowers must be told if the insurance is required by the bank. If the insurance is required, then the law requires that the cost of the insurance be included in the loan interest rate. "We don't know the facts," said Rich Tomlinson, an assistant attorney general assigned to study the bulk of the loans, which were made from Houston. "We're merely looking into it."

Tomlinson said the investigation, involving the attorney general's offices in Dallas, Lubbock and Houston, could lead to negotiations with the bank and eventually a civil lawsuit.

Gordon Hensley, a spokesman for Williams' campaign, said Monday the allegations were leaked by the Democratic gubernatorial candidate Ann Richards.

"We knew she was desperate. We didn't know she was that desperate," Hensley said.

Richards spokeswoman Margaret Justice said: "The facts speak for themselves. If an investigation is appropriate and warranted, that's fine."

Chamber board announces new members

Four new board of directors for the Pampa Area Chamber of Commerce have been elected and three others have been re-elected to serve three-year terms.

The four new board members are Norman Knox, health care consultant; Ben Shackleford, vice president of the National Bank of Commerce; Joe Wheelley, a rancher; and Larry Hollis, managing editor of The Pampa News.

The three directors re-elected are Jerry Norris, district manager of Energas; Brent Stephens, plant manager of Hoechst Celanese; and Richard Stowers, dealer with Culbertson Stowers. The chamber membership elected the seven directors and the ballots were counted at the Chamber office on Friday. The terms for the seven directors begin Nov. 1, Chamber officials said, and they will actually serve three years and two months because the Chamber is going to a calendar year system.

There are 21 elected members of the board of directors, who serve staggered terms. The new president, Mike Keagy, will also appoint three other members to serve on the board.

Those who went off the board of directors were Louise Fletcher, publisher of The Pampa News; Dr. Harry Griffith, former superintendent for Pampa Independent School District; Rutley Chalk, manager of Dunlap's Department Store; and Ken Rheams, owner of Rheams Diamond Shop.

Police seek man wanted in computer theft

Pampa police are continuing to look for a man who reportedly walked out of a local electronics store Monday carrying a brand new computer.

Deputy Chief of Police Ken Hall said today a black male walked in the front door of Radio Shack, 1820 N. Hobart, at 6:10 p.m., Monday, picked up an $800 computer and left the business without paying for the unit. Hall said the man, who was driving a dark green, four-door 1970 Buick with tinted windows and Texas tags BPX-430, has been identified by police, but that no arrests had been made.

Police have said anyone offering information to Crimestoppers that leads to the arrest and indictment of someone committing a felony crime can claim cash rewards of up to $2,000.

Since the value of the computer is more than $750, the crime is classified as a third degree felony, according to state law.

Those wishing to supply information regarding the whereabouts of the man wanted in the Radio Shack theft can remain anonymous by calling 669-2222.

General Assembly session opens to new U.N. role

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Diplomats gathered today for a new General Assembly session in an atmosphere of unprecedented cooperation among leading powers but unremitting tension over Iraq's invasion of Kuwait.

"The United Nations finally is achieving the purpose which was envisaged by its founders, and it is becoming a far more influential actor on the world stage," Ronald I. Spiers, undersecretary-general for political and general assembly affairs, has said.

The 44th General Assembly closed its final meeting Monday with a unanimous appeal to South African authorities to suppress the violence that has killed nearly 800 blacks the last six weeks.

The 45th General Assembly was to convene today for its first post-Cold War session. The assembly is expected to be dominated by the Persian Gulf crisis and economic development, debt and the environment.

At today's gathering, the new assembly was expected to elect as its president by acclamation Guido de Marco, deputy prime minister and foreign minister of Malta.

The position rotates among regional groups each year. It is largely ceremonial, but the president has power to arrange the agenda and mediate among various interest groups.

The annual general debate and speeches by world leaders begin Sept. 24, when President Bush is to address the 159-nation assembly. He is to be followed by 27 heads of state, 18 prime ministers and more than 100 foreign ministers. The assembly convenes at a time when the prestige of the organization never has been higher because of a series of tough Security Council resolutions condemning Iraq's seizure of Kuwait and ordering an embargo on trade with Iraq.

It also comes during unprecedented U.S.-Soviet cooperation and harmony between those two countries and the other three permanent members of the Security Council: France, Britain and China.

County judge issues proclamation urging citizens to register to vote

Gray County Judge Carl Kennedy recently issued a proclamation urging people to register to be able to vote in the Nov. 6 general election.

In the proclamation, Kennedy said, "It is the fundamental responsibility of every Texan to participate in the electoral process by exercising his or her constitutional right." The Texas Secretary of State's Office is actively promoting voter registration and participation through the VOTE '90 campaign.

Kennedy urges all residents to register between now and Oct. 7 to be eligible to vote in the Nov. 6 election.

Thirsty man leads to breaking of sophisticated alien smuggling ring

LAREDO (AP) — An alien smuggler who didn't know when to say "when" helped cause the downfall of a sophisticated smuggling organization that had eluded U.S. and Mexican immigration authorities for more than a decade, authorities say.

Ciriaco de la Cruz Segura, 22, of Nuevo Laredo, told authorities Monday that he was responsible for locking 12 people into an airtight boxcar last week in Laredo.

Joseph de la Cruz, head of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service's Anti-Smuggling Unit in Laredo, Monday told the San Antonio Express-News that de la Cruz Segura's inattention to duty led to the near-tragedy.

"Ciriaco was the one who sealed them in with a metal band to give it the appearance that the car had been officially inspected," the anti-smuggling chief said. "He was supposed to be available to open the car, because from time to time, trains do derail or get delayed for many reasons."

"He was like a safety valve, a security measure for them," he said. "But what happened is that he left to get a few beers, became intoxicated and then fell asleep. By the time he woke up it was hours later and the train had left."

The train carrying the aliens did not leave until about 11:30 a.m. Friday because of the derailment of another train.

By the time U.S. Border Patrol agents found the eight men and four women Friday afternoon, they had been sealed in the boxcar for more than 14 hours.

Martin Villanueva Villegas, 42, whom officials allege is the mastermind behind a smuggling organization they have been trying to crack since 1979, and Jose Cue Kinos, 20, who authorities charge is one of Villanueva Villegas' lieutenants, were accompanying 10 customers on their illegal journey northward.

Both men are from Nuevo Laredo and were in Mexican federal custody Monday on charges of trafficking in humans. Authorities said Villanueva Villegas had been arrested on similar charges in the early 1980s.

Information obtained from the 12 men aboard the train led to raids on safe houses in Mexico. De la Cruz credited cooperation between the INS and Mexican immigration officers and federal judicial police, who quickly moved to raid the safe houses in Nuevo Laredo late Friday and early Saturday, for the successful dismantling of the ring.

"We're really ecstatic about the results," the anti-smuggling chief said. "We had targeted this organization, which was dealing primarily in people other than Mexicans, since 1979. It was a very sophisticated operation, dealing in millions of dollars."

"They would avoid detection by using these metal seals which are put on after an official inspection — when a boxcar is sealed, it's pretty much left alone unless there's something to show that it's been tampered with," de la Cruz said.

A member of the gang purchased the seals in Dallas for $10 each. An investigation into the illegal sale of the seals is under way, he said.

Wise County sheriff vows to fight indictments from grand jury probe

DECATUR (AP) — Wise County Sheriff Leroy Burch vows he will fight any indictment stemming from a grand jury investigation into his department.

"Whatever the grand jury decides to do, I'm all for," the sheriff said Monday. "But now indicting don't mean that they won the court battle."

Burch will be one of the final witnesses before the grand jury completes the investigation later this week.

The investigation was launched after The Dallas Morning News published reports of a bail bond scheme that resulted in hundreds of questionable sex arrests at a roadside park near Decatur, the county seat of Wise County.

The grand jury also is investigating statements by convicted drug traffickers and former deputies, also published by The News, that implicated the sheriff and bail bondsman David Lowayne Box in drug trafficking.

He said he expects the grand jury to clear him of wrongdoing, but he vowed a legal fight if it doesn't.

"If I was in trouble and I was doing some crooked stuff that I was trying to hide, I would never take a polygraph," the sheriff said. "I wouldn't give much comment to the newspaper, and I definitely would plead the Fifth (Amendment) if I had anything to hide."

Burch underwent a privately administered polygraph examination that included questions about alleged corruption that is under investigation by a Wise County grand jury.

The sheriff said his responses were judged truthful when he said he was not involved in wrongdoing.

Burch, however, acknowledged that he "roughed up" grand jury witness Sam Lee during a roadside shouting and shoving match last week but said he acted only to protect his 17-year-old daughter.

Lee, an unpaid investigator for the Wise County attorney's office, had exchanged words with the teenager regarding the investigation a few minutes before the altercation with the sheriff.

Lee, who suffered minor injuries to his head, contends the sheriff ran him off the road, yanked him from his car and repeatedly threatened to kill him. The sheriff was not injured in the incident.

"Only thing I was trying to do was make a believer out of him and let him know when he messes with my kids it's serious," he said. "I didn't kill Sam. I didn't beat Sam. I roughed him up a little bit."

The investigator taped the sheriff's threats with a small recorder he had hidden in his shirt pocket.

In addition to threatening Lee, Burch said he plans to resign, would not seek re-election and is not afraid of going to jail.

In a telephone interview on Thursday, the sheriff retracted each of those statements.

Burch said he believes the grand jury will view his troubles as part of his feud with County Attorney Jean Bishop and her investigators, Lee and Tom Bishop. The Bishops are married.

"I'm not prepared to be indicted because the people of the county know me. They know I'm not crooked. They know I don't have no money," he said.

Dallas officials want man out of elevator home

DALLAS (AP) — Carl Brown is living in high cotton, as the saying goes, but it may not last much longer.

Home for the 68-year-old man is a downtown grain elevator which gives him a penthouse view of the city and lots of storage space.

Brown, who bought the concrete structure 18 years ago, has run into one snag with his domicile. City officials say the building is unfit for human habitation.

"It's nice and quiet," Brown said of his high-rise home. "I've learned to live this way."

The Urban Rehabilitation Standards Board asked Brown several weeks ago to move out of the grain elevator. Brown has refused to move and faces a hearing today before the rehabilitation board, which could evict him.

The board, which says the building is an eyesore, could also tell

Brown to clean up and repair the property.

"If they'll just leave me alone, I'll leave them alone," Brown told The Dallas Morning News. "They're trying to force me out of here. They've made it so hard on me, it's unbelievable."

"The city says it's not healthy for me to live here. I've lived here too long to see anything wrong with it," he said.

Louise Hendershott of Houston, Brown's sister, plans to be at the hearing with him. She said they can't afford a lawyer.

"He loves that place," Mrs. Hendershott, a 71-year-old retired factory worker, said. "People don't understand that. They can say it's not a habitable structure and he shouldn't be living there, but that's his choice."

But city officials are just trying to enforce safety ordinances, said

Martin Burrell, an assistant director of the Housing and Neighborhood Services Department.

Two buildings in the grain elevator complex have broken windows, and the grounds are littered with rusted barrels, wire and scrap metal, Burrell said.

"A lot of junk is being stored in it and delivered to it," said Burrell. "It's a substandard structure. We consider it to be unfit for human habitation."

Even though Brown has a fence around his property with a locked gate, it isn't completely secure, Burrell said. Some sections of the fence are bent, and people could enter with little trouble.

Mrs. Hendershott said Brown has tried to improve the elevator he bought in 1972 for $10,000.

"We have worked like you wouldn't believe," she said. "We're just not working fast enough."

Jury considering Green punishment shown graphic photos of murders

By PEGGY FIKAC
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — Jurors who will decide Ricky Lee Green's punishment in the slaying of a Fort Worth television executive were shown graphic photographs involving other murders in which he is accused.

Green faces death by injection or life in prison since being convicted in the Dec. 27, 1986, sexual mutilation death of advertising sales executive Steven Fefferman.

Prosecutors, seeking the death penalty, submitted enlarged photographs of the bodies of two 1985 murder victims as the punishment phase of the trial opened Monday.

The photos showed Jeff Davis, 16, of Lake Worth, who was castrated and stabbed; and Betty Jo Monroe, a topless dancer from Amarillo who was stabbed, mutilated and beaten in the head with a hammer.

Green, 29, has been charged in the deaths of Davis, Ms. Monroe and Sandra Lorraine Bailey of Fort Worth. Ms. Bailey died from stab wounds and blows to the head in 1985.

Defense attorney Suzie Johnson objected to the presentation of the enlarged photographs.

"The only reason for the enlargement is to prejudice and inflame the jury," she said.

State District Judge Joe Drago of Fort Worth, who is hearing the case, overruled her objections. Green's trial was moved to Austin because of extensive pre-trial news coverage.

Fefferman, 28, worked with KXAS-TV. He was castrated and stabbed repeatedly in his townehome after meeting Green and engaging in sex with him on a beach near Lake Worth, according to testimony.

Prosecutors seeking the death penalty are allowed to reveal pending charges or arrests against the defendant.

Fort Worth police officers described finding Davis' body in a wooded area near Shoreline Drive, which encircles Lake Worth at the western edge of Fort Worth.

When a photograph of Davis' body was shown, Green put his head down, covering his eyes with one hand.

State trooper Alan Troup testified that he found Ms. Monroe's unclothed body near a bridge southwest of Decatur in Wise County. She had been stabbed, and one breast was partially cut off, he said.

When a photograph of Ms. Monroe's body was shown, Green closed his eyes for several moments.

Defense attorney David Bays has said he thinks Green has a good chance of avoiding the death penalty. The defense is expected to portray Green as a victim of a traumatic life and abuse by his father.

Several defense witnesses were sworn in Monday, including Theresa Green, Green's sister. Ms. Green has said under oath that their father sexually abused her and physically abused her brothers.

Ms. Green squeezed her brother's shoulder as she walked by him to be sworn in.

Drago said the prosecution could end its presentation by Tuesday. Bays said the defense probably would take a week to present its side.

Oil shock sends consumer prices soaring at 0.8 percent inflation rate for August

By DAVE SKIDMORE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Iraq's invasion of Kuwait sent energy prices spiraling, pushing the cost of living up a steep 0.8 percent in August, the government said today.

The gain in the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index was double the 0.4 percent rise in July and the largest since January, when a severe cold snap pushed costs up 1.1 percent.

The department attributed nearly half of the August increase to the oil shock. Excluding energy prices, which leapt 4.3 percent, consumer costs rose 0.4 percent.

The Aug. 2 invasion sent gasoline prices up 7.6 percent, while fuel oil prices jumped 15.4 percent. It was the steepest increase in those categories since January.

For the first eight months of 1990, prices rose at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 6.2 percent, up sharply from the 4.6 percent rise for all of 1989.

More bad news is coming, over the next several months, economists believe. Crude oil prices have continued to rise in September and will work their way through to the gasoline pump. Increases are also ahead for chemicals, plastics and other petroleum-based products.

However, many analysts believe economic growth is too slow and demand too weak to support a sustained inflation burst once oil prices stabilize.

A bright spot in the August report was a moderation in food price inflation. Food prices, held back by a decline in fruit and vegetable prices, rose 0.3 percent, the smallest since May.

Fresh fruit prices tumbled 4 percent, but dairy costs rose 1.3 percent. Prices in other food categories were up.

The cost of housing, up 0.7 percent, and transportation, up 1.8 percent, were both driven by rising energy prices. Gasoline accounted for nearly 90 percent of the transportation rise, the department said.

In other categories, medical care rose 0.9 percent, in line with a long string of sharp increases; tobacco was up only 0.3 percent after having risen more than 2 percent in both July and June, and clothing and upkeep costs were up a slight 0.1 percent.

The various changes put the index for all consumer goods at 131.6 in August. That means that a hypothetical selection of goods costing $100 in the 1982-84 base period cost $131.60 in August, up from $7 from a year earlier.

The recent combination of oil-induced inflation and slow economic growth has put monetary policymakers in a quandary. The Federal Reserve normally pushes interest rates higher to fight inflation and lower to stimulate lagging growth.

Trial starts for accused in ranch/drug trade case

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — Three men accused of conspiring to trade a South Texas ranch for 3,700 pounds of marijuana went on trial Monday in federal court here.

Donna resident Ramon Martinez is accused of leading the conspiracy. Federal prosecutors say Martinez has been involved in drug trafficking since 1973.

"Everywhere in this case you see his fingerprints, all over this operation," Assistant U.S. Attorney John G. Crews said Monday.

Martinez, nicknamed "El Lechero," Spanish for "The Milkman," also faces a separate 91-count drug trafficking and racketeering indictment issued in Houston on May 30.

Authorities in Ouachita Parish, La., also have issued a warrant for his arrest in connection with a 2,000-pound marijuana seizure there.

On trial with Martinez are Juan

Barron of Mercedes and Ricardo Navarro Perez of Matamoros, Mexico. The charge of conspiracy to obtain for resale more than 1,000 kilograms of marijuana carries a maximum penalty of life in prison.

They and four other men were charged after allegedly arranging the transaction with undercover U.S. Customs agents.

The others pleaded guilty last month to lesser charges and are scheduled to testify for the prosecution in the Brownsville trial.

A June 26 indictment accuses the seven of conspiring to trade

Martinez's 122-acre ranch in Hidalgo County in the Lower Rio Grande Valley for 3,700 pounds of marijuana.

The ranch, however, already was under federal seizure in connection with Martinez's drug trafficking and racketeering indictment in Houston, according to federal authorities.

House approves Lake Meredith park bill

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The U.S. House of Representatives approved a bill Monday that will give national recreation area status to Lake Meredith.

After clearing hurdles in subcommittee and full committee, the legislation remains intact as it makes its way to the Senate. Sen. Lloyd Benson, D-Texas, has agreed to carry the companion legislation on the Senate side and Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, has agreed to support the bill.

As the author of the legislation, U.S. Rep. Bill Sarpalius, D-Texas, could not be happier.

"We are moving toward passage of a bill that will be of great economic benefit for the entire region," said Sarpalius. "This is the first step in getting more money for the National Park Service at Lake Meredith and making much-needed improvements in all facets of the lake."

The legislation would extend the park service's supervision of the lake. The National Park Service has administered recreation at the lake under a cooperative agreement with the Bureau of Land Reclamation since 1965. The legislation would also authorize the government to complete surveys of the area and create a five-year development plan.

"By moving forward with positive developments at the lake, we will not only increase the tourism in the area, but we will be doing a great deal to protect our national heritage," Sarpalius said.

For 11,000 years, pre-Columbian Indians dug flint from the Alibates quarries to make projectile points and tools. Near the lake are 400 locations where scientists have found proof of Indian habitations.

Lake Meredith and the Alibates National Monument attract an estimated 1.5 million visitors a year.

A roundabout way to get a fair policy

Secretary of Housing and Urban Development Jack Kemp has warned that cities could lose HUD grant funds if they revive policies of withholding money from groups that serve illegal immigrants. Kemp's policy is obviously the decent one, and cities would be well advised to leave such ideas alone. But the whole issue is so tangled that it's almost impossible to discern clear-cut rights and wrongs.

The great economist Ludwig von Mises, who taught for many years at New York University, used to note that when government intervenes in one sector of the economy, it creates problems and unintended consequences in other sectors, which become the pretext for new interventions, which spur more problems and more interference in a vicious spiral of burgeoning bureaucracy.

A situation in Costa Mesa, Calif., where Councilman Orv Amburgey has suggested reviving a policy withholding money from groups serving immigrants, is a case in point — made all the more complex by the fact that several levels of government are involved.

The interference began when the national government installed overly restrictive immigration policies, keeping quotas well below the number of people who would like to come here and find productive work. As many observers have noted, the law creates incentives for employers to discriminate against people with brown skin and Hispanic or Asian names — so laws have been passed to make such discrimination illegal.

The immigration laws make it difficult for illegals to work in many formal settings, so the tendency is to gather on street corners waiting for people to offer daywork in gardening, construction or the like. But these gatherings upset many ordinary citizens, sometimes justifiably so.

The visible problem — people hanging around — is caused by the law. But the impulse is to pass another law. Costa Mesa made it illegal to look for or offer work in public places and tried a city hiring hall.

Another complication. City government gives money, including some from HUD grants, to private charities such as Share Our Selves, which offer meals and medical help to poor people without asking about their legal status. Whether the immigration law is wise or not, it is the law. Does subsidizing a charity that serves illegals constitute condoning or encouraging lawbreaking?

The issue is further complicated by the fact that money comes from a federal agency. (There's little excuse for an affluent city like Costa Mesa to be getting such money, and the program should probably be abolished, but that's another issue.) The tendency in recent years is for the federal government to use grants to dictate policy to local governments — which conservatives used to deplore. And it would hardly do for the feds to approve a policy that even looks as if it could lead to discrimination.

So we have a secretary of HUD dictating policy to Costa Mesa. All things considered, it's a decent policy. As Kemp says, applying Amburgey's policy on a national scale would be disastrous. But what a roundabout way to get there.

Berry's World

"Hey, I'm not complaining! I could be back in the Big Apple DODGING BULLETS."

What's worth fighting for?

Americans used to think their place in global affairs was several thousand miles away from the nearest foreign squabble. The classic statement of U.S. policy came in George Washington's farewell address, when he asked, "Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition; rivalry, interest, humor or caprice?"

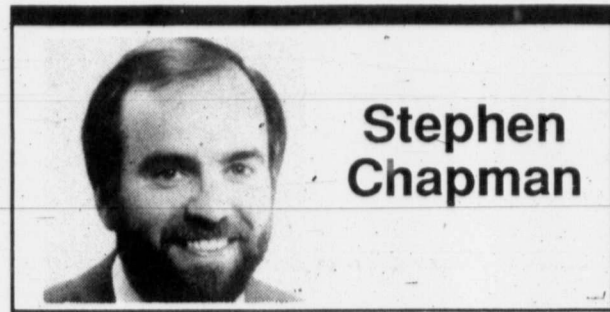

But prudent realism has no place in current American policy. Today, anyone who questions the need to fertilize the Saudi Arabian desert with American blood is treated as a naive deserter.

A vast new commitment that could kill more U.S. soldiers in a few weeks than the Vietnam War killed in eight years, for a far less admirable cause, has been accepted by politicians, press and public with minimal dissent. Even our aid to the Nicaraguan rebels, which demanded little money and no U.S. combat troops, sparked more controversy than this.

The war faction would argue that our near-unity reflects the experience of World War II, which taught Americans that tyrants have to be stopped and that aggression against any leads to aggression against all. But World War II should have taught us a different lesson: not to cling blindly to policies that could have outlived their time.

The Cold War made foreign intervention second nature, weaving the United States into a net of alliances and obligations that automatically transformed every international disagreement into an American concern. The threat presented by a large, expansionist and nuclear-armed enemy obliged us to take a hand in all sorts of wars and revolutions that we once could have ignored.

But, you may have noticed, the Cold War is over, and we won. The Soviets have not only stopped trying to expand their empire — they've abandoned what they already had. Although their train wreck of an economy would profit from the higher oil prices sought by Saddam Hussein, they've sided with the United States and the rest of the world in the Persian Gulf.

A decade ago, a crisis like this could have brought the superpowers to the edge of nuclear confrontation. But Moscow and Washington are working together like the oldest of allies.

That change in atmosphere makes it far less risky for the United States to confront the likes of Saddam Hussein, who can't depend on the Kremlin to help out by rattling a few missiles within American earshot. But it also makes such ventures far less necessary.

During the Cold War, risking war to keep Saudi oil out of Soviet hands would have made sense — because the Soviets were already big enough and powerful enough to pose a danger to the entire West, and it would have been folly to let them gain still greater strength.

But risking war to keep Saudi oil out of Iraqi hands makes no sense at all — because Iraq is too small, too weak and too poor to threaten anyone but its own neighbors, who have ample means to protect themselves.

At a time when the United States is the world's only true superpower, oil is no longer the vital interest it once was. In fact, it's no longer clear that any American interest beyond our own borders is really urgent.

No country in the world, after all, has the capacity to put our safety and independence at risk (except the Soviets, who no longer have the desire). With a vast nuclear arsenal, a large and advanced military and endless stretches of saltwater between us and any credible adversary, we are as close to invulnerable as any country can be. Saddam Hussein could conquer the entire Arab world with no effect on our security and only minor damage to our prosperity.

Our impregnable position isn't grounds for a headlong retreat into Fortress America, ignoring any foreign power until it lands amphibious vehicles on Martha's Vineyard. Just because we are enviably secure now doesn't mean we will always be. We have the same stake as every other country in building a world order that will preserve peace.

More specifically, the United States has lots of good reasons to remain in Europe — not least because the Soviets could someday revert to their old ways. We have commitments to small countries like South Korea and Israel that can't be cancelled without grave risks. Our continued military presence in the Far East is needed to discourage Japan or China from aspiring to superpower status.

But if we shouldn't be shedding all our old obligations, we certainly shouldn't be dreaming up new ones, particularly ones as dangerous and confused as the one we are taking on in the Persian Gulf. It won't always be easy to tell which crises are worth risking American lives and dollars in far-off lands. But it's easy to tell that this isn't one of them.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Tuesday, September 18th, the 261st day of 1990. There are 104 days left in the year.

On September 18th, 1793, President George Washington laid the cornerstone of the U.S. Capitol, using a silver trowel and marble-headed gavel to put the stone in place, in accordance with Masonic ritual.

On this date:

In 1759, the French formally surrendered Quebec to the British.

In 1769, the Boston Gazette reported on the first piano built in the U.S., a spinet with a three-to-four octave range.

In 1810, Chile declared its independence from Spain.

In 1850, Congress passed the Fugitive Slave Act, which allowed slaveowners to reclaim slaves who had escaped into other states.

In 1851, the first issue of The New York Times was published.

In 1940, 50 years ago, Harper and Brothers published You Can't Go Home Again by the late Thomas Wolfe.

He's got time on his hands

My watch disappeared the other day, quite mysteriously. I was in a hotel room, and I distinctly remember taking it off before I went into the shower.

But after the shower, a shave and getting dressed, I couldn't find my watch anywhere.

I looked everywhere for it. I looked under the bed. I looked under the cushions of the sofa. I looked in the pockets of the pants I had on before my shower.

But no watch. But no big deal, either.

I only paid $29.95 for it about a year ago. I simply said to myself, "I'll go buy another watch."

I went down to a shop in the lobby of the hotel and looked over its collection of watches, and in about 9 seconds later I picked out another one.

I splurged a little. It cost $37.95.

I remain convinced that spending a lot of money on a watch is a ridiculous excess.

What do you want in a watch? You want it to give you the correct time, give or take a minute or so, don't you?

That's really all you want out of a watch. But some people go out and spend thousands on a watch that is gold and has diamonds, and they look at theirs and it says 16 minutes after 4, the same as mine that cost me less than 40 bucks.

But they lose theirs, and it's panic time. I lose mine, and for pocket change, I've got another one.

Lewis Grizzard

I admit I did buy a fairly expensive watch one. I was in Lucerne, and you know the great deals you can get on a watch in Switzerland.

I went into a place and spent $200 on a watch. A few months later, I was playing golf and it was very hot and some moisture got inside my $200 watch. A cloud formed inside of it, so I couldn't look down at it and tell the time anymore.

That's when I decided spending any sum over two figures was stupid when you go buy a watch.

So you've got a Rolex. I'm not impressed. Somebody walks up to the both of us and asks, "Have you got the time?" and I will be just as qualified as you to answer — and you have spent what you can buy a car for on your watch, and I've spent peanuts.

Somebody might hit you in the head and steal your Rolex.

Nobody would waste their time stealing mine. I might buy an expensive watch if it had extras that an inexpensive one doesn't.

If the thing told me not only the time, but also the weather forecast, West Coast baseball scores, my horoscope, how the market is doing, what club to hit, my cholesterol count, or whether or not I'm being lied to, that's one thing.

But an expensive watch doesn't give you any more information than an inexpensive one.

So some watches also give you the day of the week and the day of the month.

If I get confused about either of these, all I have to do is plunk down a quarter for a newspaper and I have that information plus what Nelson Mandela said the day before.

Just think what would happen if all the people who buy expensive watches would buy cheap ones, and give what they save to the homeless, Or the American Cancer Society. Or the American Heart Association. Or to Donald Trump, to help him get out of debt. Or to the Oakland A's to help them pay Jose Canseco's new 25-million dollar contract.

We could solve a lot of problems with that money, and everybody would still know what time it is and how long they can hold their breath.

According to my $37 watch, it's 9 minutes after 9 in the morning as I finish this column.

I think I'll take the rest of the day off.

Real women, real men and real life

By SARAH OVERSTREET

In a recent issue of USA Weekend, Christopher Kimball, publisher of Men magazine, which will debut early next year, offers women a deal:

"In the '90s ... women will stop asking 'Why can't a man be more like a woman?' and let men wear boxer shorts; get their hair cut by real barbers, not hairdressers; wear sturdy, mainstream clothes including socks you can't see through; and drink scotch on the rocks instead of blush wines.

"In return," he continues, "men will not be condescending and, with a deep sense of relief and satisfaction to all concerned, act like real men again. That includes opening doors for women; acting like Mel Gibson, not Pee Wee Herman; sending flowers, without occasion, to her office; splitting the wood; carrying out the garbage; and OK, sharing the diapers and dishes as long as women are prepared to share the economic support of the family."

Chris, if you really mean it, it's a deal. My only question is where on earth did you get the idea that women like those bikini bottoms you say replaced boxer shorts, to see you wearing flimsy clothes, or for you to get your hair styled in unisex salons? Just who among my gender have you been talking to, anyway?

It wasn't women who put you out of boxer shorts, it was the men's fashion industry and those of you who were silly enough to buy something you weren't comfortable in. Flimsy clothes? Same culprits. Personally, the first adjective that pops to mind when I see those clothes is "cream puff."

And one of my least favorite things to see a man wearing is a neck full of gold chains, a fashion detestable that is ruining the sexy necks of half a league of professional ballplayers.

When I sit down to watch a game these days and start sizing up the players for looks, I have three major criteria: a strong, determined face beneath cap or batting helmet; a muscular body sans beer belly; and no neck chains. Many a fantasy has been ruined this season by the sudden appearance of a thick gold chain peering out from underneath a ball shirt.

Chris, you talk about the '90s as a time when "boys can be boys" again, and men can return to being "adolescent, impatient, exuberant, rash, oversexed, competitive and downright childish, all the things we dearly loved to be."

Forgive me if I was looking the other way while you were being otherwise, but I guess I missed it. Or perhaps I was paying too much attention to my significant other, who is all of those things and wonderfully so. Oh, and he plays a lot of softball, without neck chains, throws his glove in the dirt on occasion and goes to a barber.

As I said, I don't know who you've been talking to, but I and most of my women friends just wish we could be a little more "downright childish," wish that the culture hadn't forced it almost completely out of us by the time we reached adulthood, rather than wanting you to be less that way.

There's only one place where we part company, Chris, and that's on the subject of feelings. You seem to think men are naturally less inclined to express their feelings and hint that that's OK.

Everything I've read in the field of psychology and medicine in the last 15 years, the majority of it written by men, points to the suppression of emotion as a leading cause of health problems, and to the lack of communication as the single most important cause of unhappy, unsatisfying relationships with other people.

Have it your way. But I don't want you dying early, or not getting what you want out of life because you're too afraid to acknowledge it and too inhibited to express it.

Oh, and if you ever need some feedback on what a real woman wants from a real man, my consulting fees are quite reasonable.

HOUSTON (AP) — Federal authorities said they expected indictments of savings and loan insiders to be forthcoming after a grand jury named two men in a multi-million dollar land fraud scheme operated through two now-defunct thrifts.

James Daniel Beszborn and Joseph B. Westmoreland were named in indictments Monday. Beszborn also has been charged with not filing individual tax returns for 1984 and 1985 to hide money made in the deals.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Michael Clark, in charge of a two-year joint investigation of the scheme by the federal attorney's office, the FBI and the Internal Revenue Service, said neither man had been arrested by late Monday. He said Westmoreland had been asked to surrender on a summons, while an arrest warrant was issued for Beszborn.

"There are ongoing targets of our investigation," Clark said, declining to name suspects. "We're looking at insider accomplices."

Clark said Beszborn and Westmoreland bought 246 acres of cheap swampland and undeveloped property in Nassau Bay and Seabrook and used it as collateral for $1.9 million in real estate loans from Universal Savings Association in deals made between 1984 and 1986.

The collateral property was repossessed when Beszborn and Westmoreland failed to make required service payments on the loan, said Thomas Artru, case agent for the criminal investigation division of the IRS.

"There were some payments made to service the loan, but it was foreclosed on," Artru said.

In a separate transaction, the two also are accused of selling property at an inflated price — $1 million — to Universal Savings subsidiary First Universal Service Corp. through a phony seller.

Beszborn also is accused of failing to file individual income tax returns for 1984 and 1985 to avoid paying $84,751.33 in taxes for money received through the alleged transactions.

Clark said the two "funneled money through various bank accounts" to hide transactions.

Federal officials allege the transactions contributed to downfall of the thrift, which has been in receivership since late 1986. Clark said the thrift had $270 million in deposits when it failed.

"The scheme contributed to that failure, although not causing it itself," said Assistant U.S. Attorney Scott Woodward.

If convicted of all four counts, Beszborn faces 35 years in prison and a $1.45 million fine. Westmoreland faces 25 years in prison and $1.25 million in fines if he is convicted.

"We think this is a very significant case," Clark said. "It's not the biggest and it's not the only one, but it's just a good illustration of the federal government's efforts. To try to defeat these crooks, it takes the expertise of the FBI and the IRS."

Clark said 15 additional lawyers were recently added to the Houston U.S. attorney's office to handle bank fraud cases.

Clark said the alleged conspiracy operated by Beszborn and Westmoreland involved several accounts, trustees, corporate accounts and several "land flips."

The indictment alleges another man was involved in the activity, but he has not been indicted. Clark would not discuss why the man and bankers mentioned in the report were not indicted or whether they would be later.

Woodward said he believed tax evasion might be an easier way for the federal government to prosecute alleged white collar criminals in savings and loan scams, likening the move to the federal government's conviction of alleged mob figure Al Capone.

TCLU legal director says he'll fight his suspension

By PEGGY FIKAC
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — The legal director of the Texas Civil Liberties Union says he'll fight to keep the job, and blamed his suspension by the group's executive committee on his labor-organizing activities within TCLU.

"This is the heart of expression, the heart of free speech and the heart of free assembly. This is the very principle the ACLU (American Civil Liberties Union) is dedicated to, and to penalize me for this very principle doesn't make sense," Jim Harrington said.

In a Monday statement, the executive committee said it has lost confidence in Harrington, who was suspended with pay Saturday pending a full board meeting.

The executive committee did not elaborate on its reasons. A committee member in the TCLU's Austin office did not immediately return a telephone call from The Associated Press.

The committee said a full TCLU board meeting is scheduled Sunday.

"The problem crystallized when we tried to form a union in May," Harrington said. "That was ... the catalyst that really set them off."

Harrington said some executive committee members opposed the union, which he joined, and the panel has not signed documents recognizing the group.

TCLU's legal director since 1983, Harrington began working for the American Civil Liberties Union's South Texas Project in San Juan in 1973.

The executive committee's statement said, "The executive committee took this action because of conduct by Mr. Harrington which led to the committee's loss of confidence in Mr. Harrington's ability to continue as legal director.

"This is regrettable, as Mr. Harrington has made an immense contribution to civil liberties and civil rights, particularly with the Texas Civil Liberties Union, during his many years as a staff attorney."

Harrington said that contrary to TCLU personnel policies, he was not given advance notice of contemplated action and was not given a chance to defend himself.

He said he hopes to be vindicated when the full board, with about 30 members, considers whether he should remain as legal director. There are seven executive committee members.

Harrington, who said he would present his record to the board, listed several legal cases in which he has been involved. Among them, he said, were cases that:

- Resulted in a finding that privacy is a fundamental right under the Texas Constitution, invalidating post-employment polygraph testing of state employees.

- Used the Texas Equal Rights Amendment to invalidate the exclusion of farm laborers from the workers compensation and unemployment benefits laws.

- Won a jury verdict for a woman wrongly confined in a mental hospital for 51 years. He worked with Advocacy Inc. on this case.

Last year, Harrington won the "Trial Lawyer of the Year" award. TCLU board member Al Nelson appeared with Harrington at a news conference to defend the legal director.

"In my years I have known no one more dedicated to the issue of civil liberties nor more effective than Jim Harrington," Nelson said. "The actions of the executive committee do not represent the beliefs of all board members."

Judge throws out Xerox suit verdict

DALLAS (AP) — A San Antonio woman's multimillion-dollar jury award in an age discrimination and fraud lawsuit has been thrown out by a U.S. district judge here.

Jurors' verdict and award of $9 million in damages to Elizabeth Layman in the January suit against Xerox Corp. was overruled Monday by Judge Sidney A. Fitzwater.

He ruled that the former employee's claims were "not supported by substantial evidence."

Formerly with Xerox in Dallas, Ms. Layman had claimed the company fraudulently promised in 1986 to find her a job in California but did not intend to keep that promise.

The $8,750,000 punitive damage award was based on the fraud claim, for which Layman also received $139,716 in actual damages. She had also received $145,000 in compensatory damages for back pay and benefits in connection with alleged age discrimination.

Xerox officials claimed they offered Layman two jobs in California, both at higher wages than she received in Dallas.

The company then bought her Dallas house in anticipation of her move and offered relocation expenses. But Layman declined to take either job and instead asked to resign with severance pay, which she received.

Xerox had asked Fitzwater to rule there was no fraud or age discrimination, as claimed.

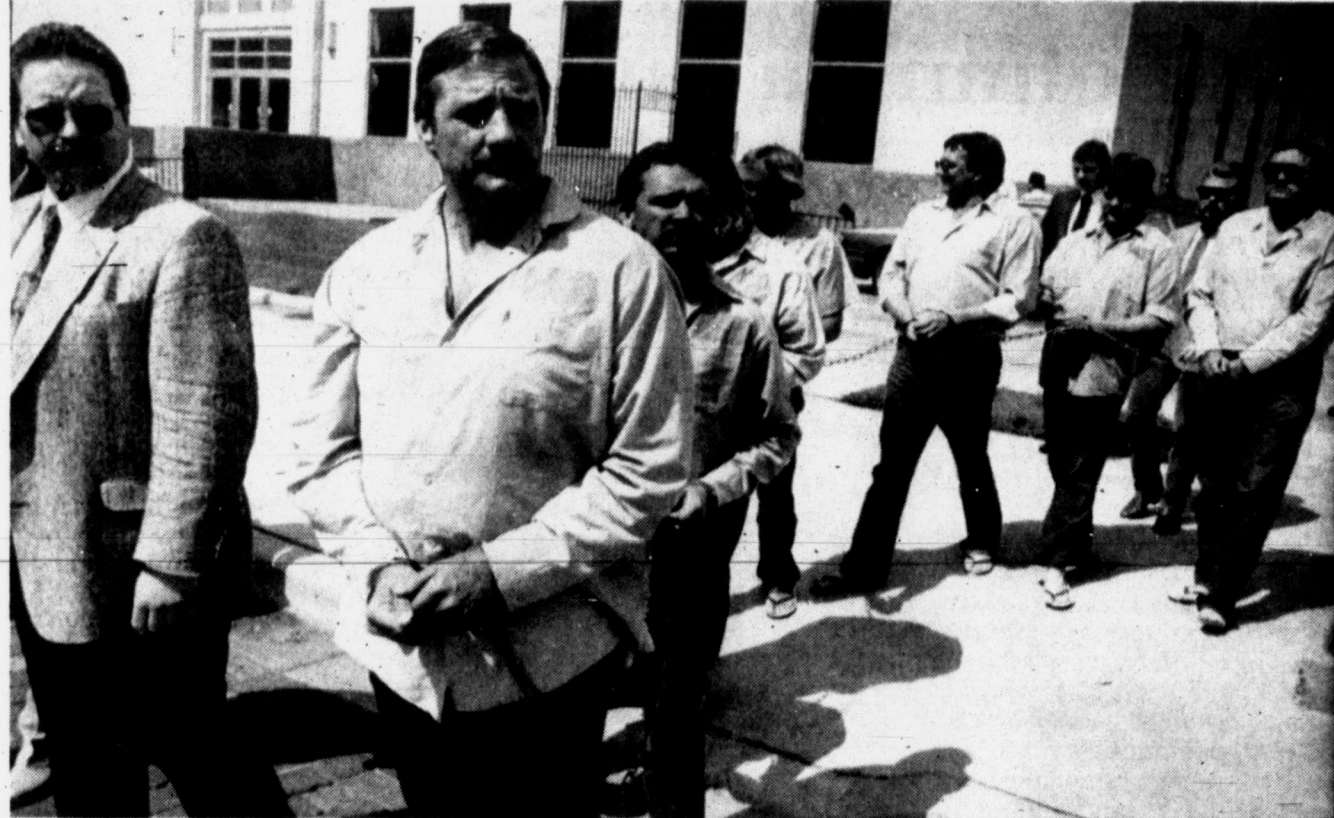

"We are extremely pleased that the court agreed with our position," said Thomas C. Abbott, Xerox manager of public relations in Stamford, Conn.

"From the outset of the case through the four-week trial and following the verdict, we firmly believed that there was no merit to Layman's claims."

The company had also called the damages awarded by the jury "outrageous" and said the verdict was reached "as the result of passion and prejudice."

Layman, now 48, deferred comment on Fitzwater's ruling to her attorney, Larry Macon, who said he would "absolutely" appeal the decision.

"I think the judge is wrong, and I am hopeful that the 5th Circuit (Court of Appeals in New Orleans) will restore a very clear jury decision," Macon said. "In their verdict, the jury said not that Xerox was wrong, but real wrong."

Eight oil field workers are led to an arraignment hearing Monday in Lubbock on charges of obstructing airline flight attendants' duties, committing assault and using abusive language on a flight back from the Cowboys game.

Men charged with interference of flight crew

By CHIP BROWN
Associated Press Writer

LUBBOCK (AP) — Eight oil field workers returning from a Dallas Cowboys game were charged Monday with obstructing the duties of airline flight attendants by committing assault and using abusive language.

The men, who allegedly boarded American Airlines Flight 701 intoxicated and demanded more booze, were arraigned in federal court Monday and released from jail.

U.S. Attorney Roger McRoberts said he intended to present the case to the federal grand jury today.

The men boarded the plane late Sunday with their own alcohol and after it was confiscated, they refused to buckle their seat belts, made sexual suggestions to the flight attendants and yelled profane language to prevent the attendants from delivering preflight instructions, according to an FBI criminal complaint.

FBI agents and Lubbock police officers arrested the men after the flight from Dallas landed at Lubbock International Airport shortly before 12:30 a.m. Monday, said Don Ramsey, FBI spokesman in Dallas.

When the men learned they would not be served alcohol aboard the hour-long flight because they were intoxicated, they refused to be seated despite instructions from the captain, according to the FBI report.

They refused to stay in their assigned seats and repeatedly demanded alcohol after calling the attendants to their seats by pressing service buttons, the FBI report said.

The men also voiced abusive language and made threats to other passengers, the report said.

Ramsey said the men were oil field workers. He did not know which oil companies employed them.

The charge in the FBI criminal complaint said the men knowingly, "assaulted, intimidated and threatened the flight attendants ... so as to interfere with the performance of the attendants' duties and lessen the ability of such attendants to perform their duties."

According to witnesses aboard the plane, the men had just come from a long afternoon of drinking at the football game.

The men were identified as: Jay Scott Curtis, 25; Charles D. Dixon, 33; James Lee Patterson, 46, and Everett D. Taylor, 39, all of Hobbs, N.M.; James Lee Selman, 29, of Seminole, Texas; and Donnie Wayne Hill, 36; Bradley Lee Thompson, 31, and Gerald R. Ziebart, 49, all of Eunice, N.M.

One flight attendant said she was "physically assaulted" by Curtis, the FBI complaint said.

The flight crew called the FBI and Lubbock police officers to meet them upon arrival in Lubbock, the FBI said. The men were arrested and remained jailed until the arraignment.

U.S. Magistrate J.Q. Warnick released each of the men on a $3,500 unsecured bond.

If convicted, the men face up to 20 years in prison and a maximum of $250,000 in fines.

Termination notices mailed to wrong federal army depot workers

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Termination notices sent to 195 Corpus Christi Army Depot employees went to the wrong people in some cases, officials said.

Depot officials said Monday the mixup was due to employee evaluations that were incorrectly filled out. They said it will take at least three weeks to sort through the confusion to determine who will get the notices for the planned cut.

"In the last 10 days or so we've discovered that we had a problem with our performance-appraisal system at the depot," said depot commander Col. Edward J. Shannon. "As the employees (scheduled to be let go) came in to get counseling on their rights, we discovered that we had inconsistencies in their appraisals."

The depot had been asked to reduce the workforce from more than 4,300 to 3,625 by Oct. 12, because of looming cuts in defense spending, Shannon said.

That meant not renewing the contracts of more than 350 temporary workers and cutting 195 permanent positions. Early retirements and normal attrition made up the balance.

The performance appraisals rate employees for their performance of

Expert: Waste containers won't withstand quake

By SUZANNE GAMBOA
Associated Press Writer

EL PASO (AP) — An engineer who has helped design dozens of radioactive waste disposal sites criticized a state agency's plans for burying radioactive waste in West Texas.

George Beckwith, a consultant with Sergeant, Hauskins & Beckwith, said Monday his studies show an extremely violent earthquake could occur at the burial site near Fort Hancock, about 50 miles southeast of El Paso.

He also said he believes the site is in a 100-year flood plain and in the recharge zone of a major aquifer.

The Texas Low Level Radioactive Waste Authority has said its studies show the Fort Hancock site is the best place in the state to bury the waste.

But El Paso and Hudspeth counties have sued the authority, alleging the agency has overlooked the possibility of earthquakes in the area and other factors.

The non-jury trial began Sept. 6 in 34th District Court.

The state has proposed using concrete containers that are 8 feet tall and 8 feet in diameter, with 10-inch thick walls. The waste would arrive at the site in steel containers manufactured for toxic waste transportation.

The steel container would be placed in the concrete containers, sealed and buried, said Rick Jacobi, the authority's general manager.

But Beckwith said the concrete containers would be susceptible to cracks if a violent earthquake occurred. "Cracking poses a very difficult design problem," said Beckwith, a geological engineer.

Jacobi said Beckwith's calculations are wrong and the state plans to challenge his testimony with evidence showing an earthquake of the magnitude Beckwith predicted would not occur at the site.

"I think this is a very weak part of their case," Jacobi said Monday.

specific tasks. Those ratings, in turn, are used to calculate an overall rating. The problem, officials said, is that supervisors apparently didn't use the various task ratings to calculate the overall rating. The overall rating was used to help determine employee seniority when officials did the initial review of the workforce to decide who would be affected by the cuts.

Report calls for streamlining federal meat inspections

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - If the U.S. Agriculture Department relies more heavily on the private industry to monitor beef quality, the agency should concentrate on guarding consumers from contamination, the National Academy of Sciences said Monday.

The academy said the USDA should adopt a controversial proposal to streamline beef inspections, including a feature putting greater reliance on packing companies.

The streamlined inspection system is currently used experimentally in five meat plants using high-speed techniques to slaughter steers and heifers for the beef market.

USDA officials said those include two Montfort plants, in Greeley, Colo., and Grand Island, Neb.; two Excel plants, in Friona and Plainview, Texas; and a National Beef plant in Liberal, Kan.

"The federal government should design its inspection programs to focus on contemporary health issues," the NAS report said. "It should insist that industry comply with policies and procedures required to protect public health and foster public confidence in the safety of the food supply."

For example, although supporting the speeded-up inspection system for cattle, the report said the department's Food Safety and Inspection Service, or FSIS, should develop methods for quickly testing carcasses for microbial and chemical contamination.

The Streamlined Inspection Service for cattle slaughter, or SIS-C, was studied by a panel of the academy's Institute of Medicine under a $154,000 grant from the department.

"From a food safety viewpoint, SIS-C alone is probably no better, and in some situations can be less effective, than traditional inspection because the reduced oversight by government inspectors is not compensated by a total commitment to product quality on the part of the industry," the report said.

But the report also called the streamlined system "the most important change in bovine meat inspection" since federal supervision was begun in 1906.

"For this system to work in practice, both FSIS and industry must fully endorse the philosophy of shifting responsibility for meat quality from FSIS to industry so that the government can concentrate on safety," the report said.

The plan was officially proposed in November 1988. USDA spokesman Jim Greene said an amended proposal would probably be made based on the new study.

Greene said the department plans to begin using the revised system within two years, but only in plants that slaughter "fed" cattle for the slaughter market. These cattle are mostly grain-fattened steers and heifers from feedlots.

The report said about 80 of the nation's more than 1,300 USDA-inspected cattle slaughter plants would be eligible to use the system. Those account for an estimated 80 percent of the fed cattle slaughtered for the consumer market.

Lester M. Crawford, FSIS administrator, said the 11-month study by the scientific panel "confirms our ongoing commitment to modernize inspection at cattle slaughter plants is on solid footing."

Under traditional inspections, federal inspectors check bile ducts, heart, cheek muscles and numerous lymph nodes for disease and other abnormalities. They also are responsible for condemnation and disposition of diseased carcasses, as well as supervising the trimming undesirable parts.

But under SIS-C, plant employees would incise heart and cheek muscles, position parts for inspectors and assume responsibility for some trimming.

Inspectors still would be responsible for condemnation and disposition of diseased carcasses, and still would examine every head, viscera and carcass.

The industry's American Meat Institute called the report "an objective assessment" of the new inspection program and that it may help to end the controversy over the merits of SIS-C.

Tom Devine of the consumer-oriented Government Accountability Project, which has helped federal whistleblowers to criticize USDA inspection operations, said he was "delighted" by the report.

"It's a gratifying vindication for the concerns raised by whistleblowers" who as USDA inspectors alleged there have been many slipshod, unsanitary practices in plants where the new system has been used, he said.

NASA scrubs Columbia launch - again

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) - After four failures, NASA gave up trying to launch the leaky space shuttle Columbia so that it can concentrate on getting Discovery aloft in October before the planets fall out of the proper alignment.

NASA scrubbed the fourth attempt to launch Columbia about seven hours before it was to lift off at 1:28 a.m. today after a buildup of hydrogen, a highly flammable gas, was detected in the engine compartment during fueling.

A baffled Robert Crippen, shuttle director, said: "I do not understand it. Our plan is that we are going to understand it."

Columbia was to have lifted off with the $150 million Astro observatory to study some of the hottest objects in the universe.

Driven by the need to launch Discovery next month, NASA ran out of time and patience with Columbia. The Discovery mission has priority: its crew is to launch the Ulysses space probe toward the sun during an alignment of Earth, sun and Jupiter that won't reoccur for 13 months. Another effort to launch Columbia is not likely before November, if then, NASA said.

Columbia's crew of seven, which includes four astronomers, was to head back to Houston today.

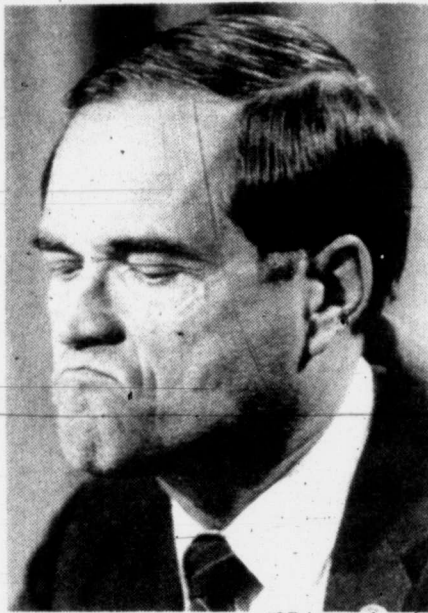

Three of Columbia's scrubs were for hydrogen leaks; the fourth was because of a problem communicating with one of the four telescopes Columbia was to carry on a 10-day astronomical mission.

The latest failure only added to what has been a difficult year for NASA. It means that nearly six months will have gone by without a shuttle flight if Discovery goes in October, the longest gap between missions since flights resumed after the Challenger disaster.

The space agency planned on nine missions this year, so far it has had only three.

This also has been the year when the Hubble Space Telescope was found to have blurred vision and when the Magellan spacecraft orbiting Venus twice slipped its communications bonds with Earth.

"I believe that we still have people out there who are capable of solving this kind of a problem,"

(AP Laserphoto)

Space Shuttle Program Director Bob Crippen mulls over a question during a press conference Monday night at Kennedy Space Center.

Crippen said. But he added, "We certainly haven't done this in a very expeditious manner, I know that."

Engineers had not decided on the next step, which probably will involve installing cameras and lights in Columbia's engine compartment and going through the tanking procedure again. Crippen said there may be three or more leaks.

After a fueling attempt on May 29, when the first hydrogen buildup occurred both outside the shuttle and inside the engine compartment, NASA focused on a plumbing connection between the fuel tank and the shuttle. A similar leak was found in Atlantis, prompting NASA to ground the three-shuttle fleet temporarily.

Engineers determined that microscopic glass beads somehow worked their way into Columbia's seals and provided a path for the leaks. The connecting pipe was replaced, but on Sept. 5 hydrogen flooded the aft compartment again.

NASA replaced three small pumps and a damaged Teflon seal over a valve.

New, Crippen said, the leak may have had "something to do with us going through, taking things apart," after Columbia returned from its last mission in January with some systems contaminated with an abrasive used to polish metal.

RTC cancels satellite auction for million-dollar S&L assets

By DAVE SKIDMORE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Federal savings and loan bailout officials said Monday they were canceling the much-promoted international satellite auction of million-dollar properties inherited from bankrupt savings and loans.

L. William Seidman, chairman of the Resolution Trust Corp., said the auction was canceled after the Auction Company of America, which the agency had hired, did not contribute to a joint fund promoting the event.

"The group we contracted with couldn't fulfill their end of the deal," Seidman said in a telephone interview.

Jim Gall, chairman of the Miami-based Auction Company of America, disputed Seidman and accused the bailout agency of bungling the auction. He said his firm has spent nearly $2 million over four months to prepare for the event, about what it was obligated to spend.

The auction was to be held Nov. 15 in Dallas, Texas, with satellite hookups to bidders in nine other U.S. cities as well as Tokyo and London.

The RTC had hoped to sell 71 properties valued at $300 million. The auction was a centerpiece for what the agency had billed as its "great fall inventory clearance sale" aimed at drastically slimming its ballooning inventory of S&L assets.

"We hope to start over. ... It's going to slow us up a little but, but I don't think it's a major blow," Seidman said.

Gall faulted the RTC for failing to set minimum prices for the properties and for withdrawing three properties from the auction list and selling them using other methods.

Gall said potential buyers must have some assurance the properties will remain on the auction list or they will be unwilling to spend thousands of dollars on the environmental, engineering and appraisal reports needed to offer an intelligent bid.

"We've lost investor after investor," Gall said in a telephone interview.

He said a low or no minimum auction price also is needed to stimulate interest in an auction by holding out the prospect for a bargain, he said.

"To this day, the agency hasn't put out reserve prices," he said.

Financial experts advise lottery winners to take things slow

By VIVIAN MARINO
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - Winning a lottery jackpot such as Florida's $106.5 million bonanza can be a sweet dream, but the temptations and mysteries of new-found wealth can become a nightmare. The advice from most financial experts: take things slow.

"Preserving your capital is the first thing you've got to do. You'll have plenty of time to invest it," David McLaughlin, a financial adviser with Chase Investment Counsel in Charlottesville, Va., said Monday. "You must make sure your money is safe and earning something."

Such is the "problem" for at least half a dozen Florida Lottery players.

Six tickets matched the winning numbers drawn in Florida on Saturday for a jackpot estimated at $106.5 million, the second-largest in U.S. history behind Pennsylvania's $115 million prize last year. Each Florida ticket is worth about $17.75 million over 20 years, or $887,500 a year before taxes.

Many investment counselors suggest that for the first couple of years lottery winners - or anyone with a sudden windfall, for that matter - keep a portion of their loot in liquid assets, such as certificates of deposit or Treasury bills, until they can figure out what they want to do with it.

Some banks, such as Northern Trust Co. in Chicago, even offer special accounts for clients who suddenly have $1 million or more and need a place to park it.

The rest can go into longer-term bonds, including tax-free municipal issues, or growth stocks, experts say.

For McLaughlin, the mix would be divided equally among Treasury bills, Treasury notes or bonds, and stocks for the first few years. Of course, a very small portion may be splurged, he said.

Charles Clough, chief investment strategist for Merrill Lynch & Co., would recommend that 45 percent of the winnings go into intermediate-and long-term bonds, 10 percent to 15 percent in cash or 90-day T-bills, and 40 percent to 45 percent in stocks.

"But stay away from stocks that depend on cyclical consumer spending," he warned.

State lottery officials often don't provide financial advice to winners except to sometimes explain tax liabilities and urge winners to hire a good accountant. Those who fail to take such advice run the risk of falling prey to peddlers of bogus investments.

But among the biggest problems most lottery winners will face is having to sift through all the solictations from financial brokers.

"They're going to be getting a lot of calls," said McLaughlin, who recommends winners get an unlisted telephone number for starters.

"There will be a lot of pressure," added Michael Naste, an independent financial planner from Deland, Fla., and a $2.5 million lottery winner himself. "If they're not careful, they can easily overextend themselves."

Government to prosecute Winnie Mandela

By GREG MYRE
Associated Press Writer

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The government said today that it will charge Winnie Mandela with kidnapping and assault in connection with a 1988 incident in which four youths were allegedly taken to her house and beaten.

One youth was killed and the former head of Mrs. Mandela's bodyguard unit, Jerry Richardson, has been convicted of murder and sentenced to death in the same case.

Mrs. Mandela is the wife of African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela. The decision to prosecute her is certain to damage relations between the white-led government and the ANC, the country's leading opposition group.

Since May, the two sides have been holding periodic peace talks aimed at eventually granting the black majority a voice in national affairs.

However, relations have been strained by black factional fighting in townships around Johannesburg that has left almost 800 dead since early August.

Mrs. Mandela will stand trial with seven members of her former bodyguard unit who already have been charged, said Klaus von Lieres and Wilkau, attorney general for the Johannesburg Supreme Court.

She is expected to be formally charged on Monday.

"After careful consideration of all the relevant facts, including possible implications beyond the normal legal ones, I have decided to prosecute Mrs. Mandela," the attorney general said in a statement.

Mrs. Mandela was not immediately available for comment.

Her husband, who was released from prison in February after serving 27 years for sabotage and plotting to overthrow the government, was meeting with fellow ANC officials today and could not immediately be contacted.

Anti-apartheid groups denounced Mrs. Mandela last year following allegations of her involvement in the case. However, Mrs. Mandela has returned to prominence since her husband's release.

The bodyguards, known as the Mandela United Football Club, were repeatedly in confrontations with police, journalists and black groups in the township. Anti-apartheid groups accused them of waging a reign of terror.

According to the court testimony, four black youths were kidnapped in December 1988 from a church in the town of Soweto and taken to Mrs. Mandela's home in the township, where they were repeatedly assaulted.

One of the youths, 14-year-old Stompie Seipei was killed. According to court testimony, he was accused of being a police informer.

The three surviving youths testified that Mrs. Mandela participated in the beatings.

Mrs. Mandela has denied any wrongdoing but never given a full account of the episode.

Montana's proud of its Tyrannosaurus Rex

By MIKE DENNISON
Associated Press Writer

BOZEMAN, Mont. (AP) — When trucker Bill McKamey heard that Montana's Museum of the Rockies had found a Tyrannosaurus rex skeleton, he offered to make his vehicle and services available any time, anywhere.

"How many times in your life do you haul a dinosaur?" he asked.

The fossil T-rex found in the badlands of eastern Montana is the largest and most complete skeleton of a Tyrannosaurus ever discovered. It also is the first of four T-rex skeletons discovered in Montana that will be staying here.

That has become a source of pride for people in Montana.

McKamey, for example, was one of scores of volunteers who helped bring the fossil of the meat-eating beast from its 65 million-year-old bed in the dry, rugged territory around the Missouri River to the display room in Bozeman.

Although the Tyrannosaurus is the best known dinosaur, only eight have been found — four in Montana, two in Canada and one each in South Dakota and Wyoming.

While Montana may be the most fertile hunting ground for the T-rex, none of the fossils has stayed in the state.

"Until this, I didn't realize how many people were upset about fossils going out of state," said Pat Leigg, chief preparator of paleontology for the museum. "A lot of people told me they had a ranch here and there, and certain people would come and take fossils out and they never heard about them again."

He said that until the Museum of the Rockies opened its paleontology department eight years ago, the state had no facility to research the fossils. Now the museum has one of the largest paleontology departments in the country, and it has more of a say.

"Now, we know who's doing what," he said. "Montana is in this network of paleontology departments."

The Tyrannosaurus rex was the largest carnivore ever to walk the Earth. It grew to 35 to 40 feet long and up to 12 feet high, with teeth 6 inches long.

Museum staffers dug up the 90 percent complete skeleton over four weeks this summer on federal land near the small farming town of Circle.

Army Corps of Engineer engineers built a dirt road into the remote site and helped load the seven tons of fossils onto trucks. McKamey was waiting nearby with a flatbed truck and hauled the bones nearly 400 miles to the museum at Montana State University.

The fossils, packed in plaster and caked with rock and hardened mud, then had to be unloaded, weighed and set up for display. But the museum worried that the floor wouldn't be able to support the 31/2-ton pelvic section.

"We had a reporter in here and he wrote about it, and the next morning, we got a whole bunch of calls, saying, 'What do you need?' It sure made my life easier," Leigg said.

Two state workers helped weigh the pieces, an architect volunteered to examine the floor, a rental firm loaned dollies, a construction company loaned a forklift and a driver, and a concrete casting firm brought in a crane.

"We read a little blurb in the newspaper that they needed to turn (the pelvis) over and that the largest forklift couldn't do it," said Steve Anderson of Bozeman, who operated the crane. "So I called them and talked to them. ... It was a chance to see something really rare."

Eventually, the floor was reinforced.

New group of developers emerge in Houston market

HOUSTON (AP) - A young group of players is emerging in the battle-scarred Houston real estate market, and its members are expected to do a lot of the buying and building into the next century.

The 1980s real estate crash, fueled by the collapse in oil prices, sent many Houston developers to bankruptcy court, leaving room for new faces.

"Many of the old guard are battle weary, and their exit has left a void," said 34-year-old Douglas Schnitzer, son of one of Houston's premier developers of the last two decades.

Real estate observers say the next big Houston developers could come from the ranks of the newcomers. But, at the same time, some of the experienced developers have survived the crash and are ready to roll through the '90s with a bigger profile.

The next superstar might even be working in near-anonymity inside one of the big real-estate firms, like Gerald Hines Interests or Trammell Crow Co.

John Rippel, who heads Trammell Crow's residential operations in Houston, has been a whirlwind of activity in the last year. While others have waited on the sidelines, Rippel has been working to develop at least four apartment complexes for Crow.

Some young developers break away from the big development firms to make it on their own. Two graduates of the Hines organization formed Barker-Patrinely Group in 1983.

Since then, Dean Patrinely and Michael Barker have developed more than $700 million in projects around the nation, including the 17,000-seat Miami Arena, home of the National Basketball Association's Miami Heat.

Barker-Patrinely is vying to build the next major office building in Houston, if oil company BP Exploration agrees to move into it.

Ten years ago, when Houston's building boom was on, a simple check of the building permit records would have told the score. The biggest real estate players had the most construction permits.

But with vacant office space still in ample supply in Houston, developers may not get many opportunities to build office projects in the '90s.

Today, 26 percent of the city's office space is vacant, and no major office projects are being built. There may never be another surge of construction - or another fleet of busy developers like Houston had in the 1970s and 1980s.

"In Houston, there's very limited development going on, (compared to) what Hines and Schnitzer were doing 10 to 15 years ago," said Lee Goodwin of the realty firm Cushman and Wakefield.

The current real estate players buy older office buildings and renovate them, or they organize investment groups to buy properties to hold for appreciation.

Several of the new developers have hooked up with major funding sources that could propel them to the top.

The new players have spent millions to buy Houston office towers and apartment projects in the last year.

But no matter how fast the new developers may grow, they may still be dwarfed in comparison to what could be built by the mainstays of Houston development - Hines, Friendswood Development and Woodlands Corp.

JMB Realty, a well-established giant on the national scene but new to Houston, also could become one of the most prolific builders of the '90s if it gets busy in the downtown Houston Center project, which JMB purchased last year.

As Houston's real estate market continues to revive in the '90s, realty observers will be watching to see who becomes leader of the pack.

"It's going to be interesting to see who the new breed of cats are," said Charlie Whynot of Alliance Commercial, a real estate firm.

Gorbachev suggests referendum on call for privatization of land

By ALAN COOPERMAN
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) - President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, assailed for indecision on overhauling the economy, called Monday for a national referendum on whether to end the collectivization of farmland and turn it back to individuals.

He spoke a day after about 50,000 protesters marched to the Kremlin and demanded the resignation of Gorbachev and his prime minister over the state of the economy, which is plagued by underproductivity and worsening consumer shortages that have included bread lines in Moscow this month.

The demonstrators carried banners reading "The Economy is a Disaster."

In a 30-minute address to the national parliament Monday, Gorbachev said a referendum on collective farming "is such a crucial question, it cannot be decided in any office, by any small group or even by this parliament."

The parliament, or Supreme Soviet, was opening debate on competing economic reform plans.

Last week, Gorbachev endorsed a plan that would move the Soviet Union toward a market economy in 500 days. It would include allowing farmers and other private citizens the right to own and sell land and pass it to their heirs.

So far, Soviet reforms have stopped short of full privatization of land, in part because of staunch opposition from traditional Communists. Land was collectivized in a bloody 1929-32 campaign under Josef Stalin, leaving a legacy of fear and distrust among farmers.

Several competing reform plans have been proposed, including a radical version backed by Russian republic President Boris Yeltsin and approved by the republic's legislature. Russia is the largest of the 15 Soviet republics with half the country's people and three-fourths of its land mass.

The national prime minister, Nikolai I. Ryzhkov, last week proposed a more moderate plan that would only partially dismantle the state planning bureaucracy.

In his address Monday, Gorbachev stopped short of advocating any specific proposals.

He said that no matter which proposal is adopted, the government should protect the population from the negative aspects of a market economy, such as inflation, unemployment and possible sharp rises in the costs of basics like health services and housing.

"We need to guarantee Soviet citizens a basic wage, pensions, housing and free medical care," he said.

Early toasters required quick hands

Antiques and Collecting

Ralph and Terry Kovel

This bread toaster made of tin, circa 1902, was a big improvement over the hand-held variety which often burned the fingers of the toaster, too.

Did you ever see your grandparents make dark, burnt toast, then scrape off the charred part? Toast was frequently burnt in the days before automatic toasters came into use in the 1920s. It was often made over an open fire or over a burner on the stove.

The toaster was a long-handled iron fork in the 1700s, and later a two-slice holder kept on the floor in front of the fireplace was preferred. The flat, hinged, hand-held basket similar to today's barbecue holder for hamburgers was popular in the 1800s. In 1900 the toaster was usually made to hold four pieces of bread over a stove burner.

The Knoblock Pyramid toaster was patented in 1909. The bread leaned against wires on each of the four sides and heat came from the stove burner under the center section. The toast had to be turned at just the right moment or it burned.

Collectors search for all kinds of toasters. The search for all kinds of toasters. The streamlined chrome toasters of the 1950s are now of great interest.

They were often different. They were adapted to the 20th century.

Many radios were built into William and Mary style cabinets. The old pieces had a chest with three long drawers topped by two smaller drawers placed next to each other. The top chest of drawers stood on the base which had drawers above long trumpet-shaped legs with turnings. There were stretchers between the legs.

Always look to see if the top and bottom started life together. They should have matching color, wood and back panels. The inside of all the drawers should match. The dovetail ends on the drawers should be similar.

New pieces may have modern machined lumber and not the rougher hand-hewn finish on the back pieces and drawer bottoms. The drawers should be worn at the points that rub when the drawer is opened. If you think you have an 18th century piece, it would be wise to have a competent appraiser tell you more.

Q. My yellow painted iron bank is shaped like an owl. If I drop a penny in the slot, the owl turns its head. The bank is 8 inches high. How old is it?

A. Any bank made so a part moves when money is inserted is known as a "mechanical" bank. Those like cash registers that record the amount of money with each deposit are called "registering"

Q. How can I tell if my William and Mary style chest-on-chest is old or new?

A. William and Mary style furniture was made in America from 1690 to 1730. Any piece found today should have clues to tell the age. The style was copied by many firms in the 1920s and 1930s. The overall proportions of the copies banks. The simple slotted container is known as "still" bank. Many iron mechanical banks were made between 1870 and 1900. Copies have been made ever since. Some are even being produced in aluminum or plastic. Your owl was patented and made in 1880 by J. and E. Stevens Company of Cromwell, Conn.

Q. Who was Happifat? I have a doll and a postcard picturing a girl called Happifat.

A. The Happifats were patented in 1914 by Kate Jordan. The bisque dolls were probably named for their fat tummies and big smiles. The boy and girl have the same strange hair style with one long, large curl on the forehead. The girl usually wore a tent-like dress with a large ribbon bow tied at the bottom. The boy wore large balloon-shaped trousers and a short jacket over a skirt.

The dolls were made by German and Japanese firms. The postcards came in a set of six by the Edward Gross Company. The Happifats pictured had the same strange shape and hairdo but wore different clothes suitable for bedtime or playtime. Happifats were also found on children's dishes.

TIP: The word "trademark" was used on English wares after 1855 but most of the pieces with the letter "LTD" were made after 1880.

Woman's genes keep gray away but friends won't let that wash

DEAR ABBY: I'm sure other women have had this problem, but I don't happen to know any. I do not have any gray hair in my head, and I am 80 years old.

It wouldn't be a problem except for the fact that nobody believes me. I mention it only when I am asked, but when I tell people I have never dyed my hair, they think I'm lying.

I don't have a regular hairdresser and I go to the beauty parlor only once a year for a permanent. Abby, how can I prove that I am not a liar?

NO LIAR

DEAR NO LIAR: Don't waste your energy trying to prove you are not a liar. The burden of proof is on the accuser.

Whether one's hair turns gray or not is primarily a matter of genetics. Most Latins, American Indians and some strains of Irish do not "gray" until old age—and some never do.

At one point during the Reagan years, in order to confirm whether or not Ronald Reagan dyed his hair, a reporter for one of those gossipy newspapers (sold primarily in supermarkets) managed to acquire some of Mr. Reagan's hair from the barber-shop following a haircut. The reporter took the hair clippings to a laboratory to be analyzed. The results? Not a trace of hair coloring could be found! To this day, however, there are those who still insist that Ronald Reagan dyed his hair.

So, dear lady, in conclusion, please reread paragraph No. 1 of my reply, and have a good day!

DEAR ABBY: Many years ago—but please don't ask me how many—you printed a wonderful piece about the benefits of hugging. I have carried it in my wallet, but it's falling apart.

Will you please print it again? If you do, I'm going to have it laminated. Keep up the good work, Abby. I love you.

DEAR ABBY: Would you please give me some advice on how to respond to seeing a parent physically abuse a child in public?

Recently, my wife witnessed a woman pull her child's hair and slap his face until he stopped crying. The little boy appeared to be 3 or 4 years old. My wife was stunned. The woman seemed to enjoy beating her child.

What could my wife have said or done that would have made a difference? This happened in a large department store.

ST. PAUL, MINNESOTA

DEAR ST. PAUL: I doubt if any mother "enjoys" beating her child. The scene your wife witnessed involved a woman out of control. Your wife could have very gently and quietly at- tempted to calm the mother by saying, "I know exactly how you feel. What mother hasn't been in your shoes? Sometimes taking a child that age shopping is more than we can handle." And, without being judgmental, in a soft, friendly and sympathetic tone, she would have intervened and brought an out-of-control woman back to reality.

This sometimes takes more courage than most people have in today's "mind-your-own-business" society, but to do nothing while witnessing child abuse is, in my view, indefensible.

Readers: Be aware that there is now a toll-free National Child Abuse Hotline for parents to call when they feel that they are out of control. It's (800) 422-4453.

DEAR ABBY: Each year I have sent out Christmas cards to friends and family. With the cost of postage and greeting cards constantly rising, I would like to inform everyone that this will be the last year that I will send out cards.

How do I tactfully tell them? Should I enclose a note with each card? I have been an avid reader of "Dear Abby" for more than 30 years.

A MEDFORD, N.J., FAITHFUL

DEAR FAITHFUL: You need not inform anyone that you will not be sending out cards in the future. Sending holiday greetings is optional, not mandatory. But if anyone asks in subsequent years—which I doubt will happen—be honest and say, "It just became too expensive."

Constitution of the United States outlines the power of the people

EDITOR'S NOTE: The week of Sept. 17-23 commemorates the signing of the Constitution of the United States. The essay which follows is about the Constitution.

By MARY BARCLAY ERB
National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution

Daniel Webster said "It is the people's Constitution, the people's government; made for the people; made by the people; and answerable to the people."

It has been said, "To understand the Constitution of the United States is the clarion call of the hour, a call as dynamic as when Moses wrote the Ten Commandments." There it stands—in all its majesty—the center of our nation. Simply by being, it defends and warns. It defends us all from fallacies that the experience of 3,000 years condemns; from dictatorship which is abhorrent to every American concept; from the totalitarian state that regiments men, their minds and bodies. From these and like evils so widespread on earth, our Constitution daily defends us. It stands between us and the great blasphemy that man is a creature of the state.

The peculiar glory of the Constitution of the United States is that it is not a charter of rights granted by government to people, but a limit of powers to which a vigilant people restricts its government. It is not a government edict which the people obey, but a people's law which the government must obey. "We the people of the United States,"—these seven potent words were and remain, all subsequent world upheavals notwithstanding, the most revolutionary words on record.

The Fathers of the Constitution were not just a group of casual people who started a casual thing in a casual way. They had studied the ancient civilizations and the methods of government employed therein. They had studied the medieval systems and the various governments of their day. They were well acquainted with the great classical writings on the subject, therefore came to their tasks very thoroughly equipped. They knew the results of the experiments in government through the ages.

Above all, they knew, although perhaps in every case did not fully realize, that man is here on earth to become self-reliant, self-expressive, self-determined, in order to glorify his Creator.

It is often asserted nowadays that this generation knows more than did the Constitution makers. So we do, but not about government. We could have known more, perhaps, had we been interested, but within this framework of freedom erected by the fathers, we have been busy building the country. Their special wisdom in the field of government left us free to do that. They made the blueprint, laid the foundation, reared the scaffolding, and started the building; and we have by no means filled in that framework of destiny and freedom.

Our Fathers knew better than we that the specific temptation of government in all times, any government—even an American government—is to seize more power than is allotted to it, or misuse the power it has. They foresaw the always possible use of dazzling personal leadership; they foresaw the displacement of law by temporary emotion; the tendency to unwise action under stress; and to prevent these evils, they erected certain barriers. The Presidency, the Congress and the Courts were made subordinate to the Constitution. These three powers of government, with officers' oath-bound to the Constitution are established in complete independence one of another, on the supposition that never would all three of them combine against the people or the law that gave them being.

The Constitution gives us the foundation for a free, prosperous and independent life for every citizen, but each generation, in time, must work for and claim it, otherwise, through carelessness, or indifference, the rights and liberties we have enjoyed may vanish.

'Pokes can't beat the heat

Revamped schedule backfires on Dallas

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

IRVING, Texas (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys figured they were forged in the fire of a steamy Austin training camp so they could handle any physical test from the opposition.

They were proven wrong. On Sunday, the Cowboys ran into the New York Giants, who controlled the clock, 41:40 to 18:20. The Dallas defense wilted. Not even training for a month in the heat and humidity of Austin could help them fend off the 28-7 loss.

Dallas defensive end Daniel Stubbs said he thought the Cowboys were in good condition.

"The heat sometimes bothers certain people," Stubbs said. "You can't blame the heat. We just weren't executing."

The Cowboys had petitioned the NFL to get its first two games at home in the heat.

Dallas defeated San Diego 14-9 but the Giants were at a higher level.

"The Giants take the football and just drive it on you and take you out of the ball game," said Dallas coach Jimmy Johnson. "We've just got a lot of work to do yet. The Giants will make a lot of teams look bad."

The Giants kept the Dallas defense on the field so long that lineman Danny Noonan and strong safety Vince Albritton staggered to the sidelines with heat exhaustion.

The on-field temperature was 104 degrees at kickoff and New York quarterback Phil Simms said: "It's the hottest game I've ever played in. It was hot."

However, Simms noted that the defense expends more energy than the offense.

"The defense have to run twice as far," Simms said. "You could see the Cowboys getting tired."

The Giants nose tackle, Erick Howard, thanked Simms.

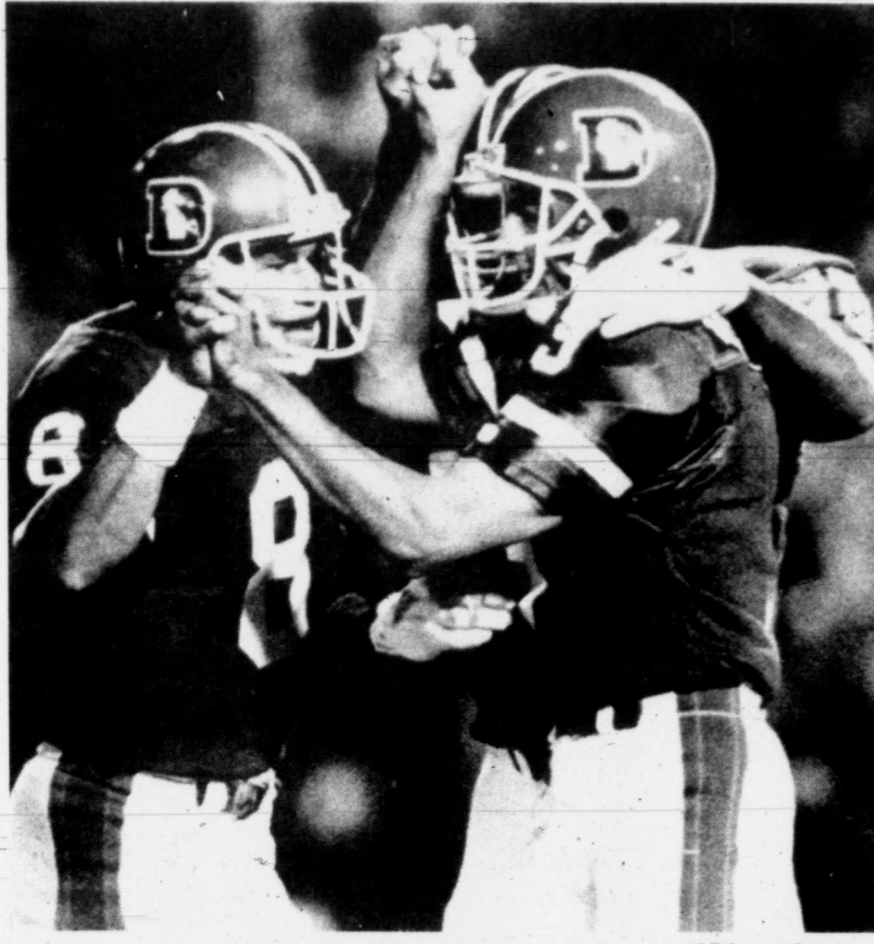

"I was thinking ball control when the day began," Howard said. "I'm glad our offense kept the ball away from them."

Dallas got off only 38 offensive plays. Even the score they got hurt their tired defense. Alexander Wright returned a kickoff 90 yards for a touchdown and the defense had to get back on the field.

Rookie Emmitt Smith, making his first start for Dallas, got only six carries. He gained 11 yards.

Dallas defensive end Jim Jeffcoat said they should be no excuses for what happened.

"You're professionals and you get paid to do a job no matter how long you're out there," Jeffcoat said. "You just have to deal with it. There are going to be days like that and you have to keep on grinding."

David Treadwell (right) is congratulated by teammates after kicking a 22-yard field goal to give the Broncos a 24-23 win.

Broncos edge Chiefs on Treadwell's kick

By JOHN MOSSMAN
AP Sports Writer

DENVER (AP) — The least surprised man in Mile High Stadium may have been Kansas City Chiefs coach Marty Schottenheimer, who had seen John Elway break his heart once before.

Schottenheimer's presence on the sideline seems to bring out the best in the Denver Broncos quarterback.

With the Broncos trailing 23-21 and 1:44 remaining Monday night, Elway coaxed the Broncos downfield. He completed a fourth-down pass of 49 yards to Vance Johnson, helping set up David Treadwell's 22-yard field goal as time expired in a dramatic 24-23 Denver victory over the Chiefs.

The Broncos went 79 yards in 10 plays for Treadwell's clincher, immediately triggering comparisons to The Drive — Denver's 98-yard march in the 1986 AFC championship game. Schottenheimer, then at Cleveland, was the losing coach in that one, too.

"This was a little quicker than The Drive," Denver coach Dan Reeves said, "but I don't know that we had our backs to the wall as much as we did this time. On The Drive, we were able to be more methodical."

Added Elway, "This ranks right up there with The Drive, especially coming against a good team like Kansas City and with the way we played last week."

The Broncos, coming off a lethargic 14-9 loss to the Los Angeles Raiders, were in danger of slipping two games behind in the AFC West.

"Everything was really dark until John hits Vance," Reeves admitted.

Denver seemingly had the game under control, leading 21-9 into the final quarter after a pair of Bobby Humphrey touchdowns and an Elway 2-yard run on a quarterback draw.

But with 9:43 left, Albert Lewis blocked a Mike Horan punt and Kevin Porter recovered at the Denver 17-yard line.

Four plays later, Steve DeBerg HIT Stephone Paige on a 16-yard scoring play, drawing the Chiefs within 21-16.

After unsuccessful possessions by both teams, Johnson returned a punt 29 yards to the Kansas City 48. The Broncos reached the 21, where Treadwell's 38-yard field goal try was wide with two minutes left.

Moments later, DeBerg hit Paige along the right sideline. Paige slipped a tackle by Denver safety Kip Corrington and completed an 83-yard scoring play for a 23-21 Kansas City lead with 1:44 left.

Reds' Rijo two-hits Giants, magic number is 11

By The Associated Press

While the NL East leaders took a day off to catch their breath, the NL West race moved a step closer to completion.

The Cincinnati Reds rode the two-hit pitching of Jose Rijo to a 4-0 victory over San Francisco on Monday. That lowered the Reds' clinching number over the Dodgers to 11. Los Angeles stayed 5 1/2 games behind with a 5-2 win at Atlanta.

In the only other NL game, it was San Diego 5, Houston 0 as Bruce Hurst pitched his second straight shutout.

The East action resumes tonight with Montreal at New York and Pittsburgh at Chicago. The Pirates lead the Mets by one-half game and the Expos by 5 1/2. Reds 4, Giants 0

Rijo was overpowering, allowing only a first-inning double to Kevin Bass and a ninth-inning single by Bass. He struck out a season-high 12 for his team-high fifth complete game. Rijo has allowed three earned runs or fewer in 22 of his 26 starts.

"Every time I go out, I feel so strong I almost feel unbeatable," Rijo said. "I'm not going to get beat unless I make a mistake."

He didn't make any this time, dropping the defending

National League roundup

NL champions 8 1/2 games back. The Reds are close to becoming the first NL team to lead their division every day of a 162-game season.

Rijo (12-7) is a good reason for that.

"He's just had an overpowering fastball his last two starts," Cincinnati manager Lou Piniella said. "He's fun to watch pitch when he's on his game. He's been on his game now for a while — he's getting sharper and sharper."

The Giants are getting duller and duller. They've lost four straight, scoring a total of five runs in those games, and lost just about any chance of catching up.

"Every time we lose now, we dig our hole a little deeper," Giants manager Roger Craig said. "And it doesn't look too good when you're not scoring runs."

Cincinnati scored on Hal Morris' two-run single and Paul O'Neill's two-run homer.

Dodgers 5, Braves 2

At Atlanta, the Dodgers got three hits apiece from Eddie Murray and Kal Daniels. Daniels is hitting .378 against Atlanta, while Murray is at .377.

Murray drove in the Dodgers' first run in the third with a two-out single. The Dodgers made it 2-0 in the sixth on a single by Daniels; Murray's double and a sacrifice fly by Mike Scioscia before a crowd of only 3,473, the Braves' second smallest turnout of the season.

The Dodgers added another run in the seventh on Daniels' run-scoring single. Jose Offerman singled in Scioscia in the eighth and Hubie Brooks knocked in a run in the ninth with a bases-loaded groundout.

The Braves lost their third straight and seventh in eight games.

"Maybe they'll lose tomorrow or the next day," Los Angeles manager Tommy Lasorda said of the Reds. "All we've got to do is keep on winning."

Padres 5, Astros 0

Hurst increased his consecutive scoreless innings streak to 27. He's won five of his last six decisions for a 10-9 mark.

"He's been terrific the whole second half. But he's been a lot better the last eight or nine starts. He's locating all his pitches and he can throw his changeup anytime he wants for a strike," San Diego manager Greg Riddoch said.

Red Sox snap four-game losing streak behind Boddicker's solid mound performance

By The Associated Press

Like the old Montreal Canadiens, the Boston Red Sox have the Rocket and the Pocket Rocket.

And with Roger "Rocket" Clemens, who hasn't pitched since Sept. 4, sidelined at least until Friday, Mike "Pocket Rocket" Boddicker has become the stopper.

Boddicker (16-8) won his fifth straight decision Monday night with six solid innings as the Red Sox beat Baltimore 7-3 and snapped a four-game losing streak — since the last time Boddicker pitched — that had pared their lead in the American League East to one game over charging Toronto.

"I really don't care about any labels or anything like that," Boddicker said. "If you look at the games in Chicago (where the Red Sox just lost four straight), the guys pitched as well as I did. We just didn't score as many runs or play as well."

Boddicker seems to bring out the best in the Red Sox. In his last six starts — all victories — they have scored 58 runs.

Elsewhere, it was Toronto 6, New York 4; Chicago 7, Oakland 0; Texas 10, Seattle 4; Cleveland 4, Milwaukee 2; and Kansas City 1, Minnesota 0.

Boddicker gave up three runs and seven hits in six innings and is 4-0 against the Orioles. Larry Andersen pitched two hitless innings and Jeff Gray worked the ninth.

The Red Sox used two walks around Luis Rivera's single to load the bases in the third against rookie Ben McDonald (7-5), and sacrifice flies by Dwight Evans and Wade Boggs made it 2-0.

Boston extended its lead to 5-0 in the fourth.

"We needed a win, no doubt about it," Boston manager Joe Morgan said. "We had chances to make it a rout, but you shouldn't be greedy."

Blue Jays 6, Yankees 4

Kelby Gruber snapped a 4-4 tie with a two-out bloop single in the seventh inning and surging Toronto won its fourth straight.

A crowd of 49,902, Toronto's 62nd sellout of the season and 55th in a row, helped the Blue Jays set a major league attendance record with 3,635,821. The old mark of 3,608,881 was set by the 1982 Los Angeles Dodgers. The Blue Jays have five home games left.

After the Blue Jays erased 3-0 and 4-3 deficits against rookie Steve Adkins, Tony Fernandez singled off Eric Plunk (5-3) with two out in the seventh, took second on a wild pitch and scored on Gruber's single.

John Cerutti (9-9) got the win with one inning in relief.

White Sox 7, Athletics 0

Melido Perez pitched a five-hitter

American League roundup

and Frank Thomas hit a two-run homer as Chicago won its fifth straight and beat Oakland. Perez (13-14) struck out eight and walked three. Loser Scott Sanderson (16-10) gave up all seven runs and seven hits in five innings.

Rangers 10, Mariners 4

Rafael Palmeiro tied his career high with five hits, Pete Incaviglia drove in five runs and Bobby Witt won for the 13th time in his last 14 decisions.

Witt (16-9) yielded two runs and seven hits in five innings. Rookie Mike Gardner (0-2) was the loser.

Indians 4, Brewers 2

Steve Olin, called on to make his first professional start when Bud Black was traded to Toronto-just before game time, held Milwaukee to two runs in seven innings. Olin (4-4) gave up six hits and retired 15 of the last 17 batters he faced.

Royals 1, Twins 0

Steve Farr (11-7), normally a reliever, pitched a four-hitter over seven innings and Bo Jackson drove in the only run with a sixth-inning single.

Atlanta, Georgia will be the site of the 1996 Summer Olympic Games. The downtown section of the city is pictured above.

Atlanta chosen as Olympic site

By LARRY SIDONS
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — Atlanta brought the Olympics to the American South today, winning a long race over Athens and four other rivals to be host of the 1996 Summer Games.

The victory in voting by the International Olympic Committee means the 100th birthday of the modern Olympics will be staged in one of the world's most modern cities and take the Games into their second century on a high-tech, big-money road.

The decision, read from a sealed ballot by International Olympic Committee President Juan Antonio Samaranch, ended the hopes of Athens to stage the '96 Games in the country where the Olympics were born in 776 B.C. and reincarnated in 1896.

Atlanta had entered the final days of the four-year contest generally rated among the front-runners. It received a boost in its formal presentation with a videotaped appeal by President Bush. It caught Athens on the third of the maximum five ballots, took the lead on the fourth and won it 51-35 as it picked up most of the 22 votes Toronto had on the previous round.

Other runners-up, in order of their elimination, were Belgrade, Yugoslavia; Manchester, England; and Melbourne, Australia.

Atlanta is world headquarters of Coca-Cola, one of the Olympics' biggest sponsors. It is the home of pro football, baseball and basketball teams, prestigious universities large and small, and the civil rights movement.

In Atlanta today, fireworks and balloons filled the morning sky when the International Olympic Committee gave the city the Games.

Thousands of people, gathered at the Underground Atlanta shopping and entertainment district for an Olympic party, shouted with joy when they heard the announcement over huge televisions broadcasting the committee meeting live from Tokyo.

The boom of fireworks could be heard throughout the downtown area. A band played the Olympic theme, and strangers hugged each other.

"I am absolutely amazed. I can't believe Atlanta has gone from a place nobody thought had a chance to really getting those games," said Michael Lomax, chairman of the Fulton County Commission.

"It made me feel I was making the Olympic team again," said Evander Holyfield, the former Olympic boxer who is from Atlanta.

Atlanta joined Los Angeles as U.S. Olympic hosts. Los Angeles staged the Games in 1932 and 1984. The '84 Games ushered in an era of unimagined money for the International Olympic Committee, and holding the Games in Atlanta increased the chances for big money from American TV networks. The IOC announced last week the Olympic movement would make $1.84 billion in the four years leading up to 1992, not bad for an organization that was almost broke a decade ago.

With solid facilities built or planned, excellent hotels and infrastructure, and glowing reports from various evaluation commissions, the International Olympic Committee decided to go for the gold again.

Atlanta, Georgia will be the site of the 1996 Summer Olympic Games. The downtown section of the city is pictured above.

Atlanta chosen as Olympic site

By LARRY SIDONS
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — Atlanta brought the Olympics to the American South today, winning a long race over Athens and four other rivals to be host of the 1996 Summer Games.

The victory in voting by the International Olympic Committee means the 100th birthday of the modern Olympics will be staged in one of the world's most modern cities and take the Games into their second century on a high-tech, big-money road.

The decision, read from a sealed ballot by International Olympic Committee President Juan Antonio Samaranch, ended the hopes of Athens to stage the '96 Games in the country where the Olympics were born in 776 B.C. and reincarnated in 1896.

Atlanta had entered the final days of the four-year contest generally rated among the front-runners. It received a boost in its formal presentation with a videotaped appeal by President Bush. It caught Athens on the third of the maximum five ballots, took the lead on the fourth and won it 51-35 as it picked up most of the 22 votes Toronto had on the previous round.

Other runners-up, in order of their elimination, were Belgrade, Yugoslavia; Manchester, England; and Melbourne, Australia.

Atlanta is world headquarters of Coca-Cola, one of the Olympics' biggest sponsors. It is the home of pro football, baseball and basketball teams; prestigious universities large and small; and the civil rights movement.

In Atlanta today, fireworks and balloons filled the morning sky when the International Olympic Committee gave the city the Games.

Thousands of people, gathered at the Underground Atlanta shopping and entertainment district for an Olympic party, shouted with joy when they heard the announcement over huge televisions broadcasting the committee meeting live from Tokyo.

The boom of fireworks could be heard throughout the downtown area. A band played the Olympic theme, and strangers hugged each other.

"I am absolutely amazed. I can't believe Atlanta has gone from a place nobody thought had a chance to really getting those games," said Michael Lomax, chairman of the Fulton County Commission.

"It made me feel I was making the Olympic team again," said Evander Holyfield, the former Olympic boxer who is from Atlanta.

Atlanta joined Los Angeles as U.S. Olympic hosts. Los Angeles staged the Games in 1932 and 1984. The '84 Games ushered in an era of unimagined money for the International Olympic Committee, and holding the Games in Atlanta increased the chances for big money from American TV networks. The IOC announced last week the Olympic movement would make $1.84 billion in the four years leading up to 1992, not bad for an organization that was almost broke a decade ago.

With solid facilities built or planned, excellent hotels and infrastructure, and glowing reports from various evaluation commissions, the International Olympic Committee decided to go for the gold again.

Volleyball

Unbeaten Kelton captured the Briscoe Volleyball Tournament last weekend, defeating Lefors, 15-12, 16-14, in the finals.

Kelton lifted its record to 9-0 while Lefors is 5-5 on the season.

For Kelton, Lori Ray scored 27 straight service points in wins over Dalhart Junior Varsity, 15-3, 15-0, and McLean, 15-4, 15-0.

"Lori really had an outstanding performance, but the whole team really got after them," said Kelton coach Mike Underwood.

Lefors defeated River Road Junior Varsity, 15-6, 15-6, and Dalhart Junior Varsity, 15-5, 15-0, to reach the finals.

Golf

Linnie Schneider won the Hoechst Celanese Ladies' Golf Championship in a playoff against Sharon Crosier. Schneider and Crosier, playing in first flight, were tied at 163 at the end of the tournament.

Elaine Riddle was first low net at 126 and Shirley Stafford was second low net at 127.

Placing in second flight were Regina Scroggins, first low gross, 217; Lanada Warner, runnerup, 225; Gina Coleman, first low net, 147 and LaVae Carlson, second low net, 160.

La Vae Carlson had the longest putt, 11 feet and 10 feet, for both days of the tournament. Shirley Stafford was closest to the pin (33 inches) the first day and Joyce Epperson was closest to the pin (51/2 feet) the second day.

Sixteen players were entered in the tournament, which was held last weekend at the Celanese Golf Course.

Dog Show

"Whee-tums," a Scottish Terrier, owned by Jennie and Jerry Brown of Pampa and Carole Owen of Big Spring, won the top prize at the Big Spring Kennel Club's AKC sanctioned match last weekend.

"Whee-tums" was entered in the Non-Sporting Terrier Group.

Despite deep grievances, Saudi Arabian Shiites don't heed Iran

By NEIL MacFARQUHAR
Associated Press Writer

Al-QATIF, Saudi Arabia (AP) - Shiite Muslims in Saudi Arabia, long considered a potential fifth column, say they ignore calls from fundamentalist leaders of their sect in Iran to fight the Americans in the Middle East.

But many in the estimated 1 million-strong Shiite community complain that discrimination by the Saudi government has left them with a wrenching sense of their minority status.

The subject is so sensitive that most Shiites don't want to talk at all about their treatment.

"It's such a difficult question," said one student. "It's like punching us in the heart."

Shiites interviewed at random over two weeks said they can't find jobs, no matter how educated they are. They also say their freedom to practice their religious rituals is sharply curtailed and they live under a cloud of suspicion as Iranian sympathizers.

"Nobody feels free," said the student, who spoke on condition he not be identified.

The Shiites are concentrated in the Eastern Province which contains most of Saudi Arabia's massive oil deposits, font of the kingdom's wealth. Saudi Arabia's estimated 10 million people are overwhelmingly members of the mainstream Sunni Moslem sect. It has for centuries been at odds with the breakaway Shiites, who form the majority of Iran's 55 million people.

The split goes back to a 7th century battle over who would succeed the Prophet Mohammed as leader of all Muslims. Ali, the prophet's son-in-law, was defeated and killed in a battle in what is today Iraq. His defeat produced the Shiite faction.

Distrust of Shiites in Saudi Arabia is widespread, especially since many Saudis adhere to a puritanical Sunni sect, the Wahhabis.

Last week, Iranian spiritual leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei called on Muslims in the region to fight a holy war to drive the Americans and their Western allies from the Persian Gulf.

But like all Saudis, most Shiites say the threat from Iraq's Saddam Hussein justifies deploying U.S. troops in the region.

"The true believer, whether Shiite or Sunni, is against an American presence," conceded a Shiite gold seller. "But they'd rather have the United States here for a while than Saddam."

One of their main concerns is that the Americans might start fighting Iran and bring a resumption of the large-scale arrests carried out by Saudi Arabia during the 1980-88 Iran-Iraq war.

The 1979 revolution in Iran that propelled Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini to power alarmed conservative Saudi Arabia. Khomeini wanted to export his Islamic revolution and called for the ousting of the Saudi monarchy. Radical Muslims took over the holy mosque in Mecca in 1979 and Shiites inspired by Iran plotted to topple the governments in neighboring Bahrain and Kuwait.

Saudi diplomats overseas were shot, and there was a rash of bombings in the kingdom. More than 400 pilgrims, mostly Iranians, were killed in Mecca in 1987 in what the Saudis said was Iranian-inspired riots.

Saudi Arabia clamped a quota on the number of pilgrims, citing renovation work in the Mecca. Iran claimed it was a deliberate move to cut its usual contingent of 150,000 pilgrims by two-thirds.

In April 1988, Riyadh broke off relations with Tehran, citing its support for terrorism and subversion. A year ago, the Saudis executed 16 Kuwaiti Shiites for a bombing in Mecca that renewed suspicions they were still "a potential nest of conspirators," a diplomat said.

The 20-year-old brother of a teacher in this predominantly Shiite city was among those arrested at the time. Jailed for eight months, his treatment included beatings, cigarette burns and solitary confinement, the teacher claimed.

"They asked him over and over again: Do you have any connection with Iran?" said the teacher, who spoke on condition he not be identified.

"The main thing here is that they're afraid of the revolution in Iran. If they were suspicious of anybody, they took him," he said.

That suspicion abated with Khomeini's death last year and the more moderate policies of President Hashemi Rafsanjani that followed. But the pilgrimage dispute still sours relations.

Oil price rises above $33 per barrel to set a new record

By DIRK BEVERIDGE
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - Oil futures soared above $33 a barrel Monday to record levels on the New York Mercantile Exchange, as traders responded to bullish prices in Europe and continued Mideast tensions.

Light sweet crude opened on the Merc at a record $32.80 per barrel for October delivery, surpassing the old opening high of $32.35 that was set Aug. 2, 1983, and matched once during the latest Persian Gulf crisis, on Aug. 23. The exchange's records for crude date to March 30, 1983, when it began trading the oil futures.

In late morning trading, crude rose as high as $33.10 before dipping back under $33 but stayed well above the old record. The October crude contract closed at $31.76 a barrel on Friday.

Other contract months for crude were all higher as traders responded to bullish prices of Brent Blend, a European oil that moved up in the wake of a pipeline cutback in the North Sea and rumors of an unscheduled pipeline repair in the Soviet Union.

Oil markets have been swinging so wildly since Iraq invaded Kuwait on Aug. 2 that traders took it in stride as oil leaped to a new record price.

"I think the move was 'There goes that, so let's shoot for the next target,'" said trader Ed Kevelson, with Dean Witter Reynolds Inc. "$32.35, which seemed like a pretty tough level to get to, just evaporates this morning."

Kevelson said traders were also reacting to news that Iran and Iraq had stopped exchanging prisoners, despite their recent conciliatory moves that have included the re-establishment of diplomatic ties. Traders were also following reports that pro-Iraqi groups might try to move food and medicine into Iraq, despite the blockade of Iraq that was imposed after its troops occupied Kuwait.

"I think any test of the blockade is very bullish at the moment," Kevelson said.

The price of crude opened so high on the Merc in response to prices of Brent, which was trading up about $1.30 per barrel Monday, said Ann-Louise Hittle, a senior oil analyst with Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc.

Brent prices were higher in part because of a North Sea pipeline problem that was keeping about 70,000 barrels per day off the market. European oil prices were also higher because of a rumor that unscheduled repairs would be held on a Soviet pipeline from the Ural Mountains to the Caspian Sea, although traders said the Soviets issued a statement this morning that was construed as a denial of the rumor.

"That kind of took a little bit of wind out of the market," Hittle said. When Brent is trading at a premium, supplies that normally would go to the United States are often kept in Europe, which can help push up prices of the light sweet crude futures traded on the Merc, Hittle said.

Rising oil prices were accompanied by higher prices for petroleum products futures.

Unleaded gasoline was up 2.94 cents to 93.30 cents per gallon on October contracts, while home heating oil was up 2.91 cents to 85.70 per gallon on October contracts in late morning trading. Distant months were all higher for the products.

Natural gas stayed the same at $1.52 per 1,000 cubic feet for October delivery, although later months were slightly higher.
