NEW YORK - The restaurant is an elegant one, if I do say so myself. The lady is a star in the American and British theater. We have known each other for - oh, maybe 10 years. Before that I admired her talents. I still admire them. I think she is a handsome woman and has intelligence. We met, most recently, at a late afternoon party at about 7 o'clock she came over and said: "If you have nothing to do, I have nothing to do. Let's go somewhere for dinner and just enjoy food and talk." I said it would be enchanting.

"I warn you," she said. "I am very quiet at dinner. I rarely say much. If you want to lead the conversation, go ahead. I'll mainly listen. Just any nice place will do, by the way."

I named six possibilities and each one etched a tiny frown between her eyebrows. Finally, the seventh, one of the most expensive and opulant in New York, erased the frown.

"Lovely." she said. "But any nice place will do."

I telephoned ahead for a resconsolidated. Two top House comervation and when we got there it was ready for us. We sat down. "Do you mind, just the smallest bit?' she said, "I like the other room better. I don't have to clash unless Arkansas know, it isn't really important, but I just thought...

We moved. To the other room. By the time it was arranged, our first table had been set up water, basket of bread, butter: All that. And the waiter had taken a cocktail order. Of course, in the other room, we had another waiter and that rather complicated things for the first one. But, then, she liked the other room more.

We ordered some hot hors de'oeuvres. There were none other tables in the room, all filled No one was paying any attention, these being ladies and gentlemen, to her presence. They didn't want to intrude. She dropped a small, somewhat gooey item into her lap. Her napkin was on the table. I thought I saw her drop it intentionally, but then, who knows?

In any case, her gown was stained. This involved the captain, two other waiters, a carafe of hot water, four new napkins and a flutter of concern by all lest her gown had been ruined. She sponged at the stain and ed satisfied. By now people were

We ordered dinner and the moment the soup came, a boola, hot and spicy, she said: "I remember when I was in Rangoon and we had boola ..." and her voice, long trained to project strongly but without strain, rocketed through the room. Naturally, some people looked over. We had a nice rose wine with the entree and this seemed to stimulate her.

She told me a couple of mildly naughty jokes, nothing really vile, and when she got polite interest as her reward for them, she delved deeper and, soon, the lokes were little stories more laced with four - letter Anglo-Saxon than with wit. These blunt words also carried through the room. I saw discomfort on some faces, embarrassment on others, frank interest on still others. Having exhausted her repertoire of erotic fables, she began naming names in Paris, London, Berlin, New York and California. Heady names, well - known

"My dear, I know she has such pretenses to being a lady," she boomed, mentioning one particular cinematic star by full name, "but the fact is that at 15 she was less than uninformed. I'd say even at 12. I do think, I really do think, that if one chooses that kind of behavior one should not pretend to being a remote lady

By now, in spite of themselves, nine tables of people were fascinated. Who could blame them? Less than whispered revelations. coarsely spoken jokes, willingness to shred the reputations of, apparently, every man and woman she ever had known. By now she had had a mite too much wine and her speech was fuzzed. We finished dinner and she said: "I want to go home now. I read Proust every night, date or no date."

I saw her to the lobby of her apartment building. I said goodnight. She said she was annoyed. I hadn't said I had had a good time.

"I have had," I said, "an interesting evening. Thank you." (Distributed by McNaught Syn-

According to a recent survey, the average man in his lifetime spends twenty years working. He spends another twenty years sleeping, sixteen years playing, five years shaving and dressing, five years eating, and three years just waiting. In a lifetime the average man spends 8,760 hours telephoning, the equivalent of one full year

Pioneer craft to land on distant planets will be a housewife's dream-completely germproof. Scientists warn that unless our spaceships are free of earth bacteria, we will contaminate space. Then we'd never know if bacteria were there before we landed, or if we brought them with us. Why this concern? Because microscopic life on one planet is an indication of higher life somewhere else. where conditions are right.
