Texas spends some $2,000,000 biennially for free textbooks for its schools. A major portion of the many politicians are ready to pro-And that remark, in turn, points many politicians are ready to pro-Texas. The reason for that is he campaign is on. They will make because the owners of printing esomises that they do not dream tablishments in Texas are in many ways restricted from bidding for of keeping, trusting that the voters ways restricted from will forget all about everything in textbook contracts.

The first and most important Our polities would be much healthier if every broken campaign primes were followed by recall proceedings.

The first and most important restriction is the fact that no shop in Texas is equipped to handle that class and volume of work required in the production of textrequired in the production of text-books. And, of course, no shop would buy and install expensive equipment unless it had at least Gets The Radish an even break to secure contracts. Textbook printing is monopo-listic by nature. The large pub-lishing houses of the East and North have grown in size and power comparable with steel, oil and utilities.

They not only control the printing of the textbooks, but they also dictate what texts are to be pub-lished. Texts, like radio tubes and brand names of automobiles, protected by copyright laws. An author of a textbook must sell his contract to a publisher if it is to be published. And the fewer the publishers the fewer the op-portunities the author has to sell

No doubt there are teacherauthors in Texas who could write Vote for Louis Hutto for county texts more adaptable to the needs of Texas schools than are now available, but selling them and having them printed by publishers in the East and North is much more difficult. The purpose of the textbook law is not to restrict the bidding on textbook contracts to Texas con cerns, but to require that the work $598,267.80 of producing textbooks shall be 783.13 done in Texas. The publishers who have received contracts in the past could continue to receive contracts, but they would be required to establish printing plants in the state, or they could sublet the con tract to Texas concerns. In othe states with similar laws the publishers owning the texts have leased the privilege of producing their books to plants located in those states upon a royalty basis As has been said, textbook printing is monopolistic by nature, and the adoption of such a law as to require that textbooks be printed in Texas would not be a novel experience for the Legislature so far as giving protection to home industry is concerned. There is a statute that requires that insurance companies doing business in the state shall invest a certain amount of their re-sources in real estate in the state; then there is the protection given to utilities by policital subdivision by the issuance of franchises.

But the insurance law presents a more analogous comparison. The state of Texas says to the insur ance companies figuratively: you want to do business in this state, you must come down here and establish yourself as a citi-
