FHE STORY: Patience Mond goes to London three times a week to attend dressmaking school. It is the only freedom allowed her by the two old-fashloned aunts who anve brought her up and with whom he lives in the country. She always returns home on the six-thirty. Paul Taylor takes the same train and for some time sow has been trying to pick her up. But Patience is too proper to talk to a strange young man. One evening, an accident halts the train about a mile from her station. Paul offers to walk her there, so she won't be too integetting home, and she accepts. He asks her to meet him at nearby Stortford the tollowing Saturday for tea and movies. She tells him her aunts would never allow it. Fate intervenes, however, when Aunt Beles asks Patience to go into Stortford that very Saturday to change a library book. Paul meets her at the station. They have a wonderful time. Patience tells Paul she has a twin sister whom she hasn't seen since childhood. When he puts her on the train to return home, Paul tells Patience he is to love with her. She goes home with her head in the clouds, determined to try and meet him the following Saturday.

Common Ground

Few Radio Debates Educational Radio chains like to stage de bates on economic and political questions with the idea that they are performing a public service. Radio debates on moral and economic questions could be educa-tional. They seldom are. Invariably the reason they are not helpful, but in reality harmful, is that the radio chain seems to pick men because they are popular or well known rather tha they are informed on the subject in question. Men are picked be-cause they will attract listeners rather than men who will throw light on the subject.

As an illustration of wasted time on the air, I listened to a debate between Senator Robert Taft and Walter Reuther on the subject of how we can raise the standard of living. Mr. Taft said, of course, that we could raise the standard of living by having more and better tools, that this was the way of increasing production. He failed, however to explain very concretely how we could constantly have better and more tools by which production is increased.

Reuther claimed, on the other hand, that it was not only a question of production but also a question of distribution. He contended that our trouble is that the rich are too rich and the poor too poor; that corporations made $17 billion profit in 1947. He characterized this as being outrageous and more profits than corporations ever made before.

In the first place the real pro-fits were not $17 billion because the government does not permit depreciation and depletion enough replacements at the present costs. The Socony Oil Company reported a $90 million profit. This company advised its stockholders that if it properly depleted and depreciated to take care of replacements, the profits of the company would be $30 million less

But even if profits were as Reuther claims they were they would not be too much. Taft admitted to Reuther that they were too much, but of course he could not define what "too much" is. When he admitted profits were too much, he lost the debate. He was using weasel words when he said "too much". These two words have no meaning.

What Taft and Reuther fail to understand is that these profits are a part of the cost just exactly as labor is part of the cost; that neither profits nor labor can be too much if they are arrived at by an open market. And what Taft and most people fail to understand is that these profits just like the reward for labor have to be distributed willy nilly in order to benefit the receiver of profits or labor. So if they are high they will be distributed and will benefit the owners and those who receive the distributon. They will either have to be spent for the pleasure of the owner or reinvest-If they are spent for the pleasure of the owner in some new product, such as an automobile or radio or airplane when they are their formative periods, will furnish the capital and the tools for the expansion of the industry that is producing luxuries that later become a necessity for the great mass of the people. Had Mr. Taft asked Mr. Reuther thinks are taken out of circulation, could be hoarded without being eventually lost, Mr. Reuther could not have answered.

Again Mr. Taft lost the debate when he talked about equal bar-gaining power between the owners of capital and labor. There is no power or force or coercion in any voluntary exchange. It is true that the owners of certain capital might be able to wait longer to make a bargain than an individual worker, but the worker has the right to make a bargain with any other employer who feels the worker is setting a true value on his labor. What both of these debaters fail to understand is asR.W. Towner, author of "Religion and the Rise of Capitalism", said --"Competition was designed providence to produce an auto-matic substitute for honesty." If either the owner of capital or the owner of labor tries to make too they both will lose. An unwise profit or wage can only be very temporary. Competition, if the government only does what it attempt to make a profit greater han other capital receives under like risks and services or what labor can receive under like risks and services.
