Tie a red, white and blue ribbon

Horace Mann Elementary School students gathered Friday afternoon as a group and went out to the fence facing Hobart Street. There, each tied a small red, white or blue ribbon on the fence in honor of the American military troops in the Persian Gulf conflict. Ribbons were supplied by the Mann Booster Club, which sponsored the event, said Geri Shaw, booster president. Above, students Daniel White and Jamie Lycan tie their ribbons on the fence.

Coronado Hospital says it's providing laminated card for Living Will copies

Because of the strong interest expressed at the Living Will seminar recently, Coronado Hospital has developed a Living Will laminated card, announced Bruce W. Reinhardt, administrator.

"Most of the people attending the seminar were concerned about keeping the document with them, so we decided to find a way to make the Living Will into a card," he said.

Anyone who wishes to have their Living Will made into a laminated card should send a copy of the signed Living Will, along with a self-addressed envelope, and $2 to Linda Haynes, Coronado Hospital, Box 5000, Pampa, Texas 79065. Haynes said the Hospital Auxiliary and others at the facility had volunteered to make the cards, but that people should allow four to six weeks for a return.

"Before sending us a copy, each person should make several copies of his signed Living Will and distribute them to his physician, his family members and perhaps to his minister. Then send one copy to us. We will reproduce it onto a card small enough that it can be carried with their insurance card," Reinhardt said.

When the need for a card was voiced at the seminar, hospital personnel immediately began searching for a solution. The problem was to miniaturize the document but still keep it readable, he said. Certain phrases need to appear on the card, and the signature needs to be visible. That prevented the page-long document from simply being reprinted onto a small card.

Judy Martin, director of quality assurance at Coronado Hospital, suggested that the signed and completed document be reduced on the copy machine. After some experimentation, the method worked. The reduced copy was then run through a laminating process to make it into a plastic card.

Haynes also said that copies of the Living Will are available, at no charge, at the hospital Monday through Friday at the front information desk.

"We knew there was widespread interest in the Living Will, but we've been surprised at the number of people who want this document," she said.

"The will is very simple, but does not need to be notarized," she noted. "However, the requirements for witnesses are strict. Anyone can be a witness EXCEPT a relative by blood or marriage, anyone with a potential claim against the estate, anyone who might benefit from the estate, the person's physician, or the physician's employee. If the person is a patient in the hospital, hospital employees who are involved in hospital finances or who provide direct patient care may not sign, nor may another patient.

"With those few exceptions, anyone else can be a witness," she said.

The Living Will or directive to Physicians follows the rules mandated by the Texas Natural Death Act, according to Haynes. The directive is only used if a patient has been certified as terminally ill by two physicians and where the "application of life-sustaining procedures would serve only to artificially prolong the moment of death."

"Signing a Living Will does not mean that health care givers won't do everything possible to save a patient's life. The Living Will is only used when death is imminent, anyway," she explained. "It does not prevent medication or medical procedures which would relieve pain and give the patient comfort."

Soviet official admits Baltic states situation is 'getting out of hand'

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Soviet official acknowledged today that "things at times are getting out of hand" in the Baltics. President Bush was meeting the new Soviet foreign minister as U.S. officials hinted next month's arms summit in Moscow may be postponed.

Vitaly Churkin, Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesman, said "it is the desire of the central government, the president, to work out the situation (in the Baltics) politically."

But he said on the ABC-TV program Good Morning America, that "the problem there is that of ensuring the rights of national minorities, civil and human rights of people, and ensuring the observance of the Constitution."

He added that "at times it is very difficult to do that because the authorities in Lithuania seem to disregard the Constitution and keep saying, 'we are not part of the Soviet union.'"

Churkin said "things at times are getting out of hand there."

Before seeing Bush today, Soviet Foreign Minister Alexander A. Bessmertnykh held a second round of talks with Secretary of State James A. Baker III on strategic arms issues.

As he entered the State Department building, surrounded by a dozen U.S. security agents, Bessmertnykh said in response to a reporter's question: "There will be a summit. As for the timing, we'll discuss it."

In one sign of improved U.S.-Soviet relations, a daily 15-minute vigil at the Soviet Embassy has been suspended after 20 years because the Soviets have relaxed emigration restrictions, organizers say.

"We're here to acknowledge a new era ... between Jews and the Soviet Union," Evan Krame, chairman of the Jewish Community Council's Soviet Jewry Task Force, said at the final vigil Sunday, attended by about 110 people.

The superpowers' delicate relationship has been complicated not only by the Kremlin's crackdown on the independence-minded Baltic republics, but also by differences over the strategy the United States is employing in the allied war to drive Iraq out of Kuwait.

A White House spokesman, Stephen T. Hart, said Sunday, "The summit is still up in the air." Bush, returning from Camp David, Md., refused to say whether he had decided to postpone the Feb. 11-13 Moscow meeting with Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

Senior U.S. officials have hinted they favored a postponement, even before the Baltic crackdown brought pressure from Congress for the president not to conduct business as usual with the Soviets.

Administration officials have cited the war in the Persian Gulf and lingering difficulties in completing the arms control pact as reasons pointing toward a delay.

Bessmertnykh, until two weeks ago the Soviet ambassador to Washington, on Saturday bluntly criticized the U.S.-led aerial bombardment of Iraq.

"There may be a danger of the conflict going more in the direction of the destruction of Iraq and ... more casualties on both sides," he said after his first meeting with Baker.

But Bessmertnykh added, "We are all in the same alliance and there is no difference in the basic approach between the United States and the Soviet Union."

Bush relied on Gorbachev for crucial support in the United Nations behind a dozen resolutions condemning Iraq, including the pivotal one that authorized force to drive Saddam Hussein's army from Kuwait.

But the Soviets have never committed any of their military forces to the anti-Iraq coalition. And some critics have suggested Bush was reluctant to react too strongly to the Baltic crackdown for fear of losing Soviet support against Iraq.

Bush is still weighing whether to impose economic sanctions against the Soviets over strong-arm tactics against the breakaway republics. In recent violence, 21 people have died in clashes with Red Army troops in the Lithuanian and Latvian capitals.

The president said Friday that despite "some difficulties" on arms control and the Baltics, "we have a lot of common ground still with the Soviet Union."

U.S. general says oil flow in Gulf apparently stopped

By JOHN KING
Associated Press Writer

DHAHRAN, Saudi Arabia (AP) — The U.S. military said today an attack by American warplanes apparently has halted Iraq's dumping of oil into the Persian Gulf. Iraq maintained an allied attack created a separate spill.

Army Brig. Gen. Pat Stevens IV told reporters the extent of the giant oil spill — estimated at some 300 million gallons — remains unclear. But, he said, "It appears we have stopped the flow of oil."

Stevens also said 69 Iraqi aircraft have flown to Iraq, including 39 fighter planes.

Iraq has an estimated 700 combat aircraft, and Saddam Hussein has largely kept them out of the air since the allied assault began.

Although Iran has said it would confiscate the planes for the duration of the war, U.S. officials have said they have to consider the possibility the planes were going to Iran to shield them from attack.

"We would be absolutely not worth our salt as military people if we ignored the fact that those planes could fly back out of Iran after us," Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf said on Sunday.

The Baghdad government claimed today a U.S.-led attack on Kuwait on Sunday started a fire and spilled oil into the gulf. The United States said its warplanes attacked a Kuwait oil facility Saturday in an attempt to halt the flow of crude that was creating the world's worst oil slick.

Stevens said nothing about a second U.S. attack on the oil facilities.

The Baghdad radio broadcast did not mention the giant oil slick, which U.S. officials maintain was begun by Iraqi forces in Kuwait.

Schwarzkopf told reporters in Riyadh on Sunday that there was "no indication" allied bombing raids caused the giant oil spill. He said U.S. F-111 fighter-bombers used "smart bombs" to attack a coastal oil facility in Kuwait on Saturday to try to prevent more oil from entering the gulf.

International experts arrived in the region today to work on cleaning up the huge slick, which U.S. officials said was begun by Iraqi forces in Kuwait.

A Norwegian ship equipped with cleanup equipment was off the coast of Bahrain, and a British consortium was flying in more than 70 tons of equipment including booms and suction skimmers. Coast Guard and Environmental Protection Agency experts met with Saudi officials to put together a cleanup plan.

U.S. officials expressed confidence the attack significantly reduced the flow of crude to the 35-by-10-mile slick, which could threaten desalination plants supplying water to Saudis and allied forces.

Schwarzkopf said the U.S. warplanes targeted a complex of pipes linking oil fields with an offshore loading buoy for tankers. He said a videotape taken after the air strike indicated much less oil was flowing from the loading buoy after the attack.

"I think that we have been successful," he said, "but only time is going to tell."

Before dawn today, Saudi troops, American soldiers in sand-strewn camps and on ships in the hazy Persian Gulf huddled around radios and televisions for a Super Bowl memorable for more than the play on the field.

Clad in protective gear, gas masks at the ready, troops quaffed non-alcoholic beer — alcohol is illegal in Saudi Arabia — and wondered whether they would make it home for next year's matchup.

"It feels weird to be watching this here," said Sgt. Kevin Duclos, 26, a Buffalo Bills fan from Rochester, N.Y., now part of Operation Desert Storm. "I thought I'd be home having chicken wings and real beer."

The troops — along with millions of citizens of Saudi Arabia and Israel — had a rare respite from the Iraqi missiles that have rained from the sky almost nightly. No missile launches were reported Sunday night or this morning.

Since the war began, Iraq has hurled a total of 51 modified Scud missiles — 26 at Saudi Arabia and 25 at Israel, the allies said.

Scud missile launchers have been a principal target of the coalition bombers. But The Washington Post, citing well-placed but unidentified officials, said today only eight of 30 fixed Scud missile launchers had been

Bush: U.S. fighting a 'just war'

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush said today that the United States is fighting a "just war" that does not seek the destruction of Iraq.

In a speech to religious broadcasters, Bush repeatedly described the conflict in moral terms. "It has nothing to do with religion, per se," said the president. "It has, on the other hand, everything to do with what religion embodies: good versus evil, right versus wrong."

He added, "Every war is fought for reasons, but a just war is fought for the right reasons, for moral, not selfish reasons."

"We seek nothing for ourselves," Bush said.

Looking to the future of the region, the president said, "We do not want a country so destabilized that Iraq itself could be the target of aggression."

"We do not seek the destruction of Iraq," he said. "We have respect for the people of Iraq, for the importance of Iraq in the region."

Bush said the United States had made every effort to resolve the Persian Gulf crisis peacefully but Saddam Hussein rejected all overtures. "He made this just war an inevitable war," Bush said.

He said the United States and its allies "are doing everything possible, believe me, to avoid hurting the innocent."

Bush spoke shortly after a Soviet official expressed concern about any U.S. war effort that might go beyond liberating Kuwait.

The president had a meeting scheduled later in the day with the new Soviet foreign minister, Alexander A. Bessmertnykh, to discuss whether next month's superpower summit in Moscow will be delayed.

The Washington Post reported today that significant portions of Iraq's war machine have survived the 10-day air assault. The newspaper quoted unidentified government sources as saying that U.S. bomb damage assessments can confirm hits on only eight of Iraq's 30 fixed Scud missile launchers, while there is no photographic evidence of the destruction of any mobile launchers.

Responding to the report, Brig. Gen. Pat Stevens said allied attacks on Iraq's Scud launchers appear to be working.

"We have been very successful in a very difficult situation," he told reporters in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia. "We continue to target Scud launchers. We believe we are effective in doing so. We believe we have seen a reduction."

The newspaper also said that nearly all of Iraq's air defense radar was destroyed the first week of the war but that about 20 percent was now back in operation.

A Pentagon source, who declined to be identified, refused to comment on the specifics of the Post story, but said the military would be "astounded" if Iraq had not put efforts into rebuilding facilities. He said these efforts are an "enormous drain" on Iraqi war energies.

He said the allies are now able to "inflict damage with relative impunity" and that the Iraqis now lack centralized control.

Bush told the National Association of Religious Broadcasters that "when this war is over, the United States, its credibility and its reliability restored, will have a key leadership role in bringing peace to the Middle East."

LOCAL FORECAST
 Tonight, increasing cloudiness with windy and cold conditions and a low of 22, southwest winds 10-15 mph turning to the north around midnight. Tuesday, cloudy and colder with a 30 percent chance of snow and a high of 25. Northeast winds 20-30 mph and gusty. Lake wind advisories will be in effect. Sunday's high was 46; the overnight low was 24.
REGIONAL FORECAST
 West Texas - Turning colder with increasing cloudiness tonight and Tuesday. A slight chance of showers south tonight. A chance of snow Panhandle and a chance of freezing drizzle or snow flurries South Plains on Tuesday. Lows tonight from low 20s north to mid 40s south. Highs Tuesday from mid 20s Panhandle to low 70s Big Bend.
 North Texas - Increasing cloudiness tonight with a slight chance of rain most sections. Lows from 38 northwest to 52 southeast. Cloudy, windy and turning much colder Tuesday with a slight chance of rain west and central, a better chance east. Highs from 39 north to 66 southeast.
 South Texas - Partly to mostly cloudy through Tuesday. Widely scattered showers central and southeast sections Tuesday. Warm Tuesday except turning much cooler north sections late Tuesday afternoon as a cold front moves in. Highs Tuesday from upper 60s to low 70s north and mid 70s to mid 80s south. Lows tonight from 50s north to 60s far south.

holes and bunkers to protect them from Iraq's artillery. Army engineers are working to finish airstrips and roads.
 In a sober assessment of the potential impact of a ground war, American commanders have warned army doctors to expect some frontline units to suffer casualties of more than 10 percent in 30 days, if current secret plans for a ground attack are implemented.
 The prediction is tentative, officers familiar with the warning stressed, and applies only to the forwardmost units which would be called upon to break through Iraqi defensive lines or drive deep into heavily defended Iraqi-held territory.
 A ground battle would pit 675,000 allied troops - including 480,000 Americans - against 540,000 Iraqi soldiers in and near occupied Kuwait.
 Much of the allied bombing is aimed at "softening up" the Iraqi ground forces. Schwarzkopf said the pilots are trying hard to keep from causing civilian casualties, making the risky business of bombing runs even riskier.
 "By requiring that the pilots fly in a certain direction of flight or use a certain type of munition that requires them to go to altitudes that they wouldn't ordinarily be required to go to, those pilots are at much more risk than they would be otherwise," he said.

Lawmakers seek co-sponsors for resolution praising Israel
 AUSTIN (AP) - Two state lawmakers are seeking co-sponsors for a proposed resolution condemning Iraq's attacks on Israel, commending Israel's restraint and recognizing Israel's right to defend itself.
 "We mourn the losses Israel faces ... The people of the United States and the people of Texas stand by our faithful ally through this unjustifiable aggression," said Rep. Sherri Greenberg.
 Rep. Elliott Naishat added, "This resolution constitutes a symbolic gesture of support for the state of Israel in its efforts."

Education board won't meet Jan. 31 deadline for commissioner

By PEGGY FIKAC
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — A temporary education commissioner could be named since the State Board of Education will not meet Thursday's deadline for nominating someone to the post, officials said.

Current Education Commissioner W.N. Kirby is retiring after six years, and has firmly indicated his last day will be Thursday, said board spokesman Joey Lozano.

An interim commissioner could be chosen to oversee the state's $14 billion-a-year public school system until a permanent replacement is appointed, said Lozano and board Vice Chairman Bob Aikin of Commerce.

"As a practical matter, nobody was ever going to be on board before the first of June or the first of July anyway," Aikin said, because the appointee likely would have a current contract elsewhere.

The board will nominate a candidate for the $116,590-a-year job to Gov. Ann Richards, who will make the appointment under the education law passed last summer. Senate confirmation is required.

Under the law, which took the power to appoint the commissioner from the education board, the nomination deadline is Thursday. But board Chairwoman Carolyn Crawford of Beaumont said there are no sanctions for missing it.

The board plans to meet next weekend, and talk to finalists another time, Aikin said.

After a closed-door board meeting Sunday, Aikin blamed the delay in choosing Kirby's successor partly on "turmoil" resulting from the Texas Supreme Court's recent ruling that the school finance system is unconstitutional.

State leaders back a plan to replace local school property taxes with a statewide property levy, to meet the court's order that property-poor school districts must have access to equitable funding. But the plan has its critics in the Legislature and among schools.

"You cannot expect the very best candidate ... to say, 'I'm willing to walk right into that shooting gallery right now, without knowing exactly what's going to happen with school finance,'" Aikin said.

Ms. Crawford said it could have been expected that the search for a new commissioner would take some time.

"Most searches of this magnitude take six months to eight months," Crawford said. The board announced finalists for the post Jan. 16.

Eight final candidates initially were announced, culled from a list of 147.

But Aikin said a second candidate has withdrawn: David Hornbeck, former Maryland education commissioner. The previous finalist to drop out was Robert Spillane, division superintendent for Fairfax County public schools in Virginia.

The remaining finalists are:

- Thomas Anderson Jr., deputy commissioner for operations and services at the Texas Education Agency in Austin.
- Lionel Meno, deputy commissioner for elementary and secondary education in the New York Department of Education, of Albany, N.Y.
- Blandina Ramirez, director of the Office of Minorities in Higher Education at the American Council of Education in Washington.
- Victor Rodriguez, superintendent of the San Antonio Independent School District.
- J. Theodore Sanders, deputy secretary of the U.S. Department of Education in Washington.
- Michael Say, Humble school district superintendent.

Aikin said it is possible but unlikely that the board's nominee would be someone who has not yet been named a finalist.

Soldier answers questions in students' letters

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following column is a letter written by Marine Corps Sgt. W.B. Smith, 27, stationed in the Persian Gulf region for Operation Desert Storm, to Lefors Elementary School students of Betty Hannon. His mother and stepfather are Joyce and Jack Seals of Pampa and his grandmother is Christine Romines of Pampa. His wife Nancy's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Bill Martin of Pampa.

Sgt. Brian Smith

By SGT. W.B. SMITH

Dear friends,

Just to tell you a little about myself: I'm 27 years old, graduated high school in Pampa, Texas, in 1981. I am a sergeant in the Marine Corps stationed on a small island in the Persian Gulf. I am married to a wonderful girl named Nancy who is also from Pampa.

I would like to thank each and every one of you for writing the wonderful letters. I will try and answer all your questions below.

Tenille — Yes, Tenille, I have heard of Lefors. I have spent many a Christmas there with my family. I think that's great you're a straight "A" student — keep up the good work.

Mandy Mata — Mandy, I do miss being away for Thanksgiving, but hopefully next year I will be home.

Kisha Crain — Kisha, everything is fine in Saudi Arabia. We received a trace of rain yesterday. How about that!

Jenifer Lock — Well, Jenifer, thank you for your letter. I think the longer you take Spanish, the better you will like it. "Estudia duro."

Penny — Thanks for the good luck, I may need it. I also think it's pretty cool being Mrs. Hannon's cousin.

Angela Huckins — I'm sorry, Angela, I don't think I know your father. If you're studying deserts in Social Studies, maybe you can answer my question: Why is there deserts?

Len Lock — Len, I and everyone else hopes we don't go to war either. Say hello to your father, Clayton A. Lock Jr.

Paul Hinson — Paul, I haven't seen any snakes, but I have seen a couple of lizards about a foot long. Yes, Paul, the temperature does get up to 120 degrees — sometimes even hotter.

Amanda — I don't have a dog, but I have a cat named "Split Pea."

It's a funny cat.

Lee — Lee, I do like football very much. Who's going to win the Super Bowl this year?

Heath — My Christmas was safe. Thank you very much.

Rebecca Dinkard — I have one wife, Nancy, and no children yet. I have one brother and one step sister.

Rebecca Gilbert — Rebecca, I'm in the Marine Corps and I have one rifle, a M-16 A2 automatic weapon.

Cindy Velasquez — Cindy, I'm 27 years old and, yes, I do hope I'm able to see my family very soon.

Lindsey Cox — Lindsey, I can't say I've ever been too fond of the desert. So, no, I really don't like it over here. Yes, I did have a Merry Christmas.

Melody — My favorite color is blue.

Alisa Mata — It's been a long time since anyone has called me Brain. That's funny. Thanks for the picture of the house with the Welcome Home sign. It almost looks like my house.

Your friend,
Brian Smith

Survey finds that blacks prefer that term to African-American

By W. DALE NELSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite increasing use of the term African-American, most black Americans still prefer to be called black, according to a newly released survey.

The Joint Center for Political and Economic Studies, a black-oriented study group, said it conducted the survey among a sample of 759 black people.

It found 72 percent said they preferred black, 15 percent African-American, 3 percent Afro-American and 2 percent Negro, with the rest giving no opinion or other responses.

The change from black to African-American was first proposed in December, 1988, at a meeting in Chicago to lay the groundwork for the African American Summit that was held in New Orleans in April 1989. Ramona H. Edelin, president of the National Urban Coalition, suggested it would give black people more of a sense of their history.

Civil rights leader Jesse Jackson endorsed the idea at the summit, and it has since been adopted by such other prominent blacks as New York Mayor David Dinkins, Atlanta Mayor Maynard Jackson, Rep. William Gray, D-Pa., and by some black organizations.

The joint center has not embraced the change.

"Individuals here use the term, but as an institution we have not adopted it," said Milton Morris, vice president for research. "Frankly, we think that among other practical considerations it is a bit more cumbersome than is convenient for much of our communication."

Morris said Jackson's endorsement appeared to have been the chief impetus for the movement to change to African-American.

"There is a strong inclination among what you might call the elite in the black community to fall in line with such pronouncements, so they have, and the white community has been very responsive," Morris said. "Once they assumed that this was what people wanted to be called, they fell in line to do that."

Morris said the group undertook its survey because "at no time have we had any sense of what the public preference was, what the mood was."

There have been, however, some previous surveys. In polls in 1989 by Time magazine and the Chicago Tribune, 26 percent of black respondents said they preferred African-American. Sixty-one percent in the Time poll said they preferred black. In the Tribune poll, 40 percent favored black and 31 percent said either term was fine.

The joint center poll showed that the word black was preferred over African-American by 72 percent to 28 percent in the East when only those two terms were considered.

Black was favored 76 percent to 24 percent in the Midwest, 85 percent to 15 percent in the South and 78 percent to 22 percent in the West.

The poll was conducted by telephone last fall among a random nationwide sampling of black people. Morris said it was subject to a sampling error of plus or minus three percentage points.

Teens face capital murder charges in restaurant slayings

IRVING (AP) — Two teenagers face capital murder charges in the slayings of four people who were gunned down execution-style in a fast-food restaurant freezer during a robbery.

Formal charges were expected to be filed today.

The bodies were discovered in the walk-in freezer after police officers stopped the driver of a pickup truck on suspicion of drunken driving and spotted a take-out Taco Bell bag stuffed with cash early Saturday morning.

Arrested were a 17-year-old boy who worked at the restaurant part-time in this Dallas suburb, and a 19-year-old man who was the driver of the truck. Both remained jailed Sunday.

Theresa Fraga, 16, of Irving; her cousin Frank Fraga, 23, of Dallas; restaurant manager Michael J. Phelan, 28, of Fort Worth, and Fraga family friend Son Trong Nguyen, 35, of Irving, were found fatally shot at the Taco Bell restaurant.

The slayings bring to nine the number of people killed during late night shifts at restaurants or food stores in Dallas County since Dec. 4.

Mike Green, 17, and Jessy Carlos San Miguel, 19, who is facing trial on three burglary charges, were taken into custody Saturday. Both are from Irving.

Theresa Fraga and Frank Fraga didn't worry about the dangers of working nights, their uncle said.

"To them, it was irrelevant. They just wanted to work and support their families," Raymond Fraga Jr. said.

Police haven't said how much money was stolen in the robbery. "It wasn't a whole lot of money," said Irving police Capt. T.J. Hall. "It certainly wasn't worth killing four people over."

Nguyen was at the restaurant to pick up Ms. Fraga, who was several months pregnant and had a year-old son.

Security personnel from the fast-food chain's home office in Irvine, Calif., flew to Irving to assist police in the investigation and determine what, if any, security measures are necessary, said Jerry Koch, Taco Bell's zone vice president for the Southwest.

Raymond Fraga criticized the restaurant's security. People, he said, "keep talking about getting security up for terrorists. Well, they got more terrorists killing kids here."

Koch would not discuss specifics of security at the restaurant.

On Jan. 7, Jennifer Soto, 19, was shot and stabbed to death at a Taco Bell in suburban DeSoto. She was night manager of the restaurant. A former employee was one of two men charged with murder in connection with the slaying.

Backlog keeps military supplied without a job boom

By HOWARD GOLDBERG
Associated Press Writer

Some military supply plants are keeping workers overtime turning out spare parts and stepping up production of hot items like the Patriot missile. But for most defense companies, the Persian Gulf war has not produced booming business or jobs.

Generally, planes, tanks and even guns take so long to order and build that the United States is fighting with its inventory of weapons designed during the Cold War. But some contractors say they have seen a big increase in workers' productivity.

"I think our employees know these weapons are going to the allied forces and we're proud of what they're doing," said Greg Black, director of human resources at Saco Defense Inc., in Saco, Maine, a manufacturer of guns and grenade launchers.

The 38 employees of Greene

Metal Products Inc. near Mount Clemens, Mich., are averaging 70 hours a week making seats and other spare parts for military vehicles such as tanks, spokesman Bruce Wilden said. The company was busy before the war, and the overtime reflects a new deadline for existing orders.

Raytheon, in Andover, Mass., added about 200 people, and a Martin Marietta division in Orlando, Fla., has been working double shifts to produce the war's first star weapon, the Patriot missiles that have shot down Iraqi Scuds.

The United States has supplied Patriots to Israel, and approved sales to Saudi Arabia since war began.

"The Italians will be the next, and we understand that the Turks want to buy the Patriot too," said Dave Harris, spokesman for the Army Missile Command in Huntsville, Ala. "The line is forming rapidly."

The six-month buildup to war brought a mini-boom for suppliers of tires, helicopter rotor blades, shells, tank batteries and scores of other supplies.

But a spot check with contractors around the nation last week found many reporting no new orders, including the Army ammunition plants in northwestern Louisiana and Riverbank, Calif.; the General Dynamics Corp. tank plant in Lima, Ohio, and F-16 assembly line in Fort Worth, Texas; and the Lockheed plant in Calabasas, Calif., that makes the stealth fighter-bomber.

Lawrence M. Harris, an analyst at Kemper Securities Group in Los Angeles, said the United States has a giant stockpile of defense equipment.

"The U.S. during the 1980s was preparing for the possibility of a Soviet incursion into West Germany," he said. "That did not materialize. The Cold War is over. So there are some fairly significant stocks built of these weapons."

He said new orders could come, especially if the war becomes a lengthy ground conflict.

Fighter jets have been the most notable equipment lost by the United States so far, but even their makers are not seeing an effect on business.

Some specialty items have generated unusual business.

La Crosse Footwear Co. of La Crosse, Wis., added 20 to 25 workers to handle a $4 million order for 300,000 pairs of vinyl boots that fit over combat boots and protect against chemical weapons, said Vice President Patrick Ganter.

The Pine Bluff Arsenal in Little Rock, Ark., which refurbishes gas masks, hired 85 employees and is running 12-hour shifts on a six-day week, spokesman Dewey Spencer said.

The Defense Construction Supply Center in Columbus, Ohio, has employees working overtime to ship spare parts such as nuts, bolts and air filters.

Coronado Hospital patients to be treated to 'Laughmobile'

Being hospitalized is not a laughing matter ... at least until this week. Patients at Coronado Hospital here will now get an opportunity to spend some time laughing at the antics of animated characters.

Coronado Hospital Auxiliary has purchased a "Laughmobile" for the benefit of the patients at the local hospital.

"After reading several reports about the benefit of laughter, we decided to put together a television, a video cassette recorder and a stack of cartoons on a cart which can be taken to patient rooms during the day," said Nancy Paronto, director of volunteers at Coronado Hospital.

According to a recent report in the University of Texas Health Letter, more and more scientists are discovering the beneficial effects of laughter on health. Studies indicate that laughter can increase levels of disease-fighting antibodies, provide extended pain relief and reduce stress.

A Stanford University psychiatrist is quoted in the newsletter as saying that "laughing stimulates the heart, lungs, upper body and back." Dr. William Fry estimates that laughing 100 times a day has the same effect as a 10-minute workout on a rowing machine.

Paronto said that her volunteers bought the equipment and will take it to the patients' rooms when requested.

The volunteer auxiliary at Coronado Hospital has more than 60 adult volunteers and 40 to 60 teenage volunteers in the summer. The volunteers donate more than 9000 hours at Coronado Hospital, operating the gift shop and front lobby information desk, and serving in the lab, pharmacy, medical records, administration, physical therapy and the business office.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Insurance would be at a 'premium'

The national collapse in real estate prices has especially hurt many insurance companies that invested heavily in property early in the 1980s. To make things worse, the insurance industry's woes have prompted Congress to stick its regulatory nose under the insurance tent. Policy holders and taxpayers ought to shudder at the thought. According to Catherine England, director of regulatory studies at the Cato Institute in Washington, D.C., "Some of the state systems work very well. The danger with federal regulation is that you will mess up a whole industry." As things now stand, "An error on state level now is limited." But a federal error would affect all insurance companies and policy holders in all 50 states.

The recent troubles of the savings and loan industry contain a powerful cautionary message about the hazards of federal regulation. Congress gave us the S&L bailout, which could cost taxpayers more than $500 billion. How? In 1980, Congress increased federal—i.e., taxpayer—liability of S&L accounts from $40,000 to $100,000. And in the middle and late 1980s, individual congressmen, including deposed Majority Leader Jim Wright of Texas and the "Keating Five" senators, stalled federal regulators on behalf of S&L executives who had given the politicians big campaign contributions.

A similar system of federal guarantees for insurance "would be worse than what we have today," England said. "There are state guarantees in place. A comprehensive solution to replace the several state solutions we have would be the worst." Federal "guarantees" would encourage just the same problem that similar guarantees caused in the S&L industry. Insurance companies, as did the S&Ls, could take a course promising bountiful returns, but with no risk, since taxpayers would be the ultimate insurers.

Our founding fathers set up a federal system giving the several states most governmental authority. That allowed states to experiment with new ways of governance. The best policies are then adopted by other states, while the worst damage is limited. But federal policies are comprehensive and well-nigh irreversible. "A federal error," England warns, "such as setting capital standards too low, or one that is too restrictive on what kinds of insurance are offered, would weaken the industry rather than strengthen it."

Note which politicians are behind the insurance hearings: Rep. John Dingell of Michigan, the already too-powerful chairman of the Energy and Commerce Committee; Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, who in the mid-1980s was involved in a scandal in which he was paid a $250,000 "finder's fee" for helping sell a hotel; and Sen. Donald Riegle, who, as chairman of the Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee, is one of the main offenders in the Keating Five S&L gang. Putting these people in charge of our insurance industry would be as wise as selling a life insurance policy to Saddam Hussein.

Berry's World

The first casualty of war

WASHINGTON — A week after the shooting began, the news is good. Or is it?

At the risk of raining on Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf's parade, good journalists are pointing out a painful fact of life at the front. The news we are getting from Saudi Arabia is filtered news, strained through military censorship. Is it news-lite? Who knows?

Sen. Hiram Johnson of California is long forgotten, but he left a memorable remark behind. In one of his first speeches to the Senate in 1917, he observed that "the first casualty when war comes is truth." We are not getting outright propaganda from our military leaders. No one is lying to us. The good news is believable.

But no one should be deceived. Through the "pool" system enforced by the Pentagon, all dispatches must first be cleared by the censors. Correspondents are required to submit their copy to officers with no experience in newspapering and no appreciation of what is meant by timely news.

The censor's first purpose is to protect himself. If he has the slightest doubt about a paragraph, a sentence or a word, his immediate instinct is to kill the passage. In this way the censor will not get in trouble. If a story is delayed or banned altogether, the censor is indifferent. He cares not a fig about informing the people back home.

What is especially infuriating in the present situation is the conflict between censors in the field and public information officers at the Pentagon. Material that is censored there is released here.

Malcolm W. Browne of The New York Times recently cited examples of this confusion. Other reporters on the scene have described censorship far beyond anything necessary to prevent valuable information from reaching the enemy.

Browne reported one instance of intolerable tampering: A reporter had used the word "giddy." A senior officer insisted this be changed to be read "proud." Upon what meat do these our Caesars feed?

Information officers at the front have two duties. Their first is to protect genuinely sensitive information. Their second is not to classify everything as genuinely sensitive information. Their relationship to the press should be a relationship of mutual confidence and cooperation. It has become an adversarial relationship instead.

Browne quoted a senior Air Force officer as he began a briefing about two weeks ago: "Let me say up front that I don't like the press. Your presence here can't possibly do me any good, and it can hurt me and my people. That's just so you'll know where we stand with each other."

To which one is tempted to reply: "Those of us who have spent our lives in the news business don't like swell-headed bureaucrats either. We resent their officiousness, their petty intrusions, their imbecilic inference that only THEY know what is good for the people to know. They create an atmosphere in which doubt festers and disbelief is magnified."

As a consequence of rigid field censorship, the American people should be skeptical. We are told what targets have been hit. Do we know what targets have been missed? When reporters are given permission to interview service personnel, the interviewees are carefully selected by commanding officers. No such interviews may be conducted in private. A censor must sit in. Reporters go only where the military takes them; they may see only what officers let them see.

In this fashion, hard news is washed in the same way that oysters are washed. All the grit is removed.

Tied up in such straitjackets, reporters cannot do the job for which they are trained. They cannot ask the probing questions that should be asked. More accurately, they may ask the questions, only to have the questions deflected. The briefings we have seen on television have been models of military thinking — the kind of tactical thinking that first protects one's rear.

Look. Of course there is role for military censorship, though it is much less than censors believe. Certain information on troops and weapons reasonably may be withheld. Reporters have no right to know what targets will be attacked tomorrow. Everyone recognizes this.

Excessive censorship, needless censorship, is self-defeating. The news from the front has been mostly good news, rosy news, news of Scud missiles intercepted and prisoners taken. We may fairly assume that is the truth.

But given the kind of censorship the Pentagon is imposing, we may make a further assumption. It is not the whole truth.

DIFFERENT WORLD

The mistake we cannot afford

Never before have I ever written a column like this one. It's one I hope you will never see.

The news you read in a news magazine is never new news. The lead time is such that the magazine must go to press days before you see it.

Similarly, there is an inescapable time lag between the time I write a newspaper column and the time it appears in print. Even with fax machines and such, there is still a lapse of time between what I write and what you read.

With all my heart I hope that what I am about to write will have been outdated by events.

I hope and pray we will not be fighting a new war with the weapons that lost the last two.

We've already made several mistakes.

When Iraq's Saddam Hussein completed building his nuclear capability in 1981, the Israelis wiped it out with a surgical air strike.

Vice President George Bush publicly deplored the Israeli air strike. That was a mistake.

Saddam Hussein then built up his chemical capability. He used it against the Iranians. The United States continued to support him with weapons and money. That was a mistake.

Paul Harvey

When he gassed his own people, the Kurds, and when he fired the missile at the U.S.S. Stark, killing 38 Americans, we forgave him. That was a mistake.

Rarely does any nation "march into war." Usually it "backs in." Last July 25 we backed in.

That was the date on which our ambassador to Iraq, April Glaspie, assured Saddam Hussein that we had no interest in Iraq's dispute with Kuwait. We had no treaty with Kuwait, we assured him. We would not become involved in their border dispute. That was a mistake.

The following month, Saddam Hussein moved into Kuwait.

Suddenly we did get interested.

President Bush's Middle East advisers assured him that Saddam Hussein could be "frightened out of Kuwait." That was a mistake.

Now we are up against the one mistake we cannot afford.

Our present military battle plan calls for a saturation air assault; a thousand sorties a day for 30 days.

Please, Mr. President, not another pulled-punches war.

Not another war with our best young men and women and less than our best weapons.

Our Navy has Cruise missiles with nuclear warheads, but I understand that our field commanders do not have authority to use them.

Also, in our arsenal is a propane bomb — in some ways more effective than a tactical nuclear weapon — capable of destroying everything in a square-mile radius.

I hear it described as "a last resort weapon." What does that mean?

Our men are ordered to fight with only "little bombs" — again?

Democratic leaders lost war vote

By WILLIAM A. RUSHER

In voting to authorize President Bush to commit the armed forces of the United States to battle against Iraq on terms laid down in the resolution of the U.N. Security Council, Congress handed the Democratic leadership of both Houses a resounding defeat.

Nothing can erase the memory of the way those same leaders jerked Bush around during the disgraceful "budget negotiations" last summer — refusing to make any proposals of their own, luring him into the repudiation of his solemn pledge ("no new taxes") and then denying him even the expected benefits of his costly compromise.

But every dog has his day, and Mr. Bush is certainly entitled to chuckle over his opponents' failure to block the war resolution.

What makes the victory so sweet is what the Democratic leaders were actually scheming to bring about, if only they could deny Mr. Bush the congressional authorization he sought.

Senate Republican leader Bob Dole was criticized for excessive partisanship when he wisecracked that some Democrats seemed less interested in getting Saddam Hussein out of Kuwait than in getting George Bush out of the White House; but that is precisely what Speaker Tom Foley, Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell and a majority of the Democrats in both Houses had in mind.

Article I, Section 8 of the Constitution, which grants Congress the power to declare war, may be honored largely in the breach and be broadly unsuited, in addition, to 20th century conditions. But it has never been repealed, and if Congress could have avoided passing any act of authorization, and if a war against Iraq were then to be launched and drag on until American public opinion turned against Mr. Bush, the Democratic leaders wouldn't have hesitated to try to impeach him and remove him from office for violating the plain words of the Constitution. Happily, that possibility is eliminated by the resolution Congress adopted. Things may go badly for Mr. Bush in Iraq, and the Democrats may benefit politically from his distress.

But the sword of impeachment, which they managed to poise over Richard Nixon's head, and which they labored so long (and unsuccessfully) to swing into position over Mr. Reagan's in the Iran-Contra hearings, no longer poses any threat to Mr. Bush.

If anyone doubts that impeachment was on the minds of the Democratic leadership, let them contemplate the highly partisan nature of the vote for authorization. Almost every Republican in both House voted for it; almost every vote cast against it was cast by a Democrat. The winning margin was provided by a distinct minority of House Democrats, and a bare handful of Democratic senators.

What kept Messrs. Foley and Mitchell from thwarting Mr. Bush was a series of public opinion polls indicating substantial hawkish sentiment among the American people as a whole.

Despite some truly contemptible media maneuvers (Time magazine and CNN actually conducted an obscene auction in which people were asked what they would be willing to pay for victory over Iraq — 1,000 American lives? 5,000? 10,000?), most Americans, most of the time, favored military action against Iraq if necessary, provided only that the war did not stretch out — a la Vietnam — to near-infinity.

President Bush is well aware of this proviso, and every indication is that the war will be short. This will be a bitter blow to the old anti-war crowd of the 1960s and '70s, who have come out of hibernation, signed up a few youthful admirers and are already yowling, "Give peace a chance."

If a war against Iraq is carried out with reasonable speed and a minimum of casualties, we will witness the dawn of an era that future historians may describe as the Pax Americana. Whatever it is called, it will enjoy the gratitude of a weary world.

Suspect surrenders in slaying of two officers, five others in New Mexico

By ED MORENO
Associated Press Writer

CHIMAYO, N.M. (AP) — Friends and relatives mourned the deaths of two well-known, well-liked lawmen and pondered the events that led to the slayings of the officers and five others.

Nearly everyone in this close-knit, rural community seems to have known both Rio Arriba County sheriff's Deputy Jerry Martinez and state police Officer Glen Huber.

"I feel bad because Huber was a friend of mine. So was Jerry," Orlando Martinez, who owns a gas station and mercantile on the main drag through town, said Sunday.

Huber and Martinez were fatally shot Saturday in front of a blue modular home along a dirt road that courses beneath the juniper-studded sandstone cliffs at the edge of the Santa Cruz River valley.

The lawmen apparently were caught off guard and shot as they attempted to serve a restraining order, police said.

Lt. Herbie Ball of the New Mexico Mounted Patrol described Huber as a "very cautious individual."

"It was hard to believe somebody could have caught him like that," Ball said.

The prime suspect in the police slayings, Ricky Abeyta, 29, surrendered to state police Sunday night. Abeyta, a native of the area, also is a suspect in at least some of the other five killings. All the victims were fatally shot and were found in or near Abeyta's blue home.

The victims were identified as Abeyta's live-in girlfriend, Ignacia R. Sandoval, 36, of Penasco; her daughter, Mary Ellen F. Sandoval, 19, also of Penasco; Mary Ellen's 6-month-old son, Justin Gonzales; Justin's father, Macario Gonzales, 19, of Alcalde, also Mary Ellen's boyfriend; and Cheryl Rendon, 25, of Dixon, who was Ignacia's sister.

Ignacia Sandoval's son, Eloy Sandoval, 13, was wounded and was in serious but stable condition Sunday at University Hospital in Albuquerque, a hospital spokeswoman said.

State police Maj. John Denko described the incident as a domestic dispute that caught the officers by surprise.

Abeyta and Ignacia Sandoval had lived together for about a year, but the woman wanted to move out, said Carol Vigil, state special commissioner for domestic violence.

Osuna of the state police said shots had been reported fired at Abeyta's home before the two law officers arrived.

Huber was shot in the head through the window of his car and Martinez' body was found on the ground near his vehicle, police said.

Circumstances behind Abeyta's surrender were unknown.

"Basically, we got a call from the dispatcher that his (Abeyta's) brother-in-law, his older brother and his sister had brought him in to our office and it was his decision to surrender," officer Dan Lichtenberger said.

The officer said Abeyta was quiet but cooperative. "He didn't really volunteer anything. He was pretty quiet," he said. "He didn't resist. He didn't give us any problems."

Chimayo, a town made famous by a mystical hole of healing sand and its museum-quality wool weavings, was alive with talk about the killings Sunday. Locals were eager to talk about the officers.

"Officer Huber was a real nice man," said Nancy Martinez, no kin to the slain deputy, who stopped in at Martinez's store to buy one of the remaining morning newspapers.

A hundred copies of one newspaper with news of the slayings sold out in 45 minutes.

At the nearby Holy Family Catholic Church, the Rev. Francis Gonzales urged parishioners to pray for understanding.

"Let us pray God will help us understand these things," Gonzales said as he opened the morning Mass.

Near the crime scene, Rocky Martinez, 29, was near tears when he talked about his slain older brother.

"We were very close," said the younger Martinez. "He helped everybody first. He just got caught in the wrong place at the wrong time. My brother was a good man. Everybody liked him."

"He was real friendly," said Cordelia Martinez of La Puebla, who was selling red Chile ristras near the Santuario de Chimayo. She also isn't related to the slain deputy.

"He would pass through here and wave and talk to us. He was very friendly to us. It's awful. We felt awful last night when we talked about it," she said.

Huber also fit in the community, although he wasn't a native, said locals.

"That Huber, he used to stop guys right here (in front of the station) and give them a break. He'd say, 'OK, next time ...,'" said Orlando Martinez.

Meanwhile, others tried to make sense of the torment that may have led Abeyta to kill.

"He was a very good student when I had him in the sixth grade," said his former teacher, Robert Martinez, also no kin.

"I guess he just went a little berserk," said Henry Gallegos, who has known the Abeyta family for years and was a neighbor of the slain deputy.

Abeyta was not known to be a user of alcohol or drugs, said neighbors and acquaintances. And they said his other brothers, Jerry, Sammy and Gabriel, are respected lifelong members of the community.

Abeyta, who was said to have been working for a local cabinet maker, is an expert hunter, said Robert Martinez.

Somali rebels drive leader from palace, gain control

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — A rebel army that drove Somali President Mohamed Siad Barre from his palace said it is forming a new national leadership and appealed for foreign medical aid. But the whereabouts of Siad Barre were unknown.

A rebel statement received late Sunday in London said the insurgents were "calling on the dictator and his few remaining supporters to surrender immediately as they have no choice of continued resistance."

A rebel spokesman said Siad Barre, the ruler of Somalia since 1969, may have been captured. But earlier reports said he had fled from the capital, Mogadishu, to another part of the East African nation.

The rebels seized state-run Radio Mogadishu and broadcast the announcement they had taken control of the capital Saturday night after a month of civil war.

Thousands of people danced through Mogadishu's streets that night after the rebels drove Siad Barre from the presidential mansion, said Dr. Marc Gastello Etchejory of the humanitarian agency Doctors Without Borders. Later rebels took the airport, he said.

"The information from Mogadishu is that the fighting has finished. There is no more shooting," said Etchejory, who left Mogadishu on Sunday for Kenya. Siad Barre and a small group of military men fled the mansion in a tank, according to another spokesman for Doctors Without Borders, Stevan Van Praet.

Van Praet said the president's flight followed more than 24 hours of heavy fighting between loyalist soldiers and rebels.

He said doctors there told him that after Siad Barre and his group fled, rebels and civilians poured in to loot the palace. "It was a popular uprising," he said. "Everybody was happy."

Rebel spokesman Mohamed Robleh said in London that his United Somali Congress would announce an acting committee within 48 hours to run Somalia. He said the interim government would remain until representatives from the main rebel groups could meet to form a democratic government representing the nation's various clans.

The rebels said more than 1,500 people had died in recent fighting.

They appealed to humanitarian organizations to help Somalis who were without food, water, medicine or shelter.

Reports were sketchy because of widespread communications problems.

Siad Barre, a member of the tiny Marehan clan that comprises less than 1 percent of Somalia's people, seized power in a bloodless 1969 coup. During his one-party rule, he steered the predominantly Muslim nation through shifting alliances with the Soviets and the United States.

The United States was Siad Barre's main backer from the 1970s until recent years, when it cut nearly all aid because of increasing reports of human rights abuses.

Pro and anti war demonstrations continue

By ARLENE LEVINSON

Voices rang out in support of warriors — and peace — from bleachers at the Super Bowl, outside the White House and on a Nevada highway, where students tied a yellow ribbon 23 miles long.

War-related fears took no holiday during Sunday's football championship, watched by an estimated 118 million people. Fans endured tight anti-terrorism security as they made their way into the Tampa, Fla., stadium where New York Giants wound up beating the Buffalo Bills 20-19.

"All right! Go America! Go Giants!" shouted Debbie Allen, a 24-year-old New Yorker with ticket in one hand and American flag in the other, as a security guard ran a metal detector over her.

In Lafayette Park across from the White House, a few dozen anti-war demonstrators kept vigil Sunday, banging drums and cans. A few backers of President Bush also were there, including a teenage girl with a "Storm On" poster.

On Saturday, a crowd that police estimated at 75,000 and organizers at 200,000 marched around the White House. San Francisco police estimated 30,000 people poured into the city's Civic Center plaza Saturday; organizers estimated the crowd at 225,000.

The interdenominational Riverside Church in New York City elected Sunday to counsel and shelter servicemen and women who need it while applying for conscientious objector status.

"Some may say, 'They knew what they were signing up for. They knew there was the possibility they would have to go to war,'" said church member Constance Guice-Mills. "They just put too much burden on an 18-year-old who has been subjected to the professional marketing expertise of Madison Avenue."

Members of the military who won't need Riverside's services won support of demonstrators at rallies elsewhere.

In eastern Kentucky, hundreds of coal trucks, pickups and cars snaked for miles through two counties. The caravan was met by hundreds of spectators who waved American flags and displayed yellow ribbons.

"We (truckers) just want to show our support in this small way of our president, of our troops and of the families left back here," said Roy Mullins, the caravan's organizer.

A 23-mile-long yellow ribbon was tied around the Reno, Nev., area to show support for the troops. Teams from the University of Nevada each stretched a mile of ribbon on the ground at the same time.

Eight thousand people came out for a demonstration in Jacksonville, Fla., supporting the troops. An estimated 3,500 people attended a similar rally in St. Paul, Minn.

Iraqi President Saddam Hussein had few supporters among 200 Arab-Americans, many of Iraqi descent, who marched in silence Sunday in Detroit.

"We want to show the American people that there is opposition to Saddam Hussein, both inside Iraq and outside Iraq," said Shaib Shunia, spokesman for the Iraqi Democratic Union.

At the Congregation Shaarey Zedek in suburban Southfield, Mich., about 3,000 people waved U.S. and Israeli flags as speakers spoke up for Israel.

Los Angeles police arrested eight people during a small anti-war protest Sunday outside an Immigration and Naturalization Service detention center.

Families in Fairfield, Iowa, made sure soldiers don't go hungry.

Father on trial in crash that killed his unbelted child

By SANDRA WALEWSKI

HIALEAH, Fla. (AP) — When Ramiro de Jesus Rodriguez came to this country from Nicaragua two years ago, he wanted a better life for his wife and young daughter.

But today Rodriguez faced trial on a vehicular manslaughter charge in his 3-year-old daughter's death because the child wasn't in a seat restraint.

It's one of several recent cases around the country in which parents have been held legally responsible for the safety of children in their cars.

Veronica Rodriguez died of head injuries after she flew out of her mother's arms and hit the dashboard of the family car last August. Rodriguez was driving.

Florida requires small children to ride in car seat restraints. Police at the scene said Veronica probably would have survived had she been buckled in.

"It was an accident," the 30-year-old cook said in Spanish. "It could happen to anybody."

Rodriguez said he'll carry the grief of his child's death the rest of his life and doesn't understand the criminal charge against him.

During a recent interview at his sparsely furnished home, Rodriguez said he considered his daughter's death "fate, rather than being guilty of something."

In a similar case, a Pennsylvania man was charged earlier this month with involuntary manslaughter in the death of his 4-year-old daughter after she was thrown from his car.

A woman in Smyrna, Ga., pleaded guilty to second-degree vehicular homicide, a misdemeanor, in a 1989 accident that killed her infant son. She was sentenced to perform community service.

Prosecution has been dropped in some other cases. A New Hampshire grand jury Thursday declined to indict a father in the death of his 8-year-old son. A father in California was charged last October with manslaughter in the death of his 6-year-old son because the boy wore no seat belt when he was killed in a car crash, but the charges later were dropped.

Although all states have child passenger safety laws, hundreds of young children die every year in car accidents. More than 500 deaths and about 56,000 injuries could be prevented if child-restraint seats were used correctly, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration says.

Rodriguez' daughter was killed on Aug. 3, 1990, when his car was struck by a van as the family headed home from a grocery store two blocks away.

Because he didn't receive a ticket, he said he was surprised when police arrested him at work nearly three months later. He was released the next day on $1,000 bond.

Prosecutors said say that under state sentencing guidelines, Rodriguez would probably face no more than probation if convicted.

Rodriguez said he and his family left Nicaragua in the late 1980s to escape the Sandinista government then in power. He arrived in the United States in 1988 and his wife, Carmen, followed the next year. They sent for their daughter less than a year ago.

"My dream was for freedom and to make a better life for myself and my family," Rodriguez said.

Audiologist tracks brain waves to trace hearing troubles

By SUSAN FAHLGREN
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Johnny seems to understand just fine when his desk is next to the teacher's, but things go astray when he's in the back of the classroom.

But experts say the problem may not be one of attention, discipline or even Johnny's hearing. Johnny may be one of a growing number of children who suffer from "central auditory processing disorder."

Authorities have argued for years about whether CAPD actually exists, but Baylor scientists recently have used a sophisticated way of mapping brain activity to prove their case.

Dr. James Jerger, who heads Baylor Medical School's team at Methodist Hospital in Houston, has been using topographic brain mapping since September to track hearing problems that have nothing to do with the patient's ears.

"We're interested in particular kinds of patients: people who do not have the typical kind of hearing loss in the sense that they can't hear faint sounds," Jerger said.

Instead, "they have trouble understanding what they hear," he said. "They have trouble processing complex auditory signals."

Jerger is quick to point out there is no mental deficiency in these patients, only a portion of their brain that does not process information.

Until now, doctors have diagnosed CAPD, which largely affects children and the elderly, by asking the patient to repeat things.

By using topographical brain mapping, audiologists for the first time can prove the disorder exists by tracking brain activity after clicking sounds are emitted in the patient's ears.

An updated electroencephalogram (EEG) system detects the activity levels, transfers them into numbers and a computer determines averages. Those averages are converted into colors depicting minimum to maximum activity areas of the brain.

'We're interested in particular kinds of patients: ... they have trouble understanding what they hear. They have trouble processing complex auditory signals.'

In other words, the brain mapping presents a color picture of information as it flows through the brain.

"What that provides is, for the first time, the kind of hard evidence that we have been lacking," Jerger said. "This has been a controversial area because a lot of people would say, 'Well, how do you know they really have something wrong with their hearing system in the brain?'"

"It was always open to the criticism that there were other possible explanations for it: cognitive deficits, attentional problems. People would say, 'How do you know it's specifically auditory? How do you know that it isn't ADD (attentional deficit disorder), for example?'"

While topographical brain mapping technology has been around for about five years, its use has been limited largely to neurologists and some psychiatrists. The Baylor team is among the first to adapt the system for hearing disorders.

"In the case of the children, just the fact that you can sit down with a mother and say, 'Yes, there is something wrong here' is tremendously important," Jerger said. "Parents just get shunted from pillar to post and nobody ever tells them that there is an auditory problem. They say they (the children) can't pay attention or they're not applying themselves."

"The mothers know there's something wrong — they always know. They just need to be reassured that there is something wrong, they were right and there's something we can do about it and let's get started," he said.

Other places that use it for auditory diagnoses are at Northwest University in Chicago, Dallas Neurological Associates in Dallas and the Henry Ford Hospital in Detroit. All of those programs have been operating for less than two years.

Baylor researchers began a pilot study of brain mapping last summer. In the first few months of regular services, the team had done about 30 mappings and introduced it into a new clinic operated through Methodist Hospital.

"We're finding an astonishing number of children in the elementary grades with age range of about 7 or 8 to 11 or 12 who have been called just everything — call it learning disability, attentional deficit disorder, emotional problems — because people haven't understood what their problem is."

Once there is a diagnosis, physicians can work with parents, teachers and principals to set up a system where the student suffering from CAPD can get more direct contact, frequently using an assistive listening device. The device involves a microphone to transmit sound on FM radio frequencies from the teacher to a receiver held by the student.

The system also has been used to help adults and elderly patients, Jerger said. Some of the adults have had processing disorders since childhood, while others have had a stroke, a high-fever illness or epilepsy that has damaged parts of their brain. The topographical brain mapping also has been used to diagnose the problems in elderly patients.

"We think it's probably much more common than we've thought all along," Jerger said of CAPD. "It creates problems for people in school, but they learn coping strategies and learn to sort of accommodate to it, but it never really goes away."

He related the story of an 86-year-old patient who was a bridge fanatic, but was having an increasingly difficult time hearing bids because other players were chatting. After trying several hearing aids, she could hear no better. But the topographic brain mapping lead physicians to prescribe the assistive listening device.

"It was really affecting her lifestyle and she was depressed," Jerger said. "We tried one of these devices and she immediately adjusted to it. It was so successful."

The first to forgive will be first to find peace

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR READERS: Did you know there is an International Forgiveness Week? Well, neither did I until three years ago when Alice Parenti of Fresno, Calif., wrote to tell me about it. And this is the week.

If you are a card-carrying member of the human race, there is at least one person in your life who needs your forgiveness. Or perhaps it's you who needs to be forgiven, so hop aboard the mea culpa bandwagon, let go of those grudges and give your ulcer a chance to heal.

Robert Muller, former assistant secretary general of the United Nations, wrote this lovely piece especially for International Forgiveness Week:

DECIDE TO FORGIVE
Decide to forgive
For resentment is negative
Resentment is poisonous Resentment diminishes and devours the self.
Be the first to forgive,
To smile and to take the first step.
And you will see happiness
bloom
On the face of your human brother or sister.
Be always the first
Do not wait for others to forgive
For by forgiving
You become the master of fate

The fashioner of life
The doer of miracles.
To forgive is the highest,
Most beautiful form of love.
In return you will receive
Untold peace and happiness.

Here is the program for achieving a truly forgiving heart:
Sunday: Forgive yourself.
Monday: Forgive your family.
Tuesday: Forgive your friends and associates.

Wednesday: Forgive across economic lines within your own nation.
Thursday: Forgive across cultural lines within your own nation.

Friday: Forgive across political lines within your own nation.
Saturday: Forgive other nations.

Only the brave know how to forgive. A coward never forgives. It is not in his nature.

Now, Dear Readers, if you will forgive me for repeating a portion of the lovely poem titled "Forgiveness," by George Roemisch, here it is:

"Forgiveness is the fragrance of the violet that clings fast to the heel that crushed it"
So, if perchance you are the "heel" that crushed a violet, this is the week to seek forgiveness.

DEAR WONDERING: Start counting from 1972, and forget that 11-month "hiatus."

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I were married on Sept. 15, 1972. We had a child in 1973. We were divorced in 1975. Exactly 11 months later, we remarried and had two more children. We've been happily married ever since.

What anniversary do we officially celebrate? And please don't say, "Both of them," because, face it, you can have only one 25th wedding anniversary party.

Tricks of the cooking trade

NEW YORK (AP) — Oops! Too much salt went into the sauce!

Don't despair. Take a sugar cube and zigzag it through the sauce three or four times, says Chef Antoine Bouterin of New York City's Le Perigord restaurant.

No time to chill the champagne? Make an ice bath, add 2 to 4 tablespoons of salt to the water. The champagne will chill to 42 degrees F in 20 minutes, says winemaker Eileen Crane of Domaine Cameros by Taittinger.

Other cooking tips: Cook meats, including beef, lamb, veal and game, with one or two wine corks. The corks have enzymes that release into the pan and tenderize the meat. Place the wine corks in the pot, and cooking time is reduced by almost half, says chef Felipe Rojas-Lombardi of New York City's Ballroom.

If you want creamy shell beans, cover them with a lid when cooking. If you want them harder and more separate, leave the lid off, says chef Judy Rogers of San Francisco's Zuni Cafe.

If parchment paper sticks to the cake, use a pastry brush to paint hot water over the parchment paper, wait 10 to 20 seconds and then peel. Chef Jacques Torres of New York City's Le Cirque says the paper will come off easily, in one piece.

20 to 19 – Now that's a Super Bowl!

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) – After all the big plays, all the star turns on a super stage, there was nothing left to do but watch.

Otis Anderson, the game's Most Valuable Player, and Jeff Hostetler, the most important backup, kneeled helplessly on the sidelines. Thurman Thomas, once again carrying the load for the Bills, and Jim Kelly, who had gotten his team in position to win, stood and stared.

On the Tampa Stadium field, Scott Norwood readied himself for a 47-yard field goal that would bring fame or failure.

"If you wrote a Super Bowl script, you'd want it to come down to the end," Kelly said.

The end meant Norwood missed to the right, and the New York Giants escaped with a 20-19 victory in the Silver Anniversary Super Bowl.

The Giants won their second Super Bowl in five seasons just the way they always win. They controlled the ball and the clock – time of possession read 40:33-19:27 for New York, a record. They made all the key plays, especially on third down, converting nine of 16. They used a strange 2-3-6 defense – yes, only two down linemen – daring the Bills to run, seeking to destroy the rhythm of Buffalo's no-huddle attack.

And, in the end, they prayed.

"On my wrist, I have written 'Just a Prayer,' and that's what we asked for," said Giants linebacker Pepper Johnson, who did the same thing last week in San Francisco when teammate Matt Bahr tried and made a last-second, game-winning field goal.

"They're not used to going into halftime in a tough game," Mark Collins added of the 12-10 score through 30 minutes. "They're used to being 21 or 35 points up on people and coasting."

"I thought I could make it and I got plenty of distance," said Norwood, 1-for-5 from beyond the 40 this season. "I had the one opportunity there and didn't do the job."

"You just have to go forward, not look back."

Looking back, the Bills will see so many missed tackles and dropped passes.

They also will see Anderson, the 33-year-old workhorse whom coach Bill Parcells claims is headed for the Hall of Fame, rushing for 102 yards and a touchdown. He had 63 yards in the second half, when New York staged two scoring drives that lasted a total of 16:59.

"I said a long time ago," Anderson admitted, "if I got into a Super Bowl, I'd be a most valuable player."

Just as valuable, of course, was Hostetler. He ended his implausible run with exactly what the Giants expected – a solid, unspectacular performance. The man who sat behind Phil Simms since 1984 now is 7-0 as a starter and staked his claim to remain a starter.

"Every game, I've gotten the chance to learn things and get better," said Hostetler, who was 20-for-32 for 222 yards and a 14-yard TD pass to Stephen Baker with 25 seconds left in the first half.

The Bills never could get comfortable in their no-huddle because the Giants left them no time to run it. New York trailed 12-3 when it put together a 10-play, 87-yard drive to Baker's TD.

The Giants took the second half kickoff and went 75 yards in 14 plays to Anderson's 1-yard TD and a 17-12 lead.

"That was the biggest drive of the season," Baker said. "If it wasn't for that, we wouldn't have done what we did today. If we don't get anything out of that, we're thinking that things could get out of hand."

They still could have. Kelly and Thomas headed four plays to push the Bills back in front. Thomas' 31-yard run on which he broke two tackles made it 19-17 eight seconds into the fourth quarter.

"All those runs, all those catches, they don't mean a thing because we lost the game," said Thomas, the NFL's total offense leader the past two seasons. He had 135 yards rushing (a 9.0 average) and 55 receiving Sunday.

They lost because their sloppy tackling gave New York extra opportunities and extra yards. The Giants, once again displaying their cool efficiency and power, marched 74 yards in 13 plays and Bahr kicked the 21-yard field goal that won it.

Winning gymnasts

Six members of Gymnastics of Pampa participated in a USGF District I qualifying meet recently in Midland. They are (front) Katy McComas, who was entered in Level 5 (beginners division); (second row, from left) Katy Cavalier, first in vault, bars, beam, floor and all around, level 5, ages 8-11; Aubrea Ward, first in vault, third in bars, first in beam, first in floor and first in all-around, Level 6, ages 8-11 and Andrea Clark, third in vault, first in bars, second in beam, second in floor and first in all-around, Level 6, ages 8-11. Back row, from left, are Amy Hahn, who competed in Level 5 and Chrissy Norris, second in vault, second in bars, sixth in beam, fourth in floor and second in all-around, Level 6, ages 8-11. The Pampa gymnasts are entered in another meet February in Odessa.

Tex Schramm named to Pro Football Hall of Fame

DALLAS (AP) – Tex Schramm knows how much he meant to the NFL, but he says he never thought he would receive its highest honor.

"I'm sure you know how much this means to me," he said after being elected to the Pro Football Hall of Fame Saturday. "Down deep, I didn't think I was going to get in. I didn't think it would come true."

"I don't know if that was a defense mechanism or what. But when I heard it, it was probably one of the most emotional moments of my life."

Schramm was elected to the shrine along with former Texas Longhorns and Houston Oilers running back Earl Campbell. They were joined by John Hannah, Jan Stenerud and Stan Jones.

Schramm, who never played or coached in the National Football League, was elected as a contributor. He was general manager and president of the Dallas Cowboys from the team's inception in 1960 until 1988.

During that span, Dallas played in five Super Bowls, winning twice. The Cowboys made the playoffs 18 times in 20 seasons.

"For reporters, there is the Pulitzer. For other people, the Nobel. But if you have been in pro football for 40 years, this is the ultimate," Schramm said. "Particularly for someone such as myself – being the first in my category. I just never thought it would happen."

He becomes the first NFL general manager to be elected to the Hall of Fame. This was his second year on the ballot.

Schramm was a major proponent of the AFL-NFL merger and helped organize the World League of American Football, which begins play internationally this spring.

He also was chairman of the NFL's competition committee, perhaps the league's most prestigious job aside from commissioner, for 23 years.

Schramm also was a leading proponent of the six-division setup, wild-card playoff teams, instant replay, the referee's microphone and the 30-second clock between plays.

Schramm and the four others will be inducted July 27 in Canton, Ohio.

Contacted on his boat near Tampa, Fla., shortly after his election, Schramm said, "We're anchored. I'm flying, but the boat's anchored."

Schramm left the Cowboys in 1988 after new owner Jerry Jones took over and fired coach Tom Landry, who preceded Schramm into the Hall by one year.

A capsule look at the 1991 Hall of Famers

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) – Capsules of the five new inductees into the Pro Football Hall of Fame:

• Earl Campbell, running back, Houston (1978-84), New Orleans (1985): Came out of the University of Texas to lead the NFL in rushing and become All-Pro ... rookie of the year and most valuable player during his first year with the Oilers ... led the NFL in rushing three times, totaling 9,407 yards and 74 touchdowns ... joins George Blanda and Ken Houston as third long-time Oiler player inducted.

• John Hannah, offensive guard, New England (1973-85): Spent all of his 13 seasons with the Patriots ... becomes the first Patriot ever elected to the Hall of Fame ... was All-Pro 10 years in a row and four times was named the NFL Players' Association lineman of the year ... two-time All-American at Alabama ... played in nine Pro Bowls.

• Stan Jones, offensive guard and defensive tackle, Chicago Bears (1954-65), Washington (1966): Nominated by the seniors committee ... four times an All-NFL pick ... played in seven straight Pro Bowls ... played both ways until switching full time to defense in 1962.

• Tex Schramm, contributor, Dallas Cowboys: General manager and president of the Dallas Cowboys from inception of the team in 1960 until 1988 ... his teams played in five Super Bowls, winning two, and made 18 playoff appearances in 20 years ... a major proponent of the AFL-NFL merger ... helped organize the World League of American Football ... a leading proponent of the six-division setup, wild-card playoff teams, instant replay, the referee's microphone and the 30-second clock between plays.

• Jan Stenerud, placekicker, Kansas City (1967-79), Green Bay (1980-83), Minnesota (1984-85): Second only to George Blanda in career scoring with 1,699 points on 580 extra-points and record 373 field goals in 19 pro seasons ... had three field goals, including a record-tying 48-yarder, in the Chiefs' upset of the Vikings in the 1970 Super Bowl ... attended Montana State on a skiing scholarship, was discovered by a baseball coach who notified the football coach ... becomes first true placekicker inducted.

Three Pampa wrestlers pin down district wins at Amarillo Saturday

Three Pampa High School wrestlers won district titles in their weight class at the I-4A District Tournament this weekend at Tascosa High School in Amarillo. As a team, PHS placed fifth in the district.

Chris Fox, 171 lb. class, earned the honor of becoming the first wrestler from Pampa High School to win a district championship when he pinned Tascosa's Temple Haynes in the second period. Fox advanced to the finals after defeating Jeff Tamplin of Caprock with a score of 5-2. Wrestling Coach Steve Kuhn said the last time Fox faced Tamplin on the mat, Tamplin won by a score of 12-6. The semi-final and finals wins indicate the improvement Fox has made in the season, Kuhn said.

Chris Archibald, 189 lb. class, was expected to enter the finals, but faced a tough opponent in Amarillo High School's Cory Nations. Archibald had lost to Nations twice before, Kuhn said, but emerged victorious in the district finals despite being down 5-2 as the match entered the third period. At that time, Archibald garnered 3 points for a near fall to tie the match and then earned two more points for a near fall with seven seconds left in the match, breaking the tie and winning the title.

Heavyweight Philip Sexton's bout with Greg Smith of Amarillo High School "was a wrestling match, to say the least," Kuhn said. Sexton earned two points with a take-down in the first period, but the remainder of the match was a head-to-head combat for the two big wrestlers.

Chad Chairez, 125 lb. class, was a runner-up for the district championship. Chairez wrestled well throughout the tournament, Kuhn said, but was pinned in the second period of the finals by Brian Coldren of River Road.

The three district winners will advance to the regionals at Amarillo High School this weekend at Amarillo High School gym, Kuhn said.

The top two wrestlers from each division will then advance to state competition at Cal Farley Coliseum in Amarillo.

Soccer Association plans referee clinic Feb. 8-10

Pampa Soccer Association is to sponsor a referee clinic Feb. 8-10 at the Phillips 66 offices, west of Pampa on Texas 152.

The clinic, taught by representatives of the North Texas State Soccer Association out of Amarillo, is open to anyone 14-years-old and older.

Those who successfully complete the three-day clinic and pass the examination will receive certification as a soccer referee from U.S. Soccer Association.

Clinic times will be from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. on Friday, Feb. 8; from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturday, Feb. 9; and from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Sunday, Feb. 10.

For more information or to sign up for the clinic, contact Jimmy Goode at 665-8015.

The Pampa Soccer Association encompasses approximately 500 Pampa children who play as many as 22 to 23 games a weekend during the soccer seasons.

Shumate just wants some r-e-s-p-e-c-t

By ARNIE STAPLETON
AP Sports Writer

DALLAS (AP) — If Southern Methodist coach John Shumate is looking for respect, he's made a believer out of Houston Cougars coach Pat Foster.

"SMU just lined up and whipped us," Foster said after the Mustangs won for the sixth time in seven games, upsetting Houston 81-75 Saturday night.

"They played extremely hard and deserved to win. If they aren't a good basketball team, then I must be missing something. They ran their offense well and screened us all over the floor."

In other Southwest Conference games Saturday, Arkansas became the first Division I team to post 20 victories this season by holding off Baylor 73-68; Texas whipped Texas Christian 90-49 in Austin; and Rice handled visiting Texas A&M 98-76.

Texas Tech ended a five-game losing skid by beating Southern Illinois-Edwardsville 94-66.

Southern Methodist improved to 9-9 overall and 4-3 in league play, thanks to substitute center Greg Kinzer, who scored 7 points during a pivotal 17-6 second-half run. Tim Mason led the Mustangs with 21 points.

"There's no question that Houston is a national basketball team," Shumate said. "Anytime that you beat a national team, it gives you some credibility."

The Cougars (12-6, 4-3) hit only one of 12 shots during the fateful run that saw SMU turn a 47-46 deficit to a 63-53 lead with eight minutes left.

Byron Smith led the Cougars with 20 points. Alvaro Teheran scored 17 points, but only two in the last 15 minutes while Kinzer and Bobby Holkan were guarding him. Kinzer finished with 13 points.

The Mustangs were down 11-2 and 36-27 in the first half, but freshman Chad Allen's pair of 3-pointers tied the game at 37 at halftime.

Baylor (9-7, 2-5) scared Arkansas with flashbacks of last year's upset.

The Bears put together a 15-6 run, ending on David Wesley's 3-pointer, to close to within 68-66 with 34 seconds left. But Arkansas hit 5 of 6 foul shots to preserve the victory.

SWC Roundup

Oliver Miller led Arkansas (20-1, 8-0) with 22 points.

"We will be a better team for having to overcome the adversity we had to overcome tonight," Razorbacks coach Nolan Richardson said.

Arlyn Bowers and Lee Mayberry scored 11 points each for Arkansas. Todd Day, the SWC's leading scorer, was held to a career-low five points.

"I didn't expect it to be this tough," Mayberry said. "I thought we would win by 10 or 12 points.

We didn't play like the No. 2 team would in the nation. We were having flashbacks to last year — that was in the back of our minds."

A year ago, Arkansas was ranked third in the nation when it came to Baylor, and the Bears pulled off an 82-77 upset.

Chase Maag scored a career-high 29 points and Marvin Moore added 23 as Rice (7-10, 2-5) beat Texas A&M, which fell to 5-13 and 0-7.

Locksley Collie had 21 points and 10 rebounds in the Longhorns' 90-49 thrashing of TCU (12-5, 4-3).

Texas (12-5, 6-1) has won five straight and seven of eight. TCU made just 5 of 18 free throws and Reggie Smith, who led the Horned Frogs with 18 points, was 0-for-7 from the foul line.

In Lubbock, Bernard Saulsberry made eight consecutive free throws on one possession to cap a 19-2 second-half run in Texas Tech's rout of Southern Illinois-Edwardsville. Tech is 6-14.

A.J. Foyt continues rehabilitation, already planning racing comeback

FORT WORTH (AP) — Race car driver A.J. Foyt's career almost ended last year when he slammed into an embankment. A scant two months and an agonizing rehabilitation later, Foyt is making plans for his comeback.

His original goal was to be healthy enough to attempt to qualify for a record 34th consecutive Indy 500 in May. But in true Foyt fashion, he now hopes to drive in the Autoworks 200 Indy-car oval-track race in Phoenix on April 21.

"I'm going to set it up," said Foyt, whose first 1991 Lola chassis cleared customs from England on Tuesday, when he lowered his barrel-sized chest and fragile feet into the Lola's tub for the first time.

It was a noteworthy moment, because 1991 is Foyt's self-proclaimed last year of driving in any race.

"They were all laughing at the shop, but I've got to be careful with my legs and feet," said Foyt, 56. "I sat there 10 or 15 minutes kind of messing with the pedals."

Foyt's career almost ended last year when he slammed into an embankment on the 26th lap of the Texaco-Havoline 200 at Road America. He asked rescue personnel to hand him a tool so he could help them cut him from the wreckage.

He underwent three surgeries for a variety of injuries, including fractures in his legs and feet.

Foyt suffered a severe dislocation of his right ankle and still has sensory deprivation in that foot.

"You know how your feet will go to sleep and feel like pins and needles? That's how they are constantly."

He cannot fit his feet into his pre-accident size 10 1/2 D shoes and boots. "My kids are standing in line, seeing which one gets these alligator boots and ostrich boots ..."

Foyt was permitted to put weight on his right foot in mid-November. But his left foot and leg require a crutch. He suffered a compound fracture of the left tibia. The impact fractured the bone at the joint line, and the bone shot out the side of his leg. The main artery was twisted, prompting immediate surgery.

"That was the leg they were talking about taking off at the hospital," Foyt said. "At least they're both still there. I could take a lot of things, but I don't know if I could take that."

In mid-November he began his comeback with Steve Watterson, strength and rehabilitation coach for the Houston Oilers.

"I study biomechanics, and I'm an exercise physiologist, but I didn't know anything specific to racing," Watterson said. But after visiting Foyt's shop to learn all he could about the cars and conferring with Foyt's doctor, he was confident.

"I told him, 'This time, I'm the driver. You're the car,'" Watterson told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram. "After that we had a good relationship."

Adam Aldarado of the Mavericks Club in Amarillo has Reagan Bonner of Dumas almost pinned during Saturday's Top O' Texas Wrestling Open in Pampa's McNeely Fieldhouse. Aldarado defeated Bonner in the 58-pound weight class. The tournament, sponsored by the Amarillo Take Down Club, consisted of age divisions ranging from 6 and under to 18 years of age.

Birdie nets Phoenix Open for Henke

By WALTER BERRY
AP Sports Writer

PHOENIX (AP) — Nolan Henke was shaking his head in disbelief after his last putt, but not because it was bad. It won the Phoenix Open for him.

Henke rolled in an 18-foot birdie putt on the final hole Sunday, stemming a back-nine collapse and beating Curtis Strange, Tom Watson and Gil Morgan by one shot.

"I can't believe it went in," Henke said. "I tightened up on the back nine. I wanted to stay away from bogeys and it kept happening on every green. I just tried to relax on 18 and think of what I had to do, and it went in. I can't believe winning."

It was just the second victory in three years on the PGA Tour for Henke, who won the B.C. Open last September.

He finished with an even-par 71 for a 16-under total of 268. It marked Henke's 29th consecutive round of shooting par or under.

The victory in this $1 million tournament was worth $180,000, more than half of what the 26-year-old Henke earned last season.

"I hope this is the start of a good year," Henke said.

"I thought my first win would come on the Seniors Tour. The first one was a shock. This one was a bigger shock."

Morgan and Strange both bogeyed the 18th hole to fall to 15 under with Watson, winner of 32 tour events in 21 years but winless since the 1987 Nabisco Championship.

Watson became the early clubhouse leader with a 65 featuring birdies on five of the last six holes. Morgan shot a 66 and Strange a 67 on the 6,992-yard TPC course.

Henke, who led from the second round and started the day with a four-stroke lead over Robert Wrenn, made the turn at 17-under and then birdied the 10th hole for a three-shot lead over Strange.

But Henke bogeyed the par-5 13th, the par-5 15th and the par-3 16th to fall to 15 under.

Strange shot a 4-under 31 on the front nine to make the turn at 15 under. He birdied Nos. 12 and 13 before finding a bunker on the 15th hole and winding up with a bogey.

Morgan, six strokes back of Henke after three rounds, had an eagle on the 13th hole to go 14 under and then birdied the 15th and 17th. He went bunker to bunker on No. 18, however, and two-putted for bogey.

Henke's tee shot on 18 landed 171 yards from the green. He used a 7-iron to get to 18 feet and rolled in his birdie putt from the left outside lip of the cup.

"Up to then, I was basically beating myself," Henke said. "Walking up to the green on 18, I didn't think I could make the putt. Then I saw the line and thought maybe I could do it."

"I was real fortunate. Curtis has won so many times. I don't know what happened to him. I thought he was going to win the way he was making birdies."

Football's 'Galloping Ghost,' Red Grange, dies at age 87

LAKE WALES, Fla. (AP) — Red Grange, football's "Galloping Ghost" who starred as a running back at Illinois and later in professional football, died early today at a Lake Wales hospital. He was 87.

Grange died of complications from pneumonia at about 3 a.m., said his wife of 49 years, Margaret Grange. He had been in the hospital since July and had been on the critical list for a week.

Grange, one of the storied players of the game and one of 17 charter members of the Pro Football Hall of Fame, made his jersey number "77" famous during the years 1923-25 at Illinois.

His blazing speed and electrifying performances helped catapult football from the inside sports pages to front-page headlines.

"Yes, I think I brought some attention to the game," he once modestly conceded.

In his junior year, he scored four touchdowns in 12 minutes against Michigan with sprints of 95, 67, 56 and 45 yards. The next season he gained 363 yards against undefeated Pennsylvania. He was an All-America for three seasons.

The son of a Wheaton, Ill. lumber dealer, Grange became known as the "Wheaton Ice Man" when he carried blocks of ice to work his way through college.

He spent 13 years as a player, coach and promoter of pro football. He was in New York several years with a team called "Red Grange's Yankees" in the American professional league. Grange wound up his playing days in 1934 with the Bears, finishing his career as a pass receiver and defensive back. Grange scored 56 touchdowns in his pro career.

After several successful business ventures, he retired to Florida and lived at Indian Lakes Estates the USOC's 16-member executive committee, which is expected to make a decision Friday morning.

A two-day meeting of the USOC's 100-member board of directors begins Saturday.

U.S. Olympic Committee to select '95 Olympic Festival site this week

DALLAS (AP) — The U.S. Olympic Committee will meet in Dallas for four days this week to determine the sites of the 1993, '94 and '95 Olympic Festivals, and San Antonio is in the running, observers say.

Along with the Alamo City,

South Florida, Maryland, St. Louis and Denver are possible sites.

The Festival, involving hundreds of athletes in 37 sports, is held in non-Olympic years.

The U.S. Olympic Festival

Committee, one of 21 standing committees within the organization, will hear presentations by the five finalists in closed meetings beginning at 1 p.m. Thursday.

The festival committee will then recommend three sites to

New Texas House speaker pro tem began as an unlikely trailblazer

By PEGGY FIKAC
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — Three decades ago, Wilhelmina Delco might have looked like an unlikely political trailblazer.

A wife and mother who stayed home until her youngest child entered school, she didn't get her driver's license until after that child — her fourth — was born in 1961. She was 32.

But she already had much of what she'd need to be an effective officeholder, starting with the self-confidence that she said is a gift from her own strong mother.

"I don't get into races to lose, and I don't take on fights I don't expect to win," said Mrs. Delco, a state lawmaker who this legislative session became the first woman named House speaker pro tem, the chamber's No. 2 post.

Under Speaker Gib Lewis, D-Fort Worth, the assistant speaker has been a floor leader with true responsibility, not just an honorary titleholder.

Delco, the first black lawmaker from Austin, said she's eager to fill that role.

A priority will be ensuring that all lawmakers are kept informed of the speaker's position and the status of legislation, she said.

"Up here, there are some people that know everything, and other people that know nothing. And I would hope that in a role as speaker pro tem, I would have access to information and be able to be a repository for members for that information," she said.

Delco, a Democrat, began her political career in 1968 as the first black person elected to the Austin school board.

Her first campaign was prompted in part by the school board's blocking a plan to have Girl Scout meetings in the school building. She worked as a volunteer in the PTA, Girl Scouts and League of Women Voters.

"I said, well somebody needs to be on the school board that will understand how we feel over here," said Delco, 61.

Her election came just two days after civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr. was killed, and she credits her victory in part to that tragedy.

She was elected to the Legislature in 1974, propelled by a strong interest in education and helped by Gov. Ann Richards, then a behind-the-scenes political worker.

Richards "raised every penny that we raised in the campaign," Delco said. "In that time, in 1974, that was a profound statement to make about sensitivity. Because what she said to people when she took me in, she said, 'Here's a woman that I think needs to be in the Legislature. And we need your help. Get out your checkbook.'"

Delco went on to head the Higher Education Committee, pushing such measures as a skills test for college freshmen and a constitutional amendment that boosted funding for predominantly black Prairie View A&M University and other schools.

"It was something that to me will have a value and a meaning long past my time of service in the Legislature," said Delco, who was born in Chicago and was graduated from predominantly black Fisk University in Nashville. That's where she met her husband, Exaltion Delco Jr., now vice president of academic affairs at Austin Community College.

Mrs. Delco stepped down as chairwoman of the Higher Education Committee to be speaker pro tem, although she remains on the committee.

Delco said her mother assumed she would go to school, although they lived for a time in a Chicago housing project. "All five of my mother's children graduated from college," she said.

Working with Lewis, who was indicted by a Travis County grand jury on two misdemeanor counts of alleged ethics violations, doesn't faze her. Lewis said he's innocent of the charges.

"What I require of a speaker is that they be open and honest and fair and experienced, and Gib is all of those," Delco said.

As a black woman, she's met her share of people who aren't fair. But she said she doesn't take the "standard jokes" or slights to heart.

"You never really conquer issues. You take one step forward and two backwards," she said. "But I think I've gotten sophisticated enough to recognize that that's a flaw in that person. It's not something that I need to blame myself for, or get a heart condition or an ulcer over."

Delco said she has no plans for another office, but she won't rule one out.

"I don't want to do anything for the sake of doing it, or to be a token, or the first and only," she said. "But I do think that if I have a gift that can make a difference, that I have a responsibility to use it."

High school reopens

Israeli students greet each other as they arrive at the Alliance High School in Tel Aviv Sunday for the reopening of school for tenth, eleventh and twelfth grades. Students attended classes for the first time in nearly two weeks after the school system was closed because of danger from Iraqi missile attacks. Students carried their boxed gas masks to school as attack threats continue in the area.

If you don't call, we can't help.

We know you're out there... suffering through the day with a sore back, walking on eggshells with a splitting headache or a neck so stiff you can't even move.

We know how miserable the pain can be. We see it every day in the many patients who come to us for help, in the hundreds of people who have found relief through the natural, chiropractic approach to health care.

The next time you feel that familiar pain, remember: help is just a phone call away.
