U.S. diplomat calls Iraqi leader a 'liar'

By MIKE FEINSILBER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — For months, April Glaspie had been Washington's mystery woman. Had the U.S. ambassador to Iraq really raised no objection when Saddam Hussein summoned her last July and threatened to invade his neighbor?

Had she told him, a week before the invasion, that the United States had "no opinion on Arab-Arab conflicts, like your border disagreement with Kuwait?"

Now she has had her say.

In blunt, crisp and undiplomatic language, she told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on Wednesday that Saddam was a liar and his "so-called transcript" that quoted her conversation with him was "maliciously edited," an example of Iraqi "disinformation."

"She did great," White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said today. "The truth will out."

"She was excellent," said Fitzwater. "We've always had confidence in April. She had three meetings with the president during the war." Asked why the administration had not let her tell her story before now, he said, "we just felt it was best to leave this until after the war was over. It was not necessary."

The Iraqis released the transcript in September and the State Department did not disavow it. To some, Miss Glaspie became the scapegoat.

She was kept out of sight, in the belly of the State Department. Said Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., "We have an ambassador who, on the instructions of the State Department, virtually gave the green light to Saddam Hussein."

Not so, said Miss Glaspie, 48, first American female ambassador to an Arab state and an expert on the region.

It was Saddam, not she, who was absent in that July 25 meeting, a week before he sent his troops and tanks across the border, she said.

She said he told her to inform President Bush "that he would not solve his problems with Kuwait by violence."

At first, said Miss Glaspie, Saddam thought he could bluff.

But when the United States — against the advice of every Arab ally — stood up to him, warned him of its vital interests, engaged in naval maneuvers with the United Arab Emirates and "acted like a superpower" he backed down, she said.

He was "stymied," she said. "He was flummoxed. ... He surrendered."

April Glaspie

But then Saddam recalculated, and miscalculated badly, the ambassador said. He convinced himself the United States would not respond to an invasion, that Arab states would never allow American troops to be stationed on their soil.

He told Miss Glaspie — according to that disputed transcript — that the United States was not the type of society that was prepared to lose 10,000 troops in a single battle.

She said he was desperate. He needed Kuwait's oil. He had over-spent when oil was $20 a barrel, saying he was sure the price would rise. It fell to $14 in July.

But, if Saddam miscalculated, Miss Glaspie said, so did the United States.

"Our mistake was like that of every other government in the world: we did not realize that he was stupid," she said. "He didn't realize that we would defend our vital interests."

Miss Glaspie testified calmly, briskly, prepared for every question. There was nothing defensive in her department.

She said the United States may have been lulled by the prevalence of border disputes between Arab countries and the knowledge that other Persian Gulf states were poised to make concessions to Iraq on the disputed Ramallah oil fields and on debts left over from the Iran-Iraq war.

And, she said, the United States was too ready to believe Saddam would be amenable to what it saw as reason and diplomacy.

The ambassador defended a letter she delivered to Tariq Aziz, the Iraqi foreign minister, apologizing for an editorial broadcast by the Voice of America. She said it could be interpreted as inciting the citizens of six Arab countries to overthrow their governments. She said she acted on the instructions of Washington in apologizing.

As for the transcript of her meeting with Saddam, it had been "selectively edited," Miss Glaspie said.

She had said the United States had no interest in the Iraqi-Kuwait border dispute, but she said Saddam left out the rest of her remark: "We would insist on settlements being made in a non-violent manner, not by threat, not by intimidation and certainly not by aggression."

With a smile, Miss Glaspie said it was her word against his.

"I hope my credibility is at least as great as Saddam Hussein," she added.

War games

Cole Nuckols, 5, of Canyon, engages in "war games" in Central Park Wednesday afternoon while visiting with his grandmother Anne Davidson of Pampa. Cole, armed with a wooden gun, took the role of the Iraqi army while his brother Ryan, 10, who is not pictured, played the "victorious American army" — such are the advantages of being the older sibling. Grandmother Davidson watched the military proceedings from the safety of a nearby park bench.

March sales tax rebates drop here and in most area towns

By BETH MILLER
Staff Writer

March sales tax rebates rose moderately throughout the state when compared to last year, although the city of Pampa and most surrounding areas showed decreases.

Pampa, which received a $100,141.68 check last March, received $89,093.60 this month, a decrease of 11.03 percent. For the year to date, Pampa is down 1.65 percent, having received $361,204.89 so far this year compared to $367,259.81 last year.

The city of McLean is down 8.39 percent this month with its $1,330.71 payment compared to a $1,452.64 payment last March. For the year to date, McLean is down 14.61 percent with payments of $4,655.55 this year compared to last year's payments at the same time of $5,451.95.

The city of Lefors recorded no payment this month, but for the year to date is up 9.55 percent, having received $1,479.16 this year compared to last year's payments through March of $1,350.27.

In Carson County, the city of Groom is down 3.05 percent with its March payment of $1,808.81 and down 7.42 percent for the year to date, having received $6,158.04 this year.

The city of Panhandle is up .28 percent with its $3,829.74 payment this year and down 3.44 percent with payments totaling $14,878.14 so far this year.

The city of Skellytown is down 8.57 percent this month with its $1,149.77 payment and down 15.28 percent for year to date payments, having received $3,706.54 this year.

The city of White Deer is down 51.64 percent with its $1,460.37 payment this month and down 14.82 percent for year to date payments totaling $8,349 this year.

In Hemphill County, the city of Canadian received a $11,108.49 check this month for an increase of 9.78 percent over last year's March check. For the year to date, Canadian has received $41,398.85, up 9.82 percent from last year's payments at the same time.

In Roberts County, the city of Miami is up 45.23 percent with its $1,522.99 check this month and up 1.88 percent for year to date payments, receiving $4,784.39 so far this year.

In Wheeler County, the city of Mobeetie recorded no payment this month and a 4 percent decrease in year to date payments, receiving $604.81 so far this year.

The city of Shamrock is down

12.45 percent with its $6,850.61 payment this month and down 6.93 percent from last year, having received $28,797.71 in year to date payments.

The city of Wheeler is up 22.11 percent with its $3,911.87 check this month and up 14.95 percent for year to date payments, having received $14,044.67 this year.

More than $229 million in local sales tax revenue checks were mailed to local governments this month. This month's payments to cities and counties reflect taxes collected by businesses in January.

Houston received $12.6 million this month, the largest payment to a city and Dallas received the second largest payment of $7.2 million.

Voters in 105 of Texas' 254 counties have approved collection of the 1/2 percent county sales tax, while voters in Uvalde County have approved an additional 1/2 percent tax for county health services. Last March, only 100 counties collected county sales tax.

Businesses collect both the state's 6 1/4 percent sales tax and all local sales taxes and send them to the Comptroller's Office with their tax returns. The state then retains its share and rebates cities, counties and other taxing entities their local portion of the sales tax.

27 missing following collision of two U.S. Navy planes today

By DENNIS GEORGATOS
Associated Press Writer

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Two Navy submarine-hunting planes collided early today during a training mission off the southern California coast, and 27 crew members were missing, Navy spokesmen said.

Search and rescue teams in helicopters found some debris but located no bodies or survivors, Navy spokesman Mike Kreis said.

Navy air controllers lost contact with the two planes at about 2:30 a.m., Navy spokesman Bob Howard said. A Navy SH-60 helicopter crew taking part in the exercise spotted a fireball at sea at about the same time, the Navy said.

Thirteen crew members were believed to be on one P-3 Orion plane and 14 on the other, Howard said. The planes were on a training mission from Moffett Naval Air Station in Northern California.

Howard said chances of finding survivors were "obviously not good in a situation like this but we are conducting very aggressive search and rescue operations."

John Shackleton, a public affairs officer at Moffett, said the two planes were part of Patrol Squadron 50, which flew to San Diego early today to take part in training.

The crash occurred in the Pacific Ocean 60 miles southwest of San Diego, Howard said.

Rain showers and strong winds were reported in the San Diego area overnight. About three hours after the planes collided, a funnel cloud was sighted about 5 miles offshore from San Diego's Mission Beach.

The National Weather Service said pilots in the area reported severe turbulence at about the time the funnel was sighted.

Howard said the Navy was uncertain what part weather played in the collision. He said the cause of the crash was under investigation.

The aircraft carrier Abraham Lincoln was assisting in the search for survivors, Howard said. The planes do not fly off carriers and Howard did not know if they were in contact with the carrier at the time of the crash.

The P-3 Orion, driven by four propellers, is regularly used by weather forecasters to fly into hurricanes.

When used to hunt submarines, the planes can be armed with torpedoes, nuclear or conventional depth charges, mines and Harpoon and Sidewinder missiles.

The planes originally built in 1959 by Lockheed for the Navy have a wing span of about 100 feet, a length of 116 feet, 10 inches, and a height of more than 33 feet. Their maximum speed is 473 mph, and they have a cruising speed of 378 mph.

Walesa visit may speed return of Paderewski's body to Poland

WASHINGTON (AP) — Polish President Lech Walesa laid red and white roses on the casket of pianist and statesman Ignace Jan Paderewski today as arrangements to return Paderewski's remains to his homeland neared completion.

During a visit to Arlington National Cemetery, Walesa also placed floral tributes at the white marble Tomb of the Unknowns and the grave of President John F. Kennedy.

His last stop at the cemetery was at the small stone marking the grave of Marine Corps Capt. Jonathan Edwards, 36, of Glenview, Ill., the first American serviceman killed in the Gulf War to be buried at Arlington. Edwards died in a helicopter crash near the Saudi-Kuwaiti border Feb. 2.

The wreath-laying came as arrangements neared completion to fulfill President Franklin D. Roosevelt's 50-year-old promise that Paderewski's remains would be returned to his homeland "when Poland is free."

Walesa, on his first visit as Poland's president, was hailed by President Bush at a White House dinner Wednesday as a liberator and "an apostle of peace."

"You fought to preserve liberty for all — for individuals, choice; for societies, pluralism; for nations, self-determination," Bush said in a toast to Walesa.

Later, the president told reporters that he and Walesa discussed Eastern European security briefly.

"We're determined to keep a strong NATO (North Atlantic Treaty Organization)," he said. "But we're not trying to project a threat to the Soviet Union." He said the Kremlin should not feel threatened by contacts made between Eastern European countries and NATO.

For years, visitors to Arlington have found it curious that the casket of Paderewski lies in one of the military cemetery's best-known spots, near the Tomb of the Unknowns.

"The date has not absolutely been set yet" for returning the remains to Poland, said Edward L. Rowny, a former U.S. arms control official of Polish descent who has played a key role in the arrangements.

In addition to his fame as a musician, Paderewski served as a Polish government official in 1919 and 1920. Poland was under Nazi occupation when he died in the United States on June 29, 1941. After the war came decades of communist rule.

Arrangements for return of his body were spurred by the election of Walesa, a former shipyard electrician who became leader of the Solidarity labor union, as the country's first democratically chosen president. He took office Dec. 22.

Economic issues were expected to dominate on Capitol Hill today as Walesa visited leaders and foreign policy committees of the House and Senate.

Also on his agenda was a visit to the construction site of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum and a meeting with the Holocaust Memorial Council.

In Warsaw, officials said Walesa would donate the gate of a 16th century Jewish cemetery to the museum. A spokeswoman for the council said he was also donating long-lost records of the 1943 uprising in the Warsaw ghetto.

The Polish president met Wednesday with Bush, who announced that the United States is erasing $2.6 billion of the huge foreign debt amassed by Warsaw under its former communist regime.

Later, at the state dinner, Walesa said America had become a symbol of freedom, but today "nobody, thank God, has to leave Poland." He hailed the debt reduction as a "magificent act" that would be a relief for millions of Poles.

Bullock: DHS is 'parasite' on state

By SUSAN HIGHTOWER
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — Three new board members have been sworn to the state's welfare agency, possibly heralding a new era at the agency called a "parasite" on the state budget by Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock.

"I think it's very important to ... restore the credibility of the board and the agency," said new appointee Cassandra Carr of Austin, who was unanimously elected as chairwoman of the board Wednesday.

Bullock made his comment about the Department of Human Services on Wednesday, as Mrs. Carr, Yava Scott of Houston and Bob Geyer of El Paso, the first disabled person to serve, took their oaths of office.

"(The agency) is a drain on our state finances," Bullock said. "Regardless of the sum of money that we dropped in by way of approriation — it's very questionable whether it would ever get down to the people who really need the help."

Tuesday, a Senate committee issued a report skewering the department and recommending its three returning board members be replaced.

The department, which assists some 2 million needy Texans, already has received two emergency cash appropriations from the Legislature and is seeking a $3 billion funding increase for the 1992-1993 biennium.

DHS officials defended their agency, saying most of the financial woes were the result of rising costs and expanding caseloads caused in part by federal requirements.

"This agency, in my opinion, is not out of control. It has not been mismanaged. In fact, this agency has met the numerous challenges, the explosion in people needing services in Texas that has caused the increase in our caseload really very well," said outgoing chairman David Herndon, of Austin.

Herndon, who was chairman of the board for two months after the resignation of unsuccessful Republican lieutenant governor candidate Rob Mosbacher, did not seek reelection.

Commissioner Ron Lindsey said DHS officials already had voiced most of the concerns cited in Tuesday's report from the budget-writing Senate Finance Committee.

That report said the agency's fiscal situation is "out of control," threatening both its clients and state finances.

"I can understand the frustration about having a major driver in the budget that the Senate cannot control, because most of that is a result of what goes on in federal legislation," Lindsey said.

"We're asking for more money, and we covet the attention that says we need more help to deal with the issues that are here," he said.

The Senate committee said the Legislature should overhaul the state's health and human services system. It recommended a review of the qualifications and performance of Lindsey and other top-level DHS officials.

Gov. Ann Richards said that DHS board members should be replaced if they don't want to put in the time maintain adequate scrutiny of the agency.

But the three board members appointed by former Gov. Bill Clements — Herndon, Maurice Barksdale of Arlington and Ida Papert of Dallas — all said Wednesday that they wouldn't step aside.

"I think that this board bends over backward to serve, I really do, given we're volunteers," Mrs. Papert said.

Ralph Nader, environmental groups say fast-track is wrong track for free trade

By JENNIFER DIXON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A coalition of consumer advocates led by Ralph Nader is calling on Congress to deny the Bush administration's request to negotiate a non-amendable free trade agreement with Mexico.

Consumer advocates warned Wednesday that the Bush administration could "bargain away" health, safety and environmental laws if allowed to use the fast-track to negotiate a Mexican agreement or to conclude international trade talks under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Congress could deny the administration's request for a two-year extension in fast-track authority with a vote of either the House or Senate before June 1.

The administration contends there would be no trade agreements without fast track, because the United States' trading partners will not negotiate a pact that could be later amended in Congress.

Nader claimed Wednesday that the Bush administration was pushing for a free trade agreement with Mexico to benefit major U.S. companies, which would relocate south of the border to take advantage of lax environmental and worker safety laws, and cheap Mexican labor.

"They (the administration) have no loyalty to American workers when it comes to doing the bidding of U.S. multinational corporations, who want to get the cheapest deal abroad, no matter what the costs are at home," Nader said. "Their first allegiance is to U.S. multinational corporations. Way down on the list are American workers, consumers and the environment."

Under a free trade agreement, Nader claimed, major U.S. companies could "exploit" Mexican workers "and displace our workers at the same time."

The National Toxics Campaign said it questioned why the Bush administration was "so desperate to ram the U.S.-Mexico trade agreement through with fast track authority?"

"They don't want us to know how pollution from U.S.-owned maquiladora factories has already poisoned the rivers and drinking water in dozens of towns along the Mexican border," the organization said in a statement.

The organization also claimed that Mexican "sweatshops" owned by U.S. corporations are exposing workers and their families to dangerous chemicals; that DDT and other banned pesticides are used in Mexico; that thousands of U.S. jobs have already been lost to Mexico and that many more would disappear under the trade agreement; and that Mexican activists who oppose the Salinas regime are being kidnapped, tortured and murdered.

"The Bush administration can't afford to let the American people know about these problems with the free trade agreement," the group's statement said. "Because the more we know, the worse it looks. Maybe that's why Bush is so eager to win fast track negotiating authority and begin negotiating in secret."

According to Lori Wallach of Public Citizen's Congress Watch, a Nader-founded organization, the administration would be able to use fast track to label environmental, health and safety laws as trade barriers, and to then bargain them away.

"Congress would either have to vote down the whole agreement and lose the benefits or vote 'yes' and let consumers face the consequences," Ms. Wallach said.

Elaine Dodge, an attorney with the Government Accountability Project, a whistleblower support organization, claimed that Agriculture Department policies implementing a free trade agreement with Canada have resulted in a dramatic increase in contaminated meat reaching U.S. consumers.

She said that is "only a taste of the filthy food that will be our steady diet from open border policies with Mexico, if proper controls are not put in place."

Endangered turtles released after undergoing year of rehabilitation

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — A wild Kemp's ridley turtle was released into the Gulf of Mexico after undergoing nearly a year of rehabilitation in a program to bolster the endangered species.

The super head start program is a joint venture between the U.S. and Mexican governments. Mexico protects the ridley turtle at a hatching grounds at Rancho Nuevo, about 200 miles south of Brownsville, on the Tamaulipas coast.

Hatchlings from Rancho Nuevo are raised at the National Marine Fisheries Services laboratory in Galveston and then released in the gulf.

The female turtle released Wednesday was confiscated from a shrimping boat last April. Three shrimpers were sentenced to prison in January after they pleaded guilty to unlawful possession of an endangered species.

NMFS biologist Sharon Manzella said that when rescued, the turtle's shell was partially cracked on the left side and drilled through on its back tip. She said its captors apparently had put a string through the hole and tied it to the boat.

"She was in pretty bad shape when we got it," Ms. Manzella said after she put the turtle in the water 3 1/2 miles east of South Padre Island at about 9 a.m. "I can tell by the way she swam away that she is going to be fine now."

Ms. Manzella and biologist Jo Williams released the rescued ridley turtle along with six other turtles. They enlisted the help of the Coast Guard at South Padre Island to free two juvenile green turtles, two young hawksbill turtles and two other ridley turtles that were raised in captivity under the program.

Senate OK's changes to state's foreclosure law

By MICHAEL HOLMES
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — Legislation to give a break to borrowers whose properties have been foreclosed is a step closer to law.

Under the bill, a lender still could sue a borrower to recover more money than the property brought at a foreclosure sale. But a major change in the law would allow a borrower to ask a court to deduct the property's fair market value from the total debt.

The bill's sponsor, Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, said that under the law now, a property's value isn't considered in such proceedings.

"Under current law a mortgage holder, if the payments are behind, can post for foreclosure the property ... They sell it at the courthouse steps. More often than not, the only bidder is the creditor," Parker said Wednesday.

"Generally, there is no state standard on how much to bid, so theoretically they can bid any price," he said.

If the outstanding debt is for $100,000, and the foreclosed property is auctioned for $25,000, a creditor then can "sue you for the deficiency on your note," Parker said.

"While that suit's going on, they go out and sell it for more than $100,000 ... They can still sue you and get a deficiency judgment against you — even though they made money on the property — and you can't even raise that issue in court. A lot of people think that's unfair."

Under the bill, a creditor going through a non-judicial foreclosure would take the property, and the debt would be extinguished.

If a creditor goes to court seeking a deficiency judgment for the additional money, a debtor could prove the fair market value at the time of the sale. That value then would be deducted from the debt.

The bill was approved, 29-0, Wednesday and returned to the House for action on Senate amendments.

Similar legislation was adopted in 1989 but vetoed by then-Gov. Bill Clements.

In other action, the Senate:

- Sent the House legislation to continue operations of the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation after rejecting a bid to eliminate a provision for designating an agency bicycle coordinator.
- Sen. Ken Armbrister, D-Victoria, said he didn't see the need for such a position.
- "I don't think anybody in here is necessarily anti-bicycle use. I do have a problem when we're setting up ... a whole new special interest. The next thing we'll see, we'll have a joggers' use committee set up," Armbrister said.

But Sen. Carlos Truan, D-Corpus Christi, said the department should be concerned about all transportation issues.

"There ought to be a concern for both those who ride their bicycles ... as well as the owners driving their multi-ton vehicles so that we can save lives in the process," Truan said.

The bill's sponsor, Sen. Gonzalo Barrientos, D-Austin, said the department already designates a bicycle coordinator and favors the provision.

"Bicycling is the fastest-growing recreational sport in the U.S.," he said.

• Adopted a resolution directing the state Higher Education Coordinating Board to create an advisory council to help "in assessing the severity of underrepresentation of women" in college faculty and administrative posts.

Sen. Judith Zaffirini, D-Laredo, said men hold substantially more faculty and administrative jobs than women, and the higher the rank the fewer who are women. She said only 20 percent of state university regents are women and only one of the 12 governing boards is chaired by a woman.

Governor's mom makes rare public speech

WACO (AP) — The orator of the family might be Ann, but Iona Willis ventured into the world of public speaking for the first time since her daughter, Ann Richards, was elected governor.

"I guess there's no one more surprised than I am that I'm here today," she told a crowd of about 150 Wednesday at a community center in Waco.

Mrs. Willis and her husband, Cecil, have long enjoyed a private life in Waco, where their only daughter grew up and attended public schools and Baylor University.

That all changed when Richards began to ascend the political ladder, culminating in her inauguration as governor three months ago.

Mrs. Willis' appearance was in commemoration of National Women's History Month.

Since the November election, Mrs. Willis said almost everyone asks her the same questions:

- Is Richards different?
- Has the election changed your lives and your relationship?
- How did you raise a daughter to become governor?

"Without any reservation, I can tell you that Gov. Ann Richards is the very same daughter that I had before she was elected," she said.

As for how her daughter's position has changed their lives, Mrs. Willis said there is no simple answer. She added she cannot answer that question for her daughter.

"She does say that she loves this job very much. She likes this job the best of any job she's ever had," the proud mother said.

When asked what she and her husband did to raise a governor-daughter, Mrs. Willis said she is not sure. She suspects, though, that strong values and ethics played a part.

Every parent should have the chance to know the thrill, she said.

"Am I proud of her? You betcha! I hope somebody here gets to enjoy the same experience — at least in 1998."

State has asked for dismissal of case

DALLAS (AP) — A 17-year-old class-action lawsuit over conditions in Texas' mental retardation care system should be dismissed by a federal judge, according to the state's attorneys.

U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders is scheduled to hear evidence on May 28 to determine whether the state school system, which cares for retarded citizens, has complied with a 4-year-old settlement agreement.

But a motion for summary judgment, filed in U.S. District Court last Friday, asks Sanders to cancel the hearing.

State attorneys contend the hearing is unnecessary because three of the 13 state schools have received accreditation from the Accreditation Council on Services for People with Developmental Disabilities.

Sanders had not filed a response to the motion by late Wednesday.

The plaintiffs' attorney, David Ferleger of Philadelphia, said the state should be held in contempt for not complying with the settlement terms.

Public Notice

Southwestern Bell Telephone Company ("Southwestern Bell") submitted an application on January 4, 1991 to the Public Utility Commission of Texas ("Commission") requesting that the central office-based PBX/type service market be declared subject to significant competition pursuant to the Commission's Substantive Rule §23.27. If this proposal is approved, Southwestern Bell intends to provide service to this market segment via its PLEXAR-Custom service, which provides for contractual rates and charges to be based on an individual customer-specific basis.

PLEXAR-Custom is a central office-based service which provides switched voice and/or data communications similar to a customer-premises PBX. PLEXAR-Custom service is currently being provided on an individual customer-specific basis via Southwestern Bell's Customer Specific Pricing Plan Tariff for central office-based telecommunications systems of 200 stations or more. If Southwestern Bell's application is approved, the PLEXAR-Custom service tariff will be revised to also include central office-based telecommunications systems which require between 75 and 200 stations.

Centrex and Plexar-II services are currently priced according to a standard tariff regardless of the customer's geographic location in the state. If this application is approved, customers needing 75 to 200 stations will be able to obtain this service priced on an individual customer-specific basis rather than under a standard tariffed rate.

Southwestern Bell's application proposes that the service market for PBX/type systems of 75 stations up to 200 stations be declared subject to significant competition statewide in all of the exchange areas served by Southwestern Bell and in which the central office capability to provide the service exists and/or can readily be made available.

Persons who wish to intervene, protest, or comment on this application should notify the Public Utility Commission of Texas by June 21, 1991 at 7800 Shoal Creek Boulevard, Suite 400N, Austin, Texas 78757. You may also call the Commission's Public Information Office at (512) 458-0256, or (512) 458-0221, teletypewriter for the deaf. Please refer to this matter in all correspondence as Docket No. 9960.

Era of Jim Crow laws is revisited

The civil rights bill working its way through Congress would hurt businesses and workers of all races. The bill was passed by the House Education and Labor Committee earlier this month. It is virtually the same bill passed by Congress last year, but vetoed by President Bush. Since the veto was sustained by only a handful of votes, and last November's election increased the Democratic majority in both houses of Congress, Bush might not have the votes this year to sustain the veto.

The bill would impose quotas on U.S. businesses. Everyone except lawyers and federal bureaucrats would be hurt because it would increase the cost of doing business, especially for small firms. If a firm did not hire a proportion of minorities or women equal to that of the local population, it could be sued for discrimination. What's worse, the firm would have to produce evidence on its own, at its own cost, to prove itself innocent of discrimination. In other words, this radical bill would reverse the crucial legal principle that one is innocent until proven guilty.

The Bush administration has proposed its own alternative civil rights bill, the best feature of which rejects the congressional quota system. Instead, according to President Bush, the bill would seek "to obliterate consideration of factors such as race, color, religion, sex or national origin from employment decisions." Unfortunately, the Bush proposal is like the congressional proposal in a critical way: In a discrimination suit, the business itself would have to prove "business necessity" for why someone was not hired—that is, the business would be considered guilty until it could prove itself innocent.

The Bush proposal does contain one delightful new idea: For the first time Congress would itself be subject to the civil rights legislation it passes. For too long Congress has put itself above the law of the land. It's time the hypocrisy ended.

Despite his sky-high popularity after the Gulf War victory, on the civil rights legislation Bush will be tempted to compromise with the Democratic leadership. But the Democrats, counting on a veto-proof majority, might not care to compromise. Bush should fight on anyway, threatening to turn quotas into an issue in next year's election.

This whole debate raises a more fundamental question: When are we going to return to the idea of civil rights as a protection against the deprivations of political government? And that government has no right to interfere with hiring decisions? Legislating morality is a tricky business, best left unattempted, no matter how laudatory the morality. And we should remember that Jim Crow laws were impositions by government. Now that Jim Crow laws have been repealed, are we risking a neo-Jim Crow society by having the government set itself up as a radical guardian of a different sort?

BEST PERFORMANCE BY A
LEADING GENERAL

Paying for West's mistakes

Suppose one day a criminal invaded your house, beat you up, bound and gagged you, took your credit cards and went on a buying spree. Once you had escaped and the bills he had run up began coming in, would you feel a duty to deplete your savings, sell your car and take a second job to pay them?

Me either. But what would be ridiculous for individuals seems to be obligatory for nations. Among the few durable things Poland's communist rulers built during their four decades of power is a skyscraper of debt. Even though the current government and the Polish people had no more say in borrowing the money than they have in choosing the governor of Hawaii, they're expected to bleed themselves white to pay it off.

Two-thirds of the $6 billion in foreign debt is owed to Western governments, including Germany, France, Britain and the United States. The rest came from commercial banks. Polish Prime Minister Jan Krzysztof Bielecki has asked that 80 percent of the loans be forgiven. France and Germany said 40 percent was the limit. In a recent agreement, a number of nations to which Poland is in debt agreed to a 50 percent limit.

The Germans have short memories. It was in the 1950s, though it seems like only yesterday, that they were asking the World War II allies to swallow 60 percent of West Germany's debts, a request that was mercifully granted. The Bush administration thinks 60 percent sounds about right for Poland too. It's following the lead of Rep. David Obey, the Wisconsin Democrat who heads the foreign operations subcommittee.

The argument against forgiving most of Poland's debt is that it would produce a long line of debtor nations squawking to be relieved of their burdens.

Stephen Chapman

That would be inconvenient for Western banks and taxpayers, but the fact is they volunteered for the loan transactions and the Polish people didn't. Nor did a lot of the other people whose countries incurred huge obligations under the rule of thick-necked dictators.

It took a fair amount of dim-wittedness to lend money to a government that didn't have the slightest idea how to make its economy function. But instead of feeling properly mortified for being such boneheads, Western governments and banks insist that Poland has a moral obligation to rescue them from their stupidity.

The Poles would be perfectly justified in replying that they have as much moral obligation to assume Gen. Jaruzelski's old debts as they do to provide bus fare for the Red Army's trip back to the Soviet Union. If the Warsaw government is willing to repay 20 percent or 40 percent of the loans, the creditors ought to take it and be grateful for not getting what they deserve, which is nothing.

It's not like the Poles will blow the money on caviar and champagne instead. The country is currently putting itself through the moral equivalent of boot camp, trying to turn a flabby socialist system into a lean, productive free-market economy.

Prices for necessities have soared, unemployment has appeared, Polish factories have had to learn to compete with foreign producers and living standards have declined. Few countries, if any, have ever attempted a more ambitious transformation, which could serve as a model for all the former Soviet colonies, as well as the Soviet Union itself.

Just as the United States had a stake in turning postwar Germany and Japan into prosperous democracies, the entire West, and particularly Western Europe, will profit if Poland's experiment succeeds. Nobody will get rich if it fails.

Lech Walesa was elected president last year partly because the people weren't wildly enthusiastic about their diet of austerity. Skeptics figured that the commitment to frugality and free markets would end about five minutes after he was inaugurated. They were wrong. He retained the finance minister who had designed Poland's shock therapy, and he appointed a prime minister whose main criticism of his predecessor's economic policies is that they weren't drastic enough.

Though the reforms are already starting to yield results, they may not come fast enough to prevent the populace from insisting that they be abandoned. Building capitalism out of nothing is hard, but it's especially hard if the profits go to appease Western creditors instead of to finance investments that will improve life in Poland.

If the money in question had been borrowed by a government elected by the Polish people, the West would have every right to demand full repayment. In fact, it went to prop up a nasty regime imposed on them by an imperial neighbor. The Poles have already paid once in suffering; demanding cash reimbursement as well is really too much.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Thursday, March 21, the 80th day of 1991. There are 285 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On March 21, 1965, more than 3,000 civil rights demonstrators led by the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. began their march from Selma to Montgomery, Ala.

On this date:

In 1685, composer Johann Sebastian Bach was born in Eisenach, Germany.

In 1790, Thomas Jefferson reported to President Washington in New York as the new secretary of state.

In 1804, the French civil code, the "Code Napoleon," was adopted.

In 1871, journalist Henry M. Stanley began his famous expedition to Africa to locate the missing Scottish missionary, David Livingstone.

In 1918, during World War I, Germany launched the Somme Offensive, hoping to break through the Allied line before American reinforcements could arrive.

Sorry, but it's time to gloat

Announcing the war in the Gulf had been won, President Bush, our esteemed and victorious commander in chief, said, "... It is not a time to gloat."

That's like telling Georgia Tech football fans, whose team won a national championship last season after a lot of years of being kicked around, they couldn't raise a glass and a finger and proclaim, "We're number 1."

Mr. President, Korea was a flop. Vietnam was worse. Iran took our citizens hostages and we couldn't do anything about it.

And for how many years now have we turned on our television sets to see Arab masses in the streets chanting anti-American slogans, burning our flag and daring us to take one step in their direction?

Mr. President, with all due respect, I think there ought to be a national day of gloating.

Let the kids out of school. Close down work places. Cancel the National Hockey League schedule. Let's have parades and victory celebrations and get down to some real old-fashioned gloating.

We've got a lot to gloat about.

Saddam Hussein, my foot. (I can't say you-know-what in a family newspaper.)

He's a brilliant military commander? He's started two wars in the last ten years and lost them both.

Lewis Grizzard

That blustering, bull-headed, blood-thirsty booger of the burning sands.

He amassed the fourth largest army in the world and it took us one hundred hours on the ground to chop it to pieces.

I like what Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf said of President Meathhead.

"As far as Saddam Hussein being a great military strategist, he is neither a strategist nor is he schooled in operational arts, nor is he a general, nor is he a soldier ..."

Sounds like somebody assessing any number of Atlanta Falcons head coaches.

And the courageous Iraqi soldiers.

What a bunch of wimps. A television reporter was describing a dead and very flat Iraqi soldier smeared on a street in Kuwait City. "He appeared to have been run over by one of his own tanks in a hurry to get out of the city."

In that same report, somebody talked about Iraqi soldiers going into homes in Kuwait City looking for sheets or anything white with which to make flags of surrender.

Some Iraqi troops even surrendered to the press. That's like Hulk Hogan saying "Uncle" in a wrestling match with Regis Philbin.

And there were those grimy, beaten Iraqi prisoners raising their fists in the sky chanting, "George Bush! George Bush!"

If only the Ayatollah had lived long enough to have witnessed that.

We're back. We're strong. We're united. And we have stopped taking it and we've finally dished it out.

Go ahead and gloat all you want, is all I say. Gloat, cheer and give thanks it's over "over there" and we, by God, whipped their Iraqi (Al-bagoo-gahs), the Iraqi word for you-know-what.

Sorry, Mr. President. But it's party time.

Will Bush get a new vice president?

By CHUCK STONE

After the euphoric victory in which we have all been wallowing, Americans are now shifting speculative concerns to more weighty gossip. Will George Bush retain Dan Quayle as vice president? If not, whom will he anoint?

Right now, the odds overwhelmingly favor incumbent Denny Dimwit. Not because he is qualified, but because there is no compelling reason to dump the darling of the conservatives. After all, he can still count to 10, he has dutifully carried out his few assignments and he has been impenachably loyal to his president.

George Bush understands loyalty and appreciates it more. For eight years, he labored in Reagan's vineyards, supporting his president's Neanderthal conservatism even when he knew better. The Yale Phi Beta Kappa also stoically suffered the foolishness of his president, who is living proof that a college degree does not guarantee intelligence. In the first two years of the Bush administration, Quayle hasn't yet had the opportunity to compile a record of loyalty comparable to Bush's during his eight years with Reagan. But he's working on it.

Still, overriding all positive factors in Quayle's behalf is the "V" factor. The way things look right now, George Bush could pick Godzilla as a running mate and humiliate the Democrats in 1992.

That also means, of course, that Bush can get away with reappointing Quayle. Still, gossip tantalizes, even when it becomes reductio ad absurdum. Americans are having a field day, weighing the odds on potential Quayle replacements.

One reason for all the speculation may be the national, bipartisan negative perception of Quayle. Two days before the Persian Gulf War ended, a Washington Post poll found that 49 percent of those polled felt that Quayle was unqualified to be president. Granted, this does signify a small improvement: Two years ago, 52 percent said he was unqualified. Begin with a presidential recitation: George Washington, Andrew Jackson, Ulysses S. Grant, Zachary Taylor, Rutherford B. Hayes, Benjamin Harrison and Dwight D. Eisenhower. All of them were generals, none of them were previously vice presidents, but most of them were reasonably good presidents with legislative achievements.

Following in their lustrous footsteps are two of the more electrifying generals in American history—Colin L. Powell, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, and H. Norman Schwarzkopf, commander of Desert Storm.

Either one would be an unqualified improvement over Quayle. Both are military scholars, top-notch administrators and, best of all, very likable persons.

I think, however, that Powell has a decided edge, and this is not just ethnic propinquity talking. He has a more politically adept style and exudes a high comfort level. As a black man, his vice presidency would help the Republicans make history—history from which the Democrats might never recover.

But even with patriotic fever rushing over the country like flood waters and politicians of both parties gushing over Powell's military leadership, the majority of Americans are still not quite ready to accept a black vice president who would be in line to be the GOP presidential candidate in 1996.

Stormin' Norman has his negatives, which include a temperamental disinclination to suffer fools gladly. Yet, Schwarzkopf did not reach a top rung of the military ladder by ignoring methods of conciliation.

And there is one strong reason to make a switch: If Bush does decide to stand fast with Quayle, the 1996 Republican primaries will be a party-shredding donnybrook.

But back to ethnic propinquity. If the lightning of enlightenment somehow should strike Bush and he does choose Powell, this Democrat will change his registration—assuming the Democrats don't nominate Virginia Gov. Doug Wilder.

NASA plans to cut $8 billion, delay launch of space station

(AP Laserphoto)

NASA's proposed space station, shown in this artist's rendering released in 1986, is due for some scaling back due to congressional pressure, officials say.

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bowing to congressional demands for economy, NASA is cutting $8 billion from its proposed space station project, reducing its size and delaying completion until the year 2000.

The cutback design, to be made public today, was denounced in advance by scientists who see it as a waste of money. Sen. Albert Gore, D-Tenn., said his space subcommittee will do "some intense work on this project" when hearings begin next month.

Engineers for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration spent five feverish months in the effort to trim costs that already exceed $3.8 billion for studies and prototype parts since President Reagan proposed the station in 1984.

Congress last year ordered NASA to slash $6 billion from the project through 1996 and put a yearly cap of $2.6 billion on spending. In an in-house study, the agency found that just maintaining the station in Earth orbit would require up to 3,700 hours of space walks by astronauts.

The new design envisions cutting that back drastically through snap-together trusses that have electrical and other components built in. The living and working modules also would be outfitted on the ground, rather than in space.

The space station that Reagan proposed — and named "Freedom" — was to have been put into orbit by 1994 at a cost of $8 billion. The price, however, continued to escalate with the years, to $38.3 billion most recently. The first construction flight was scheduled for 1995.

Under the new plans, the cost would be $30 billion and the first launch of station parts aboard the space shuttle would be in the first three months of 1996.

Most recently, NASA had planned to have the station assembled by June 1996 to the point where astronauts would visit it periodically to check out experiments and start new ones. The new "man-tended capability" now is scheduled in the second quarter of 1997.

Plans were to have eight astronauts begin living in the station in July 1997. Under the redesign, the station will accommodate only four astronauts — and not until the year 2000.

The overall length has been reduced by nearly half a football field — from 493 feet to 353 feet — and the living and working modules from 44 feet to 27 feet.

Under the old plan, 34 flights would have been required to complete the station. That number has been cut to between 23 and 26, at the rate of three a year.

The redesign was submitted to the National Research Council's Space Studies board, which said last Friday that it "does not meet the basic research requirements of the two principal scientific disciplines for which it is intended."

Vice President Dan Quayle met with members of Congress on space committees Wednesday in an effort to sell the new design. He made public a letter to NASA Administrator Richard Truly that took note of the grumbling among scientists.

"This argument is not entirely appropriate," Quayle wrote. "The space station unquestionably can make a valuable research contribution — a contribution that becomes more cost-effective in the latter stages of the station's development."

Those requirements are life sciences research to study how humans would adapt to long space flights and microgravity, which uses near-zero gravity conditions to purify chemicals, grow crystals and create new medicines.

The office of White House science adviser Allan D. Bromley also counseled against the station, according to Space News, an industry newspaper.

The newspaper said it obtained a report from Bromley's office saying that plans don't "come close to justifying the cost and effort required to build, deploy and operate the station." The office would not confirm the statement.

"President Bush and I are prepared to make the commitment to build a permanently manned space station in this decade," Quayle said. "We are convinced of its merit."

Automakers say higher gasoline prices only way to achieve oil savings

By H. JOSEF HEBERT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The price of gasoline has to increase sharply if significant oil savings are to be achieved from automobiles, the nation's car makers contend. Building more fuel-efficient vehicles won't do the job, they say.

"Higher (fuel economy) standards in an era of cheap gasoline is self-defeating policy," Ronald Bolz, vice president for product strategy for Chrysler Corp., told the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee on Wednesday.

Peter J. Pestillo, a vice president at Ford Motor Co., took a similar view, arguing that as long as gasoline is cheap, consumers will refuse to buy fuel-efficient automobiles that may be more expensive and smaller.

New engine technology may add $200 to $400 to the cost of a car and improve fuel efficiency by 3 percent, Pestillo said. "At today's gasoline prices it would take 10 to 20 years of fuel savings for the customer to recoup the initial investment."

The testimony came a day after the Senate Commerce Committee approved legislation that would require automakers to improve the average fuel economy of their new car fleets by 40 percent to 40 miles per gallon by the year 2001. Today's cars attain an average of about 27.5 mpg.

Automakers claim they cannot meet the standards of the bill without halting production of large sedans and fuel-guzzling sports cars. Sen. Richard Bryan, D-Nev., chief sponsor of the bill, maintains that other technological improvements can achieve the fuel efficiency improvements.

The automakers received some support Wednesday from the Office of Technology Assessment, which provides independent analysis of scientific matters to Congress.

An OTA report presented to the Senate energy panel concluded that while significant mileage improvements may be possible, manufacturers would be unlikely to meet the 40 mpg standard required by the Bryan bill.

Only if manufacturers are allowed to exempt large numbers of cars through credits such as for alternative fuel systems or twin airbags might the 40 mpg average be achieved, said Steven Plotkin, an OTA specialist on fuel economy.

He said, however, that current technologies should allow greater fuel efficiency improvements than automakers are willing to acknowledge without dramatically making cars smaller. With additional technologies such as more aerodynamic designs, lighter engines and advanced transmissions the fleet averages could increase to 38 mpg by the turn of the century, according to the OTA analysis.

Plotkin conceded those improvements would require manufacturers to make "a major industrial shift" that would be exceedingly expensive and likely result in higher car costs. These costs could be recovered within the average time a person owns a car only if gasoline prices were $2.50 to $3 a gallon, he said.

Without additional government requirements, automakers are likely to increase fuel economy to a fleet average of about 33 mpg by 2001, Plotkin said. But he added that those levels will not be achieved if manufacturers choose to increase car sizes or performance because of consumer demand.

The Bush administration strongly opposes the Bryan bill, but administration officials have indicated they might go along with a proposal by Sen. Bennett Johnston, D-La., chairman of the energy committee.

Johnston's legislation, part of a broader energy package, would require that higher auto mileage standards be considered, but leaves it to the Transportation Department to set actual fuel economy requirements.

Court of Appeals receives petition for mayor recall

DONNA (AP) — A group seeking to recall a South Texas mayor has taken its case to the 13th Court of Appeals in Corpus Christi.

The petition to recall Donna Mayor Hector Casiano was rejected Tuesday by the city secretary, who said she was unable to determine the number of registered voters in Donna.

Acting City Secretary Eileen Ayala said she could not certify the 1,564 signatures on the petition. The Lower Rio Grande Valley city has about 12,000 residents.

McAllen Attorney Jim Selman III, representing the group that circulated the petition, took the case Wednesday to the 13th Court of Appeals in Corpus Christi. Selman filed a motion Wednesday to have the court order the city to accept the petition circulated by United Citizens for Donna.

UCD contends that the petition contains about 250 more than the 20 percent of registered voters required to force a recall election.

Selman has said UCD seeks to remove the mayor because the group believes he abuses power and is "soft on the drug problem in Donna and rendered the police department ineffective."

After two months in the Senate, Wellstone's splash is more splat

By JOAN MOWER
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Talk about a political miscalculation. Sen. Paul Wellstone, D-Minn., came to the nation's capital determined to make a splash with his outspoken views against the Persian Gulf War, his unorthodox style, his liberal agenda and his flair for self-promotion.

Just two months later, the wonderkind of Minnesota politics finds himself — like most freshman senators — on the cutting edge of irrelevance in the country's most exclusive club and plummeting in popularity in his home state.

"He has become an object of contempt, even for some who voted for him," Dane Smith wrote in the Minneapolis Star-Tribune. Indeed, the latest Star Tribune-KSTP-TV Minnesota Poll found that a scant 35 percent approved of Wellstone's performance.

Understandably for a freshman, Wellstone has had little impact on legislation since he's been here. The only bill he's introduced deals with a private immigration matter.

Instead, Wellstone has made his mark on the publicity front. He has: •Been branded a "chicken —" by President Bush after he asked the president at a White House reception to tread cautiously in the Persian Gulf, according to a published report.

•Angered Vice President Dan Quayle during Wellstone's Jan. 3 swearing-in ceremony by publicly handing him a videotape of a Minnesota town meeting where the Bush administration's war policies were criticized.

•Infuriated conservatives by saying he despises Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., because of his "racist politics."

•Flouted Senate tradition by having former Vice President Walter Mondale introduce him at his swearing-in instead of Republican David Durenberger, Minnesota's senior senator.

•Riled some Vietnam vets by staging an anti-Persian Gulf War event in front of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial.

Wellstone's flashy opposition to the war and his erroneous prediction that it would turn into a "mistake of catastrophic proportions," haven't been sitting well with many Minnesota voters.

But the man who ignored conventional political wisdom and pulled off the big surprise of the 1990 Senate races by unseating a well-financed incumbent, Rudy Boschwitz, has no regrets for his stand.

"It is wonderful news that the war is over no matter what your position on the policy," he said Feb. 26. "While I am pleased by the minimal loss of American lives, I am at the same time saddened by the tremendous loss of life suffered by the Iraqi people."

Sure, he concedes, his war stand has abbreviated his Senate honeymoon. But the feisty, 5-foot-5 1/2-inch former wrestler, is moving on to the domestic issues he feels so passionately about: the environment, universal health care, a new energy policy, education, child care, Indian rights and campaign reform.

What remains to be seen is whether he can translate his abrasive, take-no-prisoners style of politics into legislative results in the I-scratch-your-back, you-scratch-my-back Senate.

A former professor at Minnesota's Carlton College, Wellstone said he's eager to learn Senate procedures because they are important to getting things done.

But he said he has no intention of changing his tactics.

"I'm a rock-the-boat politician," Wellstone said in an interview in his office.

To demonstrate his money is where his mouth is, Wellstone said he won't accept honoraria and will decline political contributions of more than $100 once his campaign debt is paid.

Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., a conservative Republican, predicted Wellstone would change his ways.

"You can be highly partisan, get nothing done and cry yourself to sleep, or you can compromise," Simpson said. "This ain't no campaign."

Wellstone has already banded with senators expected to be his natural allies in the liberal wing of the Democratic Party, joining with Massachusetts Democratic Sens. Edward Kennedy and John Kerry to urge aid to El Salvador be cut.

Larry Sabato, a University of Virginia political science professor, said Wellstone was "never a likely candidate to be a member of the club, but he faces the risk of being marginalized if he doesn't attempt to temper his image."

"It's not so much that he is a liberal — it's that he is unorthodox and brash," Sabato said.

With his curly black hair, impish demeanor and strong resemblance to singer Paul Simon, the 46-year-old Wellstone looks more like an aging hippie than a distinguished solon as he roams the halls of the Capitol.

"Call me Paul," he insists to a flabbergasted Senate page.

Wellstone's informality and his fervor brought him spontaneous applause and a standing ovation from American Indians recently.

"I am not arrogant and there is much that I need to learn," he told the Indians.

"I really believe in politics that empowers people, particularly people who have been excluded," said Wellstone, who supported Jesse Jackson in his 1988 presidential bid and was once arrested in a bank for demonstrating over farm foreclosures.

For some, Wellstone is a breath of fresh air in a place where tradition often reigns.

"He is one of the most interesting characters to come to Washington in the 18 years I have been here," said Robert Beckel, a Democratic consultant who worked in Jimmy Carter's White House.

With nearly six years remaining in his first term, Beckel said Wellstone has plenty of time make up for any early mistakes.

Meanwhile, Wellstone said he's having a ball at his new job — and he's not one of those lawmakers griping about the $101,900 annual pay.

"I think it's great," he said, "I'm making more than twice what I made as a college professor."

World faces threat of international terrorism as never before

By JOY ASCHENBACH
National Geographic
For AP Newsfeatures

WASHINGTON — Never before has the world been as menaced by the threat of terrorism as it has been by the war in the Persian Gulf. The chilling fear it has instilled reaches far beyond the Middle East.

Since the start of Operation Desert Storm Jan. 16, more than 150 incidents of international terrorism have been reported worldwide.

"That's three times higher than normal. There's no other period like it," Joseph Reap of the State Department's Office of Counterterrorism said in late February.

Fears of terrorist attacks provoked by the Persian Gulf war shut down the Folies-Bergere music hall in Paris for two weeks.

Concerned for their safety, the U.S. Peace Corps pulled its volunteers out of Tunisia, Morocco, Mauritania and Pakistan.

The State Department issued travel advisories for 74 countries, the largest number ever announced in any one period. They are predominantly for the Middle East, North Africa and the eastern Mediterranean, including Greece and Turkey.

The Federal Aviation Administration put all 435 airports in the United States on highest alert — the first time "level-4" security has been executed across the nation. Passengers are warned that unattended baggage may be seized, searched and destroyed.

Andrews Air Force Base, home of the president's plane, was in "Terrorist Threat Condition Bravo," a sign at its main gate warned during the war. Andrews and other U.S. air bases are rarely in threat conditions, let alone the level-2 "bravo."

So far, international vigilance and the expulsion of Iraqi diplomats and agents from countries around the globe have kept terrorist attacks isolated and individually insignificant, says Robert H. Kupperman, a senior adviser at Washington's Center for Strategic and International Studies.

"There's been nothing spectacular. Iraqi-inspired incidents have been essentially nil," he tells National Geographic.

None of the major terrorist groups operating in the Middle East, including the deadly Abu Nidal, has taken credit for any incidents so far, the FBI reports.

The United States itself has not been attacked. But international terrorists most frequently target the United States and Israel, according to the State Department.

In 1990, U.S. businesses and government installations throughout the world were prime targets, accounting for 40 percent of the incidents.

"Bombing is the predominant method of terrorism, and businesses get the worst of it," Reap says. As security for diplomats and government and military facilities has tightened in the past decade, businesses, tourists and other non-official victims have become the likeliest targets.

The United States has formally designated six countries as sponsors of terrorism: Cuba, Iran, Iraq, Libya, North Korea and Syria. Iraq was added to the list after its Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait.

Modern terrorism, which experts say erupted between 1968 and 1970 with kidnappings in Latin America and airplane hijackings in the Middle East, has produced more than 11,700 incidents that have killed at least 7,951 people.

"International terrorism took off after 1979 with the rise of Islamic fundamentalism under the Ayatollah Khomeini," says geographer George J. Demko of Dartmouth College.

The State Department says global terrorism peaked between 1984 and 1988, with 862 incidents, including the bombing of Pan American Flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland, in which 270 people died.

International incidents dropped to 548 in 1990, primarily because the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) had formally renounced terrorism, and internal dissension defused Abu Nidal.

Terrorism still is concentrated in the Middle East and Latin America.

It has been declining in Europe and escalating in Asia.

"The European countries no longer tolerate terrorists. The French are rough on them," Kupperman says. The once-safe terrorist havens in Eastern Europe are being lost as those countries embrace democracy.

Terrorism's rise in Asia can be attributed to additional commerce there and the activities of the region's large Moslem populations, Kupperman explains. The Soviet Union may increasingly find itself a terrorist target as Moslem fundamentalists assert themselves in republics such as Azerbaijan.

The history of modern terrorism is haunted by notorious groups such as the Red Brigades in Italy; the Irish Republican Army (IRA) in Northern Ireland; the ETA, a separatist organization in Spain's Basque region.

Society plans to boost image of the dinosaur

BOSTON (AP) — Don Lessem was 5 when he saw something that finally made his parents look small — a giant skeleton of a Tyrannosaurus Rex in a New York museum.

"I was just amazed at this animal that I knew only from storybooks," Lessem said. "I was half scared out of my mind."

But the dinosaur was all wrong.

"The tail's too long, the body's too upright and the arms are just a guess," said Lessem, now 39 and founder of The Dinosaur Society, a non-profit group devoted to dinosaur science and education.

While dinosaurs make millions of dollars for merchandizers of products from toilet paper to pasta, dinosaur science is suffering a financial crisis, Lessem warned. And for too long, he said, people have been treated to an often inaccurate and simplistic picture of the extinct behemoths.

"We went from dinosaurs as slow, stupid animals to going overboard the other way where we think of them as fast-moving, hotblooded geniuses of their time," said Lessem of Waban, author of 16 dinosaur books for children and two for adults. "The truth is, they were both."

Lessem and paleontologists in this country and overseas founded The Dinosaur Society this year to set the record straight. Research and a kids' monthly newspaper, Dino Times, will help combat the misleading images, Lessem said.

"This stuff is unabashedly advertised as museum quality and educational," said David Weishampel, paleontologist and professor of anatomy at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore. "We grownups can distinguish where science ends and fantasy begins, but kids can't."

The American Museum of Natural History in New York, where Lessem saw his dinosaur skeleton, plans to repair its Tyrannosaurus Rex over the next several years.

There are fewer than 30 researchers exploring for dinosaurs worldwide today on a total budget of less than $1 million a year, according to the society. Group members plan to raise another $1 million for research.

The society includes dinosaur experts from China, Poland, Australia and Great Britain, among them British scientist Sir David Attenborough.

Weishampel said he realized the society was needed when he took his two young daughters to a cartoon movie featuring dinosaurs.

"The dinosaurs were portrayed as cute, fat creatures with Elmer Fudd heads and little ears that stick out," Weishampel said.

Carolyn Boccella Bagin shows some of the forms in her office at American Institutes for Research in Washington this week. Her job is to transform the unintelligible paperwork of government and corporate clients into user-friendly models of simplicity and clarity.

Lone crusader attempts to end forms written in 'gobbledygook'

By ROBERT M. ANDREWS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Carolyn Boccella Bagin is a lonely crusader for plain English in a world that speaks gobbledygook.

Her enemy is the growing avalanche of badly written forms, unintelligible letters and confusing documents that drive millions of Americans nearly bonkers every day. The enemy, she says, is everywhere.

College students can't understand the loan applications they're supposed to fill out. The elderly are stumped by insurance claims. Telephone bills are a puzzle. Sweepstakes entries are verbal jungles of legal jargon.

Think those Form 1040s from the tax people are a headache? Try tackling Form 171, the accordion-like federal job application that's a bureaucratic nightmare in small, green type.

"If you have the persistence to fill out this form, you ought to get the job anyway," Ms. Bagin says.

A former high school English teacher from suburban Philadelphia, Ms. Bagin is director of the Document Design Center at the private American Institutes of Research.

Her job is to transform the unintelligible paperwork of government and corporate clients into user-friendly models of simplicity and clarity.

"What's wrong with being direct and clear?" she asks. "Why isn't simplicity the goal?"

The center has redesigned Pennsylvania Electric's customer bills and Citicorp's collection letters. One of its biggest projects was a top-to-bottom rewrite of the owner's manual for Ford Taurus automobiles.

That job was commissioned after a senior Ford executive couldn't understand the old manual's instructions for setting the digital clock in his new car.

His frustration is shared by many other Americans, especially the elderly, according to a survey Ms. Bagin conducted last year for Modern Maturity, the bimonthly magazine of the American Association of Retired Persons.

"The forms we now use would make the Marquis de Sade wild with envy," a Florida woman wrote about her insurance carrier's paperwork.

"I've reached an age when Chinese puzzles are no longer any fun," another respondent wrote.

Complaining of small type, one woman wrote: "I've just noticed a teensy-weensy statement in one margin that says something about a felony. When I'm arrested, maybe someone can read it to me along with my rights."

Some of the nearly 4,000 respondents sent examples of outrageous forms, including one from the Social Security Administration that was studded with boxes labeled "SAC" or "EMY" and carried such perplexing commands as "Enter COA in TID block."

Another, a Medicaid form, gave instructions in green ink that virtually disappeared in their green-colored boxes.

Ms. Bagin says many forms are incomprehensible because they are written for the convenience of their authors — lawyers, engineers, marketing executives — without regard for those who are answering the questions.

She has a suspicion that some form-writers deliberately avoid asking simple questions because they might look stupid. "So they cloud the issue to appear smart, complex and educated, and to add some mystery to their profession," she says.

How can they public fight gobbledygook?

"Complain, and complain loudly," Ms. Bagin advises. "Pick up the phone and argue about it. Speak to the people who gave you the forms, speak to their bosses, speak to the CEOs (chief executive officers). The worst thing is to do nothing."

Law of the wild can lead through court

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mountain climbing and white water rafting may be scary to the novice, but experts have something to fear, too — personal injury lawsuits if an experience or a piece of equipment leads to tragedy.

National Park officials are keeping danger signals up in their areas and their policy manuals, hoping to head off multimillion-dollar jury awards, although some say the awards flood may have crested.

"We are definitely putting up more warning signs," said Jack M. Morehead, associate director of operations at the National Park Service. "We're making sure all roads are built to standard — more so than in the past."

The service also continues to require sizable liability insurance policies for private guides in potentially hazardous activities from horseback riding to river running and mountain climbing, Morehead said.

"This puts a lot of small operators out of business," he said. "They can't afford that kind of insurance."

And the fact that an injured person may collect from a guide's insurance company doesn't prevent the victim from suing the government as well, Morehead said.

Insurance costs have skyrocketed in recent years, said Dan Ducich, senior vice president and chief financial officer of REI, the nationwide recreational equipment marketer based in Kent, Wash. REI's insurance costs were $150,000 in 1984, and about $800,000 last year, he said.

Such costs make businesses think twice before bringing out an improved product, fearing that a lawyer may one day portray innovation as recklessness, Ducich said.

"Until someone does something stupid with something, you don't really know how that could have happened," he said.

The risk of huge settlements also reduces the number of companies willing to supply such products as helmets, he said.

One key legal issue is the doctrine of reasonable implied assumption of risk — "that you may get hurt if you play, and that's nobody's fault but the participant," said John E. Fagan, a Tahoe City, Calif., lawyer who represents ski industry clients.

Courts had been weakening that principle by tending to rule that operators were negligent in providing for safety, he said. But in recent years, courts have been swinging back, he said. "The last two years have been rather favorable in that regard," Morehead said. "The court has found people have to assume a certain amount of knowledge that, if you stand on a high-peak in the middle of a thunderstorm, you're going to get zapped."

Fagan and Morehead attribute this to increasingly skilled and specialized defense lawyers.

To decrease liability, businesses need to do more to educate people about risks they assume, to increase participants' skill in their activities, and to be consistent in quality control of products, Ducich said.

Industry officials can protect themselves with clear releases in which the participant agrees not to hold the industry or officials liable, Fagan says.

The bottom line probably is that we are not more litigious than ever, said personal injury specialist Larry E. Coben of Philadelphia. "There are a lot of people who suffer injury who still do not bring lawsuits."

Instead, he believes, people are more safety-conscious, and expect the things they do as well as the equipment they use to be designed with safety in mind.

Video technology hits the road — in a car

By VIDEO MAGAZINE
For AP Newsfeatures

Watching videos while driving is impossible. In fact, in some states it's illegal. But only one person at a time can drive. This leaves any passengers free to do other things, such as enjoy video entertainment on the car or minivan's video system.

As strange as it may sound, says the current issue of Video magazine, car video was an inevitable development. One factor is that people are spending more time on the road, be it either for business or pleasure. And, considering the popularity of video and video technology it makes sense that they'd want to take what they enjoy with them. Enter car video.

Car video systems are permanent installations in cars or minivans, in the same way sound systems are. They consist of the same basic equipment that's found in home video setups, but there are differences.

First, the videocassette recorder — which plays regular-sized videotapes is smaller than normal. This is because it has to fit in the tight space between the front seats. The monitors have 3- to 5-inch liquid crystal screens and are mounted either on the VCR between the seats or on the interior side panels.

What does a car video system cost?

The only one that's presently on the market is by Hitachi and costs $2,590. For that price, consumers get a tiny VHS VCR, a 5-inch liquid crystal display monitor and an infrared remote control. Both Toshiba and JVC plan on introducing car video systems in the near future.

Systems can be as complex as the imagination and budget allow. For example, watching movies isn't the only thing these systems are good for. Some owners have installed the popular Nintendo video game system, while others have outfitted their vehicles with separate headphone-equipped video systems in the front and rear.

Anyone who's interested in installing such a system needs to find a reputable car electronics specialist.

In addition to installing the system so that it produces a quality picture, the specialist will also have to know how to set up the audio side of the system. This will compensate for tricky vehicle acoustics.

Finally, drivers won't be able to enjoy this new technology. For safety reasons, most states prohibit positioning a video monitor where a driver can see it.

Passover traditions vary; message does not

By MARY MacVEAN
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Of all the feasts in the Jewish holiday year, Passover meals seem to taste best, perhaps not solely because of the food.

"It seems that Passover has a special character in the Jewish mind," said Rabbi Marc Angel of the Spanish Portuguese Temple in New York. "When you eat together and you're happy, food always tastes better."

On Friday, millions of American Jews, and Jews the world over, will sit down to Passover dinners likely to include chicken soup, gefilte fish and roast chicken. A minority of Jews, however, called Sephardim, share a culinary heritage more exotic.

More than 100 people on each of two nights will share Seders in the Sephardic tradition — of fritatas and artichokes and salmon — at Capsouto Freres Restaurant to raise money to help rebuild homes in Israel damaged by Iraqi Scud missiles during the Persian Gulf War.

Five years ago, the Capsoutos held a Seder to help rebuild Turkey's largest temple, ruined in a terrorist attack in 1986 that left 24 people dead.

The benefit Seders became tradition. "It becomes one big family," said Jacques Capsouto, oldest of the three brothers who own the restaurant.

Tables are rearranged for family dining; no one eats at a table for one or two on Passover, which marks the exodus of the Israelites from slavery in Egypt. In fleeing, they had no time to let their bread rise; hence, no leavening is eaten during the eight-day holiday. An unleavened bread, matzo, is probably the best-known Passover food.

"It's a spring ritual of sorts. A birthday for the Jewish people," Samuel Capsouto said.

"You do the spring cleaning — paint the house, wash the curtains ... to make the house kosher for Passover," Jacques Capsouto said. When they were children, he said, they often ate meals in the halls just before Passover so the family's apartment would stay clean.

The Capsoutos moved from Egypt in 1956 to Lyons, France, and in 1961 to New York. Ten years ago, they opened their sunny French restaurant.

This year, the Capsoutos are providing their restaurant and the food. Each diner is asked to donate at least $75 to be sent to Israel. The Seder is not kosher, Jacques said, because they'd have to close the restaurant for a week to clean and prepare.

There are an estimated 200,000 to 250,000 Sephardic Jews in this country, with concentrations in New York, Miami, Los Angeles and Seattle, said Angel, who grew up in Seattle.

Most of the 6 million American Jews are Ashkenazim, tracing their roots to Eastern Europe. Sephardic Jews are descended from people forced out of Spain in 1492, during the Inquisition, moving mostly to southern Europe, North Africa and the Middle East.

For so small a group, spread across the country, it can be difficult to maintain traditions, Angel said.

"But Sephardim are traditional people," said Angel, whose ancestors came from Turkey and the island of Rhodes. "It is a very strong culture. People feel an intense pride in it and love of it, so it does have a way of making its way through the generations."

The meaning of Passover is the same for all Jews; diversity is seen in food, music and other cultural differences.

"Sephardic traditions are very influenced by their proximity to Muslim areas. You have saffron, things like dates and figs, which are much harder to come by if you are in Poland," said Ellen Freudenheim, an author who writes about Brooklyn, home of a Syrian Jewish community.

One problem, said Ruth Serels, who was born in Morocco and lives in Scarsdale, N.Y., is that she can't always find the herbs and spices she likes and still keep kosher for Passover.

"But for some reason, the food is delicious. It really is. If I cooked that way the rest of the year, no one in my family would eat it," she said.

Ashkenazic Jews do not eat legumes during Passover, citing the Passover dietary laws. But as a staple in the Middle East, legumes are eaten at Sephardic Seders. Sephardic Jews also tend to use a wider variety of herbs and spices, including cumin, coriander and saffron.

At Capsouto Freres, the Capsoutos' mother, Eva, taught the chef Passover food prepared by her mother. There will be vegetable fritatas, stewed artichoke hearts, boiled eggs, poached salmon, baked okra, green beans and a Sephardic casserole called mina, made of strips of softened matzo layered with potatoes and cheese.

The focus of the Seder table is the Seder plate, which holds symbolic foods such as a lamb shank bone, for the lamb the slaves sacrificed before escaping Egypt, and haroset, a sweet fruit mixture made to look like the mortar the slaves used to build the Pharaoh's cities.

Mrs. Capsouto said her haroset is made only with apples and dates. "The simple one is delicious."

But that sets off a discussion, in French and English, finally concluded by Samuel, who laughs and says, "Sometimes we talk to the haroset and add a little wine."

Mrs. Serels makes hers from apples, wine, cinnamon and nuts. "We use all all kinds, walnuts, almonds, hazelnuts, or whatever nuts you get your hands to," she said.

Most Ashkenazic Jews include horseradish on the Seder plate to remind diners of the bitterness of slavery. Sephardim generally use a bitter lettuce or herb.

The holiday that celebrates freedom carries particular poignancy, coming so soon after the Persian Gulf War. "There might be a different feeling this year because what has happened is a reawakening of a vulnerability because of what has happened in the war," Albert Capsouto said.

"When you see Israeli Jews carrying gas masks, it brings to mind what happened in the Holocaust," Jacques Capsouto said.

"This year," he said, "the Jews are much closer."

Planting peas gives feeling of spring

By GEORGE BRIA

POUND RIDGE, N.Y. (AP) — If you can't wait for spring to get out in the garden, plant peas. Hereabouts, in southern New York, we do it traditionally on St. Patrick's Day, March 17, looking for a first harvest in early June.

Such earliness, plus great taste and nutritiousness, make peas a garden favorite in much of the country. Growing them yourself, you enjoy them at their best — before they quickly turn starchy.

The "snap pea," introduced a few years ago, is edible raw — both pod and full-grown seeds — a major addition to salads.

Unfortunately, green peas — or English peas, as they're also known — won't prosper in the heat of the Deep South and some Western states. But Southern gardeners find consolation in another delicious legume, the cowpea, or black-eyed pea.

For thousands of years, dry peas, like lentils, were a humble food, celebrated in the rhyme, "Pease porridge hot, pease porridge cold, pease porridge in the pot, nine days old." The fresh peas — our garden peas — came into vogue at aristocratic tables in Europe in the 16th and 17th centuries.

French King Louis XIV's second wife, Madame de Maintenon, wrote in 1696 that peas had become "both a fashion and a madness." She said, "some ladies, even after having supped at the Royal Table, and well supped too, returning to their own homes, at the risk of suffering from indigestion, will again eat peas before going to bed."

In contrast to this frivolity, the cowpea has a somber past, coming to the Americas from Africa as food in slave ships bound for Jamaica.

Peas are a simile for look-alike. But a 19th-century Austrian monk, Gregor Johann Mendel, achieved immortality through their differences. Crossing different varieties of peas from his cloister garden, Mendel charted the course of inherited traits in a major contribution to genetics.

Both the recently developed snap pea and the older snow pea are edible pod and all. But don't confuse them. The snow pea should be harvested when the seeds are tiny, unlike the snap pea's. But both varieties are a boon to gardeners with small space.

You need a sizable garden for realistic, dinner-size harvests of standard shelling peas whose tough pods you discard.

Garden peas come in numerous varieties. The National Gardening Association lists 38. But they're all easy to grow and you do it the same way regardless of variety.

You sow the first crop in a well-drained site when the ground is workable, testing it with a spading fork to see if the cold has loosened its grip. If your site tends to stay soggy in early spring, you might try building raised beds in the fall.

In planting, place the seeds two inches apart in a furrow about 1 1/2 inches deep, then cover with soil, tamping firmly. Peas need a sweet soil, attainable by spreading wood ashes or lime.

Once you get them planted, don't worry if the weather turns wintry. The cold may slow germination, but won't stop it. I've seen the garden covered with fresh snow after I sowed my peas, but they sprouted three weeks later.

The farther south you are, the earlier you plant. Thomas Jefferson, who prized peas and made many references to them in his garden writings, sowed them early in March in Virginia for harvest in late May.

Most peas need staking, but plants of dwarf varieties provide their own support. I use all-purpose black netting, available at nurseries and hardware stores. I attach it to five-foot metal stakes and plant the peas about a foot apart on both sides of the netting. Once the plants get attached to the supports, there's not much more to do except wait for the harvest.

Tall-growing varieties may profit from fertilizing, but generally peas are a light-feeding crop. In my area, fall peas may also be grown, sowing them in mid-August. But the spring pea is the favorite.

Over the years, I've settled on an old-timer named Lincoln as the best of the shelling kind, very reliable and with seven to nine peas per pod.

Snap peas are fine for salads, but the size of the harvest overwhelms me and they spoil unless picked promptly. I do better with the tiny snow peas. Lightly steamed, they're delicate and very elegant on the plate.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

No good way to tell sister her boyfriend is bad news

DEAR ABBY: My sister, "Jenny," is 20 years old. Her boyfriend is 17. They have been together almost a year. She says she's "in love" with him, and they started sleeping together last year.

A few months ago, he forced Jenny to have sex with him against her will. She told him it was rape. He said it was a misunderstanding. He apologized, and she took him back.

A couple of months later they had a big fight, and afterward he slept with another girl. He admitted he did it to make her mad, and she forgave him. They're still together!

Abby, I'm confused. I'm 19 years old and I thought people who loved each other were good to each other. I'm worried about my sister, but if I tell our mother, Jenny will never forgive me.

How can I get her to see this guy is no good? Jenny thinks that if you love someone you forgive him unconditionally. Please don't publish my name or my city. If Jenny knew I was writing, she'd be furious — but I don't know where to turn.

CONFUSED

DEAR CONFUSED: You appear to be far more mature than your older sister. The principle of unconditional forgiveness is admirable, provided neither party uses it to take advantage of the other. Such is not the case with Jenny and her boyfriend.

If Jenny is looking for a lasting romance, she will have to find someone more mature than a kid who takes what he wants, has no respect for women and is spiteful to boot. Tell your sister that unless she is very, very careful, she could wind up with a pregnancy, a sexually transmitted disease, or both. And her boyfriend is neither mature nor caring enough to accept responsibility for either.

CONFIDENTIAL TO THINKS HE'S A WINNER IN WEST PALM BEACH:

A winner says, "Let's find out"; a loser says, "Nobody knows."

A winner makes commitments; a loser makes promises.

A winner says, "I'm good, but not as good as I ought to be"; a loser says, "I'm not as bad as a lot of other people."

A winner credits his "good luck" for winning—even though it wasn't his good luck; a loser blames his "bad luck" for losing—even though it wasn't his bad luck.

A winner listens; a loser just waits until it's his turn to talk.

A winner respects those who are superior to him and tries to learn from them; a loser resents the superiority of others and tries to find chinks in their armor.

A winner does more than his job; a loser says, "I only work here."

A winner says, "I fell"; a loser says, "Somebody pushed me."

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) The negative effects of a past experience might dominate your thinking today and, instead of starting a new arrangement with a clean slate, you might begin with an old chip on your shoulder.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Someone you presently feel is just pretending to be a friend isn't really as bad as you think. This individual has many of the same faults and virtues you do.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) There's a possibility that you will not fully achieve all you set out to do today, because of inclinations to go off on tangents when success is within reach. Try to be consistent.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Caution and self-doubt are not similar, although you may think so today. Be on guard where necessary, but still have hope in your heart.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Financial involvements with friends could be rather tricky today, so be careful. This includes anything from business deals to simply splitting the tab for lunch.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) You could get in trouble today if you tell your mate you're going to do one thing and then do just the opposite. It's best you stick to the game plan agreed upon.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) You're a capable person, but today you might get involved in a task that is beyond your abilities. Your ego might not let you find a way to wiggle out.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) A friend with whom you've been having difficulties lately cannot be handled emotionally. You must try to reach this person logically if you hope to resolve a misunderstanding.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Even though you and your mate may have some disagreements today, they can readily be resolved. The only thing that would be unparadise is a deliberately broken promise.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) You're not likely to suffer from a lack of good intentions today. Where you might come up short, however, is in your ability to fulfill them. Your resolve will not be as strong as your rationalization.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Be careful not to squander your resources today, be they emotional or material. There is a probability you might not manage these two areas with your usual prudence.

UNLV is 15-point favorite over Utah in NCAA West Regional semi-final game

By JIM COUR
AP Sports Writer

SEATTLE (AP) — From his perspective of coming within two points of a national title two years ago, Seton Hall coach P.J. Carlesimo thinks UNLV can be beaten.

But Carlesimo quickly points out that the defending NCAA champions must cooperate in their own demise and that time is running out quickly.

"Vegas is the best team in the country," Carlesimo said Wednesday. "They have the best players. If they play as well as they're capable, nobody is going to beat them."

"But if they don't play as well as they're capable of playing, Vegas can be beaten."

The NCAA West Regional semifinals will be played tonight. Featuring Larry Johnson and Stacey Augmon, both projected as NBA lottery picks, No. 1-ranked UNLV (32-0) is a 15-point favorite to beat Utah (30-3).

In the other semifinal in the Kingdome, Seton Hall (24-8) will take on Arizona (28-6) at 5:10 p.m. PST. Arizona is favored by 3 1/2 points. The UNLV-Utah game will follow 30 minutes after the Seton Hall-Arizona contest ends.

Everybody expects to see UNLV against Arizona — Jerry Tarkanian against bitter coaching rival Lute Olson of the Wildcats — in the Regional final on Saturday.

UNLV destroyed Duke 103-73 in last year's NCAA championship game in Denver. Tarkanian, 60, says this year's UNLV team is better.

NBA teams are drooling at the prospects of landing Johnson and Augmon, a pair of 6-foot-7 forwards. Johnson is averaging 22.8 points and Augmon 17.0.

But UNLV's supermen looked human in its second-round game in Tucson, Ariz., last Sunday against Georgetown's 7-2 Dikembe Mutombo and 6-10 Alonzo Mourning. The Rebels finally prevailed 62-54.

The Rebels are averaging 99.5 points. Utah likes a much slower pace. Its opponents are averaging 63.7 points a game.

Rotund Utah coach Rick Majerus likes a half-court game.

"I expect Utah is going to be very patient," Tarkanian said. "I think they've been patient all year. I think they'll be extremely patient, probably maybe more so against us."

Of course, saying you're going to be patient against UNLV's withering full-court, man-to-man press and doing it are two different things. The Rebels don't let you be patient.

Their defense is led by guard Greg Anthony, who led the Rebels with 75 steals this season. UNLV had 369 steals this year, an average of 11.5 per game.

Majerus says Anthony's defense is as much a key to UNLV's success as the offense of Johnson and Augmon.

"We have to be careful when we pick our dribble up and be cautious as to when we put our dribble down," he said.

But Majerus says he believes the Utes, led by 6-10 forward Josh Grant, who is averaging 17.5 points, are capable of beating UNLV. And, he says he wouldn't mind some help from Georgetown coach John Thompson now that the Hoyas are sidelined.

"Everyone said Mourning and Mutombo were able to control the tempo of the game," Majerus said. "If you send me one of them, we're going to be in a lot better shape."

The Arizona-Seton Hall game matches the Wildcats' "Tucson Skyline" of 6-11 Brian Williams, 6-10 Sean Rooks and 7-foot Ed Stokes against a smaller Pirates' front line that includes 6-10 Anthony Avent.

Seton Hall's offense comes mainly from its backcourt. Sophomore shooting guard Terry Dehere scored a total of 54 points in first- and second-round tournament victories over Pepperdine and Creighton in Salt Lake City. Dehere is averaging 19.7 points and Avent 18.1.

Small forward Chris Mills is Arizona's leading scorer at 15.4 points.

Olson, 56, would like to have a crack at beating Tarkanian and UNLV on Saturday, but he's not sure if the Wildcats can beat the Big East tournament champions from South Orange, N.J.

"There isn't any game beyond Thursday night as far as we're concerned," Olson said. "It's a one-game season now."

Seton Hall played the biggest game in its basketball history in the Kingdome. The Pirates lost 80-79 to Michigan for the 1988-89 NCAA championship in Seattle.

"It's going to be a very interesting game," Avent said. "Arizona is bigger than we are, so it's going to be a very physical game."

Alabama's coach, Wimp Sanderson, probably will be staying up late, rerunning videotape, pondering matchups, putting new wrinkles into his offense and his forehead.

Richardson will do little of that sort. "I don't get involved in matchups," he says. "I'm not one of those chess-match types of coaches. I don't break down on video."

"I want to coach like nobody in America, none. I want to have my team be the only team that plays like we play. If everybody starts playing like me, I'll start walking."

"My guys don't have to worry about what the other team does. The key to our success is that nobody plays like us. They have to get ready for us."

For Richardson, the game itself is almost anticlimactic. His focus is on practice, having his team physically primed and mentally acute.

"The key to what we do is practice," he says. "That's where we put the hay in the barn."

Richardson's practices, says Arkansas center Oliver Miller, are "pure hell. We don't have any water breaks until the end."

Richardson's philosophy is to push his players to their limit of endurance so they in turn can wear out

Arkansas coach enjoys being different

Richardson, Razorbacks head into Round Three of NCAA's Southeast Regional Tourney

By ALAN TRUEX
Houston Chronicle

ATLANTA (AP) — Nolan Richardson looks bearish, his neck thick like that of a pro football defensive back, which he once was. His face thrusts forward, challenging.

There is nothing retiring in his manner; there is no interest in following the crowd.

"I skin the cat a little different," says the 49-year-old coach of the Arkansas Razorbacks, in an interview with the Houston Chronicle after Round 2 of the NCAA playoffs here.

"I'm a little odd. But I like being different." Being different is what Richardson is all about. His Razorbacks play a unique style of basketball. The constant running and all-out defensive pressure made a shambles of the Southwest Conference, which Arkansas now has departed.

The Razorbacks, No. 2 in the nation with the best record in school history, 33-3, are heading into Round 3 of the NCAA Southeast Regional. On Thursday night in Charlotte, they play Alabama, which will be one of their new rivals when they join the Southeastern Conference next year.

Alabama's coach, Wimp Sanderson, probably will be staying up late, rerunning videotape, pondering matchups, putting new wrinkles into his offense and his forehead.

Richardson will do little of that sort. "I don't get involved in matchups," he says. "I'm not one of those chess-match types of coaches. I don't break down on video."

"I want to coach like nobody in America, none. I want to have my team be the only team that plays like we play. If everybody starts playing like me, I'll start walking."

"My guys don't have to worry about what the other team does. The key to our success is that nobody plays like us. They have to get ready for us."

For Richardson, the game itself is almost anticlimactic. His focus is on practice, having his team physically primed and mentally acute.

"The key to what we do is practice," he says. "That's where we put the hay in the barn."

Richardson's practices, says Arkansas center Oliver Miller, are "pure hell. We don't have any water breaks until the end."

Richardson's philosophy is to push his players to their limit of endurance so they in turn can wear out their opponents.

Teams that are not accustomed to playing Arkansas-style ball are rarely able to adapt, although Alabama will have the benefit of three days of preparation.

Richardson admits his system can backfire, as it did in the NCAA Final Four last year. The mile-high altitude of Denver was unfavorable to full-court running.

Recalling his loss to Duke in the national semifinals, Richardson says: "We worked so hard on the defensive end that we had nothing left on the offensive end when it was time to put the game away."

"When you're playing 94 feet in that type of altitude, it took everything away from us."

But he feels better about his prospects this year, though he concedes Arkansas is not in the same class as No. 1 Nevada-Las Vegas, which he regards as an NBA team.

"I do think we have more people ready to play now than we had last year," Richardson says. "We have more quality, experienced depth."

And he also gets a lower altitude. The NCAA championship game this year will be in Indianapolis.

If the Hogs again make it to the Final Four, Richardson knows he will hear comments that it isn't coaching that got them there.

"There are those who think I don't know very much," he says. "When I win, people say it's because I have great players."

"But I like to think I know what I'm doing when I'm coaching, too. I know X's and O's as well as any man in this country."

If the Razorbacks sometimes appear disorganized, that is part of the plan.

"I don't know what we're doing most of the time," Richardson says. "I like it when people say we play out of control."

"I approach basketball like a street fight. I'm not into controlled boxing. Take a boxer out of the ring, and he might not have a chance against a street fighter."

Richardson doesn't claim his basketball philosophy is revolutionary. He credits Don Haskins, his coach at the University of Texas at El Paso (then Texas Western), for providing the basis of his system: relentless defense.

And he adds: "When I first saw John Wooden and Adolph Rupp, I thought they were way ahead of their time. Those guys were runners; they pressed, and they ran."

"I'm in love with my system," Richardson says, "but I'm not married to it. I'll pull out of the press and go to matchups sometimes."

He did that in Sunday's game against Arizona State in Atlanta when the Sun Devils successfully attacked and penetrated his press.

If he has to, Richardson can coach like anybody else. But that clearly is not his preference.

NIT setback still haunts Buckeyes

By MIKE NADEL
AP Sports Writer

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) — Ohio State's Treg Lee doesn't have fond memories of the Buckeyes' overtime loss to St. John's in the 1989 NIT.

"I don't remember much about that game except getting our rear ends kicked," Lee said. "I can just see visions of Jayson Williams slashing to the basket again and again."

Williams is no longer around. Neither is another Williams, Gary, who resigned as Ohio State's coach after that game to take the job at Maryland.

But plenty of other principals are still in place as top-seeded Ohio State (27-3) and fourth-seeded St. John's (22-8) prepare to meet again Friday night in the NCAA Midwest Regional.

Second-seeded Duke (28-7) and 11th-seeded Connecticut (20-10), who have also shared some recent history, play in Friday's other semifinal at the Silverdome.

Still at St. John's from the 1989 NIT championship squad are starters Malik Sealy, Jason Buchanan and Robert Werdann, and coach Lou Carnesecca.

Five 1989 Buckeyes are part of 1991's success: starters Lee, Perry Carter and Jamaal Brown, sixth-man Chris Jent and coach Randy Ayers. Ayers was Gary Williams' top assistant.

Jent, from Sparta, N.J., was recruited by St. John's.

"They sent me tapes of Chris Mullin to show how I'd fit into their offense, because he was left-handed," he said.

The sales pitch was wasted, however.

"I'm not much of a city kid," Jent said. "I had them in my top 12, but it never went past that. After Malik signed there, it wasn't an ideal situation for me."

While Jent has become one of the nation's best role-players, Sealy has become a star. The skinny, 6-8 forward is averaging 22.2 points and 7.9 rebounds.

"We played together at the Nike camp and again last summer at the World Games tryouts," Ohio State's Jim Jackson said. "He's an excellent post-up player and he has the good jumper to go with it."

Jackson, a sophomore who wasn't around in 1989, may be the difference this time.

The Big Ten player of the year has continued to shine in the NCAA tourney, averaging 20 points, eight rebounds and 5.5 assists as the Buckeyes beat Dayton State and Georgia Tech at Dayton, Ohio.

Ohio State and Connecticut have swapped places this year.

In 1990, Ohio State was one of the last teams chosen for the NCAA field. Connecticut was seeded first in the East Regional and got to play first- and second-round games at the Hartford Civic Center.

This season, while Ohio State is a favorite, Connecticut has the most losses and the worst winning percentage of any team left in the field. And only Eastern Michigan, 12th in the East, is seeded lower.

Mental fatigue may have caused referee to stop Tyson-Ruddock heavyweight fight

Steele was confused about length of 12-round bout

By ED SCHUYLER Jr.
AP Sports Writer

Richard Steele's reputation as a world-class referee is deserved.

His appointment to referee Mike Tyson's victory over Donovan "Razor" Ruddock, however, and his acceptance of it must be questioned.

The question has nothing to do with the integrity of the 47-year-old Steele, who has worked 84 world title fights. It has to do with a workload that would be unfair if forced upon a man.

Steele said after his controversial stoppage of the fight that he had only arrived back in Las Vegas three days before the bout after having refereed a fight in Japan.

That flight is a jet-lag special. But on the eve of the Tyson-Douglas match, Steele refereed the light-flyweight title bout between champion Michael Carbajal and Javier Varquez.

It was a fast-paced fight that went 12 rounds, and Steele was kept busy by the pace and the rough tactics of the two fighters.

Steele, a former light heavyweight on the club-fighter level, takes care of himself physically. There is such a thing, however, as mental fatigue.

After the Tyson fight, Steele admitted that he thought it was scheduled for 10 rounds when actually it was scheduled for 12.

Was this the confusion of a tired man who wasn't focused on the Tyson fight?

Murad Muhammad, Ruddock's promoter, said he was told by the Nevada State Athletic Commission that Steele was appointed because he was the only referee on his staff big enough to handle heavyweights.

There were two welterweight title fights on the Tyson-Ruddock card. One of them was a welterweight title match between Simon Brown and Maurice Blocker, which was refereed by Mills Lane. The other was Julio Cesar Chavez' junior welterweight title defense, which was refereed by Carlos Padilla.

Both Lane and Padilla are much smaller than Steele, but between them they have refereed 19 heavyweight championship fights.

Lane was worked 12, including Tyson's victories over Trevor Berbick, James "Bonecrusher" Smith and Tony Tucker.

Padilla's seven title fights included the "Thrilla in Manila" between Muhammad Ali and Joe Frazier and Tyson's win over Pinklon Thomas.

More important than a referee's size, it would seem, is his ability to impart his authority by not being afraid to deduct points and threaten disqualification.

Perhaps the Nevada commission is caught up with Steele's world-wide reputation and feels it must use him when it finds the glare of big-fight publicity shining on its jurisdiction.

Steele's controversial action came one year and one day after his controversial decision that Meldrick Taylor could not continue against Chavez, although there were only two seconds left in the fight and Taylor had winning margins on all three official scorecards.

Taylor had been knocked down and Steele had an opportunity to look at him and talk to him while completing the mandatory 8-count.

It's best to err on the side of safety, but Steele did not use all of the time (seconds) he had at his disposal.

When Ruddock reeled back toward the ropes, Steele turned toward Tyson and, as Ruddock reached the ropes, he stopped the fight. Steele contended that Ruddock was saved from going down by the ropes.

That being the case, he could have given Ruddock a mandatory 8-count because a fighter is ruled down if he is being held up by the ropes. In those eight seconds, Steele could have taken a closer look at Ruddock and decided if he could continue.

Shootin' the Breeze

By J. Alan Brzys

NCAA tourney reduces writer to couch potato

Whoever was responsible for expanding the NCAA basketball championship field to 64 teams ought to be taken behind the barn and shot.

Thanks to the new format - more teams, more games - I've been reduced to a couch potato with bad eyes.

I love basketball and I look forward to watching the annual tournament on television each year. But enough is enough. Heaven forbid the draw be expanded to 128 teams!

My eyes are just now beginning to focus properly after the first weekend of elimination games and here we go again. Today begins four more days of televised NCAA tournament basketball games.

At least we're down to the Sweet 16 and, after the weekend, only four squads will remain in contention.

As I hurried back to the office last Thursday from a story assignment dealing with the opening this Saturday of the new Devil's Rope-Old Route 66 Museum in McLean, I anticipated the first of a series of basketball games - billed as quadruple-headers - to be televised over the long weekend.

Anxious to see how my favorite teams would fare, I drove home as quickly as possible.

I truly enjoy the drive time between Pampa and the multi-personalized towns that dot my beat. It offers a great opportunity to develop stories for the newspaper and ideas for this column.

Invariably, my gaze wanders off the road to herds of grazing cattle and the time-worn paths they follow on the way to watering holes. Quickly the transformation is made from reality to imagination; I'm on a major cattle drive headed over the great plains toward Dodge City, Kansas or Ogallala, Nebraska.

Sometimes I'll turn on the micro-cassette recorder and dictate a few lines or ideas.

When I play back the recordings, strains of Garth Brooks' "Friends in Small Places" or other country and western tunes from my truck radio inevitably have drowned out my creative meanderings.

Oops! Forgive me, I've run off on a tangent. It happens to me a lot.

I'm often accused of making much of nothing, running my mouth uncontrollably or, as they say, shooting the breeze.

That's how I came up with the title of my column - "Shootin' the Breeze."

If it hasn't dawned upon you by now, the name of the column is a play on my last name.

Brzys or breeze, it's spelled differently but pronounced the same way. At least in this country.

Yes, it's Polish, never been shortened as best I can tell, and pronounced properly it's pretty peculiar to the palate.

Suffice it to say, pronouncing it breeze - like the wind - is a whole lot easier for all concerned.

I've written this column for several years and have never come up with a more appropriate title, or so friends and readers say. It hasn't always been sports, but it's most always been about people.

Back to the subject at hand.

At the beginning of last week's four-day basketball onslaught, I was burning with desire. I couldn't wait to plop down in the easy chair a few feet from the TV screen to get my fill of collegiate hoops.

By late Saturday afternoon the seating wasn't so easy and my left eye developed a slight twitch.

Sunday I wasn't certain what day it was and by 4 p.m. I discovered I had done little with my free time save watching the tube.

The few brief times I escaped from the transfixed state caused by the ion-emitting TV, included doing the laundry and marketing. Wherever I went, I couldn't stop watching the clock.

I found myself gazing at watches, clocks and other time-keeping devices and wondering:

- "Is time winding down to the point I need to add detergent to my wash?"

- "Is it more beneficial to eat pasta before a game and boost my carbohydrate level?"

- "How large a Gatorade supply is necessary to get through the weekend?"

The TV networks contribute to the problem. Although only CBS shows the games live, results and updates are liberally splattered on all the channels from dawn to well past dusk.

With the wonders of modern technology, viewers are treated to a screen split four ways so four different games can be seen at the same time.

My television has a 13-inch screen. I have two eyes. Try hard as I might, I couldn't follow all four games at the same time, but I did get a monster headache in the vein, but unsuccessful attempt.

If I survive through the tournament finals and season's end, I'll surely be looking for an expert in sports medicine.

I hope there's a treatment for withdrawal.

NFL votes to cut down on demonstrations

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Football Writer

KOHALA, Hawaii (AP) — Goodbye to the Ickey Shuffle. Goodbye to the post-game congregation of players and coaches on the field and even the post-game prayer sessions.

And goodbye to the controversial "in the grasp" rule.

Sort of.

NFL owners completed their annual meetings Wednesday by approving a package of rules aimed at cutting down on excessive demonstrations.

The most heralded example is the shuffle patented by Cincinnati's Ickey Woods in 1988. Banned from the end zone the next year, Woods was allowed to continue to perform his awkward dance on the sidelines.

But under the new rules, the Bengals and any team that has a player that engages in a sideline demonstration can be fined. If the player does it on the field, the team will be penalized — except for such spontaneous demonstrations as spiking the ball after a touchdown.

"Our players are paid to be athletes, not dancers or performers," said Jim Finks, chairman of the competition committee that proposed the rule.

The most substantive change was in the "in the grasp" rule, which will likely aid more mobile quarterbacks like Randall Cunningham and John Elway.

Under the old rule, a quarterback was ruled down if he was in the "grasp and control" of a defender.

Under the new rule, proposed by Jerry Seeman, who is taking over as supervisor of officials from the retiring Art McNally, the words "only when his safety is in jeopardy" is added.

That means that a quarterback can be grasped around the legs and still get a pass off if his upper body is free. Seeman said that the play would be whistled dead only if the quarterback is about to be hit.

As for post-game congregating, Finks said the NFL was simply enforcing a 1981 rule against fraternization. He cited the post-game confrontation in December between Phil Simms of the New York Giants and Ronnie Lott of San Francisco as one example of what can happen if players don't get off the field quickly.

"That could have been a disaster," he said.

But Finks said it also applied to handshakes by coaches — they can now wave to each other; discussions between players on opposing teams and the two-team prayer sessions that became popular at the end of the year. He said the prayers could be conducted off the field.

Pampa golfer entered in hole-in-one tournament

THE WOODLANDS — More than 100 golfers from 33 states and Canada will be shooting for a chance at a hole-in-one worth up to $100,000 at the National Hole-In-One Association's eighth annual Tournament of Aces Friday through Sunday.

Mark Ebenkamp of Pampa is one of 21 Texas golfers entered in the tournament.

Ebenkamp qualified for the tournament with a hole-in-one on the No. 12 hole at the Hidden Hills municipal course.

"I'm just your basic duffer, but I got lucky and had a hole-in-one," Ebenkamp said.

The only event of its kind in North America, the $100,000 Tournament of Aces features NHIOA-registered golfers who have recorded a hole-in-one in tournament play during the past year.

"We're pleased to be entering our eighth year with the Tournament of Aces, and we're excited about the field we have competing," said NHIOA President John Everhart. "This is a fun way for participants to swap hole-in-one stories while competing for as much as $100,000 at one of America's premier golf facilities."

During the 36-hole event, golfers will compete at The Woodlands' North Course and Tournament Players Course in Dallas. The format for the North Course will be a four-man scramble while the TPC Course will feature best-ball competition between two-player teams.

The four par-3 holes at both courses will offer prize money for each and every ace. A hole-in-one on the first par-3 hole is worth $25,000, with prize money escalating to $50,000, $75,000 and $100,000 on subsequent par-3 holes.

Should a golfer register two hole-in-ones, then he would take home the allotted prize money for both holes. Closest-to-the-pin prizes, consisting of American Airlines tickets for two, will be awarded at each par 3. Prizes will also be awarded to the top five individual and top five scramble and best-ball team finishers.

Player of the Week

Senior firstbaseman Russ Stephens has been selected as Player of the Week by the Pampa Harvesters' baseball coaching staff. Stephens went 5 for 5 at the plate, including a home run and 3 RBI in Pampa's victories over Weatherford, Okla. and Perryton. Stephens also leads the team in fielding percentage.

OU topples Providence in NIT quarterfinals

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — For Providence it wasn't supposed to end this way, not with guard Eric Murdock hitting only 19 percent of his shots.

For Oklahoma, with a season-high 26 points from 6-foot-8 sophomore Bryan Sallier, Wednesday night's 83-74 victory and a trip to the National Invitation Tournament semifinals in New York was vindication of sorts for an inconsistent season.

"If we were in the NCAA, we might be home right now. Instead, we're going to New York, where I've never been before," a beaming Sallier said after he spent most of the game having his way with the Friars underneath.

"Our guys did a miraculous job. I'll buy it. I like it," said coach Billy Tubbs. He groused earlier in the week at the NIT's quick schedule change that sent the Sooners (19-4) to Providence, where the Friars had been giant killers all season.

"But as it worked out, it was the really perfect thing to do and they should be complimented," Tubbs joked.

The remainder of the NIT semifinal field will be completed tonight when the quarterfinals resume with Arkansas State at Colorado, Massachusetts at Siena and Stanford at Southern Illinois.

Providence (19-13) relied all season on seniors Murdock and Chris Watts in the clutch. But while Sallier and Jeff Webster, with 17 points, scored inside for the Sooners, the Friars' outside bombs came up duds.

Murdock, with a 25.9 scoring average, was 5 of 26 and missed all seven 3-point tries. Watts was 6 of 26, including 3 of 13 from 3-point range.

Overall, Providence shot 33 percent to Oklahoma's 54 percent.

"We've worked too hard to go out like this," said junior forward Marques Bragg, who had 14 points and 16 rebounds while he and Marvin Saddler tried to handle Sallier.
