

Census Bureau may have missed half million in count of Texas

By JENNIFER DIXON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Census Bureau says it may have missed more than half a million Texans when it counted the state's population last year.

Officials say the Census Bureau's new numbers for Texas could swing millions of federal dollars into the state and shift substantial political power to minorities at city halls, county commissioners courts and legislative offices around the state.

The bureau said Thursday that it may have missed as few as 236,490 or as many as 632,490 Texans when it counted 16.9 million people living in the state last April.

Texas officials said the figures validate their claims that thousands of people in the state were missed during the 1990 head count.

Rep. Martin Frost, D-Dallas, said the preliminary survey results released by the Census Bureau also reinforce his call for an adjustment in the 1990 census to account for thousands of blacks and Hispanics who were apparently overlooked.

"This is a pretty significant admission by the Census Bureau that they've missed a lot of people, even if you use their low figures," Frost said.

The Census Bureau survey said its low estimate puts the Texas population at 17,223,000, while the high estimate shows the state may have had 17,619,000 residents last year.

Frost said the new numbers, if adopted and used to draw new political boundaries, could result in significant shifts in power to minorities at the local, county and state level.

"It's not just money but political power," said Frost. "There's a real prospect for a shift in power; of additional minorities elected to city councils, county commissioners courts and to the Legislature, all over the state."

While Texas will get three new congressional seats under the 1990 count, Frost and other officials said it's not clear whether an adjustment would give the state its 31st seat in the House.

Texas Attorney General Dan Morales has joined New York and several other cities and states in a lawsuit that seeks a statistical adjustment of the 1990 census to make up for any undercount. The bureau is considering whether to correct its count and is expected to decide by July 15.

Morales said he was encouraged by the bureau's findings Thursday, saying the agency appears "to be arriving at a statistical count roughly parallel to our own estimates of approximately 17.5 million to 17.75 million people living in Texas in 1990."

El Paso Mayor Suzie Azar also called the new numbers encouraging. The city, which has joined the lawsuit seeking an adjustment, believes the census missed at least 18,000 residents.

Many of those overlooked by the Census Bureau in El Paso may be illegal aliens who refused to fill out the forms because of fears of deportation, she said.

"They have a serious impact on our streets, our highways, housing, education," she said.

Some estimates indicate the 1990 undercount could cost the state upwards of $1 billion in federal funds over the next decade, according to Morales' office. The 1980 census missed an estimated 547,000 Texans and cost the state about $580 million.

IRS sells Willie's Hill Country fishing camp

AUSTIN (AP) — The Internal Revenue Service sold off another of entertainer Willie Nelson's properties, but nearly a score of his Hill Country real estate packages are still on the auction block.

Nelson's Pedernales River fishing camp was sold in a sealed-bid auction Thursday to a Houston couple looking for a retirement home and a place to take their 16 children and grandchildren fishing and boating.

The IRS last year seized Nelson's properties in several states to try to recoup some of the $16.7 million he owes in back taxes and penalties.

Officials have had little luck selling several of his Texas properties, most of which are located some 30 miles west of Austin near the singer's Pedernales Country Club, 9-hole golf course and recording studio.

Mary and George Larson bought the 22-acre fishing camp with a bid of $86,100, some $800 over the only other bid tendered and $4,600 over the IRS asking price of $81,483.

The minimum sought for the camp at a January auction that brought no bids on any of Nelson's properties was $84,442.

The camp, nestled in a wooded, hilly bend of the Pedernales River, includes a store and restaurant known as Mona's Yacht Club, a boat launch and dock and a one-story house.

Mrs. Larson said her children and those of her husband of 10 months had boated and water skied at the site in the 1970s.

"It's lovely, it's beautiful. We had camped out there for the first time last year, and we fell in love with it and that end of Lake Travis. We had searched and searched for a property in our price range, and they're hard to come by," she said.

"We did not buy it to make a ton of money. We bought it strictly for family pleasure," she said.

Mrs. Larson said she wanted to consult with the people who work at the camp before she and her husband make any changes.

No bid was submitted Thursday on Nelson's 688-acre spread with a 2,800 square foot hilltop cabin and Old West movie set, where films such as The Red-Headed Stranger, Honeysuckle Rose and Lonesome Dove were shot, the IRS said. The property has been appraised by the IRS at $1.4 million.

The minimum required bid was $99,093, a steep drop from the January asking price of $341,640. The package also includes a $554,000 lien for which the purchaser would be responsible.

Seventeen of Nelson's other properties, including vacant lots, town homes and condominiums valued at a total of about $123,000, also received no bids Thursday.

The IRS now has the option of trying to sell the properties again, buying them for the federal government or giving them back to Nelson, said IRS spokeswoman Valerie Thornton.

In January, a sale of personal items from Nelson's country club and recording studio raised about $68,000.

Nelson real estate that has been sold includes his 44-acre ranch and house in Dripping Springs, auctioned for $203,840 in January; and his golf course, country club and recording studio, bought for $117,375 by former UT football coach Darryl Royal at an auction held by the property's lien holder last month.

U.S. grand jury indicts pair in cop slaying under new law

TYLER (AP) — Two Edinburg brothers have been indicted in the first test of a federal law allowing the death penalty for killing an officer in the midst of a drug trafficking operation.

Baldemar Sambrano Villarreal, 29, and Reynaldo Sambrano Villarreal, 24, were indicted Thursday by a federal grand jury in connection with the Jan. 23 beating and stabbing death of Nacogdoches County constable Darrell Lunsford.

A third suspect, Jesus "Jesse" Cortez Zambrano, 22, also of Edinburg, pleaded guilty April 11 to the new federal murder statute. But Department of Justice officials said Zambrano will not face a death sentence. Instead, he will be sentenced to between 20 years and life in prison and a $250,000 fine for his role in the officer's death.

Lunsford, 47, had stopped a car near Garrison, Texas. A videotape camera mounted on Lunsford patrol car and used primarily to get scene footage in drunken driving cases recorded the officer's killing.

The three men had been charged with capital murder and held without bond in a state case. The federal government later charged the trio with conspiracy to distribute marijuana after 25 to 30 pounds of the drug and Lunsford's wallet were found near the abandoned car photographed in the videotape.

Then federal officials involved in the investigation opted to try for the new indictment.

The indictment, which requires the personal approval of U.S. Attorney Dick Thornburgh, eliminates the possibility of parole for convicted offenders.

"Congress gave us a tool to prosecute drug dealers who take the lives of local, state and federal officers and we're going to use it," said U.S. Attorney Bob Wortham of Beaumont, who will try the case along with Assistant U.S. Attorneys Jim Middleton and Wes Rivers.

Nacogdoches County Sheriff Joe Evans said the federal case will help the county, which faced an estimated $500,000 to $750,000 for trial costs, including court-appointed attorneys for the defendants.

Federal officials said in a statement Thursday they agreed to a plea bargain by Zambrano in the case because his background, "his less culpable role in the murder and other individual factors led the Department of Justice to conclude that capital punishment was not appropriate for that defendant."

Father kills four children, self

HOUSTON (AP) — Investigators were searching today for possible reasons that a 42-year-old carpenter gunned down his four children across their dining room table and then killed himself.

Police spokesman Kevin Robertson said detectives found a receipt for the .45-caliber handgun used in the murder-suicide, showing the gun had been purchased Thursday, hours before the shooting.

The children's mother has not yet been located, Robertson said, delaying identification of the victims.

"We were told she left Monday. We don't know if that means she left the apartment or left town. We just don't know yet," Robertson said.

Sgt. Ralph Gonzales said police had to break down the door to the first-floor apartment after a neighbor reported hearing scuffling noises and about seven shots fired about 8:30 p.m. Thursday.

One bullet went through a wall and into another neighbor's apartment.

Officers found the four children — three girls aged 7, 8 and 17, and a boy, 12 — dead on the same side of the dining room table. Each had been shot in the head with a .45-caliber handgun. The father's body and a gun were lying nearby.

Police also found Polaroid snapshots of the children, apparently taken immediately before the shooting. On the back of one photo had been written: "Last picture."

"They didn't look happy," one detective said from the scene.

Police said a note was found in the apartment, but they would not reveal its contents.

Terry Harrington, manager of the Brentwood Village Apartments, said the family had lived in the complex four or five years.

"They were nice, hard-working people," Harrington said. "They always paid their rent on time."

A neighbor, Virginia Jones, said she heard "a lot of moving around in the apartment, then foot stomping on the floor at the time of shooting. Then everything was quiet."

Gorbachev arrives in South Korea during last stop on his Asian tour

By PAUL SHIN
Associated Press Writer

CHEJU ISLAND, South Korea (AP) — Mikhail S. Gorbachev became the first Soviet leader to visit South Korea when he arrived tonight on this tropical island for talks with President Roh Tae-woo.

About 5,000 students demonstrated in Seoul before his arrival, claiming that the Gorbachev's visit will only anger Communist North Korea and hinder efforts to unify the Korean peninsula.

Issues of peace and security on the Korean peninsula topped the agenda for the talks, although no major agreements are expected.

South Korea is expected to ask the Soviets to cut off supplies of plutonium and other nuclear materials to North Korea until Pyongyang agrees to international inspections of its facilities.

The visit comes a week after South Korea's defense minister said that Seoul might launch a commando raid to destroy North Korean nuclear facilities. Seoul quickly distanced itself from the comment, which North Korea denounced, but the remark heightened tensions in the most heavily militarized area of Asia.

Gorbachev's plane touched down in Cheju after a short flight from Japan. He emerged from the plane smiling and waving about five minutes later and was welcomed by Foreign Minister Lee Sang-ock.

Thousands of island citizens stood on the sidewalks in the night waving and shouting greetings to Gorbachev and his wife Raisa as their limousine passed. Newly planted flowers lined the two-lane road from the airport to the hotel.

In Seoul, 5,000 students hurled rocks and firebombs, set fire to two police buses and took over several downtown blocks as they battled riot police firing tear gas. "Down with Roh Tae-woo!" the students yelled.

One policeman was seen being beaten by students and dragged away. At least 100 students were arrested and dozens injured.

News reports said 50,000 students held rallies at 144 universities today to demand the ouster of Roh's government.

About 500 students at Cheju University chanted "Let's block Soviet-South Korean summit!" and burned a large cartoon picture of Gorbachev and Roh shaking hands. The school is about six miles from the airport on South Korea's southernmost island.

The students contend Gorbachev's trip will so anger North Korea, a Soviet ally, that it will end dialogue on easing tensions and hinder unification of the peninsula, divided since 1945.

As the leader of the only superpower that maintains relations with both Seoul and Pyongyang — which has received Soviet arms for years — Gorbachev is in the coveted position of potential peacemaker.

More than 1.5 million troops on either side guard the tightly sealed border between the Koreans.

Gorbachev was to be guest of honor at a dinner tonight. The two leaders planned to meet for summit talks Saturday before Gorbachev's return to Moscow.

Originally Gorbachev planned to visit Korea only about four hours, but the schedule was changed today to lengthen his tour and stay overnight.

Cheju, a volcanic island best known as a honeymoon getaway, was chosen for the summit because it's the farthest geographical point from North Korea. It was an attempt to avoid embarrassing North Korea by having Gorbachev appear in Seoul, 30 miles from the border.

In Seoul, about 30 people threw more than 400 raw eggs at a large picture of Gorbachev erected near the international airport. They identified themselves as family members of those killed when a Soviet fighter shot down Korean Air Line flight 007 in 1983. None of the 269 people aboard survived.

The group said they would go to Cheju and demand the two leaders launch a joint investigation of the incident.

North Korea indirectly criticized Gorbachev by carrying reports of the South Korean demonstrations on its official news agency. Gorbachev said Thursday that he plans to visit North Korea, but he did not give a date.

Gorbachev left Tokyo this morning after making some concessions to the Japanese on a territorial dispute that has poisoned relations for decades. He failed to win a commitment from Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu for substantial Japanese assistance for the ailing Soviet economy.

On Thursday, Gorbachev and Kaifu joined in calling on North Korea to conclude an agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency to permit inspection of its two research reactors, which might be able to produce nuclear weapons by the end of the decade.

Baker discusses Mideast peace talks with Israeli Prime Minister Shamir

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

JERUSALEM (AP) — Secretary of State James A. Baker III discussed European and Arab ideas for structuring a Mideast peace conference with Israeli leaders today without reaching accord on a framework, Israeli sources said.

Baker met for four hours with Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir after a 2 1/2-hour session with Foreign Minister David Levy. Baker begins a tour of Arab lands on Saturday in Awaba, Jordan, holding his first meeting with King Hussein.

Israeli sources told The Associated Press the talks here were confined to procedural issues. Most prominent among them was who would sponsor the negotiations that Israel agreed last week to hold with Arab states and with Palestinians.

Israel wanted the talks held in Washington under United Nations auspices. But the Arabs told Baker last week they want an international peace conference, and West European foreign ministers informed him Thursday in Luxembourg that the European Community should be a co-sponsor along with the Soviet Union.

The Israeli sources, insisting on anonymity, said the issue could not be resolved during Baker's stop in Jerusalem. He has left his schedule open for a possible return here next week after going to Jordan, Egypt, Saudi Arabia and Kuwait.

There is no immediate word from U.S. officials describing the meetings with Shamir and with Levy.

Avi Pazner, the prime minister's media adviser, said he "would characterize the talks as friendly, even while the subjects under discussion were serious subjects."

Pazner said Baker and Shamir had "a basic, deep discussion of advancing the peace process."

"I would not call them difficult talks," he said. "They were very basic."

Baker had nothing to say to reporters after seeing Levy. He also avoided reporters aboard his plane on the flight Thursday from Luxembourg.

Levy said he would cancel plans to go to his home at Beit Shean for the weekend in case Baker wanted to see him again in the afternoon. But no session was scheduled.

The foreign minister also gave no indication of how his meeting with Baker went, but in advance of Baker's arrival Shamir signaled his determination not to be pressured.

One of the key issues in Baker's stop here is whether the Soviet Union and the European Community would join the United States as sponsors of talks and what role the sponsors would play. Israeli leaders already have agreed in principle to negotiations with the Arabs.

The Arabs want nations outside the region to step in and break deadlocks between Israel and the Arabs, but the Shamir government prefers only an opening ceremony.

Shamir, Levy and other Israeli leaders are worried about being cornered on controversial issues.

Another problem is who would represent Palestinians in the talks.

Arab governments want to include Palestinians from East Jerusalem, the predominantly Arab section of Israel's capital.

But Shamir and Levy object. They do not want even a symbolic suggestion that East Jerusalem, which Israel annexed after the 1967 Six-Day war, is up for grabs.

Baker arrived Thursday amid Israel's 43rd birthday celebration.

Before Baker's arrival, Shamir indicated in an interview on Israeli Radio that he was not inclined to yield to pressure tactics.

Baker, meanwhile, added Kuwait to his open-ended schedule. He will go there Monday "to follow up on the progress being made to normalize the situation," State Department spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler said.

Sheik Jabir al-Ahmed Sabah and his closely knit ruling family were restored to power in Kuwait in February as President Bush and a coalition of allies forced Iraq to end a six-month occupation.

BOWSER
and Friend

Who would ever think that these arch enemies could share an afternoon rest? Bowser doesn't mind being a pillow for his friend; and the sleepy cat is quite willing to forget their age-old quarrel in exchange for a soft mattress.

How much this peaceful scene differs than the one our expression "cat and dog fight" brings to mind. How easy it is to forget that patience and earnest endeavor can bring together the most bitter of enemies. If we learn only one lesson from Bowser and his friend; let it be that all petty hatreds and jealousies can be overcome by an understanding of the other fellow's point of view. There is no other place that can sow the seed of mutual respect so deeply in our hearts than God's house. For every church is built upon the foundation of love for our fellow man. Go to church and take your family.

The Church is God's appointed agency in this world for spreading the knowledge of His love for man and of His demand for man to respond to that love by loving his neighbor. Without this groundwork in the use of God's government of society or way of life will long persevere and the freedom which we hold so dear will inevitably perish. Therefore, even from a selfish point of view, one should support the Church for the sake of the welfare of himself and his family. Beyond that, however, every person should uphold and participate in the Church because it is the truth about man's life, death and destiny, the truth which alone will set him free to live as a child of God.

His Touch

By Charlotte Barbaree

Scripture: It was he who gave some to be apostles, some to be prophets, some to be evangelists, and some to be pastors and teachers, to prepare God's people for works of service, so that the body of Christ may be built up until we all reach unity in the faith and in the knowledge of the Son of God and become mature, attaining to the whole measure of the fullness of Christ. Ephesians 4:11-13 (NIV)

I recently had surgery on my left hand. I was sent home with a thick bandage, a wrist/hand brace, and a very sore and temporarily useless hand. The doctor had prescribed a pain medication for my use when needed; my husband got the prescription filled, brought it home, and set the bottle on our snack bar.

The next morning, since I felt up to taking care of myself, my husband went to work. No problem... I had my own bed to lounge in, a remote control television, and plenty of pain pills if I needed them. There was just one teeny little hitch; without help, I couldn't get the bottle of pills open!

When a person accepts Christ's grace gift of salvation, he comes to new life; he is reborn with inherent spiritual gifts, privileges, and potential. And that is where we fellow Christians tend to blithely leave a new soul. No problem... he has his own personal Savior in whom he can rest. He has access to knowledge and growth through God's Word. And he has all the pain relief, guidance and assurance of God's infinite wisdom and power. Why he even has access to God, Himself, through prayer.

But there is one teeny little hitch; without help, brand new souls rarely know how to open God's floodgates. Because of our neglect to disciple new Christians, they suffer spiritual deprivation while the full array of the abundant life lies before them.

Religion roundup

NEW YORK (AP) — U.S. Army Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf has written a letter of appreciation to the American Bible Society for 300,000 Bibles in special desert-camouflage covers provided to U.S. military forces in the Gulf War.

The head of the U.S. Central Command wrote that the enthusiasm generated by the Bibles "is proof that today's young men and women are as hungry for spiritual nourishment as were those of any previous generation."

He wrote, "In times of greatest stress, soldiers, sailors, airmen, Marines and Coast Guardsmen have always looked to their God for strength, help and deliverance."

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush recently told a group of religion reporters that he feels no resentment toward church leaders who opposed use of military force to oust Iraq from Kuwait.

He said their statements came "from the heart. I just disagreed with them." He was quoted in the Dallas-based United Methodist Reporter as adding, "We have to have a tolerance for diversity."

"I have no feeling that someone is less of an American or less patriotic than I am. But they're wrong and I was right."

Referring to a visit shortly before the war began with the head of his church, Episcopal Presiding Bishop Edmond Browning, who had opposed military action, Bush said:

"I had nothing in my heart that felt a bitterness or a restlessness (toward him), that he didn't understand where I was coming from."

Of such appeals generally, he said, "I think the president should listen and be open minded enough to hear protest."

WASHINGTON (AP) — Roman Catholicism's domestic policy chief urges prompt congressional passage of legislation requiring a seven-day wait by prospective gun buyers to allow a police check of their background.

Bishop James Malone of Youngstown, Ohio, said "widespread use of handguns and automatic weapons in connection with drug commerce reinforces our repeated call for effective and courageous action to control handguns."

National debate continues over naming rape victims

By ROBERT DVORCHAK
AP National Writer

Several more news organizations on Thursday named the woman who said she was raped by a Kennedy family member, fanning a debate about publishing the identities of sexual-assault victims.

Among those who followed NBC News and The New York Times in identifying the woman were the Detroit Free Press, The Detroit News, the Star-Ledger of Newark, N.J., and the Reuters news agency.

Among the most vocal critics were those who said disclosure would discourage women from reporting rapes by having their identities revealed.

"If you want to reduce the number of those who come forth and report rapes to the authorities, just start publishing and broadcasting their names and addresses. That'll do it," said Anne Seymour, spokeswoman for the National Victim Center.

Editors also anguished over the propriety of naming the suspect, William Kennedy Smith, the nephew of Sen. Ted Kennedy, D-Mass., without identifying his accuser. Police identified Smith as the suspect several days after the Easter weekend incident. He has not been charged, but an investigation continues.

"All editors have the same dilemma," said Frank Daniels III, executive editor of The News and Observer in Raleigh, N.C., which withheld the woman's name. "By naming the defendant, you've now said someone is an alleged rapist without naming who's saying that."

"If you want to reduce the number of those who come forth and report rapes to the authorities, just start publishing and broadcasting their names and addresses."

Some of those who identified the woman said her privacy was no longer an issue because others had used it, even if publishing was contrary to their policies of not using the names of rape victims.

"After a lot of discussion, we decided to use the name in an extraordinary case that had been reported nationwide," said Heath Meriwether, executive editor of the Detroit Free Press.

"We felt we should give our readers as much information as we had to enable them to sort out a complicated situation. And the issue of privacy was moot, after broadcast of her name by NBC and publication in The New York Times," Meriwether said.

The New York Times decision to publish the woman's name because of the NBC disclosure angered some on the newspaper's staff.

"There's certainly a division in the newsroom, but it's mostly against" use of the woman's name, said a Times reporter who spoke to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity. "People who tend to agree with the use of the name also find fault with the reasoning. Since when does NBC set the agenda for the Times?"

The Times planned a brown-bag lunch for reporters and editors Friday on "how we write about rape" to discuss the decision to use the woman's name. The lunch meeting was to be one of an occasional series the paper holds, said Allan M. Siegal, an assistant managing editor.

He said the decision to hold the luncheon was made today. "We just got together this morning and realized that a lot of people on the staff seemed to want to talk about it," he said. "We're just going to talk about how we do things."

Robert Crooke, spokesman for Reuters in New York, said the woman's name was carried Wednesday on the agency's news wires.

"Once her identity had become common and public knowledge, we decided to publish it," Crooke said. He said Reuters would not change its traditional policy of not identifying rape victims.

The Palm Beach County, Fla., state attorney on Thursday asked a judge to rule whether he can prosecute news organizations who print or broadcast the woman's name. Florida law that bars identifying a sexual offense victim in the news media.

In response, The New York Times issued a statement.

"Reasonable people may differ with our decision, and indeed other publications have. However, we believe that the decision of whether truthful information should be published must be made by editors, and not by the government," the statement said.

"We are confident that the court will determine that any attempt to apply Florida's statute to the publication of accurate facts about a matter of public importance is plainly unconstitutional."

NBC said it was "confident that its editorial decision to air the name of the rape victim is consistent with the protections afforded by the Constitution."

NBC News broadcast the woman's name and picture Tuesday, a day after it had appeared in The Globe, a supermarket tabloid. Michael Gartner, president of NBC News, defended the decision, which NBC officials said was agreed to by anchor Tom Brokaw.

"I hope this has no negative impact on this woman's life, but my first real duty is to inform my viewers," Gartner said.

Gartner is a former president and editor of The Des Moines (Iowa) Register and The Courier-Journal of Louisville, Ky. Both papers published the woman's name Wednesday.

NBC had received about 200 calls as of Wednesday night objecting to the broadcast, according to spokeswoman Peggy Hubble. She said the network does not have a formal policy on identifying rape victims.

"Rape is rarely an issue for us. The decisions are made on a case by case basis. This was long and difficult discussion," she said.

Appearing on ABC's Nightline Wednesday night, Gartner twice mentioned the victim's last name. ABC's policy is not to identify rape victims, said spokeswoman Laura Wessner, but the network does not censor the views of those who appear on its live news shows.

The Associated Press has not disclosed the woman's name. The news agency's policy is to refrain from identifying rape victims, except in extraordinary circumstances.

Public opinion appeared to be on the side of shielding rape victims by not disclosing their names, and about 15 members of the Guardian Angels, a self-styled group of crime fighters who patrol urban areas, marched Thursday in front of NBC and The New York Times.

The group carried signs that read: "Gartner: Your Name Will Carry The Shame" and "NBC and New York Times: Integrity For Sale."

Of 1,000 people questioned for a survey commissioned by the National Victim Center and released Thursday, 79 percent said they support laws barring the names and addresses of sexual assault victims from being printed or broadcast.

A USA Today survey released Wednesday showed 60 percent believe victims should decide whether they are identified and 31 percent said the name should never be made public. Six percent said no consent was necessary.

The New York Daily News conducted its own unscientific survey, asking readers with a front page headline "Was NBC Right?" By placing calls that cost 75 cents each, 1,276 callers, or 79 percent, said no; 345, or 21 percent, said yes.

"We felt we should give our readers as much information as we had to enable them to sort out a complicated situation. And the issue of privacy was moot ..."

The issue was so charged it prompted disagreement among women's activists.

Karen DeCrow, a lawyer and former president of the National Organization for Women, wrote in USA Today that identifying rape victims would help end sexist stereotyping.

"We should not relinquish our names or identities for the misguided protectionism that has always kept us from full citizenship," she said.

But Marybeth Carter, president of the National Coalition Against Sexual Assault, firmly disagreed with publicizing rape victims' names.

"I challenge the theory that printing the victims' names in the paper removes the stigma," Ms. Carter said.

And Susan Estrich, professor of law at the University of Southern California, said involuntary disclosure would keep rape victims from coming forward. She was a rape victim and wrote about her experience in the book Real Rape.

"The humiliation being heaped on this particular woman has been unfair to her and is just the sort of thing that discourages other women from coming forward," she said.

Benjamin C. Bradlee, executive editor of The Washington Post, said his newspaper's policy is not to print names.

"We have our little square inch of principle and we are standing on it," Bradlee said.

Iain Calder, editor of the National Enquirer, said it has withheld the woman's name. "We took the high ground and The New York Times took the low ground," Calder said.

"We could have sold more papers, but we felt it was the right thing to do."

Prosecutor seeks ruling on use of victim's name

By DAN SEWELL
Associated Press Writer

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A prosecutor Thursday sought a court ruling on whether he can prosecute news organizations that have identified a woman who says she was raped by a Kennedy family member.

Palm Beach County State Attorney David Bludworth also said he expects three more weeks of investigation before making a decision on whether to charge William Kennedy Smith, nephew of U.S. Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass.

In his first extensive public comments since the March 30 rape allegation, Bludworth also defended the Palm Beach police investigation and his office's handling of the investigation.

"This is the Smith case to us," Bludworth said, insisting the investigation was progressing and that no favoritism has been shown the Kennedys.

After publication of the 29-year-old woman's name and photo in a Boca Raton-based supermarket tabloid, The Globe, NBC News broadcast her name Tuesday. Her name then was published Wednesday in The New York Times and some other newspapers — but not in any southern Florida daily.

Bludworth filed a petition asking a judge to rule whether a 1911 Florida statute barring identification of a sex-crime victim, which makes violation a second-degree criminal misdemeanor, meets state and U.S. constitutional standards.

"There are some important First Amendment claims that must be weighed against the private rights of a victim who reports a sexual assault," Bludworth told reporters.

The woman's attorney, David Roth, said Wednesday he was "shocked and appalled" by publication of her identity. Its use has brought out debate in newsrooms and among legal scholars and victims' advocates.

The statute was examined in The Florida Star case, in which the weekly Jacksonville newspaper inadvertently published the name of a victim left on police records. The newspaper lost a $97,500 award after being sued by the victim, but the U.S. Supreme Court overturned the decision, limiting punishment of the media when the name is obtained by legal means.

Bludworth said his study of that ruling indicated it didn't clarify the criminal nature and constitutionality of the law.

Violators are guilty of a misdemeanor punishable by a 60-day jail sentence and a $500 fine under Florida law.

Bludworth, a veteran of 18 years as state attorney, doesn't believe the law has been prosecuted before.

NBC said Thursday it was confident about its decision to use the name.

"NBC has studied the Florida statute and the analysis of the statute by the Supreme Court as well as other constitutional decisions," the network said in a statement. "NBC is confident that its editorial decision to air the name of the rape victim is consistent with the protections afforded by the Constitution."

The New York Times said it would no longer shield the alleged victim's privacy once her name had been broadcast nationally.

"Only while a subject's anonymity is effective and genuine can we justify withholding information from our readers on an issue of genuine public interest," a newspaper statement said.

"We are confident that the court will determine that any attempt to apply Florida's statute to the publication of accurate facts about a matter of public importance is plainly unconstitutional," The Times statement said.

The Globe, which is based in Boca Raton, said it stood by its decision to publish the name and photo of the woman. Her identity was widely known in the Palm Beach area, and was first published by a British newspaper.

"We stress once again that her identity was already an open secret published across the world and known to thousands of people here in America," it said.

"The Globe feels in this circumstance and in matters of extraordinary public interest, our readers should have full access to all the facts. The more informed they are, the better they can make up their own mind on the issues involved."

Bludworth's petition will go to a county civil judge for hearing, he said. No date has been scheduled. If the law is upheld, he said, he isn't sure what will follow although an injunction against the use of the name was possible.

He said he thinks printing rape victims' names deters reporting of sexual crimes. He also criticized reporting details about the past of the alleged victim, saying they would be inadmissible in court and irrelevant.

Although questions have been raised about the police investigation, which saw Kennedy family members go nearly a week without questioning and 13 days elapse before a criminal-scene investigation, Bludworth said there was "absolutely not" anything irregular.

Europe also debates case

By JESSICA BALDWIN
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Nearly two weeks before U.S. media identified a woman who alleged that she was raped by a member of the Kennedy family, one London tabloid printed her name and another published her picture.

Yet if the alleged incident had occurred in Britain, they couldn't have identified her.

"Once a woman has alleged that she has been a victim of a rape you cannot publish her name, address or a ... picture of her," said Martin Soames, a lawyer specializing in libel law. "And that lasts for her whole life."

"After a man has been accused of a rape offense the law is even stronger. Nothing that is likely to lead members of the public to identify the woman who has complained can be published or broadcast," Soames said.

Most European news organizations do not publish or broadcast the name of a woman in a rape case, either as a matter of law or of self-restraint, Associated Press bureaus report.

In Belgium, Portugal and Switzerland, there are strict rules protecting the identity of women who have been raped.

In the Soviet Union, rape trials are closed and names not revealed, according to the Soviet Supreme Court. The victim can request an open trial, but the official Tass news agency as a rule does not publish names of rape victims.

German law does not forbid use of the name, and the newspapers make their own decisions.

In Italy and the Netherlands, there are no restrictions on reporting rape victims' names, if they are adults. But newspapers in those two countries usually only identify the victim only by an initial.

If the case becomes of extreme interest in Italy, the woman's name may eventually become public, as occurred after a 30-year-old woman was raped near the Piazza Navona in 1988.

Because she was walking alone late at night, some of the parents of the three young suspects suggested she was a loose woman.

Their comments caused a stir, including criticism by the Vatican's newspaper. Initial stories did not use her name, but when the woman died some time later of an illness unrelated to the attack, newspapers identified her.

The Sun, one of Britain's raciest tabloids, on April 6 published the name of the woman who said she was raped by a member of the Kennedy family in Palm Beach.

The Sunday Mirror, another mass-market tabloid, the next day published her picture, name and details of what the tabloid said were her past across two pages.

"As a general rule the Sunday Mirror does not name rape victims unless with their consent," deputy editor Colin Mylar said Thursday. "In this case, she had been named in the national press ... and accordingly her name was already in the public domain."

The Globe, a supermarket tabloid based in Florida, followed suit earlier this week. Since then, NBC News and The New York Times have identified the woman, although her lawyer said she wished to remain anonymous.

The disclosures caused intense debate in the United States, where many publications have a policy against identifying rape victims.

Palm Beach County's state attorney, David Bludworth, on Thursday asked a judge to rule whether he may use a Florida statute barring identification of a sex-crime victim to prosecute those organizations that identified her. Violation of the statute is a second-degree criminal misdemeanor.

The Sun and the Sunday Mirror broke no British laws, experts say, because the case is outside the jurisdiction of British courts. Nor did the printing of the name and photograph cause any controversy in Britain.

Yet some feel uneasy.

"Some editors would take the view that if it's published over here it won't do any damage. It's a tenuous argument," said Tony Loynes, editor of the U.K. Press Gazette, which covers the news industry.

Editors "say it's our obligation to uphold the law — which they have done — but maybe a moral code is transgressed there," Loynes told The Associated Press.

Gates apologizes for his remarks

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Police Chief Daryl Gates apologized for past remarks that many considered offensive to minorities during a meeting to pray for peace in a city divided over the videotaped beating of a black motorist by police.

Gates attended a prayer meeting Thursday with 25 to 30 blacks, including several ministers and leaders of community groups.

"If anyone has ever been offended, hurt or feels hurt from the things I've said, let me just apologize to you and tell you that never have I had the intent to harm anyone, at all," he said.

Gates once remarked that blacks may be more susceptible than "normal people" to a now-banned police chokehold.

"Our focus for coming together today is to show that there is another side to our community, and that this is the side of love and forgiveness and a side of fair play and justice for all," said Ezola Foster of Black Americans for Community Values, a conservative black group that helped organize the meeting.

Rodney King, 25, was beaten, kicked and shocked with a stun gun after being ordered out of the car early on March 3. The beating was captured on videotape by a resident nearby and televised around the world.

Four officers have been charged with assault, which prompted calls for Gates' resignation.

Meanwhile, two men who were passengers in King's car the night he was beaten after being pulled over for speeding said they believe the assault was premeditated.

"They seen three black guys in the car and they said, 'OK, we can just pull them over and beat the mess out of them. It's late, it's dark ...'" said Freddie Helms on "Donahue," the syndicated talk show.

Critics wonder where education reform money will come from

By TAMARA HENRY
AP Education Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Educators and government leaders say they don't know where the money will come from to finance President Bush's proposed "revolution" in the U.S. educational system.

"If the plan is to succeed, it will require a major commitment in terms of resources and will," NAACP spokesman James Williams said Thursday after Bush unveiled his plan. "We question whether the financial resources that have been required are adequate to do the job."

The president called for top-to-bottom school reforms, including a voluntary nationwide exam system, federal aid pegged to academic results and $550 million in start-up funds for "a new generation of schools."

Bush said he will ask Congress for $690 million, mostly for $1 million seed grants to open a prototype "New American School" in each of the 435 congressional districts plus two others for each state by 1996.

He invited communities to vie for the grants to create the 535 non-traditional new schools, some of which may be operated by private businesses.

"I'm here to say America will move forward," Bush declared at a White House ceremony. "Our challenge amounts to nothing less than a revolution in American education, a battle for our future."

But critics voiced a common refrain: where will the money come from?

Albert Shanker, president of the American Federation of Teachers, said essential federal programs like Chapter One for disadvantaged youngsters, education of the handicapped and student financial aid all are operating at half strength. The new initiatives fail to provide additional money for the programs, he said.

Keith Geiger, president of the National Education Association, applauded the initiatives but said "there are hurdles we all must overcome."

"In state after state, massive cutbacks in education funding are overcrowding classrooms and canceling imaginative programs," said Geiger. He added that his union's 2 million member teachers "are understandably cynical about moving ahead to a bright, new future when the present financial climate looks so threatening."

The plan, crafted by new Education Secretary Lamar Alexander in his first month on the job, calls for relatively little new federal spending. It relies instead upon states, governors, teachers, parents, students and communities to take steps to embrace the rigorous new education goals that Bush and the governors pronounced early last year.

Mississippi Gov. Ray Mabus said the education initiatives closely follow those enacted in 1990 by the his state's legislature. But the Mississippi program is in limbo because lawmakers have not been able to fund its $138 million, three-year costs.

"State budgets are under tremendous pressure and they will remain so in the foreseeable future," said Arizona House Minority Leader Art Hamilton, vice president of the National Conference of State Legislatures.

"There have been as yet only limited discussions on how to pay for any new initiatives," Hamilton said.

Bush has enlisted business leaders to raise at least $150 million to underwrite the costs of designing the new schools, which he said should "break the mold" and throw out the rule book for existing schools.

The president also said he will ask Congress for new funds to reward schools that make progress toward the national education goals.

He proposed "President Achievement Scholarships" for low-income students with superior records. Federal college aid is now meted out with little regard to academic achievements.

Richard Rosser, president of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities, said: "It does no good to increase the number of high school graduates and their achievement levels if it becomes financially impossible for them to attend the college of their choice."

Democratic leaders of Congress said they would work with Bush on the plan, but they also accused him of waiting too long and of obstructing their past school improvement initiatives.

"We welcome his interest in education, belated as it is," said Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine.

Mitchell said Bush had failed to help Democrats pass new education legislation last fall. He added, "All of us have seen a large number of White House press conferences before. Too often, effort on behalf of the issue ... stops when the cameras stop rolling."

Numbers showing census count low draws flood of complaints

By TIM BOVEE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — City and state leaders are howling about a Census Bureau review of the 1990 census that found as many as 6.3 million people — particularly minorities — may not have been counted.

New York Attorney General Robert Abrams grumbled about a "statistical shell game." The head of the U.S. Conference of Mayors, J. Thomas Cochran, thundered that the numbers embodied "our worst fears." Massachusetts considered filing a lawsuit.

The Census Bureau on Thursday defended the 1990 tally as a good job of locating people in a complex and largely unregulated society.

Its critics countered that the bureau's self-grading shows the census is flawed and should be adjusted to add more blacks and Hispanics, who were missed in disproportionate numbers.

"The results that they have suggested today is comparable to having completely missed the cities of San Diego, Dallas, Phoenix, Detroit and San Antonio, which are five of the 10 largest cities in the country," said Randy Arndt of the National League of Cities. "And that suggests a problem."

An accurate census means money and power for areas with the most population. The count determines representation in Congress and the division of dollars in some federal programs.

If the count for blacks or Hispanics is low, then those groups will be less likely to protect their political and economic interests.

To try to discover how accurate the 1990 census was, the bureau followed up by interviewing people in 165,000 residences. They were asked if they had been counted in the census last year. From the number of people who said no, the bureau estimated the number of people that had been missed.

The new survey estimated the U.S. population at between 253 million and 255 million. The census last year put the population at 248.7 million people.

The survey found as many as 2 million blacks weren't counted, and up to 1.8 million Hispanics. Hispanics are an ethnic group and can be of any race.

Put another way, the survey found on average the census was off by 2.1 percent in counting everybody. For blacks, the count was off by 5.6 percent. For Hispanics, it was off by 6.1 percent.

That means a black or Hispanic was about three times more likely to be missed than someone in the general population.

Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher will use the survey to decide whether the census numbers should be statistically altered to account for the people that were missed.

A federal court has ordered him to make that decision by July 15 if he decides the adjusted figures would be more accurate than the census count.

The accuracy of the census count was challenged in 1980 and 1970, but federal courts stood by the original numbers. No census count has ever been changed by a statistical adjustment, such as the accuracy survey.

Rep. Tom Sawyer, D-Ohio, chairman of the House census and population subcommittee, said the survey numbers make it more likely the government will adjust the census.

An assistant census director, Peter Bounpane, said the Census Bureau did "a very good job" in its count.

"In a country like the United States, where people are free and living arrangements are variable, it is very difficult to take a census," he said.

But Sherrilyn Ifill, assistant counsel with the NAACP Legal Defense Fund in New York, said the survey numbers were an admission "that they haven't done a complete job with the census, and the most incomplete job has been with the minority communities."

U.S. commander heads for talks today with Iraq on refugees

By JOHN DANISZEWSKI
Associated Press Writer

INCIRLIK AIR BASE, Turkey (AP) — U.S., British and French military commanders today sought Iraqi assurances that allied troops building refugee camps in northern Iraq will not be attacked by Saddam Hussein's army.

The U.S. commander of the relief effort, Lt. Gen. John M. Shalikashvili, left from Incirlik on a flight to Zakho, eight miles south of the Turkish border, for a meeting with Iraqi commanders, said Capt. Ron Hahn, a U.S. military spokesman.

Shalikashvili was accompanied by British Vice Marshall Dick Johns and French Brig. Gen. Maurice LaPage for the talks, Hahn said.

The allied delegation delayed crossing the Iraqi border and postponed the noon meeting by six hours due to "transportation difficulties," Hahn said without elaborating.

U.S. Air Force spokesman Philip Crowley cautioned earlier today that there was no confirmation the Iraqi commanders would be in Zakho. He said the talks would be aimed at avoiding hostilities between the allies and Iraq.

U.S. military pilots, meanwhile, reported seeing Kurdish refugees moving toward Zakho, Crowley said. He believed they anticipated a U.S.-managed refugee settlement there.

U.S. troops also were expected today in Cukurca — site of one of Turkey's huge refugee camps. GIs were sent there today to boost Western relief efforts among the estimated 2.3 million Kurds who fled their homeland before Saddam's forces.

Tons of relief supplies continued to pour into Turkey on British, French and Canadian planes. A Soviet plane landed in Diyarbakir, Turkey, with relief supplies for the hungry, cold and wet Kurds.

In separate developments: — Iraq on Thursday submitted to the United Nations a detailed list of its chemical and biological weapons capabilities and nuclear facilities. The list responded to one of the terms of the U.N. permanent ceasefire resolution that also requires the arms be destroyed.

— A U.S. Army medical company was deployed to help with the relief effort, and its personnel will be divided into 12 separate mobile medical teams to provide first aid to the Iraqi refugees at remote sites, Pentagon spokesman Bob Hall said Thursday.

About 800,000 of Iraq's 4 million Kurds have fled to Turkey and its border, according to the latest estimates. Nearly 1.5 million have sought safety in Iran and along its frontier.

In addition, nearly 100,000 Shiites have fled either to Iran or to the allied-controlled border zone in southern Iraq since Saddam crushed Kurdish and Shiite insurrections that erupted after the Persian Gulf War ended in February.

In Baghdad, special U.N. envoy Prince Sadruddin Aga Khan on Thursday signed an agreement with Iraq creating separate camps and designated way stations in the border area to help refugees wishing to return to their homes in Iraq.

In contrast with the U.S. plan, which is to set up camps in northern Iraq that will be protected from Iraqi forces by U.S., French and British troops, the Baghdad plans calls for U.N. relief officials to work with Iraqi officials to distribute aid to the uprooted.

U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar has said no U.N. peacekeeping troops will patrol the camp, because a new Security Council resolution would be necessary to authorize such troop movement.

The Iraqi government said the U.S.-run camps were unnecessary and illegal.

The agreement it signed Thursday does not establish where the U.N. relief centers will be set up.

U.S. military commanders have dozens of scouts scouring northern Iraq for likely sites to build refugee resettlement camps that can protect fleeing Kurds from the exposure, starvation and disease that relief agencies calculate is killing as many as 1,000 of them each day.

Between 35 and 50 are in northern Iraq at any given time — so far none have had no face-to-face contact with the Iraqi military, Hall said Thursday.

Saddam's army was severely weakened in the Gulf War, in which allied forces drove Iraqi troops from Kuwait and occupied a large area of southern Iraq until this month's permanent cease-fire that allowed for a withdrawal. Allied warplanes have controlled the Iraqi skies.

But many refugees are skeptical that the settlements in northern Iraq will provide a solution to their problems with Saddam. They fear the allies will eventually abandon them.

Other doubts have been raised by relief officials who expect it will take up to 40 days to select sites and build new refugee centers.

Mahmoud Yildirim, the Turkish commander of the huge ramshackle settlement at Isikveren, estimated that many more people would likely die in that period. He estimated that up to 20 people are dying each day at the Isikveren camp alone, one of several dozen settlements of refugees.

Limited medical care is available in most camps, but the lack of sanitation and scarcity of water has led to more sickness. Distribution of supplies also remains a problem, with mobs meeting supply trucks in the camps.

In other developments, new U.S. reserve units might be called up for support duty in the Persian Gulf, perhaps on a volunteer basis, to replace other reservists whose families want them home, a congressman said today.

Even though the United States is sending home 6,000 troops a day, specialized reserve support units are needed until the very end of the pullout, said Rep. G.V. Montgomery, a member of the House Armed Services Committee. He spoke after a meeting with Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf.

U.S. officers had previously put the rate of withdrawal at 5,000 troops a day and said strength had been cut by more than half, to less than 270,000. Montgomery did not say how many new reservists would be needed.

Montgomery, a Mississippi Democrat, heads a 12-member congressional delegation that arrived in Riyadh today to begin a four-day visit of the gulf region and see how soon U.S. forces can return home.

He said he was told that in some specialized support areas, such as water purification, there are no active Army units to replace the reserves and guardsmen.

"You just can't leave them over here without some type of support. But we will look into it further by calling up other support reserve National Guard units."

"I might consider even a volunteer basis. That wasn't discussed, but when we first started this with National Guard air guardsmen, they were on a volunteer basis," Montgomery said.
