Chancellor Kohl calls for United States of Europe

By CARL HARTMAN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Chancellor Helmut Kohl, making his first visit to United States of America as head of a unified Germany, called today for creation of a United States of Europe.

Kohl said his initial goal was to insure German unity and then "to participate in building a just and lasting peaceful order for Europe which brings together all nations of our long-divided continent in common freedom."

"We now seek political unification, the construction of a United States of Europe," he continued in remarks prepared for the Atlantic Council, a private organization formed to support the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Kohl's speech was sandwiched between planned meetings with Secretary of State James A. Baker III and President Bush. The German leader has meetings scheduled with congressional leaders on Tuesday.

Kohl recalled that Sir Winston Churchill had set a United States of Europe as a goal 45 years ago. Since then, many advocates of the idea have avoided using the phrase for fear that it would scare off Europeans concerned about keeping national identities.

A German source who requested anonymity said Kohl believes the way should be kept open for the countries of Eastern Europe to join. The 12 governments now in the European Community already manage many economic policies jointly. They are planning to both broaden and tighten their organization, abolishing most barriers to trade among them next year.

The EC members already have a joint executive, the European Commission. The European Court of Justice puts community law over national law, although it has no police to enforce its rulings. The European Parliament also has limited powers, but they have been strengthened recently.

Kohl said Western European unity would strengthen rather than weaken the NATO alliance that links Europe with North America. Germany was criticized in some quarters for not joining American, British, French and other allied forces in the Persian Gulf War against Iraq, but Kohl in his speech cited military restrictions in his nation's post-World War II constitution.

He added that German troops would be able to serve outside the NATO area in the future only under the auspices of the United Nations or the Western European Union. "I aim to establish a clear constitutional basis in Germany for such an involvement," he said.

Kohl's coalition government, however, does not command the needed two-thirds parliamentary majority and would need help from the Social Democratic opposition, which is wary of military commitments.

Kohl emphasized the size of German spending to help Eastern Europe move away from communism, including $33.7 billion to the Soviet Union. The United States and many other Western governments have held back on money for the Soviets, in part because of uncertainty about the future.

"I am sure (Soviet President) Mikhail Gorbachev wishes to continue the 'new thinking' and cooperation regarding foreign policy," the German leader said.

"It cannot be our objective to help bring about the dissolution of the Soviet Union, and it would be foolish to try and do so. Such a policy would dash our hopes of achieving genuine disarmament and lasting peace, and I would never go along with it."

Kohl urged Americans to invest in Eastern Europe, noting that a branch office is being opened in New York of the organization that is privatizing East German businesses that were owned by the state under communist rule.

"Our Japanese friends, too, can help," he said. "As one of the major trading and industrial nations, it is in their own interest that our efforts should prove successful. Through such a commitment, they can at the same time demonstrate their growing awareness of Japan's global responsibility."

Authorities report 'all's quiet' following riot early Saturday

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

Efforts by residents of Pampa's south side, city police and Gray County Sheriff's Department are being credited with preventing further violence following a riot early Saturday morning on Huff Road.

Early Saturday morning, a Gray County Sheriff's deputy and police officer were injured when a crowd of mostly youths surrounded them and began throwing rocks and bottles.

Police Chief Jim Laramore and Lt. Steve Chance met throughout the day Saturday with members of the black community to attempt to prevent a second night of clashes.

In addition, Sheriff Jim Free said, "I went down to Prairie Village Saturday and visited with several folks. I don't know if they wanted me to try and negotiate this out or what. A lot of them thought what had happened was senseless. A lot of them also thought some things were said (by law enforcement officers to blacks) that shouldn't have been said."

Deputy Ken Minatrea was hit in the head with a bottle and Officer Morse Burroughs received a blow to the nose during a riot that began at 1:06 a.m. Saturday.

Police were called to the scene because of a fight between two teenage girls and reports of gunshots fired at a teenage party.

When officers detained one of the girls, a crowd of more than 100 youths and adults surrounded several officers and attacked them.

Minatrea was hit in the head with a bottle and transported to Coronado Hospital for stitches and Burroughs suffered minor injuries to his face during the altercation.

Off-duty officers and troopers from the Highway Patrol were called to the scene after the crowd refused to obey police orders to disperse.

However, by Saturday afternoon, police and the sheriff's department were working in concert with black youths and adults to head off any additional trouble.

Police on Saturday night reported the situation around Prairie Village was calm.

At 11 p.m. Saturday the only sign of activity on the south side were a game of basketball in Prairie Village Park and a large number of what appeared to be sightseers cruising the area.

City Manager Glen Hackler said today that police will continue to work with leaders in the black community to bring a peaceful resolution to any problems regarding race relations and law enforcement attitudes.

Time to call the cows!

MIAMI — The Annual Cow Calling festivities in Miami will open at 9 a.m. on Saturday, June 1, with the dedication of the addition to the Roberts County Museum.

The addition, "Pioneer Miami 1900-1910," is dedicated to that time period in Roberts County and Miami. Following the dedication, Old Timers may register and enjoy coffee and doughnuts, and visiting in the Community Building.

The barbeque luncheon will be served beginning at 11:30 a.m. in the county park with cow calling to follow. Roping follows lunch at the arena north of town.

The museum will be open all day with John Erickson, author and lecturer, displaying his Hank the Cowdog books.

Wes Phillips, park ranger at Lake Meredith, will talk about the Indians of the area, beginning with the Paleo-Indian to the Comanche. Arrowhead making will be demonstrated.

School board to meet

Pampa Independent School District trustees will meet in regular session at the Pampa High School Vocational Building on Tuesday, May 21, at 6 p.m. to conduct a public hearing on Chapter II funding.

Input will be requested from parents, teachers and administrators on the funding, which is used for support services, supplies, materials, teacher training and equipment.

The PISD is hoping to spend just under $24,000 in Chapter II funds during the 1991-92 school year.

In addition to that public hearing, board members will consider action on nine other items.

These include athletic department equipment bids, Region XVI support service contracts for 91-92, a revised school calendar, type-writer bids, and hardware for the Writing to Read and Speechview programs.

During his report to the board, Superintendent Dr. Dawson Orr is scheduled to discuss the Latch Key program, local property values and a utility cost containment program for the month of June.

Walesa seeks reconciliation with Jewish people

By SERGEI SHARGORODSKY
Associated Press Writer

JERUSALEM (AP) — President Lech Walesa of Poland today asked the Jewish people's forgiveness for the tragedy of the Nazi Holocaust that unfolded on Polish soil.

Walesa, the first Polish leader to visit Israel, began a four-day tour of the Jewish state that is seen as a quest for peace between the two peoples.

More than 3 million Jews were killed in World War II death camps in Nazi-occupied Poland, and the country had a postwar record of anti-Semitism and troubled ties with Israel.

"I am a Christian and I cannot weigh with a human scale 20 centuries of evil for both of the people. Here in Israel, in the cradle of our culture and your revival, I am asking your forgiveness," Walesa said in a speech to Parliament.

"As a representative of Poland which has fought and succeeded in achieving independence, in the name of the Polish honor, I am asking you to be just in my memory," Walesa said. He spoke in Polish.

"Let our meeting ... help to renew the links of love between Poles and Jews, Poland and Israel and the whole world," he said.

Polish-born Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, who lost his family in the Holocaust, said Israelis cannot forget the Jews killed in Poland and the many Poles who cooperated with the Nazis. But Shamir and other leaders said Israel was looking ahead to better relations with Poland.

Politicians took pains preparing

Walesa's schedule, which includes meetings with Israeli leaders, a wreath-laying ceremony at the Yad Vashem Holocaust memorial and visits to Christian sites.

Still, the visit stirred mixed emotions in Israel.

"We cannot blame the Poles for creating the death camps but a Jew cannot think of Poland without remembering the Holocaust," the daily Maariv said.

"We love Poland and we hate Poland," legislator Shevach Weiss wrote in another column.

Poland was the site of one most notorious death camps, Auschwitz and Treblinka. By the end of the war, only 250,000 Polish Jews were left out of a population of 3.5 million.

Postwar pogroms forced many Polish Jews to flee. Further emigration followed, culminating with the 1968-69 anti-Semitic purges inspired by a faction in the Communist leadership. Only 6,000 Jews now live in Poland.

About 168,500 Polish Jews settled in Israel, its fourth largest immigrant community.

While it was a Soviet satellite, Poland's relations with Israel were troubled. Although Poland was among the first countries to recognize Israel after the founding of the Jewish state in 1948, it severed diplomatic ties along with other East bloc states following the 1967 Middle East war.

The two countries renewed full diplomatic ties last year.

During his 1990 presidential campaign, Walesa was criticized as seeking to court the anti-Semitic vote by at one point proclaiming himself "100 percent Polish."

However, the 47-year-old Roman Catholic has moved to combat anti-Semitism by setting up a presidential council on Polish-Jewish ties.

New challenge may take Cruzan case a step further

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — A brain-damaged woman whose feeding tubes were removed 17 days ago was being fed again today while a Christian group pursued a challenge that could push the Nancy Cruzan right-to-die case a step further.

The group's attorney today planned to research in what court she must appeal the right-to-die decision that allowed Sue Ann Lawrence's parents to remove their daughter's feeding tubes on May 3.

In Missouri's Cruzan case — which resulted last year in the U.S. Supreme Court's first right-to-die ruling — Nancy Cruzan had told family and friends before she suffered severe brain damage in a car crash that she wouldn't want to be kept alive in such a condition.

But in the Indiana case, Ms. Lawrence has been retarded since childhood, and there has been no evidence about whether she would want to be kept alive in the persistent vegetative state she has been in since a fall in 1987, said Patti S. Mullins, attorney for Christian Fellowship With the Disabled.

"In the Cruzan case there was at least some evidence of what her intent would be," said Mullins. "In this case, the repeated testimony is that this is something nobody has ever discussed with her. The family and everyone else has testified she has never indicated any intent, at least verbally."

Citizens may witness all or part of a crime without being aware of what they have seen. Consequently, they may unknowingly possess key information that could aid the police in solving the crime.

In some instances, citizens do not contact the police with information out of fear of retaliation by the criminal if their identities were revealed.

In most instances, these citizens will not come forward with information unless they can be assured that they will be provided with complete anonymity by the police.

Also, citizens who do wish to help may not be sure who to contact or what procedure to follow to give information of this nature. Crime Stoppers is the answer.

Cash rewards of up to $1,000 are available for information leading to the arrest and indictment of persons committing crimes in Pampa.

The board of directors of Crime Stoppers urges citizen involvement in reporting crimes in the community. Crime Stoppers does not want the reporting person's name; all it wants is the information, which will be kept strictly confidential. A reporting person does not have to appear in court.

Remember - crime doesn't pay, but Crime Stoppers does. Citizens can remain anonymous and earn rewards for reporting crimes in this community by calling 669-2222.

FmHA offering rural home loan program

The Farmers Home Administration (FmHA) has implemented a new program to assist rural residents to become successful home owners.

In addition to its direct housing loan program, the federal agency is now authorized to guarantee commercial loans to purchase single-family housing. "This expands our ability to provide financing for homes in rural areas," notes FmHA Director Sox Johnson.

Under the new program, FmHA guarantees a loan made by a qualified lender against a percentage of possible loss. Loans may be approved as a mortgagee for federal housing mortgage insurance.

Additionally, lenders approved by FmHA, the Federal National Mortgage Association ("Fannie Mae"), or the Farm Credit System can qualify for the program. FmHA is authorized to guarantee up to $100 million in loans for Single-Family homes during the current fiscal year. This assistance is available for new or existing rural housing, located on individual tracts or in subdivisions, according to the State director.

Many rural residents eligible for direct FmHA loan assistance may also qualify for the guaranteed loan program. Applicants with low to moderate incomes may be eligible for loan guarantees, and low-income applicants may qualify for the agency's interest assistance program, which brings down the cost of the monthly payments.

Applicants must be without safe, decent and sanitary housing and unable to obtain a loan without the FmHA guarantee at rates and terms they can reasonably be expected to repay. "Loans may be guaranteed for up to 100 percent of the cost acquiring the house," said the state director, who added that these are 30-year, fixed-rate mortgages.

Individuals interested in the new guaranteed loan program should contact their commercial lenders or the local Farmers Home Administration County Supervisor.

Authorities: downed plane had been dropping flour bags at ground targets

CANEY, Okla. (AP) - A small plane that crashed and killed both people on board was one of several planes in a contest to drop bags of flour at ground targets in Atoka County, authorities say.

The Oklahoma Highway Patrol identified the victims of Saturday afternoon's plane crash as Charles Patrick Sims, 19, of Colbert and Robert William Rankin, 23, of Durant. Sims was the pilot, the patrol said.

A crowd and several planes had gathered at a private airstrip about 2 miles southeast of Caney, said trooper Jim Lyons.

"They were all out on a weekend outing," Lyons said. "They were doing fly-bys and a picnic." The target bombings were part of a contest between the pilots, the trooper said.

Sims' single-engine Cessna 150 made a couple of flybys and had flown back over the airstrip when its engine cut out, the patrol said.

Queen Elizabeth, Prince Philip begin Lone Star State tour

By MICHAEL GRACZYK
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Queen Elizabeth II today becomes the first British monarch to visit the Lone Star State, 151 years after Great Britain became one of the first European nations to recognize the fledgling Republic of Texas.

With all the hoopla of an election-year campaign swing, the queen and Prince Philip will be winding up their 10-day U.S. tour with a three-day stay in Austin, San Antonio, Dallas and Houston, hitting the usual tourist traps as well as attending some made-for-royalty extravaganzas. "I suspect that since you now have a president who calls Texas home may have influenced her," said Helen Mann, vice consul for the British Consulate in Houston. "There is a great deal of interest in Great Britain about Texas," notes University of Houston history professor Karl Itmann. "They have this perception about Texas from television."

Austin will get the first look at the royal couple when they arrive from Florida this afternoon for an official welcome on the steps of the Capitol Building. Some 5,000 Union Jack and Lone Star flags were being handed out to the crowd expected to attend.

Once inside, the queen gets an inscribed maple wood gavel from House Speaker Bob Bullock, a Texas flag and book about the history of the Capitol and addresses a joint session of the Legislature. Then she'll be whisked across the street to the governor's mansion for a reception.

While the queen unwinds later at her hotel, her husband visits Austin's Sematech plant for a look at an electron microscope laboratory.

A black-tie dinner is on tap for tonight at the LBJ Library.

Tuesday will be split between San Antonio and Dallas with a call at the Alamo, a barge tour along the Riverwalk and a trolley ride to the Institute of Texan Cultures before a short flight to Dallas for a music program at the Meyerson Symphony Center and a reception and dinner at State Fair Park marking the 150th anniversary of the founding of Dallas.

The prince and queen will overnight in Houston in preparation for a daylong tour of Texas' largest city.

Wednesday's events include a special parade at city hall, a music program at the Antioch Baptist Church, a tour of the new Veterans Administration Hospital near the Texas Medical Center and lunch at the Johnson Space Center.

If the planned launch of the shuttle Columbia occurs early Wednesday, the royal tour of Mission Control will coincide with a flight in progress.

The queen and her husband will host a thank-you dinner Wednesday night at the Houston Museum of Fine Arts before splitting their royal ways.

While Queen Elizabeth heads for Lexington, Ky., and a weekend at a horse farm, Prince Philip is going home.

Although this is the queen's maiden voyage to Texas, her husband visited Texas in the 1980s. Their son, Prince Charles, also stopped by in 1986 to help with the sesquicentennial celebration.

More recently the Duchess of York, more commonly known as Fergie, paid a visit last year. Princess Anne and Princess Margaret, along with the Duke and Duchess of Kent, also have been to Texas.

During the weekend, the queen cruised aboard her yacht off the Florida Keys and visited a historic fort after stopping in Washington and Miami.

Officials hope royal visit will boost tourism

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — City officials are hoping publicity surrounding Queen Elizabeth II's trip will prove an effective tourism lure and bring more visitors and convention business to the home of the Alamo.

"In the minds of the majority of people in Europe, Japan and other places it is difficult to pinpoint where we are in the United States," said Frances Schultschik, public relations director for the city's Convention and Visitors Bureau.

"With the world media focusing on San Antonio, people will have more of a realization of where we are."

San Antonio is the second stop of the queen's tour through Texas this week. The royal visit, which begins today, also includes stops in Austin, Dallas and Houston.

The queen will visit the Alamo, Riverwalk, La Villita and the Institute of Texan Cultures on Tuesday before jetting off to Dallas.

Robert Marbut Jr., president of the San Antonio Sports Foundation, is planning to use Her Majesty's visit in an attempt to lure the 1998 Goodwill Games. He calls it "the business of the visit."

"I was on the mayor's staff when Prince Charles came to town," Marbut said. "It really stimulates phone traffic in terms of inquiries into San Antonio. And many times many of them (callers) end up booking events."

The Convention and Visitors Bureau is also finding ways to profit from the queen's visit.

"It would be real difficult for us to use her picture in any kind of publicity. I'm not sure that we could do that," said Ms. Schultschik. "Our major concern right now is trying to create as many photo opportunities that will go on the wires around the country and around the world."

"The national and international attention that's focused on the city puts it in a high-profile situation. And, in that sense, that's attention that we, as promoters of the city, couldn't possibly purchase," Ms. Schultschik said.

Jose Luis Garcia, who directs the city's international relations office, says that exposure translates to dollars.

"It indirectly brings in tourism, in the long run," Garcia said. "I think it will continue to foster that awareness overseas — not just to Great Britain, but the United Kingdom itself."

Lobbyists hop on free-trade gravy train

By JOAN MOWER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mexico is this year's gravy train for high-priced lobbyists.

"The Mexican government has more access to Congress than a worker in the United States," complained Rep. Marcy Kaptur, D-Ohio, who has long advocated strict laws on lobbying by foreign interests.

Mexico's government and business interests are spending hundreds of thousands of dollars to push for a free-trade agreement with the United States.

Mexico has hired some of the town's best-known power brokers, including Joseph O'Neill, Robert Keefe and Charles Walker.

O'Neill, former chief of staff to Senate Finance Committee Chairman Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, is being paid $20,000 a month to "contact members of Congress" and "prepare papers, one-pagers and letters," according to forms he filed with the Justice Department's foreign agents registration unit.

Walker received a similar fee to "make contact and meet with U.S. legislators."

Burson-Marsteller, the public relations giant, is quarterbacking efforts to promote Mexico's point of view. Among other things, it encouraged "corporate contacts to submit columns to newspapers" on free trade, records show.

Last year, the Mexican government paid Burson $1 million for its trade and anti-drug campaigns. At Burson's subsidiary, Gold and Liebgood, lobbyists earn $250 an hour.

Fleishman-Hillard, another public relations company, is also on the Mexican payroll.

In general, the free-trade fight pits Mexican and U.S. business interests against labor unions, health and environmental organizations and farm groups. The bill would remove tariff barriers between the two countries, allowing goods to move freely.

President Bush says he can't proceed with talks on a free-trade agreement unless he has the right to negotiate under the "fast-track" procedure, which prohibits Congress from amending the pact once it's negotiated and signed.

"It's the top objective of every business lobbyist in the country."

— Pat Choate

If Congress doesn't vote by June 1 to kill fast-track, the procedure will automatically be extended for two years. Two key committees — House Ways and Means and Senate Finance — have already killed efforts to eliminate fast-track.

"This is the biggest money lobbying bill of the year," said Pat Choate, author of "Agents of Influence," a book about foreign lobbying in the United States that focuses on the Japanese influence.

"It's the top objective of every business lobbyist in the country."

Choate said the lobbying bill for free trade could reach $100 million over the next couple of years. About a third of the money would likely come from Mexico, he said.

Javier Travino, a spokesman for the Mexican Embassy, said he had no estimate of the amount being spent on the lobbying campaign.

"What we have been trying to do is the dissemination of information," he said.

Lobbyists for both sides have been omnipresent in the halls of Congress this month.

"We've been lobbied at every corner: breakfast, lunch, dinner and trips," said Kaptur, who opposes the free-trade agreement.

The American Chamber of Commerce of Mexico recently honored Carla Hills, the U.S. Trade Representative, at a black-tie dinner for more than 100 people — including politicians — at the swank Four Seasons Hotel. The evening's topic: free trade.

Mexico, a poor country without the resources of Japan and Korea, has caught on quickly to the Washington game.

Lobbyist O'Neill said Mexico normally eschews lobbyists, but the government "wanted to be part of the process" on a free-trade agreement.

"It certainly has generated a lot of interest in Mexico," said Mike Smith of the law firm Steptoe and Johnson. Smith, a former U.S. trade official who is now a lawyer, represents Coe, a Mexican private sector group.

In January, the Mexican government set up a special eight-man office to coordinate lobbying and public relations activities.

"People have very little information about Mexico," said office director Hermann van Bertraub.

He and his staff have traveled around the country extensively, talking to groups as far away as Denver and Portland, Ore. Their message? Mexico has reformed its economy and is ready to do business with America.

The Mexican government's interests are backed by U.S. corporate support but opposed by labor groups, which fear Americans will lose to Mexico's cheap labor.

Bolstering labor is Public Citizen, Ralph Nader's group; environmental groups such as Friends of the Earth, Greenpeace, the National Toxics Campaign and the Sierra Club; and agriculture organizations such as the American Agriculture Movement and the American Corn Growers Association.

Groups that represent business — the Business Roundtable, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the National Association of Manufacturers and the National Foreign Trade Council — support a free-trade pact.

Major corporations such as AT&T and Johnson and Johnson joined the Coalition for Trade Expansion, a group formed to fight for fast track.

Overcrowding sparked prison riot, says American diplomat to Mexico

By ARNIE STAPLETON
Associated Press Writer

MATAMOROS, Mexico (AP) — Mexican authorities will not storm a state prison taken over by inmates during a riot in which 18 prisoners were killed and eight wounded, an American diplomat said.

The prisoners seized control of the Tamaulipas prison Friday during gang fighting that began when a prisoner apparently tried to kill another inmate described as a drug lord.

The prison battle was fought with machine guns, knives and Molotov cocktails.

By late Sunday, the tension between prisoners and authorities had fizzled out and family members were allowed to bring food and water to their loved ones.

Some of the prisoners surrendered their weapons Sunday, said U.S. Consul Donald E. Wells, who is based in Matamoros.

"We know that the governor's chief of staff has been in the prison talking to the prisoners, so that we are fairly sure that there is not a dangerous ongoing situation to the prisoners," Wells said.

"A state of calm has returned inside."

The estimated 100 police officers and military troops who stood guard outside the prison Sunday likely will not rush the prison, Wells said.

"They have never done that historically. They usually negotiate their way back inside and they do not move back in with a show of force. That is not the way the Mexicans run their prisons," he said.

Mexican prisons are not as heavily guarded as American prisons and authorities rely on trustees to maintain order, Wells said.

A state judicial police officer, Sergio Gonzalez, also told The Associated Press that officials did not expect to take any action Sunday to break the stalemate.

Overcrowding was a major factor in the escalating tension at the prison, Wells said. Ironically, he said, the overcrowding resulted from President Carlos Salinas de Gortari's crackdown on the drug trade.

"We watched this jail go from a population of about 250 to 300 when I arrived in 1987 to its current population of somewhere between 1,400 and 1,500," he said.

The riot demonstrates the need for authorities to expedite the completion of a 3,000-inmate prison being built in Valle Hermoso about 25 miles west of Matamoros, Wells said. The new prison is scheduled for completion by the end of the year.

Tensions also were heightened because hardened criminals are housed indiscriminately with minor offenders, Wells said.

Thirty-two inmates have identified themselves as Americans, including two women. None of them were among the dead or wounded, Wells said.

Earlier Sunday, about 35 inmates unfurled a banner from an 80-foot tower that said "We're Fine," and there was no indication they intended to surrender.

The banner, which appeared to be a bed sheet, had four lines that read: "Respect the Family, There Is No Problem, Send Food, We're Fine."

Initially, relatives of the inmates were allowed to drop off food and water at the front gate of the prison, located in a residential area on the western edge of Matamoros.

Then early Sunday afternoon, prison officials let groups of five people in every five minutes to see the prisoners. Hundreds queued to get in.

Maria Candelaja Aldama, who saw her son briefly, said: "He's fine. I didn't want to ask him about what happened. I just wanted to make sure he was OK."

Rosie Aguirre, who went in to see her husband, said he was "doing fine."

"They have water, food, everything," she said.

Authorities said the trouble began Friday evening after one prisoner, German Yezpe, tried to shoot reputed drug lord Oliverio Chavez Araujo.

Chavez, 33, escaped with a minor wound to the jaw, but Yezpe was killed by Chavez's armed bodyguards — also inmates.

Authorities said Yezpe apparently was retaliating for the deaths of his brother and sister-in-law, William and Judith Botero, in Brownsville last week. The Boteros had just been released from the Tamaulipas prison after serving two-year drug sentences.

Brownsville-area police said the deaths were believed to be part of drug turf battles between Chavez and Juan Garcia Abrego, a rival reputed drug baron. They said Chavez was believed to be running a drug ring from inside the prison, using a cellular telephone.

At least three of the dead were buried Sunday.

A handful of people gathered during a small graveside ceremony for two brothers, Donaciano and Felix Gonzalez Gonzalez.

"I am mad because God doesn't exist," said their sister, Adriana Gonzalez. "If he existed, they wouldn't have been killed."

Workshop to focus on cutting school energy costs

Gov. Ann W. Richards has announced that her Energy Office, in conjunction with the Texas Association of School Administrators, will host a two-day workshop in Amarillo on June 12-13 to help public schools in the Panhandle area save money on energy costs.

The workshop is part of a statewide effort by the governor's Energy Office to help schools reduce utility costs, freeing those dollars for direct classroom efforts.

The two-day workshop will be held at the Holiday Inn in Amarillo. Sessions will run each day from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. All public school officials and campus energy managers are invited to register and attend.

Training will be conducted by professional energy engineers with extensive experience in school facilities and by successful Texas school energy managers. Sessions will cover both technical information for cutting utility costs on individual campuses and administrative techniques for setting up and maintaining exemplary district-wide energy management programs.

To register, or for more information, contact Ben Graves at the Texas Association of School Managers, 1-512-477-6361.

Jury selection begins today in prison guard trial

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — A former state prison guard was scheduled to go to trial today in connection with the 1986 gang-related killing of an inmate.

Luis Sandoval, 27, is charged with murder in the slaying of Joe Arendondo.

Sandoval, who was a guard at the Ellis I unit, is accused of leaving open a door so rival gang members could get at the prisoner. Arendondo was fatally stabbed and beaten.

Sandoval was to have gone on trial March 18, but he fled Texas claiming he feared for his life.

He contacted his attorney from Mexico and California. The defendant eventually was arrested in Van Nuys, Calif. Sandoval also faces a charge of failure to appear.

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Saddam Hussein needs to be tried

The 12 nations of the European Community are seeking to bring war crimes charges against Saddam Hussein. They believe his wars against Iran and Kuwait, and his genocide against the Kurds, require a trial of the kind faced by German and Japanese militarists after World War II.

The initial U.S. reaction to the EC's unanimous vote was not encouraging. Asked about it, Defense Secretary Dick Cheney said, "If they want to send somebody to Baghdad to arrest the gentleman, we have nothing against it."

That is an inadequate response. To his credit, Bush has dispatched U.S. troops to join allies in protecting Kurdish refugees in northern Iraq. But there is more to the Europeans' proposition than arresting Saddam.

Since the cease-fire, Bush has done little to deal with the war's aftermath. The White House finally admitted it had underestimated the savagery of the suppression of the Kurds, which the United Nations' claims had created the largest human exodus in history. Over the weekend, the Kurdish rebels said they had reached a tentative agreement with Baghdad to receive some type of autonomy within the Iraqi nation; but an agreement with Saddam is nothing to take to the bank, if his past actions are any indication of the credit to attach to Saddam's promises.

It would be nice if someone delivered up Saddam. But even without a defendant, a trial would serve the right political purpose. When the EC brings its case to the United Nations, the United States should support it.

A war crimes trial would provide the setting, as Nuremberg did after World War II, for hearing the evidence against Saddam. It's no accident that the Europeans, led by the Germans, are pressing for a war crimes trial. Nuremberg was a new development in international law; establishing the principle that those responsible for waging aggressive war should be held to account.

Yes, at Nuremberg, the victors had most of the surviving Nazi ringleaders in hand, and we don't yet have Saddam. But the importance of a war crimes trial is in presenting the evidence, in bearing witness. If you get the culprit, so much the better.

A war crimes trial would send a clear message to other potential aggressors. It also would send a message to the Iraqis that they will remain pariahs so long as Saddam rules. A war crimes trial increases the chances that Saddam will, sooner or later, pay for his actions.

"Think nothing of it, Mr. Trump! Golly, we bankers have every reason to keep you afloat."

The jokes aren't funny now

WASHINGTON — Some dates cling in the memory like cockleburrs on a dog's back. My parents remembered a November day in 1918. My sons remember another November day — the day John Kennedy was killed. My own generation cherishes a vivid recollection of April 12, 1945. Let me recall it for a moment. The reason will be apparent.

It was a Thursday. I was working late in the city room of the afternoon News Leader in Richmond, Va. A little before 6 o'clock The Associated Press teletype suddenly erupted with a bell-ringing alarm. Flash! "Roosevelt dead."

For millions of Americans who were born about 1920, the news was stunning. Franklin Delano Roosevelt was the only president we had ever known. Our first reaction was sheer disbelief — the report could not be true. Then came a paralyzing second thought: My God, we said, Harry Truman! Harry TRUMAN is president!

What did we know of Truman? Almost nothing. As a product of the Old Pendergast machine in Kansas City, he had been elected to the Senate in 1934 and re-elected in 1940, but he was little known beyond the Potomac. At the Democratic convention of 1944, Roosevelt felt compelled to dump Vice President Henry Wallace. He wanted William O. Douglas as a replacement, but Douglas could not be talked off the Supreme Court. Roosevelt then settled upon the insignificant junior senator from Missouri, and with the approval of labor boss Sidney Hillman, the convention cast its vote for Truman.

Everyone knows the rest of the story. Harry Truman went on to become one of the most admired presidents in the history of the office. Let me return to current events.

James J. Kilpatrick

By Tuesday morning George Bush's heart was beating in its normal rhythm. He was out of the hospital, back in the Oval Office, bantering with reporters. But the newspapers were filled with macabre speculation: Suppose Bush had died. My God, we would have said, Dan Quayle is president! And the remarkable thing is that after the shock had subsided, the nation would have rallied to Quayle's support.

End of tasteless speculation. The point is worth making that vice presidents generally are chosen for reasons that have nothing to do with succession to the presidency. Think of a few vice presidential candidates we have known.

In 1960 John F. Kennedy asked for Lyndon Johnson for brazenly political reasons. He desperately needed the 24 electoral votes of Texas — or thought he needed them — and Johnson could deliver.

Four years later, when Republicans nominated Barry Goldwater for an exercise in futility, Goldwater astonished the convention by asking for William E. Miller as his running mate. Miller? Goldwater later explained that he chose Bill Miller to annoy Lyndon Johnson.

Why did Richard Nixon choose Spiro Agnew as his running mate in 1968? Only Nixon knows. As the undistinguished governor of a politically unimportant state (Maryland), Agnew brought no additional strength to the Republican ticket.

Remember George McGovern's campaign of 1972? His first choice was a pleasant political unknown, Sen. Tom Eagleton. His second choice was R. Sargent Shriver. The country blinked. R. Sargent Who?

Of more recent memory, let us suppose that Walter Mondale had been elected in 1984, only to be succeeded by Geraldine Ferraro. Think about it.

From the moment that Dan Quayle came boating across the Mississippi at the New Orleans convention of 1988, political buffs have wondered why on earth Bush chose Dan Quayle. To this day Bush never has candidly explained his thinking. Supposedly Quayle would appeal to younger voters. His good looks might attract the ladies (chauvinistic thought!). Other possibilities, notably Sen. Bob Dole, would upstage Bush. Sen. Nancy Kassebaum was wrong on abortion. And so on.

Over the past two years Quayle occasionally has embarrassed his boss. He has a way of doing dumb things. In Central America he leaves watching reporters dumbfounded as he buys — and demonstrates — an obviously male doll. In the midst of the uproar over John Sununu's abuse of airplane privileges, Quayle flies off to Augusta for a few rounds of golf.

Let us pray for the good health of George Bush, but let us be fair to Dan Quayle. No vice president is expected to be brilliant, and Quayle has lived up to that expectation, but he has grown in the job and he's doing well. Suppose we knock off the Quayle jokes. Somehow they're not so funny any more.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Monday, May 20th, the 140th day of 1991. There are 225 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On May 20, 1927, Charles Lindbergh took off from Roosevelt Field in Long Island, N.Y., aboard the Spirit of St. Louis on his historic solo journey to France.

On this date:

In 1506, Christopher Columbus died in poverty in Spain.

In 1830, the first railroad timetable was published, in the newspaper Baltimore American.

In 1861, North Carolina voted to secede from the Union.

In 1861, the capital of the Confederacy was moved from Montgomery, Ala., to Richmond, Va.

In 1902, the United States ended its occupation of Cuba.

In 1926, inventor Thomas Edison expressed the view that Americans would prefer silent movies over talking pictures.

In 1932, Amelia Earhart took off from Newfoundland for Ireland to become the first woman to fly solo across the Atlantic.

Serial killer is a predator man

The expression "serial killer" tends to sanitize the most fiendish of criminals.

He is a person — almost always a man — who has a higher than average IQ.

He does not necessarily lurk in the shadows. He may work in your office, appear pleasant, even attractive.

But periodically he goes hunting.

Like a predatory animal he stalks possible victims — almost always women — and rehearses in his effective brain a sequence of hideous tortures.

If it's you he is contemplating, he will want to watch you suffer. He will want to keep you alive and under his control for a long period of time. He anticipates your tears and your screams and your struggles.

Unlike any other predator in the world, man or beast, this serial killer gets visceral pleasure out of prolonged agony.

To a sadist, your pain is his pleasure.

And there are at this moment 35 to 50 serial killers in our nation stalking somebody.

Is there no way you can identify him? There are clues.

The FBI has established a National Center for the Analysis of Violent Crime, headed by Special

Paul Harvey

Agent John Douglas.

The center employs an elite team of behavioral scientists.

The book and the movie, The Silence of the Lambs, were based on the work of the FBI center at Quantico.

In the movie the psychopathic killer, Jamie Gumb, was a composite of three real-life serial murders: Ed Gein, Ted Bundy and Gary Heidneck.

Special Agent Douglas says, "With serial killers — it's as though they all read the same book on how to commit crimes. They all tend to do the same things. They all take time-out for cooling off between crimes."

Douglas and his partner Robert Ressler have gone to prisons to talk to John Wayne Gacy, Son of Sam Berowitz, Richard Speck and others — sometimes at considerable risk to themselves. One unarmed agent was trapped in an interview room for 15 minutes with a 6-foot-9, 295-pound serial killer who had dismembered and beheaded his dozen victims. While most serial killers are by nature cowards, this one knew he had nothing to lose.

Before help arrived there were some chilling threats.

I am trying not to be unnecessarily graphic, but one of the killers already portrayed in a movie chose to wear clothing made from the skins of victims that he had skinned alive.

So — they tend to be cowards, they tend to appear innocent, better than average IQ — what else?

The portrait that emerges from studies by the FBI Center reveals that all serial killers are unable to establish or maintain relationships with women.

They have a history of sexual and/or physical abuse and neglect in early childhood.

They have a history of bed-wetting extending into their teens.

And their cruelty to humans almost invariably begins with cruelty to animals.

When the political accusations fly

By WILLIAM A. RUSHER

I should have known better than to trust the first television accounts of The Washington Post's attack on John Sununu. They reported the Post's charge that Sununu had used military jets for political and private trips. But, perhaps because they hated to spoil a good story, they failed to add, as the Post did, that a presidential spokesman had cited a White House policy, antedating the Bush administration, that requires chiefs of staff to use military planes in order to remain in secure contact with the White House at all times.

The next day's TV accounts included that crucial addendum, giving me the mistaken impression, which I relayed and for which I apologize, that it was not included in the Post's initial story.

But the addendum does, in any case, spoil the story. If anything is vulnerable here, it's not Sununu — it's the policy, as The New Republic recognized in its May 13 issue, shifting its emphasis accordingly.

So Sununu is probably out of the woods. This is all the likelier because of the simultaneous revival of the 1980 hostages rumor — a story that really "has legs," as they say inside the Beltway. For it is an attempt, not to get Sununu, but to defame Reagan and ruin Bush.

Coming on top of Kitty Kelley's malodorous job on Nancy Reagan, it suggests that the liberals are having quite a spring.

Since the rumor is an ancient one, we are told that it is being revived now only because Gary Sick has changed his mind and now believes it.

Just why Sick's opinion should be so decisive is unclear. Sick served on the National Security Council staff straight through the Carter administration, but his services were evidently not wanted by the incoming Reagan forces — a fact that may well have left psychological scars.

Now Sick appears at the head of a whole band of carefully anonymous accusers, to contend that the late CIA chief William Casey, who was Reagan's campaign manager in 1980, conspired with a high Iranian official in Madrid that year to prevent our hostages in Tehran from being released before the presidential election — i.e., when it could do Jimmy Carter some good.

Some of the sources also identify then-vice presidential candidate Bush as having attended a similar meeting in Paris that year for the same purpose. But Sick, though not above floating this rumor, is cautious about endorsing it. Casey is another matter.

Now, it is important here to keep one's eye on the ball. In 1980, the Iran hostage crisis was a major issue in American politics. The Iranians despised Jimmy Carter — far more, presumably, than they disliked Reagan, who after all had had no role in the hostage affair.

This is apparent from the moment they chose to release the hostages: the very day of Reagan's inauguration (though not, as conspiracy theorists would prefer, a few days later, which might have left the favorable impression that the new president had moved decisively to free the hostages).

So it is possible that one or more Iranians, authorized by the ayatollah or otherwise, approached the Reagan forces during 1980 with some sort of deal in mind. In fact, as Reagan's subsequent NSC director, Richard Allen, has repeatedly asserted, one apparent free-lancer did precisely that, meeting Allen in a Washington hotel lobby — and getting exactly nowhere.

But if one did approach Casey, and even if Casey agreed to meet him in Paris, that is a long way from proving Sick's charge that Casey, now dead and unable to defend himself, thereupon entered into a conspiracy to delay the hostages' release until after Election Day.

A lot of people have a big stake in assuming that. Don't let them get away with it.

Political rivals clash in India's elections, 27 die

By ARTHUR MAX
Associated Press Writer

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Under heavy police guard, Indians voted today in a national election that was expected to return former Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi to power — but without a majority.

In a striking departure for Indian politics, a right-wing party that wants to make Hinduism officially dominant in the secular nation was expected to take second place in the elections for the 543-seat lower house of Parliament.

More than 15 million police and 63,000 paramilitary officers stood guard to prevent a resurgence of the violence that has plagued the campaign.

By the time polls closed after 10 hours, 27 people were reported killed in clashes between political rivals that disrupted voting at some of the 240,000 operating polling booths, officials and news reports said.

Balloting was suspended in dozens of places after hooligans seized control of the voting stations or stole ballot boxes, election officials said.

Twelve people were killed and shops were burned in rioting between Hindus and Muslims in Meerut, 50 miles northeast of New Delhi, police said. Authorities imposed a curfew on the city of 400,000 people.

A 3-year-old boy was killed with pellets from a primitive gun when he was caught in a cross-fire in a village in Uttar Pradesh state. Fourteen people were killed in scattered violence elsewhere, Indian news agencies reported.

At least 10 people were killed in street fights and other election-related terrorism on the eve of the polling. In the last month, four candidates and more than 100 campaign workers have been killed.

Voting was held today for 204 legislative seats. Voting was also to be held on Thursday and Sunday to enable security forces to concentrate on potentially troublesome areas. The first results will be released May 27.

Rain fell on New Delhi this morning and temperatures were slightly cooler than the normal 105 degrees. Turnout was light early in the day, but appeared to pick up later. The average turnout in general elections in India is 56 percent. Gandhi, who cast his ballot early today, confidently predicted victory for his Congress Party.

Congress, which had governed India for all but four years since independence from Britain in 1947, lost its majority in 1989 when a minority government led by V.P. Singh took over.

"We believe the voters will give us a clear majority," said the son of assassinated Indian stateswoman Indira Gandhi. "We will bring a government that will bring rapid changes."

Opinion polls forecast that Congress would emerge the largest party, but fall short of a majority.

The traditional No. 2 party, Janata Dal, was not expected to do well. Two of its governments fell within 18 months. Singh's government fell after less than a year in the wake of religious riots and student protests over an affirmative-action program for lower-caste Hindus.

A minority government formed by Chandra Shekhar, from another faction, then was formed with Gandhi's support. He resigned in March, claiming Gandhi was using his parliamentary strength to wield power.

Expected to take second place in the elections was the Bharatiya Janata Party, which advocates an India based on the domination of the Hindu tradition and religion, as opposed to the Nehru model of a secular state.

Bharatiya Janata says all Indians should live under the same laws, based on Hindu tradition. Muslims, for example, would be prohibited from having more than one wife.

Eighty-two percent of India's 840 million people are Hindu but there is a large Muslim minority.

About 197 million voters were eligible to cast ballots in nine states today. In all, India has 514 million voters.

Elections have been postponed until June in Punjab, the center of a Sikh insurrection, and in the eastern state of Assam, where militants are campaigning to leave the Indian federation. The two states control a total of 27 parliament seats.

No elections are being held in the six constituencies of Kashmir, which is facing a rebellion by pro-Pakistan and pro-independence Muslim mili-

Soviet lawmakers approve bill to lift citizens' travel restrictions

By ANDREW KATELL
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — Lawmakers today approved a bill that will lift the travel restrictions that were a hallmark of authoritarian Communist rule, allowing virtually all Soviet citizens who can obtain visas to travel abroad.

President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, under pressure from Western governments, has been pushing for passage of the legislation.

President Bush has said that only when the law is adopted can he give Moscow most-favored-nation status, which lowers tariffs.

The Supreme Soviet legislature approved the bill by a vote of 320-37 with 32 abstentions.

The law does not state when travel restrictions would be lifted, but the Supreme Soviet approved a separate resolution setting a target date of Jan. 1, 1993. The resolution also asks the national Cabinet to report within two weeks on whether some measures can take effect sooner.

Viktor Kucherenko, chairman of the legislature's budget committee, said initial plans for a July 1992 target date did not give the government enough time to prepare for the expected travel boom.

"We cannot just remove the collar from emigrants, kick them out with our feet and say, 'Go wherever you want,'" Kucherenko said.

"We must create conditions not like those we have now — an intolerable half-year wait for tickets and a wait of months to exchange money — but normal conditions, for which a year of preparation is needed."

The bill received initial approval in November 1989, but final approval was repeatedly delayed. Many lawmakers objected to the anticipated $160 million cost of carrying out the law.

Lawmaker Fyodor Burlatsky, the main author of the legislation, has estimated that 500,000 Soviets will emigrate annually and 5-7 million will travel abroad when it comes into effect.

He estimates the law's implementation will cost 160 to 240 million rubles ($269 to $403 million) in Soviet currency and 110 million rubles ($185 million) in foreign currency.

The law would allow travel abroad for virtually anyone who has permission from another country to enter, and has no outstanding alimony obligations, criminal charges or recent knowledge of state secrets.

It establishes appeal procedures for people denied permission to leave the Soviet Union.

Previous votes on the legislation have fallen short in one or the other of the two chambers of the Soviet legislature. Last week, lawmakers agreed to procedures that led to today's joint session and vote.

Bush has been pressing Gorbachev to lobby for the bill, which enacts into law many of the emigration reforms the Soviet leader has already ordered the bureaucracy to carry out.

The Soviet government's past refusal to grant its citizens exit visas has created a class of people called "refuseniks," soured superpower relations and prompted the United States to withhold preferential trade status.

The anticipated boom in foreign travel will force the cash-strapped Soviet government to print more passports and visa documents, upgrade rail, highway and air transportation and hire more bureaucrats to process travel applications.

It is also expected to impose a burden on European nations, to which Soviet citizens are expected to flock in great numbers because of the desperate condition of their economy.

Storms kill 35, 37 more missing in disaster-beseiged Bangladesh

By FARID HOSSAIN
Associated Press Writer

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — A tornado and a half-dozen storms tore through Bangladesh over the weekend, killing 35 people and compounding the miseries caused by last month's deadly cyclone, officials and news reports said today.

Tornadoes, squalls, rain and floods have plagued virtually the entire country since April 30, when a cyclone and tidal wave killed more than 139,000 people on the southeast coast and offshore islands. At least 217 people have died in storms and floods this month.

A 7,000-member U.S. military task force is bringing food, medicines and other relief to millions of cyclone survivors, who are beset by hunger, disease and exposure to foul weather.

The U.S. Marines and sailors, homebound to California from the Persian Gulf War, were diverted to Bangladesh for the relief-and-rescue operation.

Since the American operation started Wednesday, the task force has delivered 800 tons of food and medicines, Bangladeshi relief officials said.

Officials in Barisal, 75 miles south of Dhaka, said today that the death toll from Saturday night's tornado rose to 16 with one more body recovered from the debris overnight.

The tornado ripped through 47 villages, destroying more than 12,000 mud-and-thatch houses. At least 200 people were injured, the officials said in telephone interviews. They spoke on condition of anonymity.

An independent newspaper, Khabar, put the tornado death toll at 50.

The government-owned newspaper Dainik Bangla said thunderstorms left at least 19 people dead Saturday and Sunday in the northern and western districts of Mymensingh, Bogra, Manikganj, Netrokona and Jhenidah.

Inqilab, an independent daily, said at least 30 people were missing after a boat carrying them sank in flood waters Sunday in the northeastern Sylhet district.

Itifaq, another independent daily, said seven people were feared drowned in Narsingdi, 25 miles east of Dhaka, when a boat capsized in a storm Sunday.

The weather office said more rains on Sunday worsened the flood situation in the northeast where four more people drowned, raising the official death toll to 89.

The government said more than 170,000 people have been displaced by flooding, many of them taking shelter on roads that are still above water.

Officials said the Dhaka-Sylhet highway was closed to small vehicles Sunday after flood waters swamped the road at four places.

The flooding in northeastern districts of Sylhet, Sunamganj, Habiganj and Netrokona is a problem that routinely occurs during torrential rains and runoffs from the hills of neighboring India.

Bangladesh's most devastating floods usually occur in July and August when the Brahmaputra and Ganges rivers, which originate in the Himalayan mountains, burst their banks.

The two rivers, among the biggest in the country, are rising but remain below flood level, flood control officials said.

North Korean officials deny reports of higher temperature at nuclear plant

By KATHY WILHELM
Associated Press Writer

BEIJING (AP) — North Korea's vice foreign minister today denied South Korean reports of a sharp increase in ground temperatures at a North Korean nuclear facility.

Chon In Chol spoke during a recess in negotiations with Japanese officials on establishing diplomatic relations between the two countries.

The session ended with the two sides deadlocked over Japan's demand that North Korea allow international inspection of its nuclear facilities.

Chon, who heads the North Korean delegation, said Tuesday's talks will focus on bilateral issues, including North Korea's demand for Japanese compensation for 35 years of Japanese colonial rule. The Japanese team said there was little chance for progress without agreement on the nuclear issue.

South Korea's Ministry of Science and Technology said Friday that U.S. satellite data showed temperatures at North Korea's Yongbyon nuclear reactor rose briefly from a normal 50 to 59 degrees to 95 degrees earlier in the week.

U.S. officials said they could not confirm any such increase occurred. Asked about the reported increase, Chon told reporters, "It is a false report."

The International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna said Yongbyon is a small research reactor, and that the reported temperature increase was not likely to be the result of a major incident.

North Korea joined the nuclear non-proliferation treaty in 1985 but has refused to let the Vienna-based agency inspect its facilities. It demands that the United States simultaneously allow inspection of its military bases in South Korea, where North Korea claims nuclear weapons are kept.

Chon told a news conference at the North Korea Embassy that the issue could be settled only through talks between North Korea and the United States.

Japanese Embassy spokesman Yuji Kumamaru said Japan did not like to use the word "condition," but that allowing nuclear inspections was "a very important part of the whole process of normalization."

North Korea reportedly has two small nuclear reactors and is building a third reactor, a reprocessing plant and a uranium mine. Japan, the United States and the Soviet Union have expressed concern that North Korea may be able to produce nuclear weapons by the mid-1990s.

North Korea says it does not have nuclear weapons or plan to make them.

Kumamaru said Japan also wants to discuss the resumption of dialogue between North and South Korea and entry of both Koreas into the United Nations. Chon insisted these issues have nothing to do with North Korean-Japanese ties.

Despite the lack of progress, Chon said he was optimistic.

"Both sides have the understanding that we are in the same boat and this boat should not be stopped," he said. "Having the talks itself is progress."

Allied troops follow U.N. guards into provincial capital of Dohuk

DOHUK, Iraq (AP) — Allied troops today entered this provincial capital to assess relief needs, a day after a first contingent of U.N. guards arrived as part of foreign efforts to encourage the return of Kurdish refugees.

The non-combat allied troops were to assess how best to restore electricity, telephones and other services, while the 10 unarmed United Nations guards were to begin patrols in the area to reassure the Kurds.

Dohuk was home to between 250,000 and 350,000 people before the failed Kurdish rebellion that broke out in the wake of the Persian Gulf War. Attacked and plundered by government forces, the city is now largely deserted.

Most of the 440,000 refugees who fled Iraq to the Turkish border have returned to their homes, but thousands of Dohuk residents remain fearful of returning because of the city's exclusion from the "security zone" protected by allied forces.

The uniformed allied troops arrived today in a convoy of about 20 vehicles, said Lt. Cmdr. John Hopkins, a spokesman at the air base in Incirlik, Turkey, where Kurdish relief efforts are coordinated.

The team includes technicians who specialize in humanitarian relief, disaster assistance, engineering, logistics, medical aid, security and communications, he said.

As well, the troops were accompanied by Iraqi liaison officers. Allied and Iraqi commanders decided to make the visit jointly as part of efforts to create a feeling of security for the Kurds, he said.

The survey team will evaluate the current condition of services in Dohuk and determine how to restore electricity, telephones, sanitation and hospital care.

Its findings were to be discussed at a meeting at the Dohuk governor's house later today. A separate U.N. team also began surveying the city Sunday to determine relief needs.

The 10 U.N. guards drove into the city Sunday as part of an agreement with Baghdad to allow up to 500 U.N. guards to provide security in the north and south.

Marathon divorce trial runs stormy, expensive course

By MIKE COCHRAN
Associated Press Writer

FORT WORTH (AP) — A major league dispute over a baseball card fortune has reached the ninth inning in a divorce case that one attorney likened to the World Series.

"We believe it's the longest and most expensive divorce jury trial in Texas history," says Jim Loveless, a Fort Worth attorney. "And the novel legal theories and enormous litigative expenses may be unprecedented."

The warring parties are John and Ann Flavin, a low-profile, heavy-hitting Arlington couple who split over management of a sports trading card empire valued between $37 million and $169 million.

Jurors set its value last month at $63 million. Also at the heart of the marital breakup was discord over the couple's children.

Ann's side maintains her husband was "motivated solely by greed." John's side insists the opposing stance was "ludicrous, stupid, novel and untenable."

Millions have gone for legal costs, and the meter's still running.

Now a state district court judge must determine a "fair and just" division of community property, roughly $75 million, a figure muddled by debts, taxes and legal arguments.

In the beginning, both sides wanted a jury trial, in itself a bit out of the ordinary. The marathon two-month jury phase ended April 15, but batteries of high-priced lawyers spent another month arguing over who should get what.

Early this year, they commandeered "war rooms" at the nearby four-star Worthington Hotel and stocked them with food, drink, computers, secretaries, phones and files.

They periodically swept for enemy "bugging" devices and used shredders to dispose of work materials.

Testimony in the final phase ended last week, but there are scant clues how and when Judge Brian Carver will render his judgment.

The courtroom drama has attracted more than a little attention because of the money, the acrimony, the lawyers, the bizarre claims and the unique task of attaching a price tag to a sports card business so it can be cut up by a divorcing couple.

"This is the World Series," insists Loveless, an attorney for Ann Flavin.

Based on Ann's testimony, litigation costs already exceed $12.8 million.

John and Ann Flavin met and married in Iowa in May 1981, moved to Texas and pursued what a lawyer called the "American Dream" until the marriage crumbled.

She is a stout, attractive, brown-haired and stern woman, who one day wore a black coat and a frown to the witness stand and removed neither.

He is a spiffy dresser, short and slight with gray hair and a matching moustache.

The couple separated Feb. 1, 1989, and Ann filed for divorce four months later. John remained in the Arlington home and Ann moved a few blocks away.

John, now 56, managed Triangle Supply Co., a Dallas plumbing supply firm the couple purchased in the early 80s with a loan from Ann's father, a wealthy Minnesota car dealer and rancher.

With John at Triangle, Ann, now 36, obtained her master's degree in business from Southern Methodist University.

In late 1983, using money borrowed largely from Ann's parents, the couple bought an ailing Grand Prairie printing company, Optigraphics, which had lost $641,000 the previous year.

With John as a non-participating director, Ann ran the new company as president and chief executive officer.

A visionary with guts and a keen business sense, Ann turned Optigraphics around. By 1988, she had negotiated licensing agreements with the Major League Baseball Players Association.

She later obtained contracts with the player associations of the National Football League and the National Hockey League. Pro basketball would be next.

Under the SCORE trademark, Ann soon was competing with the handful of major sports card trading companies in America.

SCORE, along with Upper Deck and Proset Inc., arrived in the late 1980s swelling a market dominated for years by Topps, Donruss and Fleer.

The new companies flourished despite what many felt was an already saturated market. They capitalized on a burgeoning industry in which collectors were plunking down their savings at record rates.

SCORE's pretax profits increased 2,802 percent in three years, court records show.

"This increase is exemplified in dollars, millions of them," says attorney Loveless. "If one were to lay $100 bills end to end, one could circle the world twice and have enough money left over to live a lifetime as a king, just using the increase in profits ..."

Last year, court exhibits suggest, Optigraphics netted $15 million on gross sales approaching $100 million.

"Ann's not dumb," says Jim Barlow of Fort Worth, an attorney for John. "Ann's got brains and savvy. I credit her with intelligence and business acumen. But she's also got flaws ... and some serious gaps in there."

Among the most serious of those flaws, Barlow suggested, is what makes this case unusual: "The novelty and absurdity of the position advanced by Mrs. Flavin."

He and his associates maintain Ann does not want to sell the assets, take her money and give John half. Worse yet, they say, if she keeps Optigraphics, she wants John to assume half the tax burden, or $17.64 million, on the sale of a $63 million company that may never be sold.

John's lawyers contend the court should disregard tax consequences in deciding the division issue. Regardless, they argue, John's share of the assets should not be discounted for taxes on a sale that may never occur.

Ann's lawyers argue that the court should consider the tax burden before giving John cash.

An additional issue is Ann's contention that without her running the company, Optigraphics would be worth no more than $30 million.

While the printing card company is the cash cow of the Flavin estate, there are other assets. Most, like Optigraphics itself, operate under a corporate umbrella, Flapco, a holding company owned 50-50 by John and Ann.

Adding to the complexity, however, is a South Dakota-based company called Wrapit, which packages Optigraphics products and, to a lesser degree, products of companies such as McDonald's and Frito-Lay. Ann's father was instrumental in founding Wrapit, and he and his wife own 50 percent of the company.

John and Ann own 25 percent each.

Amid the suits and countersuits, claims and counterclaims, Ann's side tossed in a firebomb when she sought custody of the couple's 2-year-old twins, a boy and a girl named Liam and Erin.

She portrayed John as a cold, uncaring, insensitive father who preferred golfing and fishing to parental duties.

The motion to terminate John's rights came long after the original divorce petition and, says attorney Barlow, added greatly to the litigation costs.

It also added a new level of rancor, most notably because Ann questioned if John was in fact the twins' biological father. Indeed, during a parental visit, she had snatched a hair from John's head for a paternity test.

After seven miscarriages, she said, donor sperm had been used in addition to her husband's in the in-vitro fertilization process.

Barlow, John's attorney, called the pleading "frivolous" and declared that "Petitioner Ann Flavin has now reached the absolute nadir of poornanship ..."

William Koons of Dallas, Ann's co-counsel, responded with an "emergency" motion requiring Barlow to "terminate abusive, harassing and outrageous conduct" toward Ann and her lawyers.

In January, Judge Carper denied the request to terminate John's parental rights and her demand that he undergo a paternity test.

But there was more.

In a counterclaim, John sought $25 million actual and exemplary damages from Ann. He based his claim on allegations of breach of duty, fraud and deceit, breach of contract, breach of marital contract and invasion of privacy. Jurors awarded him nothing.

And so it went.

The acrimony eventually spilled over into the jury, which was a harmonious group to begin with. But the camaraderie ended when deliberations began. With tempers flaring, the panel of seven men and five women deliberated six days without a verdict. Two members were ready to call it quits.

After a three-day weekend, they delivered the $63 million verdict on Optigraphics and an overall figure for the estate of about $75 million.

"We hit a home run," Loveless told Texas Lawyer, a trade magazine. "We felt victorious 100 percent down the line."

Elaborating later, he said, "The jury verdict on the value of Optigraphics was $100 million less than John claimed, and jurors awarded him zero on all damage claims."

But Barlow said the dollars-and-cents decision was not unfavorable to John Flavin, explaining: "I have an extremely satisfied client so long as he gets bought out in cash for a fair price."

Presiding juror John Mitchell suggested that the real loser was the jury.

"The Flavins are still rich, the lawyers and experts are even richer, and we got a buck and a quarter an hour," he grumbled.

So now to the final inning.

In effect, what Ann would like to do is keep Optigraphics, paying John $5 million cash when the judgment is rendered and roughly $20 million more in three annual payments.

Her lawyers say she wants to preserve the company for the benefit of her 750 employees.

Meanwhile, John proposes to buy or sell for $31.5 million cash. But he conceded that if he got the company, he would sell it to a third party. As a last resort, he said, he would opt to retain 50 percent in an effort to later force a sale to a third party.

He says a third party, never named, would pay more than $63 million and as much as $100 million.

Attorney Barlow says Ann is trying to "steal the company," adding:

"I don't blame Ann Flavin for what she's trying to do. I guess if you could fool a jury, if you could fool a judge, maybe you ought to go ahead and try to do it."

"But she didn't fool the jury and I don't think she's going to fool the judge."

Says Loveless:

"What John is trying to do is to artificially inflate the value of the company to force Ann to pay him $31.5 million cash free, if she hopes to retain management of Optigraphics. The jury was not fooled by John's claim of a value of $169 million or his alleged damages of $25 million."

Sounding more than slightly indignant, he declared:

"John's sole motivation is to get all the money he can now that the free ride is over."

Combating the black male negative image: The search for solutions

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Samuel L. Myers Jr., professor of economics and director of Afro-American studies at the University of Maryland, avoids wearing jogging suits in public when he goes off campus.

"I have to wear a coat and tie in this state in order to keep from getting arrested," Myers said. "It's just part of this perception that all black males are crooks."

Myers, an author of many academic studies into the plight of disadvantaged minorities in America, says that all black males — himself included — suffer from the widespread negative image of black men.

The statistics that underlie that image are indeed staggering: Black men have the highest unemployment rates, highest rates of crime, murder and imprisonment; high rates of illiteracy and low rates of education; the highest mortality rates and shortest life expectancy.

Many of those problems affect poor urban black families — women and children — too.

Yet sociologists and policy analysts increasingly are zeroing in on young black males as a key to breaking the cycle of despair. To the degree that they achieve economically productive lives, they can uplift their families.

Sensing a need to help black males, and with them the entire black community, a bipartisan group called the 21st Century Commission on African American Males was formed with private grant support last year. Its members will hold a three-day conference this week in Washington to explore the problems and search for solutions.

"It is a recognition that the black male represents a very special area of concern in the African-American community," said Douglas G. Glasgow, a social researcher and author. "It is the other side of the single, female-headed family."

'The person is literally and figuratively on the margins of the economy, perched precariously between falling out altogether and just being an occasional participant on the periphery.'

The commission's hope is to call attention to the problems, but also to try to dispel the negative image by pointing out the other side: half of black males have wives or families; 75 percent in the 20-to-29 age group have no serious encounters with the law; more than half of those 16 to 24 who are not in school are gainfully employed.

The panel also hopes to encourage government initiatives on education, jobs and health, including improvements in job-training programs so the training better matches future labor markets.

Any improvements will help all of black America, Myers said.

"All blacks," said Myers, "are being affected by what's happening to the poorest, the most disadvantaged, the ones most entangled at the bottom of the socioeconomic ladder."

Virginia Gov. L. Douglas Wilder and Sen. Terry Sanford of North Carolina, both Democrats, are honorary co-chairmen of the commission. Both testified with others in March at a Senate Banking and Urban Affairs subcommittee, which is holding a second hearing on the plight of black males Tuesday.

Glasgow, resident scholar for the commission, is the author of a 1981 book, The Black Underclass, in which he contends the underclass is a group locked into poverty over generations.

The searing poverty that entraps these families, he said in an interview, is driven by the inability of black males at the bottom rungs of the economic ladder to secure a productive spot in the nation's economy. Changes in the nation's economy — increasing demands for skilled and technical workers, and the increased emphasis on information — have left them behind.

Myers contends that many black males have been "marginalized" — relegated to the fringes of the economy.

"It's not simply that a person is unemployed or has low wages, but that a person is either out of the labor force altogether or not in the path that's likely to lead to productive participation," Myers said. "The person is literally and figuratively on the margins of the economy, perched precariously between falling out altogether and just being an occasional participant on the periphery."

Many of these young urban men are ill-trained for the work force but have talents and innate abilities of organization and even management, Myers argues. It's hardly surprising then, he says, that they turn to the illegal drug trade.

While highly profitable, it is a high-risk enterprise, and a big factor in some of the most tragic trends of the ghetto. Black males are seven times more likely to be murdered than white males. The numbers of annual homicides among black men 15 to 19 years old doubled between 1984 and 1987, according to FBI statistics.

Many who survive land in prison. Nearly half the nation's inmates are black.

Almost one in four black men 20 to 29 are in prison or in jail or on probation or parole, and more black men are under control of the criminal justice system than are enrolled in higher education, according to Marc Mauer, assistant director of The Sentencing Project, a Washington-based group studying prison trends.

"Where are black men?" Glasgow asks.

"They are disproportionately out of the labor force. They are in disproportionate numbers in the criminal justice system. ... They are also the most severely impacted by poor health. They are dying at a rate higher than all others in our society."

Royal visit may boost San Antonio tourism

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — City officials hope a royal visit by Queen Elizabeth II will boost tourism and convention business and increase San Antonio's popularity in Great Britain.

San Antonio is the second stop of the queen's tour through Texas this week. The visit also includes stops in Austin, Dallas and Houston.

Robert Marbut Jr., president of the San Antonio Sports Foundation, is planning to use Her Majesty's visit in an attempt to lure the 1998 Goodwill Games. He calls it "the business of the visit."

"I was on the mayor's staff when Prince Charles came to town," Marbut said. "It really stimulates phone traffic in terms of inquiries into San Antonio. And many times many of them (callers) end up booking events."

The city's Convention and Visitors Bureau also is finding ways to profit from the queen's visit.

"It would be real difficult for us to use her picture in any kind of publicity. I'm not sure that we could do that," said Frances Schultschik, the bureau's director of public relations.

"Our major concern right now is trying to create as many photo opportunities that will go on the wires around the country and around the world."

"The national and international attention that's focused on the city puts it in a high-profile situation. And, in that sense, that's attention that we, as promoters of the city, couldn't possibly purchase," Ms. Schultschik said.

Jose Luis Garcia, who directs the city's international relations office, says that exposure translates to dollars.

"It indirectly brings in tourism, in the long run," Garcia said. "I think it will continue to foster that awareness overseas — not just to Great Britain, but the United Kingdom itself."

Congratulations and good luck to all of these 4-H members.

Did you know that 93 percent of American families fit patterns other than an employed father, homemaker mother, and two or more children living at home.

Many times in this fast paced world, we, as families, often lose track of each other. With two working parents and the children involved in sports, school and other activities, its often hard for families to spend valuable time together. In many careers, the only time spent together as a family may be watching television, at which time no family interaction may occur.

The U.S. has changed a great deal from the days when family farm was a way of life and the family was the source of strength and support for all its members. Today, many parents and children do not see each other all day because of job demands and activities of the children.

What does all this have to do with 4-H, an action program for youth aged 9 to 19?

4-H offers many opportunities for the 4-H'er and is parents to join together in working toward a common goal. In the Gray County 4-H program, parents and youth can learn and grow together through a sharing of experiences, communication and work. That's why 4-H is an activity for parents. Because of working together in 4-H, lines of communication are open between parents and youth.

These lines of communication can be spread at a 4-H project meeting. As often is the case, when a 4-H youth takes an interest in a project, the parents are usually there to offer their support. Its through this support that a great deal of interaction can occur.

The 4-H program in Gray County has some 25 different projects to offer. This means there is something for everyone's interest and lifestyle. Regardless of the project chosen, the most important benefit is that of strengthening the bond between parents and their children. This bond is strengthened through communication, experiences, and working together.

4-H offers parents and youth the opportunity to grow together and interact as a family. For more details on the Gray County 4-H program and how you and your family can become involved, contact the Gray County Extension Office.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

Couple finds an old friend and wants to lose a new one

DEAR ABBY: Last weekend my wife's former college roommate, "Kathy," came to visit my wife and me. We had not seen her since 1986. She had sent a Christmas card, which we followed up with a phone call inviting her for a weekend. She lives two hours away, and accepted immediately — then she called back and asked if she could bring her new boyfriend. Well, we thought, "Any boyfriend of Kathy's would be as delightful as Kathy." Right? Wrong!

Kathy's boyfriend (I'll call him Chuck) turned out to be the most overbearing, crude, obnoxious, know-it-all we had ever met. He was argumentative, loud and just plain rude. We bit our tongues the entire weekend to keep from telling him where to go!

The problem is that Kathy seems to like this guy and she indicated that she and Chuck would be back regularly for weekend visits! She also suggested that we take a vacation trip with them.

So how do we go about telling Kathy that we think Chuck is a first-class jerk and she deserves better? Or should we keep quiet and hope she sees the light and dumps this rude dude?

STUMPED

DEAR STUMPED: Be honest. If Kathy asks you what you think of Chuck, don't offer phony praise to keep from hurting her feelings. Tell her now not to include you in any vacations with her and Chuck because you don't enjoy his company that much. She may be offended, but it might inspire her to take a harder look at her new boyfriend and cause her to chuck Chuck.

Abby, if he retired at 62, five years later he was 67. And if they were married for 55 years, he would have been 12 years old when he got married. Come on! How can that be?

K.R.J. IN GROTON, CONN.

DEAR K.R.J.: It can't. In order for it to make sense, that sentence should have read: "Seven years later my wife, who was 55 when I retired, applied for her Social Security at 62."

Wait, it gets worse. In my reply, I say, "After 55 years of togetherness, etc.," indicating that I, too, assumed they had been married for 55 years, which would have indeed made the husband 12 years old at the time of his marriage. The mathematics escaped me entirely. I plead guilty as charged. I'll take 10 whacks with a fifth-grade math book, and another 10 with a book on logic.

DEAR ABBY: Am I the only person in the world who puts eyeglasses on to answer the telephone? I use "specs" for reading only because my eyesight is quite good for a person my age (62) — so why do I always reach for them when I answer the telephone?

WEIRD IN DENVER

DEAR WEIRD: Perhaps you want to be prepared in case you need to make a note of something during the telephone conversation. Many people (including me) have the same habit.

DEAR ABBY: "Browbeaten in Pompano Beach" wrote that he retired at age 62; then he went on to say, "Five years later, my wife of 55 years applied for her Social Security, etc."

"How to Be Popular" is an excellent guide to becoming a better conversationalist and a more attractive person. To order, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Popularity Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. African art exhibit to explore themes of this century

NEW YORK (AP) — The Center for African Art has organized "Africa Explores: 20th Century African Art," which it bills as "the first exhibition to focus on the major themes and artistic innovations in African art of this century."

The exhibition will be presented concurrently at the Center for African Art through December, and at the New Museum of Contemporary Art through Aug. 11, before going on to five other cities. There are about 133 works in the show, divided between the two locations. They span an illuminatingly wide range of media and styles — including colorful coffins in the shape of an onion or an airplane, made for modern-day funerals; life-size cement figures sculpted for tombs; contemporary paintings on canvas and glass, and traditional wooden masks made since the beginning of the century. There's also a selection of older objects on view, such as Benin bronze plaques and Kota figures, no longer made but still strongly influential.

There could be impressive improvements for you in the year ahead, both socially and materially.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) It looks like changes you've been hoping for that will affect your financial well-being will transpire, perhaps even a bit ahead of schedule. Be patient, though, and stay on your present course. Know where to look for romance and you'll find it.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Words and ideas should flow rather easily from you today. You could be extremely effective in matters that require intricate communication skills, whether they be verbal or written.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Soft selling and understatement should work well for you today in your commercial affairs. Instead of voicing your demands, use subtle suggestions and let the other party respond.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Something in which you are presently involved is potentially beneficial to all concerned, yet it needs your initiative and leadership to bring it into being.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Allow your nobler and gentler instincts to prevail today, especially if you're aware of someone who sorely needs your assistance. Do what needs doing without fanfare.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Be on your best behavior today in situations that put you in the public eye. What you wear, as well as how you act, will be closely scrutinized and later favorably discussed in detail.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Sometimes, it's unwise to play hunches, especially in matters of a material nature. However, this might not be true in your case today. Don't discount persistent intuitions.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You might be in store for a constructive learning experience today. It won't come from textbooks or teachers but from a personal encounter that will prepare you for something down the road.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) You are very close to a profitable situation that needs what you have to offer. It's already underway, but if you get involved, it could move faster.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Go a bit overboard today in catering to the individual who is No. 1 in your heart. Your special attention and consideration will make this a day that will never be forgotten.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Diligent efforts will not go unrewarded today. Aside from the pride you'll feel as a result of your accomplishments, you may experience peripheral advantages as well.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Successful measures can be taken today to improve two relationships that have lately been less than satisfactory. Although similar, each will be remedied in a unique way.

MEMPHIS — The bulls dominated the cowboys Saturday, and it had nothing to do with basketball or football.

Several area contestants turned in outstanding efforts and added crucial points to their standings in Tri-State High School Rodeo Association competition at Saturday's Memphis event.

But not in the bull riding division as the bounding beasts, provided by Hext Rodeo Company of Canadian, blanked riders in the morning session and sent most riders flying to the ground in the afternoon performance.

Hornets win lottery

By BILL BARNARD
AP Basketball Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Allan Bristow brought a turkey caller to the NBA lottery as a good-luck charm, and it did the job for the Charlotte Hornets.

Now it's the Hornets' job not to take a turkey with the first pick in the June 26 draft.

Bristow, Charlotte's vice president of operations, said the Hornets probably won't decide who to select until the weekend before the draft. But he admitted they have already narrowed the candidates to center Dikembe Mutombo of Georgetown, guard Kenny Anderson of Georgia Tech and forwards Larry Johnson of UNLV and Billy Owens of Syracuse.

"We'll bring these guys in for interviews, put them in uniform, maybe run up and down the court with them," Bristow said after Sunday's lottery. "But I don't have any idea where we are leaning."

Anyone trying to read between the lines to determine the favorite might look in Owens' direction.

"We need a good big player, forward or center," Bristow said. "We need someone like Kendall Gill, only to play on the front line."

Gill, a Hornets guard who made the All-Rookie team, is a solid all-around player, a description that also fits Owens, who led Syracuse in scoring, rebounding and steals this season as a junior.

But Bristow reiterated the belief that there will be no single standout in this year's college crop.

"There's not an Hakeem Olajuwon, Patrick Ewing or Magic Johnson in this draft," Bristow said. "There's no clear-cut player that will lead you to the promised land. There will certainly be guys who will be great players."

The Hornets, with the fifth-worst record in the NBA at 26-56 in the third season of their existence, won the No. 1 pick when one of their seven ping pong balls was drawn out of a bin containing 66 balls with the logos of the 11 non-playoff teams.

New Jersey, winner of the 1990 lottery, got the second pick this year, followed by Sacramento, which selected No. 1 in 1989.

Ironically, Charlotte and New Jersey finished with identical records. A coin flip before the lottery determined that the Hornets would get seven balls in the lottery bin and the Nets eight. The "weighted" lottery gives the teams with the worst records more balls in the bin and thus a better chance to win the top pick.

All 11 non-playoff teams had a chance at one of the top three picks, with those not drawn ultimately drafting in reverse order of record.

Denver, the worst team in the NBA with a 20-62 finish, did not have one of its 11 balls drawn, so the Nuggets will draft fourth.

It's a disappointment anytime you lose," Nuggets general manager Bernie Bickerstaff said. "It's not written in stone who will be gone when it's our turn. We need a solid player who can step in and contribute right away. We're going to get a good player."

After the top four picks, the lottery draft order will be Miami, Dallas, Minnesota, Washington, the Los Angeles Clippers, Orlando and Cleveland.

The Cavaliers, whose 33-49 record was the best of the non-playoff teams, had only one of 66 balls in the bin and wound up in its expected spot, 11th.

"When you consider we had a 1-in-66 chance, it's tough to get to the top unless your ball has helium in it," general manager Wayne Embry said.

Besides Owens, Johnson, Anderson and Mutombo, the top prospects are forwards Doug Smith of Missouri and Stacey Augmon of UNLV and guard Steve Smith of Michigan State.

Last year, New Jersey used the first pick to select Derrick Coleman, the eventual Rookie of the Year and former Syracuse teammate of Owens.

"Last year, because of Roy Hinson's health, drafting Coleman made more sense right away because he's a forward," Nets vice president Willis Reed said

Chicago greases Pistons in opener

By JOE MOOSHIL
AP Sports Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — Michael Jordan was the first to admit he did not have a great game.

When that's happened in the past, the Chicago Bulls usually lost. On Sunday, they beat Detroit 94-83 in the opener of the Eastern Conference finals, with Jordan scoring nearly 10 points less than his playoff scoring average.

"You have to give my supporting cast a lot of credit," said Jordan, who scored 22 points. But 15 of those came in the first half, and he was scoreless in the third quarter.

"I did not have a particularly good game," Jordan admitted. "The bench came out and held its own."

Scottie Pippen had 18 points, six steals and five blocks and Bill Cartwright scored 16 points. Four reserves — B.J. Armstrong, Cliff Levingston, Craig Hodges and Will Perdue — all scored in the first five minutes of the fourth quarter as the Bulls stretched a 68-65 lead to 81-72.

In knocking Chicago out of the playoffs the previous three years, including the last two Eastern Conference finals en route to winning consecutive NBA titles, the Pistons have neutralized Jordan, and the rest of the Bulls didn't take up the slack.

This time, Armstrong finished with nine points, Levingston eight, Hodges seven and Perdue six. The much-maligned bench players also had 15 rebounds as the Bulls controlled the boards 43-26.

"They had critical play in short minutes," Chicago coach Phil Jackson said. "Detroit is a team that wears you out with their physical presence. We need relief from the bench in this series."

Game 2 of the best-of-7 series also is in Chicago on Tuesday night. Then the scene shifts to the Palace in Auburn Hills, Mich., for games Saturday and next Monday.

The Bulls took an early 12-point lead, but the Pistons rallied in the third quarter to pull ahead 54-53 and 59-58. They also tied it 62-62 on a 3-pointer by Isiah Thomas before Cartwright and Pippen put the Bulls back ahead to stay.

The Bulls were more rested, having sewed up their series with the Philadelphia 76ers on Tuesday. Detroit played an overtime game Friday night, ousting Boston from the playoffs.

"We were sluggish, slow afoot and struggled, but we could have stole this one," Detroit coach Chuck Daly said. "The Bulls looked rusty from their long lay-off. If you were going to beat the Bulls, today was the day."

But Chicago's reserves were waiting.

"You have to know what is expected," Hodges said. "You have to take your job seriously and not embarrass your team. We had a solid game plan and we had the minutes to get into rhythm."

For Levingston, it was "a great confidence builder. Before this, when it came to crunch time, we'd be out of there. We scored, played good defense, stayed in there and our confidence started to build."

"The difference in this series will be whose bench plays better," Perdue said.

"It was our bench that did it," Jackson said. "They got critical points in short minutes. Detroit wears you down with their physical presence and you need relief minutes."

The Pistons were making no excuses although their backups provided most of the scoring, with Mark Aguirre having 25 points and Vinnie Johnson 21. The only starter in double figures was Isiah Thomas with 11 points, all in the second half.

"The Bulls did everything well," Thomas said. "This was a well-played game. We have to make adjustments before Tuesday.

We have to play better in Game 2."

"We don't make excuses," Johnson said. "We're champions back-to-back. It seems the team never got into sync."

Aguirre gave the Bulls credit "for changing their game and adjusting to our style we well. The Bulls played a great game. We know we can win here but it will be tough."

Giants lose again; Martinez leads Dodgers past Mets

By The Associated Press

The San Francisco Giants can't believe how badly they're playing.

Sunday's 5-4, 13-inning loss to the Montreal Expos left the Giants with a 12-25 record, the worst in baseball. San Francisco is nine games behind first-place Los Angeles in the National League West.

"We just can't keep talking about it, getting better, we just have to start doing it," said Will Clark, who homered Sunday to drive in his league-leading 34th run. "The thing that's puzzling to me is that I don't understand why its happening."

"There's a lot of talent around here so everyone has to take some of the blame. It isn't like we're getting blown out or anything. We're in most of the games we play."

Ivan Calderon hit a run-scoring single with two outs in the 13th inning off Mike LaCoss (1-5) as the Giants lost for the seventh time in nine games. The Giants, who tied the game on Kevin Bass' two-run homer in the ninth, have lost 19 of 25.

"I know we're going to turn this thing around," said Giants manager Roger Craig, who ejected by home plate umpire Tom Hallion in the ninth along with Kevin Mitchell for arguing balls and strikes.

"It can't keep going on like this," Craig said. "I know we're better than a last-place ballclub. I'm encouraged because I see some positive signs. Our starting pitching has been pretty good the last couple of weeks and I know Will Clark, Kevin Mitchell and Matt Williams will have 300 RBIs at the end the season."

In other games, Los Angeles beat New York 7-5, Atlanta beat Pittsburgh 7-1, Chicago Cubs beat the Philadelphia Phillies 2-1 in 10 innings, San Diego beat Cincinnati 3-2 and St. Louis beat Houston 9-2.

Bill Sampen (3-1) pitched two outs for the victory and Scott Ruskin pitched the 13th for his second save.

Montreal, 4-1 in extra-inning games, is 6-1 against the Giants this season. "This win was one of our biggest of the year," Expos manager Buck Rodgers said. "Calderon likes to be there with the game on the line. That's something you can't teach."

National League

Dodgers 7, Mets 5

Ramon Martinez (7-1) joined Chuck Finley of California as the only seven-game winners in the majors and Kal Daniels drove in three runs.

Martinez allowed two runs and three hits in six innings, struck out five and walked three. Tim Crews got five outs for his first save.

David Cone (3-3) gave up five runs and four hits in six innings for the visiting Mets. He struck out five and walked four.

Braves 7, Pirates 1

Tom Glavine (6-2) won his fourth consecutive start, allowing five hits in six innings, striking out two and walking one. Juan Berenguer finished with two-hit relief for his fourth save.

Zane Smith (5-2), who had won his three previous starts, gave up five runs and nine hits and was knocked out after 3 2-3 innings.

Pirates shortstop Jay Bell and manager Jim Leyland were ejected in the fourth inning for arguing.

Cubs 2, Phillies 1

Luis Salazar singled home the winning run in the 10th off Roger McDowell (3-1), who had relieved to start the inning.

George Bell led off with a single, Andre Dawson singled pinch-runner Jerome Walton to second and both runners advanced when McDowell threw wildly for an error on a pick-off attempt at second.

Mike Bielecki (5-2), the third pitcher for the visiting Cubs, threw 1 1-3 innings of one-hit relief. Dave Smith pitched the 10th for his 10th save, completing the six-hitter.

Padres 3, Reds 2

Andy Benes, who started the season with four consecutive losses, won his second straight start, allowing seven hits in six innings and striking out six at Riverfront Stadium.

Craig Lefferts pitched one inning for his ninth save as the Padres won for only the third time in 11 games. Norm Charlton (2-4) gave up six hits and walked four in six innings and allowed three first-inning runs.

Cardinals 9, Astros 2

Ray Lankford, Pedro Guerrero and Todd Zeile drove in two runs each as the Cardinals increased their home record to a NL-best 13-6.

St. Louis got nine hits off Pete Harnisch (2-3), who had held opponents to a league-low .180 batting average coming in.

Rangers rip Boston; Detroit ends losing streak

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

For more than a decade, Jack Morris was Detroit's stopper. He still is, apparently.

Morris got roughed up in his return to Tiger Stadium and Detroit stopped an eight-game losing streak by routing the Minnesota Twins 8-3 Sunday.

Morris was in trouble from the start, giving up a three-run homer to Cecil Fielder and a grand slam to Milt Cuyler in the first inning. It was Detroit's biggest first inning since April 13, 1984, the year Morris helped pitch the Tigers to the World Series championship.

"I wasn't any more excited than for a regular game," said Morris (3-5). "I just didn't have anything today."

Morris played 14 seasons for the Tigers and was baseball's winningest pitcher in the 1980s. He left the Tigers last winter and signed as a free agent with the Twins, his hometown team.

In Morris' first game against his old club, he lasted only four innings, giving up eight runs on seven hits and six walks.

In other games, Texas beat Boston 12-4, Chicago downed Toronto 5-4, Oakland defeated Cleveland 9-4, New York stopped Seattle 3-2, California beat Baltimore 10-2 and Milwaukee defeated Kansas City 4-2.

Dan Petry (2-2), who teamed with Morris for several seasons as the top two starters in Detroit's rotation, outpitched the former Tiger ace. He gave up eight hits before leaving in the ninth.

"I didn't have great stuff, but getting a touchdown and an extra point in the first inning helped settle me down," Petry said.

Tony Phillips led off with the Detroit first with a single, Lou Whitaker walked and Fielder hit his sixth home run, a drive into the upper deck in left field. Mickey Tetleton and Pete Incaviglia singled and an error by third baseman Mike Pagliarulo loaded the bases with two outs before Cuyler hit his first major league home run, a shot barely over the right-field fence.

"I was on second base when it went into the stands because I was looking to get a triple," Cuyler said. "I wasn't even thinking about a homer."

Incaviglia hit his fourth home run into the upper deck in left to start the third inning. Tetleton tripled off the 440-foot mark in center in the third, but was stranded.

"Jack looked like he didn't have his good stuff today," Twins manager Tom Kelly said. "I think he was just trying too hard to trick the Tigers."

Pagliarulo hit two home runs — one conventional, one weird.

In the third inning, he sliced a liner to left field that Phillips ran for, but missed. Phillips then rested against the fence and did not go after the ball as Pagliarulo ran for the first inside-the-park homer at Tiger Stadium since 1987.

"When I missed the ball and hit the gravel, I just assumed the ball was foul," Phillips said. "I'm still not used to left field, but I guess this was some on-the-job training."

Pagliarulo hit his second home run of the season in the fifth inning.

Rangers 12, Red Sox 4

Julio Franco drove in four runs and Texas completed the best home stand in its 19-year history, again beating up Boston for its seventh straight victory.

A day after the Rangers got 17 hits and handed Roger Clemens his first loss in a 13-5 rout, Texas got 16 more hits and defeated Tom Bolton (4-1).

Texas went 6-0 last week at Arlington Stadium. The Red Sox got swept in three games and lost their first series of the season.

Franco, Mike Stanley and Steve Buechele each homered. Stanley also tripled and doubled, and Franco, Rafael Palmeiro and Mario Diaz added three hits.

Reliever Gary Alexander (1-0) got his first major league victory. Bolton lasted just 2 2-3 innings and got tagged for seven runs and nine hits.

American League

White Sox 5, Blue Jays 4

Mark Whiten got the biggest hit, punching Chicago pitcher Jack McDowell in the face and igniting a bench-clearing brawl. But Lance Johnson got the most important hit, a tiebreaking single in the sixth inning that help the White Sox win at home.

After John Olerud hit a solo home run in the fifth that put Toronto ahead 4-3, McDowell threw the next pitch behind Whiten. Whiten rushed the mound and landed a roundhouse right just below McDowell's left eye.

The benches and bullpens emptied, and the pushing and shoving lasted about five minutes. Whiten and McDowell were ejected.

Chicago rallied for two runs in the sixth against Mike Timlin (3-2) when Sammy Sosa walked, Joey Cora singled, Ozzie Guillen hit a sacrifice fly and Johnson singled.

Ken Patterson (1-0) was the winner. Bobby Thigpen pitched 1 2-3 innings for his eighth save.

Yankees 3, Mariners 2

Steve Howe got his first victory since 1987 and Mel Hall hit a two-run homer as New York stopped Seattle's six-game winning streak.

Hall lined into two double plays before hitting his fourth home run in the sixth inning for a 2-0 lead. The host Yankees ended a four-game losing skid.

Howe (1-0) pitched 1 1-3 innings for his first win since Sept. 20, 1987, while with Texas. He was released by the Rangers after that season and has been out of the majors, trying to overcome a drinking problem.

Lee Guetterman got two outs for his second save. Alvin Davis hit a solo home run with two outs in the Mariners' ninth. Brian Holman (4-4) was the loser.

Yankees starter Pascual Perez pitched 5 2-3 innings. In two games since shoulder surgery, he has given up no runs on three hits in 11 2-3 innings.

Athletics 9, Indians 4

Dave Henderson drove in four runs, increasing his major league-leading total to 35 RBIs, and Terry Steinbach hit a three-run homer.

Oakland went 5-5 on its road trip, while Cleveland fell to 3-13 at home.

Henderson got three hits, including an RBI double in the fifth and a three-run double in the sixth that made it 6-4. Steinbach hit his third home run in the seventh.

Reliever Curt Young (2-1) was the winner. Rod Nichols (0-2) could not hold an early 3-0 lead.

Angels 10, Orioles 2

Dave Gallagher went 5-for-5 and drove in three runs as California won at Baltimore.

Gallagher, who played 23 games for the Orioles last season and was traded to the Angels in December, set a career high for hits. He also scored two runs.

Kirk McCaskill (3-5) ended his four-game losing streak. He gave up four hits in 5 2-3 innings in sending Baltimore to its 10th loss in 14 games.

Wally Joyner extended his hitting streak to 15 games during a four-run first inning against Jeff Ballard (2-6).

Brewers 4, Royals 2

Jaime Navarro pitched into the ninth inning and Gary Sheffield hit a two-run double as Milwaukee won in Kansas City.

Navarro (3-2) had a five-hitter and a 4-1 lead until Danny Tartabull led off the ninth with a home run and Kirk Gibson doubled with one out. Julio Machado struck out two for his second save.

Mark Gubicza (0-2) allowed four runs on six hits and three walks in five innings. Sheffield doubled off the third-base bag in the third inning and scored on Robin Yount's single.

Indy 500 rookie Willy T. Ribbs is first black driver to make race

By MIKE HARRIS
AP Motorsports Writer

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Mr. Ribbs made an appointment with Mr. Mears for a very important consultation at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway.

Mr. Ribbs is Willy T. Ribbs, a rookie entered in Sunday's Indianapolis 500. Mr. Mears is Rick Mears, a three-time champion and the man starting from the pole position in the 33-car field.

"We set it up just like a business meeting," Ribbs joked about their get-together last week. "I made an appointment with his people. He charged $5,000 for every mile per hour that I improved — that was the consultation fee — and I think it was a steal."

Really, though, the meeting did take place at the pit wall during the first week of practice for the 75th Indy classic, and Ribbs, despite fighting engine problems right up to his qualification run Sunday, did improve considerably.

All four laps on his qualifying run of 217.358 mph were faster than he had practiced at any time since arriving here.

"I've been a road racer most of my career and oval racing is a completely different technique," Ribbs explained. "I was tightening up on the corners instead of arcing around them. Rick taught me to use a lot less of the road."

Two years ago, it was Scott Pruett, who went on to be co-Rookie of the Year in the race, who said, "Rick Mears really helped me out. He talked me through some barriers around this place."

Mears, racing at Indy for the 14th consecutive year, said, "We've gotten a lot of help from a lot of people, a lot of friends, over the years."

As for helping Ribbs, Mears said, "He asked me. I've always been that way. I've talked to main competitors, throughout the years I've done it, whether it be sprint buggies at Ascot or whatever."

"You know I've always been straight forward and open with everything 'cause I've always felt, all things being equal, if I don't beat them, it's my fault."

Mears added, "But I know what this place is like. It's tough the first time and there's a few little things that can help. And you always want to see someone coming in for the first time have a decent shot."

Ribbs salutes the crowd Sunday after he qualified for his first Indianapolis 500.

Allison takes Winston

CONCORD, N.C. (AP) — One tradition was broken while a new one may have begun in The Winston all-star race.

Since it's beginning in 1985, odd-numbered years have promised bedlam and controversy in the $875,000 winners'-only stock car race at Charlotte Motor Speedway.

Races in even-numbered years have been run without incident, including last year's clinical flag-to-flag victory by Dale Earnhardt.

So everyone was expecting a paint-swapping, fender-bumping affair on Sunday.

Everyone except Davey Allison. Starting from the pole like Earnhardt did last year, Allison ran away from the pack and dominated the 70-lap, 105-mile race. For his effort, he won $325,000.

Allison, who grew up in a famous racing family, knows a little bit about The Winston's past winners.

"Rusty Wallace and Bill Elliott each won The Winston prior to winning the Winston Cup championship," Allison said. "That's one of our goals. I feel this is a strong step in that direction."

While the race doesn't count for Winston Cup points, its rich purse and strong field guarantees top competition.

"When you can win against the best in the business it's going to build your confidence up," he said.

Allison, 30, of Hueytown, Ala., started from the pole in his Ford Thunderbird and finished ahead of Darrell Waltrip's Chevrolet in the opening 50-lap segment.

In the final 20-lap shootout before 90,500 fans at the 1.5-mile superspeedway, Allison beat Ken Schrader's Chevrolet by 2.87 seconds.

Allison's average speed was a record 168.75 mph.

"The biggest thing about starting from the pole is that you can dictate what you want to do," he said. "There's a lot of money at stake. When you're out front, you feel like you won't get caught up in any of the action."

Allison's opponents came away impressed.

"Davey looked stout, and he'll come back strong next week for the (Coca Cola) 600," said Earnhardt, who finished 10th. "We'll just go to work and bring another car back for next week and see if we've got anything for him. No one had anything for him today."

Waltrip, who finished third, was in the best position to catch Allison in the opening 50-lap segment.

"I don't know what he's got but he's got something or they've all got it," Waltrip said of the Fords. "I don't know which — but he's certainly showing it. We couldn't even hardly stay with him on restarts."

"If we had gone longer, Davey would have just been farther ahead," said Schrader, who has finished second in three straight Winstons.

"It's a simple answer in one word. Horsepower! Nothing else," said Waltrip's crew chief, Jeff Hammond. "And nobody was going to catch him today, no matter what."

It's been a frustrating year so far for Allison, who has failed to win a Winston Cup race despite poles at Daytona and Richmond.

"Maybe this will help turn things around," he said. "A lot of things could have happened out there."

Allison won the $200,000 purse plus another $50,000 for finishing first in the 50-lap segment. He won another $75,000 for winning the pole for a grand total of $325,000.

Earlier years have featured controversial finishes in The Winston, but there were no caution periods in Sunday's 105-mile.

Elliott finished fourth, followed by Daytona 500 winner Ernie Ivan.
