Texas Senate honors Urbanczyks for firm

By J. ALAN BRZYS
Staff Writer

WHITE DEER — Marvin and Janet Urbanczyk, owner-operators of a company recently named the state's outstanding small business, have been honored by the Texas Senate for their achievements.

"We need a thousand more innovators like you," said State Sen. Teel Bivins, R-Amarillo during a Thursday visit to the Carson County factory. "This (business) is a major part of the solution to the solid waste problem."

Bivins presented the Urbanczyks with a copy of a Senate resolution which congratulates the couple for being selected as "Small Business Persons of the Year for the State of Texas."

The Urbanczyks developed and built Scarab Manufacturing and Leasing Inc. from an idea into an internationally-recognized producer of organic waste management machinery.

The patented Scarab system composts organic wastes into a useful, easily handled, marketable product which is an economical and environmentally-sound alternative to landfill and incineration, according to the resolution.

The company was begun 18 years ago when Marvin Urbanczyk developed a quick and economical method of converting feed-yard manure to compost.

The resulting heavy equipment was the prototype for the modern Scarab, a combine-like tractor equipped with a drum which rolls, pulverizes and aerates piles of organic waste to speed decomposition. The by-product of the process is fertilizer.

"We're not doing anything strange," Marvin Urbanczyk told Bivins during a tour of the 32,000-square-foot manufacturing plant. He explained the Scarab system simply accelerates the natural decomposition process.

Bivins said, "Composting, as you know, is a hot thing. Are we going to get in a position where we have more compost than we need?"

Urbanczyk said, "You may have more compost some day than you can sell, but if you can give it away, it's better than paying $70 a ton to bury it."

"Our goal is to make it at least zero value," he explained.

Scarab machines are used by Los Angeles County Sanitation District to handle sewage sludge, according to the Urbanczyks.

Marvin Urbanczyk said a supply company purchases the end product from Los Angeles County and "bags and sells it as lawn and garden fertilizer." He said there are many applications for the machine and its by-product and cited, for example, California wine producers. Within weeks, grape stems can be composted artificially into fertilizer for the vineyards which produced the grapes.

Ten different sizes of the Scarab windrow composting machine are available, some processing up to 3,000 tons per hour.

Janet Urbanczyk said the company, which employs 30 full-time workers and lists annual sales over $5 million, has built more than 180 Scarabs which are used worldwide. The machines generally are sold before they are built.

The Urbanczyks recently were honored in Washington, D.C., along with other outstanding-business winners from across the country.

"I like to recognize people who have done exciting things," said Bivins, as he concluded his visit. "I'm fascinated with this."

The Urbanczyks said they are working on additional innovative ideas related to organic waste management.

Supreme Court says cities and states may ban barroom-style nude dancing

By RICHARD CARELLI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — States and local governments may ban all barroom-style nude dancing, the Supreme Court ruled today.

By a 5-4 vote, the justices said an Indiana public-indecency law that bans nude dancing does not violate the First Amendment.

The amendment protects freedom of speech and expression.

Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, in the court's main opinion, said the Indiana law protects "societal order and morality" in a constitutionally permissible way.

Justices Sandra Day O'Connor and Anthony M. Kennedy joined Rehnquist's opinion. Justices Antonin Scalia and David H. Souter, in separate opinions, agreed that states may ban such dancing.

Justices Byron R. White, Thurgood Marshall, Harry A. Blackmun and John Paul Stevens dissented.

In other action, the court:

- Ruled that defendants may be convicted of murder and sentenced to die even if the jurors vote to convict for different reasons.

By a 5-4 vote, the justices upheld the murder conviction and death sentence for Arizona death row inmate Edward Schad, convicted of killing a 74-year-old Bisbee man 13 years ago.

While the jury voted unanimously to convict him, jurors may have disagreed over the theory of why Schad was guilty of first-degree murder.

- Ruled that communities may go beyond federal law in regulating pesticide use.

The court unanimously ruled in favor of the rural town of Casey, Wis., overturning a Wisconsin Supreme Court decision that said local regulation of pesticide use is preempted by the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide and Rodenticide Act of 1972.

The court in 1981 said nude dancing "is not without its First Amendment protections from official regulations." But the 1981 ruling did not specify the precise scope of those protections.

Today, the court again ruled that nude dancing does have some constitutional protection, but added that states may regulate or ban it.

The decision did not say whether a state could attempt to outlaw a nude ballet, or nude scenes in an opera. But Rehnquist's opinion repeatedly referred to the conduct being banned as "go-go" and "barroom style" dancing.

The Indiana law was challenged by two South Bend businesses — a bar and an adult bookstore that features live dancers — and three women who said they wanted to dance without having to wear "pasties" and "G-strings."

Lawyers for JR's Kitty Kat Lounge, the Chippewa Bookstore and dancers Gayle Sutro, Carla Johnson and Darlene Miller lost before a federal trial judge but won in the Chicago-based 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

The appeals court, by a 7-4 vote, said nude dancing is "inherently expressive" and as such is constitutionally protected.

Today, the high court said the appeals court was wrong.

"Public indecency statutes such as the one before us reflect moral disapproval of people appearing in the nude among strangers in public places," Rehnquist said.

But he said erotic performances will be allowed so long as dancers wear G-strings and pasties.

The decision relied heavily on a 1968 ruling in which the court upheld a criminal conviction for burning a draft card. In that ruling, the court said government officials do not violate First Amendment rights when they regulate the "non-speech" element of conduct that is combined with some "speech" element.

More recently, in decisions that struck down bans on burning the U.S. flag, the court has said that conduct receives constitutional protection if there is a conscious intent to convey a message and if it is likely the message will be understood by those who witness the conduct.

The court in past rulings has allowed governmental regulation if it "further an important or substantial interest ... unrelated to the suppression of free expression, and if the incidental restriction on alleged First Amendment freedom is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of that interest."

Today, the court said the Indiana ban on nude dancing was not an attempt to censor "the erotic message conveyed by the dancers."

Writing for the four dissenters, White said the court was misapplying its 1968 decision in the draft card-burning case and misreading other past rulings on freedom of expression.

"That the performance in the Kitty Kat Lounge may not be high art, to say the least, and may not appeal to the court, it is hardly an excuse for distorting and ignoring settled doctrine," White said.

States already had the power under the 21st Amendment to regulate performances, including the power to ban nude dancing, in establishments that serve alcoholic drinks.

Indiana's public-indecency law was broader than that because it banned nudity in places such as adult bookstores, where no alcoholic beverages are served.

Other states in which similarly broad bans on nude dancing have been upheld by state courts are Arkansas, Florida, Louisiana, Maine, Michigan, Nebraska and Tennessee.

The case was a closely watched one. Indiana's appeal from the 7th Circuit court's ruling had been supported in briefs submitted by, among others, five states — Arizona, Connecticut, Missouri, North Carolina and Pennsylvania — the National League of Cities, the National Governors' Association, the U.S. Conference of Mayors and the American Family Association, previously the National Federation for Decency.

Lawyers for the governors and mayors groups said such public-indecency laws are enacted "to maintain a decent society, preserve society's moral structure, and prevent the detrimental consequences that flow from the crass commercial exploitation of sex."

The case is Barnes vs. Glen Theatre, 90-26.

House OKs federal participation in Meredith salinity control

WASHINGTON — The U.S. House of Representatives overwhelmingly approved legislation Thursday that would authorize federal participation in the Lake Meredith Salinity Control Project.

The Reclamation Projects Authorization and Adjustment Act now goes to the U.S. Senate for its consideration.

The salinity control project is aimed at improving water supplies for Pampa, Amarillo, Lubbock, Plainview, Borger, Brownfield, Lamesa, Levelland, Slaton, O'Donnell and Tahoka.

A sponsor of the Lake Meredith project, U.S. Rep. Bill Sarpalius, D-Amarillo, said in a news release, "The House voted 360 to 24 to approve this act, giving it a big boost as it now goes to the U.S.

Senate for their consideration. I have never been more optimistic about the fate of this important project that I am today."

The congressman said that some of the "objectionable aspects" of last year's act that troubled the Senate have been "softened" in Thursday's legislation.

"I believe with the support of Senator Lloyd Bentsen (D-Texas) we will finally be able to get a bill to the president's desk this year that he will hopefully sign."

If the project is passed into law, it will give the Bureau of Reclamation the authority to proceed with the project. Sarpalius will work to appropriate funds for the federal government's one-third share of the estimated $9 million project cost in early 1992.

Sarpalius said that more than 110 pounds of salt flows into Lake Meredith every minute, making more than 29,000 tons per year.

"This lake provides drinking water for 11 cities in our area, including Amarillo and Lubbock," Sarpalius said.

The levels of salt in Lake Meredith are higher than both the Texas Department of Health and the Environmental Protection Agency recommend.

U.S. Rep. Larry Combest, R-Lubbock, joined Sarpalius as an original co-sponsor on the bill.

The 11 member cities of the Canadian River Municipal Water Authority will be responsible for two-thirds of the cost of the project if appropriations are approved.

The legislation approved by the House also provides continued funding of major water and dam projects including $923 million for completion of the Central Utah Project, a large water storage and supply project aimed at meeting the water needs of the Salt Lake City area.

The Utah project, which takes water from the Colorado River and diverts it west, is now two-thirds completed. In providing the remaining funds, the legislation increased local cost-sharing requirements and included new water conservation requirements.

Last American civilians leave from Philippines bases in wake of volcano eruption

By OLIVER TEVES
Associated Press Writer

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The last American military dependents from two major bases left today on the first leg of their journey home, fleeing a volcano that scientists fear is gearing up for new eruptions.

A U.S. Air Force spokesman, Maj. Wayne Crist, also announced that 4,500 airmen would begin boarding the carrier Midway tonight. The move would reduce Air Force personnel in the Philippines by more than 60 percent.

Mount Pinatubo rained small amounts of ash constantly today over Clark Air Base and areas north of the Subic Bay naval base, and about 150 earth tremors shook the area, scientists said.

Many Filipinos who had returned to their homes during an earlier lull began leaving again as heavy rains unleashed tons of debris from its slopes. Rivers in central Luzon were rising today as volcanic ash and mud washed into the streams after two days of steady rains.

Two weeks of eruptions on the 4,795-foot volcano, about 60 miles north of Manila, have claimed at least 268 lives.

About 3,000 Americans sailed from Subic Bay naval base aboard the aircraft carrier Abraham Lincoln bound for Cebu, where they will catch flights to the United States.

"I can't wait to get out of here," Tess Machinsky, 44, of Seattle, said as she prepared to board the Abraham Lincoln. "This place is a mess."

The U.S. Embassy said all 20,000 military family members have now left Subic. The naval base's population swelled by nearly 15,000 when the Air Force evacuated troops and dependents from Clark Air Base on June 10 after the nearby volcano began erupting for the first time in more than 600 years.

At Clark, 10 miles east of the volcano, people who tour the base today said flows of hot rocks, gas and other volcanic debris had reached within 300 feet of Clark's Mactan housing area. The flow was still smoking today.

A government expert said the new tremors suggest more eruptions could occur.

"There seem to be indications that the volcano is preparing for another eruption episode," said Raymond Punongbayan, director of the Philippine Institute of Volcanology and Seismology.

"We are recognizing some long tremor periods and earthquakes and this means that some magma is again moving to the surface," he said.

Roy David, mayor of the nearby city of Porac, said he had urged residents who fled to evacuation centers not to return home because of the rising Porac river. He estimates about 80 percent of the town's 68,000 residents have fled since June 9 when eruptions began.

"Mudflows have already cascaded down the slopes of Mount Pinatubo and the silt in the Porac river is steadily rising," he said.

Jose Pangilinan, a resident of Angeles adjacent to Clark, said he was returning his wife and two children to his relatives' home in nearby Apalit town.

"I can't take chances, it could be real bad," Pangilinan said. He said he returned to his home in Angeles last Wednesday to inspect damage from a huge mud flow that roared through city streets before dawn last Sunday.

Richard Gordon, mayor of the city of Olongapo near Subic, said a landslide along a major highway was preventing supplies from reaching the more than 300,000 residents.

"If we cannot pass through that landslide, we cannot supply goods to Olongapo," Gordon said.

About 1,500 airmen will remain to guard Clark and a 1,000 others will stay at the Subic Bay naval base, said Navy spokesman Lt. Cmdr. Kevin Mukri.

Firefighters rushed out to Mrs. Baird's Thrift Store, 23rd and Hobart, after they received a report of a fire at the business around 7 p.m. Thursday. But the report turned out to be a false alarm, and the firefighters returned to the station after checking to make sure everything was OK at the store.

Germany to move capital back to Berlin

BERLIN (AP) — Celebrations welcoming the federal government's return to Berlin gave way today to sobering predictions on the huge expense and work ahead to bring the seat of power back to Germany's historical and sentimental heart.

With the nation already strained by the costs and problems of reunification, moving federal offices from Bonn is expected to cost up to $41 billion and take at least 10 years.

"Now we have a lot of work to do," said Berlin Mayor Eberhard Diepgen today.

"It's only right that the seat of government come to Berlin," said Matthias Mueller, 28, an east Berlin resident.

"It's going to cost a lot, and money is something that everybody needs right now."

In eastern Germany, many residents have complained that Chancellor Helmut Kohl has not fulfilled promises to rapidly integrate the former Communist nation into the prosperous west. Since unification, obsolete factories have closed and German officials have gradually raised the price tag for its goals to improve the eastern economy. This year, $59 billion was budgeted for the effort.

It was not immediately certain whether the expenses of moving the capital will slow economic plans.

But many residents in the east expected the government would move to Berlin and welcomed the new investment and jobs.

Yet higher prices are also likely in a city that's already becoming too expensive for some residents. The rent for a two-bedroom apartment in west Berlin can go for $1,400 a month. Diepgen has promised curbs on land speculators.

Both houses of parliament hold sessions in Berlin occasionally, but the immense project of building permanent government and parliament offices is in the early stages. Planners have shown a model with parliament and government buildings on both sides of the Spree River in the center of the city.

The Bundestag, the lower house of parliament, and the chancellor's office are expected to move to Berlin in about four years, after the renovation of the Reichstag, the old parliament building. The transfer is expected to take between 10 and 12 years.

And while Berlin tackles the problems of growth, Bonn is faced with losing the core of its economy and its global spotlight. Some officials said the city could lose up to 100,000 jobs.

"Berlin will be a city like Tokyo and Paris, and Bonn will be a graveyard," said Hans-Juergen Pommereit, who owns an antique shop in Bonn.

Berlin was officially named the capital following the Oct. 3 unification, but the vote on whether to move offices was a 12-hour political slugfest among lawmakers.

Bonn backers cited their city's genteel charm and cast a disapproving eye on Berlin's permissive atmosphere and its link to the nation's Nazi past. Supporters of the move — including Kohl — boasted of Berlin's vast cultural and academic tradition and its ties to both east and west, once separated by the Berlin Wall.

Yeltsin welcomed, but Bush prefers Gorbachev

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
 AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Russian President Boris N. Yeltsin mouthed all the right words to win friends in Washington this week, but the Bush administration would have preferred to have heard them from Mikhail S. Gorbachev, President Bush's ally and Yeltsin's chief rival.

For three days, the newly elected president of the Soviet Union's largest republic pledged his commitment to democracy, free enterprise, private property and land reform to return farmland to the farmers.

He found other touchstones as well, telling his American audiences the Soviet Union needs not their handouts but rather their ideas, their expertise and their investment. He said Soviet aid to Cuba should be cut off, and the Baltic republics should be given their independence.

"He represents everything that we have been praying for," said Republican political consultant John Buckley, explaining why Yeltsin, a rough-hewn populist, has become the darling of the American right.

"Conservatives have felt that both the Reagan and the Bush administrations have looked at the Soviet Union with a pair of false options, either Gorbachev or the (Communist Party) hardliners," Buckley said.

Ever since Gorbachev won control of the party and the Kremlin in 1985, Buckley said, "conservatives have been saying it's either Gorbachev or, conceivably, a free-market, anti-communist democracy. Yeltsin represents that free-market, anti-communist democracy."

But to the administration, he represents not only the reforms it would welcome but a threat as well.

As the first popularly elected leader of Russia, by far the largest of the Soviet Union's 15 republics, Yeltsin poses a serious challenge to Gorbachev's leadership, and administration analysts have watched with mounting concern as Gorbachev's support has eroded.

Bush and Vice President Dan Quayle went to extraordinary lengths to declare the administration's distaste for a competition that could further weaken Gorbachev and give control of the Soviet Union back to communist hardliners, the military and the KGB.

"Boris Yeltsin is a man who is helping to bring democratization and reform to the Soviet Union," Quayle said in presenting the Russian leader the top award of the bipartisan Center for Democracy on Wednesday night.

But he launched immediately into an even stronger commendation of Gorbachev and his achievements.

"Working together with President Gorbachev, we have transformed the most dangerous relationship in the world into a productive relationship," Quayle said.

He mentioned the transformation of Eastern Europe, unification of Germany, Soviet support for the Persian Gulf coalition against Iraq and negotiations to reduce conventional and nuclear weapons.

What looks like a male chorus line practicing some fancy disco dance steps is actually a drill practice session for the Texas Department of Public Safety District 5B Eastside Riot Team. The men were conducting some drilling practice earlier this week on the M.K. Brown Civic Center parking lot. Team members meet once a month at various locations to practice drills and exercise to keep in shape.

Jesse Jackson promotes public service agenda

By SUSAN HIGHTOWER
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — The United States should turn its energies to shoring up services to its own people, just as it has aided countries in Eastern Europe, the Rev. Jesse Jackson said during a weeklong tour of Texas and Oklahoma.

"Let's bail out America. Let's reinvest in America," Jackson said Thursday, after a meeting with members of the Texas Rainbow Coalition.

Jackson said programs to repair the nation's infrastructure and provide affordable housing could help Americans "work our way out of a recession rather than welfare our way into despair."

"We should not go a step further engaging in combat looking for energy in the Middle East with oil wells capped in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas," he said. "We should at least be able to get the same deal for America that (Russian President Boris) Yeltsin's trying to get for the Soviet Union."

Yeltsin met with President Bush in Washington on Thursday, and discussed the possibility of expanding trade and investment with officials.

Among Jackson's proposals was an American investment bank using some public pension funds.

Jackson said he had not yet decided whether he would make a third bid for the Democratic nomination for president in 1992 after running unsuccessfully in 1984 and 1988.

Instead, he said he was traveling to promote a national agenda that he said must be considered, no matter who the candidates are.

"These matters of substance and direction is what I am mobilizing people around the country to focus on through the Rainbow Coalition. Any decision that I might make beyond my current level of public service will take place perhaps in the fall," Jackson said.

He also visited an Austin AIDS treatment facility and met privately with Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock and Gov. Ann Richards.

Jackson said Richards, who talked with him for an hour, endorsed the concept of statehood for the District of Columbia. Jackson represents the district as a nonvoting member of the U.S. Senate.

Thursday, Jackson called for establishing a G.I. bill of rights and a national health care plan.

He also blasted President Bush's characterization of civil rights legislation as a "quota" bill and criticized the federal agency created to oversee the savings and loan bailout for giving only a small fraction of its contracts to minorities.

Bush's opposition to the 1991 Civil Rights

Act "has reduced American politics to its lowest common denominator by race baiting," he said.

"During the civil rights era, George Wallace stood in the school house door and said, 'Segregation today, tomorrow and forever.' Today, President Bush stands in the White House door and says, 'No quotas today, tomorrow and forever,'" Jackson said.

Jackson also threatened to organize a protest of the Resolution Trust Corp., the agency supervising the S&L cleanup, unless it establishes an affirmative action program in awarding contracts.

In the RTC's Southwest Region, which includes Texas, more than 67 percent of the agency's $160 million in contracts have gone to white men, Jackson said.

About 27 percent of the contracts went to white women, while less than 5 percent were awarded to black men, he said.

No company owned by a black or Hispanic woman has received an RTC contract in Texas, he said.

Teresa McUsic, spokeswoman for the RTC's Southwest Region, said the agency was holding a series of seminars for women and minorities on applying for RTC contracts, and employs specialists to encourage applications from minorities and women.

Minority groups hail ruling on judgeship voting rights

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Ann Richards said she will talk to legal advisers before deciding whether to put the issue of judicial elections on the agenda of a special legislative session this summer.

"If it is necessary, of course we will include it," Richards said.

The Supreme Court, ruling on cases from Texas and Louisiana, said Thursday the federal law protecting minorities' voting power applies to the election of state and local judges.

The League of United Latin American Citizens, which challenged Texas' at-large system of electing judges in nine counties, urged Richards to put the issue on the agenda.

"We call on the governor to provide the leadership on this very important issue for the minority community in remedying the problem, just as the minority community provided strong support for her election," said lawyer Rolando Rios, representing LULAC.

Richards, who is calling lawmakers into a special session beginning July 8 to write a state budget, said she would meet with Texas Attorney General Dan Morales and her own legal staff.

The governor said she was not surprised by the Supreme Court decision.

"I always thought that common sense and logic would indicate that if you say that one group of elected officials has to come under the Voting Rights Act, then the rest of them would, too," she said.

House Speaker Gib Lewis, D-Fort Worth, said he has supported changing to a single-member district method of electing judges.

"We need a system for electing judges that allows fair representation of all Texans in our judicial system. With this ruling from the Supreme Court, we can now move ahead and create such a system in Texas," Lewis said.

Gray McBride, spokesman for the state attorney general, said the case would be returned to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, which earlier ruled the Voting Rights Act did not require Texas to abandon county-wide election of trial judges.

McBride said the 5th Circuit Court likely would return the case to District Judge Lucius Bunton of Midland for a trial that would yield additional evidence, which probably would include the 1990 election returns.

Chief Justice Tom Phillips of the Texas Supreme Court said that since the ruling didn't specifically say that the Texas system of electing judges violated the law, it could remain a legal issue for years.

However, Phillips said, "I would hope that the Legislature will explore changes in judicial elections now. We should devise a system that will eliminate partisanship, limit campaign contributions, increase minority representation and enhance public confidence in our judiciary."

Of 172 judges elected county-wide in the nine counties challenged by LULAC, 14 are minorities, Rios said.

If judges instead were chosen from legislators' districts, as many as 60 minorities could be elected, he said. Under the plan backed up LULAC, one to three judges would be elected from each legislative district.

The ruling also was praised by representatives of other minority groups, including the Houston Lawyers' Association, which was a plaintiff in the LULAC case.

"Obviously, on behalf of all Afro-Americans, we're ecstatic," said Ray Shackelford, association president.

Judith Sanders-Castro, lawyer with the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund, said the question must be addressed quickly because elections are scheduled for next year and the filing period for candidates begins Dec. 1.

"This promises to open doors for minority representation in what is essentially the last bastion of the white, good ol' boy stronghold, which are the courts," Ms. Sanders-Castro said.

Jim Harrington, director of the Texas Civil Rights Project, predicted the decision could raise the number of minority judges statewide by as many as 30.

Judge Bunton ruled in 1989 that the judicial election system challenged by LULAC diluted votes of blacks and Hispanics.

In a telephone interview from his Midland office, he said he was pleased with the Supreme Court decision and expressed hope for a quick resolution.

"Now that the U.S. Supreme Court has ruled, I hope Gov. Richards will decide the solution is not judicial, but should be a legislative one," Bunton said.

"The Legislature has been reluctant to move on this issue and I hope they will step forward now so that the voters will not be deprived in 1992 of what is rightfully theirs," he said.

Newspaper: Great cats victims of trophy hunts

AUSTIN (AP) — A newspaper reported that great cats such as African lions and endangered leopards die every year in Texas and around the country at the hands of trophy hunters and unscrupulous collectors.

A demand for pristine hides for mounting, and for "canned" hunts, is being answered by a network of private breeders who sell the cats to individuals or at auction, the Austin American-Statesman reported Thursday in a copyright story.

Federal and state laws regulate the sale and ownership of the animals, but the laws do not track them from one owner to another, the newspaper said.

One federal prosecutor called the process a "black hole" from which cats emerge as caged, tamed, de-clawed and sometimes de-fanged victims of a hunt inside a high-fenced pen.

Or they may be given a dose of cyanide, get an ice pick in the ear, or be shot in their cages so their hide can be sold and mounted, the American-Statesman reported.

"There's no responsibility for it once it's bred, raised and sold," said Assistant U.S. Attorney Collis White of San Antonio.

Two men recently pleaded guilty in San Antonio to various charges, including killing an endangered black leopard during a canned hunt.

The American-Statesman reported that a third man said he would plead guilty Friday morning to charges of killing the animal and conspiracy to violate federal law.

A videotaped account of the hunt, on a ranch near Leakey in the Texas Hill Country, shows the leopard released from a cage and fleeing a pack of dogs by hiding under a nearby pickup, the newspaper reported.

Flushed from there, the de-clawed cat tried to escape across an open area, only to be caught and surrounded by the dogs. The actual killing is not shown because of faulty camera work.

It is unknown how many animals are killed in Texas each year, but U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service special agent Alex Hosychak of San Antonio said he has been involved in half a dozen cases in the past year.

"They're not necessarily a canned hunt, now, but a grisly death nonetheless," Hosychak said. "A lot of these cats are being helped along (to their deaths) because the critters are worth more dead than alive. I am certain of that."

A live jaguar, for example, might sell for $500 to $1,000. Dead, it might be worth $2,500 to mount and sell, Hosychak said, or it might be hunted for up to $5,000.

Jaguars are endangered. A live one can be owned by permit, and a dead one if the animal died a natural death.

There have been cases in Texas in recent years where African lions, who are not endangered, were turned loose on Gulf Coast islands or inside small enclosures to be shot and killed by hunters who paid large sums for the privilege, the newspaper reported.

Senior resident agent Jim Stinebaugh of San Antonio said cases in Oklahoma, Arkansas and California where lions, tigers and grizzly bears were killed in small enclosures demonstrate the widespread availability of endangered animals and the demand for them.

Game warden Wayne Chappell, who oversees Texas' permitting process, said the state began issuing permits last fall.

Twenty-six people hold Texas permits for exotic and endangered animals, Chappell said. Native mountain lions are the No. 1 species, he said, and lions, tigers, leopards and cheetahs also are on the state permit list.

The misconduct allegation charges Bryant with allowing his 12-year-old daughter to drive a sheriff's department vehicle, Strange said.

A hearing has been scheduled for June 25 to determine whether Bryant should be suspended or allowed to remain in office pending his trial. Strange said the trial could be sometime this fall.

Jury indicts Mitchell County sheriff for sexual harassment, misconduct

COLORADO CITY, Texas (AP) — A Mitchell County grand jury Thursday indicted Sheriff Wendell Bryant on four misdemeanor charges alleging official misconduct and sexual harassment of county employees.

Bryant, 39, was arrested Thursday afternoon by a Texas Ranger and later was released on $3,500 in bonds, said Mitchell County Attorney Clay Strange.

Bryant, who has been sheriff since 1981, faces removal from office if he is found guilty on any of the charges, said Strange, who also has filed a civil petition seeking Bryant's removal and accusing him of sexual harassment.

The sheriff also faces punishment of up to two years in jail and up to $2,000 in fines for each of the sexual harassment charges.

The sexual harassment charges include allegations from sheriff's deputy Carol Hutto and jailer Gwen Henderson, who in sworn statements accused Bryant of touching and stroking them "without provocation or consent."

The incidents occurred at the sheriff's office for a year or more but more frequently within the last few months, the petition says.

The misconduct allegation charges Bryant with allowing his 12-year-old daughter to drive a sheriff's department vehicle, Strange said.

A hearing has been scheduled for June 25 to determine whether Bryant should be suspended or allowed to remain in office pending his trial. Strange said the trial could be sometime this fall.

Teachers told to rip page out of folktales textbook

DALLAS (AP) — A sexually explicit story in a textbook of folktales has prompted Dallas school administrators to order teachers to rip a page from the book, a move that has outraged some educators.

The story is contained in an African folk tales collection that will be used during classes, Dallas Independent School District officials said.

Although educators criticize what they say amounts to censorship, administrators said they recommended the move because the story didn't fit the curriculum.

"We talked to the teachers and said this page is going to cause some problems," Georganna MacQuigg, DISD's director of curriculum development, said.

"We just simply asked them that since this is a text that's going to be used in the classroom, just remove that page," she said.

The story, which educators said referred to male genitalia and bodily functions as metaphorical characters, was not scheduled to be studied by an estimated 200 seniors who will take a world literature honors course.

Instructors said they've also been ordered to avoid teaching the first two chapters of another book, Conversations with Ogo Temmeli, which deal in part with circumcision and puberty.

"There's no way you can deal with mythology without talking about sexual images," one high school

English teacher who asked not to be identified told the Dallas Times Herald. "It's just always there."

The page was to be ripped out of the textbook, African Folktales: Traditional Stories of the Black World, published by Pantheon Books in New York.

The six-paragraph story, "Tale of Four Champions," tells how four heroes named for body parts and bodily functions work together to thresh a king's harvest of corn.

District officials said the humanities course, which will be offered at some high schools for the first time this fall, is an elective taken by seniors working toward honors degrees.

Last month, Lois Harrison-Jones, DISD associate superintendent, received in the mail a photocopy of the "Tale of Four Champions" from a writer who also sent an unsigned note contending the story was offensive and should not be taught.

District officials decided to avoid the story altogether since it was not included in their curriculum guidelines, said Ms. MacQuigg.

However, teachers said students should be able to read all sections of the book, which would be kept in classrooms.

"These are not the type of students who snicker over every little thing," said one teacher. "We're talking about students who do have some kind of intellectual capacity. There's nothing in that they haven't already read in a biology book."

Man convicted of Taco Bell slayings

DALLAS (AP) — A man accused of shooting to death four people, including a pregnant 16-year-old, at a Taco Bell last January has been convicted of capital murder.

Jurors deliberated four hours Thursday before convicting Jesse Carlos San Miguel, 19, of Irving, of killing the restaurant's assistant manager, Michael Phelan, 28, during a robbery of the establishment.

The jury was to deliberate San Miguel's sentence today. He faces death or life in prison.

San Miguel, along with Jerome Green, 17, was charged with the Jan. 26 slayings after their truck was stopped by officers about two miles from the fast food restaurant in Irving. A handgun and two Taco Bell bags filled with $1,390 in cash were found on the seat.

The victims were found in a walk-in freezer shortly after San Miguel and Green were stopped by police. Testimony in the case showed that San Miguel killed the four people so he and Green would not be identified.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Bush chipping away at free enterprise

Earlier this month the Bush administration signed a new protectionist quota agreement with Japan, limiting the number of semiconductors imported to America. It is basically an extension of a similar agreement signed in 1986. The same reason is being given as then: The Japanese are "dumping" chips on our shores at prices below production costs. But what really happened was that Japanese companies expanded chip production too fast, forcing them to cut prices. And anyway, why should we complain about cut-rate prices for purchases by American computer companies?

The first round of chip quotas staggered the U.S. computer industry in 1987 and 1988. The 1986 quotas drove up prices of RAM (random access memory) chips. PC Computing wrote in September 1988: "For consumers the effects are painfully obvious. The cost of add-on memory products has soared to the point that savvy PC owners simply aren't buying." Rather than the 30 percent annual price drops the industry is used to, higher chip prices "boosted PC makers' costs by an average of 15 percent." Microtimes reported that the higher chip prices cost Atari, an American firm, $11.7 million in 1988.

The fact is that the last thing American computer firms need is "protection." The white-hot personal computer industry is led by such U.S. hardware firms as IBM, Compaq, Apple, AST and ALR, and by such U.S. software firms as Microsoft, Lotus, Borland and Claris. This summer is witnessing a price war over the "386" computers, based on the 80386 microprocessor (the computer "brain"), almost all of which are produced by Intel Corp., a U.S. firm.

American policy toward computers should be simple: Let competition rip; drop all restrictions. The Europeans are hurt by protectionism that shields companies from the blast furnace of competition; the Japanese, by an antiquated distribution system and a system of writing used nowhere else in the world; and all foreigners, by the fact that only U.S. companies sit in the middle of the industry's central market.

Our government doesn't seem to realize that, even though U.S. firms lead the world in competition, the industry is now worldwide. Open any computer and you will find components from El Salvador, Malaysia, Taiwan, Korea, Singapore, Japan, Mexico and the United States. American companies need this open market to scrounge the world for the cheapest possible components. They then pop the components into computers, and use low costs to boost profits, market share and exports of the finished product.

Fortunately, the computer industry is now innovating so rapidly that the new quota protectionism will only slow, not halt, innovation. Even the damage of the 1986 quotas faded by 1989. Chip production is actually low-tech; it is the design of chips that is the high-tech component. Yet the quotas' continued distortion of the market will only hurt firms whose computers are stamped "Made in USA."

One more black hole in space

WASHINGTON — Promoters of space station Freedom made a persuasive case in the House recently. They did not make a convincing case. The regrettable truth is that this $2 billion baby is a bad buy. The taxpayers' money can be far better spent on other projects here on Earth or out in space.

During six hours of impassioned debate, the House heard all kinds of arguments in favor of continuing the project. It would inspire our young people. It would demonstrate American leadership. It would be the first step on the road to Mars. To kill the space station, we were told, would alienate such partners in the venture as Japan, Canada and the European Space Agency. They would never trust us again. And so on, rah-rah-rah and sis-boom-bah. The vote was 240-173 to pour another $2 billion into this huge black hole.

Roughly $5.6 billion already has been spent on Freedom. It seems an incredible amount to invest in preliminary studies, but the National Aeronautics and Space Administration has a way of spending money with a lavish hand. The pending authorization for 1992 is critical. If the Senate goes along with the house, the project will have passed a point of no return. Congress will be committed to keep funding the space station into the next century and beyond.

No one, least of all NASA, has any clear idea of the financial burden the taxpayers would be assuming. It will cost a minimum of $30 billion to get the station assembled in space. That is NASA's own estimate. No one gives it the slightest credence.

But assuming that this fictional figure has substance, the taxpayers may well ask: What would we be getting for this huge chunk of money? The answer is, not much. The original design called for a permanent crew of eight; the current design would house a crew of four. The size of the station has shrunk from 40 feet to 27 feet. Once we were promised multiple experiments that would produce multiple spin-offs. Now sponsors are down to two experiments, one of which could be performed better on Earth. Nothing more is heard of spin-offs.

On this point, let us listen to John Pike. He is director of space policy for the American Federation of Scientists. In his testimony, he traced the "declining expectations" that have troubled the space station over the past seven years. The grand idea in 1974 was that the station would be the centerpiece of our whole space program. The facility would service commercial and scientific satellites. It would be the assembling point for missions to Mars.

Little remains of the grand idea. The problem today, said Pike, "is that we are now down to the point that the only two user communities that are left are the materials research community and the space medicine community, and it appears that we can't even do both of those."

Pike and other witnesses voiced practical objections. In its present configuration, the station would have enough fuel on board to remain in orbit for only a year. If NASA should suffer another Challenger disaster, the crew then on Freedom would have to escape aboard another emergency return vehicle — a vehicle, incidentally, that does not even figure in NASA's estimate of costs. It would cost another $2 billion.

The agency has based its projections of cost and completion on a highly improbable scenario. Parts for this complex assembly would have to arrive for launch on time. Shuttles would have to perform immaculately. There could be no serious malfunctions in computers. Our foreign partners would have to be kept happy with their role. To meet deadlines of 1995 to 1997 would require timely and successful tests of the structural elements. All this seems a great deal to ask of the same wonderful people who gave us the Hubble telescope.

There are alternatives to a manned space station. It is generally agreed that much valuable research may be done at far less expense through unmanned satellites and space probes. Such projects might lack the "prestige" of a manned station, but the return on investment would be many times higher. It will cost at least $2 billion a year simply to maintain Freedom in its orbit. Senators should ask themselves if the sum could be more profitably spent on science education in our schools.

It was clear from the House debate that members still have a lively interest in space exploration. There wasn't a flat-earth spokesman anywhere. But hours of visionary rah-rah-rah provide a poor substitute for sober appraisal of this venture. It's a bummer. Kill it.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Friday, June 21, the 172nd day of 1991. There are 193 days left in the year. Summer arrives today at 4:19 p.m. CDT.

Today's Highlight in History:

On June 21, 1964, civil rights workers Michael H. Schwerner, Andrew Goodman and James E. Chaney disappeared in Philadelphia, Miss. Their bodies were found in an earthen dam six weeks later. (Seven men were convicted in 1967 of conspiracy in the killings).

On this date: In 1788, the United States Constitution went into effect as New Hampshire became the ninth state to ratify it.

In 1834, Cyrus Hall McCormick received a patent for his reaping machine.

In 1887, Britain celebrated the golden jubilee of Queen Victoria.

In 1943, federal troops put down a racial riot in Detroit that claimed some 30 lives.

In 1945, Japanese forces on Okinawa surrendered to the United States during World War Two.

Time out for the Old West

I grew up with a generation of boys all of whom wanted to be Tom Mix or John Wayne.

Our role models were not bad, but they were not real.

And so we matured with a distorted mental picture of the early American cowboy. He'd not have recognized John Wayne's hat, snap-button shirt nor even the boots and gunbelt.

I had a memorable weekend in the Superstition Mountains of Arizona with two natives — both scholars of 18th Century Western Americana.

Troy Murray owns a Western art gallery, so he can afford to be a cowboy.

Jim Rogers owns Old West Outfitters, which provided authentic period clothing and gear for such movies as Lonesome Dove and Dances With Wolves.

He wanted us dressed right for this odyssey. Thus for a wonder-filled while, we turned back the clock 200 years.

With horses and pack mules we headed up the Apache Trail. We tied up at Tortilla Flats for our last taste of store-bought food. There we strapped on six-guns, and for the next 10 hours in the saddle we zigzagged upward toward a mile-high destination in the roadless wildness beyond Four Peaks.

Paul Harvey

Following an uncommonly wet winter, everything is in bloom.

I was with two native Arizonans and they never saw the high desert more magnificent.

We ascended from the mostly scrub cactus desert into stately saguaro. Five hundred feet higher, the next microclimate brings to life pinon pine. Another thousand feet up we're in cedars. Eventually, saddle sore and brush cut, we were in the tall country of the ponderosa.

Yet all along the way, on mountain trails or making our own trails, the vistas were beyond description.

Ocotillo were tipped with flame. Prickly pear blossoms opened even as we passed.

Paloverdi is 18-carat pure gold.

And way up there, as the sun went down and a mostly full moon took over, suddenly we were as close to the sky as a man could get on horseback.

We were in a meadow of belly-deep green grass; there was a gurgling stream of crystal water and just enough breeze to ground any flying bugs.

By moonlight we made camp for the night. Horses first — water, but not too much too fast. Then, saddles off, the weary liberated mounts grazed and rolled while we built a campfire, unpacked bedrolls and got the potatoes started.

It was cold enough eating and after so that we crowded the campfire for late-night hours of shared cowboy lore and with the poems that became their songs.

Can you even imagine John Wayne with a needle, thread and thimble? Yet these were valued accessories for patching, repairing and replacing buttons.

And the cowboy never lived, at least not long, if he wore short sleeves, two guns or boxer shorts.

Computers draw legislative borders

By ROBERT WALTERS

DENVER — Young men and women sitting at computer terminals in a downtown office building today routinely perform a task that not long ago was within the purview of only veteran politicians ensconced in their proverbial smoke-filled back rooms.

The politically delicate work involves rearranging the boundaries of almost all of the districts from which thousands of the nation's federal, state and local politicians will be elected throughout the 1990s.

Beginning-of-the-decade redistricting mandated by law to equalize the population of those districts based on the results of the decennial census is hardly a new concept. But the dominant role of computers this year is unprecedented.

In theory, that development will democratize reapportionment by giving organizations representing people other than office-holders and political professionals access to the process. But the introduction of technology could also produce unintended and unforeseen consequences.

Politicians did not make significant use of computers for redistricting until the early 1980s. Because only mainframe computers could then handle the work, access was limited to those who could pay the relatively high price involved.

Indeed, much of the reapportionment a decade ago was done with crudely drawn maps — and none of those efforts is as celebrated as the unabashedly partisan redrawing of congressional district lines in California by the late Rep. Phillip M. Burton, D-Calif.

Going into the redistricting process, the Democrats barely controlled the state's House delegation by a 22-21 margin and most of California's population growth in the prior decade had been in suburban Republican areas. Nevertheless, Burton's finagling produced a redistricting scheme with a 28-17 Democratic advantage.

But politicians' hand-crafted maps are on the way to becoming antiquities in an era when firms such as Public Systems Associates here in Denver can quickly produce hundreds of variations of computer-generated reapportionment plans.

That company — which specializes in providing budgeting, voting, bill-tracking and other computerized systems to state legislatures — is among the relatively few in the country with highly sophisticated redistricting capability.

Others include Market Opinion Research in Detroit, Election Data Services in Washington and Environmental Systems Research Institute in Redlands, Calif.

They start with Topologically Integrated Geographic Encoding and Referencing, a massive new data base assembled by the Census Bureau at a cost of $345 million. Its seemingly clumsy name just happens to produce a catchy acronym — TIGER.

Using standard longitude and latitude reference points, TIGER has plotted the location of every street, highway, railroad, bridge, lake, river, stream and other major geographic features in all 50 states. In addition, it has identified every political boundary, ranging from rural township lines to big-city borders and beyond.

Such block-by-block computerized information has never before been available. The Census Bureau's predecessor effort in the early 1980s, for example, included maps of only major metropolitan areas. It encompassed 60 percent of the country's population but only 2 percent of its land.

Anybody can buy the TIGER file, for $25 to $200 per county or just over $50,000 for the entire country, then add 1990 census data — including information on education, income, race, age and a host of other demographic attributes.

Voter registration, election results and other politician data also can be added to the TIGER file. Even the location of office-holders' homes can be included, to insure that politicians and their constituents are not accidentally separated. Finally, a computer can suggest an infinite number of possible district boundaries to attain the desired number and mixture of voters.

Moreover, state or local organizations with $10,000 to $50,000 to spend on the process now can participate in the construction of new districts for any of the 435 members of the U.S. House of Representatives or 7,400 members of the 50 state legislatures.

Violence, gun control focus of crime bill

By JAMES ROWLEY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration dropped two of the most controversial elements of its anti-crime package as the Senate began debate on measures to reduce street violence and curb illegal use of guns.

The administration abandoned a proposal to conduct essentially secret trials with secret evidence to deport aliens suspected of terrorist activity.

It also jettisoned a provision that would have allowed firearms illegally seized by police to be used as evidence in federal criminal trials.

The last-minute changes, however, failed to win Democratic votes for President Bush's crime package. A Republican motion to substitute the modified Bush bill for the Democratic crime package failed on a 56-40 vote Thursday night, largely along party lines.

Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr., D-Del., chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, said the vote showed that Democrats have discovered that "President Bush's crime bill doesn't really curb street crime."

Democrats are pushing a series of gun-control proposals, including a seven-day waiting period on handgun purchases.

Bush has indicated he would sign gun-control measures if Congress enacts his proposals to expand the federal death penalty, make it more difficult for state inmates on death row to challenge their sentences in federal courts and give federal agents more leeway in conducting searches.

Biden also proposes the death penalty for more than 30 federal crimes, but his bill contains less strict provisions on defendants' rights.

His bill would codify recent Supreme Court decisions to admit evidence seized by police who made an honest mistake executing a valid search warrant.

Republicans are expected to seek a separate vote on the president's plan to change the so-called exclusionary rule that bans trial use of illegally obtained evidence. Bush's bill would allow use of such evidence seized during a warrantless search if the officers thought they were acting legally.

"We need to make these reforms," Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, said in urging support of the Bush bill. "We have people getting off on technicalities today and being put right back on the streets."

One proposal deleted Thursday would have allowed firearms to be introduced as evidence in any federal criminal case even if police conducted a search they knew to be illegal.

Another provision that raised the ire of civil libertarians would have allowed federal prosecutors to withhold from aliens accused of terrorist activity the evidence to justify their deportation. Judges presiding at special courts would see the evidence, but it would have been kept secret to protect intelligence sources.

Biden said tinkering with the federal criminal statutes will not attack the crime problem because defendants who go free on technicalities account for less than 1 percent of all cases.

"The heart of the president's bill are shopworn proposals and whatever the merits will do very little to reduce crime," he contended.

"If America's crime problem is worse than ever, it is not because Congress has failed to do its part," Biden said, responding to White House attacks on Congress over the crime issue. "The administration has failed to use the powers given it by Congress."

Biden noted that the Justice Department had obtained only one death sentence under a 3-year-old law that permits execution of drug dealers who kill.

On another issue, the Senate defeated, 55-41, a provision that would allow defendants in capital murder cases to try to show that the death penalty was imposed on a disproportionate number of blacks or other minorities.

The so-called Racial Justice Act was soundly defeated last year by the Senate.

Arms dealer fingers Casey in 1980 hostage deal

WASHINGTON (AP) — William Casey, as Ronald Reagan's presidential campaign manager, allegedly cut a deal with Iran in 1980 to delay the release of U.S. hostages until after Election Day, ABC News says.

ABC said Iranian arms dealer Jamshid Hashemi supplied it with details of what he said were two sets of meetings in July and August 1980 in Madrid with Casey, who later became Reagan's CIA director, and two unidentified men.

ABC-TV's "Nightline" program Thursday night broadcast Hashemi's description of the alleged meetings that supposedly took place in the midst of the Carter-Reagan presidential campaign. The network said Casey's campaign schedule was uncharacteristically blank for July 27-29 and Aug. 8-13, 1980.

The network quoted a newspaper story of July 30, 1980, in which a Reagan campaign spokesman said Casey planned to return home that day "from a trip abroad." Casey died in 1987.

There have been reports for the past decade that the Reagan campaign made a deal with Iran's ruling clerics to delay until after the election the release of the 52 American hostages seized in the takeover of the U.S. Embassy in Tehran in 1979.

The reports were revived recently by Gary Sick, a member of the National Security Council staff in the Carter administration. Sick said there is substantial circumstantial evidence pointing to such a deal.

According to Hashemi, who refused to go on camera, Iran was represented in the Madrid meetings by Iranian cleric Mehdi Kharoubi and his brother, Hassan. Hashemi said he and his brother, Cyrus, who has since died, acted as interpreters.

ABC said Hashemi's account went like this: In a set of meetings in July 1980, Casey said that if the hostages were freed after the election, grateful Republicans would arrange the release of frozen Iranian assets and of military equipment that had been held up.

ABC said it found records from the Plaza Hotel in Madrid that show the Hashemi brothers there in late July as well as August 1980. Hashemi said the first meeting took place at a suite he had in another hotel, the Ritz.

A set of meetings in August, again with Casey, focused on the delivery of weapons to Iran from Israel and release of the hostages.

As a gesture of goodwill, Mehdi Kharoubi told Casey the hostages would be released on the day Reagan was inaugurated. In exchange, the Iranians expected that Casey would help Iran get certain arms and information, even though he was not then in the U.S. government.

The next day, Casey told Mehdi Kharoubi that Cyrus Hashemi would be introduced to a man who turned out to be an Israeli general.

Cyrus Hashemi bought a freighter, which was used from August 1980 through January of 1981 to make four round trips between the Israeli port of Eilat and the Iranian port of Bandar Abbas loaded with weapons.

ABC said "a high-ranking military officer, from Israeli Defense Industries, ultimately sold a total of $150 million worth of weapons and ammunition to the Iranians."

The hostages were released within minutes of Reagan taking office on Jan. 20, 1981. The arrangements had been made by the Carter administration in negotiations using Algerian representatives as intermediaries.

ABC's investigation is being undertaken in cooperation with the Financial Times of London. Separately, the Atlanta Journal-Constitution reported Thursday a link between Cyrus Hashemi and former Attorney General Edwin Meese III. Meese, not then yet in government, was a scheduled guest at the home of Cyrus Hashemi in December 1980, the newspaper said.

The Journal-Constitution interviewed Robert McQueen, a former investigator for the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service who was working with Hashemi's wife in a probe of immigration violations.

While the investigator was at Hashemi's home, Hona Hashemi told him that she and her husband intended to entertain Meese at dinner that night, and asked McQueen if he would like to stay.

McQueen also said Mrs. Hashemi mentioned that her husband was assisting with fund transfers in the negotiations to get the hostages released.

Cyrus Hashemi was helping the Carter administration in the negotiations, Gary Sick told the Atlanta newspaper.

Three malnourished girls, unable to speak, found in filthy apartment

SANTA CRUZ, Calif. (AP) — Three malnourished girls who apparently have had little contact with the outside world were found living in a squalid apartment, unable to speak, police said.

The girls, ages 2, 4 and 6, made only grunting noises and hid under trash and moldy clothing when an officer arrived to arrest their mother on drug charges Wednesday, police said.

Social workers and police in this city of 50,000 said it was the worst case of neglect they've ever encountered.

"It appears that their whole world is in that house," said police Sgt. Joe Haeb. "The only behavior they've learned is what's gone on inside those four walls."

The children, undersized with their hair matted and dirty, were placed in emergency foster homes

Thursday. The eldest child may be autistic, and there is no evidence any of the children have ever been to school or come in contact with social service agencies, Haeb said.

Police arrested their mother, Ruby Pointer, 40, on suspicion of child endangerment and marijuana cultivation. She was being held in Santa Cruz County Jail in lieu of $5,000 bail.

Neighbors in the low-income apartment complex said Pointer almost never came out of her townhouse.

"They stayed in the apartment 24 hours a day," said Arselia Cisneros, 32. "Sometimes I could see the children in the windows. They were dirty and they never had any clothes on."

She said she called police and county child welfare workers in recent months, "but they never came out." Social workers declined to comment on the case, citing juvenile confidentiality laws.

Patrolman Randy Harris went to the apartment Wednesday evening after a neighbor called police. When no one answered the door, he walked into the neighbor's back yard and spotted Pointer through the patio door. He also saw 33 marijuana plants growing in foam coffee cups, police said.

Inside the apartment, Harris found rooms stinking of mold and piled high with trash. He photographed kitchen counters and floors covered with rotting food and dirty dishes, police said.

"The children had to be physically carried out of the house, kicking and screaming," Harris said.

A well of water...

Many important events have taken place at the well. In days long ago it was a meeting place, where all came because of the necessity to obtain life-sustaining water.

Jacob met his beloved Rachel at the well. Moses met the daughters of his future father-in-law at the well in Midian. Much later Jesus Christ met a woman of Samaria at the well and said, "Whoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life."

The church of God today is a meeting place where many come to obtain this life-giving and life-sustaining water of which Jesus spoke.

The Church is God's appointed agency in this world for spreading the knowledge of His love for man and of His demand for man to respond to that love by loving his neighbor. Without this grounding in the love of God, no government or society or way of life will long persevere and the freedoms which we hold so dear will inevitably perish. Therefore, even from a selfish point of view, one should support the Church for the sake of the welfare of himself and his family. Beyond that, however, every person should uphold and participate in the Church because it tells the truth about man's life, death and destiny, the truth which alone will set him free to live as a child of God.

Church plans revival services

Open Door Church of God in Christ, 404 Oklahoma St., will have revival services beginning Monday and continuing through Friday.

Each night, the services, to be led by an elder from Colorado Springs, Colo., Church of God in Christ, will begin at 7:30 p.m.

Elder H. Kelley, pastor of the church, invites the public to attend the revival.

Salvation Army's annual VBS set next week

The Salvation Army's annual Vacation Bible School will begin Tuesday and continue through Friday.

This year's VBS is for ages 5 and up and will begin at 10 a.m. The first hour will be devoted to a Bible lesson. From 11 a.m. to noon, the children will enjoy a craft. From noon to 1 p.m., lunch will be served. And from 1 to 3 p.m. a day camp, with different activities, will be conducted.

The Salvation Army Texas Evangelistic Team, made up of young people ages 14-18, will be in Pampa to lead the VBS. The group travels around the state and helps with various meetings.

His Touch

By Charlotte Barbaree

Scripture: "Who of you by working can add a single hour to his life?" (Matthew 6:27 NIV)

One of my daughters was born with a powerful "want" to be grown. She wasn't particularly temperamental except when she wanted to do something she simply wasn't yet capable of doing.

When she was two years old, she had a new winter coat which had a separating zipper. She wanted to wear her new coat out to play one day, but instead of letting me zip the coat for her, she was determined to do it herself. Of course, her coordination wasn't well enough developed, and she couldn't do it alone.

Well! She proceeded to throw one unholy temper tantrum. She screamed in frustration, and, whenever I tried to help her, she fought off my hands. Finally, I went to the kitchen and left her stubbornly fighting the zipper and crying furiously. When she wound down and got quiet, I went to her room to check on her. She was still wearing her coat (it still was unzipped), and she had crawled onto her bed and had fallen asleep. She had missed her playtime, exhausted her energy, caused herself trouble, and failed in her endeavor.

When life's circumstances come down to a matter of faith, we Christians are much like frustrated toddlers. We stubbornly insist on self-sufficiency in areas where we were actually, absolutely powerless! We worry and complain and fume and rave and scheme.

If we think to pray at all, our prayers are for the purpose of briefing God on how and when to do things our way. When God steps in and demonstrates his greater wisdom and perfect solution, we fight his ministrations.

As a result, we inevitably miss the joy of life, exhaust our energy, cause ourselves trouble, and fail in our endeavor. Such a pity when we have such a great God!

Religion roundup

WASHINGTON (AP) — American Indians and native Alaskan Christians of seven denominations have formed a new Council of Native American Ministries and decided to affiliate it with the National Council of Churches.

The new group will serve as an advocacy or lobbying agency on legislative matters affecting Indians and native Alaskans.

CHICAGO (AP) — Facing another budgetary shortfall, the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America has dismissed 16 headquarters employees and cut various programs to reduce its 1991 spending by $5.2 million to $90.3 million.

"This is a time of great pain for those affected by these cuts, for those who remain at work in the churchwide office and for others throughout this church," said ELCA Bishop Herbert W. Chilstrom.

That trims the number employed by the denomination's national organization to 505.

First Baptist Church ministers to those with special needs

By CHERYL BERZANSKIS
Lifestyles Editor

In 1984, a group of members of First Baptist Church visited a special ministries program at the First Baptist Church of Hurst.

At the Hurst church, they watched a simulated Sunday school class and learned how that congregation attempts to minister to the mentally handicapped.

That group — Debra Gikas, George Warren, Sue Gustin, Sherry Carlson, Bob Johnson and Jimmie Ivy — set the wheels in motion for the same type of Sunday school program in Pampa.

First Baptist Church Special Ministries opened in 1984 with 18 mentally handicapped individuals attending.

Since then, class members have come and gone, but department chairman, Debra Gikas said that there about 14 who attend regularly. Class members range in age from four years through 60-plus.

The class begins each week with a group assembly, singing time, and introduction for the day's Bible lesson. The students then divide into two classes for a lesson, craft activity and small group prayer time. They re-group at the end of the hour for more singing.

Gikas says while the structure and routine is soothing and reassuring to the students, the students are free wheeling with their singing and worshipping.

She said they know this Sunday school time is their own place to worship and learn.

Marci Welborn, class teacher, emphasized how important prayer time is to the students. She said, "We've seen so many answered prayers here. We have seen members of this department who wouldn't utter a prayer say the most beautiful prayers." Gikas agreed, "If we miss one person's prayer request, we are quickly told about it."

Another point that Gikas and Welborn emphasize is that the class members were free to talk about their problems and concerns. Gikas said they often discuss being mentally handicapped.

During class time, students attend the main worship service in the church sanctuary. Both Gikas and Welborn emphasize that attending the worship service is not required, but if a mentally handicapped individual's needs could be better met by staying in the Sunday school facility for the second hour, they and other class teachers have the resources available to continue on for a second hour of class.

They explained that the current class members love the worship service; the students want their hymn books open to the right pages, and their Bibles opened to the day's Scripture.

Gikas said that the special ministries program has a two-fold goal.

"The main goal," she said, "is to share Jesus and meet their spiritual needs."

Secondly, she explained, the availability of a Sunday school department for the mentally handicapped allows the family to attend the church of their choice.

The class is not limited to members of First Baptist Church, Gikas said, but any mentally handicapped individuals are welcome. Some students who attend the special ministries class come by church bus, which stops at both group homes and at homes of individual members.

An adult Sunday school class of the church presented each class member with a Bible, bearing the member's name.

Gikas said the students take great care of their Bibles, usually bringing them in the box they came in. She said each student can recite John 3:16. One student recites The Twenty-third Psalm.

First Baptist Church sponsors a Special Friends Camp at Panfork Baptist Encampment. The special ministries camp which opened in 1988, is geared for the mentally handicapped individual.

The three nights and four days of camp are like any other Christian camping experience, Gikas said. About 40 Panhandle residents had days of Bible study, nature study, crafts, fishing, and arts and crafts last year. The next camp is planned for July.

Hi-Land Christian welcomes new minister

Hi-Land Christian Church has announced the hiring of a new minister, Tim Moore.

Moore, 35, moves to Pampa with his wife Colette and daughters Crystal, 12, and Danielle, 13, from Clay Center, Kan., where he was pastor of First Christian Church.

A 14-year-veteran of the ministry, Moore holds a bachelor's degree in ministry from Manhattan Christian College and a master of theology degree from International Seminary in Plymouth, Fla.

"I've come to serve the community of Pampa under the auspices of Hi-Land Christian Church, one of the greatest churches in Pampa," Moore said. "Their outpouring of love and acceptance has been overwhelming and an accurate prelude of heaven's promise."

He stated that the friendliness of Hi-Land Christian's membership reaffirmed his belief that God was leading him to Pampa.

"We want to communicate the place of Christianity in overcoming the forces of the world, but do it in love," Moore said. "We need to call things as they are, yet be hopeful of a glorious future."

Carpenter's House Church to host Knights

Renita and Johnny Knight

Johnny and Renita Knight will be at the Carpenter's House Church, 639 S. Barnes St., beginning Sunday morning and continuing through Friday night.

Sunday services will be at 10:30 a.m. and 7 p.m. Each service will feature special singing as well as ministry.

The Knights recently played the leading roles in the motion picture, "This Side of Heaven," which is the Ira Stanhill story by World Mission Films Inc.

The Rev. Knight is also a gospel songwriter, singer and evangelist. The Knights have visited many churches across the nation.

Mrs. Knight is the daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. Wilbert Wade, formerly of Pampa, and the granddaughter of Mrs. A.B. Wade of Pampa and Mrs. Callie Palmer of Pampa.

They have two sons and are pastors in DeSoto. The public is invited to attend the services.

St. Matthew's Church honors octogenarians

St. Matthew's Episcopal Church, 727 W. Browning, hosted a luncheon on June 16 to honor parishioners who have attained the age of 80 or more years.

Amid a birthday party atmosphere, the octogenarians were honored with introductions and presentations of boutonnieres and corsages by the Rev. William K. Bailey, rector, on behalf of the parish.

The 15 honorees were Janie Anderson, John Brown, George Casey, Lena Creel, Ralph Gardiner, Ben Guill, Jewell Hale, Maggie Hollis, Dr. Frank Kelley, Florence Miller, Robert Miller, Claudia Nees, Margaret Nichols, Clifford Scott and Lois Wilkinson.

Booklets giving a brief profile of each honoree were distributed to the honorees and to others attending the luncheon. Hostess chairwomen were Iris Ragsdale and Glenna Lea Miller.

Religion roundup

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Noted church sociologist Robert L. Wilson, a United Methodist and professor at Duke University Divinity School since 1970, died June 9 of bone cancer. He was 66.

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — The number of Lutherans in the world increased nearly a million last year, growing from 58.9 million in 1989 to 59.7 million in 1990, says the Lutheran World Federation. Much of the increase was attributed to the new religious freedom in the Soviet Union.

NEW YORK (AP) — Eighteen U.S. religious leaders have asked Congress for quick action on legislation to reform and expand the unemployment insurance program. They said that with the country eight months into a recession and with unemployment likely to worsen, it is critical that steps be taken to "extend benefits to the long-term unemployed" and to others not covered.

"During the current recession, only 40 percent of the unemployed have received unemployment insurance benefits," the seventh straight year this protection has been below 40 percent, the statement said.

House majority whip quits to 'reach back, give back'

By MICHAEL BLOOD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — An aide whispered in his ear, and Rep. William H. Gray III called his House Budget Committee's meeting to a halt.

The space shuttle Challenger had blown up, and the preacher side of Gray took over from the politician.

He asked for a moment of silence, and, instantly, was able to summarize the shock of the moment.

"It's become routine," he said of space travel. "And we've forgotten how dangerous it really is."

That incident 5 1/2 years ago typified Gray's talent for human understanding that showed through a 12-year career as a congressman.

To the surprise of many in politics, that career is ending abruptly. Gray, 49, the House majority whip and highest-ranking black in Congress, announced Thursday he would leave office in August to become president of the United Negro College Fund.

"If there's anything that those of us who reach success ought to do, it is to be willing to go back, reach back and give back," the Pennsylvania Democrat said.

His father was president of two historically black colleges, and his mother was dean of students at another. Gray was a college professor for 12 years early in his career. And he said he wanted more "quality time" with his wife and three teen-age sons.

Whether making deals, staking out Democratic positions or climbing through the ranks, Gray knew how people thought and what he needed to say and do.

His foil in the House, Minority Whip Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., said Gray possessed the ability to "transcend being ... Republican and Democrat."

"Bill Gray was just a natural," said Thomas E. Mann, director of governmental studies at the Brookings Institution, a liberal policy research center.

"He didn't simply push an ideological agenda without concern for the practicalities of the situation," Mann said. "He was a real skilled politician within the institution."

Ronald Walters, chairman of the Political Science Department at Howard University, described Gray as an adept "conciliator."

His colleagues said they had considered him a potential candidate for House speaker or national office.

Some questioned why Gray, near the pinnacle of House leadership, would change course. Several colleagues said Gray confided that he began thinking about his future after

Sen. John Heinz, R-Pa., was killed in a plane crash in April.

"He said that very day he was on an airplane himself flying to Philadelphia, and he said when he heard about it he thought, 'I'm going to have to look at my priorities again,'" said Rep. John Murtha, D-Pa.

"The speaker is not the end all," Gray said in New York on Thursday. "I think there's a more important contribution for me, and a greater mission for me: to help provide educational opportunity, to widen the doors of education, for over 50,000 black students."

Gray's political career began in 1976, four years after he succeeded his father as pastor of Philadelphia's Bright Hope Baptist Church.

He lost the Democratic primary for a congressional seat by 339 votes that year and formed the "339 Club" to begin his next run.

In the 1978 primary, he ousted incumbent Robert N.C. Nix by 10,000 votes and went on to claim the seat in November.

From the start, Gray displayed leadership potential. Within five years of his first term he was running the important Budget Committee.

One of his biggest victories occurred when the House overrode then-President Reagan's veto in 1986 of legislation imposing sanctions against South Africa because of its racial policies.

Gray skillfully secured federal dollars for the Southeastern Pennsylvania Transportation Authority, which operates subways and buses. His office says he helped steer more than $2 billion in federal transit funds there.

As whip, Gray adopted a low profile. It earned him the appellation: The Stealth Whip. Gray described his role as "chief of the engine room."

Members of both sides of the aisle said they regarded him as successful in lining up votes, but others said he failed to match the effectiveness of his predecessor as whip, Rep. Tony Coelho, D-Calif.

"Tony Coelho was always on the floor, always available, always pumping. Bill Gray was not that way," said a congressional aide who asked not to be identified.

In Philadelphia, Gray became a virtual political deity. But in the city's hard-fought Democratic mayoral primary last month, his image as a power broker was tarnished.

His handpicked candidate, former City Councilman George Burrell, finished third.

The campaign splintered the black community and raised questions about Gray's tactics, which included a television ad appealing only to the city's blacks for support.

2 million Muslims assemble near Mecca, unrest feared

MECCA, Saudi Arabia (AP) — About 2 million Muslims assembled today on Mount Arafat overlooking Mecca at the height of the annual pilgrimage to Islamic holy shrines. A record number of security forces kept watch for political unrest.

During the Gulf War crisis, President Saddam Hussein of Iraq tried to whip up the world's estimated 1 billion Muslims against the Saudi ruling family. Saddam alleged the presence of U.S. and allied forces on Saudi soil violated the sanctity of Islam's most revered sites.

New air-conditioned and widened tunnels between the sites have also been added to avoid another tragedy from overcrowding. Last year, 1,426 pilgrims were trampled and suffocated in a stampede.

This year's trek to the holy cities of Mecca and Medina was the first since the end of the gulf crisis and allowed Iranians to attend after a three-year ban for staging political demonstrations. In 1987, a clash between Iranian protesters and Saudi police killed 402 pilgrims.

The pilgrimage is a requirement for all able-bodied Muslims. Official statistics said 720,102 foreign pilgrims came by land, sea and air, including 115,000 Iranians. The rest came from within Saudi Arabia.

Mecca is on the kingdom's western coast, 490 miles southwest of Riyadh.

Muslims from Indonesia to Morocco join the pilgrimage, their numbers fixed by a Saudi quota of 1,000 per million people in Muslim nations. They include paupers along with leaders. Dignitaries this year included the president of Indonesia, prime minister of Lebanon and the foreign minister of Iran.

In keeping with tradition, radio and television broadcasters from Muslim countries took turns commenting live via satellite from Mount Arafat.

Iraq's broadcaster, an unidentified opposition official, sharply criticized the Baghdad regime, widely condemned in the Muslim world for invading an Arab neighbor, Kuwait, and touching off the gulf conflict.

"Oh God, your enemy has been tyrannical with your faithful, he has scorched the earth and filled Iraq with injustice.

"Bring down your wrath and destroy their prisons and their tyranny and let Iraq return to your glory and service," the Iraqi speaker said.

Iraq sent a few hundred pilgrims to this year's hajj, compared to the 18,000 who took part last year.

The Kuwaiti speaker prayed for God's blessings "on the sons of valor" in his liberated country, but refrained from directly attacking Baghdad.

A Palestinian commentator prayed for the liberation of the Al-Aqsa Mosque, Islam's third-holiest shrine after Mecca and Medina, located in Israeli-annexed East Jerusalem.

A leading Saudi cleric, in a sermon at the Namara Mosque on Mount Arafat, called on Muslims to settle their differences without mentioning any of the various conflicts polarizing the Muslim world.

Sheik Abdel-Aziz bin Abdullah al-Sheikh, one of the kingdom's main ulemas, or religious legislators, said: "Muslims must solve their problems within the Muslim family, Muslims are one body."

Thousands of police and troops stood guard over today's ceremony on the day before the end of the nearly monthlong pilgrimage, or hajj.

Despite the security patrols, some Iranians staged a rally and chanted "Death to America!" and "Death to Israel!"

Thousands of Jordanians, Sudanese, Palestinians and Yemenis who supported Saddam during the war are among the pilgrims.

The American and allied troops have not come close to Mecca, a city forbidden to non-Muslims. A spokesman for the U.S. Joint Information Bureau said no U.S. Muslim soldier asked to take part in the pilgrimage.

Diplomats say the largest number of security personnel ever — soldiers, National Guardsmen, military and police cadets and tribal draftees — were overseeing the hajj this year.

Explosion kills more than 50 at Sri Lanka army barracks

By DEXTER CRUEZ
Associated Press Writer

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (AP) — Two suicide bombers today detonated a van filled with explosives at the headquarters for government operations against Tamil rebels, killing at least 51 people and wounding 120, military officials said.

The government, whose figures are often conservative, gave a preliminary toll of 20 people killed, most soldiers, and 50 injured.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility, but the government suspected Tamil rebels.

The blast devastated a military barracks and blew the roof off the command center's main office across the street. It left a crater in the street six feet deep and 20 feet in diameter. Hundreds of people ran screaming in panic through the streets of the residential neighborhood in the capital.

Walter Fernando, a deputy secretary in the Defense Ministry, said two men tried to drive into the command center and detonated the explosives when they were stopped by sentries at the gate.

He said at least 155 pounds of plastic explosives were used. At least six sentries and the two men in the van were killed instantly, he said.

Fernando said the Tamil Tiger guerrillas were the main suspects. An earlier government statement blamed the attack on "separatist terrorists," the term it uses for the Tamil Tigers.

"There are no other Tamil separatist terrorists operating in Sri Lanka at the moment except the Tamil Tigers," said Bradman Weerakoon, foreign affairs adviser to President Ranasinghe Premadasa.

Sathasivam Krishnakumar, a spokesman for the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam, said he did not know anything about the bombing. He was contacted at the guerrilla group's political office in London.

A senior military official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said 35 or 37 soldiers and at least 16 civilians were killed. He said between 120 and 150 people were injured.

The explosion blew the tile roof off the administrative headquarters of the Joint Operations Command, the government nerve center for the war against the Tigers, who have demonstrated experience in sophisticated bomb-making.

Brig. Daya Wijesekera, who was inside the building at the time, spoke of a "thundering explosion."

"Everything started flying around, and the roof sagged and caved in."

"Part of a human body — I believe it was a soldier because of his khaki uniform — fell through the roof. There was silence and then we started picking up the pieces," said Wijesekera, chief of the media section of the Joint Operations Command.

The worst damage was at the barracks, which was on the street unprotected by a wall. The administrative headquarters, located in a rambling, colonial-style house, was shielded by a six-foot wall, which had chunks blown out of it by the explosion.

The blast occurred exactly one month after the May 21 suicide-bomb assassination of Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi, whose death in the south Indian state of Tamil Nadu also has been blamed on the Sri Lankan Tamil rebels.

Indian authorities have arrested a half-dozen Sri Lankan and Indian Tamils on conspiracy charges in relation to the murder of Gandhi, who had tried to broker a peace between the Sri Lankan government and the Tamil rebels in 1987. The rebels reneged on the pact.

The Tamil Tigers launched their campaign for a separate homeland in northeastern Sri Lanka in 1983. More than 17,000 people have died since then in massacres, guerrilla warfare and army offensives.

Last week, a Red Cross official said more than 200 Tamils in two villages were massacred by Sinhalese army troops. Tamil leaders said that was only the latest repression of their ethnic group by the army, which is dominated by the majority Sinhalese.

Catholic order builds village for AIDS victims in Brazil

EDITOR'S NOTE - Brazil had 16,340 reported cases of AIDS in May, the third largest number after the United States and Uganda, and the Health Ministry says up to 500,000 Brazilians are infected with the HIV virus. Budget cuts have reduced government programs and private groups are taking a hand.

SAO PAULO, Brazil (AP) - The village is called The Promised Land, and will nestle in a lush valley in the coastal mountains of southeastern Brazil.

It is being built for AIDS victims by the Alliance for Life, an association of Franciscan priests and nuns that cares for Brazilians who contract the fatal disease and have no money for treatment.

"The Promised Land will be for those AIDS victims who have nowhere else to go, those who have been rejected by their families and friends or turned away by Sao Paulo's overcrowded public hospitals," said the Rev. Alecio Broering, a director of the project.

He pointed to nearly finished concrete houses with red tile roofs, surrounded by tall pines and eucalyptus.

"Here, they will receive the affection and understanding society has denied them, recover their self-esteem and find the courage to go on living," Broering said.

Six houses will be ready to receive the village's first residents in July. Each will have three bedrooms and two baths, to accommodate 10 people.

Four more houses, a chapel and an administration building will be finished by year's end, when the The Promised Land is expected to have a population of about 100 men, women and children.

Broering said the village for victims of acquired immune deficiency syndrome is the world's first, modeled after a community for cancer patients in Germany.

A Roman Catholic charity in Germany, Misereor, is providing 70 percent of the $650,000 needed to build the village. The rest comes from private donors in Brazil.

Residents of The Promised Land will grow fruit and vegetables, raise chickens and rabbits, do their own cooking and other household chores. The idea, Broering said, is for those in each house to become a family in which members feel wanted and useful.

"The feeling of belonging to a loving family is something most of them never experienced before," he said. "We believe it will help them find the will to fight the virus."

Doctors, nurses, psychologists and social workers will help villagers lead "as normal a life as possible," he added.

While the village is being built, the Alliance for Life takes care of the future residents at temporary shelters in nearby Sao Paulo.

One, a dilapidated house next to a cemetery in a working-class district, holds 20 victims. Most are intravenous drug users, male homosexuals or prostitutes, the people most likely to contract the fatal disease.

"The public hospitals sent us these patients, expecting them to die within 15 days," said Sister Neli Lori Egewarth, supervisor of the shelter. Most have survived for more than a year.

"With a lot of love and affection, we help them recover their desire to live," she said. "This is something medicine alone can never do."

Edson Pereira, a 23-year-old former drug addict, discovered he had AIDS about two years ago, when he was being treated for tuberculosis.

"When the doctors thought I had only a few days left, they sent me here to die," Pereira said. "I was so weak I couldn't even walk. Little by little I recovered my strength."

He smiled broadly and added: "It's been more than a year now and I've never felt better. I even ride around the neighborhood on my bike."

Pereira said he tried to go home to a Sao Paulo slum, "but when my father found out I had AIDS, he threw me out."

"Now all I want to do is move to The Promised Land," he said. "There's a lot of fresh air and space, and I can help others who are in worse shape than myself."

Some of the village's neighbors worry.

them near us," said Eliane Alonso Xavier, a lawyer who lives in a condominium not far away. "All of us worked hard to build our homes in a quiet, pollution-free region, and now we have to face the risk of being infected by the AIDS virus."

Ms. Xavier said she feared the village would contaminate the water supply, although the virus is not spread through drinking water.

"They have nothing to fear," Broering said. "We will have our own water and sewage treatment facilities and an incinerator."

The Sao Paulo State Health

Department welcomes the project.

Rosemeire Munoz, a member of its epidemiologic surveillance team, said: "The affection and dignity with which the Alliance for Life treats AIDS victims are fundamental factors for their rehabilitation."

A half century later, veterans reunite to remember World War II

By BETH HARRIS
Associated Press Writer

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) - George Gay had a watery front-row seat for the Battle of Midway as the only survivor of a U.S. Navy fighter squadron that attacked Japanese aircraft carriers in the decisive World War II skirmish.

Taking off from the USS Hornet, the squadron counterattacked after the Japanese outmaneuvered the first wave of U.S. fighters.

Gay, 74, recalls watching planes take direct hits in front of him, spiraling to the waiting Pacific Ocean below. "They hit the water at 110 knots. It was just like concrete," he said.

He and Sister Mary Theresa, a Catholic missionary rescued from her Japanese captors by Allied troops at Guadalcanal, are among 10,000 veterans in Indianapolis this weekend for a reunion marking the 50th anniversary of U.S. entry into war. The Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor on Dec. 7, 1941, drew the United States into war.

"I have my moments when I stop and think about my friends and what happened," Gay said. "I'm just an ordinary guy who didn't get killed."

A parade featuring WWII-era planes and armored vehicles marched through downtown Thursday. Veterans swapped war stories at a convention center exhibition. On the agenda were a cannon salute from Fort Benjamin Harrison and a flyover.

"The idea is to give the veterans a chance to show themselves off again," said Elbert Watson, chairman of the World War II National Commemorative Association, which is sponsoring the reunion.

"I'm just an ordinary guy who didn't get killed."

- George Gay
WWII veteran

"Back then there was really strong public backing of the war. We lost it during Korea and Vietnam; and we got it back during Desert Storm," said Marine Capt. Rick Gonzalez, who watched the parade dressed in camouflage.

Midway battle demonstrated that bombers from aircraft carriers could defeat a superior surface force, a lesson not forgotten in the Persian Gulf War. The U.S. victory over Japan in June 1942 ended the Japanese advance in the Pacific Ocean.

Gay was the first person to reach Adm. Chester Nimitz, the U.S. commander, with news that three Japanese carriers - the Agaki, the Kaga and Soryu - had been destroyed by a wave of U.S. bombers.

"I said, 'Admiral, you can forget them. I not only saw them go down, the impact when they were downed in the water was shaking my gut,'" said Gay of Marietta, Ga.

Gay took in the destruction for 30 hours while clinging to debris from his plane, ducking underwater whenever the Japanese searched the area with binoculars for survivors.

"It's pretty hard to dig a foxhole in the water," he said. "They came by looking at me a number of times, but I kept real quiet and they just didn't know I was there."

Five other Americans fished out of the ocean were interrogated, beaten and then tied up and thrown overboard by their Japanese captors, Gay recalled.

Sister Theresa, 81, had been a Catholic missionary on Guadalcanal for 10 years when she was caught up in the Japanese invasion of the South Pacific island on July 6, 1942.

She was the only American among five other women at the mission when they were forced to flee.

"The Americans saved our lives by bombing our mission because the Japanese came looking for us and wanted to kill us," she said.

Helped by natives sympathetic to the U.S. side, the women spent months shuttling to different hiding places before getting caught.

Allied forces eventually seized control of Guadalcanal, rescuing Sister Theresa and the others.

"When the day arrived and the planes came, we were so very happy," said Sister Theresa of Waltham, Mass.

Tarin Peet, son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Peet, and Niels Berzanskis, son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Berzanskis attended the 31st annual Texas Energy Science Symposium, June 10-13 in Austin.

The two Pampa High School students, were among the 37 students and teachers representing schools throughout the Panhandle and South Plains, sponsored by Southwestern Public Service.

The four-day symposium featured tours and presentations on fusion and the planned superconducting super collider. The attendees toured the University of Texas' Fusion Research Center and its tokamak, a machine that uses magnetic fields to attempt to confine the fusion reaction.

The symposium was sponsored by six electric utilities in Texas, including SPS.

Laura Fields to be honored at reception

Artist Laura Fields will be honored with a reception at the Square House Museum, Panhandle, on June 23, 3-4:30 p.m.

Fields, a Turkey native and Claude resident, is a West Texas State University graduate with a degree in art education. Her realistic and detailed work features wildflowers, wildlife and landscapes.

Extension Office workshops for T-shirt painting, vest stenciling offered July 9

Gray County Extension Home-maker Council will host a stenciled vest workshop and a T-shirt painting workshop on Tuesday, July 9, in the Gray County annex. Vicki McGowen of Folk Heartifacts in Danbury, Texas will be the instructor.

The stenciled design, "Star Spangled Bunnies" will be painted on to Osanburg or Antique Muslin fabric. A colored picture of the stencil design is on display in the Gray County Extension Office in the Gray County Annex.

The stenciled vest workshop will be from 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. on the 9th. Cost is $25 which will include the vest pattern, stencils, directions, and paints. Class size is limited.

The T-shirt painting class is for adults, children or teens. The workshop will be from 5:30 to 8:30 p.m. Participants will paint two shirts - one a patriotic theme and another in a watermelon design. Cost for the T-shirt workshop is $10. Participants will furnish their own T-shirts.

To sign-up for the classes, call the Gray County Extension Office at 669-8033.

Job fairs for those over 45 draw crowds

By WILLIAM S. BERGSTROM
AP Business Writer

SOUTHFIELD, Mich. (AP) — Whether fed up with leisure or financially strapped, more jobseekers than ever showed up this year for a job fair for applicants over 45 years old, organizers say.

People over 45 are often first hit when the recession forces companies to cut back. As the population ages, they're also the fastest-growing portion of the labor force, and they're increasingly sought after, said Terry Baqrcly, founder and president of the non-profit group Operation ABLE.

At least 3,000 people toured booths set up by 38 companies May 22 at the Ability is Ageless Job Fair, up from 2,000 in 1990 and fewer than 1,000 in 1989, said spokeswoman Joyce Bruton of Operation ABLE.

In the Detroit area, over-45 jobseekers, especially auto company retirees, are particularly attractive for companies such as automotive consultant Intelligent Controls Inc.

"The retirees have a wealth of information and contacts," said Don Loeffler, taking applications for jobs from technician to engineer for Intelligent Controls. "When a problem comes up they always have somebody to call."

A General Motors Corp. retiree who would not give his name headed for Intelligent Controls after filling out applications for jobs at stores at other booths. He said he'd worked as a proof reader and technical writer since taking early retirement, mostly for something to do.

Frank Penney of Detroit, a retired truck driver, said it was more than boredom that had him applying for jobs: "I'm tired of being broke."

The job fair was held at the Southfield Days Inn Convention Center. Days Inn has hired older workers for years and co-sponsors similar job fairs around the country, general manager Tom Ferrell said. More than 1,700 companies set up booths at such events at 85 Days Inns in 31 states last month.

At the Southfield event, Little Caesar Enterprises Inc. sought store managers, Northwest Airlines took applications for reservations and customer service agents, and Taco Bell sought restaurant crew members. The 67-store ACO Hardware Inc. chain looked for part-time employees to advise customers on hardware needs and home-repair projects. ACO has hired 68 retired people in recent years.

Taking care of business before vacationing

Summertime is vacation time for many families and individuals. This column will focus on some ways to make your vacation a pleasant memory.

Homemakers' News

Donna Brauchi

GUARDING AGAINST VACATION THEFT

Most vacationers will have a wonderful time and return with souvenirs and happy memories. Others will return the victims of theft.

Most homeowners and tenant's insurance policies cover the theft of personal belongings when you are away from home. This includes items which may be stolen from a car, hotel room, or from your bag on the beach. Check your insurance policy or with your agent to determine what the policy covers. This is also a good time to make sure items such as cameras and sporting equipment you carry on the trip are covered by the policy.

Bring the insurance company's telephone number with you. If you have any problems, you can call them to get instructions for filing a claim and what paperwork, such as a police report, needs accompany the claim. Also make an inventory of the items you take on the trip to help determine what was stolen in the event of a theft. Include jewelry, camera and video equipment, credit card account numbers and the telephone numbers to call to report lost cards and other valuables. Another option is to leave the list at home with a friend or relative you can call if a theft occurs or bring the list with you and leave it in the hotel safe.

COLLISION - DAMAGE WAIVER

Before you leave on your trip, check your car insurance policy or with your agent to see what your insurance policy will cover. If your vacation plans include renting a car, the rental agent will ask if you want to buy the collision-damage waiver (CDW). Buying the CDW releases you from financial responsibility for damages to the car during the rental period. The CDW will cost $10 to $15 per day. Your own automobile insurance may cover damage to a rental car. A few credit card companies also provide some protection if you sue their credit card to pay the rental charges. Check your credit agreement for details of your coverage before leaving home. Purchasing a CDW when you are already protected is unnecessary and costly.

SUNSCREENS

If your vacation takes you to the beach, lake, or mountains, plan to have a sunscreen close at hand. To get the maximum value for your sunscreen dollar, keep these points in mind when shopping for and using sunscreens. Most people do not need a Sun Protection Factor (SPF) greater than 15. Purchase the highest SPF you need at the lowest cost per ounce. An SPF of 15 provides the same amount of protection regardless of the brand name. Purchasing expensive products and higher SPF's than needed can be a waste of money. To get the full protection of the sunscreen you purchase, make sure you apply enough of it. Most people only apply half the amount they should be using. It is recommended that you apply one ounce of sunscreen per application and that you apply it about 30 minutes before you go out in the sun.

Refinishing parquet floors labor intensive

By POPULAR MECHANICS
For AP Newsfeatures

Wood floors in the Victorian era saw plain, unfinished planks give way to parquet designs. Restoring these floors goes a long way to creating an authentic period look.

Unlike unfinished planks that get their charm from natural wear patterns, shiny strip and parquet floors benefited from new finishing products such as oil, varnishes and shellacs, that added a special look to the floorboards.

If you're restoring a home of this period, opting for a varnish or shellac is a good way to give your floor an authentic, period look. Like painting, preparation is more important than application when you're refinishing an old house floor.

Many times, if a floor has been properly maintained, it's possible to coat over the existing surface with the same finish. First prep a small test area by hand sanding it, then add the chosen finish. If it bites and has the right look, it's probably the same finish that's on there.

Dissimilar products won't work on each other, so don't be tempted to shellac a varnished floor — it simply won't hold. (A note of caution if you go with shellac: This historical finish won't tolerate alcohol or water spills, so be sure to consider the rooms usage beforehand.)

You can add a coat of wax over either, if you choose, to preserve and protect the finish while adding a bit of luster to the floor. Keep the surface free of dust and dirt with regular dust mopping. Expect to re wax periodically as this protective coating wears away. It's a small price to pay for retaining a piece of history.

If a previous owner refinished your old house floor with a coat of polyurethane, you may decide to strip it off and bring the floor back in a more authentic manner. Although this newer finish is extremely durable and offers a longevity most historical finishes don't, many restorers find it looks plastic and doesn't mesh well in restored homes.

If the floor is badly stained and scratched, the floor's thickness is the indicator you should use to decide whether sanding is feasible.

Extreme care should be taken when working on old parquet floors. Since these boards are only generally about 3/8-inch thick, there's probably only about 1/8-inch to work with until the tongue is reached. As a result, many restorers will recommend stripping the floor by hand, either with a hand scraper or chemicals if the finish must be removed.

Although this obviously can be a very labor-intensive job, it may be the only way to refinish some old parquet without ruining the floor. Since an old strip floor is thicker, many of these floors can be sanded.

There is another factor that should be taken into consideration when you're deciding whether to sand an early floor. Remember that flooring spans structural members. And the construction techniques common to many old homes are different from those we consider standard today.

More than likely your floor joints are 1 inch or so thick, the thickness of the board is adequate for this large span. But when the board is worn (or sanded) down to 7/8-inch or 3/4-inch, you're apt to get some spring in the floor.

It's interesting to note that every sanding decreases the thickness of a wood floor by about one-sixteenth inch to three-sixteenths inch.

So, there are only so many times you can sand down a wood floor. An easy way to gauge the thickness of the old floor is to remove the molding and baseboard or a floor heating register to reveal the edge of the wood.

Pastor has many duties some of which are paid

DEAR ABBY: One would think that after 34 years of pastoral experience, I would have been prepared, but when asked by a professional adult, whose father's funeral I had just conducted, "What do you charge?" I answered, "Nothing!" The reply I received was, "If you will give me the name and address of your church, I will send a check in your honor."

I should have said, "Nothing, but I am accustomed to receiving an honorarium — especially from non-church members." And I could have added, "Today is my third trip to this city, totaling 240 miles. At a mere 20 cents per mile, that would be almost $50 for expenses alone — not including the six to eight hours spent in travel and preparation."

Last month I was asked to conduct a funeral service for a non-church member who lived in our community. I received an honorarium of $100, which was greatly appreciated and set aside for a future vacation.

The majority of pastors are underpaid and taken for granted. My wife reminded me of the time I was paid $10 for a wedding with the suggestion that I split it with the pianist!

ANOTHER GEORGIA PASTOR

DEAR PASTOR: Perhaps your letter will remind readers who require the services of a clergy person for happy occasions (weddings, christenings) as well as sad ones (funerals, last rites, etc.) that Hoover is no longer in the White House, and the clergy person should be appropriately compensated for his/her automobile use, gasoline, dry cleaning, haircut — not to mention the effort and the time spent in preparing and delivering the service.

DEAR ABBY: My daughter and her husband are separated. Their children — an 8-year-old daughter and 11-year-old son — spend one weekend with their father and the next with their mom.

When they are at their father's, both children sleep in the same double bed with him. I think this is a bad idea and I told him so. His reaction to my protestations was, "Well, it's not as though I sleep in the nude — I always wear shorts!"

Abby, both children are developing rapidly and our whole family is concerned about their sleeping arrangements when they're at their dad's. Are we overreacting? Or do you think our concerns are valid?

GRANDMA

DEAR GRANDMA: Your concerns are valid. Not only should your grandson and granddaughter not be sleeping with their father — they should not be sleeping with each other.

What teen-agers need to know about sex, drugs, AIDS, and getting along with their peers and parents is now in Abby's updated, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Use microwave correctly for perfectly done results

By NANCY BYAL
Better Homes and Gardens Magazine Food Editor

Using your microwave to save time isn't worth much if your results are either underdone or overcooked. You can make sure that won't happen with these kitchen-tested cures.

— Rounded dishes have the edge. For perfectly done breads, cakes or custards, use a round or ring-shaped baking dish. Microwaves concentrate in the corners of square or rectangular dishes, overcooking the edges of the foods while leaving the centers underdone. You can avoid undercooked centers by using a ring-shaped dish.

— Put up a foil shield. Avoid uneven cooking by using a little aluminum foil (if your owner's manual recommends using foil in your microwave oven). Because foil is metal, microwaves will not pass through it. Place a small amount of foil over an area of food that is cooking faster to protect it while the uncovered food continues to cook. Remember to use small amounts of foil. And, to prevent sparks, be sure foil doesn't fold back on itself or touch other metal or the side of the microwave oven.

— Arrange foods wisely. When cooking foods with uneven thicknesses, such as chicken pieces, place the thicker portions to the outside where the microwaves tend to concentrate. For fish, fold the thin sections underneath.

— Rearrange food during cooking. Microwaves may cook foods unevenly, so it helps to move the food once or twice during cooking. Stir saucy foods from the edges to the center to distribute the heat. For pieces that cannot be stirred, move less-cooked pieces close to the dish edges and more-cooked pieces in the center. Turn over large pieces, such as hamburgers, to be sure the top and bottom cook evenly. You can also give the dish a half-turn midway through the cooking time. Some microwave ovens may have a turntable, which will help to cook foods more evenly, too.

Involvements in imaginative and creative endeavors could help enhance your earnings in the year ahead.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) It could prove unwise today to take an outlandish gamble in the hope of recouping a previous loss. Instead of getting even, there's a possibility you may fall further in the hole. Know where to look for romance and you'll find it.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You'll be willing to help others today, provided the ideas originate with you. Conversely, if you feel that demands are being made of you, you could turn a deaf ear.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You may become involved in a situation today that will require bold action on your behalf in order to bring it to fruition. Don't let self-doubts override opportunity.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Be careful today to avoid misunderstandings with friends over money or material things. Financial involvements with pals could be like mixing milk and mud.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) It would be a shame to waste your time and energy today fighting an uphill battle for something rather insignificant. Carefully evaluate your objectives and toss out the losers.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Instead of worrying about how much others will do for you today, be honest with yourself by asking, "How much are you prepared to do for them?" If you come up short, reduce your expectations.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) People you're socially involved with cannot be relied on today to assist you in feathering your nest in the commercial world. You're on your own when you step into that arena.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Your chart shows that you may be too attentive to those who offer you faulty counsel and not attentive enough to those who offer you sound advice today. This could spell trouble.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Problems in relationships can be avoided today — if you're not too critical of friends or apt to remake them over in your own image. Look up to pals, not down on them.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Abide by the ideals in which you firmly believe. Don't let companions or associates pressure you into abandoning them today.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) You may not have adequate faith in your own judgment today, and this could cause you complications — if you have to deal with a forceful individual. Remember, a big mouth doesn't make anyone right.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You may have to work in close proximity with someone who is both careless and temperamental today. Be extra watchful if this individual has to use unfamiliar tools or materials.

Rangers' Rodriguez won't forget Major League debut

By JOE MOOSHIL
AP Sports Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — The Texas Rangers' Ivan Rodriguez will never forget the anniversary of his first major league game — it's the same date as his wedding.

Rodriguez, 19, making his major-league debut at catcher, threw out two runners attempting to steal and capped a five-run ninth inning with a two-run single in Thursday's 7-3 win over the Chicago White Sox.

That's only half the story. Rodriguez and Maribel Rivera were to be married between games of a doubleheader in Tulsa on Thursday. But the Rangers called him up Wednesday night, so there was a change in plans.

Rodriguez and Maribel were married in Tulsa on Thursday morning before the two caught a plane for Chicago to join the Rangers.

"I guess he figured he couldn't afford two rooms in Chicago so they decided to get married quickly," Texas manager Bobby Valentine said.

Valentine could afford to make jokes. His Rangers had blown a 2-0 lead and were trailing 3-2 going into the ninth.

They had only three hits off Jack McDowell. But McDowell didn't come out for the ninth. Bobby Thigpen took over.

Rafael Palmeiro walked and Ruben Sierra followed with his 11th homer, a two-run blast for a 4-3 lead. Julio Franco hit his eighth homer two pitches later.

It was the fifth blown save in 18 opportunities for Thigpen, who set a major league record with 57 saves in 65 opportunities last year.

After Thigpen left, Juan Gonzalez, who drove in the first two runs with a single in the second inning and his eighth homer in the seventh, singled. Steve Bucchele doubled and Rodriguez singled in two runs.

"Yes, I'm excited, I'm happy," Rodriguez said. "I was a little nervous in the first inning but I felt okay. I know the game. I want to stay here. I don't want to go back to the minor leagues."

Asked who insisted on the quick wedding, Rodriguez said, "Both of us. She was a little shocked."

The White Sox also were in a state of shock at the loss, considering they had rallied for three runs in the seventh. Lance Johnson hit a two-run single off starter Kevin Brown, and a bases-loaded walk to Matt Merullo by reliever Mike Jeffcoat pushed the third run across the plate.

McDowell put the side down in order in the eighth before Thigpen came in.

"I could have stayed with Jack but we considered the number of pitches he had thrown and we didn't think he was popping the ball," manager Jeff Torborg said.

"You have to go with what you've got. Last year we tried it 57 times and it worked. He's our man and I'll continue to go with him. It was just one of those nights."

"All losses are tough," Torborg said. "But this one hurt because we scrambled and scratched to get back in."

Thigpen went to 2-0 on Sierra before he homered.

"I knew he had to come in with a good pitch and I was ready," Sierra said. "You have to be aggressive in that spot."

Jeffcoat pitched the last 2 1-3 innings for the victory.

"Both starting pitchers were terrific," Valentine said. "McDowell was awesome. Kevin was good until he hit a wall. It was a great win when you give up the lead and then come back to win it."

Try fishing without electronic gizmos

Does it seem like you used to catch more fish BEFORE all these new electronic gizmos?

Remember when the cost of special paper for the older model depth finders forced most anglers to use those units only sparingly? The angler would make a pass over a likely-looking fishing hole, study it, and then turn off the paper graph because a roll of paper cost over $5 and lasted only 30 minutes. Fishing was almost always done without the graph. Because modern units use a screen without paper, anglers leave units on during the entire fishing trip.

TRY THIS EXPERIMENT. After launching your rig, turn on the depth finder, and place your hand on the bottom of the transducer (the part that sends the signal into the water). Feel the pulses. Because sound travels seven times better in water than in air, the unit is very accurate BUT fish can certainly hear (or feel) these sound pulses.

Top anglers like TOMMY PUGH of Randall County suggest that not only can fish hear depth finders, but their unique sound is a danger signal to OLDER and BIGGER FISH.

When a fish is growing up, food selection is a trial and error search. If a strange sound (a depth finder) is followed by the appearance of food, an immature fish will probably attack it in spite of the strange sound. If that tempting morsel (your bait) is full of painful hooks, the juvenile fish quickly associates that strange sound with painful food and simply refuses to eat.

Professional anglers like TOMMY BIFFLE of Oklahoma use their electronics during practice days but frequently fish a three-day tournament without once turning on their noise machines. Think about it.

The International Game Fish Association reports that the most intelligent fresh water fish is the large mouth bass. Trout will hit a fly two, three or even four times and bluegill will never stop striking an artificial lure, but Mr. Bass rarely strikes a lure the second time. Now try convincing a nymph-tying, tippet-knotting, fly rod owner that a bass is smarter than a trout.

Lubbock's BEN KIRKPATRICK used a Slug-Go to catch a three bass limit of 9.58 lbs. and won the June 13th White River Fun Tournament. DAVID MORREN of Lubbock placed second with 7.73 lbs. and DWAYNE MOSES of Ralls finished third with 3.74 lbs. Next White River Tournament is Thursday, July 11.

BAYLOR BIG BASS TOURNAMENT — On Saturday, June 29, some lucky fisherman may walk away with $2,500 for catching the biggest bass of the day. Hourly winners can earn $100. Entry is only $50 until Monday, June 24, when it increases to $60. Limited to 100 anglers. Call me at 806-353-3654.

Rangers' catcher Ivan Rodriguez had a two-run single and threw out two runners.

A&M's Slocum reluctant to schedule games with Arkansas

By MIKE DRAGO
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Texas A&M football coach R.C. Slocum says he understands why Arkansas wants to continue playing in Texas after it joins the Southeastern Conference, but he's not interested in playing host to the Razorbacks.

Southern Methodist and Arkansas Thursday announced an agreement to play four-year football series starting in 1992, the Razorbacks first as members of the SEC.

Slocum is one of several SWC coaches to express a reluctance to play the Razorbacks because the games could help Arkansas recruit players from Texas.

"It's certainly not going to help them if a player knows that once he goes to Arkansas, he'll never play in Texas again," Slocum said. "I would wonder what their motivations would be if that (recruiting) wasn't it."

The Mustangs will play Arkansas in Little Rock in 1992 and 1994, while the Razorbacks visit Dallas in 1993 and 1995, SMU athletic director Forrest Gregg said.

"It's a good situation for us," Gregg said. "Arkansas certainly will always have competitive teams and we won't have to introduce them down here. They have a large following and wanted to continue playing in Dallas."

Slocum said he's not interested in playing the Razorbacks after their defection.

"If they're going to be a non-conference game, there are other people we can play with more novelty right now," Slocum said. "We'd rather play a West Virginia or a Pitt or go out to the West Coast."

Baylor athletic director Bill Menefee said the Bears also have no plans of playing Arkansas.

"We haven't discussed scheduling with Arkansas," Menefee said. "I guess I can only speak for Baylor and we're not anxious to schedule Arkansas at this time."

Asked whether the SMU series would help Arkansas' recruiting in Texas, Menefee said, "I guess SMU's got to answer that."

Houston athletic director Rudy Davalos said the Cougars are willing to play Arkansas, but the Razorbacks aren't interested.

"We had considered playing them, but they've got a tough schedule over there and I think they'd rather play someone they feel they can beat. We're going to be a tough team to beat," Davalos said.

Southwest Conference spokesman Bo Carter said he knew of no other league team but SMU that has scheduled Arkansas beyond 1991.

Baker-Finch ties record in Busch Classic

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — The Great White Shark is taking the week off, so the Dark Shark is carrying the load for Australia at the Anheuser-Busch Golf Classic.

Ian Baker-Finch birdied six of his last seven holes and tied a course record with a 9-under-par 62 that gave him a one-shot edge over Bob Gilder after Thursday's first round of the $1 million event.

In addition to his seven birdies and an eagle at Kingsmill Golf Club, Baker-Finch missed five birdie putts of 10 feet or less, but still recorded the lowest score of his career.

It was another entry in the growing list of impressive credentials for the Australian, who is starting to display some of the same abilities as his more famous countryman, Greg Norman.

"A couple of the guys out here have been saying some real nice things about my play, and that's always good to hear," Baker-Finch said. "I'm not too happy about the Dark Shark part, though."

Several publications and some of his fellow competitors have given the tag to Baker-Finch, who has black hair and a deep tan.

"It's just like, 'Here's another Australian, and Greg's the White Shark so he's the Dark Shark,'" the good-natured Baker-Finch said. "I don't want to be remembered as the next to come along after Greg Norman. I want to be remembered for being me."

The Celanese Pamcel Open, scheduled this weekend, has been postponed because of heavy rainfall.

The tournament will be rescheduled at a later date.

Baseball

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — The son of Texas Rangers pitcher Nolan Ryan wants to play somewhere where he can, well, play.

Reid Ryan, who says he needs more playing time to improve, is considering transferring from the University of Texas to one of three other schools and wants a release from his UT baseball scholarship.

The younger Ryan and his father said they were disappointed that there were not more opportunities to pitch during his freshman season with the Longhorns. Reid appeared in only two games for Texas last spring.

He is considering transferring to Texas Christian University in Fort Worth, Blinn Junior College in Brenham, or Pepperdine University in California.

Basketball

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Texas A&M officials will accept NCAA findings that list 10 rules violations — two more than the school reported — in the Aggie basketball program, A&M vice president Robert Smith says.

The NCAA's letter of inquiry alleges that New York talent scout Rob Johnson, acting as a representative of A&M, violated NCAA rules by loaning $125 to former player Tony Scott.

The NCAA letter also says former A&M head coach Kermit Davis Jr. and former assistant coach Fletcher Cockrell violated NCAA rules by providing false and misleading information to A&M investigators, the Bryan-College Station Eagle reported Wednesday.

A&M's 95-page report to the NCAA acknowledged the loan and unethical conduct by Davis and Cockrell, but did not list them as NCAA rules violations.

"We reported the $125 loan that Rob Johnson made to Tony Scott," Smith told the newspaper. "We acknowledged that it had occurred in our report but he could have loaned the money as a friend to a friend. ... The point is we had the same information they had."

A&M has until Aug. 14 to respond to the letter of inquiry. Smith said he expects to have the response ready in 30-45 days. The NCAA committee on infractions could hear A&M's case when it meets in September in Boston, Smith said.

Bowling

FLINT, Mich. (AP) — Earl Anthony ended his brilliant bowling career with a spree of strikes Thursday night, winning three matches before losing the $55,000 Flint PBA Senior Open to top-seeded Richard Beattie.

"I'm thrilled to end my career this way," said Anthony, winner of a record 41 regular and three senior titles in a 21-year career. "Dick out-bowled me and deserved to win. I started my career with a second-place finish and I finished second in my last. I guess that's justice."

Anthony, the fourth seed in the stepladder final round, beat John Hricina 258-191, Jimmy Certain 250-226 and Gene Stus 268-171 before losing to Beattie 245-236 in the championship round.

Anthony, 53, had no mathematical chance to win when he stepped to the line for the final time. He threw three strikes in the final frame to finish his career on a high note.

"I told myself, 'This is your last shot, so let's make it a good one,'" Anthony said.

Anthony, the first bowler to win $1 million, said he will fulfill his exhibition schedule through August and then hang up his bowling shoes for good.

Pepsi Games

DALLAS — Home Sports Entertainment and Texas State Network will provide coverage of the Pepsi Games of Texas.

The Games, sponsored by The Dallas Morning News, features 300,000 amateur athletes competing locally and regionally to qualify for the state championship.

Beginning with the Opening Ceremonies at the Cotton Bowl, HSE will cover the competitions associated with this 32-event, Olympic-style format in a two-hour tape delayed program. Some of the events to be covered include softball and baseball in Garland, track and field at Loos Stadium, swimming at the Natatorium and soccer at Inwood Soccer Center.

Texas State Network will provide radio coverage in Dallas, Houston, El Paso, Corpus Christi and 120 cities in between.

Tune in to HSE and the local TSN affiliate Aug. 1-4 for further updates and information.

Energy Service Group snaps Culligans winning streak

Optimist roundup

In Optimist girls' softball, Culligans won its third straight game Wednesday night.

Culligans came from behind to defeat Malcolm Hinkle, 14-13, in six innings. Culligans scored seven runs in the bottom of the sixth, sending nine batters to the plate.

Winning pitcher Angelica Miranda was also the leading hitter for Culligans. She had three hits while Amanda Herpeche, C.C. Cherynka and Gina Tice had two hits each. Melissa Gindorf, Jordanna Young, Amanda Jenkins, Brooke Pope and LaJanna King contributed timely hits.

On the mound, Miranda gave up 12 hits while striking out five and walking eight.

Sharing pitching duties for Malcolm Hinkle were Allison Piersall and Summer Morris.

Culligans had its three-game winning streak broken by Energy

Service Group, 23-11, Thursday night.

Winning pitcher was Andrea Ellis, who gave up two hits while striking out six and walking 14 in five innings.

Candy Hill had two singles, a triple and two RBI game-ending hits for Energy Service. Andrea Ellis had two singles while Patti Montoya Nicole Cagle, Holly Brooks and Samantha Parks had one single each.

Amanda Herpeche and Jordanna Young had one single each for Culligans.

Energy Service has a 7-6 record overall and 6-5 in league play.

Celanese broke open a tie game in the final inning to defeat Dyers, 14-10, in 11-12 Bambino action Thursday night.

With the score tied at 7-all after five innings, Celanese exploded for seven runs on four hits and six walks in the sixth. Dyers tried to rally back in the bottom of the sixth with three runs on two hits, including a double by Ryan Bruce, but came up short.

Darby Schale won the game in relief for Celanese and he also had three hits in four trips to the plate.

Schale pitched the final three innings and gave up five runs on three hits while striking out four and walking three.

Brian Brown pitched the first three innings, giving up five runs on three hits while striking out six and walking six.

Dale Fulton had two singles, Brandon Moody a double, Brian Brown and Aaron Wiseman one single each for Celanese. Schale's hits were a double and two singles.

Duane King had two home runs, one a grand slam for Dyers. He also had two singles. Ryan Bruce had a double and Jeremy Fitzer a single.

Celanese improved its record to 7-4 overall and 5-2 in the league standings.

Telephone pitchmen making unauthorized withdrawals

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some boiler-room firms hawking credit cards and dream vacations over the telephone are withdrawing money from their would-be customers' checking accounts without written authorization, investigators say.

Consumers make the withdrawals possible — sometimes even without oral consent — by disclosing their account numbers during the course of such calls, according to congressional, banking industry, and federal and state law enforcement authorities.

Investigators, who discovered the latest telemarketing scam in recent months, said the unethical operators are encoding customers' checking account numbers on demand drafts — forms that can be used to withdraw funds quickly — and often don't deliver the promoted product.

Such drafts are used routinely by legitimate insurance companies, mutual funds and other businesses that have a customer's signed authorization on file, enabling oral transactions and expedited payments where speed is important.

Meanwhile, victims of unscrupulous firms often don't learn of such a withdrawal until they spot it on a monthly bank statement or, if in fact they have orally agreed to a charge, they fail to receive the promised product.

Typical pitches involve a low-fee, low-interest credit card, a dream vacation, a fur coat or even help in selling a used car, investigators have found.

"Direct debiting is the cutting edge of telemarketing fraud," Diana Maurer, a Colorado assistant attorney general, said in an interview.

Rep. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., chairman of the House Small Business subcommittee on regulation, said the newly discovered and apparently wide-ranging fraud technique shows "the growing sophistication ... of boiler-room con artists to the new, electronic technologies which form the nervous systems of modern financial institutions."

Wyden, whose subcommittee staff is at work on the issue, said the some telephone sales firms have "an impressive array of electronic and computerized tools which literally unlock the bank's safe."

A recent FBI letter warned banks of losses that "could easily cost financial institutions and consumers millions of dollars in a very short period of time." Banking officials said that in some cases financial institutions have absorbed the losses, but other times consumers never got their money back.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., meanwhile, alerted banks that fraudulent companies "claim to have each consumer's authorization to process the drafts, but the banks have received no written authorization from the consumers, and the consumers have not signed the drafts."

Anthony Adamski, of the FBI's Financial Institutions Fraud Unit, said FBI field offices have been investigating the problem for two months but no federal prosecutions have been brought yet. He said prosecutors could use wire fraud, mail fraud and bank fraud statutes.

Adamski said "banks are doing more stringent screening and several have refused accounts" with suspicious telephone marketing firms since the alerts went out.

John Hall, spokesman for the American Bankers Association, said his group has urged banks to return to the old adage, "Know your customer."

Don Aanerud, of Aslip, Ill., was among the victims who called a number on a postcard that said, "Congratulations Don, you have been approved for credit..."

including "your very own MasterCard or Visa."

He was told that for $119.95, he would receive names of banks from which he could get a credit card. Aanerud provided his checking account number, causing his account to be charged.

When a list of three banks came, Aanerud changed his mind, called the company, and was told he would receive a refund check. He did, and the check bounced.

"I thought they were going to bill me or the bank would call to verify it (a withdrawal)," Aanerud said. "I asked the bank how somebody can draw $119.95 out of my checking account. The bank said, 'We'd like to know that.'"

A Portland, Ore. woman named Christine, who asked that her last name not be used, had her account debited the same amount in a similar scheme.

"I was furious that they could debit my account without me signing anything," she said. "A few days later they sent me a threatening letter, saying if I didn't pay them $119.95 — which they had already taken — they would send my name to a collection agency. I called their number and it was disconnected."

"I was ready to kill somebody, but they were gone."

Hare Krishna leader sentenced

MARTINSBURG, W.Va. (AP) — The leader of a Hare Krishna community was sentenced to 30 years in prison Thursday for using murder, kidnapping, and fraud to protect an illegal, multimillion-dollar enterprise.

"It appears to me that I was convicted before I walked in here," Kirtanananda Swami Bhaktipada, 53, told U.S. District Judge Robert Merhige Jr. before his sentencing.

"Which is it? Am I a godly man or a godfather? That is the question we have never been able to address in this court," Bhaktipada said.

Bhaktipada was convicted March 29 on six counts of mail fraud and three counts of racketeering, including conspiring to kill a fringe member of his New Vrindaban community, about 85 miles southwest of Pittsburgh.

Bhaktipada had faced life in prison and more than $76 million in fines. He was not fined by Merhige. Bhaktipada's attorney, James Lees Jr., said the swami received the minimum sentence under federal guidelines.

Bhaktipada will have to serve the entire prison term, but could be released up to four years early for good behavior, U.S. Attorney William Kolibash said.

Kolibash was pleased by the sentencing. "You're talking about a $12 million to $13 million fraud operation.

Considering all of that, a 30-year sentence for someone is appropriate," Kolibash said.

Bhaktipada and two others were convicted of illegally selling millions of caps, bumper stickers and T-shirts bearing the Snoopy character from the Peanuts comic strip and other copyrighted and trademarked logos as part of the community's fund-raising activities.

Prosecutors said the scheme made a profit of more than $10.5 million from 1981 to 1985. They are seeking the forfeiture of much of the 4,000-acre New Vrindaban commune that was founded by Bhaktipada in 1968.

Bhaktipada claimed the charges are part of the government's attempt to chase him and his devotees off the commune, at one time was one of West Virginia's largest tourist attractions.

U.S. marshals would not allow him to speak to reporters after the hearing.

Bhaktipada waved to his German shepherd "Gudakesh" nearby as he entered a car for the trip back to the jail where he has been held since his conviction.

Merhige said he will consider releasing Bhaktipada on bond pending appeals if the swami is confined to a religious commune and monitored electronically.

Kolibash said he would oppose Bhaktipada's release.
