FBI to investigate reports of deputy beating prisoner

By BETH MILLER
Staff Writer

An FBI agent was scheduled to be in Pampa today to continue an investigation into allegations of police brutality by an off-duty Gray County sheriff's deputy, Gray County Sheriff Jim Free said today.

Free said the allegations surfaced after Gary M. Puga, 20, Perryton, was arrested early Saturday morning on a charge of criminal trespass at the Caprock Apartments, 1601 W. Somerville.

The sheriff's office reported public intoxication, criminal trespass, resisting arrest and evading arrest in that incident.

Free said the allegations are that

Sgt. Dave Keiser, who works when off duty as security for the Caprock Apartments, hit Puga in the back of the head with a flashlight, Keiser hit Puga in the face with his fist.

Keiser said this morning that he had no comment on the matter.

The sheriff said an internal investigation is on-going in the sheriff's office as is the investigation by the FBI. Free said Texas Ranger Gary Henderson has also been involved in the investigation.

Free said Puga was taken to Coronado Hospital after his arrest where he received four stitches in the back of his head.

"Anytime a prisoner is injured or we have something like that happen, we have the FBI come in," Free said.

Puga was charged with trespassing at the Caprock Apartments and reportedly left the apartments in a van after Keiser was called to the scene and other law enforcement officers reportedly stopped the vehicle on Somerville Street where Puga was placed under arrest.

"We're in the midst of an investigation," the sheriff said. "These are just allegations right now."

Free said that any such action, if true, by any of his deputies would be a violation of policies and procedures and could result in the termination of that employee.

House panel chooses six members to investigate bouncing of checks

By LARRY MARGASAK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Six House ethics committee members — none tainted by a rubber check-writing scandal — will form a subcommittee to investigate the chamber's bank and their colleagues who abused the facility.

Committee leaders said Wednesday there were no plans to hire outside legal or banking experts — or to go public anytime soon with names of members who wrote bad checks without penalty.

But they defended the committee's past willingness to be harsh on members who broke the rules and vowed there would be no cover-up this time.

"I reject the idea there would be a cover-up," the committee's ranking Republican, James V. Hansen of Utah, said when reporters asked whether the panel could investigate a large percentage of the 435 House members impartially.

Acting Committee Chairman Matthew F. McHugh, D-N.Y., said the subcommittee would consist of "members who had not had any overdrafts in the House bank." McHugh and Hansen held a news conference after the committee met in closed session to map out its investigation.

McHugh said the committee would publicly identify bad check writers only if it began formal proceedings against them to determine whether House rules or federal laws were broken.

Following disclosures that the bank routinely covered members' rubber checks, the House voted 390-8 last Thursday to shut down the bank by Dec. 31 and authorize an investigation by the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, the ethics panel's formal name.

The revelations about the bank came from a congressional agency, the General Accounting Office, which reported last month that House members wrote 8,331 checks with insufficient funds in the 12 months ended June 1990.

McHugh assumed command of the probe because committee Chairman Louis Stokes, D-Ohio, had admitted writing bad checks and removed himself from the inquiry. Rep. Kweisi Mfume, D-Md., was named to replace Stokes on the full committee.

Hansen, who has been on the committee for 11 years, said the probe initially would be "a fishing trip" because the panel doesn't have any targets. Normally, he said, the committee knows from the start who it is investigating.

The bank did not pay interest on member accounts and offered no overdraft protection. But it granted members a special privilege by not imposing a fee when they wrote checks on funds that were not in their accounts.

In those cases, the bank would pay the checks with money deposited by other members and notify the offending check writers that they must add money to their accounts.

Commercial banks impose a penalty for each check that bounces or they charge interest when customers' checks dip into an automatic line of credit.

The investigation will focus initially on the way the bank was operated by Sergeant at Arms Jack Russ. McHugh said this phase could include the bank's apparent unwillingness to stop covering members' rubber checks when ordered to do so months ago by House Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash.

The House resolution asked the ethics committee to consider:

—Whether members, officers, employees or others "abused the banking privileges by routinely and repeatedly" writing checks on accounts with insufficient funds.

—The bank's practices regarding individuals who don't hold accounts there or checks not written on House bank accounts.

—The general operation and management of the bank by the sergeant at arms and his staff.

Officials: Recreation Park construction well under way

By LARRY HOLLIS
Managing Editor

In less than a year, visitors to Recreation Park will find more than just the Top O' Texas Rodeo Arena, Clyde Carruth Pavilion, Pampa Gun and Skeet Club and acres of sparse, dusty ground.

With construction plans now well under way, by next August there will be the renovated Pampa Lake, a four-field softball complex, a camping ground and paved roads at the 134-acre site east of Pampa.

Craig Erekson, recreation superintendent for the city of Pampa, said plans call for the completion of the major part of the work by August 1992, the end of the billing period set aside for the $1 million project being funded through a matching grant from the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department.

The city can provide half of the cost through funds, materials, donations or labor. The state will pay up to $500,000 in matching funds within the three-year period for meeting the terms of the grant.

Erekson said recent meetings within the city have indicated the project is on schedule for completion of the improvements and facilities within the required period, ending next August. The completion of the Recreation Parks projects has been given top priority for the Parks Department.

Pampa Lake has been excavated and the bottom prepared, with a dam at the east end and a water retention pond at the southwest end. The lake already has accumulated several feet of water from rains. After the final landwork around the lake is completed and sufficient water depth is available, the lake will be stocked with fish.

Plans are also in development for preparing lines to allow the city to put well water into the lake to help the lake maintain its level during dry spells. The depth will be around 12 to 15 feet.

Erekson said work is also progressing on preparation of the site for the softball complex, located east of the Top O' Texas Rodeo Arena. The land will be "up to grade" within the next couple of weeks, he said. Most of the dirt used to level the ballfield site has been obtained from the lake excavation.

When the grading of the ballfield site is completed, then crews will start on the fencing project, including backstops and dugouts. The fencing project is expected to be completed by the end of November or first of December, Erekson said, depending on how long it will take the concrete to set for the poles.

ballfield area now and should be in place soon.

After the fencing is completed, then work will begin on putting in the water sprinkler system for the grass. The sprinkler system will be laid in-house by the Parks Department crew. Contractors also will be putting in the electrical system for the lights and scoreboards.

Erekson said the sprinkler system and electrical line installations should be completed sometime in early March, allowing for any delays created by adverse winter weather.

After the sprinkler system is in place, then grass will be planted sometime in March or April. Erekson said the grass will be given a full growing season before softball play begins in late spring or early summer of 1993.

"We want to make sure the grass is set before allowing play on it," he said, adding that play beginning before the grass is given a full growing season would likely damage the condition of the playing fields.

Erekson said Parks Superintendent Reed Kirkpatrick will be supervising the construction of bleachers for the softball complex, with the city crew working on that project this winter.

In addition, the Parks Department will be busy this winter ordering and putting together playground equipment, which will be placed in a fenced-off area near the softball complex. The playground area will provide a place for parents to let their children play while they are participating in or watching the softball games. There will also be restroom facilities at the complex site.

Kirkpatrick is looking for donations of materials, such as drill pipe, to help with the construction of the bleachers. Anyone interested in helping with the project can contact him at the Parks Department, 816 S. Hobart, or by calling 669-5770.

The Recreation Department is in the process of obtaining sponsors for the four electrical scoreboards to be placed at the softball fields. Each scoreboard will have places for sponsors, Erekson said, adding that anyone interested in the sponsor spots can contact him at the Parks Department office.

Erekson said he will be having a meeting with the Pampa Softball Players Association at 7 p.m. Friday at Recreation Park to discuss obtaining sponsors for the scoreboards.

The Streets Department has lined out the area for the camping and recreational vehicle site, including the roads. The camping area will have campsites, recreational vehicle parking sites, picnic tables and restroom/shower facilities.

There also will be a hike and bike trail from the camping site down to the lake area.

Erekson said roads within the Recreation Park area will also be paved, using an "airport base material" asphalt surface. The contractor should begin laying the road surfaces within the next few weeks, he said.

A parking lot also will be constructed for the ballfield area, east to southeast of the Top O' Texas Rodeo Arena.

When the project is completed, Recreation Park is expected to draw visitors and tourists to the city for softball tournaments, fishing and overnight camping, providing more use for the 134-acre park.

Mayor suggests rodeo ground improvements

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

Mayor Richard Peet is asking city commissioners to consider what could be done to upgrade the Top of Texas Rodeo Arena in Recreation Park.

The arena is leased to the Top of Texas Rodeo Association for a minimal amount each year.

Peet told commissioners this week that it "seems a shame" to be doing so much work on the park — including putting a new lake, camping sites and a softball complex in by next fall — but not doing anything to improve the area's centerpiece, the arena.

"There haven't been any major renovations of that arena at least since 1971, I don't think," Peet said. "It's had some new bleachers and things, but that's all. We basically only use it twice a year, and I would like to see a greater utilization. We have the M.K. Brown (Civic Center), but at various times concerts and other things cannot be held at the M.K. Brown. Out there you could have outdoor concerts and other things."

"I'd like to see that upgraded and made a facility the public can be proud of and, if we had the facilities, more rodeo people would want to come to our rodeo," he said.

"The rodeo association is really the caretaker of that facility, but working with them I think we could really make it a nice facility," Peet said.

He explained he had no time line for such a project and said it was only in the infancy stages of discussion.

"I would like the commission to be thinking about what else that rodeo grounds could be used for and evaluate and study what needs to be improved," Peet said.

"We need to take care of our seats on the west side with a cover of some sort," said Robert Morriss of the Rodeo Association. "We need to upgrade our concession stands and restrooms. There are some other general repair and replacement of things that needs to happen."

He said that the rodeo association would eager to work with city officials while maintaining the integrity of the facility as primarily a rodeo site.

The Top of Texas Rodeo is one of the two biggest annual money-makers drawing people to Pampa from all parts of the region, Morriss pointed out.

"It's good for the whole community" he said. "Business goes up all over town. I'm not sure folks realize how much good the rodeo and the Tri-State Senior Golf Tournament do for the local economy. They help a lot of businesses."

Ex-postal employee in custody following post office siege

RIDGEWOOD, N.J. (AP) — A fired postal employee killed his former supervisor and another person in their home, then killed two workers at the post office and set off explosives before surrendering this morning after a 4 1/2-hour standoff, authorities said.

The suspect, Joseph M. Harris, 35, of Paterson, would be charged with four counts of murder, plus kidnapping and other charges, said Bergen County Prosecutor John Fahy.

He was heavily armed, including hand grenades and an Uzi machine gun, and had left his apartment in Paterson booby-trapped before starting his rampage, authorities said.

Two mail handlers were found dead in the basement of the Ridgewood Post Office after the siege there ended, authorities said.

The victims in nearby Wayne included Carol Ott, 30, who was Harris' former supervisor. She had filed a harassment complaint against Harris last year.

"In my opinion, considering the way he was armed and given the circumstances as they are now, he intended to kill more people," Ridgewood police Chief Frank Milliken said.

Ott was found dead in her home about 4:20 a.m. along with Cornelius Kasten Jr., who lived with her.

Ott had been stabbed and Kasten shot in the head, said Prosecutor Ronald Fava.

Police investigate attack at gas station

Pampa police arrested a 27-year-old man early this morning on a charge of public intoxication and investigation of allegations he attacked his estranged wife Wednesday evening at her place of employment.

David Robledo, 27, who listed his address as 718 Scott, was arrested in the 700 block of East Scott at 12:45 a.m. following a two-hour search for him.

Chief Jim Laramore said the incident began when police were called to the Taylor Petroleum gas station at 1524 N. Hobart at 10:45 p.m.

The report indicates there was a request for police service in reference to an aggravated assault and domestic violence," Laramore said. "The person there was apparently intoxicated and was breaking out glass and throwing glass at (the clerk)."

A press release noted, "(The woman) reported that her separated husband had tried to run his car into the booth ... where she was working. Unable to run his vehicle into the booth, he broke out the window of the booth and then threw pieces of glass at her, striking and cutting her on the arm."

The 23-year-old female victim was transported to Coronado Hospital for treatment of cuts.

Laramore said, "Officers found the suspect after keeping a watch on his house and trying to locate him. We didn't know what kind of a danger he was to himself or other people. When they went by the area, they located a suspect who was apparently drunk and approached him."

Laramore said an investigation will have to determine if aggravated assault charges are filed against Robledo.

"He will be formally charged with public intoxication this morning," Laramore said, noting that other charges could follow sometime after that.

Police reported that Robledo was also cut on his arms, hands and legs by the glass.

Jim Garrison, who probed Kennedy assassination, retires

NEW ORLEANS (AP) - Judge Jim Garrison, whose attempts in the 1960s to prove a conspiracy in the assassination of President Kennedy drew worldwide attention, is retiring from the bench next month.

A news release issued by the Louisiana Supreme Court said Garrison would retire Nov. 1 from the 4th Circuit Court of Appeal.

Under state law, judges must retire by age 70. Garrison turns 70 Nov. 21.

Garrison was New Orleans district attorney when he investigated Kennedy's 1963 assassination in Dallas. He prosecuted New Orleans businessman Clay Shaw on conspiracy charges in 1969. Shaw was acquitted.

Garrison has a part in the forthcoming Oliver Stone movie on Kennedy's assassination. In the movie, "JFK," Garrison portrays Supreme Court Justice Earl Warren who headed the commission that concluded Kennedy was killed by Lee Harvey Oswald.

Bush extends backing to Thomas as nominee faces more questions

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
 Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Two witnesses are expected to testify that Anita Hill confided allegations of sexual harassment when the Senate Judiciary Committee opens new hearings on the Supreme Court nomination of Clarence Thomas, sources familiar with the allegations said today.

Both Thomas and Hill, now a University of Oklahoma law professor, will testify before the committee when it meets Friday and possibly through the weekend to assess the allegations that forced a week's delay in the Senate confirmation vote.

Two other witnesses who sources said would support Hill were also expected to testify, according to the sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

One is a former Yale Law School classmate who is now a state judge, the sources said. The other is Joel Paul, an American University law professor who has said that Hill told him during a job interview that she had been sexually harassed by an unnamed supervisor when she worked for the EEOC, which Thomas chaired for eight years.

Hill arrived in Washington on Wednesday night to prepare for her appearance. Thomas, who met with President Bush at the White House on Wednesday, left his home this morning in a chauffeured government car. His destination was unknown.

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., who has been designated one of the Democrats to question Thomas during the new hearings begin, said today "it is absolutely essential that we find out, if we possibly can" who is telling the truth.

"I intend to ask as tough and probing questions of both that I can," Leahy said on CBS "This Morning." He said he will endeavor to be fair to both, but said he is concerned that a kind of "kill the messenger attitude" is building up toward Hill.

"I feel sad for both of them because there's no way either of them are going to come out of this with either of them being totally found to be right," Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, said during an appearance with Leahy. "Both will carry the scars of this for the rest of their lives."

The procedure for the unusual hearing will be different from normal committee practice, by which each of the 14 members take turns questioning witnesses. Biden and two Democrats, including Leahy, will be the lead questioners for the majority. Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., and two Republicans will handle most of the questions for the GOP side.

Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas leaves his home in Alexandria, Va., early today. The judge is expected to reappear before the Senate Judiciary Committee on Friday.

The committee hopes this will allow more a more focused inquiry and followup questions. It expects to conclude the hearing in time for the full Senate to vote on Thomas on Tuesday.

Bush renewed his support for Thomas when the two met at the White House on Wednesday.

"I told him I'm staying right in there with him," Bush said after meeting, which came a day after the administration was forced to retreat from a Senate vote because of uproar over the harassment allegations.

With the Senate in recess until Friday, Senate Judiciary Chairman

Joseph Biden, D-Del., met with committee Democrats to map plans for the new hearings, which will begin Friday.

They were ordered by the Senate to examine the allegations by Hill, a former assistant to Thomas a decade ago who has alleged that after spurning his requests for dates, Thomas harassed her with sexually explicit descriptions of X-rated movies.

"The purpose of this is simple and straightforward," Biden said. "It's to focus on the issue of whether or not the allegations Ms. Hill has made are true, what extent they are true if true, and whether or not there are any other instances that ring of this charge."

Both Thomas and Hill will testify in the hearings, which could run into the weekend.

Pantex among nuclear defense plants hoping to dismantle weapons

By STEVEN K. PAULSON
Associated Press Writer

Caught off balance by President Bush, defense installations that have battled since World War II for billions of dollars to build nuclear weapons are now scrambling to become centers for taking them apart.

Among them is Pantex Plant near Amarillo, a final assembly point. Analysts say the Amarillo plant has a good chance of being given an enlarged role.

Bush stunned the defense industry and nuclear weapons critics last month by announcing a plan for unilateral nuclear cuts and new negotiations with Moscow to reduce nuclear arsenals.

With many nuclear weapons being reined in, the need for producing more of them has been thrown into doubt.

The president's move came as a surprise, and defense contractors are rushing to become the focus for dismantling weapons, said Tom Zamora, a research analyst for the environmental group Friends of the Earth.

Other plants that can't reprocess bombs are competing for the estimated $100 billion needed for cleaning up the environmental mess from more than four decades of weapons production.

"Everybody wants to be the dismantling center," Zamora said. "Pantex wants the job, Savannah River wants the job, and Rocky Flats wants the job. Everybody knows this is where the big bucks will be for the next few years."

Modernization of the arsenal will continue, even if production of new weapons stops, said Deborah K. Smith, a spokeswoman for the Department of Energy, which builds nuclear bombs for the Pentagon.

"It is far too early to speculate on the effect of the president's initiatives on specific DOE facilities," she said. "However, we see no immediate change. The proposals may well lead to a smaller complex consistent with a greatly reduced nuclear stockpile."

Bush said the United States will scrap much of its short-range nuclear arsenal. On Sept. 28, strategic bomber crews across the country ended a 4-decade alert.

The U.S. nuclear arms industry planned to spend $11.8 billion in Atomic Energy Defense Activities in 1992, with $6.7 billion for arms production.

Several thousand of the nation's 6,000-7,000 tactical nuclear weapons will be coming back from Europe, and will either have to be dismantled and stored, or melted down and reprocessed. They include the W-33, W-48 and W-79 artillery shells, the Lance W-70 short-range missile, and the B-61 and B-57 gravity bombs.

Some of the 12,000 nuclear bombs for attacking the Soviet Union may now have to be redesigned. Among them are the W-88, the newest bomb for the Trident nuclear submarine.

Zamora said it no longer makes sense to build extra-powerful weapons for smashing Soviet silos, if the primary focus of the U.S. nuclear defense strategy shifts from war-alert to retaliation, because the United States would only be attacking empty silos.

That means the United States can reuse pits from current stockpiles, even though the older bombs have less firepower.

The short-term effects on nuclear arms spending on the nation's eight major production facilities will be slight, defense industry analysts said. But over the long-term, many workers with specialized skills may be looking for new jobs.

Here, according to analysts, is a facility-by-facility look at the potential effect of Bush's move:

—Los Alamos National Laboratory at Los Alamos, N.M., and Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory at Livermore, Calif., probably will change their focus from designing new bombs to redesigning the current arsenals to make them safer.

Several bombs including the W-88 for the Trident, the W-78 for the Minuteman 3, and W-76 for the Trident 1, lack insensitive high explosives, which are less susceptible to a fire, and could be rearmed. However, the two labs could be combined, saving money, while keeping the competition the DOE says is necessary for reliability.

—The Rocky Flats plant at Golden, Colo., has been shut down for almost two years because of safety problems. It produces plutonium pits that serve as triggers for hydrogen bombs, and atomic bombs for tactical nuclear weapons.

However, with 2,200 W-68 nuclear warheads from the Poseidon missile being retired, those pits and others could be reused and there may be no need to reopen the plant.

Robert Nelson, head of DOE operations at Rocky Flats, has said he would like to see the plant become a center for dismantling nuclear weapons. But serious radioactive contamination problems and aging equipment plague the plutonium-reprocessing plant, and that plan is in doubt.

—Pantex Plant, Amarillo, Texas, is the assembly plant for nuclear weapons. Bombs returning from Europe will be sent there for dismantling, but the plant doesn't have a reprocessing capability for the radioactive components. Because of the unexpected influx, its role will probably be enlarged.

—The Nevada Test Site northwest of Las Vegas probably will switch from testing new weapons to testing pits for reuse. In addition, if other bombs are redesigned for safety reasons, those bombs also will have to be tested.

—Sandia National Laboratories, Albuquerque, N.M., builds electronic firing systems, and probably will concentrate on making existing weapons safer and more reliable.

—Savannah River, Aiken, S.C., is the only plant for production of tritium, a power booster for atomic weapons. Tritium decays at a rate of about 5 percent a year and has to be replaced, but with thousands of weapons coming home, and a stockpile of tritium expected to last two years, the need to restart the K-reactor for producing tritium and plutonium is being questioned.

The plant is hoping to become a dismantling center, reprocessing plutonium, since the need for its plutonium production has disappeared.

—Oak Ridge Reservation, Oak Ridge, Tenn., probably will shift its focus from uranium production to uranium reprocessing at its Y-12 plant, and is pushing to become a dismantling center. The plant dates from World War II, when it was selected as a uranium enrichment site for the Manhattan Project.

Convicted killer Randy Dale Mayo, left, won his case at the Supreme Court when it refused to reinstate his death sentence, but he's not optimistic a new trial would get him off death row. Henry Lee Lucas, right, says he's glad to be back on death row in Texas after nearly a year in Florida where authorities tried to link him to four killings.

Mayo not optimistic about retrial

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Convicted killer Randy Dale Mayo, who won his case this week at the Supreme Court when the justices refused to reinstate his death sentence, said he would consider a plea bargain that would keep him in prison but without the death penalty.

"The way the courts have narrowed down errors, if I get a chance to go for time, I'll go for time because I'm not going to play with another death sentence," Mayo said in an interview. "I'm not going to say I'll take life, but I'll take time."

However, he said he was not optimistic a new trial will get him off death row.

"I don't see no angles on beating this case," he said. "Some people say this ain't no life in here, but it's an existence. There's a chance on that. There ain't no chance with that needle in your arm."

Mayo, 31, was convicted of the 1984 killing of Kimberly Sue Reeves, an Angelo State University student who was raped and stabbed and then had her skull crushed with a bumper jack. Mayo confessed to the killing after he was arrested on a separate murder warrant for a case in Lubbock. He denies any role in Miss Reeves' slaying and was never tried for the Lubbock killing.

In the Reeves case, the high court, without comment Monday, let stand a lower court ruling that the jury that sentenced Mayo to death did not properly consider all mitigating evidence.

"It surprised me, just on who they've got up there (on the court)," he said of the Supreme Court ruling.

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals last year threw out the sentence, saying the jury did not consider his history of being abused by his father. Mayo on Wednesday used numerous obscenities in referring to his father, who is in prison for sexual assault.

Mayo said his confession to the Reeves slaying came after authorities offered him a deal. But when asked why he would confess to a crime if he wasn't even at the scene, he replied, "I don't know."

Miss Reeves, 19, had been sunbathing on April 13, 1984, at Lake Nasworthy in San Angelo where she was attacked.

Mayo said although he was in the area of the lake at a relative's house, he can account for all but about 15 minutes of his day there when he went to a store for some beer. He insisted it was impossible for him to travel 24 miles to and from the slaying scene and rape and kill a woman in 15 minutes.

Mayo also questioned his ability to get a fair trial in Tom Green County, since his case was the first capital murder trial in the West Texas county since 1952.

"They still talk about it," he said, adding that he'd prefer his trial to be conducted in a large city like Houston, Dallas or San Antonio.

Henry Lee Lucas happy to return

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Alleged serial killer Henry Lee Lucas says he was popular with the women inmates at the Florida prison where he was locked up for nearly a year.

Lucas, 55, was returned to Texas' death row last week from Florida, where authorities were trying to link him to four killings. Officials in Marianna, Fla., determined they could not afford to pay for his defense, although the charges against him have not been dropped.

In an interview Wednesday, Lucas said he was kept on the female wing of the Jackson County Jail, where he was the lone man, because that part of the facility was more secure.

"I stayed in one cell for 10 1/2 months with a bunch of women," he said. "I don't like to see a bunch of naked women at all. I don't think I should have been there. I'm a man and I should have been locked up the man's side."

Lucas, who wears a glass eye and was without his dentures, said his female jailmates in Florida would walk up to his cell and talk with him.

"They all went for me," he said. "I've got a picture of one in my cell now. She's pretty."

Ronnie Cornelius of the Florida Department of Law Enforcement said it was not true that Lucas was housed with women at the jail.

Lucas, indicted for four slayings between December 1980 and April 1981, once claimed he killed nearly 600 people in 26 states but later recanted his confessions for all but one slaying, that of his mother in Michigan in 1960.

He's on death row for the 1979 killing of a woman whose body was found near the central Texas town of Georgetown. Besides, the death sentence, he has six life terms, two 75-year sentences and a 60-year term for other Texas convictions.

Lucas' former companion, Otis Elwood Toole, was sentenced in Florida to four consecutive terms of life in prison, each without parole for 25 years, after pleading guilty to four counts of first-degree murder for the 1980 robbery-murder of four people at a Florida gas station.

Toole implicated Lucas in the Florida killings, a role Lucas denies.

"They wanted me to confess to four murders," he said. "I wouldn't do it. I'm not going to confess to nothing I didn't do."

Asked why Toole would accuse him, Lucas replied: "I have no idea. The man's sick. He changes his mind like water."

Florida authorities kept the former acquaintances separate and Lucas said he only got to see Toole during brief court appearances.

"I'd like to give him a piece of my mind and probably a couple of fists," Lucas said.

Lucas said he signed a waiver in which he agreed to return to Florida if the cases come to trial.

"I'm not afraid of the trial," he said. "As far as going back and fighting the case, it's a waste of money for them."

He also said he's glad to be back in Texas.

"The prison system in Florida stinks," Lucas said. "They don't allow no fans, no air conditioning, no nothing. You just sit in there and roast."

Area nurses attend training session at Coronado Hospital

Nurses from across the area gathered at Pampa's Coronado Hospital Tuesday, Oct. 8, for a day-long training session presented by M.D. Anderson Cancer Center Nursing Outreach Program, according to Monette Blando, RN, MSN, coordinator of in-service education at Coronado.

"We had 25 nurses from several towns in the eastern Panhandle who work in nursing homes, home health agencies, and hospitals who took the training. Several nurses from our hospital also participated. We have had so many inquiries we are hoping to have a second session later in the year," Blando said.

Nursing Outreach Program at the University of Texas M.D. Anderson Cancer Center receives several telephone calls each month from agencies and smaller hospitals requesting continuing education for nurses, according to officials of the group.

As a result, the outreach program developed the training to enable nurses to sharpen their skills in providing care for cancer patients.

The one-day program was divided between lectures in the morning and hands-on skill training in the afternoon.

The nurses focused on learning more about ostomies and skin care, catheters and vascular access devices, chemotherapy, symptom management, and comfort measures.

Coronado Hospital serves as a center for nurse training throughout the year, both for its staff and nurses from hospitals, nursing homes, and agencies in the area, Blando said.

Commissioners propose fee on death certificates

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — It's going to cost more to die in Bexar County if the county commissioners get their way.

Commissioners considered a proposal Wednesday that would impose a $20 fee for the processing of death certificates for burial and a $10 fee for cremation certificates. The proposal would raise an estimated $40,000 a year for the county's general fund.

The fee would apply to all deaths during which a physician is not present.

Representatives of the city's 24 funeral homes voiced strong opposition to the proposal.

No other Texas medical examiners charge to process death certificates, County Medical Examiner Dr. Vincent DiMaio said. The fees are common in other states and range from a low of $5 to a high of $100 in some states, he said.

County commissioners also want to increase the daily fee for storage and holding of a body in the morgue from $35 to $50 a day. That increase would generate an additional $15,000 a year, commissioners say.

"This is just something we will have to pass on to the families," said Victor Perez, director of Rodriguez Bexar County Funeral Home. "Some families, especially on our side of town are barely making it."

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Withholding historical documents indefensible

For the past four decades, a tiny coterie of editors has jealously restricted access by scholars to the Dead Sea Scrolls, the historically important manuscripts that are the earliest known biblical texts. Now, however, this anti-intellectual monopoly is being broken by the Huntington Library in San Marino, Calif.

The California institution intends to make a complete photographic set of the scrolls available to researchers worldwide. It has already released 3,000 photo negatives of about 800 published and unpublished scrolls. The library deserves credit for its courageous decision to make a complete set available. Doing so makes an immensely valuable contribution to the study of the critical period during which the roots of Christianity formed from Judaism.

The international team that has controlled the manuscripts, based in Israel, has threatened to take court action to block release of the scrolls. But officials of the Huntington Library are confident that U.S. court will uphold the material's dissemination. For the sake of biblical scholarship, the texts should be made available to all researchers.

Since the scrolls were discovered in 1947 by Bedouin tribesmen who stumbled upon them in caves northwest of the Dead Sea, the treasure trove of documents has been under tight control. Israel obtained control over the unpublished scrolls when they captured them in the former Jordanian section of East Jerusalem during the six-day war of 1967. Since then, a 12-person editorial committee has closely controlled them. Because the scroll committee has refused to make copies of the documents widely available for scholarly research, 20 percent of the intact scrolls remains untranscribed and unpublished.

The Dead Sea Scrolls generally are considered the manuscript discovery of the century. They date from 200 B.C. to roughly 100 years after the birth of Christ.

More than 100 of the manuscripts are biblical texts, including every book of the Old Testament except Esther. Scholars also are intrigued by the many nonbiblical writings, which offer insight into the development of both Judaism and Christianity. Because they provide an historical account of the transitional period between Judaism and Christianity, the scrolls long have tantalized researchers around the globe. But the failure of the scroll committee to make the manuscripts available has thwarted much legitimate research.

That such important historical material has been withheld for four decades from scholars and the public is indefensible. An archaeological discovery that is as significant to the world community as the Dead Sea Scrolls should not be monopolized by a cabal of scholars. The Huntington Library has earned praise for defying the scroll committee and serving the cause of scholarship by opening up the texts to study by all researchers.

Find a sport or stop playing

Clarence Thomas' confirmation hearings are like a late-season, 20-inning baseball game between two teams that are pretty much out of the running: Nobody wants it, nobody profits from it and nobody can escape it. This tedious farce ought to awaken Senate Democrats to the need when the next Supreme Court vacancy occurs, either to find another sport or to stop playing.

The hearings could have been entertaining as well as educational. Thomas, who is nothing if not independent, has a long history of uttering provocative words and delighting in the fury they provoke. The Democrats on the Judiciary Committee hoped to use his own words to portray him as a weird radical at odds with his own race, the Brother from Another Planet.

But Thomas treated his record of writings and speeches the way Clark Clifford treats the BCCI scandal, which is to say he shouldn't be unfairly blamed for it. Every gesture and word was meant to transmit the same message: I've never had an unconventional thought in my life, and I never will.

Whenever a senator asked him about some bold position he had once taken, he politely answered that it didn't represent his current thinking, that it didn't mean what it seemed to mean or that it wouldn't have the slightest bearing on how he would decide cases before the court.

None of these responses were plausible, and in making them, Thomas had the look of a man wearing shoes a couple of sizes too small. Still, though his inquisitors didn't like the pretense, they couldn't puncture it.

It's hard to blame Thomas for declining the invitation to not only walk the plank but supply it too. The real blame lies with the Senate Democrats, who aren't content to simply let a Republican president appoint whomever he pleases but aren't prepared to flatly oppose him either. So they resort to sour carping, hoping the nominee will destroy himself, because they lack the nerve to do it for him.

This sterile ritual is the product of a recent feature of American government — the continuing division of power between a Republican executive and a Democratic legislature. In other areas, the two sides are forced to split the difference. But when it comes to Supreme Court nominations, the White House has a dominant role that the Senate is afraid to challenge except in a perfunctory way.

The Democrats know that Thomas, like most other appointees to the federal bench over the last decade, was chosen largely because he shares the administration's conservative ideology. They need to decide whether they want to oppose presidential choices on the same basis on which they are made.

If so, they should stop whining about the nominees' qualifications and intellectual depth and respect for judicial precedent. Thomas' critics claim he falls short on each of those, but they wouldn't be grounds for Democrats to reject a nominee picked by President Wilder. These are purely pretexts for doing what the Democrats are unwilling to do openly — vote down judicial nominees whose thinking they don't like.

They have every right to do that. The Constitution gives the Senate the right to "advise and consent" to Supreme Court and other judicial appointments, and there is nothing to stop the lawmakers from saying: "This nominee is a conservative Republican. I'm a liberal Democrat. Therefore, I vote no."

In fact, the surprise is that the Democrats, with 57 out of 100 votes, haven't been more assertive about their prerogatives. Part of the reason is tradition, which holds that the Senate has a duty to confirm unless there is a powerful reason not to.

But the practice of deference grew up in a different era, one in which the same party that occupied the White House usually controlled the Senate as well. If the once-sacred seniority system can be junked, as it has been, this tradition could be too.

The reason it hasn't been is probably simple. The Democrats refuse to make an explicit issue of Thomas' ideology because they fear the public is closer to his point of view than to their own. He was picked, remember, by a president who carried most of these senators' home states. If they can smear Thomas as a radical, they can win the public over. If they merely denounce him as a conservative, they probably can't.

So they do enough to appease their own constituencies while taking care not to alienate all the voters who elected George Bush. The strategy is to protect Democratic control of Congress even if it means abandoning the judiciary to Republicans. What the Democrats should learn from these hearings is that they won't get the kind of Supreme Court they want until they're ready to risk something for it.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Thursday, Oct. 10, the 283rd day of 1991. There are 82 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Oct. 10, 1973, Vice President Spiro T. Agnew, accused of accepting bribes, pleaded no contest to one count of federal income tax evasion, and resigned his office.

On this date:

In 1845, the U.S. Naval Academy opened in Annapolis, Md.

In 1911, revolutionaries under Sun Yat-sen overthrew China's Manchu dynasty.

In 1913, the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans commingled in the Panama Canal after U.S. engineers blew up the Gamboa Dam.

In 1943, Chiang Kai-shek took the oath of office as president of China.

It should have stayed 'gone'

Frankly, my dear, I would think we could have done quite well without a sequel to "Gone With the Wind."

If Margaret Mitchell had wanted to take the story any further she wouldn't have stopped writing when she did. An author instinctively knows when his or her book is finished. It's when he or she has nothing left to say.

Regardless of what I think, of course, there is still to be a GWTW sequel, "Scarlet: The Sequel to Margaret Mitchell's 'Gone With the Wind.'"

It was written by Alexandra Ripley, believe it or not, and according to the report I read, was to be launched in 40 countries at a cost of $24.95 a copy, pretty steep for an ad-on.

But I think I'll pass on it. Nothing against Alexandra Ripley, but I thought the end to Margaret Mitchell's Old South epic was quite tidy. When Rhett dismissed Scarlett and walked away into the Georgia sunset, I thought, what a great place to end a novel.

If there were to be sequels I think they should have been conjured by the minds of millions who fell under GWTW's spell.

I know I have my own version of what happened after Rhett's departure and I'm satisfied with it. Mine fits me and yours fits you. Too bad it couldn't have been left like that.

What happens in Alexandra Ripley's sequel written in these days and times? Scarlett runs for

Lewis Grizzard

Congress? Opens a health spa and leads aerobic classes?

Not that anybody gives a damn but me, but just for the record, here's how I see what took place after the war for Scarlett and Rhett.

I had just about had it with Scarlett by the time the original GWTW ended, the spoiled little twerp.

I don't think she was all that great-looking in the first place. Go to any of Atlanta's internationally acclaimed nude dancing parlors and you can find a dozen ballerinas that would turn Rhett's eyes away from Miss Tiny Waist.

Secondly, Scarlett was a great pain in the old wazoo. Always crying, pouting, and being the "B" word she most certainly was.

In my mind's sequel, Scarlett gets what she deserves. I see her growing old, living alone with a bunch of cats and drinking gin all day. It serves her right. Rhett loved her, was good to her, and would have bought her a new Mercedes convertible if she would have just hushed occasionally.

But, nooooo. She pushed him and pushed him, and as much as I'm against a man physically abusing a woman, I wouldn't have been that upset if Rhett had given her a little kick in the shin when he did his Hank Snow and moved on.

Rhett, in my sequel, returns to Charleston and becomes a successful real estate developer, building beachfront condos and golf courses.

He marries a sweet woman named Priscilla or Betty Lou Ann Sou, and they have a son, Brett, who grows up to play the outfield for the first professional baseball team in Charleston, the Carpet-baggers.

Brett's great great grandson, as a matter of fact, follows in his namesake's footsteps and becomes the starting centerfielder for the Los Angeles Dodgers in 1991.

Several years after Rhett left Scarlett, by the way, the South seceded from the Union again, but this time there was no war.

For its independence, the South agreed to give the North Hilton Head Island, S.C., which to this very day is a popular resort for Northern tourists who are afraid to go to Miami Beach anymore.

Prissy, meanwhile, becomes a noted gynecologist.

That's my sequel and I'm sticking to it.

Anyone for a bit of greed, sleaze?

By WILLIAM A. RUSHER

It is always well, in considering the money scandals that rock Washington from time to time, not to draw overly hasty conclusions from any partisan aspect they may seem to have. When a Washington fly discovers some new honey-pot it will of course let its close friends in on it, but these commonly include a fair number of members of the other party. If nothing else, letting a couple of Republicans in on a good thing discovered by Democrats (or vice versa) tends to immunize the whole enterprise from partisan jealousy and unwanted publicity.

But I am bound to say that the scandal surrounding the murky affairs of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International (BCCI) does, thus far at least, appear to have a distinctly Democratic aroma. Is this pure coincidence? More likely it grows out of the fact that the original contacts seem to have been made during the Carter administration in the late 1970s, when it behooved Arabs who wanted friends in Washington to polish Democratic apples. (Don't forget the late Billy Carter's quite separate business deals with Libyan strongman Moammar Gadhafi.)

Anyway, the contacts were made, and continued to flourish right through the 1980s. Those sly old Arabs managed to trick Jimmy Carter into accepting $8 million to expand and glorify his presidential library.

Their beneficence to longtime Democratic consigliere Clark Clifford, who headed Washington's First American Bank without ever (he says) realizing they owned it, was so complex that I will borrow The New York Times' account of it verbatim: "Mr. Clifford and (his protegee) Mr. Altman were given loans by BCCI on unusually favorable terms to buy First American stock, and in little more than year they sold that stock for a profit of $9.8 million. The nominal buyer of the stock was a small money-lender whose purchase was bankrolled by a shadowy BCCI affiliate."

By now, you may well be wondering just who the Democrats are talking about when they complain of the "greed and sleaze" that allegedly characterized the 1980s. But you haven't yet heard about BCCI's generosity toward Jimmy Carter's fellow Georgian (and fellow Democrat) Andrew Young, who served as Carter's U.N. ambassador before becoming, from 1982 to 1990, mayor of Atlanta.

It appears that at some point when Young was strapped for cash, BCCI loaned him $150,000. Under the terms of the loan, Young was personally obligated to make annual payments of $32,000 on interest and principal. When the time came for these payments to start, however, Young was strapped again (or perhaps still). So BCCI, unlike the kind of banker you and I deal with, genially told Young to forget about it — it would forgive the loan.

Young explains this apparent gift of $150,000 by saying he assumed it was a belated payment under a consultation arrangement BCCI had made with his private consulting business when he was Atlanta's mayor. Young says that Aga Hassan Abedi, the founder of BCCI (who is now gravely ill in Karachi), had retained his firm and agreed that BCCI would pay it $50,000 a year simply as a retainer fee, in case it ever wanted his advice. Soon thereafter, however, Abedi had a heart attack, and Young's firm never received any retainer fees.

Is there any written evidence of this alleged "retainer agreement"? No, says Young, it was oral. (But, to be legally binding, it would have had to be in writing.) Did his firm ever give BCCI any advice under it? No, but it was ready to, if BCCI wanted any. Young's theory is that BCCI's forgiveness of his $150,000 loan was a sort of informal way of catching up on its overdue payments under the "retainer agreement."

Greed and sleaze, anyone?

Austrian-Soviet cosmonauts return to earth

MOSCOW (AP) — Two Soviet cosmonauts and the first Austrian in space returned to Earth today, successfully completing an eight-day mission, the Tass news agency reported.

The Soyuz TM-12 landing vehicle safely touched down at 6:12 a.m. in Central Asia, the news agency said.

Austria's first cosmonaut, Franz Viehboeck, along with Anatoly Artbarski and Toktar Abukirov, "are feeling well", Tass said.

"Joint research was conducted on board the Mir orbital station in accordance with a program of biotechnological experiments, which included research into possible hybridization of cell plants in conditions of weightlessness and the study of the transfer of genetic information of microorganisms," Tass said.

Viehboeck is the third paying customer to travel in the passenger seat of a Soyuz rocket since the cash-strapped Soviet space program was forced to become more self-sufficient.

Soviet media said Austria paid $7 million for the ride, less than the $11 million paid by the Japanese in December and $10 million the British handed over in May.

The latest mission was headed by Col. Alexander Volkov, who was making his third space flight. He is slated to remain on board the Mir until March 1992 with fellow Soviet cosmonaut Sergei Krikalev.

Soviet food treaty ready for adoption

By JOHN IAMS
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — An agreement to ensure food deliveries among republics this winter could be adopted as soon as Friday by the ruling State Council, according to the head of the committee managing the Soviet economy.

The plan, which provides duty-free circulation of food among the republics, was given preliminary approval today by the Soviet Committee for the Management of the National Economy.

Committee Chairman Ivan Silayev, speaking on Soviet television today, confirmed that the State Council may give final approval Friday.

The State Council, which consists of Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev and leaders of the 12 republics, was established to govern the country after the failed August coup.

The draft food agreement took into account "the actual situation with the harvest and demands of each republic," Silayev said.

Because of shortages in various regions of the country, republics have become increasingly reluctant to ship farm products outside their boundaries.

The food plan seeks to guarantee equal distribution.

Aside from duty-free circulation of food, the plan envisions tough fines on republics that fail to fulfill their obligations on food supplies to their partners, according to a Tass news agency account of the agreement.

Under the plan, $10.4 billion will be allocated to buy food from abroad. "However, according to experts' estimations, $14.7 billion is needed to keep up the food supplies at the level of 1990," Tass said.

Gennady Kulik, a member of the committee, told today's session of the Russian parliament that Soviet grain reserves were at their lowest point in 50 years — just 34 million metric tons, according to the Interfax news agency.

Kulik said bread, a staple of the Russian diet, was being rationed in 16 regions of the vast republic.

The shortages have been caused by a breakdown of the centrally run food production and distribution system, rather than by drought or famine.

U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Edward Madigan said today, after meeting with Gorbachev, that the Soviet leader was seeking economic assistance from the United States, including humanitarian aid to ease the food shortages. He did not provide details of the request.

The European Community this week promised $2.4 billion in emergency food and medical relief this winter. Japan on Tuesday said it would provide $2.5 billion in loans.

Theater cleans up act on billing for musical

GLENS FALLS, N.Y. (AP) — A theater company is willing to change the banner for its fall musical to read "The Best Little Blankhouse in Texas" if it'll keep everyone happy.

"I'm willing to compromise," said Beth Myers, promotions director for the Glens Falls Community Theatre.

Mayor Francis X. O'Keefe had denied the group's request to hang a banner advertising "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas" across a street.

"I'm concerned with the churches, the PTAs and other people who may take that the wrong way," he said.

Myers said she contacted the mayor on Wednesday and was told a final ruling would be made Oct. 17 by the Common Council.

Magician goes to court, charge disappears

MILWAUKEE (AP) — A magician took his act to court to fight a gambling charge, but the judge stole the show by making his case disappear.

Court Commissioner Frank J. Liska Jr. on Wednesday challenged Travis Gardner to do some tricks to avoid paying a $100 ticket he got Aug. 26 after a woman reported he was running a shell game or some other scam.

"If I'm convinced it's magic that you're doing, I'll dismiss your case," Liska said.

Gardner pulled out some tools of his trade: a pair of "thumbcuffs" used to bind two thumbs together, a key, a handkerchief and a dollar.

He put on the thumbcuffs, then quickly extricated his thumbs without using the key. He then made a red handkerchief disappear from one hand, reappear in the other hand and then reappear in his mouth.

"Case dismissed," Liska said. "You've got a good act, but mine is better because I made your case disappear."

Mystery of saint's blood may be just chemistry, according to researchers

NEW YORK (AP) — A vial in an Italian cathedral said to contain clotted blood that mysteriously turns liquid during religious ceremonies actually may hold a gel made of ordinary substances, scientists said today.

Researchers reported in the journal Nature that they had created a dark brown gel that liquefies when disturbed, then thickens back into a gel.

Such a mixture may be in the hermetically sealed vial that is said to hold the blood of St. Januarius, also called San Gennaro, they said.

In a ceremony performed at Naples Cathedral since the 14th century, the 4-inch glass container is repeatedly turned upside down. Many residents of Naples believe good luck will follow if the vial's contents liquefy, while disasters such as earthquakes may await if the contents remain solid.

"The event draws crowds of thousands and a television and media audience of millions," the researchers wrote. "The phenomenon seems genuine, is well documented and is still regarded as unexplained."

One of the researchers, chemist Luigi Garlaschelli of the University of Pavia in Italy, said in a telephone interview that he had observed the ceremony, and the substance in the vial "looks exactly like ours."

The gel was made with substances available in the 14th century, including table salt, water, calcium carbonate and ferric chloride hydrate.

The researchers said the repeated turning over of the Naples vial could disturb such a mixture enough to turn it liquid.

A team of researchers who examined the vial at the church's request reported in 1989 that it appeared to contain blood. The conclusion was based on analysis of light shown through it.

Educators urge America's schools to 'be honest with kids about Columbus'

By MIKE FEINSILBER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Educators asked America's schools today to get away from a romantic "sailed-the-ocean-blue" treatment of Christopher Columbus and rethink what they tell youngsters about his voyage and its consequences.

The National Council for the Social Studies said schools should emphasize that Columbus' contribution was that he brought into contact — for good and bad — two rich and thriving civilizations, not that he "discovered America."

And schoolchildren should also be taught that his voyage began a genocidal episode — "the most extensive depopulation of a group of peoples in the history of humankind," the near-extinction, through battle and disease, of millions of Indians, a council position paper said.

"We're just trying to be honest with the kids," said Charlotte C. Anderson, president-elect of the council. "We're trying to make an honest presentation of a critical event in history."

The guidelines were endorsed by 27 educators' groups, representing geographers, anthropologists, American Indians, historians and others, as the nation starts to commemorate the 500th anniversary of Columbus' arrival.

The statement said difficult-to-accept facts about what Columbus wrought — "are in danger of being disregarded, obscured or ignored in the public hyperbole that is likely to surround the quincentenary."

"Columbus did not discover a new world and, thus, initiate American history," the first guideline said, adding:

"Neither did the Vikings nor did the seafaring Africans, Chinese, Pacific Islanders or other people who may have preceded the Vikings. The land that Columbus encountered was not a new world. Rather it was a world of peoples with rich and complex histories dating back at least 15,000 years or possibly earlier."

"On that fateful morning of October 12, 1492, Columbus ... put, as many historians have accurately observed, two old worlds into permanent contact."

The guidelines ask teachers to stress what the two worlds had in common: developed farming systems, centers of dense populations, complex civilizations, large empires, extensive trade networks, patterns of conflict and cooperation, systems of religious and scientific belief, linguistic diversity.

Africa's role in developing the Western Hemisphere should also be given attention, the guidelines said. Until the 1800s, more African slaves were brought to the Americas than Europeans, they said.

The guidelines called attention to the negative consequences of what Columbus started: the diseases that crossed the Atlantic and the wars fought between newcomers and natives.

Diseases against which the Indians had no immunity — smallpox, measles, whooping cough, chicken pox and influenza — "were crucial allies in the European conquest of the Native American," the guidelines said.

"The ensuing wars between rival European nations that were played out in this hemisphere, the four centuries of Indian and European conflicts as well as the now well-documented instances of genocidal and displacement policies of the colonial and post-colonial governments further contributed to the most extensive depopulation of a group of peoples in the history of humankind."

Other guidelines make these points: "The real America Columbus encountered in 1492 was a different place from the pre-contact America often portrayed in folklore, textbooks and the mass media." It was not a "wilderness inhabited by primitive peoples."

"The encounters of Native Americans, Africans and Europeans following 1492 are not stories of vigorous white actors confronting passive red and black spectators and victims."

"Columbus' voyages were not just a European phenomenon but, rather, were a facet of Europe's millennia-long history of interaction with Asia and Africa."

Among the groups endorsing the position paper are the American Association of School Administrators, American Historical Association, American Indian Heritage Foundation, National Association of Elementary School Principals, National Association of Secondary School Principals, National Catholic Educational Association, National Science Teachers Association and the National Education Association.

Turkey launches operation against Kurdish guerrillas

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — Turkish warplanes and helicopters have begun an intensive search for Turkish Kurdish guerrillas along its southeastern border with Iraq following a rebel raid that killed 11 soldiers, officials said today.

Turkish officials said about 150 of the rebels infiltrated from Iraq on Monday and killed the Turkish soldiers during an attack on an army outpost.

The guerrillas of the outlawed Kurdish Labor Party have been fighting since 1984 to set up a separate Kurdish state in southeastern Turkey.

A high-level government official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the search operation, launched Tuesday, was being conducted only on Turkish territory so far.

A Kurdish guerrilla attack in August, which killed 10 soldiers, prompted a weeklong Turkish military operation six miles inside northern Iraq. The Turkish Kurds still hold seven soldiers, kidnapped in that raid, as hostages.

The cross-border raid in August was the largest military operation Turkey ever launched against Turkish Kurds based in northern Iraq. Turkey has attacked Kurdish bases in northern Iraq at least three other times over the past seven years.

Plant struck by deadly fire closes

HAMLET, N.C. (AP) — Willie Baldwin, who worked at the chicken processing plant where a fire killed 25 people last month, thanks God his life was spared. And then he wonders how he'll survive now that the plant won't be reopening.

"I've got mixed emotions," said the 31-year-old father of three. "I need a job. And when you've got kids, you need 40 hours a week."

He said his $129 in unemployment benefits "just ain't going to cut it."

In an Oct. 2 letter to employees, Imperial Food Products said the plant will not reopen, citing the fire and the company's inability to arrange financing.

Some employees, like Linda Faye Robinson, said they would not have returned anyway.

"There's too many memories of the people who died," she said tearfully.

But Baldwin said he may have had no choice but to go back.

In this rural community of 6,200 people, Imperial Food Products was the biggest employer, and the 225 jobs it provided, mostly in the $5- to $5.50-an-hour range, are hard to come by.

"It's going to be a long, hard winter for a lot of people," said Mayor Abbie Covington.

"This is a small town. So everything is limited," noted Councilman Joey Jernigan. "It's going to be a burden on the people who have already pitched in to help."

The fire erupted Sept. 3 at the plant, where chicken was prepared for restaurants and stores. Flames from frying equipment ignited oil from a broken hydraulic hose. State investigators said locked or blocked exits contributed to the deaths.

The company has had little comment on conditions in the plant beyond acknowledging that certain doors were sometimes locked.

The tragedy has resulted in a criminal investigation of the plant, which was never inspected during its 11 years of operation.

In the fire's aftermath, some workers said they were troubled by the locked doors but never raised their fears with management because jobs that pay $5.50 an hour were too hard to find.

"People didn't raise them because they were afraid they might lose their jobs," said Elaine Griffin, who worked at the plant.

After the fire, Baldwin said, it has been hard for him to look at the sprawling brick plant, which he can see every time he steps out the front door of his apartment.

"I lost a lot of friends up there," he said Wednesday as he wrestled with his children in a grassy area next to his apartment complex. "Just to think that it could have been me. Thank God it wasn't."

But then he worries again about how he will provide for his family.

"I'm used to working," he said. "Then all of the sudden, bam, 200 people are looking for jobs. I've done a few things like raking leaves and yard work. But all that does is put one meal on the table."

Police enter search for woman claiming she's spreading AIDS.

DALLAS (AP) — Prosecutors have given police a list of names in the hunt for a woman who says she's trying to infect men with AIDS as revenge against a man who gave her the virus.

The woman, who calls herself "CJ," said in a letter in the September issue of Ebony magazine that she has unprotected sex with men she meets in Dallas-area nightclubs.

Since the letter was read on Dallas radio, requests for AIDS information have increased dramatically, health workers said.

Police Lt. J.D. Elliston said several detectives are looking for the woman.

Assistant District Attorney George West said his office has given officers the names of five people who might be CJ., including one woman known to have the AIDS virus.

Police said earlier they couldn't look for the woman because no one had filed a complaint against her. Elliston said strong public concern led authorities to change their mind and try to find her.

A 1989 law makes it a felony to knowingly try to spread AIDS.

Study: Medicaid prescription limit costing more

BOSTON (AP) Efforts to hold down Medicaid expenses by imposing limits on prescription drugs for the poor may actually cost more than they save, a study today concludes.

Researchers who studied a brief attempt in New Hampshire a decade ago to restrict the number of prescriptions given to the elderly poor found it backfired by driving up nursing home admissions.

The researchers noted that about one-fourth of state Medicaid programs limit drug reimbursement.

"Our findings raise questions about the clinical and economic wisdom of such policies," they wrote.

For 11 months in 1980 and 1981,

New Hampshire Medicaid paid for no more than three medicines per month for patients covered by the program. This reduced the use of medicines by 35 percent and saved the state an estimated $300,000 to $400,000.

However, nursing home admissions for the chronically ill, elderly poor doubled during the same time, apparently because of the limit on prescriptions, the study found. And the extra nursing home bills, which were also paid by Medicaid, probably were larger than the savings on prescriptions.

The study was conducted by Dr. Stephen B. Soumerai and others from Harvard Medical School. It was published in the New England Journal of Medicine.

Democrats unveil campaign finance plan that would tax lobbyists

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Democrats unveiled a campaign finance reform plan Wednesday that would tax lobbyists to help pay for elections but still allow candidates to raise two-thirds of their money from wealthy donors and special interests.

The plan would cap each House candidate's spending at $600,000 for the primary and general elections together, slightly below the average spent by incumbent Democrats and above that of incumbent Republicans in tightly contested races last year.

To qualify for up to $200,000 in public financing, candidates could raise no more than $200,000 from business, labor and other interest group political action committees. And they could take in a maximum of $200,000 more in contributions of more than $200 each from individuals.

"That balances the chairman of the board of the Exxon Corp. with The Wilderness Society, the chief executive of a company with the union that represents its workers," Rep. Sam Gejdenson, D-Conn., said.

Candidates could get up to $200,000 in federal matching funds on a dollar-for-dollar basis for small contributions — less than $200 each — raised from individual donors. To qualify for any matching funds, candidates would first have to raise $60,000 in such small individual contributions.

Gejdenson headed a task force appointed by Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., to seek a consensus among Democrats on the issue. He said public financing is essential to "balance politically driven money with non-politically driven money."

The plan was presented at a party caucus meeting.

Critics of the current campaign financing system who say it gives special interest groups too much influence on Capitol Hill said the plan represented a vast improvement over a version passed by the House in 1990. At the time, lawmakers expressed doubt that the 1990 bill would ever become law.

"Finally, they're going to come to grips with this stuff," said David Eppler, a lobbyist for Public Citizen. "There's been an incredible 'I'm not sick' denial. They now realize that the institution is very sick and they haven't dealt with it."

Gejdenson said he hoped to have a final package ready for a House floor vote before Thanksgiving, when Congress plans to adjourn for the year. House Republicans are expected to unveil their own version in the next two weeks.

Reform groups such as Public Citizen, the League of Women Voters and Common Cause generally endorsed Gejdenson's plan. But they warned that they could withdraw their support if efforts to dilute the bill proved successful.

"We can live with it and lobby for it," said Common Cause President Fred Wertheimer. "But details matter on this issue and we have to make sure there's no shaving off."

Wertheimer said his group believes the proposal would leave loopholes that would enable wealthy individuals and groups to funnel undisclosed "soft money" into federal races.

And Gejdenson acknowledged that the plan faces a "tough fight" in protecting public financing, the limits on political action committee contributions and spending ceilings. He said some members of his own party would oppose the provisions.

On the public financing issue the measure calls for an end to the tax deductibility of corporations' and trade associations' lobbying expenses.

Congress' Joint Committee on Taxation estimates that would raise $250 million a year, more than enough to pay for the public financing share of House and Senate candidates without a tax increase or raising the federal deficit.

'Wheels for Life' rolls on for Skellytown riders

On Sept. 28, nineteen Skellytown residents participated in "Wheels for Life", a bike-a-thon to benefit St. Jude's Children's Research Hospital in Memphis, Tenn. The participants raised $1,142.50, or 228% over the goal set, according to event coordinator, Diana Larkin.

Kory Tice rode 22 miles. Shane Chaney and Charra Woods rode 20 miles each. Other participants were Misty and Mindy Tice, Krystal Woods, Kala Tice, Melissa Robinson, Chrissy and Kenny Putman, Kimberly, Camilla and Carla Newman, Dustin and Keith Larkin, Randy Nix, Jay Easley, Krissy Cone and Jacklyn Woods. Woods was the youngest participant, at age nine months.

Top fund raisers were Keith Larkin, $236.50. He won a 10-speed mountain bike donated by Wal-Mart in Borger and citizens of Skellytown.

Shane Chaney raised $187 and received cassette stereo player donated by Alco. Kala Tice raised $103 and received a home video donated by Furr's. Mindy Tice raised $89.10 and received a gift certificate from Danny's Market. Kory Tice raised $54.80 and received dinner for two from Dos Caballeros. Chrissy Putman raised $31.50 and received a free hair cut donated by Judy Howard at Mane Attractions. Door prizes were given by Scotty's Wine and Cheese, Cinema 4, Liz from Mane Attractions, and Body Works. Besides coordinator Larkin, were assistant coordinator, Jessie Poole, and helpers Vicki Davis and Brandon Tice. Michael and Jessie Poole and Nancy Easley attended the emergency unit.

Refreshments were donated by citizens of Skellytown. All proceeds from the event go to St. Jude's Children's Research Hospital.

About the event, Larkin said, "With all the bad things you hear about kids these days, it's nice to know there are alot of kids in Skellytown that don't fit that mold. They are willing to give a little of themselves to help others."

Man's tall tale leads to short marriage

DEAR ABBY: You were right in your advice to "No Guts," who had given his fiancée a three-carat cubic zirconia. (You told him to find the guts because it would be better if she got the news from him.) I only wish he had written his letter a year ago. Here is the female point of view:

My fiancé gave me a two-carat "diamond," saying he had inherited it from his grandfather. He said the jeweler that mounted it had told him its value was "between $8,000 and $10,000." When I asked if he'd ever had it appraised or insured, he said he hadn't — because he didn't want to pay an inheritance tax. His mother didn't even know he had it, he said, and I could never tell her because it would cause a family feud!

Of course, being in love and blinded by this gorgeous "rock," I fell for the whole story, and proudly showed it off at work and to friends and family. Imagine my embarrassment (yes, after the wedding!) when I took it to a jeweler to have it appraised, and he told me it was not a diamond!

When I confronted my husband, he gave me another string of lies, saying that either one of his previous roommates had found the ring in the apartment and replaced the stone with a fake, or that when he took it to the jeweler for engraving, the jeweler must have switched the stones. Then he said that he knew when he said "I do" that it wasn't a diamond, but planned to replace it (without my knowledge) on our first anniversary.

Needless to say, eight months

Dear Abby

before our first anniversary, I divorced this con artist.

I learned my lesson the hard way — and my sympathies go out to his next victim. "No Guts" should heed your sound advice, Abby, but I would also advise women to be wary of and question any diamond that is over one-half carat if it has no papers.

E.Z. DECEIVEE
DEAR DECEIVEE: It's discouraging to contemplate a world where a bride-to-be must see in black and white that her fiancé is on the up and up. Not all that glitters is gold, nor is all that sparkles a genuine diamond.

DEAR ABBY: A few months back I sent for your booklet on "How to Be Popular." It did me so much good, I'm a different person. I read it several times, and then passed it on to family and friends. It may never get back to me, so will you please send me another copy — along with "How to Write Letters for All Occasions" and "How to Have a Lovely Wedding?"

Respiratory therapy week celebrated

What started as a nurse-administered treatment for breathing problems developed into a whole new medical field during the polio epidemic, according to Ricky Walkup, RRT, director of the cardiopulmonary Department at Coronado Hospital. His department this week is observing National Respiratory Therapy Week.

"Our job is to help people breathe easier," he said. "The idea of therapy for breathing began back in the thirties and forties with the 'oxygen jockeys' who pushed the big oxygen tanks around the hospital. When the polio epidemic hit and iron lungs were developed, respiratory therapy became an established part of medical practice," he said.

"When I first started in this area, my ambition was to have someone ask me 'What is an iron lung?' We finally whipped the polio epidemic, and you don't see those old monstrosities around much any more," he said.

Walkup said that the iron lung, in most cases, has been replaced with modern technology. "We understand breathing systems better than we did thirty years ago, too. Now we put patients on a ventilator to help them breathe, and we have a much better chance to help them breathe on their own than we did with the iron lung," he said.

Walkup explained that his department does both diagnostic work and treatment therapy. They perform pulmonary function tests, do bedside spirometry treatments, do blood gas analysis, and do pulse oximetry (a non-invasive test to determine the level of oxygen in the blood stream.) "Our department is called 'cardiopulmonary' because we take care of the lungs (pulmonary) and the heart (cardio)," he said.

The department conducts cardiac diagnostic tests including EKG's (electrocardiograms), stress tests, Holter monitoring, and echocardiograms.

Walkup explained that in his profession there are two levels of certification and training. The CRTT (certified respiratory therapy technician) takes about a year's training and successful completion of a national exam. The RRT (registered respiratory technician) requires a two-year associate degree and completion of a national exam.

Walkup, who came to Pampa in April of this year from Brownfield, is an RRT and has a bachelor science degree with emphasis in health care administration. Others in his department are Janice Andreen, RRT; Dorris Been, CRTT; Mab Calloway, respiratory care practitioner; Chalenia Freeman, CRTT; Jim Martin, RRT; and Dell Turk, EKG technician.

A well-intentioned, influential friend could be instrumental in helping you advance your interests in the year ahead. While the methods may be unusual, this individual knows how to get results.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Resist the temptation today to pass along hearsay that has yet to be verified. If you say something about another that turns out to be untrue, you'll feel guilty later.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Financial conditions are tricky today, and you mustn't let your extravagance offset what you gain. Your possibilities for acquisition are fair, but your instincts for squandering are stronger.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Two important objectives might not be as easy to achieve today as you initially envisioned. If you take things for granted, success could elude you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) A lack of imagination isn't your problem today. The trouble could result from being oversold on one of your more illogical concepts. Be a realistic thinker.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) This might not be one of your better days for doing business with friends. The deal you get from a pal may not be as good as one you could get from a stranger.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Doing things on your own could prove to be more effective today than trying to do things with partners. If your cohorts turn out to be dead weight, you'll have to carry their load — as well as your own.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Generosity is a noble virtue, but today it should be seasoned with wisdom. There are indications you might reward the undeserving while ignoring those who are worthy.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Guard against the temptation today to gamble on something at which a friend was lucky. There aren't any guarantees you'll duplicate this individual's success. In fact, it could prove costly.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You might be overly eager to please everyone you'll be involved with today. Disappointments can be minimized, however, if you realize you can't be all things to all people.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Usually, you're a rather self-reliant person, but today you might insist that others do things for you which you should be doing for yourself. Don't neglect your duties.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Expensive, pleasurable pursuits could end up costing you a lot more than you had anticipated today. You may have a good time while you're spending, but buyer's remorse could take center stage later.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) As long as objectives can be accomplished with relative ease, you're apt to do well today. However, in situations that require patience and tenacity, it's another story.

Shootin' the Breeze

By J. Alan Brzys

My oh my what a bad thing to say

I don't subscribe to Sports Illustrated. I've thought many times about taking advantage of SI's bountiful offers - reduced subscription rates, a free football telephone and the annual swimsuit issue featuring skimpily-clad beauties - but somehow I've always resisted the temptation.

My main concern is my magazines might go where some of my mail often ends up - at addresses other than mine.

Thanks, by the way, to the many honest people in my neighborhood who make certain my mail eventually gets to the proper destination - my place.

A friend passed along a few copies the other day. He wanted me to read an article concerning a topic we had recently discussed.

It's a fine publication. Lots of individuals and businesses subscribe. I don't know if my friend received one of those You-Can't-Live-Without-Owning-One-Of-These-Telephones telephones when he signed on to receive it by mail.

Perhaps I should call him and ask, "What are you talking on?"

Naw, I'll ask in person next time I see him. One of the issues was almost-totally dedicated to the 1991 college football season.

The cover photograph, often considered to be a jinx, featured David Klingler, quarterback of the explosive - their word, not mine - Houston Cougars offense.

Klingler is pictured holding several sticks of dynamite, fuse lit and apparently ready to go off.

Here's where the jinx comes in. Houston's explosive run-and-shoot offense started off with a bang, turned into a slow burn and recently has fizzled out.

The Baylor Bears were catapulted this week into the Associated Press Top 10 - No. 8 to be exact - after they ripped the Cougars 38-21. It was the third consecutive loss for the vaunted Houston team.

But this piece isn't about the team. It concerns the man behind the Houston run-and-shoot.

It's about Pampa's own John Jenkins. And Pampans - if they read the article - might do an about-face when it comes to claiming Jenkins as one of their own.

Hey, the guy's controversial by nature. That's what celebrity is all about.

But some may not look with favor at a quote attributed to him in the SI article.

You'll have to read the entire article because I wouldn't want to be accused of taking something out of context.

But I've got to pass along this one quote to all of you who don't own a football phone.

Jenkins, reportedly 39 years old, is quoted as saying, "Hey, Hoss, back in Pampa [Texas], my crowd was a bunch of rowdies in a place where cracking each other over the head with bottles wasn't assault and battery, it was entertainment." He adds, "Hey, Hoss, I could have been a wild-bull rider ... or the biggest hoodlum in Texas."

Can you imagine that? Is that any way to promote life in the Panhandle? Makes me wonder what crowd he hung around with - anyone out there know?

It's obvious Jenkins is more interested in self promotion. I'm not from around here, so I'll leave the judging up to you.

But I bet some of you might want to run-and-shoot him right out of town if he dares show his face.

It's again time to prognosticate the football fortunes of the Harvesters, currently ranked No. 36 in Class 4A by the Harris Rating System. Harris favors Pampa by two points.

I'll go out on a limb and pick the Harvesters by a touchdown, whether or not they complete a forward pass.

PHS vs. Hereford 'should be barn burner'

By L.D. STRATE
Sports Editor

It doesn't take much of a football expert to guess that the winner of the Pampa-Hereford clash Friday night will also be District 1-4A champion when the season ends.

Both teams enter the district opener at Hereford with 4-1 non-district records. The four other teams in the district have a combined record of 6-13 in non-district play.

"Hereford was the preseason favorite and they are the toughest team in the district right now. Unfortunately we have to play them the first district game and at their place," said Pampa High head coach Dennis Cavalier. "However, we knew that before the season started, so we best be ready for them."

The situation is much the same as a year ago when Pampa and Hereford were favored to represent the district in the playoffs. When the two teams met they fought to a 24-24 tie, but the Whitefaces had eight more first downs to advance into the playoffs as the No. 1 seed. Pampa went into the playoffs as the No. 2 seed and lost to Snyder in the bi-district round.

Hereford head coach Danny Haney wouldn't be surprised to see another close encounter between the two teams.

"It should be a barn burner. The game shapes up to be just about like it was last year. Pampa is as good as I've seen them. They've got two great backs (Sammy Laury and Zach Thomas) and a great offensive line to go with them. Their defense is also very impressive," Haney said.

Both Pampa and Hereford suffered setbacks last week, the Harvesters losing to Gainesville, 35-21, while the Whitefaces fell to Levelland, 17-7, ending four-game winning streaks for both teams.

Pampa had trailed Gainesville, 21-0, in the first quarter, but bounced back to tie the score at 21-all in the fourth quarter. A pair of Harvester fumbles in the final minutes led to Gainesville scores.

"We scouted that game and you had to be impressed with the way Pampa came back after struggling early," Haney said. "We're going to have to stop that running attack and keep them from making long drives on us."

Pampa running back Zach Thomas (32) makes a sizeable gain against Lubbock Dunbar defenders in a game earlier this season. Blocking for Thomas are Phil Sexton (90) and Garrett Scribner (67). The Harvesters play Hereford High Friday night at Hereford.

Cavalier was pleased with the way the Harvesters rallied to tie the score in the final quarter.

"We just shouldn't have dug ourselves a hole so early in the game, but we all pulled together and got back into the game," Cavalier said. "It was a gallant effort by our players against a quality football team."

Laury and Thomas combined to help Pampa's offense back into the fray. Laury rushed for 159 yards and tallied a TD while Thomas picked up 76 yards on the ground while scoring a pair of TDs.

Defensively, Thomas at middle linebacker and tackle Kurt West were the comeback leaders. Thomas had five solo and 10 assisted tackles to go with a quarterback sack. West was in on 11 tackles.

Pampa should have the edge against Hereford since the Harvesters defeated Levelland by the same score the Whitefaces lost to them by. The Harris Rating System agrees, listing Pampa as a slight two-point favorite.

Other Pampa wins in pre-district came against Amarillo High, 23-21; Dodge City, Kan., 35-20 and Lubbock Dunbar, 21-14. Hereford has defeated Tascosa, 20-7; Frenship, 15-14; Palo Duro, 8-7 and Lubbock Coronado, 19-7.

Hereford's multiple-I offense evolves around senior tailback Leo Brown, who has rushed for 755 yards in five games. He's listed as the No. 2 rushing leader in Class 4A.

"Running the ball has been our strongpoint and we're going to have to keep offensive possession as much as possible if we're going to have a chance against Pampa," added Haney.

The Whitefaces have some massive linemen to open holes for the 190-pound Brown. Their frontline is manned by 275-pound T.J. Samples and 255-pound Stephen Blea. On the other side of the ball, 235-pound Monroe Timberlake and 200-pound Mark Kreighshauer are the defensive standouts.

"I imagine 75 to 80 percent of their offense is centered around Brown, but they do have an excellent passing game, especially in the big games," Cavalier pointed out. "This year is no exception. Their size is scary. It's going to be hard to match up with them. They have a great defensive team and they take pride in it. They know we're a run-oriented team and I'm sure they're going to cram it up in the middle."

Kickoff is at 7:30 p.m. Friday at Hereford.

Pirates' Van Slyke and 'killer B's' sting Braves

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

PITTSBURGH (AP) - In only one swing, Andy Van Slyke got rid of his butterflies and got the Killer B's buzzing.

Van Slyke homered in the first inning Wednesday night and Bobby Bonilla and Barry Bonds also swung into action as the Pittsburgh Pirates beat Atlanta 5-1 in Game 1 of the playoffs.

What a contrast to last October, when the middle of Pittsburgh's order was mired in a horrible slump against Cincinnati. In those six games, Van Slyke, Bonds and Bonilla were just 12-for-63 (.190) with a total of five RBIs.

"We did talk before the game about it," Bonilla said of a meeting with the Pirates' other two top hitters. "We talked about being more patient."

"Last year, we tried to do so much that we did nada," he said. "Last year it seems like we would see one or two pitches and be out of there. Tonight, we would see three, four, five pitches and then do something."

Van Slyke got it going by homering on a 3-2 pitch from 20-game winner Tom Glavine. Bonilla then walked and Bonds reached when his hard-grounder skipped past sure-handed shortstop Rafael Belliard for an error.

"I was pumped after Andy hit his homer," Bonilla said. "It was nice to get ahead in a game of his magnitude. It was a really big at-bat for Andy off a tough lefty."

In the third inning, Van Slyke lined an RBI double, Bonilla singled him home and Bonds walked. Bonilla later added another single and Bonds walked again.

"Andy got us off on the right foot," Pirates manager Jim Leyland said. "Barry and Bobby did the job."

"On a few pitches, it looked like they were trying to show the whole world how far they could hit the ball. On a few swings, Barry looked like he was trying to hit the ball off the earth. But they definitely took their time and waited for the good pitches," he said.

For Bonilla and Bonds, each coming off their second straight 100-RBI season, it was a good and fresh start. Bonds managed only three singles in 18 at-bats in last year's playoffs and Bonilla was 4-for-21. Each drove in only one run.

"Barry and Bobby are definitely focused in a different way this year,"

Van Slyke said. "I'm not saying they're more focused, but they've said a lot of things to me. We've talked a little bit."

"We realize that the ballclub is going to get a majority of runs out of us three. We realize that the ballclub depends on us. Any club that is in the postseason at this point is really depending on 3-4-5."

Meanwhile, most everyone has been able to depend on Bonds, Bonilla and Van Slyke to stir it up.

There was that confrontation between Bonds and Leyland in spring training. There were the constant reminders from Bonilla that he might become a free agent and go somewhere else next season.

Rangers' Ryan to return

ARLINGTON (AP) - Strikeout king Nolan Ryan will be back for the 1992 season, the Texas Rangers announced Wednesday.

The announcement was only a formality, as Ryan signed a new contract with Texas on July 18 that included contract options for both the 1992 and 1993 seasons. It also included a 10-year personal services contract upon his retirement as an active player.

The Rangers had until eight days after the regular season to exercise the 1992 option.

General Manager Tom Grieve said Ryan will be in the team's starting rotation. "He is an outstanding credit to our organization and proved once again in 1991 that he is an incredible athlete," he said.

Blue Jays even series with 5-2 victory over Twins

By MIKE NADEL
AP Sports Writer

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) - By the seventh inning, the screaming had stopped and the streaming for the exits had begun. The Metrodome mystique disappeared, even before the crowd disappeared through the revolving doors.

Blue Jays' Kelly Gruber breaks his bat while driving in two runs in the third inning of the ALCS Game 2.

"They're a good crowd here," Kelly Gruber said after his two-run single and Juan Guzman's pitching led the Toronto Blue Jays to a 5-2 victory over the Minnesota Twins Wednesday and evened the best-of-7 AL playoffs at one game apiece.

"But I say that now. With two outs, they all started leaving."

The Twins went into the playoffs feeling invincible at home. And why not? They had won six successive postseason games at the Metrodome - including four in the 1987 World Series - and then made it seven straight in Game 1 of this series.

The last time the Twins had lost a postseason home game was in 1970, when they played at Metropolitan Stadium. That the Blue Jays snapped their streak was appropriate; Toronto entered the playoffs with a 10-2 record here the last two seasons.

Now the Twins go to Toronto knowing that they must win at least one of three games at the SkyDome if they are to return home for Game 6. The Blue Jays will take the dome-field advantage into Friday night, when Jimmy Key (16-12) opposes Scott Erickson (20-8) in Game 3.

"Hopefully, we won't have to come back," Gruber said. "If we do have to, we hope to keep the crowd silent."

That posed little problem Wednesday. Gruber's two-out, broken-bat single gave Toronto a 3-0 lead and quieted the fans for most of the game. And when the Blue Jays scored twice in the seventh, the exodus began.

"We feed off the fans," Minnesota's Kirby Puckett said. "But if they don't cheer for us when we're not doing well, we can't complain."

The Twins very easily could have gone into Toronto down 0-2. They took a 5-0 lead Tuesday before hanging on for a 5-4 win.

"We'd have liked to have been up 2-0, but we'll take 1-1," Gruber said.

The Blue Jays won Wednesday the same way Minnesota won Tuesday. They took the lead, got good starting pitching, ran the bases aggressively and used nearly flawless relief pitching to slam the door.

Guzman allowed four hits and two runs in 5 2-3 innings. He was in trouble several times but almost always wriggled out of it.

After Toronto manager Cito Gaston had seen enough - the methodical, sometimes-wild rookie threw 102 pitches - he handed the ball to closer-turned-setup-star Tom Henke.

Henke, who succeeded in 32 of 35 save situations before missing 2 1/2 weeks in September with shoulder tendonitis, entered in the sixth inning with two on, two out and hot-hitting Shane Mack at the plate.

The overanxious Mack swung at Henke's first pitch and chopped one right back to the mound. Henke followed by striking out two batters in a perfect seventh.

"We swung at a bad first pitch, a forkball in the dirt," Twins manager Tom Kelly said.

Then it was Duane Ward's turn. Ward, who had been Henke's setup man until the injury pushed him into the closer's role, blew only two of 25 save opportunities this season.

He got the last six outs, four on strikeouts, in a typically dominating performance. Ward The Closer is no different from Ward The Setup Man.

"Every time I go out on the mound I have the same mentality," he said. "Kick some rear end."

Pitching was only part of Toronto's story. The Blue Jays figured to have trouble scoring against Minnesota's Big Three of Jack Morris, Kevin Tapani and Erickson. But they've already put nine runs on the board in the games started by Morris and Tapani.

They had Tapani scrambling early Wednesday, collecting seven hits in the first three innings.

"We need the good pitching. That's the key to our success," Gruber said. "If they keep us in the game, we'll score some runs."

The Blue Jays almost always score if their first two batters, Devon

White and Roberto Alomar, get on base. In Game 2, they were a combined 4-for-7, with four runs, a walk, a sacrifice and two stolen bases.

White was on when Carter's two-strike single made it 1-0 in the first - "the only pitch I wish I could have back," Tapani said. Both were on for Gruber's hit. And both were on again in the seventh when the Jays iced it against reliever Steve Bedrosian.

"That's what we've talked about for a week, that you have to keep Devon and Roberto off the bases," Kelly said. "Obviously, we didn't do a good job. We fall behind Devon 2-0 the first time up and he hits a line drive, steals second and takes third on Roberto's bunt. He scores. It was textbook."

Neither Tapani nor Gruber were surprised that the series is tied.

"I think this is where we expected to be," said Tapani, who allowed eight hits and four runs in 6 1-3 innings. "I don't think anybody expected it to be a four-game series."

Said Gruber: "They have a good club. But they're human. They're not machines. Not even in this place. They are playing a pretty good club, too. There are teams that are better than them sometimes. Even in here."

It's cowboy hats, boots, chaps in U.S.-Canada Rodeo Showdown

PHOENIX (AP) — Rodeo, one of America's oldest sports, is finally entering the modern age as pinstripe suits and penny loafers invade a sport dominated by boots and chaps.

A cable television contract has brought the cowboy out of the arena and into living room. Sponsors, seeing the opening, have poured more money into the sport, allowing the best cowboys to take home larger paychecks.

"That's a big change," said Bruce Ford, five-time world champion bareback rider who has earned more than $1 million in his 20-year career.

"And then there's our board of directors. Once it was just a bunch of cowboys that got together and said they weren't getting enough money. Now there are business people on the board and they are trying to run rodeo like a business."

Ford will compete in a high-stakes Rodeo Showdown in nearby Scottsdale starting today. Usually cowboys compete only on the individual level, but this novel event pits the top five cowboys from the United States against the top five from Canada, the other premier rodeo country.

"I think that's our future," Ford said. "We got to be just like golf. We have to have one type of tour and then we have to have a pro tour."

The showdown has more than $200,000 in payoffs, an indication of how big money is being injected into the sport.

Prize money for Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association events has increased from $9.9 million to $18.1 million per season in the last 10 years and from $150,000 in the last 20. Since 1988, prize money has grown annually by $1 million and may reach $19 million this year, according to the PRCA.

The national finals in Las Vegas this December will have $2.6 million in total prizes, as opposed to $150,000 in 1970.

Rodeo has come a long way since Independence Day in 1869 when a cowboy was awarded a suit for a prize at the first organized rodeo. The sport was born shortly after the Civil War when cowboys would show off their skills of horsemanship to each other during breaks in the great cattle drives from Texas to markets in Kansas City, Mo.

The recent metamorphosis, however, can be mostly attributed to one man — Lewis A. Cryer, the commissioner of the PRCA.

Cryer, who served for 10 years in intercollegiate athletics for what is now known as the Big West Conference, said television is the key.

"There is no question television has helped out," Cryer said from PCRA headquarters in Colorado Springs, Colo. "We put together a package with ESPN because people today go and see what they see on television. If rodeo was not on television, then it wouldn't be thought of as a sport.

"We have to get 10 to 12 rodeos on television this year and create a mass market. People need to know who the cowboys are. What we have done with our package is to try to focus on the personality, try to get them to understand the man under the hat."

Cryer said a 21-year-old named Ty Murray may be rodeo's first bonafide superstar.

The cowboy from Stephenville, Texas, is the PCRA money leader this year with $144,075. Last year, Murray became the youngest all-around champion in the history of PCRA, banking $213,772.

Murray is entered in the Rodeo Showdown in Scottsdale, and he's enthusiastic about the new format.

"It's something the fans can really relate to," Murray said of the event. "I think when you create something like Team USA and combine it with the excitement of bull-riding, you got a pretty good package."

New sponsors are beginning to appear, and cities and towns are realizing how much business a rodeo can bring.

"It's a return to heritage" Cryer said. "The cowboy still has some magic about him. ... When the rodeo comes to a particular town, that becomes a big deal. There's a festival atmosphere and the whole community gets involved."

Wheeler keeps on rolling

49ers: Montana surgery went 'fine'

SANTA CLARA, Calif. (AP) — Joe Montana, who has mastered the last-second comeback in a football game, plans the same kind of finish to his football career.

Montana, 35, went into what has been called possibly career-ending surgery Wednesday night with the same attitude he takes into a two-minute drill trailing by six points.

"He was very upbeat. ... His whole approach was, 'If I'm going to do this, I'm going to get it done, and I'm going to get back as quickly and strongly as I can.'" 49ers president Carmen Policy said at a news conference Wednesday.

Montana, the three-time Super Bowl MVP who has been sidelined since training camp by a torn tendon in his right elbow, underwent a 1 1/2-hour operation that is expected to give him the best chance at coming back next year at 100 percent.

The procedure went "fine" and Montana was "fine" after the procedure, according to 49ers spokesperson Jerry Walker.

Forty-niners physician Dr.

Michael Dillingham headed a team of three surgeons who performed the operation at Stanford University Medical Center. Dr. Gary Fanton and Dr. Warren King also participated.

Montana is expected to be released from the hospital by this afternoon.

"The overall feeling (on the 49ers) is basically seems to be that as a result of the surgery Joe will not be able to return this season," Policy said earlier Wednesday. "... The prognosis at this point, and that is a very qualified prognosis because the surgery has not been conducted yet, is that Joe should be able to be back in full stride, maybe even stronger, next season than he was when he reported to training camp."

San Francisco coach George Seifert said he expected Montana to be back for 1992.

"When he went on (injured reserve), I expected him to play (again in 1991). We were wrong," Seifert said. "It was more serious than we first expected. (But) my understanding and expectation is that he will be back. At least the odds are in favor of that."

After two days of criss-crossing the country hoping to find an alternative, Montana decided that surgery was his best option to recover from the elbow pain that has dogged him all season.

"Joe personally visited at least two other physicians, besides MRIs, where he was physically examined, and it was Joe's decision, after receiving Dr. Dillingham's and his team's input as well as the other physicians he visited, that it was no longer necessary for him to go elsewhere," said Policy.

The surgery, described as having an 80 percent rate of success, was similar to the operation that ended the career of former Pittsburgh Steelers quarterback Terry Bradshaw. He was 35 at the time, also.

Montana, who has twice previously had surgery on his elbow, aggravated his injury Saturday during a practice session in which he was attempting 30- to 35 yard passes.

Miami favored over Nittany Lions; Texas picked to defeat Oklahoma

By RICK WARNER
AP Football Writer

The last time Penn State played Miami, it was for the national championship in the 1987 Fiesta Bowl. Saturday's rematch at the Orange Bowl won't determine who's No. 1, but it will have a major impact on the title picture.

Miami is 4-0 and ranked No. 2, while Penn State is 5-1 and No. 9.

If the Hurricanes win, they should remain undefeated until their Nov. 16 showdown with top-ranked Florida State. A loss won't eliminate the Hurricanes from the championship chase, but it would make them a longshot to win their fourth title since 1983.

If Penn State loses, it would probably ruin any title hopes for the Nittany Lions. No team has ever won the national championship with two losses, and there's no reason to believe the trend won't continue this season.

The last two Penn State-Miami games have featured an upset of the nation's No. 1 team.

In the 1987 Fiesta Bowl, No. 2 Penn State intercepted Heisman Trophy winner Vinny Testaverde five times and beat No. 1 Miami 14-10. In 1981, Jim Kelly led unranked Miami to a 17-14 victory over No. 1 Penn State.

Miami enters this year's game as a 10-point favorite.

The Hurricanes have routed their first four opponents, while the Nittany Lions have struggled since beating Cincinnati 81-0 in their second game.

In the last four weeks, Penn State has lost to Southern Cal, defeated BYU and played poorly in victories over Boston College and Temple.

One of Penn State's problems is penalties. The Lions have been penalized 50 times for 430 yards in six games, close to their total for all last season.

"We're shooting ourselves in the foot every week," said Penn State linebacker Mark D'Onofrio. "We practice well, but we seem to be putting too much pressure on ourselves."

Miami has yet to be tested. The Hurricanes are averaging 36 points and 510 yards per game while holding the opposition to 6.5 points and 281 yards.

Miami also has won 40 straight games at the Orange Bowl, the second-longest home winning streak in NCAA history. Penn State will be victim No. 41. ... MIAMI 31-14. Virginia Tech (plus 27 1/2) vs. No. 1 Florida St. at Orlando

Razorbacks to hone in on Houston's Klingler

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — Arkansas will have to keep Houston quarterback David Klingler in the cross-hairs if the Razorbacks want a win Saturday, coach Jack Crowe says.

Last year, Klingler threw seven touchdown passes and the Cougars rolled up a record 613 yards in a 62-28 thrashing of Arkansas.

"What we've seen of this Houston team the past two years, we have to anticipate the only way to be in the game is move the ball, which is something we haven't done," he said during a telephone hookup on Wednesday. "You're not going to shut him (Klingler) down. We have to control him and move the ball."

"The biggest thing for us is to establish a pass rush and not let Klingler hold the ball on us and pick us apart," he said. "The only time we are safe is when their offense is on the bench."

Since last year's defeat, Arkansas has changed its defense to contend with one-back attacks. On occasion this season, Crowe said, the Razorbacks paid the price for that decision.

Houston coach John Jenkins was not available for the telephone hookup.

Asked to explain the changes, Crowe said: "Instead of covering spaces and breaking on the ball, we've actually gone to matching up with receivers."

Simply put, he said, it is a matter of how well the matchups work. He says it is still a matter of a linebacker covering a punt returner — his description of Houston's mighty-mite receivers — "with a lot of green (playing field to cover), and that's tough."

Thomas allegations move sexual harassment victims to activism

By LESLIE DREYFOUS
AP National Writer

Anita Hill is not alone. Working women around the country have joined her, crossing beyond confusion and fear about sexual harassment to share experiences of their own.

"We've had a real outpouring of calls," said Barbara Otto of 9 to 5, the National Association of Working Women. "It's like they're coming out of the closet to tell their dirty secret. They're saying: 'Enough!'"

But it can be tricky. In the minds of many — men and women alike — sexual harassment remains vaguely defined. The bounds of acceptable workplace behavior often seem murky, and victims unsure when they've been crossed.

This confusion was underscored when Hill's allegations against Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas were made public on the eve of his confirmation vote, and because the Judiciary Committee was accused of giving them short shrift.

"Over the last 10 years, men and women have come to agree that things like grabbing and touching constitute sexual harassment," said James Gruber, a University of Michigan sociologist and expert on workplace harassment. "But men still don't see the gravity of a whole other range of behavior."

Innuendo, off-color remarks and spreading rumors count, too.

The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission defines sexual harassment as any sexual advance, request for sexual favor, sexual remark or conduct that affects job or promotion decisions, interferes with work performance or creates a hostile, offensive or intimidating atmosphere.

That last bit is significant. The

Kathy Willets says 'pimp' statement forced by police

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — A former nude dancer who claims she's a nymphomaniac, not a prostitute, said Wednesday that police coerced her into identifying her sheriff's deputy husband as her pimp.

Kathy Willets responded to a police report made public this week of her statements soon after her arrest. In it, she was quoted as saying her husband, Jeffrey, was abusive and forced her to have sex for money.

"There is absolutely no truth to 90 percent of the statements," Mrs. Willets said at a news conference. "Jeff has never abused me, hit me."

Willets was suspended from the Broward County sheriff's office after the couple's arrest in July. Both face prostitution and other charges at a trial scheduled to begin Oct. 30.

"(Deputies) harassed me into what to say," she said, flanked by her husband and defense attorney Ellis Rubin. "They told me to give them anything and anything at all on Jeff. They wanted Jeff, is what they said, 'or we will take your daughter and put you into jail.'"

Al Gordon, a sheriff's department spokesman, called Mrs. Willets' accusation ludicrous. He wouldn't comment further.

Rubin has claimed Mrs. Willets, 33, suffered nymphomania, or an insatiable appetite for sex, after treatment with the antidepressant drug Prozac. She turned to other men because her 41-year-old husband often suffered impotency, the lawyer said.

The defense claims she acted as a sexual surrogate, not a prostitute, for men who answered her newspaper ad offering the company of a "beautiful young frosted blonde." Any money exchanged were gifts, according to Rubin.

The case has drawn additional attention because Mrs. Willets clients included many prominent local officials. Vice Mayor Doug Danziger, a staunch anti-prostitution crusader, resigned after allegations surfaced that he paid her for sex.

Attorneys for more than 50 "John Does," men listed in Mrs. Willets' appointment book, have so far successfully blocked the release of their names.

In the police statement made public Tuesday, Mrs. Willets said she wasn't "the kind of woman that sleeps around," but was forced to have sex with as many as eight men a day, raising about $2,000.

Mrs. Willets is charged with prostitution and illegally taping phone conversations. Her husband is accused of being her pimp, illegally taping phone conversations and videotaping at least one of her sexual encounters from a bedroom closet.

Rubin claimed the police report statements were false and made under duress. He also said he will try to get the trial moved from Fort Lauderdale because of intense local publicity.

vast majority of victims decline to report clear-cut cases of being touched or threatened with a demotion. Even fewer are likely to stand up against subtler but no less inappropriate workplace behavior.

A 1987 study of federal government employees showed that 42 percent of women and 14 percent of men said they'd experienced some form of unwanted and unwanted sexual attention. But only 15 percent of women and 7 percent of men said they'd reported their allegations to a boss or other officials.

Many figure it's part of the game. "They think, well, this is life," said Lynn Hecht Schafran, an attorney with the NOW Legal Defense and Education fund. "You just have to put up with people patting you on the fanny, making comments about your body or having pornography in the workplace."

But Hill's allegations, and accusations that the Judiciary Committee failed properly to investigate them, have brought to a boil anger about sexual harassment — and the silence that reinforces it.

"Women want to do something," said research director Nancy Kreiter of Women Employed, a Chicago advocacy group that recently has been swamped with calls. "So many have experienced this but didn't come forward, often because they didn't know the law."

So the questions come. "The phones have been ringing for the last couple of days, specifically on this issue," said Gloria Hole, a senior compliance officer with Rhode Island's Human Rights Commission, where inquiries have jumped from several to more than a dozen a day.

In North Dakota, about seven calls a day have been coming in at the EEOC's local office, where the average usually is about seven a month.

Potential victims want to know their rights, said director Jack

Lynch. But few want to identify their employer, and fewer still have filed complaints.

"Even if they recognize themselves as victims of sexual harassment, many perceive that bringing it out into the open will only backfire on them," Gruber said from Dearborn, Mich.

In this way, sexual harassment and rape cases are very much alike.

"The victim goes on trial," said Kathleen Neville, who brought charges against a Buffalo, N.Y., television station. "I thought I was viewed as a professional. But the minute I raised a complaint about sexual harassment it was suddenly like everything I had done, every personal interaction, even the fact that I was 27 and single, was called into question."

That's daunting, particularly for women already struggling to make it in male-dominated offices. Many are loath to risk their reputation, status, workplace friendships, or perhaps, their jobs.

Activists said victims may find it easier to come forward and prosecute once they've realized the law is clearly defined. Under a 1986 Supreme Court decision, sexual harassment was ruled a form of discrimination for which an employer may be liable.
