Landowners win delay in territorial dispute

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

MIAMI — Landowners along the Canadian River in Roberts and Hutchinson counties successfully fended off an effort by the state of Texas to take their dispute over river boundaries to trial within 30 days.

Instead, 31st District Court Judge M. Kent Sims ruled the case will go to trial Dec. 7, giving the landowners another eight months to prepare their case.

The landowners are suing the state over surveys that would take back land along the river bank they claim they own.

At issue is whether or not the damming of the Canadian River, which severely reduced flow, also changed the boundaries since the river now takes up a considerably smaller area.

The state, supported by the Texas Panhandle Recreationalist Association, which failed to achieve intervenor status in the case, is arguing the boundaries of the river have not changed, regardless of the actual amount of flow in the river.

Landowners say their land should go to the edge of the riverbed. Since damming of the river has left it little more than a trickle in places, that essentially cuts off public access to the river beds for enjoying nature, hunting or riding recreational vehicles.

Attorney Jody Sheets, representing the landowners, wrangled with Jonathan Steinberg, assistant attorney general, who insisted the plaintiffs are stalling while the state wants to go to trial and settle the matter.

Steinberg stated, "The bottom line is this is a boundary line dispute and they offer no boundary. That makes it impossible to prepare a defense. The (plaintiffs') petition should be so certain and specific the court can rule on it."

"This situation is backward in the sense that the state's position is basically in place," Sheets said. "We do not intend to go to trial without sufficient surveying information. That would not only be difficult, but suicidal."

For the landowners to do a survey similar to the state's will cost between $200,000 and $300,000 and "it takes time to get that kind of money together."

That drew a quick response from Steinberg, who said, "We filed these (particular documents) over a year ago. We keep hearing this takes time and money and they have a hard time raising money. Two of the plaintiffs are T. Boone Pickens and the Catharine Whittenburg Trust. I have trouble believing Pickens is having trouble raising money."

The Recreationalist Association is asking the state to establish the original boundaries of the riverbed prior to damming and turn over management to the Lake Meredith National Recreation Area, Texas Parks and Wildlife Department or simply leave it as a public riverbed with "clear, enforceable boundaries."

Sheets told Sims, "We have not tried to hide the ball, but this is an odd case in which the defendant has the jump on the plaintiff."

Warlick Thomas, attorney for the Canadian River Municipal Water Authority, sole intervenor in the case, asked the judge to hold the landowners to the eight-month time frame and not grant any more continuances.

"We would urge the court to set some sort of deadline," he said. "If (the landowners' survey) has not been done, we need to come back in here and have them explain why."

He, along with Sheets, complained the landowners have unnecessarily drug out the case.

In a photograph taken in January 1990, Roger Holland, president of the Texas Panhandle Recreationalist Association, places his hand on a fence, which he claims was illegally put up on public domain land in Hutchinson County. The TPRA claims the land behind Holland should be opened for public access because it was at one time the Canadian River.

Hauck incompetent for trial

By BETH MILLER
Staff Writer

A 21-year-old McLean man, for the second time in less than a year, has been found incompetent at present to stand trial on charges of aggravated sexual assault and attempted murder.

David Kane Hauck has been in Gray County Jail, except for time he spent in psychiatric care, since his arrest in June 1990.

On May 21, 1991, a Gray County jury ruled that Hauck was "presently incompetent" to stand trial, but would in the foreseeable future attain competency to stand trial. Following that hearing, Hauck was sent to a state hospital in Vernon for psychiatric treatment.

He also spent a month in late 1991 at Cedar Creek Hospital in Amarillo undergoing testing and treatment for what Dr. Judy Powell, a psychiatrist, testified Monday was "chronic undifferentiated schizophrenia."

"There is no doubt in my mind this young man suffers from schizophrenia," Powell said.

The doctor also said Hauck is in need of aggressive long-term treatment and care of six to 18 months, adding that any type of schizophrenia is treatable.

A Gray County jury was chosen and impaneled Monday for the competency hearing with Senior District Judge Grainger McIlhenny presiding.

The jury heard evidence and deliberated less than an hour before returning with the incompetency verdict. The jury also found there is a substantial probability that Hauck will attain competency to stand trial "within the foreseeable future." Hauck will be sent to a psychiatric facility for continuing treatment.

District Attorney John Mann in closing arguments said that if Hauck does attain competency, he will be tried on the two charges.

Mann told jurors Monday the hearing was necessary to "make sure the state doesn't put anyone to trial who is not competent."

In closing arguments, Mann agreed with defense attorney Qlo Crum that the only evidence presented was consistent with Hauck not being competent at this time.

Powell testified that during the one-month stay at the Amarillo facility Hauck gave "contradictory reports and indications of what happened" the night of the assault. It was her opinion Hauck was not able to understand proceedings against him or to help his attorney in his behalf.

"He felt like some voice was in him and causing him to do things," Powell said of Hauck. She added, "Everything we had confirmed psychiatric illness."

The doctor also said it was her opinion that, if confronted in a trial setting with the allegations against him, Hauck might attempt suicide or have a compulsion to harm himself.

Concerning the likelihood of complete recovery from the diagnosed chronic undifferentiated schizophrenia, Powell said, "There is some hope, but it is not likely."

In closing arguments, Crum said, "I think the only evidence in front of you is my client does not have the present capability to assist me in his defense."

Mann told the jury, "The prosecutor's job is not just to get convictions, but to see that justice is done. I think that based on the evidence by Dr. (Jerome) Kleinpeter and Dr. Powell, he is presently incompetent by that standard."

However, Mann urged the jury to find that Hauck would likely be able to stand trial in the future.

"The illness is treatable," Mann said. "With treatment he'll probably be able to stand trial."

Supreme Court ruling limits 'sting' operations

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Supreme Court ruling that limits some government "sting" operations will protect the innocent without seriously hampering undercover law enforcement work, several legal scholars say.

Federal officials vowed the government will not abandon such tactics in its campaign against child pornography and other crimes.

The ruling "will not dampen our aggressive pursuit of those who would abuse and exploit children," said U.S. Postal Inspector Daniel L. Mihalko. "These stings do not target unsuspecting individuals. Child pornographers know what they're ordering."

By a 5-4 vote Monday, the justices ruled that Nebraska farmer Keith Jacobson had been entrapped by postal agents who coaxed him for more than two years to buy mail-order child pornography.

Jacobson lacked a predisposition to commit a crime and purchased the "kiddie porn" only after prolonged solicitation by the government, the court said.

The court's four dissenters said the decision is a major departure that could hobble investigators. But the majority on the court and several scholars disagreed.

"There are good guidelines here that will protect some people who need protection," said Paul Marcus, a law professor at the College of William & Mary. "You can't pursue someone so relentlessly."

The decision will not affect such undercover operations as Abscam, which ensnared members of Congress who accepted bribes, or the investigation that resulted in the drug conviction of former District of Columbia Mayor Marion Barry, he said.

William Greenhalgh, a law professor at Georgetown University, said, "If the Justice Department is educable, it may well send out a memo to all agencies that they'll have to be a lot more careful."

"The decision will not affect the government's sting operations in the areas of narcotics trafficking and similar crimes — sting operations that have long been upheld by the courts," said Assistant Attorney General Robert S. Mueller III.

Jacobson, 61, of Newman Grove, Neb., was targeted by the government when his name showed up on a pornography bookstore's mailing list.

He was convicted of receiving child pornography he ordered through the mail from government agents posing as distributors of the material.

Jacobson was sentenced to two years probation and 250 hours of community service. He lost his job as a school bus driver the morning after he was charged, and said he was "humiliated and depressed" for months.

"Well, I'm overjoyed," Jacobson said Monday. "It's been almost a five-year ordeal. It's something I've learned to live with."

Jacobson's lawyer, George L. Moyer, said, "No matter how columnists and pundits try to label the Supreme Court of the United States, the average man can still go there and be heard and receive some protection from the over-enthusiastic exercise of government power."

Added University of Michigan law professor Yale Kamisar, "It's been a long time since a defendant won an entrapment case in the Supreme Court."

The government said sting operations are vital to its attack on the clandestine "kiddie porn" industry and the sexual exploitation of children. Without undercover work aimed at recipients, officials say, distributors of the material can easily escape detection and prosecution.

Justice Department guidelines forbid entrapment, which is described as "the inducement or encouragement of an individual to engage in illegal activity in which he would not otherwise engage."

In other action, the court:

- Agreed to decide in a case from New Jersey whether newspapers and other businesses can treat paying customers as depreciable assets worth millions in tax write-offs.
- Said it will decide in a District of Columbia case whether states may require all employers with health plans for active employees to provide the same benefits to employees eligible for workers' compensation.
- Let stand a ruling in a Virginia case that limits the power of federal prosecutors to seek longer prison terms for some defendants sentenced after plea bargains.

New York pivotal to Clinton's march

NEW YORK (AP) — New York, Wisconsin and Kansas voters today decided whether to speed Bill Clinton's march to the Democratic presidential nomination or stall it under a cloud of questions about his character.

The Republican side held far less drama: President Bush was picking up 100 New York delegates by default but faced challenger Patrick Buchanan in Wisconsin, Minnesota and Kansas. Bush was the big favorite everywhere.

New York was the key in a topsy-turvy Democratic race between the Arkansas governor and former California Gov. Jerry Brown. The candidates concentrated intently on New York, and both got down-and-dirty in a city known for pointed-elbow politics.

Clinton worried about low turnout in yet another contest in which most voters were expected to stay home because of little enthusiasm for their choices. City election officials in New York said early morning turnout was fairly light but forecast an upturn for later in the day.

A number of voters arriving at the polls just after their 6 a.m. opening said they would go for former Sen. Paul Tsongas of Massachusetts, who has dropped out of the race but is gauging whether to re-enter.

From the sidelines, Tsongas has encouraged New York supporters who want him back in the fray, and late polls showed his support creeping into the mid-teens and beginning to draw from Clinton as well as Brown.

Tsongas said he would announce Wednesday whether he would revive his bid. Aides said only a Clinton loss in New York would make that a possibility. Tsongas voters told reporters they were unenthused with both Clinton and Brown.

"I've been hoping for an open convention, and I hope this will throw it open," said Sandra Schecter, 50, who works in the publishing industry.

Fujimori's opposition tries to mobilize

By ALEX EMERY
 Associated Press Writer

LIMA, Peru (AP) - Lawmakers struggled today to reverse President Alberto Fujimori's power grab but there was little protest from ordinary people, who are burdened by poverty and frustrated by ineffective government.

The legislators were locked out of congress by soldiers after Fujimori announced late Sunday that he was dissolving the body. In Washington, the Organization of American States expressed outrage.

But Fujimori did not look to be budging. He had the full support of the military in suspending the constitution, censoring the media and detaining politicians and journalists.

On Monday, Fujimori named a new prime minister and shuffled three other of the 14 Cabinet posts to create an "emergency government."

"It's necessary that we make it clear that this is not a coup d'etat. It's a change in direction," Fujimori said late Monday night.

Fujimori, a political outsider elected in July 1990, said he acted to give himself a freer hand to stimulate the economy, battle drug traffickers and defeat the Shining Path, the hemisphere's most violent guerrilla movement.

His new prime minister, Oscar de la Puente, said he would fire all judges deemed corrupt or biased. The judiciary has been accused of freeing accused guerrillas on technical grounds.

Shining Path guerrillas on Monday shot to death a policeman, his son and chauffeur in Lima.

Nearly 25,000 people have died in political violence since the Maoist-inspired movement took up arms in 1980.

In the past year it has come down from the mountains to make inroads in Lima, home to a third of the country's 22 million people.

The rebel group has long sought to provoke a military coup in hopes of establishing itself as the only viable alternative to a repressive regime.

Even before Sunday's move, Fujimori had placed much of the country under state of emergency regulations that gave the military great leeway in combatting the rebels.

The United States on Monday called Fujimori's action "regrettable" and suspended the $45 million of the $237 million in 1991 military and economic aid to Peru that had yet to be disbursed.

Organization of American States members called for an emergency meeting of the hemisphere's foreign ministers to deal with the situation.

"Fujimori is simply an instrument for the armed forces to assume power," said Rafael Caldera, Venezuela's president from 1969-74.

At least 80 people were killed in a failed February coup by members of Venezuela's armed forces, and many Latin American leaders fear democracy's gains in the region could swiftly be erased by resurgent militaries.

Fujimori has forged a close alliance with his country's military, which last ruled in Peru from 1968-80.

Scores of congressmen and journalists were placed under house arrest. U.S. diplomats said former President Alan Garcia - Fujimori's principal opponent - was under arrest, but other sources said he had gone into hiding.

Peruvian newspapers and broadcasters were occupied by troops and allowed to give only the government's version of events.

The country's leading news-magazine, Caretas, was among two magazines and a radio station closed by the government, and a left-leaning newspaper was forced by military censors to publish a half-blank front page.

Early voting in primary runoffs under way

Early voting in next Tuesday's primary runoff races in Gray County is under way and will continue through Friday, said Gray County Clerk Wanda Carter.

No excuse needs to be given for registered voters who want to cast ballots early.

The clerk's office, on the second floor of the Gray County Courthouse, is scheduled to be open from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m.

through Friday for early voting.

On the Republican ticket, voters can choose between incumbent Sheriff Jim Free and John Triplehorn; Larry Joe Fulton and James H. Lewis for Precinct 1 constable; and Joe Billingsley and Curtis Dalton for Precinct 4 constable.

On the Democratic ticket, voters can choose between Randy Stubblefield and Ken Kieth for sheriff; and incumbent Jerry Williams and

William B. "Bill" Toten for Precinct 1 constable.

Carter said registered voters who did not cast ballots in the March 10 primary are eligible to choose which runoff race they would like to vote in.

However, voters who voted in either the Democratic or Republican primary must stay in the respective party's runoff race if they choose to vote.

Scientists warn another ozone hole possible

LONDON (AP) - The ozone shield has thinned markedly over the Northern Hemisphere in recent months, and may tear unless governments quickly ban harmful chemicals, European scientists say.

"We're running out of time," said Neil Harris, of the Cambridge-based European Ozone Secretariat, announcing today's release of a 17-nation EC-funded study of the Earth's screen against dangerous ultraviolet rays.

The European Arctic Stratospheric Ozone Experiment concluded that the northern ozone layer decreased by 10 to 20 percent in December and January, and 5 percent to 15 percent in February.

Many monitoring stations reporting their lowest ozone measurements for winter months, the study said.

"It confirms that we are taking risks with the environment," said British scientist Joe Farman, who in 1985 announced the discovery of a hole in the ozone over the Antarctic.

Farman urged governments to speed up the phasing out ozone-eating chemicals, chlorofluorocarbons, which are commonly used as refrigerants, and fire-retarding halons.

The U.N. Environment Program on Monday proposed speeding the phase-out of ozone-depleting chemicals by moving the deadline for banning chlorofluorocarbons from 2000 to 1995.

The U.N. program was responding to a warning from scientists last month of an alarming rate of ozone destruction over densely populated areas of Europe and North America, in addition to the growing hole above the Antarctic.

U.N. officials said speeding up the ban would prevent 4.5 million additional cases of skin cancer and 350,000 cases of blindness.

Harris said people should avoid the midday sun. But he was more alarmed by the implications for the world's climate and for plant and marine life, neither of which can cope well with increased ultraviolet rays.

Explosion rocks salt domes

At least one killed, 16 others injured

BREHAM (AP) — A 4 1/2-mile stretch of gas pipeline exploded in southeast Texas today, killing at least one person and injuring at least 16, officials said.

The explosion occurred about 7:15 a.m., flattening mobile homes and damaging houses in the rural area about seven miles south of Brenham. The explosion rattled homes and buildings as far away as Galveston, more than 90 miles away.

"The DPS center in Bryan has said there are numerous casualties," said Department of Public Safety spokesman Mike Cox.

"We had windows shaking, pictures falling off the wall. Our phones and electricity went out immediately," said Andrea Allen, who lives near the blast site.

"It was worse than any earthquake I've ever been through. I used to live in California, and the sound ... it was like intensified thunder that just kept going and going and shaking at the same time."

The explosion also left several oil wells in the area burning.

"It looks kind like Kuwait down there," said Bill Waldrip of KTRH radio. Waldrip reported flames shooting about 100 feet in the air after the explosion, with scorched homes and facilities stretching as far as a mile from the scene.

A spokesman from Hermann Hospital's Life-flight in Houston said three helicopters have been sent to the area. A helicopter from John Sealy Hospital in Galveston also has been sent to the scene. Cox said ambulances from as far away as Bryan and Houston have been sent to the area as well.

Victims are being transported to Trinity Medical Center in Brenham.

"It was almost like you hear these planes, when they come over and break the sound barrier. It was for an extended period of time, about 15-20 seconds," said Charles Moser, publisher of the Brenham Banner Press.

Richards sees special session in May

AUSTIN (AP) — Lawmakers may head back to Austin next month to try again to write a school funding law.

Gov. Ann Richards said Monday that she's considering the first or second week of May for a special session on school finance.

Richards said some of her staff began meeting with members of the Legislature this week to brief them about her school funding proposal, which press secretary Bill Cryer said may be made public on Thursday.

"So far, everything looks very good. I can't expect to get 100 percent agreement, but I think there is an amazing unanimity feeling," Richards said.

"I'll know after we've made a survey of the House membership and of the Senate membership where we think we are in terms of votes. But I feel pretty good about it," she said.

The Texas Supreme Court in January threw out the third school finance plan since 1989 and gave the Legislature until June 1993 to write another one.

Richards declined to discuss details of her proposal, saying that she hasn't yet finalized it.

Her staff in recent weeks has indicated that she was considering a plan to remove businesses from local school property tax rolls and put them into a statewide tax pool. That money then would be distributed to all schools.

Richards said she will meet this week with education groups, teachers and school administrators to explain her plan and gather reaction to it.

The governor said she didn't want to summon lawmakers to Austin for a session unless "I feel like we're in some shape to be successful in passage."

If not, she said, "We'll go back to the drawing board." But for now, she said, "I'm feeling very affirmative and I feel like the session is going to come off."

Richards said her proposal will include a provision on improvements in student performance — so-called "quality" issues — in addition to equalizing school funding.

"The one component that I'm going to insist on is that I'm not going to get involved in another school funding plan that doesn't provide quality. I want a measurement in that system that is able to say to taxpayers 'This is what you're spending your money for and here's what you're getting for it,'" she said.

Richards said one reason she wants a May special session is to give lawmakers a chance to put on the November ballot portions of her plan that would require a constitutional amendment.

"That gives you plenty of the time for the public to become acquainted with the proposal; it gives you plenty of time for passage in the Legislature," she said.

Lawmakers so far haven't been united behind any single plan.

For example, House Speaker Gib Lewis, D-Fort Worth, recently proposed consolidating the state's more than 1,000 independent school districts into 188 county or multi-county districts.

Fort Worth State School copes with loss of jobs and revenue

FORT WORTH (AP) — Residents in Fort Worth are trying to find ways to cope with loss of the state school for the mentally retarded, a source of both jobs and revenue in addition to specialized services.

Fort Worth State School, the employer for 1,200 workers, will shut down by 1995 after relocating 347 residents it currently houses as part of a lawsuit settlement.

Denny Jones, commissioner of the Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation informed employees, residents and family members last week of the news.

Jones' announcement came the day after Gov. Ann Richards accepted a task force recommendation to close both the Fort Worth and Travis state schools. She had rejected a March 5 recommendation from the advisory panel to close Travis and Mexia State School.

To help state school employees, the school is considering a weekly newsletter to update workers on changes and set up an information hot line for questions.

Similar measures are already in place for Travis State School employees.

The state expects to have written guidelines within three weeks detailing incentives and benefits it will offer workers who stay on the job until their jobs are eliminated, Jones said.

Many MHMR officials fear employees will begin leaving now that the school has been targeted for closure.

Already, more than 200 of the 347 residents have been approved for placement outside of Fort Worth State School, either in community group homes or Denton State School.

The 16-year-old facility's next use is still being determined.

"The impression I had before Mr. Jones' statements was that we had several years to plan for this, and now it turns out we have several months," said Tarrant County Judge Tom Vandergriff. "... We now have to move on. We at the county are very eager to try to be of assistance in finding the best possible use of the facility and the property."

Vandergriff meets with Fort Worth Mayor Kay Granger, County Commissioner Dionne Bagsby and state Sen. Mike Moncrief this Friday to determine ways to influence the state's future decisions about the school.

Prison officials to vote on inmate early releases

AUSTIN (AP) — If Texas prison officials decide to use state law to allow the early release of about 2,900 inmates over the next two months, the process will be "well-managed," Gov. Ann Richards says.

The action is being contemplated by the Texas Board of Criminal Justice to help relieve county jails with a backlog of about 14,000 inmates sentenced to state prison.

The board is scheduled to decide Friday, after postponing the decision in March.

"We discussed previously, if they were to invoke the act, that it did not by any means mean wholesale releases. It did not mean bringing so many people out into the community that they could not be absorbed. It meant an opportunity for a systematic release," Richards said Monday.

Richards said she didn't know whether the board would invoke the Prison Management Act. But she added, "Frankly, if they do, it will be in a well-managed fashion."

Board Chairman Selden Hale of Amarillo told the Austin American-Statesman that political pressures could make board members vote against invoking the Prison Management Act.

The act is meant to avoid a shutdown of state prisons, triggered when the inmate population exceeds a court-established limit of 95 percent of capacity.

At that point, prison officials inform the attorney general that they no longer can accept inmates from county jails. The prison population last week was at 94.4 percent of capacity.

The act allows the criminal justice board to selectively release inmates, choosing non-violent prisoners first and ensuring that they are supervised by parole officers after release. Their departure makes room for violent convicts backlogged in county jails.

Inmates convicted of certain violent or drug-related crimes aren't eligible for release under the act. Neither are inmates whose sentences are longer than 10 years, or who have exhibited violent behavior while behind bars.

Parole officials also are prohibited from approving any inmate deemed a likely threat to public safety.

But a number of people are worried that those released will just violate the law again.

"The Prison Management Act should be repealed. If they're only releasing non-violent offenders, why is it that people who have only been out of jail three days commit heinous crimes?" asked Richard Collins, spokesman for Associated Texans Against Crime.

Prison board members stress that all the inmates who would be released early already have been approved for parole.

"All we're doing is advancing that parole date, in some cases by weeks and in some cases by months," Hale said.

There are 48,377 state inmates in prison, in addition to those in county jails awaiting transfer.

In the past seven months, the state has released an average of 588 inmates a week. To keep up with the prisoners coming from county jails, it would need to release 750 a week.

Woman suing Tilton not ashamed of giving money

DALLAS (AP) — A terminally ill Dallas woman suing televangelist Robert Tilton for fraud says she's not ashamed about giving the preacher more than $1,000 in return for a miracle cure.

In today's editions of The Dallas Morning News, Mary Elizabeth Turk said she gave the money because she believed Tilton could heal her.

Mrs. Turk put off going to the doctor until it was too late to treat her colon cancer. Doctors say there's little chance of survival.

"I thought, 'Why should I go (to the doctor) if I've got the word from Robert Tilton that I could already be healed?'" said Mrs. Turk, 67, who is bedridden.

"I had a real need. I was in a terrible place. When he said he was a prophet of the Lord, I believed him. But none of it has come to pass, and I wouldn't be here today if he told the truth."

Last Friday, she filed a $70 million lawsuit against Tilton and his World of Faith World Outreach Center Church.

"I know you can't buy anything from God," she said. "But he claimed to be God's prophet, and my very needs would be met if I did what he said. I did, but it never came to pass."

Mrs. Turk is one of four women who have sued the Tilton ministry individually. Lawyer Gary L. Richardson of Tulsa, Okla., represents all four women.

J.C. Joyce of Tulsa, Tilton's attorney, has declined to address the suits specifically. He has said the church meant no harm.

Mrs. Turk became ill in 1990, two months after her husband died. She said she turned to television to take her mind off her intolerable pain. Television is where she found Tilton.

"I asked for a healing miracle, for a financial miracle and help with a weight problem and deliverance from the pain," Mrs. Turk said. "To the best of my ability, I believed and obeyed what he told me."

She sent him more than $1,000, including some of her Social Security and proceeds from her husband's life insurance policy.

POW-MIA records should be opened

The Senate Select Committee on POW-MIA Affairs continues to push ahead to discover what happened to the more than 2,000 Americans left unaccounted for in Indochina. Last week it issued a subpoena to Brent Scowcroft, national security adviser to President Bush. According to The New York Times, the subpoena demanded "that he turn over documents the White House has withheld since January" These requested documents date back to 1973, when the administration of then-President Nixon "closed the books" on most MIA cases.

Scowcroft and the White House should respond immediately and completely to the committee's request. No national security need remains to keep anything classified on the POW-MIAs. The Vietnam war ended almost 19 years ago; Vietnam no longer poses a threat to anyone.

The documents from 1973 are critical. Even though the Nixon administration "closed the books" on the POW-MIAs, in his 1982 book Years of Upheaval, Henry Kissinger wrote, "We knew of at least 80 instances in which an American serviceman had been captured alive and had subsequently disappeared. The evidence consisted of either voice communications from the ground in advance of capture or photographs and names published by the communists." During the early 1970s, Kissinger was national security adviser to President Nixon and chief negotiator in the peace talks with Hanoi.

Clearly, the American people, and the U.S. congress that represents them deserve to know the details of every document the Nixon administration used to develop U.S. policy on the POW-MIAs. In addition, all other documents on POW-MIAs, right up to 1992, should be released by the White House, the Pentagon, the Defense Intelligence Agency, the CIA, the Army, Navy, Air Force, and Marines. Not only is the Vietnam war long over with, precluding security considerations, but any missing veterans of that war who remain alive are getting older. Their physical condition is unknown. Delay could mean death.

There is a new indication the POW-MIAs could still be alive. Reuters reported last month, "A veteran French television reporter, Michael Honorin, 'just back from Vietnam, has said he was told there that 72 U.S. servicemen were still being held in a detention camp.'" Said Honorin: "The Americans are being held by the Vietnamese Navy in three camps along the Saigon river."

Also last month, Sens. John Kerry and Robert Smith, the co-chairman of the Senate committee, announced that Russia's government would open old Soviet files that might shed light on the fate of POW-MIAs in Southeast Asia. If the files of our now-defeated Soviet enemies are being opened, why is our own government holding back its files?

The files belong to the American people, who sent their sons, brothers, and fathers to fight, die and be imprisoned in Vietnam. We should be shown everything. Now.

Broccoli pizza on the menu

Like broccoli pizza, homosexual marriage is a concept that seems to be at war with itself. But emboldened by social acceptance and prodded by AIDS, homosexuals are increasingly considering how their unconventional needs might be served by the most conventional symbol of heterosexuality. The day may be coming when the law will recognize the eternal union of husband and husband, wife and wife.

Most conservatives would prefer that gay relationships be permanently consigned to an inferior status, barred from the legal recognition and privileges that go with marriage. Some homosexuals and free thinkers want to legalize gay marriage precisely because they think it would confer social legitimacy and undermine heterosexual dominance.

Traditionalists may wonder what other conceivable reason there could be for gays to walk down the aisle. The biggest reason heterosexual marriage arose (and endures) is to provide a framework for raising children, which homosexual couples don't produce. Besides, if gays want to pledge themselves to a lifetime union and a 30-year mortgage, who's stopping them?

Framed this way, the dispute allows no compromise. For one side to win, the other has to lose. Luckily, there's a better option that would protect gays, advance goals of broad public interest and allow the state to avoid endorsing or disavowing homosexuality.

Gays have good reason to envy the formal legal status that married people enjoy. If a gay man dies, his partner won't inherit anything, unless the deceased had the foresight to draw up a will. Nor will he be entitled to Social Security survivor benefits.

Employee benefits that extend to spouses rarely extend to homosexual partners. Any joint ownership of property by a gay couple has to be spelled out in tediously unromantic contracts. Without such agreements, splits can be messy and expensive.

Some of these problems can be addressed by the people involved, if they're willing to spend some money on a lawyer. But that's just the point. Gays have to go to a lot of trouble to spell out the rights and obligations of a long-term relationship. A man and a woman can go to a justice of the peace.

Why should heterosexuals care about inconveniences to homosexuals? Partly because fairness and tolerance suggest it. Gays aren't trying to take anything away from straights; they're only asking for comparable treatment by law. Partly because nothing is gained from denying homosexual relationships a secure foundation.

Unsympathetic heterosexuals accuse homosexuals of practicing reckless promiscuity and spurning permanent relationships — not to mention endangering public health by sexual behavior that facilitated the AIDS epidemic. But by denying gay couples the routine rights of married people, the law fosters just the sort of irresponsible (and sometimes lethal) conduct that heterosexuals abhor.

The whole point of marriage is to promote responsibility. Today, people don't get married to escape a bleak life of celibacy; they get married because they want to exchange temporary pleasures for more lasting satisfactions. If heterosexuals weren't allowed to wed, they'd behave less responsibly too.

Of course, gays don't need to marry to rear kids. But not all heterosexuals have or want children either. A lot of them get married anyway, because they want to anchor their love in something permanent. Is it too much to concede that gays might be justified in wanting the same thing?

Some of the opposition to gay marriage stems from a simple distaste for homosexuality, which no amount of calm reasoning is going to change. Some of the objections, however, arise from the idea of letting gays take over an institution that was never designed for them.

But why do we have to call a legally acknowledged homosexual relationship a "marriage," anyway? Why should we transplant all the customs of heterosexual marriage to alien soil, where many will wither?

A better approach is to call the new institution by a different name and tailor its rights and obligations to the different needs of gays. That way, gays would get the legal protection that some of them want, and straights wouldn't feel their most revered institution is being mutilated and mocked.

The point, after all, is not to endorse homosexuality or disparage heterosexuality, but to let people pursue their own happiness in their own peaceable way. Like broccoli pizza, gay marriage isn't for everyone, but that's no reason to keep it off the menu.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Tuesday, April 7, the 98th day of 1992. There are 268 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History: On April 7, 1862, Union forces led by Gen. Ulysses S. Grant defeated the Confederates at the Battle of Shiloh in Tennessee.

On this date: In 1927, an audience in New York saw an image of Commerce Secretary Herbert Hoover in the first successful long-distance demonstration of television.

In 1939, Italy invaded Albania, which offered only token resistance. (Less than a week later, Italy annexed Albania.)

In 1947, auto pioneer Henry Ford died in Dearborn, Mich., at age 83.

In 1948, the World Health Organization was founded.

A tale of political horror

It was bound to happen, just as soon as H. Ross Perot announced that he might run for the White House: Someone would dredge up the 12th Amendment. If you have nothing better to do on a rainy afternoon, you may wish to dredge away.

The Founding Fathers were great guys. The Constitution they created, built on the doctrines of federalism and separation of powers, remains a magnificent work of political art. Its worst defects were cured, more or less, by the Reconstruction Amendments that followed the Civil War. I am not knocking the Founding Fathers. Wonderful people.

But alas, in drafting the provisions dealing with the election of a president, the Founding Fathers had a bad day. In their eagerness to get out of Philadelphia — it was awfully hot, that summer of 1787 — they created a system that might have been designed by a mad professor.

Under this system, the people do not elect a president. No, indeed. On Nov. 3, the people, state by state, will elect electors. On Dec. 14, the electors will meet, state by state, and undertake to elect a president. Here is where the fun begins.

Let us suppose, to be supposing, that things work out in this fashion:

George Bush carries 17 states, including Texas, with a total of 180 electoral votes. Bill Clinton, the Democratic nominee, carries 15 states and the District of Columbia, giving him 178. Perot's campaign has caught fire. In a year of political earthquakes he carries New York, Illinois and 16 other states to give him 180.

Those neat tallies are based upon an unreliable assumption. The assumption is that every Bush elector will cast his ballot in December for Bush, every Clinton elector will vote for Clinton, and every Perot elector will stand by Perot.

It might not work this way. No law can bind an elector to vote for the candidate to whom he is pledged. We have had faithless electors since 1796, when a Pennsylvania elector pledged to John Adams voted for Thomas Jefferson instead. In six of the past 11 presidential elections, an elector has refused to stay pledged.

Another small complication: Forty eight of the 50 states go by the rule of winner-take-all. Maine and Nebraska choose their electors by congressional districts. Put this complication aside. We have enough complications as it is.

Now, because none of the three candidates has a majority of the 538 electoral votes, something peculiar happens. In this event, "the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the president." Here is the trickier: "In choosing the president, the vote shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote."

Mind you, this is the newly elected House of Representatives. Ross Perot has carried 18 states. Thirty-five million people have said they want him to be president. But Perot, the candidate of the No Nonsense Party, has not a single member of the House to call his own. Nobody but Republicans, Democrats, and one free thinker from Vermont will be voting in the House.

What happens then? Surprisingly, Perot has carried Alaska overwhelmingly. Alaska's one vote will be cast by one man, Republican Rep. Don Young, who has just been re-elected. How would Young cast Alaska's vote? For Bush, in the name of party loyalty? Or for Perot, to reflect his people's wishes?

What would Tim Johnson do in South Dakota? Perot has swamped both Clinton and Bush. Johnson is a liberal Democrat. Does he cast South Dakota's vote for Clinton, who actually finished third?

The electors for Bush and Clinton are having problems of their own. Colorado has gone heavily for Bush. The state has returned three Democrats and three Republicans to the House. How will they cast Colorado's vote? Will Democrats Schroeder, Skaggs and Campbell yield to the will of the people and vote for George Bush? Pat Schroeder would die a thousand deaths.

I will not tell you what awful things could happen if the House cannot rally a quorum. Or suppose that none of the three can get the vote of 26 states. If such a stalemate should persist until March 4, do you know who would become president? Dan Quayle, that's who.

None of this will happen. You have to be a political nut even to think it might happen. But if you like horror stories, you'll love the Perot scenario.

Just the facts, ma'am — or is it?

By SARAH OVERSTREET

To say American women are scared of breast cancer is like saying congressional checkbook keepers have a slight problem with basic ciphering. For the last few years, young women with breast cancer have been among the most sought-after guests for TV talk and magazine shows. The message has been hammered home by host after host staring frankly into the camera: "Your odds of getting breast cancer are 1 in 9 ... 1 in 9 ... 1 in 9."

Inevitable, we think of ourselves and eight of our female relatives or friends: Which one of us? As time passes we wonder about the authenticity of the statistic, as we do other statistics, popularly espoused and accepted, because our experience doesn't bear them out. But we rarely question. Who are we to doubt the experts? If the statistics are skewed, we don't hear about it until another expert doubts the experts.

That's what happened recently when medical geneticist and cancer risk counselor Dr. Patricia T. Kelly publicly disputed the "1 in 9" figure used by the American Cancer Society. In reality, Kelly told writer Sandra Blakeslee in The New York Times, for women under 50 the risk of breast cancer is closer to 1 in 1,000. As a woman gets older her chances increase, but even at age 80, her chances aren't 1 in 9. That figure actually represents "The cumulative probability that any woman will develop breast cancer between birth and age 110."

I'm no statistician. Maybe that's why when I hear the unqualified statement that a woman's odds of getting breast cancer are 1 in 9, I don't assume they're talking about sometime before I'm 110 years old. I don't think the average woman assumes anything like that, either, especially when the figure is used in a string of information that includes the facts that the disease is on the rise and the risk of getting it is going up among younger women. So if the figure is misleading when used without qualification, why would the American Cancer Society use it that way? ACS spokeswoman Joann Schellenback told Blakeslee the figure is "meant to be more of a metaphor than a hard figure. ... The 1 in 9 is meant to be a jolt. We use it to remind people that the problem hasn't gone away."

Metaphor? Jolt? With all due respect to an organization I much admire, that's just another way of saying "the end justifies the means." The end never justifies the means if people are needlessly scared.

What quality of life can we enjoy if we have to live it more afraid than we should be about life's pitfalls? If figures are used to imply much greater probability than actually exists for a variety of life's risks, pretty soon we'll add up all the fractions and have nothing left.

many of us take the precautions of regular breast self-exams and mammograms. I am grateful for the attention they have helped focus on insurers who don't cover preventive mammography, and for helping to bring about legislation that mandates coverage in some states.

But a boomerang of the "1 in 9" figure is that some women are so terrified by their fear of high risk that they refuse to even see doctors lest their fears materialize. Furthermore, some doctors misinterpret the statistics and compound the terror.

The real irony of implying that there is more danger than exists is while you may increase vigilance about one health problem, what does unnecessarily heightened fear do to your stress level, blood pressure and risk of heart disease?

If I were the American Heart Association, I think I'd be calling the ACS right now and asking them to check their math.

Incidences of child abuse on rise, social worker says

Editor's note - April is National Child Abuse Prevention Month. The Pampa News plans several articles during the month which focus on child abuse.

By CHERYL BERZANSKIS
Lifestyles Editor

Patti Lowrance, a child protective services specialist with the Department of Human Services, has spent the last five years fighting against child abuse.

With a Pampa High School sociology course still in her mind after graduation, Lowrance said, she chose to pursue a dual degree in dance and sociology at Texas Tech. She calls herself the dancing social worker.

"I basically decided I was going to save the world," she said.

"I can honestly say in the last five years, we've seen a definite increase in severe physical and sexual abuse. The highest increase is in sexual abuse," she said. Lowrance attributed the increase in part at least, to more efficient reporting but believes that a higher incidence of occurrence exists, too.

"During the time period when I was a child — the '60s and '70s — kids were being sexually abused, but it wasn't reported. Now the victims are abusers. About 85 to 90 percent of abusers were sexually abused as kids," she said.

Lowrance said sexual abuse can be classified into two types — pedophiles, who prefer children as sexual partners, and adults who were abused as children.

Pedophiles, Lowrance explained, do not believe they are doing wrong, perceiving the child as a willing participant. Lowrance said it is DHS policy to assume that children can't make choices in that area. They consider the child as emotionally unable to choose, even if offered the opportunity.

"A child shouldn't be asked to make those kind of choices," Lowrance said.

For pedophiles, sexual activity with children is a power issue, she said. Most of them were abused as children but willfully choose to continue the lifestyle.

The second type of sexual abuser is the adult who was abused as a child and acts out his or her past. For example, she explained, a man might have been abused as a child, and when his own son or daughter reaches the age as when his abuse occurred, he abuses them, because that's how he was treated. The abuse often has an unconscious origin, she said. Further, she explained, the abuser may be highly functional in other ways, even to the point of excellence.

"People who work with sexual perpetrators will tell you there's no way to cure them. They can be treated," she said. With those who are not pedophiles, she said, sexual abusers are much like alcoholics who must acknowledge what they've done and realize they are susceptible to the same behavior again.

"If they are willing to be treated, and the child is treated, we as an agency have done what we can to protect that child," Lowrance said.

"Most of the time, we will request that the sexual abusing perpetrator not have unsupervised contact with the child," she explained.

Most of the time, the abuser will leave the home so the child won't have to leave, she said. However, if the parent is not willing to protect the child, the child is removed from the situation. When the parent won't protect his or her child from abuse, the situation is most difficult to treat.

When a perpetrator is remorseful and looks for help, the situation is treatable, she said.

In discussing physical abuse, Lowrance said that neglect is the hardest behavior to change. Chronic neglect is generational, she said, and actually a reflection of parenting style. It is up to the caseworker to decide if a child is at risk, and the standards for a toddler and an older child are different.

"Neglectful parents don't hide," Lowrance explained. Sexual and physical abuse are usually carefully hidden from the community.

When asked if a situation could occur in Pampa like the 13-year-old boy who starved to death in White Settlement, Lowrance said, "I don't think it could have. That's my personal feeling. That's not to say we don't have children die here because they do."

But without a definitive autopsy, a history with a family, and injuries that can only be explained by abuse, she said, DHS cannot take the case to the District Attorney's office for criminal prosecution.

Sexual abusers rarely spend time behind bars, she said, because there may be no physical evidence. Even a videotaped discussion with a child may not be powerful enough to persuade a prosecutor to go to trial because he or she may not feel the child is a credible witness.

"Which is bunk as far as I'm concerned," Lowrance said emphatically. "Children don't lie about sexual abuse. When the child finally tells someone sexual abuse has occurred, what happens after that process is enough to keep (the child) from stirring up that can of worms," she said.

"We have to go on the assumption, as an agency, that the child is telling the truth. We believe the child," Lowrance said she hasn't caught a child in a lie about sexual abuse yet.

Consistency is key to harmony at home

Patti Lowrance, a child protective services specialist with the Department of Human Services, made suggestions for dealing with children in the home.

First, she suggested developing contracts with children about their behavior because, she said, children are often stronger disciplinarians than adults.

She also suggested that along with the children, house rules and guidelines be developed for living together.

"The key to making this work is being consistent. The consequence for breaking that rule has to be followed every time," Lowrance emphasized. "Kids learn early on how to get what they want. They learn exactly how far to push to get their needs met. Kids need boundaries. Kids want boundaries. They need to know how far they can go."

Lowrance said she takes a personal interest in the 37 families on her case load.

"I do get personally involved with my families. I want them to feel comfortable with me so that they'll tell things without thinking I'll judge them. My first priority as a social worker, is to protect the child, and secondly to preserve the family unit," she explained.

When asked about the most difficult part of her job, she replied, "I think it is knowing that the situation is going to get a lot worse before it gets better. I think we are on a downhill slide in our society. We have a lot more abuse and a lot more neglect. We're going to have to hit bottom before it gets better. I see a steady increase in the number of valid reports of abuse and neglect."

She believes that our society, which claims to love children so much, fails to adequately punish people for abuse and neglect.

"Children are still second class citizens. I think we present ourselves as a nation of children worshippers, but if we really cared about our children, we would work harder at providing a safe environment for them to live in, educate them and provide them with the morals that our great-grandparents had."

Indeed, she sees a moral decline as fueling the child abuse and neglect problem, and indicates that a change in moral standards could reverse that slide.

"I'd love to be out of business one day," she concluded.

Chilly depths perfect climate for aquaculture

By DONALD J. FREDERICK
National Geographic

KAILUA KONA, Hawaii — Pump cold water up from the Pacific depths, and oysters, lobsters and salmon can thrive on a stretch of barren black lava coast in the tropics.

The cold seawater is "nutrient-rich and free of pollutants, perfect for aquaculture," says Thomas H. Daniel, technical director of the Natural Energy Laboratory here on the West Coast of the island of Hawaii. Scientists at the state-run facility first tapped the water as part of an experiment in ocean thermal-energy conversion, but soon realized that it could do more than generate electric power.

Next to the lab site, the state operates the Hawaii Ocean Science and Technology Park — the only place in the United States where deep seawater is pumped ashore to help produce marketable oysters, lobsters, salmon, abalone, giant kelp and vitamin-rich algae.

The collaboration between lab scientists and innovative entrepreneurs who lease space at the park has worldwide implications for tropical regions where there are sharp differences between the deep and surface temperatures of adjacent waters. The techniques used here offer the tantalizing prospect of harmlessly drawing on the ocean to increase food supplies as well as to produce pollution-free energy.

To tap the Pacific, the laboratory installed 11 pipelines that can bring up 25,000 gallons of seawater a minute, some as cold as 43 degrees Fahrenheit from depths of 2,000 feet. Distribution pipes carry it to fish tanks and ponds.

Strolling among the tentlike structures of the 547-acre park, a visitor encounters long raceways filled with algae and stirred by paddle wheels that look as if they should be propelling small Mississippi steamboats.

"The paddle wheels circulate our vitamin-rich algae and make sure it all gets exposed to sunlight, but the key to our production is the cold, clean seawater, which is also full of nutrients," says Gerald R. Cysewski, president of the Cyanotech Corp.

The 10,000 pounds of algae produced each month are dried to make "spirulina" diet-supplement pills and powders that are used in pharmaceuticals and health foods. The company is also marketing beta carotene, a nutrient extracted from the algae that shows some promise as a cancer preventive.

The tanks, ponds and raceways at Ocean Farms of Hawaii are yielding bounteous harvests of oysters, abalone, salmon and sea urchins. "Most of it is consumed in-state, but we ship some to California, and eventually hope to open markets in Japan," Dennis Bishop, the chief operating officer, says.

The company now has about 500,000 oysters, but plans eventually to harvest more than 2 million a year. "Our oysters are particularly popular because they're grown in pure seawater. There's no question of contamination," Bishop says. "The water's also perfect for the crop of giant kelp that feeds our stock of 500,000 abalone."

At Aquaculture Enterprises, both cold and warm seawater is important to its lobster venture. "By increasing or decreasing water temperature, we can speed or slow up the metabolism," explains Joseph Metolau, a partner in the company.

In nature it sometimes takes about seven-and-a-half years for a lobster to progress from the larval stage to a 1-pound delicacy. "Lobsters hibernate during winter months when the water's cold," Wilson says. "Using warm water, we can cut down hibernation time, and bring a lobster to 1 pound in less than three years."

Business has been so successful that Wilson has to import 1,000 to 2,000 lobsters a week from Maine just to meet the Hawaiian demand. In the next two or three years, his company, which now has 5,000 lobsters, hopes to move into a new facility that will house 1.5 million. "We want to produce at least 500,000 pounds of lobsters a year for Japan and other lucrative Asian markets," he says.

Some companies at the park are already serving the Japanese market. One grows a sea vegetable used to wrap sushi rolls. Another raises a type of flounder that is often eaten raw by sushi fanciers.

Besides seafood, fresh strawberries grown in the park may someday be on the market. Test beds at the neighboring lab have shown that the fruit flourishes when nourished by the condensation of fresh water that drips from the outside of the pipes that carry the cold seawater.

Make nesting easy for Purple Martin colonies

Panhandle Bird Watch

by Jan Elston

In the last article, I told you that we had ordered one of the experimental Martin houses from The Nature Society.

Arriving first were the sections of the telescoping pole and the support bracket, along with instructions for putting these up. Digging a hole two feet wide and three feet deep was accomplished when a nephew came to visit, and volunteered to dig that hole for us. Now the support bracket has been set up straight and anchored in concrete.

We could hardly wait for the big box containing the Martin house to arrive. A box did come; but it was only about two inches thick. Oh, no! It had to be assembled, and there were so many pieces!

As the construction progressed in our living room it was interesting to see all those parts fitting together, looking more and more like a Martin house should look.

Now the shiny aluminum house has been installed on the tall pole and we're eagerly awaiting the first Martins.

From a book about Martins which I checked out of Lovett Library, I've learned a lot about these interesting birds. They eat only flying insects (and from the number of early-hatched mosquitoes and flies which are already flying around, there should be an abundance of food for the Martins this year.) Purple Martins are not purple; but their glossy blue-black feathers have a purple sheen. They usually nest in colonies and prefer living near people.

Martin houses need to be cleaned out, to remove the nests of House Sparrow. This reduces the number of parasites which cause so much discomfort and potential illness to the birds. I read an article recently about a man who had begun a service cleaning the yards of people who had pets. A related service, that of cleaning out Martin houses, would probably be a good business for an enterprising young person.

Martins, as well as other birds, like to have nest-building materials available. Some people who like doing handwork save short scraps of thread, and put them out for the birds to use when they're building their nests. It is advisable to cut those pieces of yarn or thread so they are no longer than five inches, so there is no danger of the bird becoming entangled in it. Twigs broken into five or six inch lengths are ready building materials.

Martins like crushed, dried eggshells; and these can be scattered in your grass for the Martins to collect. These pieces of eggshell should be no larger than the fingernail on your little finger. A mud puddle can attract Martins because they like to use some of the mud to plaster their nests inside the Martin houses. They will fly through the sprinkler, but they rarely drink at a birdbath. They love ponds, where they can fly low just above the surface of the water, and scoop up water in their beaks.

Rabbits among 'starter pets' needing less attention

By BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS

Animal lovers who want a pet, but are concerned about the care and attention they can give to it, might consider a "starter pet." Starter pets require less time and money than more traditional pets.

"People like a pet they can hold, love, and cuddle," says Jerry Pass, owner of close to 50 Pass Pet stores in the Midwest. "Rabbits can be litter-box trained, they can live indoors or out, and they respond to affection."

Miniature or dwarf breeds, which grow to weigh only 3-5 pounds, are the most popular. Larger breeds may weigh 12 or more pounds.

Indoor rabbits require supervision; they tend to chew on anything, including furniture, books, and electrical cords. Glen Carr, executive secretary of the American Rabbit Breeders Association, believes rabbits fare better outdoors. He recommends a male rabbit because a mature female may try to nip at someone approaching, even if that's the hand that feeds it. Although male rabbits may exhibit some territorial traits, shown by spraying or squirting urine, neutering eliminates that problem.

A miniature rabbit costs about $30, larger breeds $15 or less, especially if they're bought from a breeder. A cage and equipment will cost about $75, but owners can save money by building a hutch, or buying a used one. Make sure the hutch is built to protect the rabbit from roving dogs. Rabbits rarely require veterinary care, and food costs about $4 a month.

End of marriage is painful by any means

DEAR ABBY: A few months ago, you had a letter in your column written by "Myra" — a woman whose husband had died of cancer three years ago, at the age of 39. I've been wanting to write to you about this for a long time, but I never had the guts.

My husband died of cancer three years ago — he was 35. I also encountered people who compared death with divorce. I had one person tell me that I was "lucky" because my love had just died — but her love was "murdered" when her husband found somebody else. I was devastated! I didn't feel "lucky."

I've had to deal with people who think I am a rich widow because I've started to redecorate the house so there wouldn't be so many memories to haunt me. They didn't see it as a way of coping with my loss — they saw "the rich widow" out having a wonderful time with the insurance money.

I could write a book. Maybe one day I will, but I think I've said enough. Thank you, Abby, for letting me have my say.

I DON'T FEEL LUCKY

DEAR DON'T FEEL LUCKY: Myra's letter inspired a bale of mail from widows and divorcees. None felt "lucky." Read on:

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to the woman who lost her 39-year-old husband to cancer, and didn't know what to make of the remark, "It has to be much easier losing your husband through death than losing a mate by divorce."

Not only is divorce the death of a dream that was too short-lived, or didn't work out, it is also the death of an intimate relationship, the death of a family and the death of financial support.

Few outsiders allow a divorcee time to grieve. Nobody attends the "funeral," nobody takes up a collection to see her through the rough spots, and there is no available life insurance.

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

When one is a widow (or widower), there are no fights over child custody, living quarters or possessions acquired during the life of the marriage — and friends and relatives on both sides are still glad to see you. They invite you to weddings, graduations, baptisms, etc. Your memories of a wonderful marriage are yours forever, to be treasured for a lifetime.

Blue Devils surge past Michigan's Fab Five

Duke wins national title for second straight year

By JIM O'CONNELL
AP Basketball Writer

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) - The Duke Blue Devils did what no team could do for 19 years. Christian Laettner did what he had to do. And Mike Krzyzewski did what he seldom does.

When the last strand of net was cut Monday night and Duke was national champion for the second straight year, college basketball history had a new chapter, one whose end has yet to be written.

The Blue Devils' wire-to-wire season was finally over, Michigan's Fab Five vanquished 71-51, and Krzyzewski could relax at long last. His face changed from stern to smiling as he hugged his players, pumped his fists into the air and waved to the fans.

"This is the greatest year I've ever had as a coach," Krzyzewski said. "The last four games were even better because it's like we really deserve it. To be the No. 1 team for the whole year and do what they did, they were the best."

Duke, 1990-91 NCAA champion.

Duke, 1991-92 NCAA champion.

Not since the end of the UCLA dynasty had that happened — one team, two seasons, two titles.

The closest anyone had come was UNLV last season, and that chance was ended in the national semifinals by Duke, the modern-day version of UCLA with six Final Four appearances in seven years, five in a row. Krzyzewski is now the ninth coach to have won more than one NCAA title and just the fifth to win them consecutively.

The Blue Devils spent the season answering question after question about repeating, and the queries grew louder as the games got closer in the last two weeks. That made the answer especially satisfying.

"We won last year, but it's the best feeling to go out in my last game at Duke on a winning note," said Laettner, who played in more college games and started in more Final Fours than anyone.

It wasn't easy. Wins over Seton Hall, Kentucky, Indiana and Michigan meant 12 straight NCAA victories, but they were struggles.

They needed a miracle shot by Laettner to get to their fifth straight Final Four and sixth in seven years, and they had to overcome a season-low game by Laettner to get back to the championship game.

Krzyzewski, whose 33-7 record and .825 winning percentage in the NCAA tournament ties him for fourth place with UCLA's John Wooden, had to kickstart his team one last time.

He went into the lockerroom at halftime, down 31-30 and lucky to be that close, ripped into his players, one at a time, for a lethargic performance.

"He got on all of us," said Thomas Hill. "He was shouting. He did what was needed."

It worked, starting with Laettner, whose Final Four funk continued with only five points in the first half against Michigan.

"He was throwing up bricks and we were still down just one point," Krzyzewski said. "I knew if we could turn up the emotion and get him back in the game we'd have a shot."

After missing six of eight shots and making a season-high seven turnovers in the first half, Laettner finished with 19 points, seven rebounds and no more turnovers.

"I didn't press enough" in the first half, Laettner said. "What I was doing was not attacking enough and looking to pass and then making bad passes."

The second half was Laettner in player-of-the-year form.

The all-time leading scorer in the NCAA tournament hit his first two shots after halftime, a layup on a feed from Bobby Hurley and a 3-pointer that gave Duke the lead for good at 35-33 with 19:16 to play.

"I'm glad Christian snapped out of it," said Hurley, voted Most Outstanding Player of this Final Four after finishing with nine points and seven assists to go with his 26-point effort against Indiana.

Laettner said he didn't dwell on his first half woes. "You can't put the weight of the world on your shoulders at that point in time," he said. "The defense was tough the entire game and I was making bad decisions and not taking care of the ball."

Suddenly, Duke broke the game open, scoring on its last 12 possessions and ending with a 23-6 run over the last 7:06, including 12 points by Grant Hill.

"When Bobby made that great pass, and then we looked for Christian and said 'You're on,' he responded and played a great second half," Krzyzewski said.

Duke's defensive pressure limited Michigan to only 20 second-half points on 29 percent shooting — nine for 31. The Wolverines shot only 38 percent for the game and had their lowest point total in eight years, as well as the lowest losing score in a championship game since Indiana beat North Carolina 63-50 in 1981.

"The second half, we had no semblance of order on offense," Michigan coach Steve Fisher said. "And I think it was as much their defense as anything. We unraveled with some bad shots and you can't do that against a good team."

Grant Hill had a terrific all-around game for Duke with 18 points, 10 rebounds, five assists, three steals and two blocks. Thomas Hill added 16 points and seven rebounds.

"Coach just challenged us at halftime to play better," Grant Hill said. "We just tried to come and play hard. Michigan played hard. I'm just so happy we came through in the stretch."

Duke tied the second-largest winning margin in NCAA championship game history, topped only by UNLV's 30-point blowout of the Blue Devils two years ago and equaled by Ohio State over California in 1960.

But the loss couldn't overshadow what Michigan did this season, especially after Fisher switched to five freshmen starters eight weeks ago.

"Cry that's part of it," Fisher told his team. "Feel awful, but be proud of what you've done and be determined you're going to learn from this game and set your sights next year as high as they were this year."

Chris Webber, who led the Wolverines with 14 points and 11 rebounds, said the Wolverines still have their own place in history, even if they didn't become the first champions ever to start five freshmen.

"We had a great season," he said. "There will never be a freshman class to do that again."

Astros open season against NL champs

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON (AP) - The Atlanta Braves and Houston Astros are trying to forget their pasts — for different reasons.

The Braves' trip to the 1991 World Series will do them no good tonight when they open the season against the Astros, trying to shed their image as the worst team in the NL West last season.

"The 1991 season is slipping out of our sights," Braves manager Bobby Cox said. "Yeah, it's a little different but pressure is pressure. You still go out and try to win every game."

The Braves have been told of the odds against repeating. And Cox for one isn't concerned about the difficulty in Terry Pendleton and Otis Nixon repeating the career seasons they had in 1991.

Pendleton, the MVP, hit .319 last season compared to his lifetime average of .267. Nixon hit .297, well over his lifetime average of .246 and shortstop Rafael Belliard hit .249, well over his .226 lifetime average.

"Not at all, I always think that they are going to do even better," Cox said. "I don't pay attention to that stuff."

The Braves struggled offensively in spring training. Do they need a fast start?

"We got off to a slow start last year and we won the thing," Cox said. "A loss is a loss at any time in the season."

Pete Harnisch, 12-9 last season, will oppose Cy Young Award winner Tom Glavine (20-11). Glavine is 0-8 lifetime against the Astros.

The Astros have their own set of circumstances to overcome. The Astros won 65 games last season and finished last, 29 games behind the Braves.

But Astros manager Art Howe is smitten with April optimism.

"I feel very comfortable this season," Howe said. "We have more veterans to add to the mix. I think we can compete with anybody in our league."

Pampa cagers win 3-point contest

David Johnson and Kristen Becker of Pampa captured the 3-point shooting contest held in conjunction with the Golden Spread All-Star Basketball Tournament last weekend in Amarillo's Cal Farley Coliseum.

Johnson hit 8 of 10 3-point attempts in a shoot-off to win the boys' division.

Becker went through two shoot-offs before winning the girls' division. She hit 22 of 30 attempts and defeated Jenny Hill of Sunray in the final shoot-off to win the title.

Becker played for the West squad, who defeated the South, 67-56, in the girls' championship game.

Amber Seaton of Pampa, who played for the East squad, was named the most valuable player in the girls' tournament. East squad player Randy Nichols of Pampa won most valuable player honors in the boys' tournament. Both Seaton and Nichols were named to the all-tournament team.

Johnson and Pampa's Jeff Young also played for the East squad and they scored 20 points each in a 114-105 loss to the North squad in the boys' consolation game.

Brett Schneider of Canyon scored 25 points in leading the South to a 124-114 win over the West for the boys' championship.

The all-star games are for senior players only.

PHS boys' soccer team has 4-1 record

Pampa hosts Amarillo High at 6 p.m. Friday night in a high school boys' soccer game.

The Harvesters, coached by Scott Flynn, have won four of five outings this season. They travel to Amarillo today for a game with Tascosa, starting at 5:30 p.m.

The Harvesters are coming off a 3-2 win over Palo Duro last weekend.

Trailing 2-1 with 10 minutes left in the match, Pampa made the most of an opportunity to tie the score on a penalty shot. Todd McCavit's kick connected at the bottom left corner, and five minutes later McCavit assisted Jamey Smiles, who broke down the center of the field and scored the game-winning goal.

"I was proud of the way the kids held their composure and responded when the game was on the line," Flynn said. "If we can learn to play with that much desire and hustle for the entire game, we'll be a team to be reckoned with."

Pampa's first goal was netted by Ascencion Anguiano early in the match.

"We had several key saves from our keeper, Richardo Armendariz, who did an outstanding job today. Others who played well on defense were Joey Mendoza, Will Winborne, Ross Johnson, Todd McCavit and Jamey Smiles," added Flynn.

Baker-Finch hopes to break Australian shutout in Masters

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — The word picture painted by Ian Baker-Finch could have been set on a different continent in a different era.

He told of a group of young men — late teens and early 20's — bouncing along in a battered bus, drinking beer, singing songs, telling tales, dead broke but without a care in the world, looking no further than the next stop on the tour.

It could have been an American baseball team from the lower minor leagues back in the '50's. But this was in Australia in the late '70's.

"There were about a dozen of us in an old bus. We'd play along the northern coast, drinking beer and playing in pro-ams," Baker-Finch recalled. "We'd play during the afternoon, drive all night and play again the next day," he said, a wistful, nostalgic look in his eye.

"We didn't make any money. A hundred dollars was very, very big. That didn't happen often. But we had more fun than we ever had before or probably ever will again."

Those players now are reaching their golfing maturity and are among the small but tough corps of Australians who now are exerting a strong influence in world golf.

Baker-Finch leads a group of six players from Down Under who this week are attempting to break the Australian shutout in the Masters.

The tournament, which begins Thursday at the Augusta National Golf Club, is the only major championship that has not been won by Australians, who have produced world-class players of a number and quality out of all proportion to the country's population.

Peter Thomson won five British Opens back in the '50's and '60's.

Rangers survive opening slugfest against Mariners

By The Associated Press

The new American League season had a very familiar look.

Jack Morris was back on the mound tossing shutout baseball and Rick Sutcliffe opened Baltimore's new stadium with a performance from his past. Nolan Ryan pitched for Texas, adding some more history to his records.

In Detroit, the 36-year-old Morris made his debut with Toronto and looked very much like the pitcher who shut out Atlanta 1-0 in Game 7 of the 1991 World Series.

Morris pitched eight scoreless innings against the Tigers before Cecil Fielder and Rob Deer homered in the ninth. Morris ended up with a five-hitter and a 4-2 victory.

The right-hander was helped by 40-year-old Dave Winfield, who had three hits in his Toronto debut.

"This is not the World Series," Morris said. "Opening day is more festive. The bleacher creatures are out there, cheering all the time. I don't know for what. Maybe they were cheering themselves. Who knows?"

After spending one terrific season in Minnesota, Morris signed a two-year deal with the Blue Jays for $10.85 million. He may help Toronto go all the way, too.

"We've been together a month and a half. I feel comfortable with these guys," Morris said. "I think I know them, and they know what I'm about. What I'm about is trying to win. I give everything I've got. I won't always win, but I'll try."

AL roundup

It was Morris' 13th straight opening day start, breaking the record he shared with Tom Seaver and Robin Roberts.

In Baltimore, the 35-year-old Sutcliffe was even better than Morris. Sutcliffe pitched a five-hitter for his 17th career shutout as the Orioles beat Cleveland 2-0 in the official opening of Oriole Park at Camden Yards.

Manager Johnny Oates gave Sutcliffe the opening-day assignment to take the pressure off the younger Baltimore pitchers, and the strategy was perfect as the right-hander allowed only two runners to get as far as second base.

"I'd be lying if I said it was what I expected," Oates said. "He's not going to throw a five-hit shutout every start."

Sutcliffe missed much of last season with soreness in his right shoulder, finishing 6-5 in 19 games with the Chicago Cubs. The Cubs and most other major league teams thought he might be finished.

In Seattle, Ryan started but was not involved in the decision as Texas survived a slugfest in the Kingdome by scoring nine runs in the eighth inning for a 12-10 victory.

When Ryan took the mound, it marked the start of his 26th major league season, tying the record of catcher Deacon McGuire and pitcher Tommy John. It was Ryan's ninth career start on opening day, and at 45 years, two months, he was the fourth oldest ever to start an opener. The record is held by Jack Quinn, who started Brooklyn's opener in 1931 at 47 years, 10 months.

The big hit for the Rangers in the eighth was a three-run pinch homer by Geno Petralli off loser Mike Schooler, putting Texas ahead 9-8.

In the other opening day games in the AL, it was Minnesota 4, Milwaukee 2 and Oakland 5, Kansas City 3.

Twins 4, Brewers 2

At County Stadium, Chuck Knoblauch's fourth single of the game scored Greg Gagne with the go-ahead run in the ninth inning as Minnesota opened defense of its world championship by beating Milwaukee. The loss spoiled Phil Garner's debut as Brewers manager.

Gagne opened the inning with a single off reliever Edwin Nunez (0-1) and moved to second on Shane Mack's grounder. Knoblauch followed with a line single to center to score a sliding Gagne.

Twins reliever Carl Willis (1-0) pitched 1 1-3 hitless innings for the victory and Rick Aguilera got the last three outs for the save.

Athletics 5, Royals 3

Mike Bordick's two-run, bases-loaded single capped a three-run eighth inning that carried Oakland past visiting Kansas City.

Trailing 3-2, the A's loaded the bases and tied the score on Carney Lansford's infield single off reliever Jeff Montgomery. Bordick lined the next pitch up the middle, scoring Mark McGwire and Terry Steinbach for the deciding runs.

Rick Honeycutt was the winner, his 100th career victory, despite giving up the tying run in the eighth. Dennis Eckersley pitched the ninth for the save, allowing three hits. Luis Aquino was the loser.

Bonilla puts on power show as Mets win in 10th inning

By The Associated Press

The New York Mets found out in their season opener what Bobby Bonilla means to a lineup.

Bonilla hit two home runs Monday night, including a two-run shot in the 10th inning off Lee Smith, to give New York a 4-2 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals.

The victory made Jeff Torborg a winner in his managerial debut with New York, and gave the Mets their 16th triumph in their last 18 season openers.

After finishing in fifth place in the NL East last season, the Mets revamped their lineup over the winter by adding free agents Bonilla, Eddie Murray and Willie Randolph. They paid Bonilla $29.5 million over five years for the kind of performance he had against the Cardinals.

"We knew he was going to hit two home runs, sure," Mets general manager Al Harazin said with a smile. "Without a doubt."

Bonilla doesn't want to hear about the money or the pressure. "Everyone keeps bringing money up. I refuse to talk about money," Bonilla said. "Pressure this, pressure that. I'm just playing the game I love. I happen to be in the city where I grew up and it's pretty much a dream for me."

Vince Coleman led off the 10th with a bunt single, narrowly avoiding a sweeping tag by first baseman Andres Galarraga, and advanced on a sacrifice before Bonilla homered off loser Lee Smith. Bonilla hit a hanging slider deep into the lower right-field seats and then broke into a big smile rounding the bases.

Smith, who led the major leagues with 47 saves in 53 chances last season, blew his first opportunity this year when he gave up a run in the ninth on two hits and pinch-hitter Mackey Sasser's RBI groundout to tie the score 2-2.

Ramon Martinez, a winner of 37

"I make good pitches," Smith said. "Sometimes they hit them, sometimes they don't. Tonight, they did."

Jeff Innis worked one inning for the victory and John Franco pitched the 10th for the save.

In other season openers Monday, it was San Francisco 8, Los Angeles 1; San Diego 4, Cincinnati 3; and Pittsburgh 2, Montreal 0.

NL roundup

The Mets on Saturday ended a ban on talking to the media after what they considered unfair treatment by the press. Their spring training camp was rocked by rape allegations against three players, including star right-hander Dwight Gooden.

"This kind of officially ended spring training, the way we came back to win," the Mets' Howard Johnson said. "Everyone got involved and it was fun tonight."

Starters David Cone and Jose DeLeon each pitched well in their first opening-day starts. Cone stopped St. Louis on five hits in eight innings and struck out nine.

DeLeon shut down New York's revamped lineup on four hits in seven innings.

Giants 8, Dodgers 1

Bill Swift, who came to San Francisco from Seattle in the Kevin Mitchell trade, made his first start after 88 relief appearances a winning one at Los Angeles.

Swift, who relieved in 71 games for the Mariners last season, blanked the Dodgers until the eighth inning. Making his first start since Aug. 22, 1990, Swift allowed seven hits and one run in 7 2-3 innings.

"It was a great opening day for us," Giants manager Roger Craig said. "These are the kinds of game that are easy to manage."

Ramon Martinez, a winner of 37

Pirates 2, Expos 0

At Three Rivers Stadium, Doug Drabek-pitched eight shutout innings and singled home a run as Pittsburgh beat Montreal.

Pittsburgh had won just four times in its previous 12 season openers and had lost six of their last eight on opening day. Montreal has lost five of its last six openers on the road.

Drabek, winner of just one of his first seven decisions last year before finishing 15-14, allowed five singles and also drove in a run in the Pirates' two-run second inning.

NHL strike continues in deadlock

NEW YORK (AP) — Despite their day-long power play, both sides in the NHL strike remain deadlocked in the NHL strike.

"The more this thing drags on, the other side is going to dig in and dig in," said Bryan Trotter, president of the NHL Players Association, following a no-decision on Monday in the continuing work stoppage.

Trotter was reacting to the owners' rejection of the players' latest contract proposal.

Actually, it was more a dismissal than a rejection. At a news conference following a Board of Governors meeting, NHL president John Ziegler said the players' proposal was hardly worth considering.

"No vote was taken on the so-called proposal because none went to the key issues," Ziegler said. "(The proposals) were helpful, but something that wasn't going to help the owners' position. Driving toward an agreement, it wasn't high-octane gas."

NHLPA executive director Bob Goodenow was understandably disappointed when informed of the owners' cavalier approach to the players' proposal.

"We thought we had a proposal that would have resolved the matter," Goodenow said. "If they didn't look at it, it's unfortunate. The players put a lot of hard work in it."

Instead, the governors turned around and planned a new proposal of their own to the players — marking the first time that the governors had moved their position since making what they called their "last" offer on March 28.

It was this offer that the NHLPA had originally rejected, setting in motion the strike that shut down the NHL season on April 1.

"We'll just have to wait and see," Goodenow said of the prospective offer.

That won't be long. Ziegler said the owners would present their new proposal to the union this morning.

In a related development, the 22 player representatives came into town Monday to get a briefing from Goodenow on recent developments. Joining them was Wayne Gretzky, the sport's most famous player.

Gretzky also met with Ziegler and Goodenow on Sunday night, the day before the owners came up with their new offer, but Goodenow denied that Gretzky's appearance had any significance in the talks.

"I don't know if (Wayne Gretzky's) presence brought out (the owners') counter-proposal," the union boss said.

Most everyone at Monday's activities agreed that time was growing short to save the full two months of the Stanley Cup playoffs, which are scheduled to start on Wednesday.

If anything, there was a pall of pessimism over the midtown Manhattan hotel where the board meeting and press conferences took place.

For one thing, the owners and players remained rigid in the area of licensing, most particular the issue of hockey cards.

Players have received hockey card revenues for two decades, using the money to run their union. The NHL estimated on Monday that the players would receive $11 million-$12 million in card revenues this season and $15 million next season, compared to $8 million for the owners.

The owners want to negotiate the issue. The players say it's non-negotiable.

Gillen applies at Villanova

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Xavier of Ohio coach Pete Gillen visited Villanova on Monday to talk with officials about replacing his former boss, Rolie Massimino.

Gillen, an assistant under Massimino from 1978 to 1980, was the first basketball coaching candidate to visit the school, according to sports information director Jim DeLorenzo. He said no decision has been made on offering Gillen the job.

The school has not yet scheduled visits from other candidates, DeLorenzo said. He declined to provide further details about Villanova's hunt for a coach.

After six consecutive trips to the NCAA tournament under Gillen, Xavier was 15-12 this season and wasn't invited to postseason play.

Massimino left Villanova last week after 19 years and one national championship to take over a UNLV basketball program that has been successful on the court but plagued by accusations of NCAA violations. His last team was 14-15.

Gillen, who has turned down offers from Virginia and Notre Dame in the past two years, has said he would be interested in getting a Big East job.

Arazi, ridden by Steve Cauthen at the Lamorlaye training track near Chantilly, France last week, won today's Prix Omnium II race.

Arazi is runaway winner in French race

ST. CLOUD, France (AP) — Arazi made a sensational debut as a 3-year-old today with a runaway victory in a French grass-course race and assured his status as the horse to beat in the Kentucky Derby.

Arazi, last year's top 2-year-old, won by more than 10 lengths over a weak, small field after running fifth for most of the first half of the 1,600-meter distance, which is just shy of a mile. The race, the Prix Omnium II, was run counter clockwise, the same direction as American races.

Ridden by Steve Cauthen, Arazi made his move on early leader Carson Bay approaching the stretch. At the top of the stretch, he took the lead and drew away from the field. Under a tight control of Cauthen, he could have won by even more.

Despite some questions raised by arthroscopic surgery on both his front knees last fall, Arazi went into today's race as the 8-5 early line favorite for the Kentucky Derby. He will not race again before the May 2 classic in Louisville, according to his trainer, Francois Boutin.

The colt, part of a three-horse entry by Boutin, was established as the 1-10 favorite in the $21,450 Prix Omnium, the third race of the day at St. Cloud, just outside Paris.

The other top contender for the Kentucky Derby, A.P. Indy, showed his form by easily winning the Santa Anita Derby Saturday.

Perhaps the most important of the remaining Derby prep will be next Saturday's Blue Grass at Keeneland.

Expected to go in that test are Dance Floor, second in the Florida Derby and owned by rap musician Hammer and his family, and Colony Light, who finished first but was disqualified to third in the Louisiana Derby.

The Florida Derby winner, Technology, is expected to go in the Tropical Park Derby at Calder next Saturday.

But all seem to be running for second behind Arazi, who has been branded by seasoned observers as the best horse since Secretariat.

He has yet to go the mile-and-a-quarter distance of the Kentucky Derby. But Boutin and co-owner Allen Paulson, who observed the horse's last workout on Monday, feel he will be ready to go, even with just the one prep race.

"I have my own way, my own manner of training," Boutin said. "I feel the program leading to the Kentucky Derby in the United States is too hectic. It is too much for a young horse."

Arazi burst into prominence last November. He handled the field with ease at the Breeder's Cup Juvenile Stakes in Louisville last November, heading to a five-lengths victory in his first race on dirt and first race in a counter clockwise direction.

Shortly afterwards, Arazi had arthroscopic surgery on his knees, scraping some spurs from the bone.

Paulson has been through this before. Another of his horses, Opening Verse, won the mile at the Breeder's Cup a year after undergoing similar surgery.

Arazi won seven of eight races last year, losing only his first. His victories have usually been by several lengths and all with an awesome acceleration at the finish. His career earnings are more than $1 million.

Were he to capture the Triple Crown, the horse could win more than $5 million. Boutin, however, is interested in a double of the Kentucky Derby and the English Derby.

The English race is June 3, meaning the colt would have to bypass both the Preakness on May 16 and the Belmont Stakes on June 6.

Boutin said it was his dream to win both Derbies, but he has two owners to contend with. Paulson sold a half-interest in Arazi for $9 million to Sheikh Mohammed al Maktoum of Dubai.

They have yet to make a final decision on Arazi's post-Louisville plans.

Names in the News

NEW YORK (AP) - Woody Allen once said his one regret in life is that he wasn't someone else. Now he suggests he was half kidding.

Given his druthers, he said, "I would rather be Marlboro or Louis Armstrong ... a great pianist or something."

"I think that being funny is not anyone's first choice," the comic actor and director said in an interview in Monday's New York Newsday.

"If I could have come from a different background, I might have started off with deeper goals and maybe achieved some of them earlier in life and at this point in my life be doing a lot better than I'm doing - doing deeper work or better work," the 56-year-old Allen said.

His latest film is "Shadow and Fog."

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Chevy Chase, who got his break on "Saturday Night Live" in the 1970s, is returning to television.

The 48-year-old comedian will produce and star in a late-night comedy-talk show beginning next year on Fox Broadcasting, the network announced Monday.

"I plan on approaching this much the way Lorne Michaels and I approached 'Saturday Night Live,' by working with the funniest writer-performers I can find," Chase said.

Michaels created "Saturday Night Live." Chase has starred in such movies as "Memoirs of an Invisible Man," "Fletch" and "National Lampoon's Vacation."

NEW YORK (AP) - Stephen King, the master of horror, says he's nothing like the villains in his novels - but people expect him to be.

A student who declined to give his name prepares to light crumpled paper from an already burning pillar used for posting bulletins late Monday on the University of Michigan campus in Ann Arbor, Mich. A crowd of about 5,000 became unruly after Michigan lost to Duke in the NCAA championship basketball game. Police used tear gas to quell the disturbance.

Violence mars NCAA tourney

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Police fired tear gas into a crowd of University of Michigan basketball fans who began hurling bottles and other objects early Tuesday after their team lost the national college championship.

No arrests or serious injuries were immediately reported.

The violence broke out after police on horseback tried to get the crowd of 4,000 to 5,000 fans lining the main campus thoroughfare to disperse. When that failed, the officers, wearing riot gear, lined up and pushed the crowd back.

Fans refused to move and began throwing bottles and other objects.

Police fired at least six volleys of tear gas. They retreated into a campus building.

About 500 fans remained outside the building, some setting fires in trash cans, pulling down signs and throwing bottles and rocks.

"Things were going fine," said Peter Laird, 20, a University of Michigan student. "People were talking with the police officers. When the officers approached, that incited the crowd. I don't understand."

"The crowd was fine, just fine, until midnight. There must have been a deadline that went by that the police forgot to tell the crowd about," said John Psychas, 47, an Ann Arbor resident.

Michigan lost 71-51 to Duke University in the NCAA championship Monday night in Minneapolis.

STARKS, Maine (AP) — Carolyn Sours got plenty mad when a helicopter searching for marijuana flew in at treetop level and frightened her 500-pound pig so badly it charged through an electrified fence and into the woods.

"You ever try to catch a pig in the woods?" Ms. Sours, who runs the Starks Country Store, asked as she recalled chasing the animal last summer.

The experience spurred her and her husband to join the growing ranks of Maine residents fed up with what they see as overzealous drug agents.

Homer Sours sided with the majority in a 45-42 vote at last month's town meeting to legalize marijuana in Starks, even though he doesn't smoke it himself.

The vote — which is symbolic only — followed a spirited discussion about the health effects of marijuana, police tactics and concerns that a "yes" vote would make Starks known as "the drug capital of Maine."

Other towns, including Solon, Chesterville, Anson and Searsport, rejected similar resolutions. But activists hope to bring the issue to a vote in such larger towns as Madison, Bowdoinham and Richmond.

The gesture has no effect on state or federal laws, but "it makes politicians stand up and take notice," said activist Michael Ezzy.

The movement has taken root in the foothills of western Maine, a scenic but chronically depressed region of hardscrabble farms and wood-products mills that has been hit hard by the recession.

"It's anti-prohibition far more than pro-pot. People just want to be left alone," said David Wilkinson, a Chesterville businessman who heads Maine People for Hemp.

Starks' 800 residents are a mix of families who have lived here for generations and "back-to-the-land" settlers "from away" who have been drawn over the past two decades by the area's affordable farmland.

"The flatlanders seem to be more vocal than the locals," said Vincent Lovell Jr., who thinks the vote and the publicity that followed have given Starks a bad image.

"It's just a sleepy little town and people have been smoking pot since I've been here. No big deal. But now they want to legalize it and grow it, and that's where I take exception."

At the center of the controversy is the Maine Bureau of Intergovernmental Drug Enforcement, the agency trying to destroy what it says has become Maine's No. 1 cash crop, outstripping apples, blueberries and even potatoes. The agency values the state's marijuana at more than $250 million.

Last year, BIDE seized about 25,000 plants, which it estimates would bring at least $50 million on the street. Director Francis Amoroso said the agency finds a small percentage of what's out there.

Maine ranked 22nd among the states in the amount seized last year, according to the Drug Enforcement Administration.

"We're rising on the list, but that doesn't necessarily mean that more is being grown," Amoroso said. "It reflects the fact that for the first time, there's been an aggressive eradication program."

The most celebrated case was in August in Porter, about 50 miles south of Starks. A 70-year-old man was charged with growing 2,600 marijuana plants. Police quoted him as saying he had to sell pot because he didn't get Social Security.

Since the federally funded crackdown began five years ago, residents have complained about low-flying helicopters and night raids.

"The standard operating procedure is to come in with battering rams, weapons out and cocked, shouting profanities. They've patterned these raids after the ones at Brooklyn crack houses, and that's outraged a lot of people," Wilkinson said.

Amoroso denied agents have terrorized families, saying complaints have been investigated and dismissed. He said the pilots are instructed not to fly lower than 400 or 500 feet.

People on both sides said they have been intimidated.

Those who speak out in favor of legalization find themselves targets of helicopter surveillance, Wilkinson said.

"The most serious, distressing and dangerous aspect of the drug war is the fear and intimidation that the presence of this very aggressive law enforcement agency produces in ordinary people," he said.

Dolores Abbott, who opposes legalization, said she received a threatening call moments after she appeared on television.

"They told me I was a dead woman. I was shocked, and a little scared," she said.

For Homer and Carolyn Sours, the issue isn't marijuana, but reining in the state's drug agency.

"I moved up here three miles into the woods to have a little privacy, to get away from the nuts," said Sours, who came from New Jersey five years ago. "Now I see people tromping through the woods with camouflage clothing, backpacks and automatic weapons."

Voters want the truth, and nothing but the truth, in politics

WASHINGTON (AP) — Anything they say can be used against them, so politicians often say as little as possible.

But the latest mini-revelations from Bill Clinton — he did smoke marijuana, he did receive a draft notice — illustrate the risks of cleaving to narrow definitions of truth and being forced to come cleaner later.

Any modern presidential campaign plays out against the backdrop of Vietnam, Watergate and the Iran-Contra affair, all of which prompted various administrations to evade, suppress, mislead and even lie.

Some wonder why Clinton pursues a minimal disclosure policy in light of these lessons. As one Democratic activist put it, "Nixon didn't get tagged for Watergate. He got tagged for the coverup."

But some analysts say Clinton's sins of omission, though potentially damaging to how he is perceived, are typical and even mild by historical standards.

Franklin Roosevelt, Lyndon Johnson and Ronald Reagan did not merely withhold information but actually manufactured certain aspects of their personal histories, said Erwin Hargrove, a presidential specialist at Vanderbilt University.

"These people are developing a persona and they want to give you a self-image that's flattering," Hargrove said in an interview Monday. "I don't think that should be a disqualification. It goes with being a highly ambitious politician."

A widely accepted fudge is enhancing one's military record. "Johnson did it and so did Reagan," said Suzanne Garment, author of a book on political mistrust. "That's a great tradition in American politics."

Another thriving tradition involves forgetting unpleasant things. The New Republic cited what appears to be a recent instance: Defense Secretary Dick Cheney said on a Tuesday last month that he told President Bush the previous weekend about his overdrawn checks at the House bank. The same Tuesday, asked about Cheney's checks, Bush replied, "I haven't heard a word about that."

One time-honored tradition seems to be waning: saying different things to different people. In the age of C-SPAN, CNN and instant data retrieval banks, it's getting harder to do that.

Government-watchers say it's not necessarily a plus.

"In a democracy, if we get anything done at all, it's from building coalitions," Garment said. "A leader has to be able to say different things to different people. When you make that impossible, you make it harder for all of us to agree with each other."

Clinton, the Arkansas governor and front-runner for the Democratic presidential nomination, often is criticized for trying too hard to please; for shading his positions so skillfully that people in the same audience can get opposite impressions of where he stands.

Hargrove thinks it's a consummate trait in a leader who wants to get anything done. "Roosevelt slipped all over the issues. Nobody knew where he was coming from," he said. "But he lived in a heroic time and he was able to present himself as a hero. People saw the lion and they didn't always see the fox."

Foxes are out of favor at the moment among voters who say they want the truth and nothing but the truth. But Hargrove said they've rarely appreciated that approach in the past.

"People are suspicious of wheeler-dealers," he said. "On the other hand, people like Jimmy Carter who refuse to wheel and deal become unpopular because they're ineffective."

Wheeler-dealer is not exactly a coveted description in the year of the outsider, a season of relentless character scrutiny and bafflement among some that Clinton has not figured out how to stop making a bad credibility problem worse.

"From a purely public relations point of view, the most important thing you can do is respond directly, accurately and completely to a question, put a period at the end of the sentence and call it a day," said Bill Carriker, who managed Richard Gephardt's 1988 presidential campaign.

"He doesn't seem to recognize that eventually the whole story is going to get out," Kathleen Jamieson, dean of the Annenberg School of Communication, said of Clinton.

Administration asks Supreme Court to overturn abortion ruling

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration is again asking the Supreme Court to overturn its landmark ruling legalizing abortion — this time in a case about a Pennsylvania law that imposes a 24-hour waiting period and requires a husband be notified.

Reiterating a position it has taken in previous cases, the Justice Department said Monday that the 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision was wrongly decided and should be set aside.

The friend-of-the-court brief by Solicitor General Kenneth W. Starr asked the court to consider overruling Roe vs. Wade in reviewing the Pennsylvania law, which requires a woman seeking an abortion to wait 24 hours and for married women to notify their husbands before having the abortion.

Even if it doesn't specifically overturn the 1973 precedent, the Justice Department said the high court should make clear that women do not have a fundamental right to obtain an abortion under the Constitution.

The department contended that states can restrict abortions because "the protection of human life — in or out of the womb — is certainly the most compelling interest that a state can advance."

Starr said that if the court takes a narrower approach than overturning Roe vs. Wade it can uphold the Pennsylvania law as advancing a "legitimate state interest."

"The state's interest in prenatal life is a wholly legitimate and entirely adequate basis for restricting the right to abortion derived in Roe," he said.

The brief was filed one day after an estimated 500,000 protesters marched in Washington in the biggest demonstration ever held by abortion rights' activists.

The Pennsylvania law requiring doctors to advise women of the alternatives to abortions before a 24-hour waiting period advances "a legitimate interest in ensuring that a woman's decision to have an abortion is an informed one," the brief said.

"The informed consent and waiting period requirements ensure that a woman knows the relevant facts and can reflect on them before making a final decision," it said.

The provision requiring a married woman to notify her husband of plans to abort "can help protect the life of a fetus, the integrity of the family unit and the husband's interests in procreation within marriage and the potential life of his unborn child," the brief added.

The Supreme Court will hear arguments on the Pennsylvania law on April 22. Starr is scheduled to present the administration's views then.

Abortion rights organizations appealed a ruling by the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals last year that upheld most provisions of the Pennsylvania law, including one that requires teen-age girls to get permission of a parent or a judge before having an abortion.

The 3rd Circuit, however, struck down the spousal notification provision, saying it imposed an "undue burden" on a woman's right to an abortion.

The Justice Department said the application of the "undue burden" test was inappropriate in light of the high court's 1989 decision that upheld a Missouri law restricting abortion.

The "undue standard" test was enunciated by Justice Sandra Day O'Connor in a concurring opinion to the 1989 decision of Webster vs. Reproductive Health Care Services.

"We believe that the correct standard was the one articulated by the Webster plurality: Is a regulation reasonably designed to serve a legitimate state interest?" the Justice Department said.

The government's brief drew praise from the National Right to Life Committee Inc., which joined an array of anti-abortion groups Monday that filed friend-of-the-court briefs in the Pennsylvania case.

Douglas Johnson, the group's legislative director, said the Justice Department's statement about the right of states to protect human life was "one of the strongest passages" it has filed on the issue.

Nuclear inspections disprove U.S. bombing success claims

WASHINGTON (AP) — The closer U.N. inspectors look at Iraq's surviving nuclear arms potential, the clearer it becomes that the Bush administration misfired in claiming it was "pretty well eliminated" by allied bombers.

Two small Iraqi nuclear reactors were demolished early in Gulf War aerial bombardment, but since the war's end 13 months ago the world has learned that Saddam's atomic ambition was far grander than the war planners imagined.

"We didn't understand what targets were important," said Gary Milhollin, director of the Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control, a private research group in Washington.

Some important nuclear sites were hardly touched, U.N. inspectors have discovered. In other cases, buildings were hit but the equipment inside was not harmed.

Some targets were damaged or destroyed even though allied war planners didn't realize the targets were tied to the nuclear program.

Milhollin said that on a scale of one to 10, the bombing campaign's success in interrupting Saddam's short-term nuclear goals would rate a seven, but for stopping Iraq's long-term nuclear capability it would be about a four.

During the war, administration officials gave the impression in public statements that intensive allied bombing had wiped out the threat of a nuclear-armed Saddam.
