Jail inspection in 'abeyance'

By BETH MILLER
Staff Writer

Inspectors with the Texas Commission on Jail Standards examined the new Gray County Jail and Sheriff's Office on Thursday, making a list of 11 items that need attention prior to the continuation of the inspection in May.

Robert L. Dearing, chief of inspections, told county commissioners, contractors and others assembled during the inspection that the jail did not "fail," but the "inspection is in abeyance."

Dearing and Paul D. Scarborough, supervising inspector, are scheduled to return to the jail site May 11 to continue the inspection. The facility cannot be occupied by inmates until the Commission gives the county the OK.

The $3 million facility can house 78 prisoners and is located east of the Gray County Courthouse.

Larry Janousek, formerly with Maxey & Associates Inc., the architects of the jail, attended the inspection and said, "We'll be adding about five more smoke detectors. Everything else is looking good. It will take us about a week to complete that work."

Maxey & Associates notified the Gray County Commissioners Court by letter this week that the firm is going out of business. It is unknown at this time if the remainder of the firm's fee will be paid into a bankruptcy receivership or if the county can use the money to pay another architect to tie up the work on the facility.

All four Gray County commissioners attended the jail inspection.

Precinct 4 County Commissioner Ted Simmons said, "It looks like everything is passing but the smoke detection. It will take a few days to get that (more detectors) installed."

Dearing said, "Very seldom do we go to a new jail and say, 'OK, open it up.' It's like a new home."

However, the jail inspector added, "I don't see anything here that can't be fixed pretty fast. I think everyone involved is doing a good job. I'm seeing excellent workmanship and I wouldn't say that if it wasn't true. I've been looking at jails for 16 years."

Simmons said of the continuation of the inspection, "It's really no big surprise to me; I expected they would have to come back."

The hand-written list of the 11 items that need attention are as follows:

- Emergency exit signs needed in booking and holding area. The jail inspectors said stencils can be used and spray-painted with red paint to correct the problem.
- No smoke detection in female detox cell. Officials said a smoke detector will be added to that area along with several others.
- Shelves in single cells are one foot above sink and need to be moved or removed because they are dangerous.
- Smoke and fume removal system needs to be rebalanced and reworked - to be retested.
- No combustion ventilation (explosion venting) in the laundry room.
- Holes in masonry in separation cells need to be repaired.
- Exit sign needed over clean linen closet.
- Need a drinking fountain in detox cells.
- Emergency exit diagrams need to be posted in all exit hallways and corridors.
- Fire extinguishers need to be tagged and dated.
- Fire hose cabinets need to be properly marked - those containing fire extinguishers need to be marked as such.

Sarpalius: Judge playing politics

Kennedy denies use of courthouse

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

Congressman Bill Sarpalius said Thursday he is barred from holding town hall meetings in the Gray County Courthouse by County Judge Carl Kennedy.

Sarpalius, D-Amarillo, revealed the behind-the-scenes problems between him and Kennedy, a Republican, following a meeting held in the Lovett Memorial Library Auditorium.

Kennedy, a Republican, responded this morning that the move is only designed to "preserve the dignity of the courtrooms" and "free them from partisan politics."

Sarpalius said he was going public with the rift after also being told he could no longer conduct town hall meetings at the Chamber of Commerce Community Building.

Nanette Moore, chamber manager, also insisted the policy regarding the Community Building is not aimed at the congressman, but at all partisan political gatherings.

"I'm not going to let him (Kennedy) get away with this any longer," Sarpalius said. "If he wants to play hardball, we will. This is the only county of the 38 in my district where they do not allow me to meet in the courthouse. In most of them, the commissioners court will even come to the meetings to discuss issues with me."

"He's just not happy because he didn't get his way," Kennedy said. "I don't know what the policies are in other counties. My jurisdiction only extends to the borders of Gray County."

Sarpalius said he regularly gets a cool reception from Gray County, where the leadership is largely Republican.

He said town hall meetings are, by law, issues oriented and cannot include distribution of political material.

During Thursday's town hall meeting, the focus was on balance of trade and keeping jobs in the United States.

Kennedy insisted, "This is not a reflection on the congressman and I'm sorry he is offended. It is not a reflection on any one party. I have attended Democratic and Republican town hall meetings and they are inherently political, notwithstanding the limitations prescribed by law."

He noted he would be just as leery of allowing U.S. Sens. Phil Gramm or Lloyd Bentson or President Bush to hold meetings in the courthouse because of the threat of partisan politics creeping in.

Kennedy added he wants the county courtroom to be a place "that commands respect: a place free of politics."

Former State Rep. Foster Whaley, who was at the meeting, said he appealed to Kennedy to change his mind about Sarpalius' town hall meetings, reminding him state Sen. Teel Bivins, a Republican, was allowed to hold an overtly political meeting at the courthouse last November over redistricting.

Bivins' remarks included numerous attacks on Sarpalius and the Democratic Party.

Kennedy responded that his policy is partially in response to the Bivins meeting, saying he understood it was to discuss redistricting, but turned into a partisan attack on Democrats.

"That meeting helped reinforce the need to keep party politics out of the court rooms," Kennedy said.

Whaley stated, "(Kennedy) told me there was too much corruption in Washington and that we need not have these court rooms filled with corruption. That's the stupidest thing I've ever heard. If only saints are allowed to meet at the courthouse, where will the Commissioners Court convene?"

Sarpalius said, "I'm your congressman

Sarpalius

and I would like to know I am welcome here. How can I know what's important to Pampa if I don't come here and talk to you?"

Moore said, "I wouldn't say (Sarpalius) was barred (from the Community Building). The building is owned by the Pampa Area Foundation Inc., a non-profit corporation, and we are only tenants. It is in their by-laws that ... the building shall not be used by political organizations. There was a lot of discussion regarding this and we are going to meet with our attorneys about this."

However, Gray County Democratic Party Chairman John Warner pointed out the chamber allowed an overtly political fund-raiser to be held at the Community Building earlier this year.

Warner also re-emphasized that town hall meetings are designed to help elected officials, regardless of their party, hear from constituents, and are not designed to be political.

However, Warner said his primary concern revolves around access to the courthouse.

"I have been under the impression the courthouse is owned by the taxpayers and open for things regarding government," he said. "This year we were also barred from using the courthouse for our Democratic County Convention. There is a remedy for this. If the people who elect the commissioners disagree with these commission policies, they have the right to express that disagreement at the ballot box. When government denies the people the right to meet with their elected officials at a public building, that does not make sense to me."

Republican County Commissioner Joe Wheeley countered that the decision regarding Sarpalius is no reflection on the commission since he was completely unaware of Kennedy's actions prior to questioning by a reporter.

"This is the first I've heard of it," Wheeley said. "The commissioners court

No settlement reached in lawsuit filed by Brown against Gray County

By BETH MILLER
Staff Writer

A racial discrimination lawsuit filed by former Gray County Sheriff's Deputy Lynn Brown against the county was not settled through mediation on Thursday, Gray County Judge Carl Kennedy said today.

The lawsuit, filed in U.S. District Court in Amarillo in October 1990, is set for the May 19 docket call of U.S. District Judge Mary Lou Robinson's court.

Paris attorney David Hamilton, who represents Brown, and Kennedy both said no further talks of settlement are scheduled between the parties.

Judge Robinson ordered the mediation conference in March and Lubbock attorney Myrtle McDonald was chosen as the mediator. She ordered that a written report be filed on the mediation conference by May 4.

Kennedy said the parties met behind closed doors in Lubbock from 11:30 a.m. to 4:15 p.m. Thursday.

"I was pleased to be there and had hoped we'd settle," the county judge said.

Asked if the county had insurance that would cover the costs of any jury award that Brown might receive, Kennedy said, "The insurance coverage we have for this particular type of suit is uncertain. Our public officials liability insurance policy does not include a duty to defend."

Questioned as to the amount of taxpayers money that the county has spent on legal fees in the lawsuit filed by Brown, Kennedy refused to name the figure.

A check of the public county records shows that more than $10,000 to date has been paid to the attorney firm - Stokes and Fields of Amarillo - representing the county. Another bill of $5,725.79 has been received from Stokes and Fields and is scheduled to be paid April 30, making the total $15,892.77 to date.

Hamilton said today that he could not comment on the mediation.

"All of the things that take place in mediation are confidential by law. The mediator will send a report to Judge Robinson stating the case did not settle."

Hamilton said he and Brown were present for the conference along with the mediator, Kennedy and Amarillo attorney Daniel Burrows with Stokes and Fields.

Asked if Brown was seeking a particular dollar figure in the lawsuit, Hamilton said, "I'm not going to comment on that. The place to do that is in the courtroom."

Brown alleges in the lawsuit that he was racially discriminated against by Sheriff Jim Free and deputies in the sheriff's office after becoming employed with the county on Jan. 2, 1989. He states racial slurs were made against him and he was not promoted, although he had experience, as other white deputies were.

Free fired Brown from the sheriff's office in February, alleging he violated departmental policies. Brown claims he was fired because he ran for the office of sheriff in the March Democratic primary.

Recount result: Constable vote stands

The outcome of a Thursday recount in the Precinct 4 constable runoff race was identical to the total given on election night, recount officials said.

The Republican runoff race was between Curtis Dalton and Joe Billingsley. On April 14, totals of 422 for Billingsley and 411 for Dalton were announced.

Due to the small amount of votes difference, Dalton requested a recount. Officials said there were a couple of places where the votes switched, but the outcome turned out identical, 422-411, with Billingsley winning the race. Billingsley will face incumbent Jimmy Joe McDonald, a Democrat, in the November general election.

Judge declares mistrial in murder case

TYLER (AP) - A judge has declared a mistrial in a capital murder trial after ruling the prosecution had failed to give a "racially neutral" explanation for excluding two potential jurors who are black.

Ricky L. Lewis, 29, was to be tried in the Sept. 17, 1990, shooting death of George Newman, 45, of the Carroll community. Newman was shot to death and his girlfriend was sexually assaulted during what police said was the burglary of his home.

District Judge Joe Tunnell Thursday declared the mistrial after holding a hearing to review the use of peremptory challenges or "strikes" used by prosecutors to eliminate five blacks from the jury panel. The defendant is black.

Defense lawyer Jeff Baynham contended that the five blacks were excluded in violation of the 1986 Batson Vs. Kentucky case. In that case, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that "systematic exclusion of blacks from juries violates the Equal Protection Law under the Fourteenth Amendment."

"We compliment Judge Tunnell on his willingness to fairly consider the Batson issue," Baynham said. "The defense believes the state had unfairly discriminated against blacks."

Criminal District Attorney Jack Skeen strongly disagreed, saying the state presented more than enough evidence to prove it had not been discriminatory.

Damage from California quake nears $1 million

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An earthquake that rattled a desert area east of Los Angeles and was felt hundreds of miles away caused up to $1 million in damage, authorities said. Hundreds of small aftershocks shook the area Thursday, but no further damage or injuries were reported. Two buildings were destroyed and dozens of others sustained minor damage when the 6.1 magnitude earthquake struck late Wednesday in the Morongo Basin, 110 miles east of Los Angeles. Dozens of people suffered minor injuries. Residents of Las Vegas and Phoenix reported feeling the tremor. Authorities said damage in the Morongo Basin was relatively light, even though a quake measuring 6 on the Richter scale can cause severe damage. "There are no two-story buildings out here and that could contribute to the low damage figures," said San Bernardino sheriff's Sgt. Ben Boswell. Eighteen buildings in Joshua Tree were damaged, said Jeff Mellinger, a San Bernardino County fire spokesman. Some mobile homes slipped off their foundations. A Twentynine Palms convenience store lost part of its roof, and four fire stations in the area sustained minor damage, authorities said.

Anti-abortion demonstrators sing outside the Erie Medical Center in Buffalo, N.Y. Thursday. Some of the demonstrators rushed for the office, but police and abortion-rights activists fended them off. None were arrested. Meanwhile, lawmakers in Topeka, Kan., signed in an abortion bill that anti-abortion activists call too lenient.

Reactions mixed on Kansas abortion law

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP) — A doctor who performs abortions says he can live with the state's new abortion law. But for anti-abortion activists, the new rules are too lenient.

Reactions were mixed after Gov. Joan Finney, an anti-abortion advocate, signed a bill Thursday that guarantees a woman's right to abortion but requires an eight-hour waiting period and parental notification.

Kansas had one of the least restrictive abortion laws in the nation, requiring only that a woman obtain the consent of a doctor and go to a licensed medical facility such as a clinic. There were no limits on when an abortion can be performed.

Dr. George Tiller, whose clinic was targeted last summer by Operation Rescue for performing late-term abortions, said he could live with the bill. The anti-abortion group's demonstrations outside his clinic and others led to 2,600 arrests.

"Abortion — legal, safe, available, but a little inconvenient — is better than abortion either not available and/or illegal," he said.

Mrs. Finney ignored the advice of some fellow anti-abortion advocates in signing the legislation, which takes effect July 1. Abortion foes described the restrictions as too full of loopholes.

The bill "treats abortion as standard operating procedure, with the appearance of some restriction," said abortion foe David Lee, a Wichita pastor.

The American Civil Liberties Union and Planned Parenthood representatives said they liked parts of the bill but that it contained too many restrictions.

"The bottom line is that the rights of Kansas women were seriously compromised," said Dick Kurtenbach, the executive director of the ACLU's Kansas and western Missouri chapter.

Lawyer: No settlement yet

Deadline for answer here

By PEGGY FIKAC
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — An attorney for taxpayers challenging use of the current school finance system in federal court says his settlement offer is not dead, but the state has not yet acted on it.

Lawyer Jim Keahey said he filed a report on settlement negotiations Thursday with U.S. District Judge James Nowlin. The judge on April 10 told lawyers to take about two weeks to see if they could come to an agreement in the case.

That two weeks is up today. "It (the settlement offer) is not dead. It's just that they could not accept or reject it by the court's date," Keahey said. "The attorney general ... is working on it and is continuing to talk with the (legislative) leadership."

Keahey said he expects Nowlin to read his report. "I can't predict what he'll do next."

Gray McBride, spokesman for Attorney General Dan Morales, said he would not comment on the substance of settlement negotiations.

"We've had some discussions, and there may be an opportunity to continue them at some point in the future," McBride said.

The Texas Supreme Court in January ruled unconstitutional the school finance system creating 188 county education districts, or CEDs. Each CED is made up of one or several counties and levies property taxes for public education.

The state court ruled that the system violates the Texas Constitution by imposing a statewide property tax and by levying a property tax without voter approval.

However, the court gave lawmakers until June 1, 1993 to fix the system, allowing 1991 and 1992 taxes to be collected.

Taxpayers then sued in federal court, saying collection of an unconstitutional tax, without opportunity for a refund, violates their due process rights under the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

Nowlin has certified an estimated 8 million-plus Texas taxpayers as a class of plaintiffs in the case. He has said the classes of defendants and plaintiffs are certified for the 1992 CED taxes, which are due in January 1993.

Keahey said taxpayers proposed a settlement in which the CED tax would be repealed and a constitutional funding system put in place. In return, he said they offered to ask the judge to rule that taxpayers as a class forgo their claims for refunds of 1991 taxes.

Problems with jurors delay trial

By KELLEY SHANNON
Associated Press Writer

KERRVILLE (AP) — The trial of a Lubbock man accused of raping his retarded sister-in-law encountered another delay today after problems arose involving two jurors, attorneys said.

Prosecutors and defense attorneys seated an eight-woman, four-man jury plus one alternate Wednesday in anticipation of going ahead this morning with the trial of Jimmy Wayne Wooten.

Attorneys for both sides confirmed this morning that problems arose with two jurors — a clients' rights advocate with the Kerrville State Hospital and a woman who wrote a note to State District Judge J. Blair Cherry Jr. this morning saying she didn't know if she could be fair in the case.

The holdup occurred after a full, tedious day of jury selection Wednesday.

Lubbock County District Attorney Travis Ware said even if two jurors were eliminated, the trial could proceed with only 11 jurors if both sides agree. However, that hasn't happened.

The case was moved to Kerrville after pre-trial publicity made it difficult to choose a jury in Lubbock last October.

The case has attracted national attention and led to reforms in the way abuse complaints are reported at institutions governed by the Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation.

Wooten, 42, faces a possible two to 20 years in prison and up to a $10,000 fine if convicted of the April 15, 1990 rape. He maintains he is innocent.

Several jurors were disqualified Wednesday after saying they could not consider probation as punishment for someone convicted of sexual assault.

Wooten's sister-in-law, Debra Lynn Thomas, gave birth to a son Jan. 1, 1991. Miss Thomas has the IQ of a 2-year-old and does not realize she has given birth.

Her son was delivered by Caesarian section and is healthy. Miss Thomas now lives in a home for the mentally retarded.

Ware said Miss Thomas won't appear in person at the trial but will be shown to jurors on a videotape.

The Associated Press does not usually identify rape victims, but Miss Thomas' name was made public at the request of her sister and legal guardian, Dori Wooten. Mrs. Wooten sat with her husband throughout Wednesday's proceedings.

Lead defense attorney Sam Ogan indicated he would attempt to discredit the DNA blood evidence that prosecutors planned to present. He asked perspective jurors if they believe medical evidence could be wrong.

DNA fingerprinting is based on the fact that the genetic pattern — as carried in the molecule deoxyribonucleic acid, or DNA, in every cell — is unique for each person except identical twins. Research has shown DNA results to be 99 percent accurate.

Black leaders seek minority summit

DALLAS (AP) — A group of black leaders has proposed a "reconciliation summit" with Hispanics to stem what some see as a growing rift between the city's largest minority communities.

Competition over contracts and allegations of racial insensitivities have divided minority leaders in Dallas "as wide as I've ever seen it," said Adelfa Callejo, attorney and former member of the Dallas Area Rapid Transit board.

The meeting would be the first of its kind in Dallas since 1986. No date has been set.

Hispanic leaders welcomed the summit idea, but some said failing to include Anglos would hurt it.

"It is exclusionary," said Rene Castilla, president of the Dallas school board. "I am opposed to discrimination, and we are discriminating against Anglos now."

The idea grew after a recent flap involving a black school administrator at a training session, who accused some Hispanic principals of incompetence and asked whether it was a cultural trait.

Similarly, anger rose two months ago between a black and a Hispanic member of the City Council after DART awarded an $18.6 million contract that included no black firms. Some black leaders blamed the deteriorating relations on manipulation by Anglos.

"The big issue is the call for the black-brown summit because of the divide-and-conquer strategy of certain elements of the majority community," said the Rev. Zan Holmes, a prominent Methodist pastor.

But Mrs. Callejo said, "Anglos had nothing to do with dividing the Hispanics and blacks."

Weather Service to move forecast center

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The National Weather Service is defending plans to dissolve its national office here and set up a new national forecast office elsewhere, probably in Norman, Okla.

Based in Kansas City since 1954, the National Severe Storms Forecast Center won't be needed by 2000 because smaller, local offices will have the equipment to make those predictions, officials say.

The weather service plans to set up the new national forecast office to monitor all types of hazardous weather and help guide the local offices.

Dennis McCarthy, head of the Norman weather service office, said his office has been too busy with other projects to lobby for the storm forecasting unit.

"It would be very nice and we'd probably favor it. But I can't say we've had any active role in this," McCarthy said today.

He also said there would be benefits to locating the forecasting operation in Norman, where the National Severe Storms Laboratory and an experimental forecasting facility are already located.

But forecasters in Kansas City and at weather service headquarters in Camp Springs, Md., question the cost, need and wisdom of the plans. "I consider it a waste of taxpayer money," said William Sammler, a forecaster and the Kansas City local steward of the National Weather Service Employees' Organization.

Sammler estimates setting up the Norman office and transferring employees will cost millions of dollars. And he doubts that many veteran forecasters in Kansas City will accept a transfer.

He fears their decades of experience in reading some of the most volatile weather patterns will be lost — at the citizens' expense.

"We believe it is going against the vast experience accumulated at the severe storms center, and it would not be properly utilizing it," said national union spokesman Herb White, who is a forecaster in Raleigh, N.C.

Longtime severe storms center Director Allen Pearson, who also was the Weather Service director of the central United States, questions how good the uncoordinated local forecasts will be during storms.

"Twenty years ago we tried to put the responsibility on the local offices and it became an absolute mishmash," said Pearson, who now is a private consultant often hired to investigate weather-related airplane crashes.

"I think the whole idea of taking the responsibility away from the Severe Storms Center ... is a calculated risk that may be politically nice, but meteorologically, it doesn't make sense," Pearson said.

Ronald McPherson, director of the National Meteorological Center in Camp Springs, said the weather service needs to update its operations.

Under a draft McPherson unveiled in February, the changes would include:

— Moving all operations of the National Aviation Forecasting Center, now in Camp Springs, to Kansas City, which currently does some aviation forecasts.

— Moving the National Marine Forecasting Center, also in Camp Springs, back to the Pacific Coast.

— Reducing the number of weather service offices nationwide, not all of which issue forecasts, from 250 to 115, and installing $4.5 million radar systems at 137 locations.

A central theme would be aligning the national forecasting centers with university-research departments in order to take advantage of the latest technology and information.

"It's important to have an area where there is significant academic activity in meteorology," said Frederick Ostby, head of the severe storms center.

Man indicted in eagle death

AUSTIN (AP) — A Tyler grand jury has returned a two-count indictment against a Henderson County man accused of killing an endangered bald eagle more than two years ago.

The Texas Parks and Wildlife Department today said Kimball Glenn McKinney was indicted Wednesday in separate counts with violations of the federal Eagle Protection Act and the Endangered Species Act, after the 1989 killing of an immature female bald eagle.

The penalty for a conviction on each count is up to one year in prison and a fine of up to $100,000. Parks and Wildlife will seek civil restitution of up to $2,850.

The Associated Press attempted to contact McKinney, but there was no telephone listing for him in the Frankston area.

Authorities were notified after the eagle was found, without its talons, beside a road near Lake Palestine. It had been shot twice with a 12-gauge shotgun.

The Parks and Wildlife Department said a woman in January told a game warden she knew who killed the eagle. McKinney was questioned in March by officials from the state agency and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Parks and Wildlife said that McKinney admitted shooting the eagle while deer hunting in December 1989. The agency said that he denied removing the talons.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Due process

Liberal critics who view the U.S. Supreme Court's conservative majority as a threat to basic constitutional freedoms should take note of recent decisions that strengthen the principle of due process.

The rulings should help put to rest the charge that Reagan-Bush appointees are reluctant to differ with the White House on important points of law. In fact, Justices David Souter and Clarence Thomas provided the swing votes as the court put new limits on the government's power to mount sting operations.

In the 5-4 decision, the justices reversed the child pornography conviction of a 61-year-old Nebraska farmer. Writing for the majority, Justice Byron White said: "In their zeal to enforce the law, government agents may not originate a criminal design, implant in an innocent person's mind the disposition to commit a criminal act and then induce commission of the crime so the government may prosecute."

That is precisely how the government went after Keith Jacobson.

In 1984, police discovered Jacobson's name on the mailing list of a pornographic bookstore. For the next 26 months, postal inspectors solicited him with mail invitations to purchase illegal pornography involving minors.

Justice Department guidelines prohibit entrapment, which is defined as causing an individual to engage in illegal activity that he otherwise would not have committed. But the government clearly went over that line with Jacobson, who was enticed for more than two years to break the law.

Also, the court unanimously overturned the murder conviction of a Texas man scheduled for execution. Joe Trevino, the justices held, is entitled to a new trial because potential black jurors may have been excluded from the case solely because of their race.

Trevino, a Hispanic, was convicted in 1984 of murder. The prosecution had used its peremptory challenges to exclude three potential jurors who were the only blacks among the jury pool. The high court concluded this violated the defendant's constitutional right to a trial by an impartial jury and equal protection under the law.

These cases were decided in favor of the rights of the accused, demonstrating that liberal critics need not fear a conservative Supreme Court whose judgements are firmly based on constitutional principles.

THE WASHINGTON WALL

Do mink like squawfish?

If George Bush has his way with Congress, the nation's mink will get no squawfish, and $46,000 will be saved. Hallelujah! Our free-spending president has been born again.

As the Heritage Foundation recently noted, federal domestic spending under the Bush administration has soared out of sight. The president has stemmed no tides. The money rolls out. The debt goes up. Bush and Congress make up a happy two-some.

But the president has good intentions. Besides, he's running for re-election. So last month he proposed some $4 billion in "rescissions." Unless Congress stops him, he will not spend certain funds that Congress has told him to spend. In effect he is wielding a line-item veto. Bravo!

For example, Congress has appropriated $46,000 to study the use of squawfish in mink diets. If you think I am making this up, write your congressman and ask for House Document 102-227. The president regards such research as inappropriate.

"The taxpayer," says Our Leader, "should not be asked to subsidize the production of mink which are purchased by wealthy individuals. Moreover, the squawfish is listed as an endangered species under the Endangered Species Act."

Consider this: Mr. Bush would rescind $120,000 for research into the handling of animal manure. The study would resolve conflicts "between producers and the general public." It is something to think about.

Most of the president's proposed rescissions involve items the government never has requested. These are the little pieces of pork that members of Congress provide for specially influential constituents. A wink, a nudge and a nod - and the item gets into the bill.

Here is an item of $134,000 to study "the concepts of machine components necessary to construct a green tomato harvester." The president says the growers of green tomatoes should pay for the machine themselves. Right!

Mr. Bush proposes not to spend $100,000 on blackbird control in North Dakota, $387,000 on cool season legumes in Idaho and Washington, and $85,000 on disease management of hazelnuts and filberts in Oregon. The Department of Agriculture never has reviewed any of them.

One item on the president's hit list is quite literally pork. He would rescind $140,000 to study the diseases of swine in Minnesota. He would take back $150,000 earmarked for cow/calf management in 11 counties in Iowa. He wants to cancel a $100,000 study of prickly pears in Texas and a $50,000 study of grape juice in Arkansas. Are we to believe that none of these outlays could be put off to another day?

Not all of the latest rescissions are in agriculture. Pressure groups in Iowa talked some members of Congress into $2 million for economic development in downtown Davenport. In the same fashion, town fathers in Biscayne, Fla., got $65,000 for a local park. North Miami Beach, not to be left out, talked somebody into $505,000 for a performing arts center. Where's the money coming from? Treasury bonds?

The president wants to rescind $3 million to reduce chloride in the Red River Basin of Texas and Oklahoma. The money would be spent on a local water supply. Mr. Bush says local beneficiaries, easily identified, should pay 100 percent of the costs. He's right.

One more question: Why should the U.S. government, meaning all of us, borrow $700,000 in order to refurbish the Cresson Street trestle in Manayunk, Pa.? Manayunk is an old section of Philadelphia, northwest of the center city on the Schuylkill River.

How did Manayunk's ailing trestle get to be the responsibility of Congress? The Department of Housing and Urban Development already pours millions of borrowed dollars into local programs that at least are screened and carefully reviewed. This piece of Pennsylvania pork just popped out of nowhere into HUD's bill.

Manayunk is in Bill Gray's Old 2nd District, now represented by Lucien Blackwell. During his campaign for the vacated seat, Blackwell promised to bring home to his constituents all the pork he could carry. Maybe the Cresson Street Democratic Club, if there is one, will put his picture on the wall. That's how one gets re-elected.

Filberts, hazelnuts, green tomato pickers! Should mink be fed with squawfish? The national debt approaches $4 trillion. This year's pending deficit is $400 billion. And who the hell cares? Not the U.S. Congress, that's for sure.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Friday, April 24, the 115th day of 1992. There are 251 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:
Two hundred years ago, on April 24, 1792, the national anthem of France, "La Marseillaise," was composed by Capt. Claude Joseph Rouget de Lisle, an officer stationed in Strasbourg. It came to be strongly identified with the French Revolution, although, ironically, Rouget de Lisle was a supporter of the monarchy, and had written his song to celebrate France's decision to wage war against Austria and Prussia. It became the French national anthem in 1795.

On this date:
In 1877, federal troops were ordered out of New Orleans, ending the North's post-Civil War rule in the South.

In 1898, Spain declared war on the United States after rejecting America's ultimatum to withdraw from Cuba.

In 1915, the Ottoman Turkish Empire began the brutal mass deportation of Armenians during World War I.

In 1916, some 1,600 Irish nationalists launched the Easter Rising by seizing several key sites in Dublin, including the General Post Office. (The rising was put down by British forces several days later.)

If the birds don't sing Sunday

For more than half a century, Chicago-area residents have been bringing orphaned baby squirrels and birds with broken wings to a charming place called Trailside Natural History Museum.

The curator - the healer of hurts, the female St. Francis and full-time occupant of Trailside - was a naturalist and author, a woman neighbors came to know and to love as Virginia Moe.

For 50 years, Virginia Moe looked after the wild animals of Cook County Forest Preserve. In all that time, she took one brief vacation. But because the volunteers she had left in charge had not cleaned the cages quite brightly enough, Moe never spent another day away from her beloved Trailside.

And when, three years ago, local politicians sought to close Trailside Museum's doors forever, Moe's neighbors and friends - generations of them - rallied to her side, demonstrated with pickets and petitions and saved the wildlife haven.

Then, one night last year, the light in the second-story window of Trailside went out, never to burn again. After 52 years of continuous service, Moe rolled over and went to sleep, comforted in the knowledge that the sick or injured or otherwise needy animals of Cook County Forest Preserve would always have a home.

Sunday - April 26 - Cook County officials will cut the ribbon for a new rehabilitation building adjoining the old Trailside structure. And the ceremony will celebrate something more: The new name of Trailside Natural History Museum will be...

No, Trailside will not be renamed in honor of the woman who gave her life to it. The entire museum will be named instead after a former Cook County commissioner - a tribute from his political cronies. Virginia Moe's name appears nowhere.

But this is Chicago and politics in these parts has a reputation to live down to.

So they will cut a ribbon Sunday.

And one-day visitors to the premises will give it a stranger's name.

But the birds won't sing.

NEA chief's final bow

As the congressional check-kiting scandal has made only too clear, the trouble with Washington these days is that too many of the people who want to run our lives not only think they're above the law, but beyond criticism.

Former National Endowment for the Arts (NEA) Chairman John Frohnmayer has boldly taken this arrogance where few men have gone before.

Until his forced resignation earlier this year, Frohnmayer was responsible for approving federal grants for all sorts of artists, from classical to crackpot. From hearty day one, Frohnmayer stood at the center of the cultural storm - repeatedly giving his okay to projects that many people considered obscene, racist, and anti-religious.

When Christian groups complained about federal grants for "artists" who, for example, dumped crucifixes into jars of urine, Frohnmayer and his cronies dismissed the complainants as barely literate Bible-thumpers. When other criticized the use of federal money for "performance artists" whose performances used to be restricted to such G-String Meccas as The Block in Baltimore, or Boston's Combat Zone, the debate again was miscast as a contest between the sophisticates - defending freedom of expression - and the hayseeds.

Neither Frohnmayer, an elitist with a severe persecution complex, nor the fringe elements of the organized art crowd got the point: Most of the critics were objecting not to the trash that the cognoscenti embrace as art, but to the use of federal tax funds to support it.

Right to the end, Frohnmayer maintained that it was not the federally subsidized pornographic art that was at fault, but American right-wingers, especially those hideous church-goers who dared raise flags of protest.

While Frohnmayer and his chi-chi crowd were busy wrapping themselves in the cloak of sophisticated "tolerance," they lifted their elitism to Olympian heights. Opponents - religious or political - were continually dismissed as neanderthals or neo-Nazis. And anyone who questioned the arts community's moral right to the public purse was hushed with a "free speech" anthem.

In his farewell bow at the National Press Club, the ever-holier-than-thou Frohnmayer painted a verbal picture that would have made even Sen. Joe McCarthy blush - a picture of the rampaging right crushing American freedom underfoot and returning us to the Dark Ages.

"If the National Endowment for the Arts gets picked off," he warned, "public broadcasting is next, and after that research funds for universities, and after that research funds for science. There will be no end to it. It's the Sudetenland now, Czechoslovakia next week, and after that Poland."

If anyone on the right spewed such bilge, he would be laughed right out of polite society. Frohnmayer, on the other hand, received a thunderous ovation from the politically correct faithful.

IMF cautions Russia on economic reform

WASHINGTON (AP) — The head of the International Monetary Fund warned Russia today against any backsliding on its commitment to economic reform.

IMF Managing Director Michel Camdessus said that if the government of Russian President Boris Yeltsin sticks to its reform program, billions of dollars of IMF resources could begin flowing by early summer.

However, Camdessus said he was concerned about news reports that Yeltsin's reform program could be diluted or slowed down because of political pressures inside the country.

Saying he was speaking on behalf of the world community, Camdessus said, "What is essential is to strengthen the stance of adjustment and not dilute it."

Russian officials said on Wednesday that they expected the IMF would approve by mid-May a $4 billion support program for their country with the money beginning to flow soon after that time.

Approval of an IMF program is considered a necessary supporting step for a bigger $24 billion aid program that has been proposed by President Bush and other Western leaders.

Camdessus did not confirm the $4 billion figure, saying that the exact amount of IMF support this year remained to be decided. But he did say that an IMF economic program for Russia could be in place by the start of the summer, with assistance to the other 14 republics expected to be approved soon after that time.

Camdessus said that because of the severity of problems in the area, assistance for Russia and the other republics would be a key topic of discussion at next week's spring meeting of the IMF and its sister lending organization, the World Bank.

The IMF said Wednesday in its "World Economic Outlook" that total output of goods and services fell by 17 percent last year in the 15 former Soviet republics and will drop by an additional 17.5 percent this year.

By comparison, the U.S. economy, which was struggling to overcome its first recession in eight years, suffered a drop in output of 0.7 percent last year.

Both the IMF and World Bank are making preparations to admit the former republics as full members, which will make them eligible for what could amount to $45 billion in IMF and World Bank assistance in coming years.

The Bush administration is counting on the IMF to take the lead in coordinating Western assistance for all the former republics as they seek to switch to free market economies.

The IMF's new economic forecast released Wednesday gave some hint of just how difficult that transformation will be.

It said that in addition to an expected loss of more than one-third of total output in two years, the former Soviet republics could expect to see consumer prices shoot up by 1,000 percent this year following price increases of 86 percent in 1991.

However, IMF officials said that if Russian President Boris Yeltsin's economic reform program is successful, the extreme economic dislocations may begin to moderate by the end of this year.

Michael Mussa, director of the IMF's economic research department, said if the reform program is successful, consumer inflation should slow somewhat to single-digit monthly increases by the end of this year.

The IMF said the economic disruptions in the former Soviet Union and the emerging democracies of Eastern Europe were acting as a drag on the entire world economy.

While the industrial world and other developing nations were able to show growth last year, the huge declines in the former communist countries were enough to result in a 0.3 percent drop in total world output. That marked the first decline in the total world economy since the IMF began tracking this statistic in 1964.

The IMF projected that the world would return to positive, but weak, growth of 1.4 percent. However, this estimate was just half of what the organization had been expecting only six months ago.

The IMF blamed the downward revision on the aborted upturn in the United States last fall, spreading weakness in Europe and Japan and the economic chaos in the former Soviet Union.

While it projected growth would return to a more respectable rate of 3.6 percent in 1993, it said there were risks that this forecast could prove too optimistic as well.

Mussa said the major threats at present were persistently high interest rates in Germany and other European nations and the unsettling effects turmoil in Japanese financial markets could have on that country's economy.

"There are clearly downside risks to the forecast," Mussa said.

The world's seven richest countries — the United States, Japan, Germany, Britain, France, Italy and Canada — will meet Sunday in advance of the IMF and World Bank meetings in an effort to map a coordinated effort to bolster the shaky world economy and iron out differences on the aid package to the former Soviet Union.

Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady has invited Russian Deputy Prime Minister Yegor Gaidar, the architect of Russia's economic reform program, to attend Sunday's meeting of the Group of Seven countries.

Man commits 101 robberies before arrest

NEW YORK (AP) — Gary Cooper began robbing stores last year and was so tentative that some clerks simply refused to give him the cash, police say. But, they add, he polished his style and became phenomenally successful — allegedly pulling off 101 straight jobs before his arrest last month.

Typically, police say, he chose a small store with a female employee, pretended a juice bottle concealed in a paper bag was a gun, and said softly, "Give me your tens and twenties."

Police decided Cooper was the man responsible for 101 robberies around Manhattan over the past year — and were shocked to learn that even though he'd reached the relatively advanced age of 24, he'd never been arrested before.

Lt. Paul O'Connor, a detective commander, says luck may have played a part in one of the longest strings of robberies in recent memory.

"The chance of someone committing 101 robberies and not getting caught is not good. ... And without a previous record?" he said. Most serial robbers, he explained, get caught a few times in their teens.

When Cooper started out, O'Connor said, he was so unsure of himself that one clerk even shouted him out of a store. But gradually, he said, the Bronx resident developed confidence, and by the time of his arrest had mastered a soft yet threatening delivery, laced with profanity.

Police described his appearance as nondescript — not too sharp, not too shabby — making it hard to distinguish him from other fairly tall, fairly good looking guys. He reportedly had a low-key style that attracted little attention as the robbery was in progress, and changed his cap or sweatshirt after each job.

When Cooper entered Handblock, a shop on Lexington Avenue, he politely said, "Good afternoon, ladies. How's it going?" recalls Ramona Rampersand, the manager. "He was carrying The New York Times."

And he stuck to sticking up women.

Police say he robbed Ecco Shoes on Third Avenue in January and allegedly returned the following month for an encore — but was surprised by salesman Angel Rivera. "Suddenly he decided he'd just come in for a business card," Rivera said.

O'Connor says Cooper's biggest asset may have been his lack of a record — police usually show robbery victims books filled with mug shots of habitual robbers.

So far, Cooper has been picked out of 11 lineups and charged in 12 robberies. Next month, dozens of victims and witnesses will jam into the robbery unit's headquarters in Manhattan for another 40 to 50 lineups.

CIA tries to improve its image

By RUTH SINAI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The CIA is trying to clean up its image.

Recommendations on how to do that are included in an internal CIA report made available by the agency Thursday. The document was declassified after critics questioned the point of keeping secret a document titled "Task Force Report on Greater CIA Openness."

The 16-page document, written by one of a dozen task forces recommending changes for a post-Soviet world, suggests more openness — but almost in the same breath concludes that it's not really necessary.

"There was substantial agreement that we generally need to make the institution and the process more visible and understandable rather than strive for openness on specific substantive issues," said the authors.

"We are the most open intelligence agency in the world, which is proper in our form of democracy," they wrote.

"That said, many Americans do not understand the intelligence process" and many "still operate with a romanticized or erroneous view of intelligence from the movies, TV, books and newspapers. These views often damage our reputation and make it harder for us to fulfill our mission."

To remedy that, the task force suggested declassifying old files that shed light on the way the agency operates, conducting more briefings for reporters and academics, and making the agency directors available for TV interviews.

"In short, we are trying to help people understand better what this agency does and how it does it," CIA Director Robert Gates said in response to the recommendations, most of which he approved.

The task force, mindful that the agency would likely be called upon increasingly to explain its role now that the Soviet Union is no more, also recommended more briefings for members of Congress and their staffs.

The recommendations were based on interviews with senior officials in Congress, the news media and the academic and business worlds.

Gates outlined the gist of the report in a Feb. 21 speech in Oklahoma, emphasizing that the CIA intends to declassify files pertaining to several controversial cases, including the 1963 Kennedy assassination, but he authorized declassification of the report only last week.

The names of agency officials mentioned in the report were blacked out to protect their identities for reasons of national security, said an agency spokesman.

The task force recommended that whatever action is taken, the CIA should "be consistent; be excellent; be credible — admit when we are wrong; personalize the agency; preserve the mystique."

Asked to explain, CIA spokesman Peter Earnest said that some things popularized by movies or books "make you jump to a conclusion that we engage in ruthless, immoral activities. That we'd like to dispel."

The task force also said the CIA's Public Affairs Office had developed relationships with every major news service, newspaper and television network in the country.

"This has helped us turn some 'intelligence failure' stories into 'intelligence success' stories, and has contributed to the accuracy of countless others," the report said.

Earnest said the sentence did not intend to imply that the CIA manipulates the media. Rather, he said, it was meant to show that the agency's spokesmen steered reporters away from wrong or misleading information.

ANC youth wing slams rotating presidency plan

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The ANC youth wing today rejected a proposal by President F.W. de Klerk that would clear the way for South Africa's first black head of state, but preserve some white influence.

The influential African National Congress Youth League said the plan was designed to perpetuate white power and delay true democracy. The plan was unacceptable because the government would oversee elections for the interim government, it said.

"The impression that ... the proposals are a step forward, must be rejected with the contempt it deserves," the group said in a statement.

De Klerk called Thursday for multiracial elections for an interim government. The presidency would rotate among the country's main political leaders.

ANC officials said they would not respond to de Klerk's plan until Saturday. The ANC, often criticized for being inefficient, can take days to respond to major political developments.

Its response was not expected to differ from the ANC's Youth League's position. The ANC, the main black political group which is led by Nelson Mandela, has traditionally opposed calls for a coalition government like the one de Klerk proposed.

Saying the plan contains "the backbone of democracy," de Klerk provided the greatest detail yet on how he envisions moving from white domination to power-sharing with the black majority.

He told Parliament each political party would be able to nominate one candidate for a ruling Executive Council.

Sit-in ends

Police disperse protesters

By SHIRLEY LAI
Associated Press Writer

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — Police armed with clubs and shields today dispersed 1,000 protesters, ending a six-day sit-in by demonstrators demanding the right to vote for Taiwan's president. At least 42 people were injured, one seriously.

Officials at the National Taiwan University Hospital said 24 protesters were treated for head injuries. One was in serious condition.

Police said three policemen were hospitalized in stable condition, while 15 policewomen were treated for bites and bruises suffered when they tried to remove demonstrators from the Taipei Railway Station.

Traffic around the station had been paralyzed since Monday afternoon, when supporters of the Democratic Progressive Party began their sit-in.

Interior Minister Wu Poh-hsiung said the police used restraint. But the opposition party accused the police of beating protesters.

More than 2,000 police officers with clubs and shields converged on the protesters at around 4:30 a.m.

The demonstrators shouted "Direct Presidential Election" and "Unite for Taiwan" as they were shoved one-by-one into 22 police buses. Police later released the protesters in several Taipei suburbs.

The opposition Democratic Progressive Party, which holds 74 seats in the 402-member in the National Assembly, has accused the governing Nationalist Party of blocking political reforms as the assembly is holding a 70-day special session to debate constitutional reforms.

The governing party has shelved a proposal for direct presidential elections. Direct presidential elections have been backed by President Lee Teng-hui and other Nationalist liberals, but conservatives contend the plan gives too much power to the president and could encourage moves to declare Taiwan independent of China.

The Nationalist government, which fled to Taiwan in 1949, still claims to be the legitimate government of all China.

The Communist government in Beijing considers Taiwan a break-away province, and has threatened to intervene to stop any independence moves.

Australians test shark-repeller

SURFERS PARADISE, Australia (AP) — Experts are testing a South African-designed device that sends electromagnetic signals to sharks' brains, diverting them from swimmers and preserving other marine life.

Recent tests off the northern coast of Queensland state proved the device was effective against six breeds of sharks.

Leading Australian shark experts Ron and Valerie Taylor and staff of the Sea World marine park now are experimenting with the device, designed by South African Norman Starkey and developed in conjunction with the Natal Shark Board.

Starkey hopes the device, contained in a small box, will eventually replace the shark nets that are used to keep sharks away from major beaches in both Australia and South Africa.

Dr. Fabian Fay, general manager of Sea World, said shark nets catch other forms of marine life, like dolphins, whales and turtles, which died when trapped. A young surfer who also became trapped in netting recently died.

Valerie Taylor said initial tests in tanks and the ocean had proved successful.

"I wore a personal zapper, which scared sharks away after only three pulses," Taylor told The Associated Press. "The sharks are not damaged. They simply swim away."

The shark must be within a few body lengths of the individual-sized device for the waves to have an effect. A larger version has a greater range.

"At one stage I was feeding sharks by hand. There was a feeding frenzy going on, but the sharks went away after three pulses from the zapper," Taylor said.

"The workings are simple, but it still needs to be modified before being developed commercially," she said.

Starkey plans to modify his invention and offer it for sale commercially. He also is working on a version of the device which could be fitted to life jackets.

McMartin to Little Rascals: Abuse cases come a long way

By LISA LEVITT RYCKMAN
AP National Writer

Important lessons emerged from the dense, emotional legal thicket known as the McMartin Pre-School molestation case, and investigators in the Little Rascals sexual abuse case learned them well.

The result: two similar cases, both involving hundreds of charges of child sexual abuse, many victims and many defendants — but very different outcomes.

"We have just learned a great deal from what was done in McMartin — prosecution, investigation, interviewing — and I think the verdict in this case reflects that," said Theresa Reid, executive director of the American Professional Society on the Abuse of Children, a 2,500-member group formed in 1987 to educate and train professionals in the latest techniques for dealing with child abuse.

The investigation into sexual abuse allegations at the Little Rascals Day Care Center in Edenton, N.C., began three years and three months ago. The $1.2 million trial of Robert F. Kelly Jr. lasted nine months and ended in a conviction Wednesday.

Kelly, the first of seven defendants, was found guilty of 99 of 100 sex abuse charges involving 12 children, ages 4 to 7. He was sentenced to 12 consecutive life terms.

McMartin began in the summer of 1983 with a mother's call to a Manhattan Beach, Calif., police detective with suspicions that her 2 1/2-year-old son had been molested. It ended seven years and $13.5 million later, with two acquittals and charges dropped against five defendants before trial. It was the longest, most expensive criminal prosecution in U.S. history.

"One of the lessons we learned from McMartin is when we ask people to do investigative interviews, they need to be trained in that, to know what to expect and what we need, and how best to gather that information," said Patricia Toth, director of the Alexandria, Va.-

based National Center for the Prosecution of Child Abuse.

As in the McMartin case, the Kelly defense argued the charges arose, among other things, from suggestions made to the children by investigators. Several defense psychologists testified that adults could have planted ideas in the children's minds.

McMartin jurors believed that. But a Little Rascals juror, Dennis Ray, said after the verdict that they believed the 12 children who testified against Kelly.

"This is the science that really has been evolving over the last several years," said Anne Cohn Donnelly, executive director of the National Committee for Prevention of Child Abuse. "That there are ways to ask children questions that everyone would agree are not leading, and are not brainwashing, but are a way to get children to talk about what happened to them."

The judicial system has changed since McMartin in ways that make it easier to respond effectively to child sexual abuse cases, advocates say.

"Not only are we better at interviewing children, but we're better able to preserve a whole range of evidence," said Deborah Daro, the national committee's research director. "So people are going to court with not just one word against another."

Changes include new laws, better investigative methods and improved court procedures and coordination of different agencies involved, Toth said.

"Both McMartin and this case were very complicated. I think we learned from McMartin that the best response to a case like this is ... to have a crisis intervention plan set up before the case even comes along," she said. "If you have to regroup once the case is reported and then develop your plan for tackling it, you're going to lose valuable time — and valuable evidence."

McMartin took place at a time when there was little insight into investigating sexual abuse allegations involving many victims, Donnelly said.

"That was really the first big public case like that, and there really wasn't a lot of knowledge about how to do an adequate investigation and safeguard children, while also safeguarding the evidence so you could present it in a defensible way in the courtroom," she said.

"What we see in North Carolina is, people have learned those lessons."

Plane found; cause of crash sought

HONOLULU (AP) — Rescuers removed the bodies of nine plane crash victims from the slope of a dormant volcano as investigators focused on why the twin-engine sightseeing plane went down.

"The only information we can give you right now is that we do know both engines were running," George Combs of the Federal Aviation Administration said Thursday after the charred wreckage of the Beech 18 was discovered on Haleakala Crater on Maui Island.

The plane, operated by Scenic Air Tours Hawaii, crashed Wednesday on the last leg of a daylong, four-island excursion from Hawaii Island to Honolulu.

The plane wasn't flying along the company's planned course, said Rob Jackson, the company's operations director. Heavy clouds were reported around Haleakala at the time of the crash.

Iraq's troop count said less than half claimed by Pentagon

By DONNA CASSATA
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States and its allies faced a demoralized Iraqi military of 183,000 troops, less than half the force estimated by the Pentagon, when the ground war to liberate Kuwait began, according to a congressional report.

The House Armed Services Committee, in its review of the Persian Gulf War, estimated Thursday that U.S. and allied troops held an overwhelming 5-to-1 advantage at the start of the ground war on Feb. 23, 1991.

The Pentagon said repeatedly during the war that Iraqi forces in the region totaled more than 500,000.

The Defense Department declined comment on the new report.

The congressional panel agreed in many respects with the department's 1,300-page study of the conflict, giving high marks to the decisive aerial attacks, the role of sophisticated technology and the performance of the 540,000 U.S. men and women.

But the committee's assessment also addressed the one major issue the Pentagon has avoided in its post-mortems — the size of the Iraqi military.

The panel estimated that 183,000 Iraqi troops remained after enduring constant bombing attacks from the allied air campaign. The number is based on the 63,000 who were captured in the ground war, and the panel's calculation that 120,000 either escaped or were killed.

The report also said 17,000 Iraqis were injured and 9,000 were killed in the air war. The study provided no total figures on either Iraqi military or civilian deaths.

The 89-page committee report is based on interviews with some 1,000 people who fought the war, including those who questioned captured Iraqi commanders.

The chairman of the House panel said the Pentagon's failure to tackle the issue of Iraqi troop strength prevents a complete accounting of the war.

"Credible figures could help us know more about how air power worked — whether it devastated ground forces by killing them or by hurting morale so they deserted," Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., said in releasing the report at a Capitol Hill news conference.

The Pentagon has never released formal estimates on the total number of Iraqi deaths, although some officials have said it could have been as many as 100,000 while Air Force Gen. Charles Horner has suggested the figure is as low as 10,000.

The congressional study,

"Defense For A New Era: Lessons of the Persian Gulf War," praised the Patriot missile for successfully defending Saudi Arabian military sites and keeping Israel out of the war.

Aspin brushed aside recent findings, confirmed by the Army, that the Patriot was not as effective against Iraq's Scud ballistic missile as initially thought.

"It performed beyond even the most optimistic expectations and gave us capabilities far greater than what we have ever had," Aspin said.

In World War II, the Air Force estimated that it took 9,000 bombs to destroy the average major target, according to Aspin. During the Vietnam War, the number was about 300. In the Gulf War, it took about two precision guided munitions to destroy a target, Aspin said.

The report faulted the U.S. military for intelligence information that arrived too late, problems in battlefield communications, a lack of preparation for mine clearing, and limited equipment for the Marines to fight at night.

In one instance, when the Iraqi air force was fleeing to Iran, U.S. officials wanted to notify Navy F-14 jet fighters and Air Force F-15 planes to turn off their radars in hopes of fooling the Iraqis into taking off so they could be shot down, the report said.

Air Force command planes were able to signal the F-15s, but couldn't communicate with the Navy fighters, so the ploy didn't work.

Environmentalists attack oil recycling claims

WASHINGTON (AP) — Three oil companies are trying to get motorists to recycle their used oil and help the environment, but environmentalists aren't impressed. They say the used oil is collected and burned, releasing toxic chemicals into the air.

The Sierra Club and two other environmental groups complained Thursday to the Federal Trade Commission, claiming that television ads by Amoco, Exxon and Mobil are deceptive because they promote their oil collection programs as being environmentally beneficial.

"Burning used oil is not recycling; it's polluting," said Daniel Weiss of the Sierra Club. The environmentalists were especially concerned about releases of lead, a carcinogen that also may affect the nervous systems of children, when the used oil is burned.

The American Petroleum Institute, an industry trade group, called the complaint to the FTC "completely unfounded" and said the used oil when burned has lead levels only one-tenth of the legal limit set by the Environmental Protection Agency.

Amoco defended its ads and said its oil recycling program keeps motorists from putting used motor oil "in the garbage, down the drain or in the back yard."

"Burning is recycling when it comes to a petroleum product," James Boyajian, Amoco's general manager of marketing, said in a statement the company issued in Chicago.

FTC spokesman Don Elder said the agency planned no immediate comment.

The environmentalists conceded that the oil companies are not violating any federal or state laws in the way they dispose of the oil. But they contend that the companies should treat the used oil to remove toxic chemicals before burning it or that the oil should be re-refined.

Industry officials said most of the oil collected is used as industrial fuel in such facilities as cement kilns and asphalt plants after it is diluted with virgin oil.

EPA spokeswoman Robin Woods said lead content must be less than 100 parts per million when used oil is burned. "This is fully protective of human health and the environment," she said. The industry said lead levels often are one-tenth that amount when the oil is burned because it has been diluted.

Environmentalists have tried to have used oil classified as a hazardous waste because it contains a variety of toxic chemicals such as lead, arsenic and chromium. The Bush administration recently rejected such a classification and efforts in Congress to recategorize used oil have been strongly opposed by the petroleum industry.

Weiss maintained that while the companies are not violating any environmental laws, their advertising is deceptive. "They leave the impression that the companies handle used oil in an environmentally safe manner," he said at a news conference.

Nearly 800 million gallons of used oil are collected through various means each year and most of it is burned, the environmentalists said. They cited EPA findings that showed emissions from burning used oil was the leading source of airborne lead pollution from industrial sources in 1989.

Bush wants to speed up trade pact

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush says he will push for a major trade agreement with Mexico before the November election, but Democrats say he'll run into a fight with Congress unless he negotiates a better deal.

"The president simply hasn't argued forcefully on the competitive issues regarding the United States and Mexico that really matter: adequate environmental controls, worker rights and the policies we need to create high-wage jobs in America," House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt said.

Gephardt issued his statement Thursday night after Bush, in a speech to the Council of the Americas, said he had instructed U.S. negotiators to speed up work on a treaty to bring Mexico into a tariff-free trade alliance with the United States and Canada.

"There will be no delay because of American politics," the president promised. He said trade with Mexico supports hundreds of thousands of U.S. jobs, and that the proposed agreement would create thousands more.

Trade has become a major issue in the presidential race, and Bush has been attacked from all sides.

Rejecting Bush's drive for open markets, conservative challenger Patrick Buchanan has espoused an "America First" policy to cut foreign aid and protect American jobs by restricting imports.

The president's campaign for a free-trade zone with Mexico has been criticized by a coalition of labor, consumer and environmental groups on grounds that American companies would move their plants to Mexico, where labor costs are cheaper and environmental standards weaker.

Bush said a free-trade region comprising the United States, Canada and Mexico would be the largest market in the world, with 360 million consumers and a $6 trillion economy.

He said American merchandise exports to Mexico had increased by two-thirds over the last three years, while exports of autos, auto parts and telecommunications equipment have doubled.

"Today we still have to combat the flat-Earth mentality, the mindset that urges us to barricade our borders against competition, to shut off the free exchange of food and machinery and skills and ideas," Bush said.

The president also criticized Congress, saying it had failed to appropriate money for a $1.5 billion aid fund for Latin America or funds for a debt-for-nature program in which the United States would forgive debts owed by foreign countries in return for steps to improve the environment.

"The courageous Latin American leaders who are reforming their economies and breaking down barriers to trade and investment need our support," Bush said. "They are the true liberators of our era."

In his speech, Bush also announced an easing of Cold War trade restrictions on high-technology exports. The move will permit all computers, including supercomputers, to be exported to many European countries without prior approval.

The Commerce Department said the move was "a substantial liberalization in export trade controls in high-volume export markets."

"We estimate these regulations will eliminate the need for prior Commerce approval on 2,000 or 3,000 exports annually and deregulate $2 billion to $3 billion in annual U.S. trade," Commerce Secretary Barbara Hackman Franklin said.

LOOKING HER BEST FOR

Easter

Easter is a day of conquest... a day of new life... a day of beginnings... This is the day that our Saviour arose in a mighty triumph over the grave. This is a day of joy... a day to remember... a day to attend services in the church that our Lord loved so much, but even though we all want to dress up and look our best for this special day it is not the most important part, for God does not look on outward appearances, but looks on the heart.

The Church is God's appointed agency in this world for spreading the knowledge of His love for man and of His demand for man to respond to that love by loving his neighbor. Without this grounding in the love of God, no government or society or way of life will long persevere and the freedoms which we hold so dear will inevitably perish. Therefore, even from a selfish point of view, one should support the Church for the sake of the welfare of himself and his family. Beyond that, however, every person should uphold and participate in the Church because it tells the truth about man's life, death and destiny; the truth which alone will set him free to live as a child of God.

Forces move to safeguard environment

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

"The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof," reads Psalm 24. People don't own this planet, in the biblical perspective, but are assigned by God as caretakers of it. They are to "till it and keep it," says Genesis 2:15. To "keep" means to preserve and protect, to maintain its divinely termed "goodness."

That mandate and other biblical pointers to the singular value of the natural environment and humanity's responsibility of caring for it have aroused America's religious forces to that cause.

"It is what God made and beheld as good that is under assault," says a broad cross-section of religious leaders. "The future of this gift so freely given is in our hands, and we must maintain it as we have received it."

With observance of "Earth Day" this week and an ecumenical "Ecology Sunday" this weekend, churches are planning strong representation at the United Nations "Earth Summit" in Rio de Janeiro June 1-12, involving governmental delegates and thousands of others from around the world.

An ecumenically backed "Environmental Sabbath" was set June 7 to call attention to the international efforts to safeguard nature.

Churches have "drawn together about this," says the Rev. Ken Grant of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), based in Louisville, Ky. "We woke up. We've been sobered to learn of the harm being done to the environment."

Virtually every major religious body or their leaders, Protestant, Roman Catholic, Eastern Orthodox and Jewish, have joined in that effort in the last few years, with a growing crescendo of concern.

"The web of life is one," U.S. Roman Catholic bishops said last November, adding that the task of sustaining human life itself "cannot be separated from the care and defense of all of creation."

Most major Protestant denominations, the Episcopal Church, United Methodist Church, American Baptist Churches and the United Church of Christ, among others, have adopted calls to safeguard nature.

"The new global reality and our faith call us to make environmental justice and stewardship a central concern of our church's mission," said the 1990 General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

The Evangelical Lutheran Church in America is shaping a "revolutionary" social statement for church assembly action on the issue, says biologist Paul Lutz of Greensboro, N.C., head of the church's environmental task force.

"If every member did everything that was in this statement, it would cause a revolution the likes of which we have not seen," he said, noting changed practices urged.

Judaism plunged strongly into the movement in an unusually inclusive meeting in mid-March of leaders of all four wings of that faith, Orthodox, Conservative, Reform and Reconstructionist.

"For Jews, the environmental crisis is a religious challenge," the group said. "As heirs to a tradition of stewardship that goes back to Genesis and that teaches us to be partners in the ongoing work of Creation, we cannot accept the escalating destruction of our environment...."

Pampa Chapel to host revival

Pampa Chapel, 711 E. Harvester, is scheduled to begin revival services on Sunday with the Rev. Randy Dalton of Thornfield, Mo.

Services are set for 11 a.m. and 6 p.m. on Sunday and at 7:30 p.m. on weeknights. The services are scheduled to conclude May 3.

Dalton speaks to numerous summer youth camps, using a straight forward, humorous style, according to Pastor Howard Whiteley.

Sandra Huff of Oklahoma City will be the guest musician. She taught music in the Apostolic Faith Bible College and sang with that choir.

Whiteley invites the public to attend the services. A nursery will be provided.

Gospel singing set for tonight

First Free Will Baptist Church, 731 Sloan, plans a gospel singing at 7 p.m. today at the church.

Pastor L.C. Lynch invites the public to attend and participate in the singing.

St. Mark's plans fish fry, bake sale

St. Mark's CME Church, 406 Elm, plans a fish fry with all the trimmings and a bake sale on Saturday.

The event is scheduled to begin at 11:30 a.m. The public is invited.

Poll shows faith brings happiness

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Digging into deeper levels of religion, pollster George H. Gallup Jr. has found some striking evidence that faith is good for you — and for others with whom you deal.

But the benefits, he says, seem to show up clearly only when faith is strong.

"We now have empirical evidence of it," he said.

For a half century, the Gallup organization has been taking measurements on people's religious beliefs and practices, providing a kind of running graph of overt religious leanings and activity in America.

But only lately has he delved into the more complex ramifications of it — the impact on lives.

In two different recent studies, one on effects of prayer, and another on conduct and attitudes in relation to strength of belief, findings were that the most genuinely devout were the happiest and most helpful people.

"The evidence overwhelmingly points to their being truly better and happier," he said in an interview. He added there has been little investigation of effects of religion on individual outlook and behavior.

"This area has been mostly neglected by the social sciences," he said.

The Gallup study, whose full results still are to be published in book form this summer as "The Saints Among Us," used factors on a 1-to-12 scale to gauge levels of religious commitment.

By those measurements, developed by the Gallup Institute's expanding Religion Research Center in Princeton, N.J., only 13 percent of believers were found in the category of the most religiously committed.

Those with this strong, transforming faith were found through further extensive, indirect yet revealing responses to have the following characteristics setting them apart from others:

They were more ethical in personal dealings, more tolerant of persons with different backgrounds, more apt to perform charitable acts, more concerned about the betterment of society and far happier.

"We've all heard stories of people of deep faith rising above circumstances to heroic altruism," Gallup said. "Here we have full-scale statistical evidence of it."

On the other hand, he said, the study showed that the further people are down the scale of religious commitment, the less happy they are, less ethical, less generous, less socially concerned and less tolerant.

Also, noting a "general assumption that the more religious people are, the more close-minded and bigoted they are," he said. "We found just the opposite. This is an extremely important finding."

The study involved repeated samplings, the latest of 1,052 adults, with a margin of error of 2-3 percentage points.

In contrast to the distinguishing qualities of the highly committed, he said comparisons between ordinary religion members and non-members showed little ethical difference in such matters as lying, tax evasion and pilfering.

However, the research showed, those who are members of religions were found to have a brighter outlook and be more active in civic-charitable work and in volunteering time.

Gallup, 61, is a warm-mannered, 6-foot-3 Episcopalian whose father in the 1930s originated his survey system, a now widespread technique.

The pollster son, inclined at times to enter the ministry himself, sees his increased survey investigations into religious conditions as also serving that cause.

He said another recent study showed powerful personal effects of a certain kind of prayer — meditative or "listening-to-God" prayer, in which a sense of closeness to the divine is most likely.

That kind of prayer was differentiated from petitionary, conversational or ritually formulated prayer.

Gallup said effects of meditative prayer are found to be "often profound in terms of life satisfaction, finding purpose and meaning in life and the ability to forgive others who have hurt them."

Results of that study, recently published as "Varieties of Prayer," by Gallup and University of Akron sociologist Margaret Poloma, involved 1,030 adults, with a margin of error of 2-3 percentage points.

Gallup said those practicing meditative prayer were found to be more satisfied in their lives and most likely to forgive themselves their mistakes and to accept forgiveness from God.

It's the "very key" to acceptance by self and by God, he said. "The importance of the forgiving grace of God is becoming recognized in psychiatry, which used to ignore it."

With his bolstered case for the beneficial effects of deep religious commitment and meditative prayer, Gallup said he now plans for researchers to go back and find out what brought about those particular traits.

First Assembly of God plans revival services

First Assembly of God, 500 S. Cuyler, plans to host revival services Sunday through Wednesday, according to Pastor Charles Shugart.

Services on Sunday are set for 10:30 a.m. and 6:30 p.m. On Monday through Wednesday, services are set for 7 p.m.

Shugart said the public is invited to attend the services.

Religion roundup

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. Roman Catholic bishops advocate comprehensive reform of the nation's health care system.

In a letter sent to all members of Congress, Bishop James W. Malone of Youngstown, Ohio, chairman of the bishops' domestic policy committee, said:

"In our parishes and schools, our shelters and clinics, we see the consequences of failed and confused policy — the families without insurance, the sick without options, the children without care.

"When the health care system leaves so many people uncared for — affecting human life itself — then this system is in need of serious and comprehensive reform."

EVANSTON, Ill. (AP) — United Methodists gave 8.55 percent more to churchwide causes in the first quarter of 1992 than during the same period of 1991, the church reports.

The Rev. Clifford Dorke, top executive of finance and administration, says the increase "tells me that people are still very committed to mission."

DALLAS (AP) — In the six months since 25 people were fatally shot at a local Luby's Cafeteria, Killeen and surrounding towns have become more religious, some clergy and laypeople say.

Church attendance rose 10 percent to 20 percent after the Oct. 16 massacre. Everywhere, people seemed to ask about the meaning of life and the nature of evil.

Workers prepare to lower the caskets of two victims of Guadalajara's massive sewer explosions at Mazquitan Cemetery Thursday. About 120 graves were dug at this cemetery alone for those who died in Wednesday's blasts in the Reforma district of Guadalajara. The blasts killed as many as 202 people and injured more than 1,300.

Mexico, U.S. join in aid to victims

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexican and U.S. humanitarian groups have joined together to rush everything from tents to teddy bears to survivors of the deadly sewer explosions in Mexico's second-largest city.

Texas architects offered their help in rebuilding the section of eastern Guadalajara that was nearly destroyed by Wednesday's series of explosions. A grocery chain in San Antonio offered to fill a caravan of trucks with food and water for the trip to Guadalajara.

The private U.S. relief organization Américas on Thursday sent a plane carrying 85,000 pounds of bandages, medication and materials for temporary shelters to the city, where at least 176 people were killed and more than 1,300 injured in the blasts.

President Carlos Salinas de Gortari urged countrymen to show unity "with the victims of this tragedy, for the families driven from their homes and other goods ... and for those who lost their lives in this episode, which is so painful for all Mexicans."

Guadalajarans joined in to donate blood, take in homeless relatives and help rescue crews and those affected by the disaster salvage what they could from the debris. Reporters said the spirit of charity was similar to that shown by Mexicans in the 1985 Mexico City earthquake that killed 10,000 people.

The federal government has not issued an appeal to worldwide groups for assistance, but the state government set up a special bank account for private donations to aid the victims. Mexican labor unions sent shipments of toys and emergency goods to the city of 3 million, 350 miles north of Mexico City.

Street children at Mexico City's Covenant House decided Thursday to donate the presents they would receive on the traditional April 30 "Day of the Child" to the children orphaned by the Guadalajara explosions. A San Francisco group had sent the Mexico City children a shipment of teddy bears for the holiday.

The governor of Jalisco state, which includes Guadalajara, said relief officials had distributed 5,000 food rations and 12,038 blankets by late Thursday.

Gov. Guillermo Cosío Vidaurri also promised that "families who lost their homes would get priority to quickly occupy new government-financed housing."

A state spokesman, Armando Morquecho, said 1,224 homes in Guadalajara's eastern Reforma neighborhood had been destroyed by the blasts, which gouged trenches up to 2 1/2-2 miles long through the city.

Pope John Paul II expressed his condolences and offered an "initial" donation from the Vatican of $40,000.

In the United States, Red Cross and Catholic church officials were also organizing relief efforts, said Shirl Thomas, a mayor's assistant in San Antonio. The Texas municipality is the sister city to Guadalajara.

No nudes, bad news

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — It was a case of no nudes, bad news for the Valhalla cinema.

The avant-garde theatre offered free entry today to a special matinee showing of "The Naked Lunch," the bizarre new film by Canadian director David Cronenberg.

The only catch was that nudity was a condition of entry. Considering that winter is just around the corner, changing rooms were available for doffing clothes after arrival.

But the Valhalla was forced to cancel the show when no one turned up.

Mayor, sewer chief ask for leaves of absence

GUADALAJARA, Mexico (AP) — Investigators grilled top officials early this morning on whether criminal negligence contributed to devastating sewer blasts that killed at least 202 people. The mayor and sewer chief, among those under fire, asked for leaves of absence.

Half the victims in at least nine explosions that turned much of a working class neighborhood to rubble Wednesday were children, said Jalisco state's health minister, Dr. Palemon Rodriguez.

Many tiny wooden coffins were among about 120 lowered Thursday into graves in one cemetery near the disaster site in Mexico's second-largest city.

Authorities said the likely cause of the blasts was either volatile hexane leaked by a cooking-oil company or gasoline leaked from tanks owned by the state oil company, Pemex.

A chemical engineer who heads a state team of investigators, Esequiel Mendez, said late Thursday that Pemex is one of the main suspects.

Officials from both companies denied responsibility.

In a news conference in Guadalajara Thursday afternoon, President Carlos Salinas de Gortari demanded that a probe determine within 72 hours who and what were responsible for the blasts. Residents had complained days earlier about fumes.

He ordered investigators to establish if the disaster "could have been avoided and as a consequence, if there was criminal negligence of public servants."

Questioning of officials began Thursday and continued early today. Salinas apparently is attempting to avoid possible political fallout from the disaster. His party, which has won every election since 1929 despite ongoing complaints of corruption, suffered after accusations of inaction following the 1985 Mexico City earthquake in which 10,000 died.

If the investigation determines that Pemex was to blame, high-level federal and state officials may be fired.

People left homeless or bereaved by Wednesday's blast had no reservations about blaming the government.

"They cover up," said taxi driver Alfonso Gomez, who lived in the area. "The government does that all the time."

State officials promised to give the thousands uprooted by Wednesday's blasts priority in new government-financed housing.

Thursday, Guadalajara Mayor Enrique Dau Flores ordered the evacuation of a section of the Alamo district, east of the Reforma district struck Wednesday, after residents complained of fumes. Officials have been criticized for not responding to Reforma residents' complaints of gas fumes.

Mexican and U.S. relief organizations joined to rush aid to the disaster victims, with one group of Mexico City street children donating teddy bears they had received as presents.

The explosions destroyed 20 to 25 square city blocks in the Reforma district, hurled cars and trucks into the air and blew up adobe houses. About 15,000 people were left homeless, officials said.

The casualty count was uncertain. The state attorney general, Leonardo Larios Guzman, said the death toll was 202; the Red Cross said 184; and the state health minister said 176, half of them children.

Jalisco Gov. Guillermo Cosío Villegas said 1,361 people were injured. The first damage estimate was $300 million.

At a makeshift morgue in a sports stadium, relatives wailed as they looked at a list of names of the dead identified so far. One man picked up the body of child and put it into a tiny white coffin.

"It's the biggest tragedy that we've ever had in Guadalajara," said volunteer Ralph Espinoza. "It's out of Dante, you know, the Inferno."

With the grief came angry demands to know why the government failed to act promptly on reports of fumes.

Guadalajara Mayor Dau Flores and his sewer system chief, Gualberto Limon, on Thursday asked for leaves of absence during the investigations, Jalisco state officials said.

Gov. Villegas had earlier blamed Limon and two other city officials for taking no action on residents' complaints of leaking gas. Dau Flores said Limon and the fire chief sent inspectors to the scene Tuesday evening, but they went home after assuring him the danger was receding.

State officials had been quick to blame cooking oil companies, but backed off Thursday and said they would wait for the results of an investigation.

Jorge Alexandre, a senior manager for the La Central cooking oil company, said the firm had a system to control hexane seepage and leaked only traces of the chemical in the worst of times. It would have taken tons of hexane to cause a blast of Wednesday's proportions, he said.

Pemex, which has fuel storage tanks in the area, sent workers into the Reforma district to check lines on Thursday. It later suspended natural gas deliveries to industrial customers and closed its gas stations there. Francisco Rojas, the company's director-general, described the moves as precautionary.

Advocate for rape survivor's rights reveals personal story

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
News Editor

"I am a rape survivor."
With this stark sentence, Nancy Ziegenmeyer's reality of rape began to unfold for an audience of more than 50 at the Coronado Inn Starlight Room earlier this week.

Ziegenmeyer's story won a Pulitzer Prize in 1991 for The Des Moines Register. Breaking a tradition of media anonymity for rape victims, Ziegenmeyer allowed her name to be used publicly in the hopes that other rape victims would benefit from her experiences.

She continues to speak out as an advocate for rape survivors' rights — including confidentiality — and is an expert on rape prevention.

Rape prevention was the last thing on Ziegenmeyer's mind early one morning as she sat in her car in an Iowa college parking lot. She was cramming for a real estate exam. All the doors of the car were locked, except for the one closest to her.

That was the door the man opened.

"He grabbed me by the neck and told me to get over in the car," she remembered. The man threatened to kill her. He reclined the passenger seat as far as it was go and made her lie on it with a dish towel on her face and her jacket laid over her. The man, a complete stranger to Ziegenmeyer, drove off.

"I thought a lot of things," Ziegenmeyer recalled. "Will I ever see my children again? Will I ever see my husband? Most of all, I wondered 'How much longer do I have left to live?'"

She had no idea where he took her. He stopped at a house and honked several times, then left again, finally stopping in a parking lot. During the drive, he kept up a constant stream of chatter, telling her about his sister who was raped by a white man, asking her who she voted for in the last election. Fearing she might spark a fit of rage if she gave the wrong answer, Ziegenmeyer told him she did not vote in the election.

The rape occurred in the car in the parking lot. Afterwards, the man looked through her purse. Seeing her driver's license and photographs of her children, he said he knew where she lived and that she had children and threatened to kill the children if she went to police.

"He told me I better not have given him AIDS," she remembered. Ziegenmeyer had more reason to be concerned that she did not get AIDS. She soon learned that in Iowa a rape victim does not have the right to know if a perpetrator has AIDS or any form of venereal disease.

The rapist took off her wedding rings and wiped everything with the dish towel, even her skin and face, she remembered. He told her to stay in the floor of the car for 10 minutes and then left.

About a minute later, Ziegen-meyer got up and looked around. Not seeing anyone, she got into the driver's seat of her car and sped away.

"I was lost. I didn't know where I was. I was in shock," she said. "I didn't make a conscious decision to go to a hospital. I just came up on a hospital."

Still, she was afraid to report the rape.

"My sexual past was not spotless. I thought they wouldn't believe me. I thought they would think I was a whore. I felt pretty dirty," she said. "Rape counselors say that's the way most rape victims feel."

Ziegenmeyer said there are four reasons why a rape victim should go to a hospital, however.

First, for the victim's psychological health.

Second, for the victim's physical health.

Third, to preserve evidence of the rape.

And fourth, to notify law enforcement that a rapist is on the loose and to help keep someone else from being raped.

"There is no way to adequately prepare a victim for the further intrusion of a rape exam," Ziegenmeyer warned. The exam includes an interview where the victim must describe the rape in detail, the clothing is taken for evidence, the physical exam where the victim is checked for injuries and physical evidence is taken; and the interview by police.

Citing her own experiences in the criminal justice system, Ziegenmeyer said she believes the victims get lost in the shuffle while the defendant has the advantages.

She was not allowed in the courtroom except to testify. The defendant watched the entire proceedings. What she told the district attorney was public record. What the defendant told his lawyer was privileged.

"Rape survivors need a more active role in the justice system," she said.

But despite the problems with successfully prosecuting a rape case, Ziegenmeyer said a victim's decision to file charges is the first step to regaining control.

Then the long, difficult road to healing begins.

"A rape victim needs lots of help to heal," Ziegenmeyer said. "After my rape, all hopes of being a real estate agent were dead. My husband had to go to the bathroom with me at night. I would not go to answer the door without someone from my family with me."

"My family was as much an emotional hostage to this man as I was," she said. "My husband never blamed me or rejected me for what happened to me. But he was very angry with the rapist. He drank a lot to help him deal with it."

Ziegenmeyer said those close to the rape victims have as difficult a time dealing with the rape as the victim, but do not get the emotional assistance that the victim often gets from counselors and support organizations.

"We, as a society, can't deal with the victim, let alone with the victim's significant other," she said.

Husbands and boyfriends often feel guilty because they were unable to protect the victims and they are angry at the victims for not fighting back harder or for not getting well as fast as they think they should.

Ziegenmeyer cautioned that healing from an experience like rape takes time and a strong effort by the victim.

"I must tell you that probably no amount of counseling in the world will make the experience go away," she said.

The victim herself must make the decision whether to remain a rape victim or become a rape survivor.

"You can help her regain control and help her with her feelings that go with the rape, but eventually the decision to heal is her own," she said.

"You have to realize you can't wave a magic wand and heal the victim. It's up to the victims themselves and it takes time. Healing won't come until the victim says she will no longer give control to the rapist. And it will not be at the same rate or in the same way."

Victim confidentiality is "one of my causes," Ziegenmeyer said. Acknowledging that "sunshine" on an issue can often help resolve the problems, she cautioned "You need to realize that too much sunshine can burn some victims."

Ziegenmeyer said she does not think it is proper to publish every victim's name, to require every victim to go to counseling or to prosecute every rape case.

What really matters is how society views rape survivors, she said. "When society hears the word rape, society thinks 'sex,' a victim thinks 'death,'" she explained.

"I do not support the publishing of names without the victims' consent," she said. "But I do support a change in the stigma attached to rape survivors."

MEMPHIS, TENN.

DEAR ABBY: Bad breath can be the result of the formation of exudates in the crevices above the tonsils. These exudates contain bacteria that have a very offensive odor. I cured my problem by flushing out the crevices with a Water Pik, set on the lowest setting, once a week.

DENTON, TEXAS

DEAR ABBY: After my best friend told me my breath was offensive, I went to my doctor. He sent me to my dentist, who said it could be due to tartar under my gums. He referred me to a dentist who specializes in the DEAR ABBY: If the woman with bad breath would simply brush her tongue every time she brushes her teeth, her bad breath would disappear like magic. I have been doing this ever since I read it in your column about 15 years ago.

BOZEMAN, MONT.

DEAR ABBY: My husband had terrible bad breath! Finally, after several rounds of antibiotics, his doctor sent him to an E.N.T. specialist. The new doctor found the cause: My husband's lingual tonsils (the ones at the base of the tongue — not the set on either side of his throat) were infected (they were rotting!), hence the terrible odor. The tonsils were removed, which solved his bad breath problem.

PUEBLO, COLO.

DEAR ABBY: When people tend to step back a few feet as you come up to speak with them, you can be sure something is wrong. At times my mouth tasted like the bottom of a chicken coop. I went to the doctor and he prescribed Mylanta II, because he thought my bad breath was caused by food lodging in my hiatal hernia. He said the Mylanta II would coat the pocket of the hernia and allow the food particles to slip out. Such a simple remedy for something that caused so much distress! Thanks for being there, Abby.

Sonics, Blazers win playoff openers

By The Associated Press

The Seattle SuperSonics came up big against the Golden State Warriors on opening night of the NBA playoffs.

The Golden State Warriors, who scored 995 more points than Seattle during the regular season but lack a power player, couldn't handle the SuperSonics inside Thursday night, losing 117-109.

"They are bigger and more athletic than we are," Warriors coach Don Nelson said. "They beat us in all areas of the game. I'm a little discouraged. The matchup problems at our end are not going to go away."

The Warriors, playing with a homecourt advantage for the first time since 1977, were out rebounded 52-34. Shawn Kemp, a 6-foot-10, 245-pound forward starting at center despite the return from injury of 7-footer Benoit Benjamin, was Nelson's chief tormentor with 28 points and 16 rebounds.

In other playoff openers, Portland beat the Los Angeles Lakers 115-102, Boston tripped Indiana 124-113 and Cleveland defeated New Jersey 120-113.

Seattle led 96-80 after three quarters before the Warriors closed to 106-101 with 3:07 left. The two teams traded two baskets before Gary Payton made a reverse layup with 1:27 left, giving the Sonics a 112-105 lead.

"We had an inside mentality, but I thought the ball bounced our way a lot," Seattle coach George Karl said. "We kind of panicked a little bit down the stretch, but we were able to get back into it with our offensive rebounding."

Billy Owens scored 25 points, Sarunas Marciulionis 23 and Tim Hardaway 22 for third-seeded Golden State, which plays at home again on Saturday. Chris Mullin, who suffered a leg injury on Sunday, struggled throughout and finished with 16 points, nearly 10 under his regular-season average.

"I thought Mullie was a little rusty," Nelson said. "He hasn't practiced with his teammates in five days. To ask him to come out and play a playoff game is asking a lot."

Trail Blazers 115, Lakers 102
Portland opened a 36-point lead in the first half and scored a team playoff-record 75 points by halftime, then coasted in the second half.

Cliff Robinson scored a career playoff-high 24 points, Clyde Drexler had 22 points and 10 assists, Buck Williams 21 points and 13 rebounds and Terry Porter 20 points for the Trail Blazers, top-seeded in the Western Conference.

Trailing 74-41 at halftime, the Lakers scored 16 straight points early in the third quarter and closed to 89-74 with 1:08 left in the third quarter. The closest they got in the fourth period was 13 points.

"In the second half, I think it was more of a 'Let's get it over with' survival-type of technique," Drexler said. "I think we've got to play well for two halves, but I'll take a 13-point win in the playoffs anytime."

Byron Scott and Terry Teagle scored 22 points apiece for the Lakers, who wanted to slow the tempo, but were outscored 25-2 on fast-break points in the first half.

"Everything we were afraid of happened," Lakers coach Mike Dunleavy said.

Cavaliers 120, Nets 113

Despite 40 points, 16 rebounds and nine assists from Brad Daugherty, Cleveland trailed New Jersey 111-110 with 1:36 left before outscoring the Nets 10-2 down the stretch.

The Cavaliers, who haven't won a playoff series since 1976, won it at the foul line, outscoring the Nets 39-15 on free throws in the game and 21-6 in the fourth quarter. Cleveland made all 21 of its fourth-quarter free throws.

It's the first time in eight playoff appearances that the Cavaliers have won their opening game. New Jersey hasn't won at Richfield Coliseum since 1986.

Daugherty's 40 points were a Cleveland playoff record, as were the 40 points by the Nets' Drazen Petrovic. Mark Price scored 35 points for the Cavaliers.

"I was just taking whatever was coming out of our offense," Daugherty said. "They match up well with us, so there wasn't much need for them to double-team me, although they did a little bit later on."

"I think we definitely have to change our defensive scheme," New Jersey center Sam Bowie said. "Brad had 40 points, and I think 26 of them came when he was down low with a mismatch on a smaller player."

Celtics 124, Pacers 113
Reggie Lewis scored 36 points for Boston, but Indiana had a 106-103 advantage with 5:22 remaining before a 15-2 run put the Celtics in control.

Kevin Gamble triggered the decisive run with a short jumper, and Kevin McHale followed with a 15-footer, putting Boston ahead to stay.

With injured starter Larry Bird and Dee Brown watching on the bench, the Celtics outdueled the Pacers down the stretch despite being outscored 24-0 on 3-pointers for the game. The 15-2 run gave the Celtics a 118-108 lead with 1:33 left.

McHale scored 21 points, Gamble 20 and Robert Parish 19 as the Celtics posted their ninth consecutive victory and 16th in the last 17 starts — with the only loss in Indiana on April 3.

"Reggie Lewis especially hurt us both offensively and defensively down the stretch," Indiana coach Bob Hill said. "This game changed in a minute. We'll have a good day tomorrow, make the necessary adjustments and be here ready to play on Saturday."

Reggie Miller finished with 29 points, including three 3-pointers. Delf Schrempf had 21 points and Detlef Schrempf had 21 points and Detlef Schrempf had 21 points and Detlef Schrempf had 21 points.

Six players share spotlight in Greater Greensboro Open

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — The undeclared duel between Davis Love III and Fred Couples played second lead Thursday to the cast of players fighting for first place in the Greater Greensboro Open.

Grabbing shares of the spotlight with 5-under 67s were Phil Blackmar, Brian Claar, Jeff Maggert, Robert Gamez, Kenny Perry and Bill Britton. While Love and Couples have each won two PGA Tour events this year, the six leaders have won six tournaments among them in their careers — and Gamez and Blackmar have two apiece.

Love, winner last week of the Heritage Golf Classic, struggled to an opening-round 71, due in part to consecutive bogeys on the back nine. Couples, playing for the first time since winning the Masters two weeks ago, came in at 2-under-par 70.

Staying in the fairway was the key on the Forest Oaks Country Club course, which has developed a reputation for having U.S. Open-caliber rough. However, missing the fairway wasn't always the problem.

Blackmar had a chance to take the lead for himself, but a three-putt on the 18th green capped a shaky finish for the 6-foot-7 California native.

"I played pretty well today; in fact, I played very well for about 13 holes and kind of lost my rhythm a little bit coming in," Blackmar said. "I didn't hit it too good the last four or five holes."

Perry, who said he could have shot 9- or 10-under, only missed two fairways en route to five birdies and one bogey on his front nine and a 15-foot birdie putt on the back side. He said the tightly bunched scores were a result of keeping the ball out of trouble and of greens made soft by rain Monday and Tuesday.

"The greens are so soft, you've got dartboards out there," he said.

"The harder the greens are, the higher the scores are. The softer they are, the lower they are. Everybody bunches up on soft greens. I think that's the reason everyone is shooting so good."

Maggert is in his second year on the PGA Tour after being named 1990 player of the year on the Ben Hogan Tour. He said he's trying to build on that success, and got a good start as one of the top PGA rookies in 1991.

"I'm trying to get myself in position for the back nine on Sunday," Maggert said, noting that he managed to claim his part of the lead by avoiding the high rough.

"Fortunately, I escaped it today. If I can keep it out, I feel like, I can shoot some pretty good scores," Maggert said.

Britton won the 1989 Centel Classic. If he hadn't gone out of bounds with his tee shot at the par-5 13th, the lead might have been his alone.

Gamez, who had seven birdies and two bogeys, gave credit for his opening-round success to putting guru Don Pooley.

"I feel this is the start of something good here," said Gamez, the 1990 PGA Tour rookie of the year. "This is one of the best rounds I've had this year."

So far this year, Gamez has made just three cuts in 10 tournaments. His best round before Thursday were 68s at the Honda Classic and the Bob Hope Desert Classic.

Claar managed his share of the lead despite spending a portion of his day in the heavy rough. A bogey at the 10th hole kept him from getting into the early lead.

Paul Azinger finished with bogeys at 17 and 18 and joined defending champion Mark Brooks and four others at 4-under-par 68.

Chip Beck led a group of five players at 69, and 1991 U.S. Open winner Payne Stewart was atop the list of nearly two dozen golfers at 70.

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — The Derby Trial on opening day at Churchill Downs Saturday is expected to be that for only one of the nine 3-year-olds entered in the one-mile race.

That would be Catire Bello, a Venezuelan-bred-and-owned colt.

In 1971, Canonero II, Venezuelan-owned-and-raced, came home to Kentucky and won the Derby.

Catire Bello, a late nominee to the Triple Crown races for a fee of $4,500, would need at least a second place Saturday to make the Derby May 2. It appears there will be a full field of 20 based on money earned in graded stakes.

With nine starters, the Trial will be worth $56,557 to the winner and $17,310 to the runnerup.

Catire Bello, owned by Osvaldo Bello of Caracas, made the first seven starts of his career at La Rinconada in Caracas and won six of them. Four of the wins were in four starts this year.

In two races in the United States, Catire Bello finished sixth in the Florida Derby March 14 at Gulfstream Park and was ninth in the Tropical Park Derby April 11 at Calder.

After the Florida Derby, Angel Medina replaced Ivan Calixto as trainer. Medina already has a Derby starter in My Luck Runs North, winner of Tuesday's Lexington at Keeneland.

Catire Bello will carry 117 pounds.

Co-high-weighted at 122 pounds are Wolf Brigade and Blacksburg.

Wolf Brigade, winner of three of four starts as a 2-year-old, has won one three races this year and was fourth in Tampa Bay Derby March 29 at Tampa Bay Downs.

Nichols, Snead tie for Legends of Gold lead

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) - such a good start, birdieing one Bogeying the third hole in a two-man, better-ball tournament is a lousy way to start. But for Bobby Nichols and J.C. Snead, it was motivation at the Legends of Golf.

"Bogies are very difficult to make up. But they happen. We realized that," Nichols said. He and Snead went on to shoot an 11-under-par 61 and tie for the first-round lead with Chi Chi Rodriguez and Dave Hill.

Nichols and Snead, making their second appearance at the Legends, had birdied the first two holes Thursday in the $770,000 tournament at the Barton Creek Country Club.

Then, both missed the green and made 4 on the 153-yard, par 3 third.

"It makes you angry," Nichols said. "We got off to such a good start, birdieing one and two. You hate to just give it back."

They made up for the gaffe with an eagle at the fifth hole, birdies at eight, nine and six straight from 12 through 17.

"J.C. hit every fairway except No. 18," Nichols said.

For Dave Hill, the secret was having the right partner.

"My partner just played up a storm. He made one mis-hit all day long, and that was at 18. I hit it out in the trees all day long except for 18," Hill said.

Hill did birdie the 546-yard par-5, one of three he added to the pair's total. Rodriguez made two eagle 3s, on the 500-yard eighth and the 527-yard 15th.

"It doesn't matter how one guy plays," Rodriguez said. "It's the team. We carried each other, we had fun."

Hull breaks up longest game of NHL playoffs

By The Associated Press

But Hull kept getting chances and finally connected on a 20-foot slap shot, one of his 11 shots on goal for the night.

"We realize how much attention we have to pay to him," Blackhawks defenseman Keith Brown said. "He's a great player. We just let him get away too much."

Another Brown, Blues defenseman Jeff, best summed up the long evening.

"That's my longest game ever," he said. "It wipes you right out. I lost 10 pounds."

But the Blues won the game, making them feel a little fresher.

"I'd be more tired if we'd lost," said goalie Curtis Joseph, who made 43 saves. "So I feel a lot better. You just have to make sure your concentration is there, because if you lose it for a second the puck can end up in the back of the net."

In another overtime game,

Detroit won 5-4 at Minnesota, closing within 2-1 in their series. Yves Racine scored 1:15 into overtime as the road team won for the third time in the Norris semifinal.

In the Smythe Division, it was Winnipeg 4, Vancouver 2 and Edmonton 4, Los Angeles 3. The winners both led 2-1 heading into Game 4 on Friday.

The Red Wings staged a big comeback to stay in their series. Trailing 4-2, they put Vincent Riendeau in goal in place of the ineffective, perhaps overworked Tim Cheveldae. He blanked the North Stars the rest of the way, while Jimmy Carson and Ray Sheppard scored to tie it.

Riendeau will start in place of Cheveldae, who led the NHL with 75 appearances this season, in Game 4.

"That team is weird," Riendeau said of Minnesota. "They can almost turn it on and off whenever they want. You're always told that you can't do that, but they do."

Vancouver won the regular-season title in the Smythe. Winnipeg was fourth, but is controlling the series.

On Wednesday, the Jets killed seven power plays and held Vancouver without a shot for a 13-minute span of the second period. The Jets scored two power play goals.

Vancouver's Geoff Courtnall felt special teams provided the difference.

"We've had a tough time against them all year on the power play," he said. "We may have to make some adjustments. They force hard and don't give us a lot of room to set up and make the plays we want."

The Kings haven't made many plays they want, either. Keeping up with the quick Oilers has been the problem.
