Development board holds first meeting; learns of guidelines

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

Pampa's Economic Development Board at its first meeting Monday learned that dealing with tax dollars requires more public disclosure than they are used to when it comes to dealing with perspective businesses locating in the area.

Vic Raymond, elected temporary secretary of the board, said following a briefing on the Texas Open Meetings Act, "It will be difficult to do this (recruiting of new businesses) in an open forum. There are a lot of these companies that insist on anonymity."

However, he also promised, "We will make it work, but we need to know what the rules are so we don't stumble."

City Attorney Don Lane informed the board all their discussions must be held during public meetings and no effort can be made to circumvent the Open Meetings Act, which gives the public access to information on how their economic development tax dollars are being spent.

"Many government or quasi-government agencies get along within the Open Meetings Act and we will, too," promised Bill Waters, elected by other board members as temporary chairman of the group.

In the past, business recruitment was done by the Industrial Foundation and no public disclosure was necessary due to private funds being used.

However, passage of an economic development sales tax, while providing $650,000 a year in business-recruitment funds, also means the public will be tuned in to the successes and failures of future efforts.

Wayne Stribling said past experience tells him, "There are a lot of companies that don't want anyone to know they are looking at relocating."

But along with other board members, he said he would be working with Lane to learn the Open Meetings Act and make sure its requirements are not violated. Raymond said a priority of the board, charged with bringing new jobs to the community, is to make sure taxpayers know their money is being handled responsibly.

"We just want to make sure we don't violate the Act or even appear to do so," he stated. "We need to constantly inform the community through the media of what we are doing so they will stay enthused and know we are active."

Waters said, "This board ... can be influential on the community and the community will look to us as a barometer of community attitudes. If we are enthusiastic and positive about the future, it will be contagious."

Stribling suggested Pampa leaders look at Dumas as a model of positive West Texas recruitment of new jobs.

"I had someone in the store the other day who said Dumas is really doing some things right, so we might want to talk to them."

Raymond responded that Pampa has "been poor-boying it for several years" while Dumas has spent large amounts of money on industrial recruitment.

"Maybe in five years we can do something like Dumas is doing now," Raymond stated.

Board members said they will soon begin searching for an executive director, but pointed out the economic development tax will not begin being collected until July and the first check will not be received by the city until the fall.

"We might want to contact Pueblo (Colo.), which is one of the most successful cities in the nation," Raymond said. "They may have a number two man ready to spread his wings."

Waters stated, "The selection needs to be carefully dealt with and will take time. This will likely be the most important decision we make in the first year or two."

Board members agreed to meet once a month, unless pending

Effects of controversial finance plan impact independent school districts

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

Robin Hood paid a visit to County Education District 14 on Monday as trustees approved the redistribution of $27.4 million in tax dollars.

Alanreed Independent School District lost the most money, with $26,947 cut from their funds.

Other losers in the latest round of state-mandated redistribution included Booker ($23,210), Borger ($7,262), Darrouzett ($14,959), Higgins ($12,403), McLean ($953), Miami ($24,378), Pampa ($14,364), Perryton ($7,694), and Sanford ($2,512).

The money was distributed between Canadian, Lefors, Spring Creek and Plemons-Stinnett-Phillips, with Lefors getting a low of $47 and PSP receiving $46,804.

While the state originally seemed bent on "consolidation by starvation" - choking out small property wealthy districts - Monday's meeting more resembled an attempt to force "consolidation by aggravation," as some wealthy districts got money and poor ones did the paying.

Pampa Superintendent Dawson Orr, who serves as coordinator for CED 14, said the redistributions are based on recent Texas Education Agency reports on average daily attendance (ADA) in each of the 16 school districts in CED 14.

"The initial distribution of funds was based on 90-91 final-ADA figures," Orr said. "As happens every year, several districts have experienced growth and others have experienced decline. Every district's funding is based on ADA."

Orr said the Pampa district has learned to expect funding-cuts and redistributions, noting, "We got our final summary of the 1990-91 ADA and they are going to cut $40,000 out of this year's budget because of our ADA last year?"

Most trustees and superintendents just shook their heads and laughed as they passed the state-mandated redistribution by a 13-1 margin, with Alanreed voting nay.

"You can laugh or you can cry and I guess it's just as well to laugh," said one trustee.

Complaining about the redistribution of local tax dollars and the hit it put on Alanreed, Superintendent Billy Bob Adams said, "I don't think the taxpayers are really aware of what is happening."

In an open letter presented to the media, Adams wrote, "Alanreed ISD lost over 50 percent of its funding - that's the tax dollars paid by Alanreed ISD taxpayers, not state nor other school districts."

In other action, CED board members allowed for waivers of tax bills under $15 in Lipscomb County at the request of each taxing entity in that county.

CED President Brad Schultz pointed out it costs more than $15 to prepare and send the tax statements on some small-mineral rights and actually cost the county education district money to collect on those accounts.

Orr said other counties wishing waivers on tax bills under $15 could make application to the CED board for consideration.

Grand jury indicts 11

By BETH MILLER
Staff Writer

Eleven indictments were returned Monday by a 31st District Court Gray County grand jury, said District Attorney John Mann.

A first-degree felony indictment was returned against Johnnie Mac Bailey, also known as Johnnie Mac Irvin or Irvine, 29, address not listed, charging him with a Jan. 10 aggravated robbery.

Mann said the indictment alleges that Bailey robbed two West Texas State University students after asking for a ride from the two. Knives were allegedly held to the victims' necks. After the pair was robbed, they reportedly drove to Taco Villa and called police.

An unrelated first-degree felony indictment was returned against Billy Wayne Morgan, 22, 418 N. Rider, charging burglary of a habitation. Morgan is charged with burglarizing a habitation on April 19, 1991, and stealing 34 compact discs and a roll top carrier case.

Following are a list of the other indictments returned Monday.

• Esteban Barcla, also known as Steven Barcla, 61, 605 E. Campbell, was indicted on a Jan. 25 third-degree felony charge of unlawfully carrying a weapon on licensed premises.

• Jimmy Burks, 19, Route 4, Box 105A, and Jody Brunson, 20, 510 E. Foster, were indicted on March 27 second-degree felony charges of burglary of a building. The pair is alleged to have broken into a coin and card shop at Pampa Mall where it is alleged they stole more than $10,000 worth of merchandise, some of which has been recovered.

• Paul Andre Brown, 19, 512 Harlem, was indicted on a Feb. 28 second-degree felony charge of possession of a controlled substance. Authorities seized 1.7 grams of cocaine during the execution of a search warrant, Mann said.

• Jeffery Lynn Gates, 28, Davis Hotel #3, was indicted on an April 6 third-degree felony charge of injury to a child. Gates allegedly broke the jaw of a 14-year-old.

• Lloyd Franklin Mays, 51, 929 Barnard, was indicted on a July 7, 1990, charge of attempted sexual assault. Mann said Mays allegedly cornered a waitress of a local bar in the restroom and attempted to assault her. The assault was stopped after the woman began screaming and patrons heard her, Mann said.

• Jose Garcia, 29, 712 Finley, was indicted on a March 15 felony charge of driving while intoxicated (third offense).

• Mark Doyle, 26, 3005 Rosewood, was indicted on a July 25, 1990, third-degree felony charge of criminal mischief. Doyle is alleged to have caused damage of $750-20,000 to two vehicles.

• Helen Diamond, 26, 1048 Varnon Drive, was indicted on an Aug. 12, 1991, misdemeanor charge of theft over $200.

Voting under way in first primaries since L.A. violence

WASHINGTON (AP) - Indiana, North Carolina and the nation's capital today delivered the first gauge of feeling among presidential primary voters since violence swept Los Angeles in the aftermath of the Rodney King verdict.

President Bush and Gov. Bill Clinton were favored in all three primaries, which followed a weekend in which the Democratic candidates toured the riot areas and focused their stump speeches on the violence and urban decay.

As the voting began, the AFL-CIO's Executive Council in Washington endorsed Clinton for the Democratic nomination. "Now is the time to close ranks within the labor movement and the Democratic Party," said federation vice president William Bywater, head of the International Union of Electronic Workers.

And billionaire Ross Perot said he would cut back on public appearances to prepare for his independent presidential candidacy. "Since the volunteers are so well organized across the country, they no longer need my public support," he said.

Clinton closed out the weekend in Washington and stopped in Indiana before flying to Los Angeles to meet with religious, community and political leaders. He made one stop in North Carolina last week and canceled Monday's scheduled events there.

But Clinton's fight is all but over. He has 1,591.5 delegates, nearly 75 percent of the 2,145 he needs to win the Democratic nomination at the convention in July, and has begun to shape his expected fall campaign against Bush. His only rival, Jerry Brown, had 322.5 delegates.

Sixteen Democratic delegates are at stake in the District, 77 in Indiana and 84 in North Carolina.

Early morning voters in Indianapolis said the country faces tough problems but were divided on the remedy. Retired school teacher Ethel Roger, 85, voted for Bush. "He's doing the best he can," she said. "... These other people, I could not be proud of them to represent us in the world."

Real estate manager Jim Thomas, 27, voted for Buchanan "to send the message to get Bush to be more conservative than he is." He said he would vote for Perot in November.

Indianapolis optometrist Jerome Muskat voted for Brown and praised his "sensitivity." He said Clinton was "too polished for me - I don't think he speaks from the heart."

Gertrude Hill, 90, a retired window shade maker, did vote for the Arkansas governor. "I think we need change," she said.

In Los Angeles on Monday, Clinton toured riot-ravaged neighborhoods and proposed a new approach to rebuilding cities separate from the 1960s-style social programs or what he called "12 more years of neglect" from Republican administrations in Washington.

Clinton called for economic and law-enforcement aid for cities but also urged inner-city neighborhood leaders to set up community banks dedicated to local businesses. He also advocated more aggressive enforcement of the Community Reinvestment Act, which prohibits discrimination in lending practices.

Brown also canceled Indiana events last week to visit Los Angeles. Campaigning in Washington on Monday, he demanded that the administration invest more in American cities and less overseas.

"Whatever the budget deficit, when it is time for a Gulf War or for a savings and loan bailout or for foreign aid or for some other priority the money is found. The money must be found now," he said.

On the Republican side, the District had 14 delegates at stake in today's primary, with 51 in Indiana and 57 in North Carolina.

Bush had won 1,122 delegates, and with more than the 1,105 needed for nomination, the remaining contests would serve to bolster his support and begin to end the challenge of Patrick Buchanan.

While his aides decried the "politicizing" of the Los Angeles riots, Bush took an active role in the crisis, and on Monday announced more than $600 million in federal aid to help rebuild riot-torn neighborhoods.

Baby born on bridge

NEW YORK (AP) - A newborn got an early introduction to commuting Monday: She was born during rush hour on the Brooklyn Bridge.

Marabel Almodovar gave birth in a car on the bridge's westbound lane as housing police officers tried to take her from her home in Brooklyn to St. Vincent's Hospital, on the other side of the East River in Manhattan, said hospital spokeswoman Carol Ranaghan.

The officers wanted to take Almodovar to a hospital in Brooklyn, but she insisted on going to St. Vincent's.

Terry Anderson tells tale of captivity to AP group

By RICK HAMPSON
 Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - Terry Anderson sat in a soaring church nave Monday and recalled life in captivity: being wrapped like a mummy and tied under a truck; almost losing his mind when the sign language partners he'd painstakingly tutored were moved; having to lock his own chains when his guards forgot to.

As Associated Press member publishers, editors and others listened in rapt silence, the news agency's chief Middle East correspondent spoke of his almost seven years as a hostage in Lebanon, an ordeal which included the bitter chore of being his own jailer.

Sometimes the guards would forget to lock hostages' leg irons before leaving them alone in their tightly guarded cells at night, he said. If and when they discovered the unlocked chains the next day, "they would accuse you, and you would be in for some very bad times," Anderson said.

"So what do you do? It is very, very difficult to sit there and look at that chain lying next to your leg, pick it up, and close the lock yourself."

"You had to do that, didn't you?" he was asked.

"Yeah, we did it," he replied softly.

Looking healthy and relaxed, Anderson gave the most detailed account so far of the captivity that ended Dec. 4. He was the longest held American hostage in Lebanon and his return to the United States saw outpourings of emotion and a hero's welcome.

Now, five months later, he sat in St. Bartholomew's Church with AP President and Chief Executive Officer Louis D. Boccardi and talked about his ordeal in a steady, yet gripping exchange during the AP's annual meeting.

Boccardi introduced Anderson to a standing ovation, and when his discussion ended, he walked down the church's main aisle, hand-in-hand with his fiancée, Madeleine Bassil, to another standing ovation, stopping to shake outstretched hands.

"People are capable of doing an awful lot when they have no choice, and I had no choice. ... That is not what I think involves-courage. Courage is when you have choices, like Terry Waite, who had a choice to risk his life to come to try to help us. That's courage."

- Terry Anderson

Discussing his captivity, which began on March 16, 1985, Anderson backed away from words like "courage" and "heroism" to describe how he survived his ordeal.

Anderson said he had returned to the Roman Catholic Church, in which he had been raised, six months before his capture by Islamic fundamentalists in Beirut.

"It was what you might call providential," he said. "I really needed that faith."

Faith, Anderson said, also helps explain why he doesn't hate his captors: "I am a Catholic. I am required to forgive."

"I have no room for it. I have no time for it," he said. "My life is very full, very happy. ... My hating them is not going to hurt them an ounce. It's only going to hurt me."

Faith of another kind dissuaded him from suicide during captivity, he said: "I could not do that to the people whom I love, who love me."

Anderson said he has spent most of the time since his release vacationing on Antigua and visiting his fiancée's family on Cyprus. He said he had accepted a fellowship from the Freedom Forum Media Studies Center at Columbia University, where he plans to spend the next year writing a book to be published by Crown. He said NBC plans a television movie.

Asked if he wished the government had attempted to rescue him and his fellow hostages, he said, "We fantasized a lot about Delta Force storming through the wall and setting us all free, (but) never believed it, never thought it was possible, and most of the time feared it."

"There were ... drills in which the door would suddenly be thrown open and a (guard) with a grenade in his hand would be standing there, waiting for something to happen. The drill was, if anybody came in the door we were dead."

Anderson said he dreaded transfers the most. He, and other hostages typically were wrapped from head to foot in tape, "like a mummy" and sometimes stashed underneath the vehicle.

Once, Anderson recalled, he got a bloody nose from repeatedly being smashed against the vehicle on bumpy streets. Another time exhaust fumes made him nauseous, but he had to fight the urge for hours, knowing that, since he couldn't open his mouth, he would choke to death on his own vomit.

Anderson also recalled when, after he had taught several other prisoners an elementary form of sign language, they were transferred out of sight, leaving Anderson utterly alone.

"A month of that nearly drove me crazy," he recalled. "That's when I came closest to losing it."

But Anderson objected to describing his survival as courageous.

"People are capable of doing an awful lot when they have no choice, and I had no choice. ... That is not what I think involves courage. Courage is when you have choices, like Terry Waite, who had a choice to risk his life to come to try to help us. That's courage."

Perez sworn in as Pampa ISD trustee

New Pampa public school board trustee Chris Perez was sworn in during a 7:30 a.m. meeting at Carver Center today.

Perez and incumbent Sherry McCavit won the Place 6 and Place 7 seats, respectively, during voting Saturday.

McCavit was out of town and will be sworn in at a later date.

Board members also used their meeting today to re-elect Dr. Keith Teague as board president and Lonny Richardson as vice president.

No action was taken in naming a board secretary.

Trustee Phil Vanderpool pointed out that McCavit had served as secretary during the last year, but that renaming her to the post would be premature until she was officially sworn in.

Tip leads to arrest of rapist-killer

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — A tip from two co-workers led authorities to a paroled rapist-killer being sought in Texas for questioning in cases involving the abductions of nine women, authorities say.

Local officers arrested Kenneth Allen McDuff, 46, on Monday as he was working for a private waste hauler. He was not armed and did not offer resistance, officers said.

The paroled former death row inmate had been sought since March 9. "He was not just dangerous," said U.S. Marshal's supervisor Mike Earp of Washington, D.C., during a news conference in Waco, Texas. "He was basically an animal out there committing heinous crimes."

"He was somebody who had to be taken off the streets," McDuff was turned over to the U.S. Marshal's Service, charged with one count of murder and scheduled to be arraigned today on two federal charges.

The Texas man had been using the name Richard Fowler in Kansas City and was working as a garbage collector until the co-workers turned him in, according to U.S. Deputy Marshal Michael Carnevale.

"They had seen him on last week's episode of 'America's Most Wanted,' a television show on the Fox Network, Carnevale said. "They took a couple of days and looked at a tape several times before they determined that it was him. Then they called Kansas City police."

U.S. Marshal Larry Joiner said McDuff "started to jump out of the dump truck, then realized three or four officers were there and he surrendered. He admitted he was McDuff."

Police discovered while booking him Monday that he had been arrested two weeks ago in Kansas City for soliciting a prostitute, but he gave an alias at the time.

Joiner said he was pleased with the arrest. "It's a case of the system working the way it should," he said.

The McLennan County Sheriff's Department in Texas charged McDuff on Monday with killing Valencia K. Joshua, 22.

The woman's body was found March 15 buried behind the Texas State Technical Institute campus where McDuff lived, said deputy Richard Stroup.

Tom Hammon of the U.S. Marshal Service in Waco said McDuff is wanted for questioning in the cases of a total of nine missing women.

But Hammon refused to disclose more information about the cases. He did say that McDuff was going to be questioned about the murders of four women killed in a robbery incident at an Austin, Texas, yogurt store Dec. 6.

"It's not over, believe me. We've developed a lot of information. Now that we've got him off the streets it's time to sit down and put this altogether," Earp said.

McDuff had been sentenced to death in 1966 murders of two teenagers in Tarrant County and the rape-murder of their female companion in adjoining Johnson County.

His sentence was commuted to life when the U.S. Supreme Court found in 1972 that the death penalty, as then applied, unconstitutional. He was paroled in 1989.

In July 1990, McDuff was wanted for making terroristic threats. His parole was revoked, and he returned to prison that September although he was cleared of the charge. On Dec. 18, 1990, McDuff was paroled for a second time.

He had been living in a dormitory at TSTI, but disappeared a few days before a March 9 arrest warrant was issued by his parole officer.

McDuff, 46, also has been implicated in the abduction of Colleen Reed, 28, who vanished

Dec. 29 from an Austin car wash.

Alva Hank Worley, 34, is being held in the Bell County Jail on $100,000 bond in the aggravated kidnapping of Ms. Reed. Worley, a Belton construction worker, reportedly signed an affidavit saying he and McDuff abducted and sexually assaulted her in their car during a trip to Austin, police say.

McDuff also was wanted for questioning about a 22-year-old Waco convenience store clerk whose bound body was found floating April 26 in a gravel pit in southeast Dallas County.

Melissa Ann Northrup had been missing since March 1.

Her husband, Aaron Northrup, said he trained McDuff to work at the Quik-Pak convenience store and even introduced him to his wife.

"I know Ken McDuff. I trained him for Quik-Pak, and I stayed there from 11 p.m. to 7 in the morning every night. He was weird; I know he's weird. I thought maybe this guy needs some help, but the parole board especially knew that and let him go," Northrup said.

Officials also want to question McDuff about the deaths of Joshua and a woman whose name has not been released.

Another woman seen with McDuff is still missing.

Regina Moore, 21, was last seen with McDuff last October in the Waco area. She reportedly was screaming as he ran a police roadblock in his pickup.

The U.S. Marshal's Service has issued arrest warrants for McDuff for selling LSD and being a felon in possession of a firearm.

Last Wednesday, Texas Gov. Ann Richards announced Texas Crime Stoppers was offering a $1,000 reward for information leading to McDuff's arrest.

Kenneth Allen McDuff is led by U.S. Marshalls to be transported to an overnight holding cell Monday evening prior to his scheduled arraignment this morning. McDuff, a former Texas death row inmate suspected in cases involving nine women, was arrested after authorities were tipped by viewers of a TV detective series.

Bad weather threatens countdown

By MARCIA DUNN
AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — NASA excitedly counted down the hours today for the maiden flight of space shuttle Endeavour on a mission to rescue a satellite, but the weather loomed as a problem.

"We're going to take good care of her and bring her back in good shape," astronaut Kathryn Thornton said Monday before the countdown clocks started ticking toward a launch at 7:06 p.m. EDT Thursday.

Shuttle test director Al Sofge said officials were tracking no major mechanical problems today, but the weather outlook was ominous.

Thunderstorms are expected Thursday evening, putting the chances of liftoff at just 30 percent. If postponed, the launch would be rescheduled for Friday evening, but the forecast isn't much better for then, either.

In their weeklong flight, Endeavour's crew of seven will try to save a communications satellite stranded in a uselessly low orbit for two years. Two spacewalking astronauts are to attach a motor to the satellite to boost it to the right altitude.

Two more spacewalks are planned during the flight so astronauts can practice techniques for building a space station.

Endeavour replaces the Challenger, which was destroyed 73 seconds after liftoff six years ago. All seven astronauts died in the fireball.

Mike Leinbach, another shuttle test director, said he doesn't sense any sadness among workers, only pride.

"People are looking to the beauty of Endeavour, how black the black tiles are and how white the white (thermal) blankets are and the nice new American flag painted on the side," he said.

"They're not thinking about the past. This is the future."

Prisoners' attorneys not ready for settlement

HOUSTON (AP) — An attorney representing Texas inmates in the 20-year-old Ruiz prison lawsuit says he is not ready to sign a proposed settlement ending the suit.

Texas Attorney General Dan Morales on Saturday signed the settlement, which would raise court-enforced population caps on existing prison units to allow a five percent increase in inmates.

But William Bennett Turner of San Francisco, one of the prisoners' lawyers, said he wants a letter of agreement calling on the criminal justice board to detail just how the final settlement will be carried out.

Turner said he would not sign the document until he gets the letter of agreement from Selden Hale, chairman of the Texas Board of Criminal Justice.

One of the main reasons Turner said he wants the letter is to ensure the additional 2,300 inmates the state will be allowed to house in existing units under the settlement will be properly cared for.

And while at least one criminal justice board member wants Morales' input on signing the letter, Morales' office said "any such agreement doesn't concern us."

"Any other possible document would be on an administrative nature and Dan Morales doesn't run the prison system," said Morales' spokesman Gray McBride.

Richards: No immediate session

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Ann Richards is keeping her options on a special session open, but says there's no immediate reason for lawmakers to return to work on a school finance plan.

A federal judge on Friday relieved pressure on the governor to call a session by refusing to halt collection of education property taxes under the current system.

U.S. District Judge James Nowlin declined to issue an injunction requested by taxpayers. They filed the federal lawsuit after the Texas Supreme Court said the current education finance system violates the state constitution, but allowed its use for 1991 and 1992.

The lawsuit said collection of an unconstitutional tax, without opportunity for a refund, violated their due process rights under the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

But Nowlin said an injunction against future collection of the education taxes could have a "disastrous" effect on school children.

Richards has been meeting with legislative leaders, and has proposed her own school finance plan.

In her proposal, business property would be removed from local school districts' property tax base. That property instead would be taxed at the state level, with revenue divided among all school districts.

"We have not found a consensus of support for any education finance plan, so there is no reason for the state to spend a million dollars on a special session at this time. We are keeping all our options open," Richards said Monday.

She said that the Legislature would have to meet before the January regular session, probably after the November general election.

The Texas Supreme Court gave lawmakers until June 1, 1993 to fix the current system, in which 188 county education districts (CEDs) levy property taxes for public education.

The taxes are shared in the CEDs, which are made up of one or several counties. Individual school districts also may raise some additional property tax revenue.

The system was meant to equalize education funding, but the Supreme Court found that it violates the Texas Constitution by imposing a statewide property tax and by levying a property tax without voter approval.

Man pleads innocent in slaying of neighbor

LAS CRUCES, N.M. (AP) — A Las Cruces hotel janitor pleaded innocent today to a charge of first-degree murder in the slaying of a neighbor who police said was stabbed, beheaded and disemboweled.

District Attorney Doug Driggers said Vincent Kaydahzinne, 20, was arraigned before state District Judge James T. Martin, who continued bond at $250,000. Kaydahzinne is being held in the Dona Ana County Detention Center.

He was indicted by a grand jury last Thursday in the April 17 death of Joseph Loretto, 25, a New Mexico State University student.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Us

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Opinion

Mr. Outside inside

H. Ross Perot has positioned himself as the classic outsider. He rails against "fraud and mismanagement" in government. But though it might come as a shock to many booming Perot supporters, Mr. Perot himself has been part of the problem.

Mr. Perot made part of his $3 billion fortune setting up computers for Medicare. He reaped heavy profits from the vast increase in big government we've suffered from over the past 30 years. A principled position would have been to make every effort to oppose the expansion of Medicare and other federal programs of dubious constitutionality.

And according to the April 13 Newsweek, "Now a Perot investment company is asking for federal handouts and favors that could help enlarge the family fortune by hundreds of millions of dollars, and possibly by as much as $1 billion... Perot and his son, Ross Jr., have already gotten generous federal support [i.e., taxpayers' money] for Alliance Airport, an airfield in Ft. Worth, that is, for all practical purposes, a Perot Group project. They are now coming back for still more federal largess - specifically, $120 million to expand the airport, which is surrounded by land owned by the Perot Group."

Just after the Newsweek story broke, President Bush played hardball against his potential adversary. The Federal Aviation Administration killed the $120 million request. Newsweek reported on April 20, "The decision came after George W. Bush, also a Texan, warned his father not to underestimate Perot's possible presidential bid as an independent."

There's more. In the mid-1980s, according to the April 13 Newsweek story, the FAA "spent $41 million on runways and taxiways" at Mr. Perot's Alliance Airport. "All this took place within a period of less than two years, which is binding speed for airport projects. One reason, as FAA officials concede, is that Perot's airport had the support of powerful people in Congress, including former House Speaker Jim Wright. The Perots have long been lavish contributors to Congress," dumping $133,600 on congressional candidates since 1983.

After he received Perot contributions, according to Newsweek, the since-disgraced Mr. Wright "used his power as speaker to ram through a $25 million appropriation for the airport in late 1988. The next year Wright added language to a pending bill that required the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration to station some of its patrol planes at Alliance."

With such deep involvement in government, no wonder Mr. Perot backs national health care-socialized medicine. Far from being a bold proponent of back-to-basics government, H. Ross Perot is an inside operator in the system we need to demolish.

Damage of the divorce revolution

Marriage is, among other things, a contract between two people, and when one person violates a contract, the courts normally require him to compensate the person he has hurt. But in 1976, a Pennsylvania court examined a law allowing such damages to be imposed on a husband or wife who commits adultery, and it recoiled in disgust. "It is no longer in the state's interest," declared the court, "to impose upon a married person's right to natural and voluntary sexual relations with other persons."

Some old fogeys assume that giving up the right to have sex with other people is sort of basic to marriage. But a lot of people know better than to actually believe those antiquated vows about "forsaking all others" until "death do you part."

Over the past generation, American laws and customs on marriage and divorce have undergone a radical metamorphosis. The law used to treat marriage as a permanent bond, to be dissolved only when one partner had been seriously betrayed. It now treats such unions as a brief convenience for two incurably fickle people.

This transformation brings to mind Ambrose Bierce's definition of revolution as "an abrupt change in the form of misgovernment." Under the old divorce rules, one spouse had to show that the other had committed some grave offense - adultery, physical abuse, mental cruelty. The resulting litigation was often so ugly and hypocritical that most people assumed any change would be for the better. We've spent the last quarter century proving that assumption wrong.

Marital breakdown has become the norm, not the extreme; appalling numbers of children grow up fatherless and poor; countless innocent spouses have been discarded by unfaithful mates. The law excludes majestic indifference to these outcomes.

Stephen Chapman

When we established "no-fault" divorce, writes Harvard law professor Mary Ann Glendon, we got no-responsibility divorce as well.

Now there is a movement to restore some measure of obligation and commitment to marriage. One important problem is that while wedlock is a legal agreement between two people, it is no longer enforced as other contracts are. Bryce Christensen, director of the Rockford Institute's Center on the Family in America, notes dryly that in recent years, it has become much harder to get rid of an unwanted employee but much easier to get rid of an unwanted spouse. While an employer must have good reason to take away your job, a mate needs no reason at all to deprive you of your family.

Courts normally penalize someone who reneges on a deal, but the point of no-fault divorce was to avoid wrangling about tedious questions of blame. The change has been a blessing in cases where both people want out of a hopeless marriage. But it's also been a boon to the unscrupulous, who have gotten a license to do wrong without fear of punishment. Women in particular have far less leverage to get alimony or adequate child support when they are deserted.

By making marriage a relationship that can be ended by either spouse, the law cheats those who want something more solid. Under a proposal offered by the conservative Free Congress Foundation, couples applying for a marriage license could choose a "no-fault" approach, making divorce easy. Or they could select a traditional arrangement, barring dissolution unless one spouse has seriously wronged the other - in which case the settlement would tilt strongly in favor of the injured partner.

Some protection is also needed for the people most often overlooked in divorce proceedings: the children. A million American kids endure family breakup every year, and a disproportionate number end up mired in poverty, poor health and delinquency as a result.

Keeping couples together solely for the good of the children may not be wise, but making divorce harder to get when kids are involved might preserve some marriages that aren't beyond saving. And when divorces are granted, courts need to take greater care to assure that the children are provided for, even if that means hardship for the departing parent.

There are limits, unfortunately, to what the law can do. Due to modern sexual mores, men and women today can abandon their spouses and happily pursue their own desires even without legally ending the marriage. If divorce laws become stricter, some people won't bother getting a divorce.

But rolling back the divorce revolution would impose some healthy costs on irresponsible behavior. It might even curb the epidemic of marital disintegration, which endangers innocent bystanders as well as dissatisfied partners. All of us would benefit from forcefully communicating the message that the obligations assumed at the altar endure even if the marriage doesn't.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Tuesday, May 5, the 126th day of 1992. There are 240 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

Fifty years ago, on May 5, 1942, sales of sugar resumed in the United States under a rationing program.

On this date:

In 1494, during his second voyage to the New World, Christopher Columbus first sighted Jamaica.

In 1818, the political philosopher Karl Marx was born in Prussia.

In 1904, Cy Young pitched the American League's first perfect game as the Boston Red Sox defeated the Philadelphia Athletics, 3-0.

In 1925, John T. Scopes was arrested in Tennessee for teaching Darwin's theory of evolution.

In 1955, West Germany became a sovereign state.

In 1955, the baseball musical "Damn Yankees" opened on Broadway.

Holiday for lovers

After she had put her daughter to bed, she went to her closet and brought out two brightly wrapped packages and put them on a table in the living room.

Then, she spread several pieces of candy around the packages.

"What's that for?" I asked.

"They're presents from the Easter bunny," she explained.

"Presents from the Easter bunny?"

"When she wakes up in the morning, she'll have these presents the Easter bunny left her. Something wrong with that?"

"What's the world coming to? I just didn't know the Easter bunny left gifts."

"I know about Santa Claus and the tooth fairy but this is new to me."

"This isn't going to be one of those 'I-walked-four-miles-barefoot-to-school-in-the-snow' stories?" she asked.

There is a decade and a half between our ages and I have assumed the role of the elder, the voice of reason, the one who says, "When I was a kid..." as a way to indicate just how easy the younger generation has it compared to my own.

My parents did that to me, and their parents did it to them.

Somebody has to be in charge of scoffing at the younger generation.

"Listen," I began, "I didn't walk four miles barefoot in the snow to school. It was two miles, but I certainly never got up on Easter morning and found presents from a rabbit.

"I got Christmas gifts, of course," I went on. "A stocking with a couple of tangerines in it. For my birthday, I usually got underwear and the tooth fairy never left me more than a dime."

"Kids today get a toy store for Christmas and they get another one on their birthday and the tooth fairy leaves folding money. On Halloween, they go trick or treating and come back with enough candy to give every living soul in Nebraska hypoglycemia."

"And now look at this," I said, pointing to the Easter booty.

"So," she replied, "you think I'm spoiling my child."

"I didn't say that. I just said kids today get so much so often, they begin to expect life to be just one occasion after the other to get a lot of gifts."

"When I was a kid..."

"Here we go again..."

"No, it's just that because we didn't get a lot, we didn't expect a lot and we cherished what we had."

"I can't believe all your mother ever gave you for Christmas was a couple of tangerines."

"Well, I did get an ErectorSet one year and then I got an air rifle. But all I ever got for Easter was a haircut so I would look presentable in church."

"You never got a live baby chicken?"

"Yeah, I remember getting a yellow one when I was 9, but my dog ate it."

"I just don't think there's anything wrong with a child waking up Easter morning to a few gifts. I didn't spend all that much," she continued.

"How much you spent is not the point," I said, sounding more and more as the voice of reason. The point is today's kids are going to become impossible to satisfy.

"They want more and more for every holiday. Then they'll start expecting gifts on Grover Cleveland's birthday, the day Cornwallis surrendered to George Washington at Yorktown and the anniversary of the Gadsden Purchase."

"Your face is turning red, Pops," she said.

She calls me Pops when I deliver such orations.

"I just hate to see Easter commercialized like our other holidays," I went on. "Pretty soon we're going to lose the meaning of such special days completely. I think that's wrong."

"Well, let me ask you this," she said. "Are you going to church with us in the morning?"

"I would," I said, "if I didn't need a haircut so bad."

Look at the other side of pro-life ads

There's a commercial running on several cable TV networks, and it always puts a catch in my throat when I see it. It's a moving portrayal of a young couple going to a hospital to pick up the infant they're adopting. As the nurse puts the baby into the mother's arms, the look the actress gives the actor playing her husband is exquisite, a joy almost beyond her belief. The ad's narrator congratulates all the mothers who "decided, instead of abortion, to tough it out and bring their babies into the world." He adds: "To all these mothers, families who adopted these children want to say thanks." As the narrator utters his last line, the text also appears in a graphic on the screen: "Life. What a beautiful choice."

A companion ad features little children in Halloween costumes and school uniforms, and describes them as "unplanned pregnancies that could have ended in abortion." Both are sponsored by the Arthur S. De Moss Foundation, which was founded in 1955 by an evangelical Christian insurance executive. The De Moss Foundation refuses to give interviews, but Adweek magazines estimates the cost of the campaign at $20 million, according to The New York Times.

After initially running the ads, cable companies CNBC and Lifetime decided to stop running them. CNBC, a news and information network, said it later decided it would only run the ads if they carried visual and audio disclaimers stating the spots were sponsored information. Lifetime, a network featuring programs aimed at women, told the Times only that the decision to stop airing the commercials was "a business issue."

The ad is very effective, a great example of the advertiser's craft. If an organization wanted to portray an unplanned-pregnancy scenario that didn't end as perfectly as the De Moss ads, I'm sure some Madison Avenue wunderkind could create an equally compelling ad.

A teenage girl from an abusive family becomes pregnant by a boy who doesn't want her or the child. She is terrified and confused and abortion isn't an option. As the pregnancy progresses, counselors urge her to choose adoption, but not only does she begin to feel she can't part with her baby, she starts to see the child as something that makes her important, finally, if only for a short while.

We cut to scenes of the mother and her 2-year-old, who then becomes 7-year-old, and then a young teen. The cycle of poverty and abuse continue through this generation, and as years go by the mother becomes no more equipped to care for her child than she was a frightened teenager. The new, teen mother is shown nurturing her child as she was nurtured: screaming, hitting, belittling and degrading him.

If the ad writers get really creative, they might borrow from a real-life case chronicled in HBO's documentary "Child of Rage." Here, a little girl was starved, beaten and raped before she was adopted at the age of 19 months. By the time she was 6, she had to be locked in her room to prevent her from harming her family. She tortured animals, molested her brother and thought of killing her adopted parents.

Every time I see the De Moss ads I expect my throat to catch. There's no way I can watch that mother hold that baby and look up at the father without being moved. But those rosy ads won't stop me from seeing the other scenario as just as real.

Unless we can force women to give up babies they aren't equipped to care for, we can't guarantee happy endings for unplanned babies. Without that guarantee, there is no way I could tell another woman what to do about her pregnancy.

Tony nominations turn to Jelly

By MICHAEL KUCHWARA
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The musicals "Jelly's Last Jam" and "Crazy for You" dominated the Tony Award nominations for the richly packed 1991-92 Broadway season. Several well-known playwrights and Hollywood stars were ignored.

"Jelly's Last Jam," the story of jazz pioneer Jelly Roll Morton, received 11 nominations, and "Crazy for You," a 1930s-style musical with old songs by George and Ira Gershwin and a new book, received nine.

Both were nominated Monday for best musical, along with "Falsettos," William Finn's tale of family and friendship in the age of AIDS, and "Five Guys Named Moe," a revue celebrating another jazz star, Louis Jordan.

The best-play nominees included two shows that have closed, John Guare's "Four Baboons Adoring the Sun," about the search for love, and Richard Nelson's "Two Shakespearean Actors," a tale of two 19th-century acting rivals.

The favorite for best play is "Dancing at Lughnasa," Brian Friel's Irish memory play about five unmarried sisters; the fourth nominee is August Wilson's "Two Trains Running," set in a Pittsburgh coffee shop in the late 1960s.

Neil Simon's "Jake's Women," Herb Gardner's "Conversations with My Father," Alan Ayckbourn's "A Small Family Business" and Ariel Dorfman's "Death and the Maiden" were among the shows that missed the best-play nomination.

"Dancing at Lughnasa" received eight nominations, including three for featured actress for Brid Brennan, Rosaleen Linehan and Dearbhla Molloy, who play sisters.

Glenn Close, who will be host of the awards ceremony on CBS on May 31, was nominated for best actress for her role in "Death and the Maiden."

Also nominated were Jane Alexander of "The Visit"; Stockard Channing of "Four Baboons Adoring the Sun"; and Judith Ivey of "Park Your Car in Harvard Yard."

Alec Baldwin was nominated for best actor for his role as the bruising, blue-collar Stanley Kowalski in the revival of "A Streetcar Named Desire."

He will face Brian Bedford of "Two Shakespearean Actors"; Alan Alda of "Jake's Women"; and Judd Hirsch of "Conversations with My Father."

Among the overlooked performers were Gene Hackman and Richard Dreyfuss, both of "Death and the Maiden," and Jessica Lange of "A Streetcar Named Desire."

The awards are presented by the American Theater Wing and the League of American Theaters and Producers. Winners are picked by 651 theater professionals and journalists.

Reagan speaks out on L.A. riots at Gorbachev award ceremony

By JEFF WILSON
Associated Press Writer

SIMI VALLEY, Calif. (AP) — Former Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev received the first Ronald Reagan Freedom Award during a ceremony that highlighted a visit overshadowed by news of the Los Angeles riot.

Gorbachev, on a two-week U.S. tour with his wife, Raisa, and daughter, Irina, was presented the award Monday at the Ronald Reagan Presidential Library.

The ceremony ended a cordial, four-day visit between Reagan and his former Cold War adversary.

"Together with my friend Ronald Reagan, we covered perhaps the most difficult part of the road back from the edge of the abyss that the world was facing in the early 1980s. We embarked on that road inspired by two high ideals — the twin goals of peace and freedom," Gorbachev said.

Gorbachev did not mention the deadly riot, but former President Reagan acknowledged the obvious.

"I'd like to say something about what I know is on all of our minds, the tragic events in Los Angeles in recent days," Reagan told guests.

"I know that I speak for all of us," Reagan continued. "Our hearts and prayers go out to those who have lost their lives, for their friends and families, and for justice and peace."

The trial of four white Los Angeles policemen accused of beating black motorist Rodney King was held in Simi Valley. Three days of rioting erupted on Wednesday after a jury with no blacks on it acquitted the officers.

Gorbachev was chosen for the Freedom Award for his role in making the world safer and easing tensions between the superpowers, officials at the library's Center for Public Affairs said.

In his speech, the former Soviet leader said his land today has "more free people than ever before, people who are committed to the principles of democracy and are capable of building a democratic society."

Reagan gave Gorbachev a personal tour of the library, which opened last November. They posed for photographs near a 3-ton chunk of the Berlin Wall.

On Wednesday, Gorbachev is to speak at Westminster College in Fulton, Mo., site of Winston Churchill's "Iron Curtain" speech. He also will be visiting Chicago; San Francisco; Stanford, Calif.; Atlanta; New York; Washington, D.C.; and Cambridge, Mass.

Americans find post-war Kuwait a harder place to live and work

By NEIL MacFARQUHAR
Associated Press Writer

KUWAIT (AP) — For Americans back after the Persian Gulf war, the flashbacks to being human shields or sleeping in air-conditioning ducts are now less vivid, but many are finding the Kuwait they returned to much less hospitable.

"When you are forcibly evicted from a country you just have to come back. It's part of the healing process," said Don Latham, a 51-year-old defense consultant from Albuquerque, N.M.

Latham's diary from four months in hiding during the Iraqi occupation describes stomach-wrenching incidents such as emptying the garbage in full Kuwaiti dress and having to return a Republican Guard's greeting.

When he first returned last fall, every noise sent him scurrying to the curtains to see if the Iraqi checkpoint at the intersection 100 yards away was back. Overall though, he feels rejuvenated — skinnier, more in love with his wife Maria and more confident.

"It was a small triumph but still a triumph not to have been picked up," he said.

Those captured before Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein let all foreigners go in December 1990 had the opposite experience.

Jerry D. Willis, 43, of Johnson City, Tenn., was held as a human shield at dams on the Tigris and Euphrates rivers in northern Iraq.

"When I got out I was really distraught ... I lost all my self-confidence," he said. Getting back to work installing telephone systems helped restore him.

Hotel executive Keaton Woods, who slept in an air conditioning duct for four months, snapped awake recently on an airplane when a seat belt clacked shut, thinking someone had just chambered a round.

"Afterwards you realize some of the things that are running around in your mind," he said.

Most returnees found their homes looted and salvaged whatever memorabilia they could from the wreckage. Some are still paying off stolen cars and living with borrowed furniture.

Americans estimate their losses from a year or more, without paychecks and from looted personal property at some $50,000 to $200,000 each.

The U.S. Embassy puts the American population at 5,000, the same as before the war, with no statistics on how many are returnees. But there are far more single men due to a ban on bringing in families, a ban resented by expatriates.

In general, returnees find Kuwait a shadow of its former self. They worry about possible terrorist activity and internal political upheaval. They say prices have skyrocketed, school standards have declined and labor is hard to find.

Mines keep the desert and beaches off limits.

"I'm afraid to get off the pavement in Kuwait," said Ann Olmstead, 56, of Houston, Texas, principal of The American School.

Many Americans said the once 450,000-strong Palestinian community kept private and public sectors humming by day and restaurants throbbing at night despite the Islamic ban on alcohol.

Top teachers and students were mostly Palestinian. Kuwait has expelled all but about 30,000 due to the Palestinian leadership's wartime support for Saddam.

"Kuwaitis never have socialized very much with Americans after working hours. A few might invite you home, but not every day. The Palestinians and the Pakistanis were the friendly people here," said Willis.

"It's really like a labor camp. People are just working here to send money to their families," he added.

Some feel their status has improved. American women married to Kuwaiti men find their in-laws and neighbors no longer resent them. Overall, there is a reservoir of goodwill toward Americans for leading the fight to liberate Kuwait.

"Everybody would like to have a U.S. passport just for one day to reelect (President) Bush and come back to Kuwait," said political science professor Shafiq Al-Ghabra.

But none one has quite put the crisis behind him.

Willis bought a watch with a compass to help him escape if it ever happens again, while Latham has a new four-wheel drive vehicle and access to a gun.

"I think this time I would just head south and hope if I ran into a patrol it would be small," he said.

Turnover in Congress affects crucial posts

WASHINGTON (AP) — With turnover in Congress headed for a modern record this election year, the biggest changes are shaping up in the committees that collect and spend Americans' money.

The House Appropriations Committee, whose 13 subcommittees originate spending bills for all areas of the government, is losing at least 13 of its 59 members, nearly a one-fourth turnover. Similar upheaval will occur on the tax-writing Ways and Means panel, where nine of 36 members are leaving so far.

On Appropriations, it is possible that both the chairman and senior Republican won't be back next year. Chairman Jamie Whitten, D-Miss., is in poor health at age 82, and Rep. Joseph McDade, R-Pa., predicted on Monday that the Justice Department will indict him on charges stemming from his help for a federal contractor or his campaign finances.

Other notable changes are occurring on the Public Works and Transportation, and Merchant Marine committees, which are losing both their chairman and their senior Republican member; on Armed Services, which is losing seven members, and Foreign Affairs, which is losing at least eight.

The retirement announcements on Monday by Reps. Matthew McHugh, D-N.Y., and Robert Davis, R-Mich., pushed this year's total of departing House members to 60, a post-World War II high. Eight others are leaving the Senate.

"I would not like to see wholesale changes ... but under the circumstances, it's probably good that there's going to be some change," McHugh said in talking to reporters about his departure.

Indeed, the main reason he gave for quitting is Congress' unwillingness to face down special interests and enact measures that would pull the country out of debt. He called for substantial cuts in defense spending, means testing for certain entitlement programs and tax increases for the wealthy.

"Some people don't have enough guts to make tough decisions," he said.

Some are predicting that when the dust has cleared, upwards of 100 House seats will have changed hands, letting a fresh breeze blow through an institution mired in scandal and political gridlock.

But close observers of Capitol Hill and its arcane folkways say that a flood of new faces doesn't necessarily mean a flood of new ideas. That theory ignores institutional traditions, which run strongest on the influential Ways and Means and the Appropriations panels.

Both committees are closely guarded by the House leadership, which seeks to maintain regional representation on each panel and to make each as much as possible a microcosm of the overall chamber. The selection process tends to favor mainstream thinking and leave out those with more radical ideas.

"We're very excited to have a second broker in this area," said Bachmann. "Thanks to Roger David, residents of Pampa are very familiar with our face-to-face style of doing business. When it comes to long-term investments, investors expect & deserve personal attention. A second broker will allow us to bring that level of service to more individuals."

"I'm confident that Richard Russell will build his business like Roger did - with genuine concern for the financial well being of his customers."

Roger shares Bachmann's enthusiasm for the firm's expansion. "I'm pleased that Richard has joined Edward D. Jones & Co. His Philosophy is conservative and he believes as I do, that the only way to do business is one-on-one."

Northwest Territories votes on splitting Eskimo homeland

TORONTO (AP) — Canada's move to create an Eskimo homeland encompassing a fifth of the country's land has advanced another step, with voters in the Northwest Territories approving the line for splitting their region in two.

The line, which would form the western boundary of the new territory, was approved Monday by 53.8 percent of the 15,354 people who cast ballots. Some 27,000 of the territory's 57,000 people were eligible to vote.

The boundary starts at the Manitoba-Saskatchewan border and zigzags north through the vast, sparsely populated tundra into the island-dotted Arctic Ocean.

The homeland for Canada's Eskimos, who prefer to be called Inuit, would encompass about 770,000 of the Northwest Territories' 1.2 million square miles, making it about one-third bigger than Alaska.

Results from the eastern part of the territory, where Inuit make up 80 percent of the population, ran heavily in favor of the proposed boundary. Opposition was much heavier in the west, where most of the non-aboriginal population live in the territorial capital of Yellowknife and other cities.

A homeland has long been the dream of the Inuit. They bargained with Ottawa for 18 years before reaching tentative agreement this year on creating what would be Canada's third territory.

The land and government of Nunavut, which means "Our Land" in the Inuit, would not be restricted to Inuit. But they would have hunting, trapping and fishing rights in all of the territory and outright ownership of 136,000 square miles.

The government also would give the Inuit 580 million Canadian dollars, or about $490 million, over 14 years.

Splitting the Northwest Territories would mark the first adjustment of Canada's boundaries since Newfoundland entered the confederation in 1949.

The federal government is anxious for the land claim deal to go through to prove its commitment to aboriginal self-government.

Ottawa also likes the public form of government because non-Inuit are not excluded from living in Nunavut or voting there.

But there is opposition to the boundary, particularly from the Dene Indians in the western part of the territory who say the line would put some of their traditional hunting grounds in Nunavut.

"We are not satisfied with something being forced upon us without our consent in our homeland," said Bill Erasmus, leader of the Dene nation, who urged his people to vote against the line.

The non-aboriginal people who make up slightly less than half the Northwest Territories' population, fear a split will be expensive.

A recent study estimated that establishing a new territorial government could initially cost the federal government as much as $537 million, with another $170 million a year in operating costs.

The Inuit are hoping that creating a new civil service in the eastern arctic will provide many new jobs in a region where unemployment among native people is nearly 50 percent.

But even many Inuit feel it may all be coming too fast and that right now there simply aren't enough educated Inuit to fill those new jobs.

North Korea's mysterious new leader — Is he ready?

By NATE THAYER
Associated Press Writer

PYONGYANG, North Korea (AP) — North Koreans last week heard for the first time the voice of Kim Jong Il, long billed as a near-god and now in day-to-day control of the world's most secretive country.

"Glory to the heroic Korean People's Army," Kim shouted last week at the end of a two-hour display of military might. It is the only known public utterance of a man who controls the world's fourth-largest army.

Little else is known about the 50-year-old son of the world's longest-reigning dictator, Kim Il Sung — including whether he can keep power after his 80-year-old father dies.

"No one can say what kind of leader he is or how long he is going to last, or even if he is operating on his own or tightly controlled by others," said a Western diplomat in Beijing who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The few established facts about Kim Jong Il are wrapped in rumor and innuendo. Short and paunchy, he is believed to be a chain-smoker, a heavy drinker and the owner of 20,000 videotapes, including many Western movies, according to diplomats in Pyongyang and Beijing.

But his character and political outlook are obscured in a Stalinist-style personality cult.

Kim Jong Il's picture hangs along with his father's in almost every United States affairs for the North Korean Foreign Ministry, said in an

"No one can say what kind of leader he is or how long he is going to last, or even if he is operating on his own or tightly controlled by others."

—Anonymous Western diplomat building in North Korea, and he is billed as a "genius" and "miracle worker" in the state media.

Each morning, schoolchildren chant songs praising "the Dear Leader." Museums are dedicated to him and scores of books and leaflets he is said to have authored are widely distributed.

In a surer sign of power, hundreds of thousands of goosestepping soldiers and civilians called his name at a military parade on April 25 designed to show North Korean determination to defend their system in the face of the collapse of communism elsewhere.

Until last week, Kim Jong Il was never heard on the radio; his picture was frequently shown on television, but never accompanied by his voice.

Announcers read the text of speeches he is said to have given to party and military meetings.

"The Dear Leader gives day-to-day, general, direct, and overall guidance to the direct affairs of the society," Song Rak Un, the head of interview.

Diplomats agree Kim Jong Il is running the country's day-to-day affairs, but they believe some senior military officials oppose his rule.

The opposition represents a generational conflict, diplomats say.

North Korean officials acknowledge that some generals who were known to oppose Kim Jong Il were forced to retire last year. Another report passed on by diplomats in Pyongyang and Beijing said ten generals were executed in February for trying to block his rise.

Unlike his father, reputedly a World War II guerrilla leader, Kim has no military experience. The Dear Leader reportedly does have experience as a terrorist, however.

The North Korean intelligence agent who confessed to the bombing of South Korean airliner in 1987 said Kim Jong Il personally ordered the attack. The bombing killed 115 people.

Kim Jong Il has also been charged with masterminding a 1983 bombing in Rangoon, Burma, during a visit by South Korean President Chun Doo-Won. Sixteen South Koreans were killed, including four Cabinet ministers.

Many North Koreans interviewed in Pyongyang said Kim Jong Il's accession will open the door for a younger generation of leaders who want to institute political reforms in what diplomats call the world's most repressive country.

Diplomats in Pyongyang are skeptical, however, that any significant political reform can come about without a collapse of the old system — including Kim Jong Il.

State media have said in recent months that North Korea will defend its system "to the last drop of blood," rejecting political reforms.

Dissent is not tolerated in North Korea, which according to Amnesty International has about 150,000 political prisoners. As a result, North Koreans and diplomats usually demand anonymity before speaking to reporters.

Perhaps the most critical issue ahead for North Korea is reunification with the capitalist south. Officially, the north supports unification — but on its own terms. Kim Jong Il's personal views are unknown.

Peaceful anti-racism protest turns ugly in Canada

By JEFFREY ULBRICH
Associated Press Writer

TORONTO (AP) — The city was calm early today after a peaceful demonstration protesting the Rodney King verdict and the police killing of a black Toronto man turned into an ugly night of rioting, looting and window-smashing.

More than 25 people were arrested in Monday night's violence, police said, and at least seven were reported injured. None was in serious condition.

The rampage through central Toronto by as many as 1,000 people, both black and white, shocked many who regard Canada's second-largest city as safe and largely free of the racial tensions that bedevil many major U.S. cities.

"You have to look at it as sheer hooliganism and vandalism,"

Police Chief Bill McCormack said in Ottawa, where he was attending a police conference.

He said the rioters were "part of a fringe group of lawless individuals that seized an opportunity."

Groups of young people ran through the streets attacking bystanders, smashing store windows and stealing merchandise, including guns from a gunshop.

"People were smashing everything," said Keyth James, 26, a witness. "You had people of all colors. Bricks went through windows and what they took from the stores went through other windows."

About half the shop windows were broken in one 15-block stretch of Yonge Street, Toronto's main north-south artery.

The rampage stemmed from an afternoon demonstration outside the U.S. Consulate by some 300 to 400 people that was originally planned as a protest of the acquittal of four white Los Angeles police officers in the videotaped beating of motorist Rodney King.

But its focus widened after Raymond Lawrence, 22, was shot early Saturday by an undercover policeman.

Police say Lawrence was a drug dealer and had threatened the officer with a knife. After a long chase through a tough neighborhood, Constable Robert Rice shot Lawrence twice in the chest.

Demonstrators at the rally waved placards saying "White judge, white jury, white justice, from Toronto to L.A." and "Stop killer cops."

They chanted slogans as black leaders condemned racism in the United States and in Canada.

The crowd then set off through the streets chanting: "No justice, no peace," a cry heard in the streets of Los Angeles during last week's conflagration in the California metropolis.

Eventually, the crowd reached City Hall, where violence broke out.

Police formed a chain to bar the doors of the municipal offices. Officers on horseback moved in and were pelted with rocks, eggs and cans.

"While they obstructed traffic, they were peaceful," Acting Police Chief Peter Scott said of the beginning of the march.

What exactly triggered the violence was not clear, but many black demonstrators expressed frustration that questions of race are not adequately addressed by Canada's leaders.

"It's about time people take notice of our visible minority problem," shouted one rally organizer.

There are fewer than 400,000 blacks in Canada, about 1.5 percent of the population. Seventy percent of them live in Toronto and Montreal.

Because their numbers are small, their voice is not regularly heard. But Canada's blacks have genuine grievances.

As Ontario Premier Bob Rae put it over the weekend, racism "is a Canadian fact of life that we all have to wrestle with, overcome and deal with as strongly as we possibly can."

The Toronto metropolitan area is home to 3.9 million people, only 170,000 of them black.

Eight blacks have been shot by police in Toronto since 1988, four of them fatally. The shooting death of an unarmed black by police in Montreal last summer led to angry demonstrations and recriminations: In Halifax, Nova Scotia, 150 blacks rioted in July.

As in the United States, Canadian blacks are at a disadvantage when seeking jobs, housing and, sometimes, justice.

In Ottawa, Justice Minister Kim Campbell announced Monday that the government would introduce legislation soon to limit the amount of force a police officer can use to subdue a fleeing felon.

Under the current law, police may use "as much force as necessary."

A man smashes a window of a store on Yonge Street in Toronto Monday as an anti-racism protest erupted into a looting and window-smashing frenzy in the city's downtown core.

U.N. treaty in jeopardy

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — U.N. negotiators are scrambling to salvage a global warming treaty after a Bush administration refusal to limit emissions prompted developing countries to seek less stringent regulations for themselves.

The treaty is to be one of the centerpiece of next month's environmental summit meeting in Brazil, but the continued wrangling is leaving environmentalists and diplomats with little hope that the document will amount to anything more than a proclamation of good intentions.

European delegates had initially proposed that the treaty call for emissions of "greenhouse gases" to be reduced to their 1990 levels by the year 2000. The United States flatly refused to agree to that level.

Throughout Monday's talks, developing nations, encouraged by the U.S. resistance, proposed softening the treaty language, said a negotiations official who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Negotiations chairman Jean Ripert adjourned the formal session

Monday night, saying the new turn in the negotiations was "a matter of serious concern."

He instructed negotiators to meet informally to resolve their differences before formal negotiating sessions would be resumed.

Environmentalists called on Chancellor Helmut Kohl of Germany, who was scheduled to visit the United Nations today, to make a personal appeal to President Bush to rescue the negotiations.

"A direct intervention by you with ... President Bush in particular could provide the essential breakthrough to achieving an agreement," the Climate Action Network said in an open letter to Kohl.

But some diplomats speculated that Germany already has agreed privately to support the U.S. position.

U.S. industry representatives said a stronger agreement might yet emerge when the talks conclude Friday.

"I think anything is possible," said John Grasser of the National Coal Association.

(AP Photo) Military personnel recover wreckage of an Air Force C-130 plane from Blewett Falls Lake near Lilesville, N.C. The plane crashed April 28, killing the nine crewmen aboard.

Hundreds pay tribute to C-130 crew members

POPE AIR FORCE BASE, N.C. (AP) — One thousand fellow aviators paid tribute Monday to the nine fliers who died last week when their C-130 transport crashed into a lake.

Sgt. William Burch, a member of the 40th Airlift Squadron, to which the victims belonged, said their colleagues are taking the crash badly.

"We've kind of stopped flying in the past few days," he said.

The transport crashed in Blewett Falls Lake, near the South Carolina line, last Tuesday while on a low-level training mission, officials said.

Officials don't know what caused the crash. The flight recorder has been located but not pulled from the wreckage, said Lt. Jim Knotts, a Pope Air Force Base spokesman.

Knotts said searchers have recovered three tractor-trailer loads of aircraft parts from the lake, but the bulk of the aircraft is believed to be in three sections on the lake floor.

Murky water has hampered recovery operations. Only three bodies have been recovered, but the Air Force has declared all nine dead.

What would Freud think?

WASHINGTON (AP) — If you can't reach your psychiatrist this week, calm yourself and call again Friday.

Your therapist — if he or she is like 9,000 of his or her peers — is in Washington, attending the 145th annual meeting of the American Psychiatric Association and associated groups.

These include the Anxiety Disorders Association of American, the American Sleep Disorders Association, the Obsessive Compulsive Foundation and — a counterpart to the psychiatrist-spouses' auxiliary — the Significant Others Organization of the Association of Gay and Lesbian Psychiatrists.

Freebies abound. Visitors can pick up key chains, cassette tapes, luggage tags, a refrigerator magnet in the shape of Alabama (courtesy of the Alabama Department of Mental Health and Retardation), pens, coasters, fortune cookies, lollipops and plastic bags in which to carry off the loot.

The gay and lesbian psychiatrists have a full agenda, including, at 10 a.m. Wednesday in the hospitality suite, a discussion group for gay psychiatrists "who need to be circumspect about their orientation."

Any big convention takes on a life of its own, with participants isolated from the world. A convention of psychiatrists almost defies analysis.

This one is so big it has a daily newspaper of its own, and a television service that broadcasts events into the hotel rooms of late-sleepers.

The newspaper, The Daily Bulletin, carries the results of a presidential poll. Of the convention-goers who have cast ballots, 41 percent supported Ross Perot, 36 percent Bill Clinton, 19 percent George Bush and 4 percent someone else.

For the most part, participants attend symposia on "Behavioral Inhibition as a Temperamental Risk Factor for Anxiety Disorders" and the like.

But when that gets tiresome, they stroll through the vast exhibition hall, which presents a mind-boggling combination of commerce and therapy.

The spouse's auxiliary is raising money by selling Mother's Day cards to the delegates. To prevent the anxiety that would be wrought if a psychiatrist forgot his mother.

One booth peddles Shrink Plus, computer software that helps the up-to-date psychiatrist manage his or her office.

A poster advertises a talk on "Panic Disorder: Consensus for the 90s" ("a light snack will be served.")

John Silk, salesman at a publisher's booth, says he almost sold out of a new title, "Shame: the Exposed Self."

He reports heavy browsing in another new book, "The Left-Handed Syndrome: the Causes and Consequences of Left-Handedness."

Silk believes psychiatrists are deeply interested because they're disproportionately left-handed. Another book, "Out of Darkness," about cults, "is going like gangbusters," he says.

The biggest booth of all belongs to Prozac, an anti-depressant with 5 million takers worldwide. Xanax (for panic disorder) has a big display, too, and the makers of Doral Wellbutrin give away free mugs.

Special counsel holds House records

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Justice Department special counsel now has copies of every check processed by the House bank over 39 months, and is proceeding with his criminal investigation of member overdrafts.

A federal judge on Monday upheld the counsel's subpoena for 41 rolls of microfilm from the closed bank, and the House ethics committee turned over the documents soon afterward.

Five House members who challenged the subpoena "do not have a legitimate expectation of privacy in the records," U.S. District Judge John Garrett Penn ruled.

Clifford Sloan, attorney for Rep. Sidney Yates, D-Ill., quickly notified the U.S. Court of Appeals that he would challenge Penn's decision. But absent a court ruling, special counsel Malcolm R. Wilkey is free to examine the records.

Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas, another of the challengers, called the ruling "a sad day for the country and the Constitution" and said he was "persisting in efforts to find access to a court that will hear this case on its merits."

The House ethics committee reported that the now-closed bank permitted 325 past and present members to write 24,000 overdrafts over 39 months. No financial penalty was charged for the overdrafts, making them interest-free loans.

Wilkey, a former federal judge, has said he already has uncovered examples of check "kiting," which is an attempt to draw from non-existent funds for fraudulent purposes.

In his ruling, Penn noted that the House itself voted overwhelmingly last Wednesday, 347-64, to comply with the subpoena and to provide Wilkey the microfilm, which include copies of checks written by 170 lawmakers with no overdrafts as well as those with them.

The five members challenging the subpoena argued that the records were their personal documents. Penn disagreed.

"The records sought by the subpoenas are records that were never in the possession, control or custody" of the lawmakers, he ruled. Therefore, they "took the same risk as ordinary depositors in a standard bank" that records could be provided to the government.

Penn also rejected an argument that Wilkey was on an "arbitrary fishing expedition." He said "both the GAO (General Accounting Office) and the House have recognized and confirmed that there have been a substantial number of overdrafts by some members of the House."

"This is not to suggest that any member ... is guilty of a criminal act in this regard, but the underlying facts certainly establish a basis for the materials subpoenaed," the judge said.

He also noted that Wilkey had promised to "meticulously guard the confidentiality" of the records and return, unreviewed, those of the 170 members who wrote no overdrafts.

Besides Yates and Gonzalez, the challengers were Democratic Reps. Jolene Unsoeld of Washington, Ted Weiss of New York and Craig Washington of Texas.

Pampa's first school established in 1903

In 1903, J.S. and Minna Wynne bought the Eli Vincent house at 109 South Cuyler and moved from their ranch near Panhandle so that their daughters, Alice and Beryl, could attend school in Pampa.

According to Beryl Wynne, families then living in Pampa included those of Dr. V.E. and Josye von Brunow, John E. and Ellen Chapman, Sam C. and Emily Case, A.A. and Adeline Holland, Thomas H. and Emma Larfe, Charles F. and Sophia McCarty, J.C. and Issadore Rider, Hal and Edith Townsend, Wiley P. and Katie Vincent, Eli and Georgia Vincent, Bruce Waterfields, McGees and Whales.

Single men included George Tyng, Charles A. Tignor, Will T. Wilks, Ace Harmon, Ballard, Fay Martin (telegraph operator) and another man whose name Beryl Wynne did not remember. Presumably there were others - M.K. Brown came to Pampa in April, 1903.

School District IV (Pampa) of Gray County was established on February 10, 1903. Although Mrs. Andrew Kingsmill had turned the first shovel of dirt for a building in the fall of 1902, classes were not held in the building until 1903-04. Prior to the time, the few school-age children of Pampa attended school in other places. Some of these were Bell (1895), Lefors (1896), Canadian and the academy at Goodnight.

Constructed by White Deer Laids, the first Pampa school building was a white frame structure 16x20 feet with hand-made seats. It had a belfry and a flag pole. Once in the schoolyard, Beryl picked up a star from the first flag after it had become tattered in the Panhandle wind. At first she used it as a pattern for a five-pointed star, which was difficult for her to draw, and then she kept it for sentimental reasons.

The school building was located at present 513 East Francis in Block 29 of the original town of Pampa. The block, reserved by White Deer Lands for the location of a school, was in a pasture where 10,000 cattle grazed on land leased from White Deer Lands by the Scharbauer Cattle Company at five cents per acre, payable in advance. Pampa's first school trustees were Will T. Wilks, employee of White Deer Lands, S.C. Case, a section foreman for the railroad, and John E. Chapman, operator of the coal chute for the railroad.

The first teacher was Mrs. Edith Townsend, whose husband, Hal Townsend, was the brother of Emily Case. In September, 1903, Edith Townsend took the teachers' examination at Panhandle. Since there was no county board of examiners in Gray County, her papers were sent directly to the State

Clever verse is not a limerick

DEAR ABBY: "Ollie in Orlando" sent you an amusing verse that he described as a limerick. I quote:

"Heartbeats stay at a normal rate
When one beds down with a legal mate

"But roosting in another's nest
"May lead to cardiac arrest."
Abby, it is amusing, but it is not a limerick. For your information, a limerick is a five-line humorous verse in which the first, second and fifth lines rhyme with each other — and the third and fourth lines also rhyme with each other. The third and fourth lines are always shorter, as they contain fewer metric feet than the other lines.

Any verse that does not follow that pattern, however clever it may be, is simply not a limerick; it is a verse.

FRANK IN OREGON

DEAR FRANK: Frankly, even though I have appreciated limericks for a very long time, I paid little attention to their construction. However, after a little research, I gathered a few interesting facts about limericks.

The limerick was named for the city of Limerick in Ireland, which is the third-largest city in the Republic of Ireland. (Only Dublin and Cork are larger.) No one knows who originated the limerick, but in 1846, Edward

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Lear (no relation to Norman) popularized limericks in the book he published titled "A Book of Nonsense." The following is a typical limerick by Edward Lear:

There was a lady of Wilts,
Who walked up to Scotland on stilts;

When they said it is shocking
To show so much stocking
She answered, "Then what about kilts?"

DEAR ABBY: So you appreciate limericks? I do, too. Here's one that my best friend sent to me back in 1922:

There was a young man from Amazon
Who put nighties of his gramazon
The reason was that
He was too fat
To get his own pajamazon.

MARGARET CARLSON,
WILLOWS RETIREMENT HOME, BREMERTON, WASH.

DEAR ABBY: This is my favorite limerick:

There was a young don from Trinity
Who solved the square root of infinity
While counting the digits
He was seized by the figits
Dropped science and took up divinity.

Hall of Fame chuckwagon gathering set

City slickers will have the chance to experience life on the trail during the National Cowboy Hall of Fame's "Cowboy Chuckwagon Gathering," May 23-24, at the Oklahoma City museum. From a real longhorn cattle drive to frontier stagecoach rides and live entertainment, family members of all ages can experience the life of the cowboy, circa 1880.

The fun begins at 9 a.m. Saturday with the longhorn cattle drive. Chuckwagons from working Oklahoma and Texas ranches will set up camp in the gardens of the museum during the two day event. Cowboys and "cookies" will prepare mouth-watering samples of cowboy fare for visitors while discussing life on the trail.

Dave Alexander and the Legends of Western Swing along with original members of the Bob Wills Texas Playboys, will be featured on the outdoor stage.

Children can get their picture taken atop a real longhorn steer and there will be a best dressed children cowpoke contest.

Jazz rallies past Clippers; Parish hits 27 as Celtics deadlock series

By The Associated Press

For the Utah Jazz, the success of 40 victories in 44 home games was more than enough to balance the disappointment of four first-round playoff losses in six years.

"I know how we are in this building. And I knew we'd do it," said Jeff Malone, who scored 25 points as Utah rallied from a 15-point deficit for a 98-89 victory over the Los Angeles Clippers that gave the Jazz a 3-2-series triumph Monday night.

For the Boston Celtics, 11 consecutive victories was more than enough to balance one poor performance against the Cleveland Cavaliers.

Robert Parish, who missed 10 of 12 shots in Boston's previous two playoff games, bounced back with 27 points as the Celtics beat the Cleveland Cavaliers 104-98, tying their Eastern Conference semifinal series 1-1.

"He answered every question after he played bad," Kevin McHale said. "He answered questions about being too old. He answered questions about Brad Daugherty being too good for him. Today, he played well and he'll let others do the talking."

Parish sank 13 of 18 shots while helping limit Daugherty to 22 points on 7-for-15 shooting. Daugherty scored only two points in the fourth quarter.

"Robert Parish is a vintage player, and he played like fine wine tonight," Cleveland's John Battle said. "He's a veteran, but he's young at heart. They shot the ball extremely well, and our intensity went up and down because of it."

NBA roundup

The Celtics, who made 43 percent of their shots in the 101-76 series-opening loss, improved to 59 percent in winning Game 2.

"This is much more reminiscent of the way we've been playing the last five, six, seven weeks," McHale said. "I watched the whole tape of Saturday's game, and we didn't play well. Their double-teaming and scrambling defense really bothered us. Today, we handled it better. We had better spacing on the floor."

"This was a vintage Boston Celtic win," Cleveland's John Battle said. "They put you away very quietly. They were very cool, calm and collected. They shot the ball extremely well, and our intensity went up and down because of it."

Reggie Lewis scored 26 points and McHale finished with 18 for the Celtics, winners of 12 of their last 13 games. Larry Bird has missed all 13 games because of his sore back.

Boston, which plays host to the Cavs in the next two games Friday night and Sunday, trailed 76-75 entering the fourth quarter before a 16-6 run gave the Celtics a 91-82 lead.

Mark Price scored 20 points for Cleveland, which won six more regular-season games than the Celtics but now have lost to them three times at Richfield Coliseum.

The Jazz, who trailed 30-15 late in the first quarter, avoided another embarrassing playoff defeat. Three of their four first-round losses the last six years came when they took the homecourt advantage into the series.

The Clippers, making the franchise's first playoff appearance since 1976, were trying to become the fourth team to rally from a 2-0 deficit to win a best-of-5 series. They led 52-40 at halftime, but the Jazz pulled to 77-73 after three quarters and then pulled ahead in the fourth period as Los Angeles missed nine of its first 10 shots and scored just 12 points in the final 12 minutes.

"We had our chances," Clippers coach Larry Brown said. "We learned a lot and extended a great team to five games."

Karl Malone finished with 19 points for Utah, 15 of them in the second half after he went 1 for 9 from the field in the first half.

"We didn't play that great, so we just wanted to come out, play hard and make something happen," he said.

Danny Manning, who fouled out with three minutes left, scored 24 points for the Clippers.

The Jazz advanced to the second round against Seattle, starting Wednesday night at Salt Lake City. The sixth-seeded SuperSonics defeated Golden State, No. 3 in the Western Conference, and were the only lower-seeded team to win in the first round.

Tonight's second-round openers have New York at Chicago and Phoenix at Portland.

The Trail Blazers, top-seeded in the West, completed a 3-1 victory over the Los Angeles Lakers Sunday after Phoenix swept San Antonio 3-0.

Defending champion Chicago, 3-0 winners over Miami, have waited since Wednesday for the Knicks, who defeated Detroit Sunday for a 3-2 series win.

Celtics' center Robert Parrish shoots over the Cavalier's Mike Sanders in the first quarter Monday night.

Pampa tracksters come from behind to win 400-meter relay at 4A regional meet Pampa's 400 and 800-meter relay teams ran two completely different races at the Class 4A regional meet last weekend in San Angelo.

One was close and the other one wasn't, but the end results were the same.

Pampa's 400-meter relay team came from behind to win with a time of 49.00. Frenship was a close second at 49.3.

"Going into the last handoff we were in fifth place, but Shanna Molitor (the fourth leg), bless her heart, gave it everything she had, and we were able to pull out the victory," said PHS head coach Mike Lopez.

In Friday's preliminaries, Pampa tied with Crowley at 48.8 for the best qualifying time in the 400-meter relay. Wichita Falls Hirshi went into the finals with the top qualifying time of 48.5, but they dropped the baton on the third exchange.

"Sometimes the breaks go your way, sometimes they don't. But in this case the breaks went our way and we were able to take advantage of it," Lopez said.

Pampa's 800-meter relayers led all the way in posting their best time of the season, 1:42.08.

"We didn't have any pressure at all. Shelly Young and Shanna Molitor ran outstanding legs to help us record our best time," Lopez said.

Pampa's 800 team had posted a 1:44.06 for Friday's best qualifying time.

The Lady Harvesters' 1600-meter relay team placed fourth at 4:04.99.

Nikki Ryan in the triple jump and Shanna Molitor in the 100 came close to qualifying, both coming in third in their respective events.

Only the top two individuals in each event advanced to the state meet May 15-16 in Austin's Memorial Stadium.

Ryan cleared 36-73/4 in the triple jump, finishing just behind Hirshi's Angela Reed, who placed second at 37-4. The winner was Frenship's Adrien Sawyer, who jumped 37-111/2.

Molitor lost out to Snyder's Trina Thompson for second place in the 100. Thompson was timed at 11.9 while Molitor crossed the finish line in 12 seconds flat. Arlington Heights Tinesha Jackson had an 11.7 to win the race.

Cowboys' owner impressed with Hennings

By JAIME ARON
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) - If Chad Hennings makes the same impression on the football field as he has on Dallas Cowboys owner Jerry Jones, the rest of the NFL may be in trouble.

Hennings, the 1987 Outland Trophy winner, has been in the Air Force for five years, but this summer likely will join the team that drafted him in the 11th round of the 1988 draft.

"He certainly is going to be something special to the NFL," Jones said Monday while announcing plans for his team's third training camp at Austin's St. Edward's University.

"Here's a guy who flew combat in Desert Storm ... so he's used to operating with a little sensitivity to pressure," Jones said.

Although it may seem strange for a team to be fired up over a late-round pick, especially one taken four years ago by previous management, Hennings' story is even more unusual.

He was named the nation's top collegiate defensive lineman his senior year at Air Force, but since has been serving active military duty.

Now, as the government reduces the number of military personnel, people who have jobs lined up are eligible for early release from their commitments.

Hennings secured employment two weeks ago when the Cowboys worked him out the day before the draft. They were so impressed, they did not draft another defensive lineman.

The Cowboys do have history on their side. Dallas used a pick in the early 1960s on a quarterback who first had to serve in the Navy. Several Super Bowls later, Roger Staubach became a Hall of Famer.

Royals beat Indians as brawl erupts

By The Associated Press

Neal Heaton hit Albert Belle with a pitch and sounded proud that he did it.

"No question about it, you've got to protect your own players in the heat of battle," Heaton said after the Kansas City Royals beat the Cleveland Indians 11-6 Monday night. "That's the way baseball is played and the way it's always going to be."

Heaton said he threw at Belle leading off the bottom of the eighth because Cleveland reliever Eric Bell hit Royals first baseman Wally Joyner with a pitch with two outs in the top of the inning.

"It was deliberately thrown at him, just like the left-hander deliberately throwing at my first baseman," Heaton said.

Heaton was ejected by home plate umpire Terry Cooney after the second of the consecutive inside pitches to Belle. Belle charged the mound several seconds after the ejection, both dugouts and bullpens emptied and several players exchanged punches. Belle, who refused to comment, also was ejected.

Indians manager Mike Hargrove said it appeared to him the inside pitches were deliberate.

"It would be hard for me to stand there and let somebody throw two fastballs at me and not let him know I'm upset about that," Hargrove said.

In other games, Chicago beat Milwaukee 7-0, Minnesota beat Boston 6-1, Baltimore beat Texas 8-5, Toronto beat Oakland 7-3, Detroit beat California 6-2 and New York beat Seattle 7-5.

Mike Macfarlane and Keith Miller hit two-run homers as Kansas City won for only the fifth time in 24 games this season. The Royals, who began the night with just a .214 average and 70 runs, banged out a season-high 15 hits and broke double digits in runs for the first time since last year.

Rusty Meacham (1-0) got the win for retiring one batter in the sixth. Rod Nichols (0-2) gave up four runs and three hits in 2 1/3 innings.

Take note, all you right-handed National League batters. John Smoltz is taking you apart.

"I feel I should get most right-handers out," Smoltz said Monday night after giving up three hits in seven innings, all to left-handed batters, as the Atlanta Braves beat the Chicago Cubs for the fourth time in seven days, 6-1.

Smoltz admitted he got a little out of rhythm in the seventh inning after allowing a single to the left-handed swinging Doug Strange and walking pinch hitter Chico Walker.

"I went 3-0 on Dunston, but then I threw three pretty good fastballs to get him, and he's a right-hander," said Smoltz.

Mark Grace in the first inning and Derrick May in the second had the other hits off Smoltz.

Smoltz feels he has learned to put other teams away.

"I think where I picked up from last year," he said, "is that with men on second and third with one out, I'm getting out of it, rather than let the other team creep back into the game."

Four times the Cubs got runners as far as second in seven innings, only to have Smoltz shut them down.

Walks are deceiving too, says Smoltz, and should not be taken out of context.

"True, I walked five batters, but I did not walk a single leadoff batter, and that is what I call a cardinal sin," said Smoltz. "I don't mind walking a batter with one or two outs. And in my mind, they shouldn't get a run."

Baseball roundup

The Cubs didn't get a run against Atlanta in three games last week and had gone 34 innings since last July 28 in Chicago without scoring a run against the Braves.

The Cubs finally broke through in the eighth off Mike Stanton on pinch hitter Jerome Walton's RBI fielder's choice. Mark Grace and Ryne Sandberg singled and Walton's grounder to shortstop was fumbled by Rafael Belliard, who got the forceout at second base as the run scored.

The loss, the Cubs' sixth in seven games, failed to dampen manager Jim Lefebvre's spirits.

"You have to hand it to John Smoltz," said Lefebvre. "He certainly did a fine job against us. We had 10 baserunners. We had opportunities early, but he had such great stuff, we couldn't do anything against him."

The Braves struck for three fourth-inning runs, two on Belliard's single off loser Frank Castillo (0-3). Belliard had just one RBI in 63 at-bats.

Sid Bream led off with his first homer of the season, hitting the ball into an 18 mph wind. Damon Berryhill followed with a single and was doubled to third by Jeff Blauser. Both runners came home on Belliard's single.

Castillo, making his sixth start, allowed seven hits and four runs in four plus innings, striking out four.

The Braves made it 4-0 in the fifth when Ron Gant came home from third on Girardi's passed ball after the Braves had loaded the bases. In the eighth, Deion Sanders tripled off Jeff Robinson, coming home on a wild relay throw by Dunston.

The last Atlanta run came on Dave Justice's leadoff homer in the ninth.

"I don't want my players to get down," Lefebvre said. "I don't want them to listen to the broadcasters and the writers. I want my guys to realize they are close. We just have to come out here, keep our chins up, and not let anybody get down on himself."

New York's Bret Saberhagen should want to pitch against the Houston Astros every time he takes the mound.

But he doesn't. He pitched a six-hitter over eight innings, struck out nine and finally gave up a run to Houston, as the Mets beat the Astros 5-1 Monday night and made it six victories in seven games.

"I'd rather face different teams on consecutive outings because guys can get my timing down," Saberhagen said. "Tonight, I was fortunate to have good command of all my pitches."

Saberhagen shut out the Astros 1-0 with three hits and nine strikeouts on Wednesday and he didn't allow a run Monday night until Craig Biggio singled in the sixth and scored on Eric Anthony's double to center field.

It was the first run Saberhagen had allowed in 26 innings. He had not allowed a run since Montreal scored five in the third inning on April 18.

But the Mets already were leading 5-0 when the Astros scored their only run this season off Saberhagen.

The Mets got Saberhagen the lead in the second inning when Bobby Bonilla and Eddie Murray walked to start the inning. After Howard Johnson's groundout, the runners scored on singles by Daryl Boston and Todd Hundley.

New York's second-inning runs increased the Mets' streak to 15 straight victories when they score first.

In the third, Dick Schofield and Dave Magadan singled to lead off and, after a passed ball advanced the runners, Schofield scored on a groundout by Bonilla.

Johnson's sacrifice fly in the fifth and Bonilla's sixth-inning single off reliever Xavier Hernandez provided more cushion than Saberhagen needed against the slumping Astros.

The Astros have scored four runs in four games against the Mets this season, all losses. They've struck out 43 times. The Astros have scored two runs in their last 29 innings.

Astros manager Art Howe is still hoping for an upturn. "I'm not planning any changes right now, just hoping that we'll break out of it," Howe said. "We've been facing some outstanding arms."

Kile was far less effective Monday night than last Wednesday when he pitched his first career complete game and struck out 11 despite a 1-0 loss to Saberhagen.

"Those leadoff walks in the second inning set the stage for his demise," Howe said.
