Elliott delivers

Service includes Air Force career

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
News Editor

The drone of an airplane engine causes Bill Elliott to gaze up into the sky.

Two decades have passed since he retired from a career in the U.S. Air Force, but he can still tell the type of airplane by the sound of its engine as it passes overhead.

Most Pampans just say "It's an airplane passing over." Elliott looks up and sees a KC-135 refueling an FB-111 while another waits to be refueled nearby.

"Sometimes I look up and see a B-52 and it makes me homesick," he said.

Fresh out of high school that summer of 1952, Elliott joined the Air Force. His first assignment was to serve as a jet mechanics instructor at Amarillo Air Force Base.

Twenty years "and one day" later, he quipped, Elliott retired from the service with the rank of master sergeant and with several rows of medals on his uniform. He received the Vietnam Service medal and four Air Force Commendation medals including Outstanding Unit Award with two oak leaf clusters and a "V" for valor.

As trim as the day he retired at age 38, 20 years ago, Elliott slips into his dress uniform jacket with ease.

But on the day he joined in 1952, all the boy saw was an opportunity to provide for his future in the best way he knew how.

"I wanted to go in and make master sergeant and retire at 38 years old, then go do something else," Elliott recalled. "I wanted something to fall back on if I got hurt or that would take care of my family if something should happen to me. And that is just what I got."

While serving in Amarillo, Elliott met his future wife while working at a gas station part time. After their marriage, he and "Dutch," as he fondly calls his wife, became parents to four children - Patty, Mark, Steve and Brad.

"Naturally, if you join the service you know you are going to be away from your family part of the time, but it paid off in the long run. It really did," he said.

A scrap book filled with photographs, newspaper articles, military uniform patches, postcards, copies of "Dutch's" poetry and pictures drawn and colored by his children chronicles Elliott's military career.

From 1961 to 1969, Elliott spent a total of seven years away from his family. He served "many" tours in Vietnam, declining to give an exact number. He also served in Thailand, Guam, Okinawa, and the Philippines.

Iran-Contra prosecutors: Who knew what, when?

By PETE YOST
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Iran-Contra prosecutors have turned their attention to Ronald Reagan's role in a possible coverup, but they're having difficulty getting cooperation from two of his former Cabinet secretaries, according to sources close to the investigation.

Lawyers for former Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and ex-Secretary of State George Shultz told the prosecutors last week that their clients have no information suggesting a coverup involving Reagan or anyone else, said the sources, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Weinberger and Shultz have been under investigation for several months.

The focus of the prosecutors' interest: who knew what, and when, about a CIA-assisted shipment of 18 Hawk anti-aircraft missiles from Israel to Iran in November 1985.

Reagan has given several different accounts of how much he knew about the shipment - first saying he'd objected to it, then saying he didn't recall the event at all and finally saying he had a vague recollection of it.

He never formally approved it ahead of time, but the document he signed ratifying the delivery after-the-fact described it as a swap of arms for U.S. hostages held in Lebanon. Reagan said on national television in November 1986 that he would never do such a thing. National security adviser John Poindexter destroyed the only signed copy of the document on Nov. 21, 1986 amid the public uproar over the Reagan White House's Iran arms sales. Investigators later found copies of it.

"The prosecutors' theory is that in the midst of this political crisis, the Reagan White House decided to limit the political damage and conceal the most troubling aspects of the Iran arms deals," said one of the sources, who is outside the government.

Weinberger's lawyer, Robert Bennett, refused to say Sunday whether his client had been offered any kind of a deal in exchange for testimony against the former president. Seven people have pleaded guilty to lesser crimes than initially charged with in exchange for their testimony about others in the scandal.

"Mr. Weinberger will not plead guilty to anything because he is not guilty of anything," said Bennett.

Several sources say independent counsel Lawrence Walsh is weighing whether to seek a felony indictment against Weinberger, who maintains he didn't find out about the Hawks shipment until after the Iran initiative was publicly exposed.

Lloyd Cutler, one of Shultz's lawyers, said through a secretary last week that he would not comment on his client's status. Shultz said in April that he is a subject in the investigation, meaning his actions fall within the scope of a grand jury probe.

Prosecutors went to the Library of Congress late last year, took possession of some of Weinberger's notes from various White House meetings and are using those in their investigation, the sources said.

One meeting that Iran-Contra prosecutors are focusing on, according to the sources, is a session of the National Security Planning Group on Nov. 24, 1986. The participants were Reagan, then-Vice President Bush, Weinberger, Shultz, chief of staff Don Regan, Attorney General Edwin Meese, CIA Director William Casey, Poindexter and retired CIA employee George Cave.

There, Poindexter implied that his predecessor, Robert McFarlane, was the only one with much information about the 1985 Hawks shipment, according to Meese's notes of the meeting.

But McFarlane testified during a congressional investigation in 1987 that he had informed Reagan, Regan and Shultz of the impending Hawks shipment.

Reagan's lawyer, Theodore Olson, said late last week that he has cooperated with various document requests from Iran-Contra prosecutors over a long period of time, but has had no contact with them recently.

Skellytown woman dies in crash

HUTCHINSON COUNTY - A Skellytown woman was killed and her husband seriously injured in a one-vehicle accident late Saturday night.

Patsy Lorraine Jones, 24, was thrown from a 1986 Mercury Topaz which her husband, Stacy Wayne Jones, 29, was driving in the 11:25 p.m. accident on a paved county road 16 miles northeast of Borger.

The vehicle was traveling eastbound on the Price Lease road when Jones swerved to miss a deer, lost control of the vehicle and rolled it twice, according to a spokeswoman with the Texas Department of Public Safety in Amarillo. The vehicle came to rest on its top in the ditch.

Neither the driver nor the occupant were wearing seatbelts, according to the DPS report, and Mrs. Jones was ejected from the vehicle. She was pronounced dead at the scene by Hutchinson County Justice of the Peace Faye Blanks at 12:39 a.m. Sunday.

Mr. Jones was listed in serious condition, suffering from internal and spinal injuries, this morning in the Intensive Care Unit at Northwest Texas Hospital in Amarillo.

Mr. Jones is a cowboy at the Brainard Ranch near Skellytown and his wife was a housewife, the DPS said.

Arrangements for Mrs. Jones' funeral are pending with Ed Brown & Sons Funeral Home in Borger. - Beth Miller

Panel begins new examination of controversial sleeping pill

By RICHARD L. VERNACI
Associated Press Writer

ROCKVILLE, Md. (AP) - Experts advising the Food and Drug Administration today began a new examination of Halcion, the most widely prescribed sleeping pill in the world, to see if the drug is safe and effective.

The agency has reviewed the safety of the drug a number of times since it was approved for use in the United States in 1982 and is investigating its manufacturer, Upjohn Co., on allegations that the company withheld adverse information.

The advisory panel today was told only to consider evidence of whether the drug works and is safe and not to take into account whether Upjohn shaded the evidence previously submitted to the FDA.

Dr. Paul Leber, director of the agency's division of neuropharmacological drugs, said the FDA would not discuss its investigation of the manufacturer.

The agency in 1987 said the initial dosage of Halcion should be cut in half to 0.25 mg, and later called for labeling and packaging changes.

In the years since, Leber said the FDA has continued to receive reports of adverse reactions, including confusion, hostility, psychosis, depression, dependence and death. He did not give figures.

The panel meeting today could recommend that the FDA impose restrictions on Halcion, or even an outright ban. On the other hand, it could find the drug in its current dosage and labeling is safe and effective.

The FDA is not bound by the advice of its advisory panels, but usually follows their recommendations.

Halcion has been banned in Britain, but remains popular in the United States.

President Bush's doctor said it may have been the reason that Bush vomited and collapsed in front of Japan's prime minister during a trip to Tokyo last January.

Actor Burt Reynolds says he was addicted to it, and almost died.

The drug's manufacturer, Upjohn Co., says it welcomes the inquiry by the FDA's scientific advisory panel.

At the same time, Upjohn is aggressive about suing the drug's critics for libel, filing three suits in England and threatening another in the United States.

"Isolated anecdotes and dramatic charges have resulted in a rash of questions about the product's safety and its development by the Upjohn Co.," the company said in a letter to news organizations this week.

Bush has stopped taking the drug, also known by the generic name triazolam, but his physician, Dr. Burton J. Lee, has said he would prescribe it again if he thought it was needed.

Reynolds told TV Guide magazine he once was taking the pills six at a time to control pain from an injured jaw and was consuming as many as 50 a day. He said he went into a coma and almost died when he tried to quit cold turkey.

The Physician's Desk Reference, a catalog of drugs, says doctors are advised not to give patients prescriptions for Halcion with more than a 30-day supply and warns that some people may experience withdrawal symptoms.

There also are a number of other side-effects, including headaches, dizziness, nausea, confusion, memory impairment, nightmares and depression.

Bids, security system for library on Pampa school trustees' agenda

Pampa public school trustees meet in regular session 6 p.m. Tuesday at the high school vocational building to consider bids for athletic equipment, bulk items, a computer and printer for the high school counselors office, and a high school library security system.

The latter is in an attempt to stop thousands of dollars a year in book thefts, school officials have said.

Action items include requests for approval of waivers for Lamar Elementary on a first grade teacher who potentially will be teaching kindergarten under Lamar's plan for teachers to stay with one group of students for two years.

Lamar also is seeking waivers on the number of days students must attend school in order to provide additional training days for teachers. The waivers are requested for August 24, August 31, October 5, October 6, October 12, November 9, January 15, January 18, February 15, March 29, April 23, April 30.

Officials at Lamar are also seeking a waiver that will eliminate report cards at the campus in favor of an "instructional mastery checklist."

If district trustees OK the Lamar plans, they must then be forwarded to the Texas Education Agency for final approval.

Other items on the agenda include a superintendent's report on the swimming team, along with an update on the Quality School Initiative, a Washington report on technology and education and other items pertaining to excellence in education.

Board members will also be asked to endorse an extension of the cooperation agreement with the Region XVI Service Center in Amarillo for the 1992-93 school year.

Also on the agenda is the sale of delinquent tax property and a budget workshop. - Bear Mills

Court rejects prison improvement argument

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Supreme Court today rejected an appeal by Texas officials who say federal courts are overstepping their authority in ordering improvements in the state's prisons.

The justices, without comment, let stand a ruling that holds state officials responsible for the overcrowding of state prisoners temporarily housed in county jails.

Texas' appeal was supported by officials from 11 other states: Arkansas, Idaho, Indiana, Louisiana, Mississippi, New Jersey, New Mexico, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, South Dakota and Utah.

The case - described as an "epic struggle" by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals - began 20 years ago when Harris County jail inmates sued county officials.

The county settled the lawsuit by agreeing to build new jails and renovate existing ones.

But overcrowding recurred in the late 1980s as the county was forced to house state prisoners awaiting transfer to state-run prisons.

The 5th Circuit court noted that a team of court-appointed monitors in 1989 called living conditions in the county jails "intolerable, shocking to the conscience and unequivocally unconstitutional."

Thousands of inmates were forced to sleep on the floor each night, forming a "human carpet" in some cellblocks, the appeals court said.

U.S. District Court Judge James DeAnda last year ordered the state and Harris County to reduce overcrowding, and said the state must provide $2 million to help pay for housing state prisoners in the county jails.

The 5th Circuit court substantially agreed with the judge's ruling, but ordered him to hold further hearings to determine whether the state acted out of "deliberate indifference" in seeking to avoid responsibility for the overcrowding.

That aspect of the appeals court's ruling was prompted by a June 1991 Supreme Court decision that said prison inmates cannot force improvements in inhumane living conditions unless they prove the conditions were caused by officials' deliberate indifference.

The justices ruled in an Ohio case that inmates who claim they are victims of cruel and unusual punishment cannot win a federal lawsuit merely by proving negligence. The June ruling could let Texas officials avoid remedying such conditions if they can show they lacked money for improvements.

Crimestoppers

Sometime between April 29 and April 30, an unknown person or persons removed a Novatel Portable Cellular Phone from a blue Chevy Pickup that was parked in the 1000 block of Prairie Drive. Items taken in this burglary are valued at approximately $400.

Report: Five slain in a crack house

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) - The home where four women and a teenage girl were found slain was a known crack house, and police were investigating whether some of the victims were informants, a newspaper reported today.

The victims, ranging in age from 14 to about 40, were found Saturday in a bedroom.

A police officer quoted anonymously by The Daily Oklahoman said some were shot, all were stabbed and some had had their throats slashed. The officer said the bodies were tied together.

The newspaper quoted an unidentified law enforcement source as saying the bodies were nude, and one victim was four to five months pregnant.

Police had bought drugs at the house, in a quiet, largely black neighborhood whose residents call it Christian Valley, unidentified police sources said.

The police officer quoted by the paper said some of the victims may have been informants, but police were not sure because the bodies had not been identified.

Police said Saturday they had no suspects or motive, and wouldn't comment Sunday.

Bobby Stevenson, 53, who discovered the victims and believed his girlfriend was one of them, said police asked him for a photo of the 34-year-old woman. Stevenson said he was told the woman's face "was messed up."

"I was told by one detective she was found tied in a chair," he said. "Another detective told me some of the bodies were undressed and stacked on top of each other."

Neighbors said a woman and her teen-age daughter had shared the house with one other woman.

At Green Pasture's Church of Christ, across the street from the tiny frame house, about 70 people attended services on a rainy Sunday morning.

College graduates labor at finding work

By JEFF DONN
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Faced with the worst job market in decades, many college students are doing more than just dropping resumes in the mail.

They are swarming to professional meetings, tapping every contact they can — and sending their resumes in more attention-getting ways than the Postal Service.

Bill McCandless, an Emerson College senior, has been seeking work as a TV news producer since January. He said he has spent thousands of dollars traveling to Washington and other places to meet network people at their offices and at conventions.

"Some people call it sleazy, slimy, because you're always manipulating," he said. "I say, 'No, you're creating an opportunity.'"

Competition is stiff because of an overabundance of graduates and a shriveled economy. This spring's projected crop of 1.1 million graduates from four-year colleges is the largest ever, according to the U.S. Education Department.

Victor R. Lindquist, a Northwestern University dean who writes an annual report on the job market, said this year's survey of 259 mid- to large-size businesses showed that 47 percent intended to hire fewer graduates than last year.

He said this is the worst situation for graduates he has seen in at least two decades.

"The kids have recognized that it's a very competitive market. The job of their dreams may be postponed," he said.

L. Patrick Scheetz, author of a similar survey and assistant placement director at Michigan State University, said the job market for graduates has shrunk by a third since 1989, including a 10 percent drop this year.

He said many graduating seniors have responded by broadening their searches.

"They're using network contacts, they're using vacancy listings in placement offices," he said. "They're using family, friends, faculty as references."

He told of one Michigan State student who saw a sales job listed in a newspaper, rushed to the office and called from the lobby. Asked when he could interview, the student rushed upstairs and nailed down the job.

Scheetz's study, completed in December, found that hiring is expected to be especially scant for students who majored in the liberal arts, social sciences and communications.

He said there are some areas, including business and physical sciences, where jobs still exceed the labor supply.

Success stories are easier to find in such fields. Michael Broggi, a 21-year-old who is graduating from the University of Massachusetts, snared a $34,000-a-year job as a field engineer for General Electric Co.

He attributed his good fortune to following up on leads, preparing for interviews, luck — and an uncle who works for the company.

"I have a couple of friends that are really having a terrible time," he said. "They're all envious, but really happy, for me."

Corporate officials said they are seeing some of the most aggressive job candidates in years.

"A lot more of these ... students are storming the industry and professional organizations and just really working those networks," said Maureen Lynch, a spokeswoman for AT&T. "They're also using those alumni channels more than they have in the past — just to get a foot in the door."

Some company officials said students are even trying to set apart their resumes by faxing them or sending them via express mail.

"The way the piece of paper comes in the door at least initially gets one's attention," said Cathy Marion, director of employment services at Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Co.

Some students are also placing greater importance on bolstering their resumes with internships and part-time work experience before graduation.

"They do at least one internship — if not two or three," said Marsha Della-Giustina, journalism director at Emerson College.

Court refuses to kill suit against Pickens

By RICHARD CARELLI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today refused to kill a $150 million lawsuit against Texas oilman T. Boone Pickens Jr.'s Mesa Petroleum Co. stemming from its unsuccessful 1985 attempt to take over Unocal Corp.

The justices, without comment, left intact a federal appeals court ruling that removed a key defense Pickens' company raised against Unocal's allegations that Mesa had engaged in illegal insider trading.

A federal trial judge cited that defense in throwing out the suit. But the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reinstated the suit after ruling that the federal securities law defense did not apply to Mesa Petroleum's takeover try.

Pickens became nationally known in the early 1980s in a series of assaults on big oil companies.

At the time, he chaired the Amarillo-based Mesa Petroleum and the Mesa Partners II investor group.

Before failing to grab Unocal, the nation's 13th largest oil concern at the time, the Pickens group had earned over $700 million by selling back at premium prices the stocks of oil companies it had taken over.

Unocal is the parent of Los Angeles-based Union Oil Co. of California.

In early 1985, Mesa Petroleum, now succeeded by the publicly held Mesa Inc., acquired more than 10 percent of Unocal's common stock. Mesa then made a cash-tender offer for Unocal shares, seeking to acquire control.

Unocal, led by chairman Fred L. Hartley, fought off Mesa's attempt.

And in 1986, Unocal stockholder David Colan sued Mesa, alleging a securities law violation. Unocal later joined Colan as a plaintiff.

The suit seeks to collect from Mesa the alleged short-swing profits Pickens' company realized in the takeover try.

U.S. District Judge John G. Davies in Los Angeles threw out the suit in 1990. He agreed with Mesa that its exchange of Unocal stock for Unocal bonds as part of disengaging itself from the takeover try was an "unorthodox transaction" that securities law exempts from provisions barring "speculative abuse of insider information."

The 9th Circuit disagreed last year, ruling that the exchange of stocks for bonds was not an unorthodox transaction as defined by securities law. The appeals court said the exchange was a "sale" governed by the securities law ban on using insider information.

Last year's ruling revived Unocal's lawsuit.

The case is Mesa Petroleum vs. Colan, 91-1451.

Bush confident despite poor showing in polls

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush says the "clearly recovering" economy leaves him confident of winning re-election despite polls that show billionaire Ross Perot pulling ahead of both Bush and Bill Clinton.

Bush conceded in an interview published Sunday that Perot "has captured the imagination of a lot of people" with his incipient third-party run for the White House.

"He'll do it his way, and I'll do it mine," Bush told the Dallas Morning News. "It'll all be evened out when everybody has to say what he's for, what he's against."

Bush returned to the White House on Sunday evening after a weekend spent extolling family values and economic opportunity to graduates of the University of Notre Dame and Southern Methodist University, and listening to pleas for help from leaders of Pittsburgh's oldest black neighborhood.

A new Time-CNN poll put more wind in Perot's sails, placing the Dallas businessman ahead of Bush, 33 percent to 28 percent, with Democrat Clinton in third with 24 percent. It had a 3.2 point margin of error. A companion survey found Bush's approval rating has sunk to a low of 37 percent.

Perot, appearing today on NBC's "Today" program, said he was surprised by his strong showing in the polls.

"What you have here is this interesting grass roots phenomenon. It's time to stop talking and take action," Perot said. "This is the mood of America."

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Bush "has been at 90 percent and 37 percent. In the end I think people will remember why he was at 90 percent and why he's been a good president."

Bush told the Dallas paper, "I've been through all this stuff before. None of these other potential candidates or candidates have been."

In a jab at Perot, Bush said he wouldn't "spend a lot of time on the Phil Donahue Show ... I'm president. I try to conduct myself with a reasonable degree of dignity, seriousness."

"It's a very different ballgame. My confidence is predicated on the fact ... I think the economy is clearly recovering," said Bush.

Bush, after a frenzy of activity in the past week intended to show concern for America's urban poor in the wake of the Los Angeles riots, sounded bedrock conservative themes at the Notre Dame and SMU graduations.

"If America is to solve her social problems, we must first of all restore our families," he said in South Bend, Ind., Sunday. The American family is "under siege" from divorce, abortion, teen pregnancy and violent deaths, he said.

In Los Angeles and other scarred cities, he said, "government alone cannot do what needs to be done."

The Notre Dame valedictorian, Sarah J. McGrath of Pittsburgh, Pa., drew loud applause but no response from Bush with a biting depiction of the United States as a national "divided along economic, sexual and racial lines."

Bush did pay tribute to a man he shared the stage with, Daniel Patrick Moynihan, the Democratic senator from New York who received the university's Laetare Medal as an outstanding Catholic layman despite protests from some bishops and students. Moynihan supports abortion rights.

Bush said Moynihan predicted in 1965 "with astonishing accuracy the terrible trends that would result from the breakdown of the family."

Moynihan reread his 27-year-old warning that "a community that allows a large number of young men to grow up in broken families ... asks for and gets chaos, crime, violence, unrest, disorder."

"That is not only to be expected, it is very near inevitable and it is richly deserved," Moynihan wrote.

Bush is pushing a six-part program to bring jobs, better schools and hope to the cities, including tax-free enterprise zones to lure businesses and vouchers to spur competition between public and private schools.

He told the Notre Dame graduates about Napoleon Buice, a barber he spoke with in Pittsburgh's impoverished Hill district on Friday — Bush misspoke and said it was in Philadelphia — who told him the problems stemmed from "babies having babies."

At the SMU commencement in Dallas on Saturday, Bush said the United States, despite what the pessimists and "declinists" say, remains a land of "limitless opportunities" that boasts the world's most productive and best trained workers.

But Bush drew some of his loudest applause near the end of that upbeat address when he said, "The riots in L.A. reminded us what we have to do in our own neighborhoods."

He gave Moynihan a ride home on Air Force One. The liberal senator, touring the jumbo jet for the first time, studiously avoided commenting on Bush's urban program. "We'll return to that subject tomorrow," he said.

Elliott

While in Guam, Henry Cabot Lodge who was then serving as secretary of state under Dwight D. Eisenhower asked to meet Elliott, he said, showing a photograph of the two in his album. "He was a nice old boy," Elliott remembered.

In Okinawa, Elliott and his men were selected as the ground crew for the jets used to escort dignitaries to Australia. "We flew with them and kept up the maintenance and electronics on the airplane," he explained. Photographs show him standing with his crew in their suits specially designed for them.

Also in Okinawa, he rode out a typhoon with winds up to 160 miles per hour. "I watched those winds move an 8-ton door on an airplane hangar," he recalled.

And it was in Okinawa that he experienced an earthquake that sent him scrambling out a first-floor barracks window.

A yellow silken rope is a "short timer's ribbon," Elliott explained. "When you're overseas, you get where you count the days and when it gets down to about a week then you get to wear one of these ribbons."

One of the patches says "Black Knights of the Mekong Delta."

"I was in and out of Vietnam I don't know how many times," he said. "I flew classified missions. I still can't talk about it."

His home in Thailand was a tent city. He shared a makeshift building with a canvas roof with eight other men. In the center of the compound was a generator which provided power to the whole compound.

Elliott pointed to small houses nearby in a photo of the military compound. "The Thai people would build their house from crates that our engines came in," he said.

"I'm a firm believer that people ought to go over there and see how they live and they'd appreciate what they have here," he added.

The last few years of his military career were spent at Plattsburgh Air Force Base in New York.

"I spent three winters there," he said. The average snowfall in Plattsburgh was 150 inches a year, he said.

"That last winter the snowfall was 192 inches and we flew airplanes every day except for two days," he said proudly, adding "and one of those days the wind chill factor was 55 degrees below zero. At that temperature, if you touch metal your skin will stick to it and come off."

"This is all stuff I'll never forget," he said. "I've been all over the world. I've been a lot of places I wouldn't like to go back to. But I would like to go back to Australia and New Zealand. That's beautiful country. I wouldn't mind living in Australia."

Elliott said his greatest satisfaction while in the military was reached when he went to North Carolina to work with the Air Force Reserves there.

"In that country, they had a lot of polio. There were lots of kids in wheelchairs. I remember best how me and my crew would take those kids out of those wheelchairs and set them in the pilot's seat of those old airplanes and seeing their faces. It's one of those things that sets with you."

After his retirement, the Elliotts packed up their belongings and their four children and moved to Pampa.

Born in Cleveland, Ark., and reared in Denison, Elliott didn't want to raise his family in a big city. A native of Mobeetie, Dutch wanted to be closer to her family. So they decided on Pampa as the place they wanted to finish raising their children.

Elliott immediately got a position with the post office here as a postal carrier, a position he holds to this day.

As a postal carrier he walks a route 15 to 16 miles in length and visits more than 550 houses every day. He loves to chat with the friends he's made along the way, especially the elderly, he said. He knows their names, their children's names, and who has moved where. His load averages 1,000 to 1,500 letters, some 200 magazines, and a number of parcels that he places in delivery sequence.

"It's really an enjoyable job," he said. "I wouldn't have been at it so long if it wasn't."

Still, Elliott plans to retire in four years. "I'll be 62 years by then and it'll be time for me to rest awhile," he said.

For now, he relaxes by watching television, making home movies of his seven grandchildren and working with wood. He proudly shows an antique buffet that he has restored to glistening beauty and a 125-year-old table that he rescued from a garbage dump.

He tells about an antique cedar chest that "looked like it had been left out in the chicken house." He whittled a leg for it, restored it and gave it to his daughter. "It's a beautiful thing; the inside of it is pure cedar," he said.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Perot is far from being an outsider

Support for H. Ross Perot continues to rise across America. It's easy to understand why. Our sitting politicians have sold out to the special interests. To pay the bill, the politicians are forcing taxpayers to subsidize ever-increasing and ever-more-wasteful government programs.

In contrast to the politicians, Perot is a brave man who has done commendable things. He rescued some of his employees from the Ayatollah Khomeini's Iran. He has played an important part in the search for U.S. prisoners of war left behind in Vietnam.

However, we should look a little more closely at Perot and his record.

"In June 1966, Texas Blue Cross awarded a contract" to Perot's Electronic Data Systems, The New York Times reported, "to process Texas Medicare claims for 1966 and 1967." The money paid to EDS came entirely from federal taxpayers. "At the same time, Perot was also the part-time head of data processing for Texas Blue Cross, earning $20,000 annually..." Moreover, "Social Security administration officials were not told of the subcontract at the time of its signing, or of Mr. Perot's dual role with Texas Blue Cross and Electronic Data."

Built on the taxpayers' money it received, EDS exploded in value. When EDS went public on Sept. 12, 1968, Perot's share of the stock skyrocketed in value to $154 million.

Perot then expanded his business with many private sector contracts. Government was not his only business. But as Merrill Lynch securities analyst Stephen McClellan commented, the government contracts were "the basic early foundation and underpinnings of the company." No wonder Perot has been dubbed the world's first "welfare billionaire."

Later, Perot was a close ally of the Nixon administration. According to the Associated Press, "The AP's review of Nixon-era documents at the National Archives documented substantial ties between Perot and President Nixon, including instances in which the White House intervened with federal agencies on Perot's behalf and provided VIP treatment for his family." In the 1980s, Perot gave political donations to Jim Wright, the House speaker who resigned under scandal. Wright helped Perot land $120 million in federal taxpayers' money for an airport built by the Perot family in Texas.

What about the future? There's a political axiom: Personnel is policy. Perot has just chosen John White, a Carter administration adviser, to mold Perot's positions on the issues. Would White be a svenigali who gave us H. Ross Carter?

Perot has forged links with the Democratic leadership in Congress and also with the administrations of Lyndon Johnson, Richard Nixon, Jimmy Carter, Ronald Reagan, and (until this year) George Bush. The evidence seems to indicate that, far from being an outsider, Perot is the quintessential insider.

Berry's World

Is this spending necessary?

Last month President Bush attempted to slice some pork out of the federal budget. Last week the Senate made hash of his effort. The president had proposed to rescind 130 items. The Senate Appropriations Committee rejected 97.

I have been writing about these rescissions for what they symbolize. In ways that any citizen can understand, they speak tellingly of the spend-happy attitude of an irresponsible Congress. No one can understand a $4 trillion debt. No one can understand a federal deficit that accumulates at $1 billion every day.

But we all can understand - and we can question - an appropriation of $225,000 to build a research facility to benefit the Vidalia onion growers of Georgia. We can ask, Does this facility have to be built NOW? Couldn't the growers finance it themselves?

Sen. Bob Byrd, as chairman of the committee, says no, the taxpayers must pay for the storage laboratory. The committee rejects the president's proposal to save $387,000 earmarked for "cool season legume research in Washington, Oregon and Idaho." The committee insists that $185,000 be spent on lowbush blueberry research in Maine. It is somehow imperative that $133,000 be spent now - this year! - to benefit growers of celery and asparagus in Michigan.

Give Byrd some credit. His committee would rescind $367,000 that has been appropriated - you may find this hard to believe - to study "the incidence of fear that people have of visiting their dentist." The committee says: "This behavioral research has been under way for a number of years, and the fact that there exists an aversion to pain and, therefore, a fear or hesitancy to visit one's dentist is a fact already well documented."

The committee, on its own, agrees to rescind $346,000 in research grants to study "monogamy and aggression in fish in Nicaragua, the well-being of middle class lawyers, sexual mimicry of swallowtail butterflies, and song production in freely behaving birds." Hooray for the committee!

Have another. Byrd's committee recommends that we not spend $4 million appropriated to search for extra terrestrial intelligence. The program has merit, the committee agrees, but "full funding of this program cannot be justified in the face of more pressing domestic requirements and a $4 trillion debt."

Exactly so. A series of presidents - six of them in a row - have connived with a spendthrift Congress and a something-for-nothing electorate to get us into this fix. The political process has failed, or perhaps it has worked too well. Pressure groups - onion growers, mink farmers, law schools - have been granted the little special favors they requested.

In one of my columns on unjustified spending, I singled out an item of $101,000 to renovate a playground in Meyersdale, Pa. There is no way that this outlay could be defended as a responsibility of the federal government, but at the request of local interests, Rep. John P. Murtha put the item in a spending bill.

My column brought a spunky letter from the mayor of Meyersdale, Paul E. Fuller. He typed it up himself. He explained that his community of 2,550 persons suffers heavy unemployment. The community has pitched in to build a hospital, a new fire hall and ambulance service, and a $160,000 library. But equipment at the playground was old and no longer safe. So they went to their congressman.

"I think it is about time to cut out all federal waste, unnecessary perks and projects," Mayor Fuller wrote, "but under the circumstances we do not think the $101,000 is a perk or a waste. When the White House, the Congress, the Pentagon and all the other agencies and programs eliminate their waste, we will be happy to join the crowd."

"The White House on numerous occasions has pointed out the need for voluntarism, the need for communities to pick themselves up by the bootstraps. As a conservative, that sounds good to me. But who should start first - the little town of Meyersdale with the peanut grant of $101,000, or the White House and the Congress and the others?"

That says it all. At every appropriation hearing, members of Congress ought to demand honest answers to honest questions: Is this outlay necessary? Is it indispensably necessary? Could it be postponed without grave damage to the nation?

So long as these questions go unasked and unanswered, Mayor Fuller's homely reasoning will prevail. He intends to get while the getting's good. And so it goes.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Monday, May 18, the 139th day of 1992. There are 227 days left in the year. This is Victoria Day in Canada.

Today's Highlight in History:

On May 18, 1980, the Mount St. Helens volcano in Washington state exploded. The blast took 1,300 feet off the top of the mountain, leaving 57 people dead or missing.

On this date:

In 1642, the Canadian city of Montreal was founded.

In 1860, the Republican Party convention in Chicago nominated Abraham Lincoln for president.

In 1910, Halley's Comet, as seen from Earth, moved across the sun.

In 1926, evangelist Aimee Semple McPherson mysteriously vanished while visiting a beach in Venice, Calif.; she reappeared a month later, claiming to have been kidnapped.

In 1934, Congress approved the so-called Lindbergh Act, which called for the death penalty in cases of interstate kidnapping.

In 1951, the United Nations moved out of its temporary headquarters in Lake Success, N.Y., for its permanent home in Manhattan.

"Yes, I see — but what's the position on abortion and capital punishment?..."

Living up to expectations - or down

At the beginning of this school year, the 11th-grade math class at Richards High School, Tallahassee, Fla., was incorrigible.

Sandy Berger, a veteran teacher, immediately recognized that these 35 fundamental math students were going to be trouble.

Most, in fact, had been assigned to an alternative education program the previous year.

Nonetheless, going by state standards, Berger began to prepare the students to meet the most basic computational requirements on the SSAT, a standardized test.

From the beginning, all of the students were uncooperative; some were totally obnoxious.

They refused to cooperate with their teacher and were utterly without respect for any other school authority.

When Berger administered SSAT pre-tests, these 16- and 17-year-olds' average scores were below 20!

One day, when Berger was elsewhere, a substitute teacher took over her class and barely survived. She said she would "never take over that class again."

Paul Harvey

The first semester, of 35 students, only five passed - and those only barely.

Something had to give.

Sandy Berger, unwilling to give up, called in the school's guidance counselor. Together they listened to the students.

What they heard the students say was that they were fed up with being taught "baby math." They had construed this easy curriculum to imply that they were "stupid." If they were "stupid" then "stupid people" were expected to "act bad."

What Berger had been witnessing was more rebellion than reluctance.

The next day she discontinued the "baby math" and started her class on algebraic equations.

Response was immediate and remarkable!

Over the next six weeks behavior problems became negligible. At worst, some students were animatedly talkative.

Berger stressed that her students were now in the "big league" of learning and they reacted accordingly.

Where the previous semester only five had passed, this new semester 33 of the 35 passed.

And most every student had improved his or her classroom average by more than 30 percent.

Leon County Schools in Florida have thus relearned the degree to which we live up to our expectations - or down to them.

We have learned with athletes as well as with scholars that self-esteem is essential to improve performance.

"As a man thinketh," is a truism as old as Scripture and as new as Sandy Berger's 11th-grade math class in Tallahassee, Fla.

King verdict and Los Angeles riots

Some thoughts about the riots in Los Angeles and elsewhere, following the Rodney King verdict:

1. Not until after the verdict was handed down did most of us learn (a.) that there were two other black men in the car with King, both of whom were said to have submitted peaceable, and (b.) that an earlier segment of the famous videotape, which our TV networks neglected to broadcast, shows King jumping up and lunging at one of the officers. Together, these facts persuade me that the jury, which listened to the evidence for three months and debated its verdict for eight days, probably knows a lot more about the case than those 81 seconds of tape told the rest of us.

2. The protest marches after the verdict may have been started by the usually harmless flakes, but they were swiftly augmented and taken over by savage, mindless teen-agers of all races who obviously considered the commotion just a license to loot - and even, in scores of tragic cases, to kill.

3. Henceforth, you can forget about gun control. Chief Gates admits that the Los Angeles police were "simply overwhelmed." The 2,000 National Guardsmen ordered to their aid by Gov. Wilson had to wait 15 hours for their ammunition to arrive. In my own hometown, San Francisco, a mob rampaged up one side of Nob Hill and down the other, smashing and looting as it went. (Almost every street-level window on two sides of the venerable Fairmont Hotel was broken.) Not a policeman was to be seen until the damage had been done. Mayor Jordan may have some excellent explanation for their absence, but hereafter, you can be sure, a lot more Americans are going to plan on protecting themselves.

William Rusher

4. The riots have in all probability assured the re-election of George Bush. Everybody knows where the two parties stand on these issues, and many will vote accordingly.

5. The prize for the most two-faced attempt by a politician to make hay out of these tragic events goes to Slick Willie Clinton, who expressed "concern" over the verdict without condemning it, and sympathized with the "millions of Americans" who felt "abandoned" in this crisis by President Bush - but left it to his listeners to decide whether he was sympathizing with blacks outraged by the verdict or with whites outraged by the riots.

6. I hope a special circle in hell is reserved for the editors of the newspapers that published the names of the jurors in the King case for the convenience of anyone angry enough to go after them. If any of the jurors come to harm, those editors should be prosecuted as accessories before the fact.

7. An attempt will now be made to prosecute the four police defendants under a federal law that forbids conspiring to deprive anyone of his civil rights. This statute, originally designed 120 years ago for use against the Ku Klux Klan, was resurrected in the 1960s when state juries declined to convict certain whites accused of crimes against blacks. The Warren Court naturally found such second-try prosecutions constitutional, but if they aren't double jeopardy, what is? One can at least hope that the Rehnquist Court will invalidate them.

8. What is happening to us, and what can be done? Simply put, the secular humanists have been gnawing away at the foundations of Western civilization (God, morality, the family) for two centuries, and have finally succeeded in producing, especially in our inner cities, an almost totally amoral kind of human being - a sort of human pit bull. Our country will recover, if at all, only by rediscovering and recommitting itself to the great salvific truths on which our civilization was founded.

Art and therapy join in Pollock's drawings

By FRED PIERETTI
Associated Press Writer

PRINCETON, N.J. (AP) — Psychoanalysis and art have an uneasy relationship — one that can lend itself to academic disputes bordering on barroom brawls.

Some of the arguments even last decades, such as the one swirling around the influential American artist Jackson Pollock, who once professed "the source of my painting is the unconscious."

Attention is now focused on a series of Pollock's drawings ranging from simple doodles to elaborate and often terrifying sketches.

A rare exhibition of these drawings Pollock made while undergoing psychoanalytic therapy to treat his chronic alcoholism is on show at the Art Museum, Princeton University. This is the second stop on a three-city national tour.

The exhibit offers insights into Pollock's complex psyche, according to Thomas Levin, a professor at Princeton University who studied the artist. "These drawings raise questions about how to use art as therapy and the relationship of psychoanalysis and art."

Museum Director Allen Rosenbaum summed up the ongoing dispute about the drawings' place in the artist's development this way: "Some see this as Pollock continuing with his work, but others would like to see this as a sort of episode."

In 1939-1940, Pollock underwent psychoanalysis with Dr. Joseph Henderson, who practiced the method of psychotherapy developed by C.G. Jung. To spur conversation with the taciturn, emotionally-troubled artist, Henderson asked Pollock to bring in drawings he was working on.

Pollock, one of the premier exponents of the modern American school of "abstract expressionism," gave Henderson a total of 82 images. He also gave him a gouache painting as a parting gift when Henderson left for California in 1940.

The exhibition consists of 44 of the unsigned drawings plus the signed painting, a brooding depiction of a crucifixion.

The drawings' complex subjects include animal, human and composite creatures. Many of the images are reminiscent of Picasso, Andre Masson and other surrealists in whom Pollock sought inspiration.

Some are also fanciful — for example, a colorful depiction of a UFO-like machine hovering over hieroglyphic human shapes.

A work from his later breakthrough period of "drip paintings," the innovation that gained Pollock international recognition, was borrowed from a private collection for the show.

The exhibition is called "Jackson Pollock: 'Psychoanalytic' Drawings." The word psychoanalytic is in quotation marks because it refers only to drawings submitted to Henderson, not to a specific category of Pollock's work.

Claude Cernuschi, curator of the exhibition and art history professor at Duke University, said the show is important because the drawings have rarely been exhibited together. They provide "an opportunity to see Pollock's work prior to his artistic maturity."

Cernuschi, however, clearly sides with those who believe these drawings are part of Pollock's regular artistic production. He does not think they can be interpreted as images prompted by the psychoanalysis itself.

"I don't feel they reveal that much more than other drawings of the same period," Cernuschi said.

Donald Kuspit, art history professor at the State University of New York at Stony Brook, disagrees with Cernuschi.

"There is no question about Pollock's transition. These are key works art historically," Kuspit said. "They are major transitional drawings to the major Pollock we know."

"It's a mistake to think that just because they have an art historical place they don't have any psychoanalytical meaning," he added.

Rosenbaum said that Princeton asked to host the exhibit because it had bought two of the drawings for its permanent collection. Exhibits in the show come both from the museum and from private collections. The whereabouts of many of the remaining drawings are unknown, he said.

The Duke University Museum in Durham hosted the exhibition from January to March. The drawings will be on view in Princeton through June 14 and then move to the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art from July 22 to Aug. 30.

Woman facing breast cancer is running scared

DEAR ABBY: Your help is needed. There are no friends or family members to whom I can turn.

A cancerous lump was found in my breast. I've had medical opinions, read everything I can find on the subject, and have all the facts — and I do not want that breast removed. To know that I may wake up and find that I am only part of a woman scares me to death. I have no support from my husband; he was more concerned when my wisdom teeth were removed.

I thought maybe someone from the American Cancer Society could help, but I was told to hurry up and have it done, and worry about the rest later.

How do other women handle that kind of problem? No one knows about this except my husband. I feel that there is no need to worry my family. I really don't want all the unwanted advice I'd get from them. I have been a loner all of my life, and this is the only way I can handle it.

Death is better than surgery. I'm damned if I do, and I'm damned if I don't. Sign me...

DEATH ROW WOMAN

DEAR WOMAN: Death is not better than surgery! The American Cancer Society CAN help you. Many women live through this kind of ordeal and emerge with flying colors, and you can, too. You may be a candidate for more limited surgery than the "old" radical mastectomy. Call

DEAR ABBY: My husband of 25 years walked out and left me with two teen-agers to raise. He said he was in love with a woman he works with. I wondered why he worked all those long hours and never had time for his family. He told me he wanted to be president of the company he worked for, which employed about 25,000. I was very naive. I believed him. Now I know that the real reason was that he was having an affair with his secretary.

After a very emotional time and no self-esteem, I see now that life goes on. My children and I are going to survive after many therapy sessions and the support of friends and family. One thing that helped me during this trying time was one of your columns. The response about the man who has a lady for a wife and will pick up some tramp described my situation perfectly.

Please reprint that story to help some other woman whose marriage has ended due to adultery. Thanks for your help.

A LADY

DEAR LADY: If the item has helped you regain your perspective after your trauma, I am gratified. Here it is:

DEAR ABBY: Why will a married man pick up a tramp and treat her like a lady, then turn around and treat his wife (who is a lady) like a tramp?

MINNIE

DEAR MINNIE: A man picks up a tramp because he wants a female companion who is no better than he is. In her company, he doesn't feel inferior. He rewards her by treating her like a lady.

He treats his wife (who is a lady) like a tramp because he feels that by degrading her, he will bring her down to his level. This makes him feel guilty, so to get even with his wife for making him feel guilty, he keeps right on punishing her.

Restoration needs balance of history, strength

By POPULAR MECHANICS
For Special Features

Every old house tells a story, and each owner adds a chapter to the tale.

This story, however, will be mute without careful restoration, and that's where old house experts, or specialists, can be valuable.

They can help you sort through a maze of competing demands that make restoration such a tough job.

In restoring an old house, owners balance the need to have a structurally and mechanically sound house against the need to keep the house true to its historical period.

This balancing act is made more difficult because no one has unlimited time and money to spend on a renovation. Furthermore, an old house is no different than a new house in that anything you do to it can affect its resale value.

Old house professionals, for example, architectural historians, and preservation contractors who duplicate and repair old materials and methods, are devoted to preserving the features that make an old house aesthetically and historically valuable. Most likely then, you will find their advice different from those who simply want to remodel your house.

Old house specialists bring unique skills to a renovation, as they strive not just for beauty but for historical authenticity. Plumbers or electricians are no less valuable. Their work ensures that an old house's mechanical systems safely meet the demands posed by modern conditions.

By hiring an old house expert, you can avoid a variety of problems that a knowledgeable person cannot foresee.

Suppose the brick chimney on your old house needs repair. Even a skilled mason may not know how to avoid using modern bricks and portland cement mortar. Modern machine-made bricks are fired hotter and are considerably harder than the handmade irregular items from which the chimney was built. Portland cement mortars are much stronger than the mortars used before portland cement came into widespread use.

Instead of increasing the strength of an old brick chimney, modern materials will destroy it.

They form a rock-hard inclusion surrounded by comparatively soft material. As the old brick and mortar expand and contract with the changes in humidity and temperature, they are constrained by the modern rock-hard, more stable materials.

Cracking results from this interaction, which in turn lets in water. When the water freezes and expands, the cracks widen and the destructive cycle accelerates as the chimney is pulverized. A mason who specializes in historic restoration will know the correct way to repair the chimney.

Old house specialists can also give you a better understanding and appreciation of how and why your house is the way it is, and the features you should be careful with in your restoration project.

To find help from old house specialists, contact your State Historic Preservation Office or local preservation group.

You can also turn to the Association for Preservation Technology International, P.O. Box 8178, Fredericksburg, Va., 22404.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Your attitude will determine the kinds of responses you get from others today. Friendly behavior will induce warm reactions; cranky behavior will initiate an argument.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Minimize your recreational pursuits today and focus on situations that could be financially meaningful. You'll be luckier in this area than you will be playing games.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) An unpleasant encounter can be avoided today — if you excuse yourself from the presence of an individual with whom you've had a recent run-in.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) You'll be quite effective as a loner today, provided you're left to do things on your own time and at your own pace. Take measures that will put you out of the reach of distracting, peripheral influences.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Don't be afraid to think big today, even if those you'll be involved with aren't in accord. Your ideas are likely to be superior to theirs.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) If you operate along traditional lines today, your probabilities for profit are good. This might not be the case, however, when betting on long shots.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) An associate who can't carry his own weight might try to climb on the back of your pony today. This could be a handicap that may do you in.

Bulls, Cavaliers advance to East finals

CHICAGO (AP) - It was a tough series that took a lot out of the Chicago Bulls. But now that it's over, they can be thankful to the New York Knicks.

"It hardened us for the next series and the series after that," Michael Jordan said after scoring 42 points Sunday to lead a 110-81 rout in the seventh and final game of the Eastern Conference semifinals. "Give New York credit for giving us a wake-up call; we were sleep walking."

The Bulls felt the pressure of being forced into a Game 7, and they responded like champions. "Michael rose to the occasion," said coach Phil Jackson. "Our whole defensive effort in the second half rose to a higher level. The series was a good test for us. It woke us up and will make us ready for the next series."

The next series, against the Cleveland Cavaliers, who defeated Boston 122-104 earlier Sunday in their Game 7, will open in Chicago with games Tuesday and Thursday nights.

Game 2 of the Western Conference final will be held Tuesday with Utah at Portland. The Trail Blazers won the series opener 113-

88 on Saturday.

The Bulls turned the screws on the Knicks in the second half after leading 56-51 at halftime. They outscored the Knicks 54-30 in the last two periods to win going away.

"Their pressure, shot-blocking and aggressiveness flattened us out totally in the third quarter," Knicks coach Pat Riley said. "My hat's off to them. We won the sixth game, but this was their day."

Riley called it a tough ending "for which I wasn't prepared," but he also told the Knicks not to hang their heads and that he had never been around a team that worked so hard.

"Our backs were against the wall and we felt the pressure," said Jordan. "We wanted to get out of the blocks early. We wanted to be aggressive."

And it was Jordan who saw that the Bulls got going quickly. He scored the first six points and had 18 at the end of the first quarter to put Chicago on top 30-25. The Bulls never trailed after that.

However, an 11-point lead melted to 60-57 when Patrick Ewing hit two successive shots early in the third quarter.

"I felt we could have turned it around when we came within three points, but we just did not get the job done," said Ewing. "We have no excuses. We got good shots but they just didn't drop."

Although Ewing, who led the Knicks with 22 points, said his injured left ankle did not bother him, Riley said, "Patrick wasn't 100 percent. You could see on his shot that he came up short."

Also proving his worth and playing on an injured right ankle was Scottie Pippen. Maligned for not playing tough during some games of the series, Pippen finished with 17 points, 11 rebounds and 11 assists.

"It was a very sweet win for us," said Pippen. "We knew it was going to be tough, but we knew we could win. Our shots fell."

"Give New York credit. It was a tough enough series that brought out the best in us."

Jordan said the series was mentally draining on the Bulls.

"We went into this series thinking of a possible sweep, and now this series might give us the hunger we had last year," Jordan said. "It certainly will help sharpen us up."

It was Jordan who was too sharp, as far as Riley was concerned.

"Michael had 29 at the half, and the first six minutes of the game showed me that we should have played the game yesterday," said Riley.

Jordan and Xavier McDaniel jostled each other and drew technicals in the first period.

McDaniel, who scored 14 points Sunday and was a key in helping the Knicks tie the series at three games each, said, "I have no hard feelings. We are disappointed, but Chicago played a heckuva game."

Cavaliers 122, Celtics 104

In Richfield, Ohio, Brad Daugherty scored 16 points in the opening period and Cleveland never let up as the Cavaliers advanced to the Eastern Conference finals for only the second time in franchise history.

The Cavs shot 73 percent in the first quarter, and Boston never got closer than 10 points after that. Cleveland blew it open by sinking 10 straight shots from the field in the third quarter — the last three on long jumpers by Larry Nance — for a 93-67 lead.

Daugherty had 27 points, nine rebounds, six assists and three blocks before leaving to an ovation with 8:24 left. Reggie Lewis led the Celtics with 22 points.

Orlando picks up top prize in NBA lottery

Magic to draft LSU's O'Neal

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

SECAUCUS, N.J. (AP) - Last week, Allan Bristow, coach of the Charlotte Hornets, was asked about the NBA lottery and what he might do if he happened to get the No. 1 pick.

"He said the village idiot could make the pick," said Pat Williams, GM of the Orlando Magic, who owns the option. "I appreciate Allan's confidence in me."

Probability worked for Williams Sunday when the Magic, equipped with the second worst record in the league this season and the second most chances at No. 1, came away with the top prize in the lottery — LSU's 7-foot-1 All-American Shaquille O'Neal.

"Based on ability, size, strength, power and potential, he is the class of the draft," Williams said.

Bristow, with just four ping pong balls in the lottery drum, got lucky and won the No. 2 pick. "If Orlando passes on O'Neal for some reason, we'd take him," the Hornet coach said.

He must really believe in that village idiot business.

Williams is not passing, despite rumors that O'Neal, who will cost upwards of $6 million a year, would prefer to play in Los Angeles. Because the Clippers and Lakers were playoff teams this season, they did not participate in Sunday's lottery. The only way O'Neal could get there would be to sit out the season and return to the draft next year. If he sits out two seasons, he would be an unrestricted free agent.

"Everybody else wants to come to Orlando," Williams said. "I don't know any players in the league who wouldn't want to play in Orlando."

"We're the LA of the east, anyway."

If Williams is not scared off by the money or the rumors that O'Neal won't sign, Bristow said the Hornets, picking No. 2, would lean toward Alonzo Mourning of Georgetown.

"Barring any flaws, we've got to fill a void with a defensive presence, and that means it's more toward Mourning," Bristow said. "We're 95-96 percent certain, but I don't want to say definitely until we bring him in and see how he fits in with the Hornets."

If Williams and Bristow follow those plans, Minnesota, picking third, would likely wind up with Player of the Year Christian Laettner of Duke. The Timberwolves, with 11 balls in the draft drum, had the best chance at No. 1 because of their 15-67 record, worst in the league.

"If you have the most chances and don't get No. 1, you'd rather it was some other way," Minnesota president Bob Stein said. "But generally, all things considered, it's a fair system. It does what it's intended to do and that's the way it should be."

"We've got the third pick, and we've never been higher than sixth, so from that standpoint we'll be selecting higher than we ever have. That should put us in good position to bring in a player that will give us some help."

The lottery determined the top three picks. The remaining eight non-playoff teams will draft in inverse order of last season's won-loss records with Dallas fourth, Denver fifth, Washington sixth, Sacramento seventh, Milwaukee eighth, Philadelphia ninth, Atlanta 10th and Houston 11th.

Besides O'Neal, Mourning and Laettner, the draft is crammed with top-name talent. Available players include Jim Jackson of Ohio State, Harold Miner of Southern California, Doug Cristie of Pepperdine, Todd Day and Lee Mayberry of Arkansas, LaPhonso Ellis of Notre Dame, Tom Gugliotta of North Carolina State, Robert Horry of Alabama, and Byron Houston of Oklahoma State.

Also, Adam Keefe of Stanford, Don MacLean of UCLA, Anthony Peeler of Missouri, Malik Sealy of St. John's, Bryant Stith of Virginia, Clarence Weatherspoon of Southern Mississippi and Walt Williams of Maryland.

Philadelphia will pick ninth, but GM Gene Shue wasn't terribly disappointed.

"The ninth pick is still terrific," he said. "When you examine the league three years down the road, we'll find that this was one of the greatest drafts in NBA history."

IRVING (AP) - Billy Ray Brown won the tournament in a sudden death playoff and Jim Woodward became a casualty when the Byron Nelson Classic kept intact its 1992 record of completing no rounds on the same day they started.

The fourth round was rained out Sunday and all scores reverted to their 54-hole status.

That showed Woodward, 34, now in his third year on the PGA Tour, at 200, 10 under par and one behind Brown, Ben Crenshaw, Ray Floyd and Bruce Lietzke, all of whom stopped play after 54 holes.

Woodward, however, had played three holes of the fourth round before continuing rain again halted play in this weather-troubled tournament that had been in a catch-up position since most of first-round play was lost to weather on Thursday.

And, after starting that fourth round birdie, birdie, par, Woodward was alone at the top of the leaderboard at 12-under when play was halted.

The decision to cut the tournament to 54 holes, however, wiped out those two birdies and his score went back to 10-under par, one short of the playoff.

"Those are the breaks," he shrugged. "I'm not surprised. I expected it. Nothing you can do about it."

Duke Butler, the PGA Tour official in charge of this weather-plagued event, said regulations are that "the final round is not obligated to be completed unless at least half the scores for the entire field are in."

No fourth-round scores were in, so Woodward was out — out of the playoff and in a tie for fifth, worth $40,150 compared with the $198,000 that awaited the playoff winner.

The playoff participants had to wait about four hours before officials found a break in the weather large enough to stage the sudden-death shootout that was very sudden indeed.

Brown, a native of Houston and the only one of the four who had not won the Byron Nelson title, settled in on the first extra hole at the rain-soaked TPC at Las Colinas, ripping a 4-iron shot some 15 feet below the cup on the par-3 17th, then dropping the putt after Floyd, Crenshaw and Lietzke had missed their birdie attempts.

"For us Texans — with Byron Nelson and Ben Hogan and all the golf tradition we have here — we all want to win in our home state," Brown said. "That was my goal, to win in Texas."

Four schools accepted into Big West

SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP) - Arkansas State, Louisiana Tech, Northern Illinois and Southwestern Louisiana will compete in football in the Big West Conference beginning in 1993.

The Big West council voted last week to extend football memberships to those universities and all four accepted, making the anticipated expansion official.

The additions will give the conference 11 football-playing schools. The expansion does not affect any other Big West sports.

"The addition of these four institutions, in combination with the new Las Vegas Bowl, has us very excited about our football future," Big West commissioner Jim Haney said.

The four new Big West football schools will join Cal State Full-ton, New Mexico State, San Jose State, Nevada, UNLV, Pacific and Utah State in the conference.

The conference likely will split into two divisions, with a playoff game to determine the Big West champion. Last August, the league announced its intentions to expand to a minimum of 12 football teams.

"The addition of these four fine universities will bring added prestige to the Big West Conference, not to mention some badly needed exposure in different parts of the country," said Bill Shumard, Cal State Fullerton athletic director.

Northern Illinois athletic director Gerald O'Dell said: "This is a significant step not only for Northern Illinois University and our football program but also for all the participants of the Big West Football Conference."

NOTE: The Stanley Cup Finals will begin earlier if both conference championships end in six games or less.

Read my lips. . . The New York Yankees' Mike Galego pleads his case to umpire Al Clarke, who calls Galego out at home in the second inning of Sunday's American League game. However, the Yankees went onto to beat the Oakland A's, 11-2.

Yankees rout A's; Canseco sidelined

By The Associated Press

There was a time real recently when the New York Yankees looked at the Oakland Athletics in awe. As did a lot of other teams.

Now, though, the Yankees are in no mood to be pushed around by Oakland, or anyone else. And when the Athletics try, the Yankees answer, "Aw, better not."

Manager Buck Showalter, symbolizing the Yankees' new determination, nearly came to blows with Oakland manager Tony La Russa in a home-plate altercation in the fourth inning Sunday, and both were ejected as the benches and bullpens emptied in a game New York won 11-2.

"We're not going to let them come in here and intimidate us to do things that aren't in our best interests," Showalter said.

Exactly what sparked the incident was unclear, although there were several possible reasons.

Some said it traced back to 1990, when the Athletics won all 12 games from New York and upset the Yankees with what was perceived as arrogance. That was the year Oakland went to the World Series for the third straight time while New York lost 95 games, its most since 1912.

Others said it had to do with the way Melido Perez was pitching inside to Oakland's hitters. And others said it was because the Athletics had hit four Yankees with pitches in the last week.

"I think that's real inaccurate. I don't know what the history is that he's talking about," La Russa said when informed that several Yankees felt there was bad blood between the teams.

"The only comment I have is that it has absolutely nothing to do with gamesmanship."

In other games, Chicago beat Baltimore 14-10, California topped Boston 3-1, Seattle defeated Toronto 3-2, Minnesota beat Cleveland 9-5, Kansas City downed Detroit 2-1 and Texas edged Milwaukee 2-1 in 10 innings.

The trouble at Yankee Stadium started with Scott Brosius, in the game because of an injury to Jose Canseco, at the plate.

Showalter went to the top step of the dugout in response to comments being made from the Athletics' bench by La Russa and Willie Wilson at Perez and catcher Matt Nokes.

Plate umpire Al Clark warned both managers to keep calm, but it didn't work as they rushed out of the dugout toward each other. Showalter and La Russa shouted at each other and seemed ready to begin punching when they were separated. No fights broke out and order was restored about five minutes later.

"It was just a situation where Tony was hollering at Nokes from the bench. The last couple of years I've witnessed him yelling at Nokes for a variety of things. I had told Matt earlier that if he said anything, I wanted to know about it," Showalter said.

"They're probably upset about the up-and-in pitching style, but we're not the guys who hit anybody," he said. "I just don't want an opposing manager yelling at one of my players."

Wilson had been upset earlier in the game with a high-and-inside pitch by Perez (4-3), although the ball did not appear to be near his head. In fact, Wilson wound up with a checked-swing, infield single on the pitch.

Last weekend in Oakland, the Yankees were upset when Pat Kelly was hit in the back after hitting a home run, and Yankees reliever Steve Farr was later ejected for hitting Jerry Browne.

On Friday night, both Kelly and Roberto Kelly were hit by pitches. Mel Hall was hit by a pitch by Dave Stewart (2-4) in the first inning Sunday.

Pat Kelly got even, sort of, with a three-run homer and a triple. Hall hit a pair of two-run doubles for the Yankees.

Baseball roundup

Canseco was hurt when he made a running jump at the warning track while trying to catch Kelly's triple. Canseco's right knee hit the padding on the wall and his left knee banged into a seam between the cushions, possibly hitting a metal support.

The Athletics said Canseco would be re-evaluated today. His status was listed as day-to-day.

The San Diego Padres head home with all sorts of streaks still going strong.

The Padres completed a three-game weekend sweep of the division-leading Pittsburgh Pirates with a 6-5 victory Sunday at Three Rivers Stadium.

San Diego finished the series with 25 runs and 38 hits in the three games as the first four batters in its order — Tony Fernandez, Tony Gwynn, Gary Sheffield and Fred McGriff — went 22 for 51 with 15 RBIs.

"This is the first series all year where everything's clicked: the pitching, the hitting, the defense," said Gwynn, who has 13 hits in his last 24 at-bats. "This is the first time all season where we're playing like I thought we could be playing. We went wild in this series."

The Padres, who won seven of 11 on their road trip, trail first-place San Francisco by one-half game in the NL West.

Fernandez and Sheffield each have 10-game hitting streaks, going a combined 37 for 85.

Elsewhere in the NL it was Montreal 5, Atlanta 4; Philadelphia 5, Cincinnati 4; St. Louis 7, Houston 5; Los Angeles 6, New York 3; and Chicago 4, San Francisco 3.

Andy Benes (4-3) continued to pitch well away from home, checking the Pirates on three runs and seven hits in 7 2-3 innings. Benes is 4-1 with a 1.84 ERA on the road.

Randy Myers pitched the final two-thirds of an inning for his 11th save, allowing a two-run double to Jay Bell with two out in the ninth. Andy Van Slyke struck out to end the game.

"We've been on a trip like this before and gone 2-9 and 1-10," Benes said. "We get to go home now and try to keep things going in a very positive direction for us. We have to take advantage of this."

The Pirates have lost four straight at home and four of five overall, and were swept at home in a three-game series for the first time since Aug. 10-12, 1990, by St. Louis.

Pirates starter Randy Tomlin (4-3), whose ERA has climbed from 1.67 to 4.46 in his last four starts, took a 2-1 lead into the fifth, but left after retiring only one of the seven batters he faced in the inning.

Glo-Valve takes narrow victory on Opening day

Glo-Valve Service and Hoechst Celanese, who tied for the Major Bambino National League title last year, started the season Saturday where they left off last year — close.

Glo-Valve edged out a 5-4 win during the Optimist Club's opening day for the baseball and softball programs.

The game was a fitting end to opening day for the 11-12 year-old Major Bambino League.

Dean's Pharmacy had pounded Duncan Insurance, 18-4, Saturday morning.

In the afternoon, Rotary Club outdistanced Dyer's Barbeque, 10-2, and Dunlap Industrial skunked Cabot Corporation, 15-0.

Dunlap received perfect pitching from Justin Roark and Zach Ward as no Cabot batter reached base.

Celanese jumped out to a two-run lead in the first inning when Dustin Hall walked and Bryan Brown lined a hit off the pitching rubber. Both runners advanced on a Glo-Valve throwing error and both scored on wild pitches. Glo-Valve got one back in the bottom of the inning when Kris Davis was safe on an error, went to second on a wild pitch and scored on two passed balls.

Glo-Valve went ahead to stay in the second inning. Kevin Henderson and Amos Valmoeres walked and both scored on a double by Preston Reed. Reed came home on a single by Brian Doss.

Jason Cirone closed the gap with a lead-off double in the third inning and kept going as a Glo-Valve error allowed him to score. Glo-Valve scored its final run in the bottom of the third inning when Matt Evans aided his own cause with a towering home run to center field.

Celanese threatened in every inning, but a relay from Nathan Porterfield to Brent Phelps to Ryan Schumacher cut down a runner at the plate to thwart a rally. Schumacher had gunned down another runner who was trying to steal third an inning earlier.

Brown scored for Celanese in the fifth inning on a hit and a throwing error by Glo-Valve to end the scoring in the game.

Evans was the winning pitcher. He allowed no earned runs on two hits. He walked five and struck out five. Schumacher was credited with a save. He pitched the first two innings and the sixth inning. He allowed one earned run, one hit, walked four and struck out five.

Brown was charged with the loss, allowing four runs on three hits. He struck out eight and walked three. Jeremy Miller relieved in the bottom of the fourth and allowed no runs or hits. He struck out three and walked two.

Opening day featured many unusual situations in youth baseball. They included the infield fly rule, a balk, an illegal pitch, catcher interference, a perfect game, a player who caught three fly balls in the same inning, interference by a coach and a throw ball going under a fence.

Players started the game, were taken out and re-entered the game as nearly every one of the 50 Optimist baseball and softball teams played. More than 700 players participated and every member of every team played.

The Opening Day barbeque fed more than 1,100 people and the concession stand cooked 500 hamburgers before running out of buns.

More than 25,000 people watched 25 ballgames as the Optimist baseball and softball seasons officially got under way.

"Everything went pretty smooth today," said Optimist President Bob Dixon. "We had hundreds of families out watching baseball and softball games. We had lots of good help and got everything cleaned up. Ronnie Haynes, Garry Moody, Truman Lowrance, Jim Davis, Tim Hill and others worked on our new Major Bambino park until 5 this morning so that things would be ready for the opening of this park."

Dixon said Bill Kidwell, Wayne Topper and Melvin Davis stayed up all night cooking 900 pounds of barbeque, 100 pounds of beans and 100 pounds of potatoes for the potato salad.

"The Optimist Club is grateful to the more than 200 coaches, umpires, league officials, concession stand workers, team mothers and Optimist members whose hard work made the opening of the season a success."

In Babe Ruth 13-15 action, Bowers Ranch defeated Cree Oil, 23-4.

Winning pitcher was Matt Benton, who struck out six, walked five and allowed five hits.

Top hitters for Bowers were Brandon Stevens, two triples and a double; Matt Benton, three singles; Hank Gindorf, three doubles and a single; Seth Haynes, two doubles and a single; Gabriel Jaramillo, Adam Clark, Cody Lewallen and Manual Zamara, two doubles each.

Rayford Young and Duane Nickelberry were the top hitters for Cree Oil.

Hill bolts from the pack to win Sanders Classic

By MICHAEL GRACZYK Associated Press Writer

KINGWOOD (AP) - Mike Hill took over with some lightning of his own at the Doug Sanders Kingwood Celebrity Classic once the thunderstorms that plagued the PGA Senior Tour event moved out.

Hill, the defending champion, bolted from the pack with an 8-under-par 64 Sunday, which included a string of five straight birdies, to win the rain-shortened tournament by two strokes over first-round co-leaders Larry Mowry and Gibby Gilbert.

The Sanders event, plagued by bad weather, was trimmed to just 36 holes after Saturday's round at the par-72, 6,659-yard Deerwood Club northeast of Houston was washed out. Sunday's round also was delayed for four hours due to lightning and the field was split so the leaders played the back nine first.

"I made putts on the first two holes and relaxed," Hill said after his 10-under 134 earned him $52,500.

He had nine birdies and just one bogey in his round, starting with birdies on Nos. 10 and 11, then storming into the lead with birdies on 16 through 18 and Nos. 1 and 2. He put the tournament away by closing out with two more birdies on Nos. 5 and 6, giving him a three-shot bulge. His only bogey was on the par-3 8th hole.

"I felt I made some putts you're not supposed to make," he said. "I think when you shoot 64, it's quite a remarkable score. I hit it close and drove it in the fairways. That was the key."

Hill's victory ended Lee Trevino's bid for a fourth straight win on the Senior Tour. Trevino was at 140, six strokes behind. Hill, playing in a threesome that included Trevino, tied a tournament record with his 64. A sparkling 31 at the turn also tied the tournament record.

"After that 31, I thought I had a shot," he said.

The victory was Hill's second of the year on the Senior Tour, allowing him to join Trevino as the year's only multiple winners.

America 3 wins world's biggest regatta

By BERNIE WILSON AP Sports Writer

SAN DIEGO (AP) - Bill Koch remained enigmatic to the end of the America's Cup, which he defended for the San Diego Yacht Club by a 4-1 margin against Italy's Il Moro di Venezia.

He still dislikes the International America's Cup Class yachts, including his flagship America3 (America Cubed), which beat Il Moro by 44 seconds on Saturday to clinch its third straight wire-to-wire win and the 28th America's Cup defense.

He still loathes the secrecy and spying that have become commonplace — and expensive — in the world's biggest regatta. Yet he tacitly admitted he sent divers to look at other syndicates' yachts.

And Koch, who's been sailing competitively only since 1984, may leave it up to his 5-year-old son to decide whether to return in 1995.

Koch, 52, a multimillionaire who has a doctorate in chemical engineering from MIT, certainly left no doubt that technology was the key to America3's success. He originally opposed entering the Cup defense because of the high cost, because "it makes enemies of good friends and ... creates a lot of publicity, which I unfortunately do not like.

"Then I thought about it, and I said, 'Well, there's a dream that I can show that ordinary Americans and American technology and American management style can compete with the best in the world, and win.'"

"And I have a big problem. That is, I fall in love with my dreams, and then I believe in them, and then I make 'em come true."

Hours after the clinching race, Koch was asked if he'd be back in 1995.

"You should ask my son that question, whether he will let me do it," Koch said.

Wyatt Koch, sitting on his dad's lap, grabbed the microphone and said a resounding "No!"

Why not? "Because it's too long."

Koch later said he'd consider a '95 campaign if he didn't have to spend as much money.

The America3 Foundation spent an estimated $65 million, two-thirds of which was Koch's money. Il Moro, headed by industrialist Raul Gardini and sailed by American-born Paul Cayard, had a budget estimated at between $70 million and $100 million.

The America's Cup will continue to be sailed in IACC yachts. Last May, Koch called the IACC designers "idiots."

"I still believe that the boat is idiotic," Koch said Saturday. "Fun, but idiotic; fun if you're spending someone else's money."

Koch said the America's Cup participants should do away with secrecy and the skirts that cover the yachts' keels when they're out of the water.

"I think every syndicate worth its salt here did use frogmen, and did everything that was within the standards of ethics and legality to find out what the competition was doing," said Koch, who estimated his spying budget at $2 million. "We've caught frogmen on our property."

"I guess we're not worth our salt," countered Paul Cayard, Il Moro's American-born skipper. "I can guarantee you we never hired anybody, nor did anyone from Il Moro di Venezia syndicate ever go scuba diving in the vicinity of anybody's yacht."

On the water, both sides credited A-Cubed starting helmsman and tactician Dave Dellenbaugh with giving the Americans the edge at the start of every race but the first one, when Il Moro was over the line early and had to restart.

And Koch's co-helmsman, Buddy Melges, now has an America's Cup to go with his 1972 Olympic gold medal in the Soling class.

Off the water, the Italians weren't about to concede an edge in technology.

"I like our system better in the end," said Robert Hopkins Jr., Il Moro's American-born navigator. "(Koch) started at a very high level, on the shoulders of a long American tradition of America's Cup design and sailing. He showed up in that environment where there really wasn't anybody with the money to do a strong campaign, put the money on the table and scooped up all the talent."

"We started in more of a vacuum in Italy ... and maybe from farther back, ran a lot harder and got very close in the end," Hopkins said.

"I think we deserve the most improved award," he said with a laugh.

This was only the third time Italy challenged.

"We made a great job being where we are," tactician Enrico Chieffi said. "As I heard, the higher you go, the worse it is to lose. But this is the first time Italy ever got this high in such kind of competition that is an Anglo-Saxon competition by definition, and I'm proud of it."

King posts runaway victory in LPGA Championship

BETHESDA, Md. (AP) - Now that Betsy King has won the tournament she most coveted, it's time for her to turn her thoughts to loftier accomplishments. King's runaway victory Sunday in the LPGA Championship moved her one notch closer to gaining entry into the exclusive club known as the LPGA Hall of Fame. It was her 26th tournament victory and fifth major title. To enter the Hall of Fame, a golfer must win 30 tournaments, including two different majors.

Troops clear protesters after violent clashes in Thailand

By NATE THAYER
Associated Press Writer

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Troops charged into the streets today and arrested hundreds of protesters, including their leader, after a night of bloody clashes with thousands of people demanding the pro-military prime minister's ouster.

Faced with the largest and bloodiest anti-establishment protest since 1976, the government declared a state of emergency just after midnight, then sent riot police and soldiers into the streets to use decisive force.

At least eight people were killed and 250 injured in the unrest, according to authorities and hospitals.

On national television, Prime Minister Suchinda Kraprayoon said "the government had no choice but to use force" because protesters had been headed toward government buildings.

The protesters say they want Suchinda, a former army chief, to step down because he was not elected. Suchinda spearheaded a military coup last year and had promised not to take over as prime minister.

At dawn, security forces fired on the pro-democracy demonstrators in an attempt to clear a downtown thoroughfare occupied by some 20,000.

This afternoon, they moved in, firing thousands of rounds into the air as they dispersed the several thousand die-hard demonstrators who had remained at barbed-wire barricades on Rajdamnern Avenue.

Reporters saw troops beat and kick surrendering demonstrators. People dove to the ground and fled to sidestreets as armored personnel carriers rolled in.

At about 3:30 p.m., reporters saw soldiers handcuff and take away charismatic pro-democracy leader Chamlong Srimuang. Chamlong had been in a van parked in front of the barricades, and told reporters the demonstrators would not compromise in their demand for Suchinda's ouster.

Later, soldiers forced about 200 demonstrators near the barricades to lay on their stomachs. They herded them, hands tied behind their backs, into army trucks and buses. The demonstrators defiantly sang the national anthem.

Reporters witnessed hundreds of other arrests on sidestreets, where several thousand defiant demonstrators remained this evening, jeering at troops.

On one sidestreet, soldiers firing into the air charged into a Buddhist temple to evict several hundred demonstrators.

The angry crowd, throwing plastic water bottles, rocks and pieces of glass, sent some of the soldiers fleeing.

Maj. Gen. Thitipong Jetnuwat told reporters before the afternoon action that troops had killed five people in the unrest, including a foreign journalist whom he did not identify.

Eight hospitals contacted said three people were killed and 250 admitted with injuries. But witnesses reported seeing others killed with some bodies being taken away in army trucks.

A total of 58 soldiers and policemen were injured, some shot by protesters, said Col. Buncho Chawansin, the assistant secretary of the army.

Chamlong said the demonstrators were unarmed and did not shoot anyone.

American photographer Ira Chapman said that at the height of the violence he saw a man in civilian clothes emerge from a police line, draw a pistol and fire five shots, which struck two protesters.

Buncho said security forces opened fire after being provoked by some protesters.

The state of emergency allows authorities to conduct dawn-to-dusk searches, detain anyone suspected of being a threat to national security and ban unauthorized gatherings.

In October 1976, students protesting the return from exile of military dictators were attacked by police and mobs on the Thammasat University campus, which adjoins the field where Sunday's rally began.

Authorities said 41 people died and more than 100 wounded in the 1976 episode, which ended in a military coup.

Thailand's economic boom has since created a middle class that has broadened the interest in democracy and become increasingly fed up with military interference in politics.

Virtually all sectors of society — students, academics, professionals, poor workers, popular entertainers and social and community leaders — have been involved in the anti-Suchinda protests.

Many were drawn to the streets by the example of Chamlong, who has a reputation for incorruptibility in the scandal-ridden landscape of Thai politics.

Sunday's protest began peacefully in the early evening in a large public field adjacent Bangkok's famed Buddhist temples. The demonstrators then marched along Rajdamnern Avenue toward Government House — Suchinda's office — about a mile away.

They tore down a barbed-wire barricade set up by police and soldiers at a bridge about halfway along the route.

Fire trucks sprayed them, but the demonstrators refused to retreat. Some hurled metal pipes and bottles at the soldiers.

Soldiers threw the objects back at the demonstrators and beat them with sticks. The violence escalated as demonstrators set bonfires and hurled Molotov cocktails at the security forces. They set vehicles ablaze, burned down a police station and rampaged through the streets.

The police smashed windshields and civilian vehicles.

Security forces then fled the area, abandoning it to the violent minority of demonstrators, who drove around in police cars and fire trucks before setting them on fire.

The mass protests against Suchinda began with a week-long series that ended May 11 after the five parties in the governing coalition promised constitutional amendments that would require the prime minister to be an elected member of the parliament.

Sunday's rally was called to keep the pressure on for the amendments, which would be difficult to pass in parliament.

The four opposition parties have just 163 members in the elected lower house while the government parties have 195.

Voting would involve the 360 members of the lower house and the 270 members of the military-appointed Senate. Passage requires a simple majority, or 316 votes.

Guard leaves L.A., gangs pledge peace

LOS ANGELES (AP) — About 3,000 National Guardsmen pulled out of Los Angeles, leaving a force of under 1,000 in case of emergency. Students marched to promote unity, and rival gangs reaffirmed a truce reached after the riots.

Despite the truce, gang violence claimed five lives over the weekend. One victim was killed in a brawl Sunday at the county fairgrounds in Pomona.

Late Sunday, Las Vegas police broke up gatherings of 10 or more people to curb gang violence. Officers fired tear gas and foam pellets early Sunday to break up a crowd of nearly 1,000 that took to the streets after a motorist was beaten by suspected gang members.

Gov. Pete Wilson, who ordered the troop withdrawal from Los Angeles on Sunday, said he would keep in place a contingent of soldiers that could respond in an emergency.

"It's time to bring the troops home and get on with the task of rebuilding Los Angeles," the governor said in a statement.

James Lee, the governor's spokesman, said the contingency force would number fewer than 1,000. He said he couldn't disclose a more exact size for fear that troublemakers might "take advantage of it."

An additional 1,500 guard members who live in the Los Angeles area will be available within hours of an emergency, Wilson said.

More than 10,000 Guard troops and about 4,000 active-duty members of the Army and the Marines were deployed in Los Angeles at the height of riots that erupted April 29. The Army and Marine troops were sent home the following week.

3 climbers dead on Mt. McKinley

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Rangers struggled through a severe snowstorm in an effort to reach three climbers stranded for six days on Mount McKinley without food or fuel. Three other climbers have died on the mountain since Friday.

The stranded climbers, part of a group of six South Koreans, were in a snow cave 18,200 feet up the 20,320-foot peak.

Rangers tried to drop food, a radio and water to the climbers from a helicopter Sunday morning but were pushed back by 60 mph to 70 mph winds, said John Quinley of the National Park Service.

"It looks like more of the same for at least 24 hours," he said. "We're running out of options pretty quick."

mentary school students marched Sunday in Los Angeles to urge schools to offer lessons promoting ethnic unity. They said racial tolerance is the key to heading off riots.

And more than 300 members of the Crips and Bloods hugged and shook hands at a picnic after a night of gang-related shootings in South Central Los Angeles that left four people dead and threatened to shatter their truce.

"It's a miracle that I would not have believed in, but it's true," said Charles Rachal, 28, a former Crip who helped organize the picnic. "The Lord's going to let it work out. There can't be nothing bad come out of something good."

But police said the violence demonstrated that little had changed.

"Things haven't cooled off at all. They're trying to make things look like it's cooled off, but you can still cut the tension with a knife out there," Sgt. Don Keith said.

The gang brawl in Pomona, about 40 miles east of downtown, left one person dead and at least seven shot or stabbed, police Lt. Ron Frazier said.

Fifty-one people were killed and thousands were injured or arrested during three days of rioting that followed the acquittal of four white policemen in the videotaped beating of black motorist Rodney King.

In Las Vegas, 30 to 40 people were arrested, mostly for weapons violations, and two stores were looted after a motorist was attacked late Saturday.

The attackers were black and appeared to have singled out the motorist because he was white, Sgt. Mike Dailey said. The man suffered minor injuries.

SWAT teams in armored vehicles were pelted with rocks and bottles. Shots were fired from the crowd and police responded with tear gas, police said.
