Kids enjoy giggly-good time in park

By CHERYL BERZANSKIS
Lifestyles editor

"Line up!"
"Where's your lunch?"
"Get in a circle. We're gonna sing now."

Instructions by Alice Grays and her assistants Annie Jo Conley and Phyllis Briggs flew through the air as they organized a group of nearly 40 children for lunch Tuesday at the Step Ahead Summer Day Camp.

The adults were aided by 12 teen leaders who corraled groups of wiggly, giggly children ranging in age from five to 13 years old.

While the women and teen leaders squared up the children, John Ryan and James Hunnicutt secured a tent which was donated by the Juneteenth organization. Besides making sure the tent stakes were fast in the ground, they were looking for blankets to cover the wooden stakes so that no child on the chase could get hurt on an uncovered piece of wood.

Prairie Village Park was alive Tuesday morning with happy sounds - kids playing, kids singing and adults who declared that volunteering at a day camp was far better than staying home watching the "soaps."

"I went to the meetings - over at Baker - when they had the meetings. Lynn Brown announced it in church, the Oklahoma Street Church of Christ. So I came yesterday. I thought this was a whole lot better than the "soaps." This is more profit than staying home. This'll do a whole lot more good," Conley said.

Brown, who is community liaison officer for the Pampa Police Department, believes that Step Ahead Summer Day Camp, though just days old, already has shown positive benefits.

"One of the things ... it has inspired a lot of adults to do something. One or two negative incidents involving individuals sort of tainted the whole community," Brown said. "This is the first time I've seen people come forward and say they're tired of it happening. More people are motivated to do something about it."

Teen leader Misty Adams, 14, an honor roll student, will enter Pampa High School in the fall. She leads 11 youngsters, four to six years old. She was helping them get their lunches ready and keeping them seated at "their" picnic table at Marcus Sanders Park, where the camp meets in the afternoon.

"I like volunteering. It's fun. I know I'm helping someone," Adams said.

Youngsters, divided by age into smaller groups, are known by monikers such as the "McBrains" or "K-9 Posse" or "Good Girls." They are excited about the camp activities.

Eager to talk to "the newspaper," children were quick to say what they looked for in day camp.

Raynesia Oliver summed it up best, saying, "Just to have fun and learn."

Adult leaders, Phyllis Briggs, left, and Alice Grays, look over the schedule of events set for the Step Ahead Summer Day Camp and see that it is time for lunch. The campers are ready to walk down Crawford Street to Marcus Sanders Park where they picnic each day.

Budget shifts to department maintenance

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
News Editor

City manager Glen Hackler unveiled the proposed $5.594 million 1992-93 budget for the city of Pampa at a commissioners' work session Tuesday.

This year's budget shifts the city's focus on "quality of life" projects such as development of Hidden Hills Golf Course and Recreation Park to several major public works projects.

Pampans recently voted on a half-cent sales tax increase to encourage economic development, on a major street bond issue and also voted to decrease property taxes, all of which had a major impact on the city's budget.

The budget includes a property tax rate of 59 cents per $100 valuation, down from 66 cents per $100 in 1991, Hackler said. He said Gray County Appraisal District plans to show a comparison of taxes based on the two tax rates on tax statements this year.

Opening of the Rufe Jordan Prison Unit, the beginning of the Pampa Economic Development Corporation and the start of the comprehensive street improvement program have all made it difficult for city officials to forecast revenue for the coming year, Hackler explained.

"I would say this is a fairly conservative estimate of revenue," he said. Hackler said because they were uncertain about the impact of the prison on the city's revenues, they made "educated guesses" based on the impact of prisons on comparable communities.

"What provided John (Horst, finance director) and I the most caution is the fact that we were off this year," Hackler said, referring to budget cuts that were required at the middle of the fiscal year when actual revenues fell short of projected revenues. "That served to make us more cautious this year. And we had one other reason to be more cautious - it is incredibly difficult and bad for morale to have to go back in and revise budgets like we did this year."

Three major public work projects are provided for in the proposed budget: the street improvement program covering more than 15 miles and costing approximately $4 million, a solid waste management plant and sludge-handling improvements at the waste water treatment plant.

Funds for the street bond program will be kept in a capital projects fund for accounting purposes, according to the budget.

Mayor Richard Peet questioned a $100,000 increase in administration. Hackler explained the engineer and maintenance worker positions and all related expenses were moved at the suggestion of the city's auditors.

Hackler explained that the $100,000 is a shift, not an increase, in costs. "Any way you look at it, it's flat, but it will more accurately reflect what they're coming out of," he said.

No raises for city employees are included in the 1992-93 proposed budget. The city will continue a pay-for-performance compensation plan and performance appraisal system, he said, but there will be no merit or cost of living increases.

Five jobs are to be reduced through attrition, Hackler said, and the police department will receive an addition of three new officers. Positions deleted include two maintenance workers in the Parks Department, one machine operator in the Street Department, three firefighters, one library clerk and one maintenance worker in Water Distribution.

Although the city of Pampa is in the "average" range of police officers per population, one police officer will be added to each of the three shifts, Hackler said. The average, he said, is one officer per 975 persons. Presently, the city has one officer per approximately 1,000 citizens. Adding an officer will bring the ratio to one officer per 980, Hackler said.

Approximately $270,000 has been set aside for vehicle replacement; $237,000 of that amount will be used to buy new vehicles this year, the remainder will be set aside to go toward the major cost of purchasing of a new fire truck in the future.

Following are other items listed in the proposed budget:

- renovation of the Parks & Recreation building at 816 S. Hobart;
- new storm windows for north and west sides of City Hall;
- heater and sandblasting repairs to M.K. Brown pool;
- euthanasia building for Animal Control;
- wall and wiring repairs to M.K. Brown Auditorium;
- new traffic controllers for the five downtown traffic signals;
- $100,000 for the city's annual seal coating program;
- renovation of the jail into an Emergency Operations Center/Central Communications area;
- a "shoot-house" for police firing range.

A proposal to cut city subsidies to Clean Pampa Inc. and Pampa Senior Citizens Center by $1,000 each was quickly quashed by city commissioners, and the proposed budget will now reflect the two organizations will receive the same amount they did in 1991-92.

"I think you've put together a fantastic budget, Mr. Hackler," Commissioner Ray Hupp said at the conclusion of the work session.

House approves new benefits for unemployed

Bush administration threatens veto

By ALAN FRAM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Democrats say House approval of their latest effort to extend benefits for the long-term jobless shows they want to aid suffering Americans, but Republicans say only politics is being served.

The House ignored a Bush administration veto threat and voted 261-150 Tuesday to give up to 26 weeks of extra benefits to people who will soon begin using up their regular unemployment coverage.

Voting yes were 235 Democrats, 25 Republicans and one independent. Nineteen Democrats and 131 Republicans voted no.

In the Senate, Finance Committee Chairman Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, said his panel would vote on his own version of the bill Thursday.

The House measure would cost $5.8 billion over six years. It would help more than 1.5 million Americans who would otherwise lose government aid starting Saturday, Democrats said.

The House vote came just four days after the Labor Department announced that last month's unemployment rate had hit 7.5 percent, the highest level in nearly eight years.

As they did last year when Bush killed two earlier efforts to extend jobless benefits, Democrats were putting Bush in the position of looking like he doesn't care about out-of-work Americans if he doesn't accept the bill.

"The president has decided that trailing Ross Perot in the public opinion polls, that he's going to get tough on Congress," said Rep. Thomas Downey, D-N.Y., a sponsor of the measure. "But more important than Ross Perot, George Bush or Bill Clinton are the million-and-a-half hard-working, desperate people who want to see an extension of benefits."

Republicans said Democrats were doing nothing but playing politics. Instead of sending a measure to an inevitable veto, they said, Democrats could accept a Bush-GOP compromise that would limit the extra weeks of assistance to 20.

"Why must it be that the leadership of this body can't forget November long enough to ... work out a compromise, bipartisan answer to a serious national concern like unemployment?" said Rep. Bill Archer, R-Texas.

The Democratic measure would provide 20 weeks or 26 weeks of extra benefits for people who use up their current benefits beginning June 13. It would last until Jan. 1, or earlier if the unemployment rate improves.

It also would make it easier for more people to qualify for extended jobless benefits in the future. The administration opposes making any permanent changes in the system.

Currently, most jobless people can get 26 weeks of regular benefits, which average about $170 per week but vary by state. A program providing an extra 33 weeks or 26 weeks of coverage, depending on a state's jobless rate, will begin phasing out Saturday and end entirely on July 4.

Bentsen's measure would provide 26 weeks or 33 weeks of extra benefits through March 6. The number of weeks would drop if the national unemployment rate fell below 7 percent.

City awards tractor bid; recognizes cable board

Pampa city commissioners awarded a bid for a tractor for the street department in a brief regular session Tuesday.

Baggett Farm Supply received the award with a bid of $13,912 for the tractor, $1,088 below the budgeted amount of $15,000 and the lowest of three bids submitted.

Seven members of the Cable Advisory Commission were recognized and presented with certificates of appreciation at the meeting also.

Members of the committee are Tom Ethredge, Betty Hallerburg, Dan Treadwell, Mike Ehrle, Sandy Crosswhite, Dickie McGahan and Bill Brady.

In his report, City Manager Glen Hackler said city officials have completed a $5.594 million budget for the coming year which reflects no tax or fee increases.

The meeting was adjourned after 15 minutes with all commissioners present.

Ken Hall named interim chief

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
 News Editor

Emergency Services Director Ken Hall has been named interim police chief effective next week, City Manager Glen Hackler announced today.

Retiring Police Chief Jim Laramore's last day will be June 15, Hackler said. Hall will be taking over the duties of police chief at that time and will serve until a new police chief is named, he said.

"Jim had asked that (June 15) be his last day and we had talked him into staying on until July 1, but last night I thought about it and decided 'What difference will two weeks make?'" Hackler said.

"I'm real pleased Jim agreed to stay on this long in this interim period of time," he said.

Hall, who formerly served as deputy police chief, said he has not applied for police chief and has no intentions of applying for the position.

"I'm very pleased in the job I am doing now," he said. "It's new for me but I'm still in an emergency-oriented position that covers my background, as you know and it is still somewhat on the fringes of my previous job."

Laramore announced his retirement after 20 years law enforcement service several weeks ago, with the intentions of staying as police chief until a new chief was named.

"Jim wanted to go ahead and retire after he found it increasingly difficult to be effective in this lame duck status, a position I understand," Hackler said of Laramore's decision to leave the department on June 15.

Hall was chosen as interim chief because of his knowledge of the department and policies, Hackler said. He will serve in a "caretaker, maintenance type-of position" until a new chief is found, the city manager said.

Hackler said Hall was the ideal choice for interim chief because of his knowledge, the location of his office in the police department and his knowledge of the police officers and the department's policies. "It was a natural fit," he said.

At present, the city of Pampa has received approximately 30 applications from Texas, Kansas, Oklahoma and Colorado for the police chief's position. The majority have come from Texas, Hackler said.

The city manager said he plans to interview approximately six finalists the first of July. After these interviews, Hackler said he hopes to narrow the field to two candidates. He then plans to go to the towns where the candidates now live, visit their departments and the people in the area and then make a final decision.

"I anticipate the final interviews will be the first week of July and an announcement will be made in the second week of July," Hackler said, adding that, if necessary, he will take more time to select the police chief.

"It is a critical position and we have to be very thorough in checking out backgrounds and all before making a decision," Hackler said. "A couple of weeks will not influence me to rush it."

Hackler said he is looking for a strong leader with "good" law enforcement experience, "someone who shows the capabilities of an administrator, emphasizes training and who is goal oriented." He said a bachelor's degree in criminal justice, police science or related field is also required.

A retirement reception for Laramore which is open to the public has been tentatively scheduled for June 15, Hackler said. Further details will be announced as they are finalized, he said.

Pampa News receives third in media awards by Keep Texas Beautiful

By BETH MILLER
 Staff Writer

The Pampa News will be awarded third place in its category in the Keep Texas Beautiful Media Awards to be presented July 9 in San Antonio.

Clean Pampa Inc., a non-profit organization, nominated The Pampa News for the media award based on the newspaper's coverage of beautification efforts throughout the city in the past year.

This is the second year that Clean Pampa has nominated the newspaper, and the first year for the newspaper to place in the competition, said Pamela Locke, executive coordinator of Clean Pampa.

The aim of the awards presentation is to recognize local newspapers, radio and television stations for their public service efforts to educate, inform and encourage public involvement in local litter prevention, solid waste issues and community beautification.

"We were disappointed that it wasn't a first place, but we are very pleased with the coverage that we have received over the past year. It's wonderful, really," Locke said.

Locke said that in looking over newspaper clippings while getting the media nomination ready, she said she discovered that the newspaper coverage has more than doubled in the last year.

Locke, Betty Henderson, who serves as chairman of the board of directors of Clean Pampa, and Deborah Lawrence worked gathering newspaper clippings, filling out questionnaires and writing other pertinent information in nominating The Pampa News for the award.

Judges this year asked that the completed nomination form be submitted along with the media award entries, a profile of the news organization, a "clear, concise summary of accomplishments," the impact on the community and other supplemental information.

The Pampa News was entered in the category of Daily Newspaper Under 20,000. In that category, first place went to The Mineral Wells Index, second place went to The Brenham Banner-Press and three newspapers - Athens Daily Review, The Denison Herald and Denton Record-Chronicle - will be awarded certificates of merit.

The Amarillo Globe News was named the third-place winner in its category of Daily Newspaper over 60,000.

The media award presentations will be made during the Keep Texas Beautiful "Don't Mess with Texas" dinner July 9 at the Hyatt Regency on the Riverwalk Hotel in San Antonio.

This year, Keep Texas Beautiful is celebrating 25 years of grassroots environmental leadership July 7-10 in San Antonio, the birthplace of Beautify Texas Council.

Lefors ISD board meets

LEFORS - Newly-elected trustee Clayton Lock Jr. was administered the oath of office Tuesday during a regular meeting of the Lefors Independent School District Board of Trustees.

Lock was away on National Guard duty during a prior meeting when other trustees were administered the oath.

The board, following an executive session, voted to increase Sheila Barnes to a Level II teacher on the Career Ladder. The increase will result in $1,500 more a year for Barnes, said Superintendent Joe Roper.

In other action, the board discussed attending a school board convention in Houston in September. Trustee Nora Franks said she did not plan to attend, saying she believed the convention was too costly.

Board President Keith Roberson said he believed that anyone thinking of attending should consider paying some of their own expenses due to the cutbacks throughout the school district.

In the past, the school district has paid for the convention and related costs. Last year, an estimated $3,500 was spent by the district on the convention.

Discussion on the convention is scheduled to continue at next month's meeting.

The board also approved minutes of prior meetings and approved the payment of monthly expenditures. - Beth Miller

Denison earns Community Achievement Award

Denison has been awarded the Governor's Community Achievement Awards for 1991-92 in Category 5, of which Clean Pampa Inc. was a top contender, said Pamela Locke, executive coordinator of Clean Pampa.

"Everyone has their turn and their shining hour," Locke said Tuesday after learning that Denison was this year's winner.

However, she said it was wonderful that Pampa had made the top 10 in its category, a first for the city.

"We did well in just making a finalist city. We have not done that before," Locke said. "Maybe we'll win next year."

Denison was awarded $50,000 to use for beautification projects in that city for receiving the top prize in its category.

Since 1968, the awards program, supported by the governor of Texas and co-sponsored by the Texas Department of Transportation, has recognized communities in nine population categories for their grassroots efforts in local environmental improvement through litter prevention, waste reduction and recycling, beautification, public education, and litter law enforcement.

Forty-nine cities were named last week as the top contenders for the state-wide recognition of their efforts to keep Texas "the cleanest, most beautiful state in America," said Nancy Chancellor, Keep Texas Beautiful Inc. board member.

Pampa's entry was based on several projects now under way in the city including a new recycling center and a landscaping project at the west entry to the city on U.S. 60. Clean Pampa also logged 1,800 volunteer hours in the past year.

Other finalists in Category 5 (15,001 to 25,000 population) were Alice, Burleson, Lake Jackson, Pearland, Seguin and Waxahachie.

Awards will be presented in July at the 25th anniversary convention of Keep Texas Beautiful in San Antonio. - Beth Miller

Child's body found in trash

AMARILLO (AP) - An autopsy will be performed on a 5-year-old girl whose body was found in a Styrofoam ice chest dumped into a trash container.

Amarillo police arrested a 26-year-old man, but no charges were filed late Tuesday.

Lewis Martin, 21, told police he discovered the body while emptying trash into an alley Dumpster.

Personnel from the Amarillo Fire Department tried to revive the child after she was found around 3 p.m., said a police spokesman.

Officers said they could release neither the girl's name, nor information about how she died. Neighbors and relatives identified her as Audra Reeves of Amarillo, the Amarillo Globe-News reported in today's editions.

Potter County Justice of the Peace Haven Dysart said an autopsy would be performed.

Appraisal board sets meeting Thursday

Gray County Appraisal District Board of Directors is scheduled to meet in regular session at 5 p.m. Thursday to receive the presentation of the 1991 financial audit.

A presentation of the 1993 proposed budget is also listed on the agenda.

The appointment of replacement Appraisal Review Board members will also be considered as well as accounts to be added to the listing of doubtful accounts for Pampa Independent School District, city of Pampa and city of Lefors.

Other items on the agenda include approval of minutes of an April meeting, expenditures, an executive session to discuss employment evaluation, public comments and the chief appraiser's report.

The meeting will be held at the Appraisal District office at 815 N. Sumner. The meeting is open to the public.

Poll: Legal abortion favored despite any high court ruling

By HOWARD GOLDBERG
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP)—Three out of 10 Americans want abortion made illegal in their state if the U.S. Supreme Court allows that to happen, according to an Associated Press poll.

A 57 percent majority would want abortion to remain legal, and an additional 6 percent would want it legal in some cases. Nine percent were not sure.

The high court could reverse Roe vs. Wade, the 1973 decision establishing the right to abortion, and free the states to enforce laws against abortion, when it rules this summer on a restrictive Pennsylvania law.

With an election campaign under way, candidates will be watching the polls to see how the issue resonates with voters.

Sixty-five percent of registered voters—and the same percentage of all 1,009 adults polled—said they would not vote for or against a candidate on the basis of an abortion stand. Twenty-five percent would vote based on the abortion issue, and that rises to 30 percent among women.

The poll was taken May 29 through June 2 by ICR Survey Research Group of Media, Pa. Considering the margin of sampling error of plus or minus 3 percentage points, the results are roughly unchanged from a 1989 AP poll.

Just one-fifth of those surveyed firmly oppose abortion. And fewer than half those abortion opponents said the issue would decide how they voted.

Three in five Republicans, and two in three Democrats and independents, said their vote would not be compelled by abortion.

Though abortion-issue voters are a minority, enough exist in both parties that they could decide a very close election, such as a three-way presidential race.

While Bill Clinton and Ross Perot describe themselves as supporters of abortion rights, President Bush opposes abortion except in cases of rape or incest or to save a mother's life.

The AP poll found that 58 percent of adults think a woman should be allowed to have an abortion as long as a doctor agrees to perform one. An additional 16 percent would permit abortion in some circumstances.

While supporting abortion in general, most Americans approve of laws that require notification of parents or husbands, waiting periods, and doctors making available information about alternatives to abortion.

If the Supreme Court lets states outlaw abortion, wrangling over state laws may compete with the presidential campaign for attention.

In the poll, 14 percent said they would be more likely to vote for a state legislative candidate who firmly opposes abortion, and 32 percent would be less likely. The rest were unsure or said it wouldn't matter much.

Twenty-seven percent of Americans said they would want abortion illegal in their state if the high court allowed states to outlaw abortion.

The South is the only region where fewer than half want abortion legal in their state.

Support for legalized abortion also drops off in other categories: those over age 55, those outside metropolitan areas and those with family incomes below $15,000.

Europe wants vigorous global warming measures

By PAUL RAEBURN
AP Science Editor

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP)—Heavily criticized for refusing to sign an Earth Summit treaty on protecting endangered plants and animals, the United States is proposing an initiative to catalogue the world's flora and fauna.

But while the White House sought to improve its image ahead of President Bush's trip to Rio later this week, Europe renewed calls for limits on so-called greenhouse gases written out of a treaty on global warming under U.S. pressure.

There was no immediate reaction to the U.S. species inventory proposal, made Tuesday in Washington by a senior Bush administration official.

The official also criticized the summit as a chaotic circus where industrialized countries supporting initiatives opposed by the United States were succumbing to "guilty, developed-world logic."

The biodiversity treaty, which would protect the world's threatened plant and animal species, is a centerpiece of the Earth Summit and the United States is the only major economic power refusing to sign it.

The Bush administration says it is concerned the treaty will not adequately protect the patents of U.S. biotechnology companies.

"At the Rio summit, the United States is going to offer an initiative to take the first step on biodiversity, which we think is critical," the administration official in Washington told a news briefing.

The initiative "is kind of an inventory initiative," a research and inventory initiative under which countries will map and assess their biological resources, said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity. He did not provide details.

The official also chastised Germany and Japan as acting "in a politically correct fashion" in supporting versions of environmental treaties that the U.S. opposes.

He spoke as the 12 countries of the European Community declared in Rio that they would seek speedy action to strengthen the global warming treaty.

The declaration says the European countries "welcome the commitment" to work toward reducing carbon dioxide emissions to 1990 levels by the year 2000. Carbon dioxide, largely produced through the burning of fossil fuels, is among gases scientists believe contribute to global warming.

The EC countries called for a meeting this fall to consider amendments that would strengthen the global warming treaty.

In pre-summit negotiations, Europeans had pushed hard to include the limit on CO2 emissions in the treaty. But the United States insisted the provision be removed, threatening not to sign and to stay away from the Rio gathering.

When the Europeans arrived in Rio, however, they immediately began discussing steps they could take to strengthen the global warming treaty.

The treaty is to be signed later this week. Bush, who is expected to arrive Thursday night, has argued that strict limits on carbon dioxide emissions could hurt the U.S. economy as it struggles out of recession.

The United States leads the world in carbon dioxide production.

In other developments:

• Among unresolved issues at the summit are how much money industrialized nations will pledge to support action on the summit's goals, and how the money will be disbursed. Another problem is a proposal to regulate biotechnology, U.N. spokesman Jean-Claude Faby said.

• A proposal to reduce air pollution, urban smog and acid rain was being blocked by Saudi Arabia, which fears a drop in oil revenues, said Jorgen Henningsen, a member of the European Community delegation.

A Saudi Arabian delegate said the Saudi negotiators working on this issue were not available for comment Tuesday.

• The United States has proposed increasing its aid for saving rain forests by $150 million. But a proposal to protect forests is being opposed by developing countries, which fear it would infringe on their sovereignty.

Bus-car crash kills three

SHINGLE SPRINGS, Calif. (AP)—A school bus and car collided Tuesday on a rural road, killing three people in the car. The bus rolled down an embankment and one of 10 children aboard was injured, police said.

The accident occurred shortly after 3 p.m. on a winding, two-lane road when the car veered in front of the bus, said California Highway Patrol Officer Wayne Wall. The area is in the Sierra Nevada foothills, about 55 miles east of Sacramento.

The victims in the car were identified as a woman, child and infant.

A 7-year-old boy on the bus was hospitalized in stable condition with a fractured knee.

The driver and the other children aboard the Gold Trails School Bus weren't injured, the CHP said.

What caused the car to swerve into the path of the bus wasn't immediately known.

Poor school districts ask for hearing

AUSTIN (AP)—Property-poor school districts want a state court hearing by the end of June on their request that a master be appointed to write a constitutional finance plan for 1993-94, in case lawmakers fail to do so.

State District Judge F. Scott McCown received the request in a letter Tuesday from Al Kauffman of the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund, representing the school districts.

A school funding plan approved by lawmakers was struck down this year by the Texas Supreme Court for the third time.

The latest system, to meet the Supreme Court's mandate to equalize school funding, was designed to shift hundreds of millions of dollars from wealthier to poorer school districts within new property taxing regions made up of one or several counties.

But the latest plan violated the Texas Constitution by imposing a statewide property tax, and by levying a property tax without voter approval, the court ruled.

Supreme Court justices gave lawmakers until June 1, 1993 to fix the system.

"Plaintiffs suggest to the court that the debates going on in the Legislature, the executive branch and in the public at large do not appear to be leading toward a plan that will both receive legislative and gubernatorial support, and will meet the standards of the Supreme Court," Kauffman said.

State's attorneys have opposed the request for a court master.

"It should be the state's job and the Legislature's job to create the system of funding for public schools, not a court-appointed master," state Assistant Attorney General Toni Hunter said.

Kauffman, in the letter to McCown, said, "Of course, it is the Legislature's duty to come up with a constitutional plan. We only ask that this court use its equitable powers to ensure a constitutional system of school finance, should the Legislature be unable to meet its constitutional obligations."

A plan by a special court master, appointed in 1990, never was implemented because the Legislature came up with its own proposal, which later was found unconstitutional.

McCown, who is overseeing the school funding case, appointed the master to write a school funding plan.

The judge in 1991 assigned an expert to update the court master's plan. But that measure also went unused, because lawmakers approved the current system.

Vereen injured in accidents

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Tony-winning entertainer Ben Vereen crashed his car into a tree hours before he was run down by a truck and critically injured while walking on a highway in the middle of the night, authorities said.

Investigators said they didn't know whether there was any connection between the accidents.

Vereen, 45, was in critical condition Tuesday with head and internal injuries and a broken leg. He was conscious and talking after four hours of surgery, said Mike Byrne, UCLA Medical Center spokesman.

The actor, singer and dancer, best known for his portrayal of Chicken George in the 1977 miniseries "Roots," was hit by a small truck on the Pacific Coast Highway near his Malibu home about 2:45 a.m. Monday. The driver wasn't injured. No charges were filed.

Authorities said they didn't know why Vereen was out at that hour. Deanne Holliday, a friend, said he sometimes took vigorous pre-dawn walks for exercise.

Six hours earlier, Vereen crashed his Corvette on the same road and was taken in for sobriety tests, which he passed, Deputy Larry Mead said. Vereen suffered bruises but refused medical attention, Deputy Rich Erickson said.

Vereen's 16-year-old daughter was killed in an auto accident in 1987, sending the entertainer into a severe depression, during which he abused drugs and alcohol.

Vereen stars in the CBS adventure series "Silk Stalkings," about a pair of homicide detectives.

He has appeared on Broadway in such shows as "Hair" and "Jesus Christ Superstar" and won his Tony for the Broadway musical "Pippin."

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Opinion

U.S. ignores illegal acts

The Cold War between Western democracy and Soviet bloc communism, happily, is indeed over. But just because victory has been gained does not mean that illegal acts should be ignored simply because they were committed by the losing side. To truly draw things to a close, there must be an accounting.

Recent news reports from Moscow revealed that Soviet communists knowingly and deliberately broke numerous United States laws by secretly sending $2 million a year to the Communist Party U.S.A.

But U.S. officials apparently are unwilling or afraid to look into the charges and see if crimes were committed and if U.S. citizens should face legal penalties. The democratic successors to Soviet communists, on the other hand, show no such reluctance.

The republic of Russia is putting communism on trial, requiring the former Communist Party to show why it should be a legal political party, after being banned last year. Russian leaders are going even further, putting the party's activities over its 70-year history on trial as well.

Officials there are sifting through documents of the former Soviet dictators and will ask why Soviet tax funds were diverted to the Communist Party and sent through KGB agents to communist parties and agents throughout the world. Russian officials want to know what the money was spent for - and why.

But despite having received a formal complaint, the U.S. Federal Election Commission shows no such curiosity. The complaint, filed by conservative activist Grover Norquist, details annual Soviet payments of $2 million (in cash) to Gus Hall, long-time head of the Communist Party U.S.A.

Hall willingly gave the KGB signed receipts for the cash, but never bothered to tell the FEC that he received the campaign contributions.

As listed by Norquist, the transactions violated campaign finance laws because they were far above legal limits, were in cash, were not reported and were from a foreign government/intelligence agency.

Other federal laws were broken because Hall never registered as a foreign agent and the transfer of cash across borders was not documented. Also, if any of the money went to pay salaries, Norquist thinks the IRS should have some legitimate questions about how much of the cash was reported.

Because Hall's receipt was found in Mikhail Gorbachev's desk, the former dictator was named as a party to the complaint. Had the U.S. government been the least bit curious, it could have approached him at any time during his recent two-week fund-raising trip across the country.

Unfortunately, the obvious and obviously illegal attempt to undermine our government and our way of life seems to be of no interest to bureaucrats and legislators in Washington - even if it is of interest to their counterparts in Moscow.

Berry's World

"Go to the American Embassy in Port-au-Prince."

Infatuation? Or true love?

"It's absolutely phenomenal," said pollster Mervin Field. He was talking about the candidacy of Ross Perot. Then he posed a question that cannot be answered till November. "But is it infatuation? Or is it long-lasting love?"

At the moment, Field added, it looks like love to him. It doesn't look that way to me. The country's love affair with Perot, in my own view, has all the aspects of a teenager's crush. It won't last.

At this point in the race, polls of public opinion undoubtedly are accurate. Field is director of the California Poll. His figures may be relied upon. The astonishing numbers supplied by other polls are equally believable - but in my observation, they are equally unreliable. Polls cannot measure the gap between what a fretful people say to a pollster in June, and what they actually will do if they vote in November.

My guess is that the current infatuation with Perot is a bobby-soxer kind of thing. The Texas billionaire is playing the tunes his fans adore. He is talking "straight Texas talk." Recently, in an interview with NBC, he was asked about Marilyn Quayle. The president's wife had charged that Perot is out to buy the White House.

The lady has a right of free speech, he said mildly, and then, talking Texas, he squinted at the camera with the look of Marshal Dillon disdainfully decaffeinated coffee. He just hated to see "grown men hiding behind their women."

That is fightin' talk, stranger, and it is enough to make the bobby-soxers squeal.

It is the contrast that enchants them. George Bush has suffered a bad run of the dithers. Bill

James J. Kilpatrick

Clinton smiles the smile of a traveling salesman. The major-party candidates are as pale as two mums in a vase with a flaming orchid. Clinton and Bush say all the conventional things about a presidential campaign. Perot says it's mud-wrestling, son, just mud-wrestling. The politicians are all talk and no action. They've pulled a con job.

Perot soars in the polls. More than one-fourth of the Democrats who voted on Tuesday for Clinton say they would rather have voted for Perot. More than half of the independents who voted in 1988 for George Bush say they would leave him for their Texas beau. So they say.

Once the voters get to know Perot, the figures will first slump and then fall. What now is perceived as self-confidence will tilt toward the side of arrogance. It fits the Texas image for Perot to be laconic, but responsible campaigns can't be built on bumper stickers. Does Perot know anything about the complexities of governance? Tell us.

Right now the people are mad about everything. They don't know what they want, but they don't want what they've got. They are sore about the economy. They are spending a fortune on public education, but the schools are not producing. City streets are jungles. Slick lawyers manipulate the courts. The people don't want taxes raised, but they don't want anything cut. They feel lousy, and they ache all over.

"I'd vote for Perot," said a little old lady on NBC. "It would just make me feel good."

All this sounds great - in early June. If Perot is to be a winner, instead of a spoiler, he will have to overcome a few realities.

Ours is a government based on the two-party system, and Ross Perot is a man without a party. Yes, the major parties are in danger of self-destructing, the Republicans over abortion, the Democrats over everything else. Even so, at every level of government the system remains in place. As the November campaign picks up speed, the party organizations will do their job. Democratic officeholders, thinking of jobs and patronage in a Clinton administration, will find the Arkansas salesman more attractive. Conservative Republicans will bury most of their unhappiness with Bush; they will return to the fold.

Suppose Perot wins the White House. What then? Do we have a three-party system? Do the Republicans go the way of the Whigs? Perot has said that he has no desire to hang around Washington. He will ride into town, clean up the place, and then "go home and get back to work."

Seen through the pollster's inconstant eye, this all looks good. But in the polls of passing opinion, as in the real world the polls so briefly reflect, things are not always they seem.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Wednesday, June 10, the 162nd day of 1992. There are 204 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:
Fifty years ago, on June 10, 1942, the Gestapo massacred 173 male residents of Lidice, Czechoslovakia, in retaliation for the killing of a Nazi official.

On this date:
In 1801, the north African state of Tripoli declared war on the United States in a dispute over safe passage of merchant vessels through the Mediterranean.

In 1922, singer-actress Judy Garland was born Frances Gumm in Grand Rapids, Minn.

In 1935, Alcoholics Anonymous was founded in Akron, Ohio, by William G. Wilson and Dr. Robert Smith.

In 1940, Italy declared war on France and Britain; Canada declared war on Italy.

In 1946, Italy replaced its abolished monarchy with a republic.

Many jobs, few positions

Graduating seniors at Yale heard from Yale alumnus Calvin Trillin.

He said, "If you want to be realistic, they will expect 'jobs' in today's job market, not 'positions.'"

And to make his point, during his commencement address he wore a Roto-Rooter cap.

Bill Cosby told graduating seniors at the University of Maryland that they should sue their school for leaving them unprepared for employment.

He said the university has no courses in valet parking, waitressing and grinding coffee, so graduates are not prepared for today's job market.

He said, "You are well-educated and you look cute, but that's not going to do it!"

There are entry-level jobs available if you are a nurse, an accountant or a lawyer. But with those exceptions, most of the help-wanted ads you see in the paper are offering "work-work."

For most of today's available jobs, you have to know "how to fix something."

For that reason Sears is now training its own appliance repairmen.

In Tulsa, Okla., students simultaneously work toward high school diplomas and as apprentices in metalworking.

Paul Harvey

In Pasadena, Calif., they can learn accounting and printing.

In Detroit they are learning to use the machine tools required for car making.

Much of the rest of the world is ahead of us in vocational training.

Germany has an elaborate system whereby leading corporations help schools provide practical education.

Britain guarantees two years of job training for all students who leave school.

Norway offers combination academic and vocational classes.

A Chicago-area schoolboy, David Mallec, showed no interest in school. His mother hoped he might be college material, but David was a "C" student preferring to slap a hockey puck around with his friends or play guitar. The classroom held no attraction whatever.

Then he heard about the Sears program. "It really interested me to be fixing stuff," David said.

Now every afternoon during the school week he is attending a local career center, poring through workbooks, with instruction, but at his own pace, learning about electrical appliances.

Americans of recent generations have tended to disdain the kinds of work where one gets one's hands dirty. That's changing.

Today that is where the jobs are and that is where the money is.

The building trades are more than ever before open to apprentice labor. Unions that heretofore tended to discourage training programs that threatened the jobs of their members now recognize that their own training programs were not enough.

And this election year it is significant that the front-runners for President are advocating almost identical school-to-work apprenticeship programs.

Death penalties and polygraphs

I wasn't on death row - as Robert Keith Coleman was - when I took my lie detector test. But after it was over, I walked away mistakenly convinced I had flunked. It is a debilitating, de-humanizing experience, even though you know you are telling the truth.

A friend of Coleman's said the convicted Virginia murderer was "devastated" when he told he had failed the polygraph on May 20, because it meant inevitable execution within hours.

Coleman strode stoically to his death later that day, insisting with a quiet passion that he was innocent of raping his sister-in-law and stabbing her to death in a tiny rural Virginia community.

Seven years ago, I had insisted on taking a polygraph after charging a Delaware state law-enforcement officer with abusive treatment, which he denied.

Obviously, one of us was lying. He refused to take a polygraph. I took it and was relieved when a state official said I had "passed with flying colors." The officer was suspended for three days.

If I had flunked the polygraph, though, it would have come down to his word against mine, even though my wife had witnessed the state trooper's abusive treatment. The criminal justice system almost never takes the word of an adversary to a law enforcement officer, especially if the adversary is black and the officer is white, as the Simi Valley, Calif., jury proved.

But most suspects don't get the kid-glove treatment that accused police officers routinely receive from juries. Of the 739,763 inmates in federal and state prisons, a minimum of 5 percent - 36,000 - are innocent, according to estimates of several nationally prominent legal experts whom I have interviewed.

Now, 95 percent accuracy is eminently respectable. But when policemen, prosecutors, judges and juries systematically make errors 5 percent of the time - and authorities refuse to budge when new evidence indicates a miscarriage of justice - the cumulative effect makes a mockery of fair trials.

In 1973, for example, Edward Martin Ryder of Philadelphia never got a fair trial. Two years later, a prosecution witness, Jeffrey Hunter, admitted to me on a TV show that he had lied at a trial that convicted Ryder of a conspiracy to murder a fellow inmate.

Beginning in 1979, I began a long odyssey to prove Ryder's innocence. In the following 12 years, I wrote 14 columns, uncovering two recanting witnesses and an ex-inmate's death-bed confession. A CBS-TV news report and a Philadelphia Inquirer reporter subsequently found two additional witnesses who exonerated Ryder.

Two years ago, Rev. James McCloskey, a close friend who is responsible for having dug up evidence that has freed eight falsely convicted inmates all over the America, took up Ryder's case at my request.

McCloskey uncovered two more witnesses and some brilliant logistical evidence that completely exonerated Ryder. Under McCloskey's direction, Ryder took a polygraph test and also passed "with flying colors."

But Ryder, who has been a model prisoner, is still serving a life sentence. Why? Because a sleazebag ambitious district attorney, Ed Rendell, oversaw the Ryder trial and doesn't want the case reopened.

Rendell almost had another innocent man, Neil Ferber, executed for murder. Ferber was later exonerated - although with less exculpatory evidence than has been gathered in the Ryder case.

Rendell on whom the sobriquet "Fast Eddie" was conferred during his district attorneyship, is now mayor of Philadelphia.

Robert Keith Coleman, who failed a polygraph, was executed. Ryder, who passed a polygraph, is still serving his life sentence.

But suppose Ryder had been executed before the witnesses came forward and he had a chance to take that polygraph? And suppose Coleman was a victim of the polygraph's occasional inaccuracies?

The results would not have been as devastating for me, but I often wonder: Suppose I had flunked my lie detector test.

Southern Baptists banish churches for accepting homosexuals

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Southern Baptists have banished two congregations for accepting homosexuals and set in motion a precedent-setting change in bylaws to exclude other churches that do the same in the future.

Both measures were strongly approved Tuesday at a convention of the 15.2-million-member church, the country's largest Protestant denomination. The change in bylaws must be ratified again next year to go into effect.

In mandating the ouster of any church that "acts to affirm, approve or endorse homosexual behavior," the Southern Baptists are departing from their long tradition of allowing congregations autonomy.

Earlier Tuesday, Vice President Dan Quayle addressed the convention on its opening day, issuing a rousing call for traditional family values. He defended his criticism of TV character Murphy Brown for having a child out of wedlock.

He said of his critics, "I wear their scorn as a badge of honor."

The Baptists punctuated Quayle's address with applause and ams, often standing to cheer him on.

At a news conference later, Quayle steered clear of the Baptists' debate over homosexuals. But he said: "Let me be very clear. The preferred lifestyle is one of marriage. The preferred lifestyle is the traditional family."

He added, "What one does in the privacy of one's home, what one does privately, that's his business or her own business."

Later, the 18,000 delegates voted by an overwhelming show of hands to banish two North Carolina churches, Pullen Memorial in Raleigh, which blessed a homosexual union, and Binkley Memorial in Chapel Hill, which licensed a homosexual to preach.

Their actions "are contrary to the teachings of the Bible on human sexuality and the sanctity of the family and are offensive to Southern Baptists," the resolution said.

Neither congregation had representatives at the convention. But the Rev. Mahan Siler, pastor of Pullen Memorial, said in Raleigh that the action is a troublesome departure.

"I hate to see Baptists make essential to cooperation and membership any of our positions on social issues. It is dangerous," he said. "It does violate our kind of freedom."

As for the service linking two gay men, he said the church was responding "as faithfully as we knew how to meet the request of a member for pastoral care. It's unfortunate that this has been a source of a break in fellowship."

Some Baptist leaders, including the newly elected president, the Rev. H. Edwin Young, voiced concern over initiating the constitutional revision.

Young, 55, who won the presidency in a three-way race, supported expulsion of the two congregations but said of the further step, "I don't want us to begin putting doctrine into bylaws. We've got to be real careful."

Others said the change could lead to a list of social taboos imposed on congregations from the top.

"If we keep it up, we'll shrink the convention until it becomes a nice cozy little club," said the Rev. Jess Moody of Chatsworth, Calif., a runner-up for president.

Young, pastor of Houston's 18,000-member Second Baptist Church, was backed by the denomination's biblical fundamentalists. He replaces the Rev. Morris Chapman of Wichita Falls, Texas.

Presbyterians reject proposal to bar Boy Scouts

By DAVID BRIGGS
Associated Press Writer

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Boy Scout troops can meet in Presbyterian church basements despite scouting's ban on homosexuals.

Delegates to the 204th General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) voted 368-165 against a resolution urging congregations to find out if their Scout troops ban homosexuals and to bar them from church facilities if they do.

Scout leaders and gay activists had said it would be a hypocritical stand for a church that bans gay clergy and declares homosexuality to be wrong.

The resolution, recommended by a church committee, said the 2.8-million-member denomination must do everything in its power to prevent society from discriminating against homosexuals.

"The issue is not the Boy Scouts. The issue is whether the church of Jesus Christ is going to be a discriminatory organization," Gerald Wise of the Chicago Presbytery argued in support of the resolution.

But Jack Willard of the Lake Michigan Presbytery said that a vote for the resolution would be perceived as "an unwarranted and thoughtless attack" on the Scouts. "I beg of you, let's not shoot ourselves in the foot," he said.

Earlier, delegates defeated, 284-241, a resolution upholding the right of the Boy Scouts of America to establish its own criteria for membership.

"We should not start backing them up in what we consider a restrictive policy," said Martin Cornelius of the Northern Waters Presbytery.

Meanwhile Tuesday, delegates to the Southern Baptists convention in Indianapolis voted to oust two North Carolina churches for condoning homosexuality.

The Presbyterian proposal was one of a number of recent challenges to the Boy Scouts' exclusion of homosexuals, which scouting officials defend as reflecting family values.

In April, the United Way of the San Francisco Bay area halted funding for Scout troops because of the anti-homosexual policy, and the Berkeley school district recently closed its doors to the Scouts.

In a statement, the National Association of Presbyterian Scouts said the Boy Scouts' policies are meant to provide a basis for selecting leaders with traditional values, and noted the group's right as a private organization to set its own membership policies.

Some delegates Tuesday noted the church's own ban on homosexual clergy.

Last year, in rejecting a report that would have given the church's blessing to same-sex relationships, the General Assembly affirmed past church statements declaring homosexuality "is not God's wish for humanity."

This year, a proposal encouraging people who condone homosexuality to find another church was referred to a committee for study.

Delegates on Tuesday also turned down an overture to reinforce the church's ban on the ordination of homosexuals, but they also voted 303-234 against an amendment in favor of increasing the acceptance and participation of people in the church regardless of sexual orientation.

The Rev. Howard Warren, a co-chairman of Presbyterians Act-Up, said the church needs to look at its own house. "There is hypocrisy here," he said. "How can the Presbyterian Church deny 10 percent of God's creation?"

Bush to visit Panama, skip wreckage of U.S. invasion

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Hector Avila won't be in the greeting party when George Bush visits this week.

The community activist blames the U.S. president for the sad state of the El Chorrillo slum, which was devastated in the 1989 American attack that toppled Gen. Manuel Noriega.

"We want to show the president how we live here after the invasion that he ordered," Avila said Tuesday. "We want to show that we live in houses without furniture, without work and with traumatized children."

With the help of $58 million in U.S. aid, some 2,700 families who lost homes got new ones and $800 to replace belongings. But they formed one of three anti-Bush demonstrations in Panama City on Tuesday, demanding an additional $3,500 per family.

Bush travels to Panama on Thursday in an election-year bid to highlight his foreign policy credentials. He plans to hail the democracy that has taken root since the December 1989 ouster of Noriega in "Operation Just Cause."

"We think the situation is immeasurably improved" since U.S. forces whisked off Noriega to stand trial in Miami, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said in Washington on Tuesday. Noriega was convicted in April on charges of racketeering, conspiracy and drug trafficking.

While bitterness remains among victims of the invasion, Bush, the first American president to visit since 1978, will find a generally pro-American climate in this steamy seaside capital. He is making the five-hour visit en route to Brazil for the Earth Summit.

Bush is to meet with President Guillermo Endara and address the public in Plaza Porras, a downtown park. He will not visit El Chorrillo, a teeming rat-ridden area that also was home to Noriega's headquarters.

"(Bush) needs to be aware of the great human damage the invasion left here," said Marta Rodriguez, 62, an El Chorrillo resident who lost a brother in the fighting.

According to U.S. Army estimates, 345 Panamanian soldiers and civilians and 23 Americans were killed.

While the invasion and Noriega's capture were widely welcomed at the time, many today feel it stripped Panama of its dignity.

Hundreds of university students blocked a key route into the capital for several hours on Tuesday. They called Bush and his actions in the country imperialistic, and shouted "We don't want Bush."

The third demonstration Tuesday was by members of the leftist University Students Front, whose members erected barricades on another street and shouted anti-Bush slogans.

American and Panamanian authorities agree that while some drugs still come through the country, trafficking is no longer protected as it was under Noriega's dictatorship.

"Before, they didn't keep track of the drugs... (It) gave the impression there wasn't anything here," Panama's customs chief, Rodrigo Arosamena, said. "Now that the drug captures are large, it is said incorrectly that there are more passing through here."

Despite negative feelings, polls show 70 percent of Panamanians think it would be "healthy" for the American military presence, here since 1911, to continue past its projected end by Dec. 31, 1999.

Endara, however, has said he will not discuss extending the American presence.

The soldiers are charged with protecting the Panama Canal. A 1977 treaty turns the canal and all the bases over to Panama at the end of the century.

The bases and their 10,000 troops provide about 12,000 jobs in a country strapped by unemployment.

Panama produces little and has basically a service economy. It has a foreign debt of about $4 billion, among the highest per capita in the world.

Unemployment is estimated at between 12 and 16 percent, down from more than 20 percent two years ago. But underemployment also is high. Thousands rioted in Colon last month to protest unemployment.

Shelling of Sarajevo kills 7

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Government leaders in the capital of Bosnia-Herzegovina took to basements today as Sarajevo shuddered under intense shelling. Officials said at least seven people were killed.

A 30-member U.N. observer team headed by Gen. Louis Mackenzie of Canada was to go to Sarajevo from the Serbian capital, Belgrade, to begin securing its Serb-controlled airport for relief flights to the supply-starved city.

But U.N. officials in Belgrade could not immediately confirm if the U.N. team was with the vehicles, which were on a regular mission to resupply the small U.N. contingent in the Bosnian city.

Mackenzie and his team hope to arrange a cease-fire around the airport that would allow planes to bring emergency food and medicine for trapped civilians, who are in dire need.

Sarajevo was shaken today by the crash of multiple-barrel rocket launchers and the boom of heavy artillery as Serbs and Muslim defenders traded fire.

Flames consumed numerous buildings, including some in the old Turkish quarter of Basarsija.

A general alert was on for the third consecutive day and senior government officials took shelter in the basement of the Bosnian presidency building.

Sarajevo radio said the northern Bosnian town of Tuzla also was shelled by Serb gunners, who hit the city hospital several times.

Alija Mulomerovic, the director of Sarajevo medical emergency services, said seven people were killed and 40 wounded in the capital overnight.

He said ambulances drove through the city with lights off to avoid fire.

Mortars targeted most sections of the city, site of the 1984 Winter Olympics, in a continuation of nearly three months of almost constant shelling.

Fighting broke out in Bosnia-Herzegovina after the republic's majority Muslims and Croats voted for independence from Yugoslavia on Feb. 29.

Strawberry is favorite of many

The strawberry is no newcomer to the table. Wild strawberries were eaten by the Romans, and colonists discovered them when they first came to America. They noticed that the Indians, for example, mixed crushed strawberries with meal to make bread.

Fresh strawberries are now cultivated, and each country has its favorite method of eating the berries, sliced or whole. The French often serve theirs with a splash of red wine vinegar while the Venetians prefer theirs with a little lemon and sugar. Here, we fancy strawberries with cream or ice cream.

But chefs have been experimenting with combinations of fruits, vegetables, meats, poultry and fish for years. And although the classic shortcake is a first-choice favorite, especially during the summer, strawberries are now used in salads, in sangria and even as a topping for mini-pizzas.

For lunch, or as a main-dish entree, whip up a strawberry chicken salad using home-cooked or deli chicken. Another rather different treat is nutmeg strawberry muffins. Those are good for breakfast, with afternoon tea or coffee, or as an after-school snack for the kids.

Strawberries will be in abundant supply since California, which provides 75 percent of strawberries for the United States, is expecting a record harvest. Supplies of summer berries from other states plus home-grown varieties should make this a very berry summer indeed.

Strawberry-chicken salad is a refreshing low-calorie lunch.

In large bowl, mix mayonnaise, chutney, lemon juice, lemon peel, salt and curry powder. Add chicken, celery and onion; toss, cover and chill. Just before serving, slice 1 pint of the strawberries; gently toss with chicken mixture. Line platter or individual serving plates with lettuce. Mound chicken mixture on lettuce. Garnish with whole strawberries and mint. This kitchen-tested recipe makes 4 servings.

In large bowl, mix the remaining sugar, flour, cornmeal, nutmeg, salt and baking soda. Mix oil and eggs with strawberries; add to flour mixture along with walnuts. Mix just enough to moisten dry ingredients.

Measure muffin mixture into 1/3 of each of 24 paper-lined or greased 2 3/4-inch muffin-tin cups. In small bowl, mix 1 tablespoon each additional sugar and cornmeal with 1/4 teaspoon additional nutmeg; sprinkle on muffin tops. Bake in center of oven about 25 minutes until springy to the touch and pick inserted into centers comes out clean. Serve warm or at room temperature. Cooled muffins can be wrapped and frozen for up to 2 months. This kitchen-tested recipe makes 24 muffins.

Editors Note: To make NUTMEG STRAWBERRY BREAD, divide batter between two greased 8 1/2-by-4 inch loaf pans. Sprinkle tops with sugar mixture. Bake in preheated 375-degree oven about 1 hour and 10 minutes, until pick inserted into centers comes out clean. Cool on rack. Slice to serve. This kitchen-tested recipe makes 2 loaves.

Food forum tickles funny bone

By MARY MacVEAN
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Food is funny.

"It's universal, for one thing. Some people don't care about politics and some people don't care about sports or clothes. But everybody cares at least a little bit about food," said humorist and writer Roy Blount Jr.

He shared the stage recently with Nora Ephron and others reading short stories and poems about food, many of them very funny.

"It's something really strange about ingesting other formerly living things, and it's something that calls up all sorts of childhood and domestic memories. It makes you think of your mother and your wives and your children," Blount said in a telephone interview after the performance.

The food night, one of several themed readings held at Symphony Space theater in Manhattan, was possibly the most popular of all, producer Katherine Minton said. A night of baseball readings was probably second.

"The programs in the 'Selected Shorts' performances become part of a radio series that is heard on 120 stations over National Public Radio. The programs from this spring would be broadcast in the fall of 1993, Minton said.

The evening began with the director, in a waiter's apron, introducing himself: "Good evening, I'm Isaiah Sheffer, and I'll be your waiter."

He said as an "intense concern of the species," food was tied with sex and with that constant worry of New York drivers — alternate side of the street parking.

While not every reading was funny — the most notable exception being Franz Kafka's "A Hunger Artist" read by actor Malachy McCourt — Sheffer started the evening with "The Clean Platter" by Ogden Nash, a poem that ends, "When I ponder my mind, I consistently find, It is glued, On food."

Introduced by Sheffer as a "cordon bleu wordchef," Blount read from his book "SoupSongs," including odes to beans and oysters and what he called a "deeply incorrect" poem in praise of grease.

"Food can get pretty serious, and of course the absence of food can get very serious," Blount said afterward.

And McCourt's reading of the Kafka story of the long, slow death of a fasting person was just that.

Preservation bug hits Gray County!

About this time of the year and then through the summer into fall, Gray County residents get the food preservation bug! Food preservation is a great way to save foods to enjoy later. There are several methods of food preservation from which to choose. The main methods are canning, freezing, and drying. All can help assure safe food for later use.

Why preserve food? Unless food is preserved in some manner, it begins to spoil soon after it is harvested. This spoilage is caused by microorganisms; physical damage such as bruising, water loss, or punctures; or by chemical changes such as those caused by enzymes.

Let's look at some of the food preservation methods and how they work.

Canning is the process in which foods are placed in jars or cans and heated to a temperature that destroys microorganisms and inactivates enzymes. This heating and later cooling forms a vacuum seal. The vacuum seal prevents other micro-

Homemakers' News

ganisms from re-contaminating the food within the jar or can. High acid foods such as fruits and tomatoes can be processed or "canned" in boiling water, while low acid vegetables and meats must be processed in a pressure canner at 240 degrees F.

Pickling is another form of canning. Pickled products have an increased acidity that makes it difficult for most bacteria to grow. Pickled products are also heated in jars at boiling temperatures to destroy any other microorganisms present and form a vacuum in the jar.

Jams and Jellies have a very high sugar content. The sugar binds with the liquid present making it difficult for microorganisms to grow. To prevent surface contamination after the product is made and thus possible yeast or mold growth, these are either canned, frozen, or refrigerated.

Freezing reduces the temperature of the food so that microorganisms cannot grow, however, some may still live. Enzyme activity is slowed down but not stopped during freezing.

Drying removes most of the moisture from foods. Thus microorganisms cannot grow and enzyme action is slowed down. Dried foods should be stored in airtight containers to prevent moisture from rehydrating the products and allowing microbial growth.

When deciding which method of food preservation to use, first consider the costs. Then, you must also consider which method produces a product that your family likes. All methods of food preservation can produce safe food for later use. Some foods, however, are more suited to either canning, freezing, or drying. Others produce an excellent product when any method can be used.

It is possible to preserve food at home for people who are watching their salt or sugar intakes. Simply use methods that don't require sugar or salt for their preservative properties.

If you are preserving food for someone trying to cut sugar consumption, you could can or freeze fruits in water or juice instead of a sugar syrup, or you could dry foods. The sugar specified in canning and freezing is only needed for its effects on flavor and texture. There are also many pickle recipes that call for little or no sugar. Sugar is the major means by which most jams, jellies, and preserves are safely preserved. These products are not suitable for a person on a low-sugar diet. However, there are special low-methoxyl pectins and recipes designed to make jams and jellies with no added sugar.

It is also possible to preserve foods for someone who is watching their salt intake. The salt used in canning, freezing, or drying foods is used only for its flavor or color protection quality. Pickling, especially when fermentation is involved, usually requires salt for its preservative effect. Read the recipe. If it calls for a large quantity of salt, this cannot be eliminated or replaced with a salt substitute. However, if the recipe calls for a large amount of vinegar and only a teaspoon or two of salt for flavor (not soaking), the salt can be left out.

For research based, reliable food preservation information, contact your Gray County Extension Office.

Woman's deception is more apparent each day

DEAR ABBY: Five years ago, I became pregnant during an affair I had with a guy who wouldn't have anything more to do with me after I told him I was pregnant.

I was young and frightened at the time, and didn't know how I could support a baby, so I convinced another guy with whom I had been intimate a few times that the baby I was expecting was his. He believed me, and agreed to take legal responsibility. He has been paying me child support for nearly five years.

What really scares me now is that my son doesn't look anything like the guy who's supporting him, and every day he gets to look more like his real father. Suppose someone notices this and I have to take my son for a blood test? Would I then be in trouble with the law because I've been taking money under false pretenses?

I'm afraid to discuss this with anyone, and hope you can advise me. I can't sign my name for obvious reasons, but I pray that you will print your answer in your column.

NERVOUS — DEAR NERVOUS: First, see a lawyer. If you don't know one, consult your local Legal Aid Society, or a family services agency. Then, put an end to the deceit and take your son in for a blood test; tell the man whom you wrongly named as your son's father — as well as the man who is actually the father — that you want to set the record straight. To continue to perpetuate the lie about your son's paternity is morally wrong.

The biological father's medical history could be very important to your son — particularly if there are hereditary diseases in his family.

DEAR ABBY: Although I do not wish to identify my community, I think residents will recognize and appreciate my remarks. My husband, who reads your column religiously, suggested I write to you.

I am 35, and the principal of a small suburban elementary school. This is my second year as principal, but I also taught in the district for 10 years. It is a wonderful community, and my staff and children and their parents are very cooperative.

We recently had an evening ice cream party at the school and raised nearly $800 for some equipment needed. After everyone left, I returned to my office to get some work done. An hour later, as I prepared to leave, I was confronted by a couple I did not recognize. They threatened me and took the $800, plus some petty cash. Before leaving, they bound me tightly with rope and duct tape and gagged me. It was several hours later when my husband became concerned because I had not come home, and drove to the school, found and released me.

Abby, without my knowledge, the students got together, and within a week they raised $1,000 to replace the money that was stolen. They also showered me with handmade cards expressing their love.

Despite all the negative things we hear about American kids, these terrific children represent the vast majority of our nation's youth.

Pippen-Kersey dual heats up

Bulls playing for 3-1 edge

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Portland's shot goes up and Jerome Kersey prepares to do what he does best — crash the boards. Out of the corner of his eye, however, he sees No. 33 in red, standing on the wing.

Kersey's dilemma: Go for the rebound and risk letting Scottie Pippen run free if the Chicago Bulls come up with the ball? Or suppress his natural instincts and get back on defense?

In the split second it takes Kersey to make that decision, it's too late. The shot is off, Pippen is taking the outlet pass and the Bulls have the offensive advantage against Kersey's Trail Blazers.

"You have to take a look where Pippen is on the court," Kersey said Tuesday. "If you don't get the rebound and they get it to him, it creates a lot of things for their other players."

The Michael Jordan-Clyde Drexler matchup has gotten the ink, but the Pippen-Kersey matchup has been at least as important in the NBA Finals.

Pippen is winning and so are the Bulls, who lead the best-of-7 series 2-1 going into Game Four at 8 p.m.

"I wouldn't say that Pippen is dominating Kersey," Jordan said. "But I would say he's outplaying him."

Though they're both 6-foot-7 small forwards, Pippen and Kersey play very differently.

Pippen handles the ball more for Chicago than either Jordan or point guard John Paxson does and leads the team in assists. Kersey is the second-leading offensive rebounder in Portland history and a better all-around board man than 7-foot center Kevin Duckworth.

In the Finals, Pippen is averaging 19 points on 45 percent shooting, with 6.7 assists and 8.8 rebounds per game. Kersey's norms are 10 points on 41 percent shooting, 2.7 assists and 9.0 rebounds.

"It's a hard comparison to make because he's going to get a lot more opportunities," Kersey said.

Ryan's search for elusive victory produces frustration, questions

By ARNIE STAPLETON
AP Sports Writer

ARLINGTON (AP) — At 45, Nolan Ryan still throws 97 mph and he still packs the house.

But this season he is winless and the only distinction he's added to his incredible career is becoming this century's losingest pitcher.

Getting victory No. 315 has become one of the most difficult tasks in Ryan's 26-year major league career. His next try comes Friday at Oakland when the Rangers face Dave Stewart (4-5).

In his last start, the Twins beat Ryan 6-1 when he allowed five runs on six hits in six sloppy innings Saturday. He walked four, struck out five and hit a batter in his first start since June 1, when he left the game with a strained left hamstring after throwing just 10 pitches against the New York Yankees.

"The idle time might have hurt him some," Kelly said. "But he still looked pretty good. And I'd hate to be the next team to face him."

In his loss to the Twins Saturday, Ryan threw a season-high 136 pitches, 52 of which were balls. That was Ryan's highest pitch total since throwing 147 times against Milwaukee on July 31, 1990, his 300th victory.

His highest total last year was a 131-pitch effort against Cleveland on April 26. In his next start, he threw his seventh no-hitter against Toronto.

Ryan, who has never gone this deep into a season without a victory, is 0-2 with a 4.65 ERA in nine starts this year.

Texas' overworked bullpen has blown three Ryan leads this season, leaving him winless in 11 starts since Sept. 25, when he beat Seattle.

Saturday's defeat was the 280th of his career, breaking a tie with Hall of Famer Walter Johnson and putting him third on the all-time list behind Hall of Famers Cy Young (313) and Pud Galvin (309), both of whom had some of their defeats in the 19th century.

Ryan is showing signs of frustration at going through April and May and into June without a victory.

He argued with home plate umpire Jim Joyce about the size of his strike zone Saturday. But after the game Ryan refused to say he got squeezed on the low pitches. "I don't have a comment on that," he said.

Minnesota pitcher John Smiley did.

"He's been around 20-some years, so maybe he should have gotten some of those calls," Smiley said.

Texas' Nolan Ryan is without a victory in June for the first time in his career.

Ryan has been clocked at 97 mph this year, harder than he's thrown in two seasons. The pop in his fastball is still there, only the luck isn't.

"I don't care what his age is, it's still tough to find someone with his kind of stuff," Texas pitching coach Tom House said. "The sample of 45-year olds that throw 95 miles per hour is a sample of one, and every day I'm around him it's a pretty special experience."

"He had three or four starts there where he threw 100-plus pitches at 95 miles per hour and kept us in ballgames," House added. "And that's all you can expect from a pitcher."

Trouble is, Ryan's been so good for so long, people have come to expect much, much more.

They used to come to the ballpark wanting to see another no-hitter so they could tell their children they saw a piece of history. And seven times he obliged.

They reveled in his blazing fastballs and hollered for another strikeout. And umpires belted "Strike Three!" 5,556 times.

After 26 years, one of the hardest things for baseball fans to imagine is the time Nolan Ryan will walk off the mound and never come back. They're packing the ballparks across the league whenever he's scheduled to pitch, knowing they may never get to see him throw again.

Forget the no-hitters. Forget the strikeouts. All they want now is to see him win. Another victory, one more they can tell their children about.

Yamauchi buys Mariners

NEW YORK (AP) — First, Columbia Pictures, CBS Records and Rockefeller Center. Now the Seattle Mariners.

Japanese investors were given virtual approval Tuesday to purchase their first major league sports team in the United States. But while they can own the team, they won't be able to control it.

Baseball's ownership committee voted unanimously to recommend the sale of the Seattle Mariners to a group headed by Hiroshi Yamauchi, president of Nintendo Co. Ltd. of Kyoto. Final approval of the $125 million deal is expected today during separate American and National League meetings.

Three-quarters of the 14 AL teams and a majority of the 12 NL teams must approve the deal, but the committee's decision makes today's final vote a foregone conclusion.

Yamauchi, who is contributing $75 million to the purchasing group, agreed to give up almost total control of the team in order to gain approval. Commissioner Fay Vincent said Yamauchi's power will be limited to decisions involving the relocation or sale of the franchise.

"He has the power to approve certain transactions in the realm of extraordinary events," Vincent said. "This venture is not going to be controlled outside North America. This venture is going to be controlled in Seattle."

John Ellis, the chairman of Puget Sound Power & Light Co. in Bellevue, Wash., will become the Mariners' chief executive officer when the deal closes in about a month. He will have final say over budgets, banking and loan agreements, leases, broadcast contracts and baseball operations.

Yamauchi released a statement in Tokyo that was as low-key as his expected role with the team.

"The owners will conduct a formal vote at their meeting Wednesday, and I believe that the conditions for approval will be announced then," he said. "I will wait for that to discuss my feelings and thoughts on this matter."

"At this point the conditions have not been announced. This is all I can comment, but I believe the conditions presented will be accepted by the Seattle Baseball Club and will be amenable to me as well."

The deal follows a series of high-profile transactions that led to trade friction between the United States and Japan. In the past five years, Sony Corp. brought Columbia Pictures Entertainment and CBS Records; Mitsubishi Estate Co. bought 51 percent of Rockefeller Group Inc., which owns Rockefeller Center, and Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. bought MCA Inc., which owns Universal Pictures.

In addition, Japanese investors have purchased the Pebble Beach Co., Belmont Stakes winner A.P. Indy and at least 50 percent interest in four minor league baseball teams: Vancouver of the Pacific Coast League, Birmingham of the Southern League, and Salinas and Visalia of the California League.

Japanese investors also have a 15 percent interest in the NHL's Quebec Nordiques and own a percentage of the Tampa Bay Lightning, which begins play in October. The size of that investment, as much as 60 percent according to some reports, has not been confirmed by the team or the NHL.

Baseball officials, reluctant to allow overseas ownership and slower than the NBA or NFL to venture abroad, stressed that Seattle-area investors will have majority control of the team's voting stock, primarily Christopher Larson of Microsoft Corp. and John McCaw, a director of McCaw Communications Cos. Under the final deal, Yamauchi is believed to be spending $48 million for the stock and contributing the rest of the $75 million as loans and preferred stock.

"You have less than 50 percent of the equity of the venture from outside North America," Vincent said. "So you have more than 50 percent locally and you have total control in the hands of Mr. Ellis, who is a local resident and a prominent businessman."

In the original deal, proposed on Jan. 23, Yamauchi would have controlled 60 percent of the team's stock. The offer came at the height of a xenophobic wave of Japan bashing that followed President Bush's contentious trip to Japan earlier that month. Vincent said at first he doubted the deal would gain approval.

The deal bogged down in committee before Vincent pressed in recent days as baseball officials became embarrassed by the delay.

"It took a certain amount of time to get the evolution in place," American League president Bobby Brown said.

It was only in December that owners rejected a proposal to allow overseas investment of up to 37 percent. But Jeff Smulyan, who purchased the Mariners in September 1989 for approximately $77 million, put the team up for sale on Dec. 6 following pressure from his bankers.

Doctor: Howe needs out of baseball

By JOHN NADEL
AP Sports Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Giving up baseball probably would help Steve Howe finally recover, says a doctor who formerly treated the troubled pitcher.

"In this country, we now have a group of people who have become addicted to cocaine and they continue to relapse," Dr. Forrest Tennant said. "That's very common. I have a number of patients in and out of sports who are chronically relapsing patients."

"I think it's like an alcoholic. They have to learn how to live a new life, change their lifestyle, perhaps change their occupation. They have to develop a lifetime program."

Tennant, a drug consultant for the Los Angeles Dodgers while Howe was with them in the 1980s and later the NFL's drug advisor, said his advice to Howe now would be to give up baseball.

"If he were my patient today, I would tell him, 'Don't appeal, take care of No. 1, find a new life,'" Tennant said by phone from his office in West Covina, Calif. "Professional sports can be very, very hard on recovery."

"And it's not just sports. People have to face up to the fact that a given occupation is not compatible with recovery. From a person's personal aspect, maybe they need to find a different occupation."

"I have not seen or talked to Steve in quite some time," Tennant said. "Without knowing details of his case, I can only respond in a couple of general ways."

Howe, 34, was suspended from baseball for the seventh time for drug-and alcohol-related problems on Monday by commissioner Fay Vincent after the relief pitcher entered a guilty plea in U.S. District Court in Missoula, Mont., to a misdemeanor charge of attempting to buy one gram of cocaine.

The alleged offense occurred last December, during the off-season.

Lottery finalists have different plans for money

AUSTIN (AP) — Only one finalist in the Texas Lottery's first $1 million prize drawing will take home the big prize, but the others won't come away empty-handed.

All seven finalists selected Tuesday for the Texas Lottery's first $1 million prize will win a cash prize: Second place in the drawing pays $50,000, another finalist wins $25,000, two get $15,000 and two receive $10,000.

Finalist Theresa Pawlowski is cautious about spending her lottery winnings before they're in hand.

"Let me get it first," she said when asked about her plans for the money.

But then, she started thinking aloud.

"I never had money for a vacation. Never. All I did was work all my life," said Ms. Pawlowski, 68, of Houston. The seven finalists were chosen Tuesday for the June 18 drawing in Dallas.

Even the trip to Dallas "would be wonderful," Ms. Pawlowski said.

The Texas Lottery is providing $500 in travel money for each finalist, said Andy Welch, spokesman for the state comptroller.

Ms. Pawlowski's husband died in 1952, and after that she raised their three children while working at a meatpacking plant. She has 11 grandchildren and five great-grandchildren.

A ticket giving her a chance at the $1 million drawing, with "entry" on it three times, was among 10 purchased at the same time, she said.

Juanita Saldivar, the finalist whose name was drawn first, is a 38-year-old mother of three, said Lottery spokesman Steve Levine. He said Mrs. Saldivar and her husband are unemployed, and that she said she never won anything before.

Mrs. Saldivar's lucky ticket was one of five she purchased. She said she would use her winnings to pay on her house and pay bills.

Kenneth Bernhardt, a 69-year-old finalist, is retired and lives in Pasadena. He bought 30 to 40 tickets, according to Levine.

Annabel Huerta, 23, of Abilene, has two children and works at a bingo parlor. Her husband is a furniture deliveryman. The ticket she sent in was among 200 she bought, Levine said.

Ms. Huerta said she would buy a house with her winnings, save money for her children's college education, buy her father the ranch he always wanted, buy her mother a house, and help her brothers and sisters financially, according to Levine.
