Rodeo whets appetite

Big feed set for opening performance

By ANGELA LEGGETT
Staff Writer

Cooking for thousands of hungry rodeo fans is no picnic. It's hard work.

Two thousand pounds of meat, 200 pounds of beans, 150 pounds of onions, 100 pounds of pinto beans, 70 gallons of black pepper, 30 gallons of pickles, and 30 gallons of apple sauce, are being prepared for the Top O' Texas Rodeo barbecue Thursday night starting at 5:30 p.m., organizers said.

The event is free for Thursday night ticket holders.

"Last year we fed 2,000 people, this year we are cooking enough for 4,000. It is not really hard, it just takes a lot of time," said Michael Craig, barbecue chairman. "Preparation for the barbecue takes a couple of months."

Contributors of cash, food and assistance with serving the barbecue include Mundy Companies, Danny's Market and Albertsons.

"They are getting nearly all the food from me," said Danny Bainum, Danny's Market owner. "I am contributing some of the meat, a com-binating-dollar figure with what they are purchasing."

Danny's Market is also helping with some of the preparation and serving.

"I decided to get involved with the barbecue this year," he said. "I'm a supporter of the Rodeo, and I've always helped in other areas, but I felt I could do more good in this area."

"We will wrap the meat starting between 9 and 10 a.m. across from the national guard on Wednesday," Craig said. "We will wrap it in muslin and then burlap. We are digging the hole Wednesday morning and cooking will begin at noon."

The meat is cooked in the ground in a 3 foot wide by, 100 ft long, hole of wood and charcoal.

"A few of us will stay there all night and let the meat cook," Craig said. "During the last couple of years, we have had to build a fire to keep it dry from the rain."

The meat will be removed Thursday, unwrapped after noon and prepared for the barbecue.

"The whole board will help with the barbecue," Craig said. "If the national guard will be here, they will help us some with the drinks in the serving line."

Mundy Companies is donating $25,000 towards the barbecue.

"There is not a whole lot of preparation we do," said Ken McBride, superintendent of Mundy Companies. "The company wanted to do it. It is something for the community. Instead of getting involved in other things we choose to help out with this ... what we feel is a pretty outstanding event in the community."

"Last year we gave money and it helped buy meat," he said. "I usually help Robert Morris, a Rodeo director, set up, and do what every they need help with."

Redistricting plan upheld in U.S. Supreme Court

AUSTIN (AP) — A lower court's legislative redistricting plan — opposed by Democrats and minorities — has been upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court.

"It is likely the general election will go forward with the cloudy plan," Ron Dusek, a spokesman for Texas Attorney General Dan Morales, said after Monday's ruling.

State leaders sought to overturn the redistricting plan that was approved 2-1 by federal judges in Austin, all of whom were appointed to the bench by Republican presidents.

The court's plan overturned one passed by the Democratic-controlled Legislature. That plan was later approved by the Justice Department.

Democrats and minority groups say the court-imposed Senate district boundaries were drawn to help Republicans win election to the 31-member chamber.

Morales argued that a "dark cloud" hovered over the court plan due to allegations that one of the judges, James Nowlin of Austin, gave a state representative secret access to work on the redistricting maps.

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ordered a committee of judges to investigate allegations that Nowlin acted in a partisan way, and he subsequently was reprimanded.

Nowlin repeatedly has declined to discuss the allegations. The lawmaker, Rep. George Pierce of San Antonio, has denied any wrongdoing, saying he made only minor adjustments on the Senate boundaries, including the district in which he unsuccessfully ran for this year.

Asked by the justices for its views, the Bush administration said the so-called Nowlin plan should be upheld.

Republicans said the Supreme Court's decision vindicates Nowlin.

GOP chairman Fred Meyer blasted Morales, saying he "has wasted millions of taxpayer dollars and more than a year of many state employees' time representing the partisan interests of Texas Democrats instead of the people of Texas."

Meyer called the efforts by Morales and other state officials to defeat the court plan "a selfish and shameful abuse of their powers and their responsibility to the public."

Dusek argued, however, that the Nowlin plan overturned one adopted by state lawmakers. "The Texas Legislature represents the people of Texas," he said.

"This court seems to be well scripted for Republican politics," said Texas Democratic Party executive director Ed Martin. The court on Monday also disposed of a similar appeal from state Democratic Party Chairman Bob Slagle.

The plan adopted by the Legislature is "superior" because it has won pre-clearance from the Justice Department, Dusek said.

The state is still challenging the Nowlin redistricting plan before a three-judge federal panel in Washington, D.C.

Dusek said a victory there would put the question back in the Supreme Court's lap, which could affect district boundaries for elections held after this year.

State and federal districts are reapportioned every 10 years after the census count.

Hearing set for July 7 in school finance case

DALLAS (AP) — A judge has called a July 7 hearing to consider the appointment of a court master who will draw up a new way for the state to fund education in the Texas school finance case.

The Texas Supreme Court declared the state's school finance system unconstitutional and gave the Texas Legislature a June 1, 1993 mandate to devise a new system.

The plaintiffs in the long-running case requested the appointment of a court master because, they said, they fear the Legislature may be unable to agree on a new funding plan.

Attorneys for the state oppose the appointment of the grand master. They have argued that the Legislature should be given an opportunity to fix the funding law.

A special session to consider school financing was expected in May, but Gov. Ann Richards called it off when there was no consensus on any plans presented to the Legislature.

The governor has indicated she may call a special session on the issue in November.

"The debates going on in the Legislature, the executive branch and in the public at large do not appear to be leading toward a plan that will both receive legislative and gubernatorial support, and meet the standards of the Supreme Court," said Al Kauffman, a lawyer for the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund who represents the plaintiffs.

A court master was appointed in 1990 when the Legislature and then-Gov. Bill Clements could not agree on an education funding plan.

Thursday night rodeo goers are served barbecue at last year's event.

Wife accused of fatal kidnapping pleads guilty

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — Irene J. Seale pleaded guilty today to extortion and conspiracy to commit extortion, tearfully admitting she was wrong to have taken part in the fatal kidnapping of Exxon executive Sidney J. Reso.

Mrs. Seale admitted in U.S. District Court that she and her husband, Arthur, abducted Reso, that Reso was shot in the arm, that he was left in a storage locker after the couple attempted to treat his wound, and that he died there May 3.

The Seales were arrested June 19. Reso, the 57-year-old president of Exxon Co. International, was kidnapped outside his home April 29. His body was found Saturday in a shallow grave in southern New Jersey.

Prosecutors said Mrs. Seale has agreed to plead guilty to one state charge of kidnapping, in addition to the federal charges she pleaded to today, and to cooperate with authorities including testifying against her husband. If she does so, federal charges of kidnapping, conspiracy to kidnap and two mail fraud counts against her will be dropped.

She would face a maximum sentence of 40 years on the federal charges, and a state sentence not to exceed that, authorities said.

Her husband of 25 years was to be arrested later in the day on the kidnap, extortion, conspiracy and mail fraud charges.

In court this morning, Mrs. Seale gave clear affirmative answers as she was questioned by Judge Garrett E. Brown and U.S. Attorney Michael Chertoff. She admitted that her husband wrote and that he and she delivered ransom notes, and that they threatened in the notes to kill Reso.

Chertoff asked if she knowingly and willingly took part in the kidnapping, and she said she did.

"Did you know that what you were doing was wrong?" Chertoff asked.

"Yes," said Mrs. Seale, and tears welled in her eyes.

She continues to be held without bail.

Sources have said Mrs. Seale led authorities to Reso's grave on Saturday, and published reports said she had given investigators a complete account of Reso's abduction and death.

Reso died after five days of suffering from a gunshot wound to the arm while bound and gagged in a sweltering storage room, according to published reports. His body was found after a 12-hour search in Bass River State Park in southern Burlington County.

Results of an autopsy were not released Monday by the FBI, the U.S. attorney's office or the Morris County prosecutor's office.

Bush envoy: No evidence of American POWs alive in former Soviet Union

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Bush's special envoy said today he found no evidence in Moscow that any living American POW is being held against his will in the former Soviet Union.

Malcolm Toon briefed President Bush this morning on his week-long trip to the former Soviet Union.

Afterwards, he told reporters outside the White House, "There probably is no living American POW detained against his will."

Toon said top Russian officials had agreed to open their security archives to American investigators, as Russian President Boris Yeltsin promised during his summit here last week.

Yeltsin caused a sensation during the summit when he said some American GIs had been kept in Soviet prisons after World War II, the Korean War and perhaps even the Vietnam war. "Maybe some of them are still alive and still in Russia," Yeltsin said then.

Toon said the Russian authorities had agreed to issue a statement within two weeks on what the joint search has found.

Toon said he had encountered "some puzzlement as to why (Yeltsin) said this and what he had in mind."

The former ambassador to Moscow said he would draw a distinction between Americans held against their will and some who may have elected of their own choosing to stay after the wars.

"There probably isn't any live American POW being detained against his will in Russian facilities," he said.

Toon said nine American spy pilots were shot down over Soviet territory during the Cold War, and others may have been held prisoner.

"We still have to find out what happened to those in the past. And if there are any remains, we want those returned to us," he said.

"I think there were others," Toon said.

Some of the U.S. investigators went to a labor camp in Siberia during Toon's trip, but found no evidence of Americans being held there.

Yeltsin pledged that "every document, every archive" in Russia would be searched for clues to the fate of any Americans missing from the three wars.

Toon said he prodded the Russians to issue a statement within two weeks confirming that no American was being held.

"I saw no reason at all, and no American could see any reason, why the Russian government can't come up with a statement within two weeks indicating whether or not there's a live American POW being detained in Russian facilities," he said.

"So that will be done."

Toon and Gen. Dmitri Volkogonov, a military historian, are chairing a joint commission to investigate the possibility that Americans were still held in Russian labor camps or psychiatric hospitals.

Toon said his trip produced "a much stronger promise on the part of the security people ... on opening up all their files" on this issue.

Asked about American soldiers who might have chosen to stay in the former Communist state, Toon said, "I think that's a real possibility, but frankly, we did not find any information to that extent."

"There may be former American POWs living in Russia or the former Soviet Union voluntarily. We don't know that," he said.

Bush "was very happy to have me go over there ... trying to pin this whole thing down," the envoy said.

Volkogonov, his Russian counterpart, has already said he doubts any living American POWs will be found.

Even before Yeltsin's statements, the joint U.S.-Russian panel had produced the death certificates of eight Americans held in Soviet prison camps following World War II. It was not known whether they were U.S. servicemen or Nazi sympathizers.

Court decision takes abortion out of courtroom, into capitols

By MITCHELL LANDSBERG
Associated Press Writer

The Supreme Court's abortion ruling appears to have shut the courtroom door on abortion bans in Louisiana and Guam, while opening the way for abortion debates in legislatures and at the ballot box.

Activists on both sides said the ruling will make abortion even more of a political issue — at the state and national level — than it has been since the court's 1989 Webster ruling gave states more authority to restrict abortion.

"I think you are going to see the politicization of women like you've never seen before," said Robin Rothrock, an abortion clinic operator in Shreveport, La., who heads Louisiana's League of Women Voters. In its ruling in a Pennsylvania case, the Supreme Court on Monday upheld some abortion restrictions but explicitly reaffirmed the basic right to an abortion, which it established in 1973 in Roe vs. Wade.

That appeared to doom the laws in Louisiana and Guam, which have banned abortion in nearly all cases. Both laws have been blocked by the courts, and neither has ever been enforced.

About a dozen states are expected to become crucial battlegrounds now that legislatures are free to enact Pennsylvania-type restrictions.

The high court upheld provisions requiring that women requesting an abortion wait 24 hours, that doctors inform them of the alternatives and risks, and that unmarried minors get consent from a parent or a judge. A requirement that women seeking an abortion inform their husbands was struck down.

"You're going to have a lot of activity in states replicating Pennsylvania's law, but I think that's going to be far surpassed by activity at the voting booth," said Helen Alvare, a spokeswoman for the Pro-Life Secretariat of the United States Catholic Conference.

She and others said that the Supreme Court's 5-4 vote upholding Roe vs. Wade will raise the stakes in the presidential campaign, since the next president is likely to appoint the pivotal vote on the court.

The most immediate effect of the ruling will be felt in a small number of states, including Ohio, Alabama, Kansas, Maine, North Dakota and Utah, that have laws with restrictions similar to Pennsylvania's.

Those laws, most of which have been tied up in court, will now presumably be declared constitutional. Ohio Attorney General Lee Fisher said the decision strengthens Ohio's law, which was found unconstitutional by a state judge last month. It establishes a 24-hour waiting period and requires women to be given information on fetal development and alternatives to abortion.

Anti-abortion forces in Utah saw the Supreme Court ruling as a validation of a law there that bans most abortions, with more exceptions than in Louisiana or Guam.

The law, which also has been tied up in court, makes exceptions for abortions that are necessary to save a woman's life or prevent grave damage to her health, or in cases of grave fetal defects, rape or incest.

"I think it's a very good sign," said Susan Roylance, director of United Families of Utah. "I think it shows the court is willing to accept reasonable approaches, and Utah's case is a reasonable approach."

Ms. Alvare of the Catholic Conference agreed, saying the Utah law might pass muster with the Supreme Court because of the health exception. However, some abortion rights advocates disagreed.

"We think this means Utah's law will be thrown out as unconstitutional after a million dollars wasted on a wild goose chase," said Michele Parish, executive director of the American Civil Liberties Union in Utah.

The court's ruling is expected to bring abortion to the forefront of many legislative campaigns this fall and assure that it will dominate some states' legislative sessions next year.

Among the states where it is expected to arise as a major issue are Colorado, Delaware, Indiana, Ohio, Wisconsin and Illinois.

In Illinois, abortion opponents plan to seek legislation next year similar to the Pennsylvania law, while abortion rights advocates plan to push for passage of a measure that would incorporate Roe vs. Wade into state law.

Perot speaks out on issues

NEW YORK (AP) — Ross Perot believes in raising taxes if that's the only way "to pay our bills," approves of effective sex education, but not prayer, in schools, and thinks Democrat Paul Tsongas had the best economic platform of any of the other candidates in the presidential race.

In a wide-ranging network television forum Monday night, the Dallas billionaire laid out some of his principles and beliefs — but few specifics.

He also dug out two props — one a transcript of glowing comments then-Vice President Bush made about Perot to a television interviewer, the other Tsongas' 86-page economic manifesto, which he waved to the studio audience.

The 90-minute, 10-city town meeting on ABC followed a 1-hour biographical feature on Perot.

Perot said he would prefer to cut spending to balance the budget, but would advocate raising taxes to "keep our country solvent." Still, he said, a tax increase was not "inevitable."

"Let's assume that we're just unable to pay our bills, unable to meet our obligations, we have to raise our taxes. That's it," Perot said. "We have to pay our bills as a country. We've been in a fantasy land where we run up bills and don't pay them."

Perot said he would rework the nation's tax system, which he called "obsolete," but rejected a suggestion from the audience that a flat tax system was the answer.

He also said in an emergency, such as war, he would raise taxes. And another, more non-traditional, emergency might arise if the nation fails to curb spending, he said.

"But if there is such an emergency, it's because we created it as a people by being unwilling to face our obligations. Right now we want everything, but we don't want to pay for it," Perot said.

Perot's answers were long and anecdotal, and anchorman Peter Jennings — as well as questioners — frequently noted that he had not answered the question. Perot usually stuck to his theme that principles are more important than specific campaign promises.

"A strong moral and ethical base is the ultimate solution," Perot responded to a question on gun control.

Asked what he would do if Saddam Hussein invaded Saudi Arabia, Perot repeated his criticism of the way Bush handled the events leading up to the Persian Gulf war. He said he would blockade oil shipments before sending in American troops.

"Slam that embargo in on that guy hard and let him twist in the wind," Perot said.

Members of the studio audience said after the show they were impressed by Perot's wit and charm, but not by his lack of specifics.

"He sounds good, but so did Bush, so did Reagan," said Tange Precious Bennett, a family assistant at Public School 65 in the South Bronx.

"I don't think there was much light shed on what type of president he would be. But he's a great old guy," said Kevork Khrimian, a New York securities analyst. "I think I like him more."

On other topics, Perot: — Revised his former statement that he would not appoint a homosexual to a Cabinet post, saying that he would institute no ban on gay Cabinet secretaries, but, "I don't want to destroy someone" in brutal confirmation hearings.

— Said the Constitution was sacred, but also "dynamic. It's not static."

— Continued his denials of stories that he has investigated employees and rivals. "The facts are I do not investigate people's private lives," Perot said. "I do not run around with Sherlock Holmes hat and a magnifying glass."

— Said he was opposed to prayer in school because "if it's going to disrupt the school system, ... let's do it at home and when you get to school, let's stick to the strong moral and ethical standards that create a great society."

— Said that sex education and condom distribution in public schools was a state and local issue, but added, "I don't have any problem with properly training them so that they don't make mistakes that damage their life."

Perot insisted on opening the town meeting by reading the lavish praise he said Bush, as vice president, once heaped on him to an ABC reporter at the time Perot wanted the White House to help find POWs in Vietnam. The date of the interview was not immediately available.

"There are not many people who spend their own treasure for principle and Perot does this," the transcript said, according to Perot. "I really think he's so openly honest and openly uncomplicated in terms of patriotism."

Bush and Perot have been feuding following news stories that Perot once hired a law firm to investigate Bush. Bush and his aides have responded sharply, calling Perot "paranoid."

In a flashy display of support for Tsongas, with whom Perot met privately last week, Perot waved a copy of Tsongas' booklet "Call to Economic Arms," saying it was the best economic platform he had seen.

"Read that, there's a lot of good ideas here," Perot said.

Asked as he left the television studio if that meant he supported Tsongas' proposal for a nickel-a-gallon tax increase on gasoline, Perot said, "I'm not taking every piece of his program. I'm using it as an example of a good set of plans" that he hoped to "improve and optimize."

Court is moderate-conservative

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court's refusal to snuff out women's right to abortion capped a 1991-92 term that long will be remembered as the conservative revolution that wasn't.

Led by an emerging, powerful trio of moderate-conservative justices, the court upheld the core of its landmark Roe vs. Wade decision as it ruled that states cannot ban most abortions.

AP Analysis

The same group — Justices Sandra Day O'Connor, Anthony M. Kennedy and David H. Souter — held the balance of power in the court's ruling this month that banned prayer at school graduation ceremonies.

The three also controlled when the court rejected a Bush administration bid to make it harder for state court defendants to appeal their cases to federal courts.

"The court is not the conservative monolith most liberals have been saying it is," said Thomas Jipping of the conservative Free Congress Foundation. "There are cracks."

Monday's ruling on abortion weakened, more dramatically than ever before, the right as defined in 1973 and let states impose more regulations that could deter many women from having abortions. But the court stopped well short of what the administration had urged — discarding the right to abortion entirely.

In control were O'Connor, Kennedy and Souter. They were joined, in part, by Justices Harry A. Blackmun and John Paul Stevens, the court's most adamant protectors of abortion rights.

Frustrated were four court members — Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Byron R. White, Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas — who wanted to overturn Roe vs. Wade.

"On abortion, as on school prayer, the conservatives have split into two subgroups," said A.E. Dick Howard, a University of Virginia law professor.

"There's Rehnquist and Scalia on the ideological right, and the more moderate subgroup of O'Connor, Kennedy and Souter. The balance of power appears to lie with this more moderate subgroup," Howard said.

Although White, the court's senior member, regularly joins the most conservative members in cases on abortion, criminal justice and free speech rights, he strays from that group on other matters.

When the court last week strengthened its 30-year ban on organized worship in public schools by banning prayers at graduation ceremonies, the vote was 5-4. The three moderate-conservatives joined with Blackmun and Stevens.

Earlier this month, the court rejected the Bush administration's push to make federal courts far less accessible for appeals by defendants convicted in state courts.

Only Rehnquist, Scalia and Thomas voted for the administration's position. The moderate-conservatives, joined by White, Blackmun and Stevens, prevailed with a middle-of-the-road approach.

On the same day, the court barred communities from imposing parade and rally permit fees based on the perceived need for police protection.

The 5-4 split on the free-speech issue saw the moderate-conservatives join, with Stevens, a Blackmun majority opinion.

The court clearly is more conservative than it was in 1986, when Rehnquist was promoted to the chief justice's job by President Reagan.

Since then, the court's only remaining traditional liberals — William J. Brennan and Thurgood Marshall — have resigned.

Blackmun and Stevens, the court's remaining liberal wing, are lifelong Republicans from the Midwest.

Reagan appointed O'Connor, Scalia and Kennedy. President Bush added Souter and Thomas.

With Thomas' confirmation last October, many legal experts had said the only thing left to resolve was how conservative the court would become.

Opinion

Decision results in a 'grand slam'

For a while, it seemed that anti-Japanese hysteria would tag out the attempt by Nintendo to purchase the Seattle Mariners baseball team. As it happened, the recent purchase raised little dust and was responsible for nary a dirty uniform. Then in what became a not-so-surprising move, baseball's committee of owners approved the deal with little controversy.

Perhaps Americans are not as upset with Japanese investments in this country as some demagogues would have us believe. After all, what possible harm could come from the sale? Nintendo, wealthy from selling millions of video games, will pump cash into the team, perhaps turning the perennial loser into a winner.

The Mariners sale was made more palatable by giving Nintendo only a minority of the company's voting stock. According to Daniel J. Evans, a former three-term governor of Washington and a former U.S. senator from the state, the purchase "guarantees local control and local decision-making, along with the strongest financial backing the team has ever had. These are matters of historic importance to Major League Baseball."

Still, local control really isn't an issue. Nintendo wants to protect its investment, not hurt it. It wants to keep local fans happily buying season tickets, cheering, and stuffing themselves with hot dogs and beer. Most Seattle fans supported the Nintendo purchase as the only way to save the team from moving to St. Petersburg (the one in Florida, not the one in Russia, yet), which craves a major league team. Nintendo is seen as a Super Mario brother rescuing baseball from the soggy city.

The Mariners sale provides a superb example of how free trade operates across borders, and how foolish is protectionism. The purchase will score runs for the economic climate in Seattle, creating jobs for Americans. It also should increase the value of all the other U.S. baseball teams, thereby increasing the wealth of the 25 Americans (or American groups) who control the teams.

What do the Japanese get? A good investment in a growing city. Free trade, within national borders or across them, is a win-win game. The idea of a "zero-sum" game is the fantasy of socialists.

Free trade is much like baseball. Even if a team loses a game, everybody goes home a winner. The losing team still had fun and made top salaries. The fans rooting for both teams had a good time.

Even if your team lost, there's still next year, when that young pitcher will recover from his wildness, your slugger will start hitting, and your team bus won't crash. Like all voluntary activities, capitalism and baseball benefit everyone involved.

By putting aside ridiculous worries about "off-shore" ownership, Americans, Major League Baseball, and politicians have hit a home run.

Are we misers with education?

Stephen Chapman is on vacation this week. The following column was originally published Feb. 25, 1990. Thank you for your attention.

Suppose a friend came to you asking for your advice on what to do about a list of problems - a lousy job, an imperfect marriage, too many bills, a deep and frustrated yearning for a few minutes with Andy Rooney. Suppose you offered several realistic ways he might handle his problems. And suppose his own proposal for dealing with each problem was the same: running off with his secretary.

Would you conclude that he truly wanted to a) solve his problems, or b) run off with his secretary?

Those people who invariably proposed to address social problems by the uniform device of unloading dump trucks filled with taxpayer-supplied currency demonstrate the same revealing lack of seriousness. Spending more tax dollars is sometimes useful in solving certain problems. But then, so is running off with one's secretary.

An illustration of my point comes from a recent, much-heralded report by the liberal Economic Policy Institute. It claims to prove that, contrary to the insistence of Ronald Reagan and George Bush, the United States spends less on education than other industrialized countries who produce better educated graduates.

The report provides an intellectual foundation for the Democrats who charge - as Democrats reflexively do whenever Republican presidents propose education budgets - that, as House Speaker Tom Foley recently announced, "You can't be the education president, with all the problems we face in this area, by proposing a meager increase in the education budget."

EPI's statistics are superficially persuasive. It claims that the administration distorts the comparison with other countries by including funds spent on higher education, where the U.S. is relatively extravagant. Where the U.S. skimps is exactly where our educational system is clearly failing - in elementary and secondary schools.

"The U.S. spends less on pre-primary, primary and secondary education than all but two other countries" in EPI's 17-nation sample, says the report. "Only Australia and Ireland spend less." These countries spend an average of 4.6 percent of their national income on these schools. The U.S. spends just 4.1 percent.

Aha! So now we have a simple, inescapable explanation for our educational failures - and a simple solution, which is for you and me to hand over our wallets.

But on closer inspection, the EPI analysis turns out to have quite a few holes. First, there is the problem of unreliable statistics. The EPI study draws its data from the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural organization, which gets it from governments that have different ideas of what to include and what to exclude.

Chester Finn, formerly a high official of the Education Department and now head of the Educational Excellence Network, warns against putting much faith in this information. "I know how sloppy the U.S. is in filling out its forms," he says. "Some GS-11 at the National Center for Education Statistics does them in his spare time from whatever information he has available. They're not take very seriously."

EPI also relies heavily on share-of-income percentages. But if I spend a bigger share of my income on housing than Donald Trump does, that doesn't prove I have a bigger house (or more houses) than he does. It proves I have a smaller income. Thanks to our wealth, Americans can allot a small portion of their income to education and still spend more money than other countries.

That's just what we do. In real expenditures per elementary and secondary pupil, calculates education writer John Hood, the United States ranks second out of 15 industrialized nations (Switzerland is first; Japan is last).

Experts can bicker about which comparison is best. What no one can dispute is that the amount of money we put aside for schooling American children has soared. Total spending per public school pupil, adjusted for inflation, is 89 percent higher than it was in 1965 and 31 percent higher than it was a decade ago, according to a recent Cato Institute study by Hood.

If more money produces better performance, as the EPI report suggests, then American kids should be doing far better than kids in decades past. If my aunt had wheels, she'd be a bicycle.

The Democrats in Congress and EPI would like us to believe that the truly urgent question facing American education is how much money to spend. The real issue is how to spend it.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Tuesday, June 30, the 182nd day of 1992. There are 184 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On June 30, 1971, the 26th Amendment to the Constitution, lowering the minimum voting age to 18, was ratified as Ohio became the 38th state to approve it.

On this date:

In 1834, the Indian Territory was created by Congress.

In 1870, Ada H. Kepley of Effingham, Ill., became America's first female law school graduate.

In 1906, the Pure Food and Drug Act and the Meat Inspection Act became law.

In 1934, Adolf Hitler began his "blood purge" of political and military leaders in Germany. Among those killed was Ernst Roehm, leader of the Nazi stormtroopers and Hitler's one-time ally.

Bumper sticker: 'Ross is My Hoss'

I read several newspapers every day, and because we're in a presidential election year, there's usually at least one political expert on each editorial page telling me how the candidates are doing.

And there are the polls. There are network polls and newspaper polls to keep me up to date, and there probably should be fishing polls.

Fishermen usually are pretty solid, down-to-earth types, and a pollster could go out on a boat and ask them who they are favoring for president and probably get a good feel for how each candidate is faring, too.

But a friend of mine, Susan MacMichael of Madison, N.C., brought up something during a conversation the other day concerning an indicator nobody else may have noticed.

Bumper stickers.

Said Susan, "At least around here, the only bumper stickers you ever see are for Ross Perot. I see them on everything from pick-up trucks to Mercedes. But I haven't seen a single one for either Bush or Clinton."

Come to think of it, I haven't seen a single one for President Bush or Bill Clinton either, but I've seen several Perots myself.

In the past several months, I've been just about everywhere you can get to by airplane in this country.

Lewis Grizzard

In California, I saw a bumper sticker that read, "I Go for Perot."

In Georgia, I saw, "Ross Is My Hoss."

Actually, I didn't see one in Georgia that said "Ross Is My Hoss." I made that up. But it's still a great idea for a bumper sticker for a Texas.

The thing about bumper stickers is if you go to all the trouble of obtaining one, then putting it on your car so everybody else can see who you are supporting, there's got to be some passion involved.

One doesn't put a bumper sticker like the one I saw on a truck the other day that said, "I'll give up my gun when they pry my cold dead fingers off the trigger," unless one holds a passionate viewpoint against gun control.

So it is with supporters of political candidates.

Take a look around. Seen any Clinton or Bush stickers?

As I said, I haven't seen any, while Perot stickers seem to be increasing each day. There is passion for Perot, but apparently precious little for Bush or Clinton.

I have a few more ideas for Perot stickers. I mentioned in a recent column that Perot might have changed the pronunciation of his name to "Pah-row" from "Pea-rot" once he became a millionaire, so:

"I'm Hot for Pea-rot"

Or how about:

"Perot will do Mo"

I thank Susan MacMichael for her brilliant observation, and the more I think about it, the more I like "Ross Is My Hoss." If there are any Ross supporters or bumper-sticker makers out there who want to steal my idea, go right ahead.

Wait a minute. Another great idea for a sticker just came to me:

"Perot You Da' Man!"

If the Bush or Clinton camps are interested, let me know. To be fair I'll think up some clever stickers for them.

Whether anybody will put them on their cars, however, is another matter. They'll have to catch their own fish.

Perot: The latest Big Deal maker

Every so often when I'm feeling unfulfilled and unappreciated at work, I daydream about switching careers.

I have no trouble envisioning myself in some new role, right down to my hairdo, the spiffy suit I'm wearing and the clever things I say in front of mesmerized onlookers. Sometimes my imagination is so superb I even think for a moment I might actually be able to function in this career, for real...until I envision the job interview:

"Uh, Ms. Overstreet, am I overlooking something here on your resume? I can't seem to find anything on here about your management experience, or any business courses you took."

"Oh, I haven't had any actual management experience, but I have great people skills and all my friends come to me to straighten out their problems. And, well, I guess I didn't take any business courses. I always thought I'd sort of like to, but it was the '60s and '70s, you know, and we were all pretty much into the liberal arts."

"But, Ms. Overstreet, you're applying for an upper-level management position in a Fortune 500 company. What do you know about managing a business this size?"

"Well, I've been a reporter for 15 years, and I've really learned how to read people. I've developed a lot of contacts, some of the best minds in any field you can think of. If anything comes up that I don't know how to handle, I'll just consult with some of them, study the situation and come up with a solution. What's the matter, didn't you see 'Working Girl'?"

"Thank you for coming in, Ms. Overstreet, and good luck with your job search. Next!"

That's where the daydream always ends, unless I'm having the one about running for president of the United States. Because in that dream, I'm able to take advantage of the "Big Deal Myth," just like Ross Perot.

This wonderful fairy tale feeds off our need to believe that just when a person is feeling the most confused, dispirited or disillusioned about the way things are, along will come the Big Deal and things will be different.

I've heard it 1,000 times from the Big Deal makers I've known, and it goes something like this: The Big Deal maker has heard through (a) a friend, (b) a co-worker, (c) a lodge brother or (d) the clerk down at the package store, who even pulled him aside so the other customers wouldn't hear, about the most fantastic deal on (a) a car, (b) furniture, (c) firewood or (d) riding lawnmowers.

Now, the Big Deal maker has never seen the merchandise because it is (a) in another city, (b) being brought in by truck and set up in a cattle-auction parking lot at a yet-to-be-disclosed date or (c) sold through secret catalog the next time the government liquidates property confiscated through drug busts.

Even when the goods never materialize, the Big Deal maker will continue to believe, sometimes for years. And so it is with Ross Perot, the Big Deal personified. He has no platform, only a set of contradictory snips of philosophy and the promise that a "team" of the best and brightest will weave them into specific policies.

The little we do know about him is the stuff of myth: He's supposed to be a no-nonsense, entrepreneurial genius, who, by virtue of his high moral character and sheer brilliance, will be able to solve the nation's problems like a crack new CEO would do to a disheveled business.

So what if he doesn't have any answers just yet - he's working on it! Sheesh, give the guy some time, already. So what if he doesn't have any experience in any aspect of our complex government and its relations with other nations - not in its legislatures, its agencies or even in the ranks of policy analysis. Those government jerks are the same reason we're in such a mess in the first place. Throw the bums out! Crown him emperor! I see the clothes, don't you?

Family had an appetite for political table talk

DEAR ABBY: As election time draws near, we see a downright hostile intolerance to anyone else's opinions. I want to share our experience — perhaps others will benefit from it.

I married Jack at the end of World War II. We were so opposite (I'm Catholic, he was Protestant; I'm a Republican, he was a Democrat; I like black olives, he liked green; etc.). Yet we had total respect for each other, and a wonderful marriage for 46 years — until he passed away.

Come election time, we sat at our dinner table, trading information from both political parties, trying to convince each other not to go to the polls and cancel out each other's vote. Oddly, we both wanted the same thing for our country, but Jack felt government could do it better and I was for private enterprise.

Dinnertime could get pretty heated with our four sons taking part. When they were older, we ended up with two registered Democrats and two Republicans.

A sense of humor helped us to keep our perspective. As we finished our dinner, Jack would always conclude with a twinkle, "Well, Honey, you are entitled to your erroneous opinion," and we'd all laugh.

Let's keep it respectful and humorous. We will be better served. What do you say, Abby?

NINI CUTTER,
SHERMAN OAKS, CALIF.

DEAR NINI: I say you're absolutely right! Political differences at the dinner table are rarely respectful and good-humored. Lucky you!

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My brother, who is serving in the Army overseas, is in love with our cousin. The feeling appears to be mutual, but obviously, legalities are prevailing. We know it is illegal in some states for first cousins to marry. We also know that it is legal for second cousins to marry. In this age of divorce and remarriage, where do the half-cousins fit in?

Our grandmother was married twice, to different men. A daughter of the first marriage had a son. A daughter of the second marriage had a daughter. Grandma's children are half-siblings. But what are Grandma's grandchildren? (The only common link is Grandma.)

Might any of your readers or advisers know of a place where the marriage of these grandchildren would be legal? Or should they remain just "kissing cousins"?

CONCERNED BROTHER

DEAR CONCERNED BROTHER: The laws concerning marriage vary from state to state. Therefore, a lawyer in your state can tell you whom your brother may or may not marry. Check with your legal adviser.

***

DEAR ABBY: I have been reading your column for a long time — at least for 25 years — and you have always knocked smokers and smoking, linking smoking with cancer. Well, I was just diagnosed as having lung cancer, and I have never smoked a cigarette in my entire life. However, my husband smoked 2 1/2 packs of cigarettes a day for more than 40 years, and he is as healthy as a horse.

How can this be explained?
DUMBFOUNDED

DEAR DUMBFOUNDED: It is possible that you are a victim of secondhand smoke. (However, in fairness to your spouse, not all lung cancer is caused by cigarette smoke.)

DEAR ABBY: I have had something on my mind for a long time, and I would like to hear what you have to say on this subject.

When a man is found guilty of rape or child molestation, why would it not be proper to have a doctor perform a little operation, so the man would not have the "urge" to commit that crime again?

They do it on young cattle. It would help the man, and maybe save a lot of lives and free up a lot of jail cells.

B.W. IN LAKELAND, FLA.

DEAR B.W.: The "little operation" you suggest is called castration, which is not performed in civilized countries. The reason is obvious: Assume that a man is found guilty of rape or child molestation and is castrated. Then later, another man comes forward and confesses to the crime — then what? Does the law say, "Oops ... sorry?"

White House bears imprints of First Ladies

By TOWN & COUNTRY
For AP Special Features

This year marks the 200th anniversary of the laying of the cornerstone of the White House — but it hasn't been seen since.

The Executive Mansion was the brainchild of George Washington, but he died in 1799, before its roof went on. The cornerstone was laid Oct. 13, 1792. A brass plaque set into a still-moist foundation stone, it probably was filched by a light-fingered onlooker.

"I am grateful I am living in the White House," first lady Barbara Bush said. "Every day I learn new things about it and the families who lived in their historic rooms. What an extraordinary legacy we have."

The current first lady was lucky — thanks to Nancy Reagan and her Los Angeles decorator, the family quarters were in live-in shape. But with more than 1.25 million sightseers, endless receptions, meetings, luncheons and banquets, the house takes a beating. Barbara Bush has brought in New York decorator Mark Hampton, and with his help she keeps swatching her way through the 132 rooms, redoing this, restoring that.

That has included redoing the Oval Office to the president's taste.

"President Bush wanted a new rug — blue with a gold seal, he told me," Hampton said. "And he wanted his private dining room to be very comfortable and sunny. I recovered some chairs for his office, too; they were made for the White House in 1818 and had been in and out of storage over the years."

The first president to sleep in the Executive Mansion — its name until 1901 when Theodore Roosevelt made the nickname White House official — was John Adams, who arrived in Washington, D.C., with his wife, Abigail, in 1800, just four months before his term ended.

The White House was designed by architect James Hoban, who won a contest for $500 or a medal of that value. He took the medal.

Since then there have been three major structural changes. The first came after the British invaded, looted and burned the White House during the War of 1812. First lady Dolley Madison escaped just ahead of the British troops, saving important documents and other belongings and — most importantly — Gilbert Stuart's full-length portrait of George Washington.

The White House also underwent major transformations in the terms of Theodore Roosevelt and Harry S.

Truman, the latter requiring more than three years and $5.76 million.

"Dad was genuinely worried that the White House might collapse," Truman's daughter, Margaret Truman Daniel said. "It was so teetery, the floors shook when we walked, which meant the ceilings over our heads could give way."

The modern first lady who transformed the White House interiors was Jacqueline Kennedy. On Jan. 23, 1961, her first day as first lady, she met with David Finley, chairman of Washington's Fine Arts Commission, for advice on forming her own committee in the White House.

"It must be restored," she said, "and that has nothing to do with decorations."

While she became expert at extracting donations from owners of appropriate antiques, she occasionally turned down a gift. She refused a set of expensive crystal because she wanted to buy glasses made in West Virginia, where she had been touched by the poor people she saw and "it's the only way I have to help them."

The White House is the scrapbook of America's dreams and realities, but it is also, as Gerald Ford once said, "the best public housing I ever saw."

Summer green becomes gold, orange and red of fall

By 3-2-1 CONTACT Magazine

Leaves are green during the spring and summer — but underneath that green, they're also orange, yellow, or other colors.

The green that blots out those colors is a chemical called "chlorophyll" (say: KLOOR-oh-fil). Chlorophyll in the leaf helps turn the energy of sunlight into food.

In fall, the chlorophyll breaks down when the nights become cooler and the days become shorter. Then the yellow and orange colors show through. In some kinds of leaves, new colors might form in the leaf as it dies, turning them red or purple.

This color change only happens in trees that lost their leaves in cold climates. (Trees in the tropics stay green.) These trees don't need to make food during the cold season, so they don't need green leaves anymore.

Not all trees shut down for winter. Evergreen trees, such as pines and fir trees, stay green all the time. They're busy turning sunlight into food all winter long.

Memphis exhibit explores mystery of ancient Etruscan civilization

By WOODY BAIRD
Associated Press Writer

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Ancient residents of central Italy liked to party and enjoyed a good funeral. They sought clues to the future by "reading" sheep livers and helped develop Romans numerals.

But much of their everyday lives remains a mystery. They were called Etruscans. No one speaks or writes their language anymore, and their traditions were absorbed by Rome.

An exhibit of artifacts taken mainly from Etruscan graves is on display through Aug. 31 at Memphis' Pink Palace Museum.

Called "The Etruscans; Legacy of a Lost Civilization," it focuses on 175 artifacts from The Vatican Museums. Most are being seen in the United States for the first time.

"This exhibit shows a unique civilization that existed on the Italian peninsula long before the time of Christ," said Jack Kyle, a spokesman for show. "They were a very enlightened civilization."

The exhibit is part of the city's "Wonders" series which also includes a bejeweled display of Ottoman artifacts being shown at a convention center through Aug. 16.

With "Wonders: The Memphis International Cultural Series," the city hopes to build a reputation as a regional center for displays of art and artifacts.

The series came about following a 1987 exhibit of Egyptian artifacts from the time of Ramses The Great. It included a display last year of Russian treasures from the period of Catherine The Great. Those shows drew more than 600,000 visitors each. The Ottoman exhibit is expected to draw up to 500,000.

The Etruscan exhibit is the least flashy show in the series so far, but its historical value is no less significant, Kyle said.

"It is a more intimate exhibition," he said. "This is a prelude, hopefully, to even larger and more spectacular exhibitions from the Vatican Museums."

With a budget of $2.3 million, the Etruscan display will break even financially with 200,000 visitors.

The Etruscans dominated west-central Italy from 750 to 250 B.C., though their civilization apparently began as early as 900 B.C.

They were farmers, craftsmen, warriors and seafarers who apparently adapted to the ways of their contemporaries in Greece and Egypt.

Like the ancient Egyptians, the Etruscans stocked the tombs of their dead with everyday comforts needed to make them feel at home in the afterlife. Tomb walls often were painted with scenes of daily life.

Etruscan cities were scattered throughout their region of dominance, but the lack of a central government and army made them easy targets for the Roman legions.

Their houses, made of wood and clay, disappeared over the years, but many of their stone tombs remain.

The exhibit includes brass and stone implements of daily life, gold and silver jewelry and the body armor of warriors. One former soldier's breast plate includes holes apparently made by the weapons that killed him.

A large stone coffin is carved with figures in a funeral procession, and the show's exhibit hall includes a replica of the entrance to an Etruscan home.

Banquets, community games and elaborate funerals played an important part in Etruscan life. Their talents at wine-making were picked up by the Romans.

The Etruscans put great store in omens and soothsayers, and it was an Etruscan priest who warned Julius Caesar to "beware the Ides of March."

Sleepwalking Dream Team routs Canada

Olympians play Panama tonight in Game 3

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — John Stockton's broken leg and a lackluster first half against Canada proved that the U.S. Dream Team will not be a smooth-running machine all summer.

X-rays showed that Stockton, originally diagnosed as having a bruised calf, has an undisplaced fracture of the lower leg. Stockton will miss the rest of the Tournament of the Americas and probably the Olympics.

Rosters for the Games in Barcelona must be set by July 15.

Stockton was injured while the Dream Team was struggling in the first half of a 105-61 victory over the Canadians.

While a 44-point decision hardly can be called a cliff-hanger, it's clear that the U.S. team plays better with a little motivation.

So what will it take to get the Americans going tonight against Panama, who beat Cuba on Monday to get back in the race for the Olympics?

"We're going to take back the canal," said Charles Barkley, who had 19 points Monday night and has been the leading scorer for the United States in each of its two victories.

Whatever happens against Panama, the Americans may have to play without Larry Bird (sore back) as well as Stockton. Fortunately for coach Chuck Daly, Patrick Ewing came back earlier than expected from a dislocated right thumb.

"We'll alternate Scottie Pippen, Magic Johnson and Michael Jordan at point guard," Daly said. "But injuries are taking a toll."

The Dream Team outshot the Canadians 53.3 percent to 34.4 percent for the game, but the Americans managed only 47.6 percent shooting in the first half and had just a 50-33 lead, 23 fewer than Sunday's halftime margin against the Cubans.

"I expected us to not be as sharp," Daly said. "We weren't as emotional, Canada's size inside gave us trouble and we didn't shoot as well."

"Game 1 was such an emotional game, so we weren't going to come out with the same emotional high," Barkley said. "We can't play at a high level all the time. But I'll be comfortable with a 17-point margin at halftime of every game. I don't think we'll blow out teams in the first half that often."

Karl Malone scored 15 points before fouling out with 5:10 left. Jordan scored 14 points and Chris Mullin and Johnson had 13 each.

Former Los Angeles Laker Mike Smrek had 14 points and Al Kristmanson 11 for Canada, which was outrebounded 54-32.

"We battled them pretty hard and had the game pretty close in the first half," Canadian coach Ken Shields said. "We tried desperately not to give them transition opportunities. But the biggest difference with their team is that all their guys are runners. If you take a step in the wrong direction, you're not getting that step back."

The United States took control early in the second half with a 15-0 run capped by Pippen's 3-pointer and dunk that made the score 71-40 with 14:05 left.

The Canadians played on even terms with the Dream Team for the next six minutes before the Americans spurred again, taking a 101-59 lead with 2:48 remaining.

"They just ran it down our throats three or four times in a row," Smrek said of the second-half rout.

The loss did not ruin Canada's chances of being one of the four teams from the tournament to make the Olympics. A victory over Panama on Wednesday probably will be enough to send the Canadians to the quarterfinals on Thursday night, when they would need to win in order to gain a berth in Barcelona.

Team USA wounded but winning

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Patrick Ewing is back, Larry Bird has a sore back and John Stockton might not be back tonight.

Not that it makes any difference to the outcome, but the health of the Dream Team isn't perfect after two blowout victories in the Tournament of the Americas.

Ewing, who dislocated his right thumb during a scrimmage last Wednesday, made his first appearance with the U.S. team in the Olympic qualifying tournament Monday night, scoring 6 points in 14 minutes of playing time in a 105-61 win over Canada.

Watching the team make its debut the previous night in a 136-57 rout of Cuba on Sunday wasn't easy, Ewing said.

"It was very hard. It was frustrating," he said.

The splint was removed from his thumb only a few hours before the game and he admitted to being slightly tentative at the start.

"But once you get into the heat of battle you forget about it," he said.

Bird, meanwhile, sat on the floor, a more comfortable position because of his perpetually injured back, and never pulled off his warmup jacket on Monday. Whether he does so again tonight when the United States plays Panama remains to be seen.

"I knew I wasn't going to play when I left the hotel," Bird said. "Usually in this situation, if I keep playing, three or four games later I can't play anymore. So we're just holding back and taking every precaution right now and trying to get to Barcelona healthy."

Bird said he could have played if his team needed him.

"But these are sort of warmup games and Patrick came back tonight," he said. "My being out didn't hurt us because he had a chance to play more."

Bird missed 37 regular-season NBA games and most of the playoffs because of the back. He said he began taking over-the-counter pain medication on Monday after experiencing soreness in his back following his 7-for-8 shooting performance against Cuba.

"Maybe that will calm it down," he said. "It usually takes awhile for it to calm down but it feels better today than it did last night."

Spurs offer Lloyd Daniels last chance at basketball

OLD WESTBURY, N.Y. (AP) — Lloyd Daniels' personal problems have cost him more opportunities than most people get in a lifetime. His talents with a basketball have earned him one more chance.

On a basketball court, Daniels is a 6-foot-8 virtuoso — he can run the floor, jump, shoot, pass and rebound. He sees things that most players can't; sometimes, he looks like he's playing at a different speed than everyone else. He was a New York City playground legend and a schoolboy sensation.

It's dealing with life off the court that has presented the biggest challenge. Daniels' list of off-court problems includes a 1987 arrest on drug charges and a 1989 incident in which he was shot by two men — an incident police blamed on an old drug debt and a legacy of his problems with cocaine addiction.

At age 24, Daniels has been to hell and back. Now, he'll settle for a one-way trip to San Antonio. That's where he was headed today — to sign a contract with the Spurs on Wednesday for a long-awaited shot at the NBA.

"I'm just looking forward to going down to Texas, working real hard and taking it one day at a time," Daniels said Monday night after he bade farewell to the United States Basketball League, a summer-time development circuit.

As for his past? "I'm not worrying about what happened then. I'm worrying about today," is all he'll say.

At San Antonio, he'll be reunited with Jerry Tarkanian, who tried to recruit him six years ago while coaching at UNLV.

Daniels attended five high schools in three states before attending a semester at Mount San Antonio College in California. He was admitted to UNLV without a high school equivalency diploma, but never played for the Runnin' Rebels.

He was arrested on drug charges in Las Vegas in February 1987 — after which Tarkanian said Daniels would never play for UNLV.

Or any other college, as it turned out.

Instead, he's played in the Continental Basketball Association, the Global Basketball League and for two different teams in the USBA.

Texas pitchers let Jays walk away with victory

TORONTO (AP) — The only plate Bobby Witt didn't have trouble locating was the one with his post-game dinner on it.

Witt walked eight batters, including four straight in a five-run second inning as the Texas Rangers tied a club record for a nine-inning game by walking 13 batters in an 11-4 loss to the Toronto Blue Jays on Monday night.

"When I was falling behind the hitters I started thinking too much," Witt said. "One pitch led to another."

"But if I get (Manuel) Lee out in the second it would have been a lot closer."

Witt's four consecutive walks brought in the first Blue Jays run before Lee stroked a two-run double to right.

Ruben Sierra bobbled the ball for an error, allowing Greg Myers to score and Lee, who took third on the play, scored on Witt's wild pitch to cap the inning.

"Manny's hit was the big blow," said Candy Maldonado, who drove in four runs with a two-run homer and a two-run double. "But it wouldn't have meant a thing if (Pat) Hentgen doesn't come in and shut them down."

Hentgen (5-0) relieved starter Dave Stieb after Ivan Rodriguez trimmed the Blue Jays lead to 5-4 in the fourth with his seventh home run of the season, a two-run shot to the second deck in left.

He walked Jeff Huson to load the bases before Rafael Palmeiro flied out to left and Ruben Sierra grounded out to first to keep the Blue Jays one-run lead intact.

"The biggest difference since my last stint up here is my ability to get my curve over for strikes," Hentgen said. "It makes a big difference when you can get two or three pitches over."

Hentgen, called up from Syracuse Sunday when Todd Stottlemyre was placed on the 15-day disabled list, allowed two hits over 4 2/3 innings.

Cleveland's Peebles recovers after breaking neck at Houston

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Danny Peebles knew he was in serious trouble even before he hit the turf.

The former Cleveland Browns' wide receiver says he saw only blue, the color of a Houston linebacker's jersey. He looked at his outstretched hands and tried to clench his fist, but could not move his fingers.

A month later, having regained full use of his body after breaking his neck on Nov. 17, Peebles made an appearance before the Browns' final home game. As the applause waned, Peebles came to a sad realization.

"When I came off I started thinking, 'Damn, this is going to be the last time I'll ever step on a football field again. That's the last cheer I'll ever get as an athlete.' It was a humbling moment, just to sit there and think, 'That's it.' You always hear people say, 'What are you going to do when the cheering stops?' and that's when it stopped for me."

At 26, Peebles now works as an accountant in Raleigh.

"To just think if it wasn't for that one play, all the days I've spent on the football field, all the practices and everything else, in one second it's all gone," Peebles told the Winston-Salem Journal. "I know I could be out there."

Hardly a day goes by that Peebles does not wonder what might have been. He was wooed by Nike to run track before he was drafted in the second round by Tampa Bay. He won a starting job in his third NFL season, and his stock was soaring in the prime of his career.

Although he feels lucky to have beaten the odds — doctors originally thought he would be paralyzed from the neck down — Peebles has trouble letting go of a dream that ended too soon.

"It's still not real," he said. "It won't hit me that I'm not playing again until I start watching it on TV."

Rivals fear McEnroe

Matches delayed by rain today at Wimbledon

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — John McEnroe considers himself an outsider for the Wimbledon title. His rivals say he can win it all.

McEnroe reached the quarterfinals Monday for the first time in three years, beating Russian qualifier Andrei Olhovskiy — the man who ended Jim Courier's Grand Slam quest — 7-5, 6-3, 7-6 (12-10).

It was McEnroe's second consecutive straight-set victory and proved that, despite his 33 years, he remains one of the best grass-court players in the world.

"When the guy's playing well he's capable of anything," Andre Agassi said. "When he's playing his game, nobody does it better ... I wouldn't be surprised to see him win the tournament."

After more than a week of dry weather, rain hit Wimbledon for the first time today, delaying the start of play in the women's quarterfinals. Forecasters said the rain could last until mid-afternoon.

McEnroe was the only unseeded player to make the men's quarters, the first time seven seeds have reached the final eight since 1988.

The other quarterfinalists are No. 2 Stefan Edberg, No. 3 Michael Stich, No. 5 Pete Sampras, No. 8 Goran Ivanisevic, No. 9 Guy Forget and No. 12 Agassi.

The eighth spot was to be decided Tuesday with the completion of the match between No. 4 Boris Becker and No. 14 Wayne Ferreira. The match was suspended by darkness Monday night at two sets apiece.

Ferreira won the first set 6-3 and Becker won the next two 6-3, 6-4. Ferreira won the fourth set 8-6 in a tiebreaker after saving a match point with a service winner at 5-6.

The women's quarterfinals were set for Tuesday: Monica Seles vs. Nathalie Tauziat, Gabriela Sabatini vs. Jennifer Capriati, Martina Navratilova vs. Katerina Maleeva and Steffi Graf vs. Natalia Zvereva.

McEnroe downplayed his chances as a legitimate title contender but said he still has a shot.

"I'm the lowest on the list (of the quarterfinalists)," he said. "(But) the fact I'm still in ... if a couple of guys go down, anything can happen."

McEnroe said he's playing better than in 1989, when he lost to Stefan Edberg in the Wimbledon semifinals. He also feels he's in a better position than when he reached the semis at the Australian Open earlier this year.

"I think it's a great run," McEnroe said. "I feel like I'll have a lot better chances. I'll be a lot more prepared this time."

He said he's been playing well all year but hasn't put together a string of big victories in the same tournament.

Ex-New Yorkers propell Kansas City past Yankees

By The Associated Press

Even when Gregg Jefferies, Kevin McReynolds and Keith Miller played in New York for the Mets, they got booed.

So when they came back to town Monday night for the first time since being traded to Kansas City, they really expected to hear it from the fans.

Jefferies, McReynolds and Miller got their share of Bronx cheers before the game, and the boos became even louder when the trio went a combined 7 for 14 while leading the Royals past the Yankees 7-3.

"They were on me from the first inning to the ninth inning. Some of them were good lines, too," Jefferies said.

McReynolds went 2 for 4 with a pair of RBI singles. Miller went 3 for 5 and scored three times and Jefferies was 2 for 5 with a run-scoring single.

The three players were sent to Kansas City last December for Bret Saberhagen and Bill Pecota in the biggest deal of the winter meetings. The ex-Mets all got off to slow starts for the Royals, but so far that's still been better than what the Mets got, with Saberhagen expected to miss two months with an inflamed right index finger and Pecota batting .224.

In other games, Oakland stopped Seattle 5-4 in 11 innings, Minnesota beat California 5-1, Toronto topped Texas 11-4, Detroit defeated Boston 8-3, Chicago beat Cleveland 9-6 and Milwaukee defeated Baltimore 5-3.

Hearing jeers was nothing new for McReynolds, a country boy for Arkansas who never felt comfortable in the country's biggest city. He was frequently criticized by Mets fans who believed he was too nonchalant.

"I kind of over the years playing in New York, tended to shut that out. You're sort of deaf to it," McReynolds said.

The crowd at Yankee Stadium heckled the trio, but most of the ribbing was good-natured.

"It brings back a lot of memories. It was fun," Miller said. "It wasn't like coming back to Shea Stadium and playing your former team. There wasn't as much pressure as there would have been there."

Miller led off the game with a single and scored on Wally Joyner's one-out double. McReynolds singled home another run, George Brett doubled and Mike Macfarlane hit a two-run double for a 4-0 lead.

Miller singled and scored on McReynolds' single in the fifth. Miller doubled in the ninth and scored on Jefferies' single.

"They got an awful lot of press coming into this series," Royals manager Hal McRae said. "I'm sure they wanted to do well coming into New York."

Brett later got the 2,900th hit of his 20-year career. Mark Davis (1-2), Rusty Meacham and Jeff Montgomery, who earned his 19th save, combined on a five-hitter. Jeff Johnson (2-3) was the loser.

Athletics 5, Mariners 4
Dennis Eckersley broke Tom Henke's major league record by converting his 26th straight save chance of the season, and Oakland stopped its seven-game losing streak at the Kingdome.

Tino Martinez went 5 for 6 for the Mariners, including an RBI single off Eckersley in the 11th. Eckersley improved to 26 for 26 this year, surpassing the mark Henke set in 1991, and extended his own major league record to 30 consecutive saves over two seasons.

Terry Steinbach hit a solo home run in the sixth inning that gave the Athletics a 3-3 tie, and delivered an RBI single in the 11th off Mike Schooler (0-5). Willie Wilson singled home another run as Oakland ended its three-game losing streak. Vince Horsman (2-0) was the winner.

Twins 5, Angels 1
Kevin Tapani pitched a four-hitter, Greg Gagne hit a three-run homer and visiting Minnesota won its fourth straight game. The Twins won for the 11th time in 13 games and stayed tied with Oakland for first place in the AL West.

Tapani (8-5), who shut out California with a two-hitter five days earlier, again beat Chuck Finley and the Angels. Finley (2-8) has won only one of his last 12 starts.

Gagne's fifth home run of the season came in the fifth inning and broke a 1-all tie. Gagne homered for the second straight day.

White Sox 9, Indians 6
Robin Ventura got four hits and drove in two runs as Chicago won for the eighth time in nine games. The host Indians have lost seven of nine.

Ventura had homered in his previous three games. George Bell drove in two runs for the White Sox, giving him 14 RBIs in seven games.

Toronto's Manuel Lee leaps over Texas Ranger Juan Gonzalez while turning a double play Monday in Toronto.

Jack McDowell (11-3) tied for the most victories in the AL despite giving up home runs to Paul Sorrento, Carlos Baerga and Jim Thome. Bobby Thigpen pitched the ninth for his 18th save.

although Cleveland's defense did not help, making three errors that led to five unearned runs in the second inning.

Tigers 8, Red Sox 3
Travis Fryman hit two home runs and Detroit won at Fenway Park.

Scott Scudder (5-7) took the loss,

Los Angeles refuses to quit, outlasts San Diego in 11 innings

By The Associated Press

Batting last seems to solve a lot of problems for the Los Angeles Dodgers. Maybe that's why they're 4-1 so far on a 22-game homestand following a 1-10 road trip.

"We're not going to give up," Mike Sharperson said Monday night after the last-place Dodgers beat the San Diego Padres 6-5 in 11 innings.

Sharperson sure followed that motto. He tied the game in the 10th inning with a sacrifice fly and won it in the 11th with a two-out, bases-loaded single.

"We're going to keep battling 'til the last out," he said. "And no matter who we're playing, if we're down a couple of runs, the guys feel that we can come back two or three times."

San Diego had taken a 3-2 lead in the 10th on an error by first baseman

Philadelphia's John Kruk (29) tags Montreal's Moises Alou during the fourth inning Monday in Philadelphia.

Eric Karros at first, but Los Angeles tied the score in the bottom half on Sharperson's sacrifice fly off Randy Myers, who hasn't had a save since May 29.

Jerald Clark hit a run-scoring single for Scooter Tucker, then lined a shot to right-center field to clear the bases, Dibble's third blown save in 14 chances.

Al Osuna (4-3) pitched one inning for the victory and Doug Jones got three outs for his 17th save.

Cardinals 3, Pirates 1
Bob Tewksbury (9-2) scattered seven hits and lowered his National League-leading ERA to 1.94.

St. Louis has won four of five to even its record at 37-37 and close within 4 1/2 games of the first-place Pirates, who have lost four of five.

Astros 4, Red Sox 3
Pinch-hitter Benny Distefano's bases-loaded triple in the eighth inning rallied Houston, which stopped the Reds' winning streak at five.

Ken Caminiti led off the eighth with a single off Greg Swindell at the Astrodome. Rob Dibble (0-3) walked Jeff Bagwell and, two outs later, Luis Gonzalez was intentionally walked, loading the bases. Distefano, hitting for Scooter Tucker, then lined a shot to right-center field to clear the bases, Dibble's third blown save in 14 chances.

Al Osuna (4-3) pitched one inning for the victory and Doug Jones got three outs for his 17th save.

Cardinals 3, Pirates 1
Bob Tewksbury (9-2) scattered seven hits and lowered his National League-leading ERA to 1.94.

St. Louis has won four of five to even its record at 37-37 and close within 4 1/2 games of the first-place Pirates, who have lost four of five.

Cubs 5, Mets 2
Gerald Perry and Craig Wilson hit consecutive RBI doubles in the fourth off rookie Victor Cole (0-1) to give the Cardinals the lead at Busch Stadium.

Rey Sanchez's two-run double keyed a three-run fifth as the Cubs beat Dwight Gooden (5-7), who had won 12 straight from Chicago since Aug. 9, 1987.

Pampa Track Club qualifies 22 athletes for state meet

Pampa Track Club is sending several of its members to the TAC Junior Olympics State Championships after impressive performances last weekend in a regional qualifiers meet at Stanton.

"We qualified 22 kids for state," said Pampa coach Chris Hansen. "The kids did fantastic. It was real hot and if the heat hadn't zapped their strength, their times would have been a lot faster in the finals."

The top two finishers in each event qualified for the state championships, beginning July 11 in Houston.

Hansen said there were an estimated 600 athletes entered in the Stanton meet, which was one of four regional sites across the state.

"Realistically, I thought we might get two or three kids qualified," he said. I just didn't have any idea we'd do that good. I just can't say enough good things about these kids."

Hansen said Pampa's youth division, which consists of athletes born in 1978-79, is particularly strong.

"Tim Fields and Devin Lemons beat everybody by at least a foot or more in the triple jump and long jump. Lillie Ramirez really looked good," Hansen said.

The Pampa Club has planned a car wash, starting at 10 a.m. Friday in the Wal-Mart parking lot, to help raise funds for the Houston trip.

"It's a four-day meet and we'll have to spend at least three days in Houston, so we're looking to raise some money," added Hansen.

The top two qualifiers in each event at the state meet advance to the National Junior Olympics in California later this summer.

Court inquiry of Erdmann commences in Lubbock

By CHIP BROWN
Associated Press Writer

LUBBOCK (AP) — Clouded with heated objections, a court of inquiry into the work of indicted Lubbock pathologist Ralph Erdmann commenced Monday, providing details of a massive investigation into the doctor's career.

Prosecutor pro-tem Tommy Turner called two witnesses to testify at the hearing, which is expected to examine probable cause of criminal wrongdoing by Erdmann.

Erdmann, who has been accused by authorities of losing body parts and performing tailor-made autopsies for prosecutors, was indicted by a Hockley County grand jury in February for falsifying an autopsy.

He has performed hundreds of autopsies for 41 West Texas counties over the past nine years.

Erdmann did not attend the hearing. Repeated telephone calls by The Associated Press to his Lubbock residence Monday afternoon went unanswered.

The inquiry is allowed in district court under an obscure Texas criminal statute, and attorneys as well as District Judge John R. McFall seemed unsure at times Monday about the court's jurisdiction.

The doctor's attorney, Travis Shelton, a former Lubbock County district attorney, objected repeatedly to testimony of the witnesses called by Turner.

Darrell Dewey, a private investigator, and Lubbock police detective Doug Davenport, gave revealing testimony about possible wrongdoing by Erdmann.

When Davenport testified Lubbock police were looking into 107 cases connected to Erdmann, including 42 involving discrepancies between Erdmann's autopsies and reports by funeral home directors, Shelton exploded.

"I object," Shelton roared. "There is nothing being presented today that cannot be investigated by a grand jury. There is not one safeguard that has been put into place to protect this individual's rights. It's a mockery of our justice system."

When Shelton added that he didn't "know what we are doing here," McFall responded:

"We are here because nothing was being done by anybody all throughout the law. I had to get somebody to do something about it, and I did it."

Shelton then immediately made a motion for McFall to recuse himself from the case.

"If that's your position, then you ought to be out here trying the case," Shelton told McFall.

McFall retorted: "You are entitled to your opinion, and your motion is overruled. You may sit down."

McFall then ordered a 10-minute recess for tempers to cool.

Davenport said police have found 29 autopsies by Erdmann in which the doctor claimed to have opened the skull to examine the nervous system, but funeral home directors reported otherwise.

Davenport said the investigation into the 107 cases has evolved from police inquiries, concerned family members of those autopsied and from other authorities.

"At some point we had to break things off. We had as many cases to investigate without being overloaded at this time," said Davenport, who is leading the Lubbock police investigation of Erdmann.

Throughout the day, Shelton objected to the hearing more than 50 times, waving his arms and raising his voice. At the outset, McFall acknowledged very little case law is available on previous inquiries by the court, but he overruled Shelton's motions to dissolve the hearing.

Dewey, a former investigator with the Potter County district attorney's office, testified Monday that Erdmann's career is filled with inconsistencies.

Dewey said Erdmann told him he lost a blood sample in the capital murder case of Amarillo resident Johnny Garrett, who was executed earlier this year for murdering and raping a nun in 1981.

Dewey said investigators were trying to match Garrett's blood sample with a sample of semen taken from the victim's body.

"I would say that test was very essential to the case," Dewey said.

Erdmann also changed his cause of death ruling in the Garrett case.

"Erdmann initially said a cord was used to strangle the nun," Dewey said. "He later said it was a manual strangulation."

Dewey said Erdmann's ruling may have been influenced by a controversial confession by Garrett to police, which alleged the defendant used his hands to kill the nun.

Dewey said the doctor often changed his autopsy findings to agree with authorities.

"On more than one occasion I heard Dr. Erdmann say, 'What do you need to prove?'" Dewey said.

Turner, an assistant Lubbock County district attorney during the mid-1970s who now practices civil law, said the first round of hearings should include testimony by 10 witnesses and will probably last one week.

After the hearings and investigation are complete, McFall can file a complaint with the Lubbock County grand jury detailing any evidence of criminal wrongdoing, Turner said.

"Erdmann's rights are being protected," Turner said of the hearing. "It may even be a benefit to the doctor. He is getting advance notice of what's being investigated when he may not have known otherwise."

Erdmann has come under fire since his indictment but has maintained he never intentionally did anything wrong. The doctor resigned his $140,000 a year position as Lubbock County's pathologist in March, citing overwork.

Since his indictment colleagues and police have accused Erdmann of everything from sloppiness to performing tailor-made autopsies for prosecutors.

California quakes restrict water

YUCCA VALLEY, Calif. (AP) — For thousands in the desert, the destruction caused by the earthquakes and the lingering fear of aftershocks would be easier to take if something drinkable would just pour out of their faucets.

Some 27,000 people had contaminated water or no water at all, and repairs could take up to a week, officials said. Hundreds lined up Monday in 90-degree temperatures to fill plastic jugs from public taps and tank trucks.

"I keep asking myself, what would a Bedouin do in a situation like this?" building supply salesman Joe Selva said as he filled five-gallon jugs. "I'm eating sandwiches, salads — stuff you can cook really easy and not use a lot of water."

Water systems were further damaged Monday by four sharp aftershocks measuring between 4.9 and 5.4 on the Richter scale.

The tremors caused a 96-foot-long brick facing to crash down from a one-story building that housed three business. No one was hurt.

About three dozen people sought treatment for mostly minor injuries Monday at Hi-Desert Hospital, said spokeswoman Theresa Graham. Three people also sought hospital care for aftershock-related injuries in Palm Springs.

Sunday's magnitude-7.4 and 6.5 quakes damaged 4,631 homes and 164 businesses and destroyed 20 homes and 10 businesses, said the San Bernardino County Office of Public Safety. Damage was put at more than $37 million.

A boy was killed and more than 350 people were injured. Roads and bridges in San Bernardino and Los Angeles counties sustained $500,000 damage, the state Transportation Department said.

In Landers, about 10 miles north of Yucca Valley, the first quake ruptured the town's 500,000-gallon water tank as well as water lines. The water district said it will be a week before service is restored to the 1,500 customers.

It may take several days to complete repairs in the Hi-Desert Water District, serving 4,000 homes in Yucca Valley. "The situation today is a lot worse than we thought it was," said Roger Duran, president of the water district.

Many people converged on damaged stores for bottled water. Red Cross volunteers delivered water and food to the sick.

At Apache Mobile Home Park in Yucca Valley, many residents sat outside on lawn chairs as repair crews and safety officials looked over the damage. Most of the park's 130 homes were knocked off their foundations.

"My daughter wants us to come down to Riverside with her," said Ardieth Severe. "We can't leave. This is all we've got."

State officials and business leaders said they expect the quakes to further tarnish Southern California's image.

"The greater fear is that this will hurt the tourist season," said Rolfe Arnheim, executive vice president of the Chamber of Commerce in Palm Springs. "The riots were bad, the recession was worse, and this will scare off the rest of them."

Sunday's 7.4 quake, centered six miles north of Yucca Valley, was California's strongest quake in 40 years. The second quake, magnitude 6.5, was six miles southeast of Big Bear Lake, about 20 miles west of the first jolt.
