Audit uncovers problems in Gray County dealings

By BETH MILLER
Senior Staff Writer

An independent auditor found during the 1990 and 1991 audit of Gray County that bidding requirements were not followed by the county and that numerous problems exist in the Tax Assessor-Collector's Office.

The audit and management letter of Brown & Grantham, P.C., also noted a problem with control of funds in the sheriff's office drug forfeiture and seizure account and pointed out the duties, under state law, of the county auditor.

Tom Grantham with Brown & Grantham, P.C., said during the presentation of the management letter of the two-year audit, that the remodeling project at the Gray County Annex exceeded the amounts authorized to be expended without using the bidding process. The project cost the county more than $40,000.

Counties must request bids on purchases and services costing $10,000 or more, with the exception of some professional fees and other certain exemptions.

"That's just a reminder. That's one of the things you're supposed to look at is getting bids," Grantham told the Commissioners Court.

"There appears to be an absence of appropriate review and approval of transactions, accounting entries, or systems output with regard to the budgeting process," the management letter states under the heading "general."

Grantham said problem areas are mentioned in the management letter because that is the appropriate place, but that there are many offices in which things were being done correctly.

"We found lots and lots of things that are being done correctly and the right way," he said.

Under a section titled "Tax Assessor/Collector's Office" in the management letter, it is noted that there was a falsification of a receipt and theft of money in the office.

Tax Assessor-Collector Margie Gray said the theft occurred in November 1991 and involved a $625 transaction. Gray said the employee replaced the money and voluntarily resigned.

Grantham said several accounts in the office were in the position to have overdrafts because reconciliations were not being timely performed.

"It has been an accepted practice to use white out or to use correction fluid on receipts. Any receipts with an error should be voided and a new receipt issued," the management letter states.

Gray said, "That will never happen again," of using liquid paper on receipts.

"There is evidence that employees and management may lack the qualifications and training to fulfill their assigned functions," the management letter states. "Employees have been accepting tips from customers. Checks are placed in the drawer without the payor portion being completed. Personal checks are cashed by employees, other than in the presence of another employee."

Grantham said regarding the tips that he believed them to be "nominal" and "somewhat infrequent," but that regardless, the employees are "as much public officials as the elected officeholder."

Gray said, "We have one car dealer in town that occasional gives one of the deputies a dollar. I imagine that I could count it on my fingers how many times that happened ... but that won't happen again."

The letter also noted that receipts were not being initiated by the employee receiving the funds and notations were not made of whether funds were check or cash. Individual employees were handling cash and also having access to the computer records, according to the letter.

County agrees to settlement in lawsuit against Sheriff Free

By BETH MILLER
Senior Staff Writer

A settlement proposed in a lawsuit filed against Gray County Sheriff Jim Free was unanimously approved during a Wednesday meeting of the Gray County Commissioners Court.

The Commissioners Court voted to approve the estimated $12,000 settlement following a 45-minute executive session with Pampa attorney Rick Harris, who represents the county in the lawsuit.

The money to pay the settlement and at least $2,200 in attorneys fees to Harris will come out of county coffers, although County Judge Carl Kennedy said some of the money could be reimbursed to the county through the public officials' liability insurance policy.

"As far as we know, our net costs will be the deductible ($7,500) unless the insurance company disallows any other part of the claim," Kennedy said.

Jarmila Inc., whose shareholders are Jimmy and Sandra Schuneman, filed the lawsuit against Free and the sheriff's surety, Western Surety Co., in September 1991 alleging the sheriff had returned seized property without proper authority.

According to the lawsuit, Jarmila had leased some property to David Caldwell Jr., individually and doing business as Global Steel Inc. On Sept. 19, 1989, Jarmila sued Caldwell to recover money that was due in rent, ad valorem taxes, costs of weed control and oil or items.

Along with that lawsuit, the corporation filed a landlord's application and affidavit for distress warrant. An order was issued by former Justice of the Peace Wayne Roberts directing for the issuance of the distress warrant and authorizing the sheriff to seize $9,432.08 worth of Caldwell's property.

The lawsuit states the sheriff was instructed to "keep it safely in your possession unless it is replevied according to law, or subject to the further orders of the court having jurisdiction."

Caldwell's property was seized and held until about Oct. 3, 1989, when the sheriff released the property to Caldwell in violation of the court's order, according to the lawsuit.

In July 1990, Jarmila Inc. obtained a judgment in 223rd District Court against Caldwell and Global Steel Inc. for $15,355.69, including $2,500 in attorneys fees. The lawsuit alleges that because the sheriff released all of Caldwell's property to him, there was no property remaining to help satisfy the judgment.

In September 1991, the sheriff told The Pampa News that a former chief deputy had seized some property on an execution and had turned it loose after an attorney had called and requested the release of the property. The sheriff said he was never notified of the happening.

"The sheriff of Gray County and/or his deputies acting in his behalf refused or neglected to retain the property of Caldwell seized to satisfy the directions and instructions contained in the distress warrant," the lawsuit states.

The new Gray County Jail and Sheriff's Office dedication has been set for July 18 by Gray County Commissioners Court.

"I would urge the Court to go ahead and set a date. I think we've reached the point we're down to a fine line," County Judge Carl Kennedy said during a Wednesday meeting of the Commissioners Court.

While some work still remains to be completed on the $3 million facility, Kennedy said it is possible that work will be concluded and the Texas Commission on Jail Standards will com-

District attorney wants opinion from state on secretary's salary

By BETH MILLER
Senior Staff Writer

District Attorney John Mann said Wednesday he is seeking opinions from the Attorney General's Office and the state auditor regarding payment of a secretary in his office.

The secretary, Janice Drinnon, is not putting in a 40-hour week because she is attending court reporting school in Amarillo, but is being paid the full salary - $1,426.34 a month - allotted to that position, Mann said.

Mann said the situation was in place when he took office earlier this year after being appointed to fill a vacancy by Gov. Ann Richards. He said he saw no need to change much in the district attorney's office since a November election will determine who will be the next district attorney.

In October 1991, former District Attorney Harold Comer told The Pampa News that he had another part-time secretary that he was paying out of his own pocket to assist with district attorney's secretarial work.

At that time, Comer said, "The county is not out anything for a full-time secretary's work. They're getting a full day's work out of both secretaries."

Comer said Drinnon is a highly-qualified secretary and said she can do more working half a day than many secretaries can do in a full day.

Mann said the topic was brought to his attention last week when he received a call from the Tom Grantham, who conducted the county's independent audit for 1990-91.

Commissioners extend jail dedication invites

By BETH MILLER
Senior Staff Writer

The new Gray County Jail and Sheriff's Office dedication has been set for July 18 by Gray County Commissioners Court.

"I would urge the Court to go ahead and set a date. I think we've reached the point we're down to a fine line," County Judge Carl Kennedy said during a Wednesday meeting of the Commissioners Court.

While some work still remains to be completed on the $3 million facility, Kennedy said it is possible that work will be concluded and the Texas Commission on Jail Standards will complete its inspection prior to the dedication.

However, the county judge pointed out that should the jail inspection not be complete, it would still be OK to have the dedication.

The dedication was set by commissioners for 9:30 a.m. Refreshments are scheduled to be served and tours will also be given that day. Also, an open house and tours are set for July 19, although specific times have not been announced for that day.

Letters of invitation to other Panhandle counties, sheriff's offices and officials will be sent, as well as to members of the Texas Commission on Jail Standards, and other state officials.

Also city officials in McLean, Lefors and Pampa will be invited along with the public.

The facility was originally targeted for completion in January, but various delays caused the opening date to be set for March. Since that time, the architectural firm Maxey & Associates of Austin filed for bankruptcy, creating other delays.

In related action during Wednesday's meeting, the Commissioners Court officially signed the contract with architect Larry Janousek to complete work on the jail and sheriff's office. Janousek and the county had verbally agreed on the work.

The Commissioners Court also approved three change orders regarding work on the jail:

- addition of a smoke exhaust fan and detection system, at a cost of $8,097.17.

- addition of several exit signs, addition of a light fixture to the emergency circuit at booking, addition of smoke detectors, addition of explosion venting in the laundry room, addition of smoke exhaust fan and a smoke supply fan and replacement of motors and drives, at a cost of $26,406.93.

- removal of 28 grooming shelves from above lavatories at single cells and repaint to match the existing wall color, at a cost of $3,696.

Not single, but double mugging set for rodeo

Sports Writer

Double mugging returns to this year's Top O' Texas Rodeo set for July 9-11 in Pampa.

The event hasn't been part of the rodeo agenda for several years.

Michael Craig, a rodeo director who is in charge of special events at this year's rodeo, is looking for more entries in double mugging, which will be held only on opening night.

"Double mugging has been pretty popular, but it's been four or five years since it's been part of the rodeo. There's several reasons why we quit having it," Craig said. "I've had quite a few people come up and want to know why, but we just wanted to try some different things."

Craig said six teams have already signed up for the event and slack is scheduled for Saturday afternoon (July 11) if there are more entries.

"We're going to pay at least three places if we have enough teams. We'll have some payback money Thursday night (July 9)," he said.

Craig said double mugging is much like a roping event, except there are three people involved, one on horseback and two on foot. The three contestants make up a team, he added.

When the steer is released from the starting gate, that's when the fun begins.

"What you've got is a roper who tries to rope a 2,400 or 2,500-pound steer. When the mugger gets ahold of the steer, the roper lets go, and the mugger and the tier try to get him down as fast as they can," Craig said.

Many times, however, the steer comes out the winner when the contestants fail to ground the animal before the two-minute time limit.

"They're all going against the clock," Craig said. "The team with the fastest time wins."

Other special events scheduled during the rodeo include team branding and a businessmen's cow milking.

All of the events will be held at the rodeo arena, located in Recreation Park east of the city.

'Horseshoe' hunt intensifies

Clue No. 4 in the treasure hunt for the "Golden Horseshoe" can be found Friday at Caprock Apartments, 1601 W. Somerville.

Clue No. 3 can be found today at La Fiesta Restaurant, 2014 N. Hobart.

Clue No. 2 is: "Not in the ground - but in the dark."

Clue No. 1 is: "Welcome to the hunt! It's the same - but different."

The lucky person who finds the horseshoe will receive a box seat - valued at $144 - to all three Top O' Texas Rodeo performances July 9-11. Clues are placed daily in selected Pampa stores.

Former Pampan dies in wreck

Former Pampa resident Steve Edward Clark, 37, died Tuesday following a vehicle accident north of Lubbock, according to the Texas Department of Public Safety. The accident occurred about 4:45 p.m. on Interstate 27 as Clark, of Plainview, was traveling in a Geo Prizm and collided with the back of a well-drilling truck stopped on the east shoulder.

Rescue personnel used the Jaws of Life to free Clark from his vehicle. He died Tuesday evening at University Medical Center. The truck, owned by Fugro &

McClelland, was traveling with a derrick truck to a job near Plainview when the collision occurred. The two trucks had pulled off the highway to check a problem with one of the trucks, company officials said. Services for Clark have been set for 10 a.m. Saturday in Plainview.

National TV focuses on McLean Friday

The town of McLean is scheduled to be part of a segment focusing on Old Route 66 during Ted Koppel's "Nightline" set to air at 11 p.m. Friday on Channel 7.

The town of McLean was the setting for about three hours of taping on June 23, according to Charlie Marie Shurley, president of the Texas Route 66 Association.

A reporter, two cameramen and ABC producer Bryan Myers visited McLean after leaving Clinton, Okla. Following the McLean stop, they were bound for Amarillo.

While in McLean, the crew focused on the murals created by Leland Myers and the restored Phillips 66 station. Shurley said that she and Delbert Trew were interviewed for the segment.

"I think McLean residents will be very pleased with whatever (publicity) we get," Shurley said.

A good national response to the revival of Old Route 66 has been beneficial to the small towns which dot its path, said Shurley.

Police department establishes new liaison

Tom Kernen, police department civilian investigator, was recently assigned as the liaison between the Pampa Police Department, the district attorney's office and the Tralee Crisis Center.

In September 1991, domestic violence legislation was enacted by the State Legislature and was signed by Gov. Ann Richards. This act enhanced the laws that protect all parties involved in domestic disputes.

State law and police department policies and procedures were developed from this legislation to give guidance to officers responding to domestic calls.

The focus of the Pampa Police Department's involvement is to protect and inform victims and witnesses of their rights and to provide information on crime victims compensation that is accessible to them.

The Pampa Police Department monitors the number of reports being filed by individual victims in order to assist them with charges filed. The new law requires that after the first and subsequent convictions occur, the penalties are increased.

Through the liaison relationship with Tralee Crisis Center, the police department can seek temporary shelter for assault victims.

Customs agents seize abortion pill

By PAT MILTON
 Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - A pregnant American woman returned from England on Wednesday with a French abortion pill to challenge the United States' ban of the pill as an invasion of her right to privacy.

Customs officials at Kennedy International Airport confiscated the woman's dozen RU-486 pills.

The woman then held an emotional news conference to criticize the Food and Drug Administration's ban on RU-486.

"I feel very strongly that all women have the right to follow their own medical advice," said the woman, who identified herself as Leona.

"This denies my rights. ... It denies me the right to control my own body."

RU-486 has been used legally by 100,000 women in Britain, France and China.

Lawrence Lader of Abortion Rights Mobilization said his group would file suit on behalf of Leona in U.S. District Court. He and others at the airport blasted the Bush administration for the pill's ban.

"It's very clear under the Bush administration that when women's health needs clash with their right-to-life ideology, women's rights loses," said Patricia Ireland, president of the National Organization for Women.

Leona, 29, was selected by Lader's group to travel to England and obtain the pill with a prescription written by Dr. Louise Tyrer, who recently retired as medical director for Planned Parenthood.

They notified U.S. officials when and where Leona would return with the drug in order to challenge the FDA ban.

The abortion pill was developed by the French pharmaceutical company Roussel Uclaf. RU-486 can only be used in the first 42 days of a pregnancy. It causes a fertilized egg to be expelled before it can be implanted on the wall of the uterus.

U.S. policy blocks federal support for research that might make the pill available. Additionally, Roussel-Uclaf has chosen not to promote such research in the United States.

Leona, who is about six weeks pregnant, expressed anxiety about what she would do now after her pregnancy.

"I am very angry. I am very stressed out. I've got to now figure how I'm going to deal with an abortion without taking the pill," she said.

Jail

The Commissioners Court also noted that the removal of the shelves is a cost that should be borne by the defunct Maxey & Associates.

The shelves are low and there is a risk that prisoners would bump their heads on the shelves, according to an inspector with the Jail Standards. Precinct 2 Commissioner Jim Greene pointed out that Jim Sartain with A&S Steel Buildings, the general contractor, pointed out the low shelves to the architect prior to installing them, but was instructed to install them as

Shamrock victim's parents, convicted murderer square off in courtroom

By CHIP BROWN
Associated Press Writer

WHEELER (AP) — A man convicted of murdering his wife met the victim's parents today in court 16 years after the woman's death.

District Judge Grainger McIlhany began hearing a motion to dismiss a $225,000 lawsuit Bobby Templin filed against Norbert and Jaye Nell Schlegel of Shamrock.

Templin was convicted of electrocuting the Schlegels' daughter, Rhonda, in her bathtub in 1976. His lawsuit claims the couple invaded his privacy in their attempts to block his parole from a 99-year sentence.

Templin entered the court wearing blue jailhouse coveralls and immediately greeted Schlegel, his former father-in-law.

"Hello, Norbert," Templin said. Mrs. Schlegel whispered to relatives, "I never wanted to see Bobby again." The couple had pursued evidence against their son-in-law until his indictment in 1981.

In a letter from Templin to McIlhany urging dismissal of his lawsuit, the convicted murderer said he was withdrawing the suit in the best interest of the taxpayers and the court.

When asked in court if it was also in the best interests of the Schlegels, Templin responded: "I didn't include them in the letter but I thought about their expenses."

The suit claims the Schlegels invaded Templin's privacy by urging the State Board of Pardons and Paroles not to be swayed by his "Ted Bundy like charm" in a March 1989 letter to keep him behind bars.

The Schlegels are suspicious because only four months ago Templin used the lawsuit to go into detail about how the comparison to the notorious mass murderer of women caused him "shame, embarrassment, fear, wounded pride, humiliation and mental anguish."

Templin's sister, Claudia Raymond of Dallas, told The Associated Press her brother is simply dropping the case to find a lawyer who might better represent him against the Schlegels.

In Templin's lawsuit, which was filed at the taxpayers' expense, the convicted murderer is serving as his own lawyer.

"We are looking at a whole other situation of lawsuits," Mrs. Raymond said. "Norbert Schlegel lied. He said anything to get my brother put in jail, and he is still doing it. We are not afraid to confront him on this."

Digging up most of the evidence themselves, the Schlegels were instrumental in building a case against Templin, who married Rhonda in 1973.

Three years later, he murdered the 20-year-old blonde by dangling a bare-wire extension cord between her right arm and breast as she lay in the bathtub.

Initially, authorities considered the death an accident, but the Schlegels thought otherwise.

The Shamrock couple filed a wrongful death lawsuit to keep the case alive and five years after their daughter's death, persuaded a grand jury to indict Templin for murder.

Two juries ultimately convicted Templin, the latter sentencing him to 99 years in prison.

Templin, who insists he is innocent, was denied parole recently and will not be eligible again for two more years.

New campaign aims to boost Americans' consumption of fruits and vegetables

By DIANE DUSTON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government and the food industry are collaborating on a $33 million message to Americans — eat more fruits and vegetables to cut your risk of contracting cancer.

And while you're at it, says a consumer group, try to get the producers of television's Saturday morning cartoon shows to substitute commercials for healthy fare for some of the ads touting sugar-coated, high-fat junk food ads.

The National Cancer Institute on Wednesday announced a five-year, $33 million program Wednesday to get Americans to eat at least five servings of fruits and vegetables every day.

At the same time, a consumer group released its latest survey of Saturday morning children's TV programming showing that ads for sugar-coated cereals, candy, fast food, high-sugar beverages, cookies and chips dominate the commercials during that time slot.

Of 263 food ads on the Washington, D.C. affiliates for ABC, CBS, NBC, Fox and Nickelodeon during a Saturday morning in February, there was only one public service announcement on healthy eating and a handful of spots for healthy food products, said the private Center for Science in the Public Interest.

"It's pitiful that only one out of 263 messages on children's TV was designed to get that important message out," said Michael Jacobson, executive director of the center, which lobbies the government and industry on food and health policy.

A survey by the cancer institute found that people who ate lots of fruits and vegetables as children continue to consume the most as adults. And most Americans consume 3 1/2 servings daily, it found.

A glass of orange juice in the morning, a lettuce and tomato salad at noon, apple or carrots for a snack and broccoli or another vegetable at dinner would put a person over the five-serving quota, said Health and Human Services Secretary Louis Sullivan.

"Let me stress, five-a-day is a minimum," he said. "If you can eat up to nine servings a day, all the better."

The government will provide $18 million in grants to local and state organizations with projects to promote the message, Sullivan said.

The Produce for Better Health Foundation, a food industry group, will spend $15 million more in advertising and store promotions, said foundation President Bruce Obbink.

It is the largest-ever government and food industry nutrition program. Many studies show that nutrients in fruits and vegetables protect against cell damage that leads to cancer, said Dr. Peter Greenwald, director of cancer prevention at the National Cancer Institute.

According to institute's survey of 2,837 selected Americans over age 18:

— Hispanics eat fewer fruits and vegetables — an average of three servings daily — than do blacks and whites, with an average of 3 1/2.

— Only 23 percent of all adults eat five or more servings a day.

— People with less than a high school education eat about half a serving less per day than those with more education.

— Adults age 18 to 34 eat about three servings of fruits and vegetables a day, while those 65 and older consume four on average.

— Although men consume more food than do women, men eat fewer servings of fruits and vegetables — three a day, compared with four for women.

— In general, about one-quarter of Americans usually eat vegetables cooked in fat and about one-fifth usually add fat, such as butter, cream or cheese sauce, when a vegetable is served.

— Generally, Americans consume more vegetables than fruits, but they seem to like fruit better.

Audit

"There are circumstances when cash is being left unattended on desks. Daily receipt totals are not reconciled to deposit journals or to the computer runs," the letter states.

Deposit slips improperly filled out were discovered that did not establish any kind of audit trail.

"There is no reliable reconciliation of the Certified Tax Roll and collection with delinquent tax roll due to the incomplete documentation of additions and deletions to the tax rolls or daily receipts to deposit slips and computer runs."

Under the "general" section of the management letter, Grantham said Texas law requires that counties not spend money except in strict compliance with the adopted budget and that funds be spent only for items included in the adopted budget.

Grantham told the Commissioners Court under that the budget can be amended for "county purposes," but that it must be amended before the budgeted amount is exceeded, not after.

The management letter noted an expenditure for an automobile, purchased with funds from the sheriff's office budget for the Precinct 2 constant without appropriate budget amendments being made in either office's budget.

Grantham said he included a paragraph regarding policies for establishing pay rates after the audit discovered a secretary in the District Attorney's office was not putting down 40 hours a week on her time card, but was receiving the full salary. He said employees are covered under the retirement plan if they work 1,500 hours a year.

"When comparing the offices of various officials it appears that on occasion, discrepancies in the application of the policies have occurred within the system," the letter states.

As noted in a prior audit, Grantham pointed out that there is no accurate listing of county-owned fixed assets, there is no accurate listing of debt owed by the county and that purchase of fixed assets should be budgeted and accounted for as capital expenditures instead of included with repairs and other maintenance.

Under the heading "Sheriff's Office," the auditors noted that the overall internal control structure is inadequate. "There does not appear to be any system or procedures that were maintained or applied with any consistency for the control of the office's drug funds," the management letter states.

County officials and Sheriff Jim Free said a checking account is in the process of being set up, rather than leaving the estimated $2,300 in cash in the sheriff's office.

Grantham said that figure is larger than would be expected to be kept in a petty cash fund.

"I didn't have any feeling there was any impropriety, except adequate records were not maintained," Grantham said. "Just as an accountant, I couldn't hit the bull's eye."

Precinct 4 Commissioner Ted Simmons said, "That seems like a pretty poor business to me."

Under the heading "County Auditor," the management letter states that the county auditor may prescribe collection, disbursing, and other accounting procedures for all the offices that handle county money or other county property.

"The county fixed assets should be physically observed and counted at least once a year," the management letter states. "The performance of these responsibilities should strengthen the internal controls of the offices and reduce the number of problems that exist."

Grantham said he mentioned the auditor for two reasons, "One is I'd like to see the county auditor's office do more than it's currently doing in regard to audit procedures. Secondly, I felt it would be an advantage of all of the offices and all of the officials if it were said out loud and in writing by an independent source exactly what the county auditor's responsibility and authority is."

The Commissioners Court is scheduled to consider accepting the audit during the next meeting on July 15.

Secretary

"We've got a situation, that I have taken over, wherein this person is an extremely qualified paralegal," Mann said. "There has been some question raised by the county auditor and one member of the treasurer's office, if not two, whether or not it is appropriate for this lady to draw a full-time salary when she is not, according to her time sheet, putting in a full 40-hour week."

The district attorney said that in his 15-years of private law practice he has learned what a paralegal can do, and said he can assure the Commissioners Court that Drinnon is fully capable of doing the work, regardless of whether she has to work nights or weekends.

"She's very knowledgeable and very experienced. The other side of the coin is it's an awkward situation with her not actually signing a time sheet showing she's actually working 40 hours a week," he said.

Mann said he is considering creating another position in the district attorney's office which he believes would alleviate any problems.

"I think we're going to find out that money budgeted for a particular office is to be used and spent by the head of that office in a manner that the head of that office deems proper, so long as the work for which that money budgeted is performed," Mann said.

The district attorney, in other discussion, said he had already submitted his budget proposal for 1993, which is $2,000 less than this year's district attorney's office budget.

He also told the Commissioners

Court that he plans to try more jury trials until he gets some verdicts in to get a "barometer" of how he plea bargains cases in the future.

In other business, the Commissioners Court:

- unanimously approved the payment of $125,284.56 in salaries and $66,289.06 in bills.

- unanimously approved the following transfers: $65,358 from the general fund to the salary fund; $1,290 from Performance Reward Program to the district adult probation; $825 from FM&LR to Precinct 1 R&B; and $6,198 from FM&LR to Precinct 3 R&B.

- unanimously voted against providing a requested $1,000 for assistance to Parkland Memorial Hospital in Dallas to help with a poison control center. Commissioners noted a toll-free 800 number is available for questions relating to poison, as well as the local hospital and doctors.

- unanimously approved the payment of $300 to Panhandle Community Services for the continuing administration of Energy Nutrition-Temporary Emergency Relief Program (ENTERP) funds.

- recognized County Auditor A.C. Malone for the completion of 20 hours of continuing education.

- unanimously approved changes in the contract with Sun West Services regarding meals in the new jail. The changes clearly define what a meal service period consists of and point out that any sheriff's office employees who want meals from the jail have to pay their own meal costs of $1.50 a meal.

- unanimously approved a request to install a leach line within five feet of a county road easement.

Crowe: U.S. warship shot down airliner while in Iran's waters

WASHINGTON (AP) — The American warship USS Vincennes was in Iran's waters, not international territory, when it shot down an Iranian civilian airliner four years ago, killing 290 persons, the then-chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff says.

Adm. William Crowe's statement in an interview on an ABC News "Nightline" investigative report Wednesday night contradicts what he and other officials, including President Reagan, said at the time of the shootdown.

Former Secretary of Defense Frank Carlucci and Capt. Will Rogers, the commander of the Vincennes, both said on the same program that they still believe the vessel was in international waters.

Appearing today on CBS' "This Morning," Rogers said he was "absolutely sure" his ship was not in Iranian waters at the moment the missile was launched but acknowledged that it was "probably accurate" that he had moved across the line during an ongoing fight with Iranian gunboats.

"I don't think I was particularly conscious of a line in the water," said Rogers. As to Crowe's statements, Rogers said: "I've lived with this for four years and I think I am accurate here. I think Admiral Crowe's memory may be faulty in this regard."

Appearing at about the same time on NBC's "Today," Adm. Frank B. Kelso II, the current chief of naval operations, said the Vincennes could have "maneuvered (briefly into Iranian waters) as a result of self-defense as it was under attack and came right back out."

Crowe said in an interview with The Washington Post that the ship's presence in Iranian waters was "sort of irrelevant" since it had encountered hostile Iranian gunboats in international waters and pursued them across the line.

The airliner was shot down July 3, 1988. Officials said the captain fired at the plane in the mistaken belief it was an Iranian fighter about to attack his ship, while the Vincennes was defending neutral ships from the Iranian gunboats.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Opinion

Americans owed the opportunity

The U.S. Supreme Court, whose sessions always include the invocation, "God Save this Honorable Court," declared recently that official prayer is to be forbidden at public high-school graduation ceremonies. Invocations and benedictions at school ceremonies violate a constitutional barrier between government and religion, the court decided, in a 5-4 ruling.

The closeness of the vote - strong "conservative" members of the court were to be found on both sides - is an indication that the issue isn't as black and white as some analysts on both sides might suggest.

Did the people who wrote the Constitution want to bar religion from public life? It's not at all clear they did. The Congress that passed the First Amendment employed an official chaplain; it also re-enacted the Northwest Ordinance, which set aside tracts of land for church buildings and included among its express aims the nurturing of "religion, morality, and knowledge" as "necessary for good government and the happiness of mankind."

If prayers at graduations are forbidden, what about the Pledge of Allegiance, with its reference to God? Can U.S. coinage - proclaiming "In God We Trust" - still be used at school lunch counters?

There's another side to the equation, however. Our society has become more pluralistic in recent decades, by necessity making government's relationship to the churches more problematic. Any prayer at a graduation ceremony almost inevitably could be interpreted as endorsement of some particular religious perspective - even of the most vague and undefined variety. Yet the Constitution clearly mandates that government must be neutral among various churches, something that is more difficult to accomplish in a prayer as the variety of religious persuasion in America has multiplied.

The way out of the dilemma could lie with a school system that reflects the pluralism and complexity of larger society. In other words, we have here another argument for freedom of choice in schooling, for a voucher system, perhaps - such as the Choice in Education initiative that appears to have fallen short of enough signatures to get on the November ballot (a lawsuit over the issue could ensue).

Whether it's through that initiative or another, Americans deserve more opportunity to form and choose schools that reflect their own outlooks, and, if they like, pray in thanksgiving for America's freedoms to the One who is their ultimate Author.

Let freedom ring - unless offensive

Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr. once wrote that the constitutional guarantee of freedom of speech has to include "freedom for the thought we hate." Some conservatives and liberals, however, think it merely means freedom for the thought they like.

Three years ago, the Supreme Court infuriated the right by striking down a law against burning the American flag. Now the court has provoked an uncannily similar outcry on the left by striking down a law against burning crosses. Both sides are humming Merle Haggard's old red-neck anthem, "The Fighting Side of Me," taking the view that the Constitution shouldn't prevent them from thrashing anyone who provokes them beyond endurance.

The latest case involved a "hate crimes" law in St. Paul, Minn., which banned any display, such as "a burning cross or Nazi swastika," which "arouses anger, alarm or resentment in others on the basis of race, color, creed, religion or gender." It was used to prosecute a teen-age boy who burned a cross in the yard of a black family.

Now, it isn't hard to find ways to punish juvenile delinquents for burning crosses in the yards of black families. We have laws against arson, trespass, criminal damage to property and so on. But St. Paul's ordinance would have applied if the wayward youth had burned a cross or exhibited a swastika on his own property. Why? Because either symbol might arouse anger or alarm on the basis of race or religion or something in someone who might see it.

If freedom of speech were limited to beliefs guaranteed not to produce anger or alarm in anyone, the First Amendment would be about as valuable as a Yugoslavian cease-fire. You don't need a constitutional provision to prevent the citizenry from pushing through laws banning speech they agree with.

Stephen Chapman

The purpose of the First Amendment is to protect speech that is detested by some people, even if they make up a large majority. St. Paul, however, like dozens of other cities and states, decided there were limits to what its people can bear.

The city's excuse was the same one used by the state of Texas in defending its law against flag desecration - that some forms of expression amount to "fighting words," which (like obscenity and libel) are outside the protection of the Constitution. If the government can ban fighting words addressed to matters of race, religion and sex.

But the exception only makes sense in face-to-face encounters where it is merely a brief prelude to violence. It can't be used to eliminate anything that might conceivably produce a violent reaction from someone. Otherwise, your free speech would end where my temper begins.

Even accepting, for the sake of argument, that displays like this should be classified as fighting words, Justice Antonin Scalia said, the law is still unconstitutional. Yes, the city may ban fighting words, but not just those fighting words which express unapproved opinions - as it may ban sound trucks, but not just those sound trucks whose message it dislikes.

The problem is the city's strange selectivity. If people want to burn an effigy of Hitler in the yard of a neo-Nazi in St. Paul, he's supposed to sit on his porch and enjoy the show. But if he wants to burn a cross in a black family's yard, the family is entitled to stop him. This is a silly distinction, unless you think the real danger is not the fire or the potential for violence, but the political opinion of the person with the match.

What the ordinance boils down to is that certain opinions may not be expressed by certain means. This is official discrimination against certain points of view, which is what the First Amendment is meant to prevent. But as the court said in the flag-burning case, "If there is a bedrock principle of the First Amendment, it is that the government may not prohibit the expression of an idea simply because society finds the idea itself offensive or disagreeable."

Some conservatives and liberals have difficulty accepting that principle. Justice William Rehnquist (who somehow voted with the majority in this case) dissented in the flag-burning verdict, arguing that "one of the high purposes of a democratic society is to legislate against conduct that is regarded as evil and profoundly offensive to the majority of people." After this decision, a Minnesota NAACP official expressed his pointed disagreement: "If a person burns a cross in my yard, I'm going to shoot them."

Someone said the first step toward civilization came when one caveman hurled an insult instead of a stone. Tolerating insults, particularly political ones, is a crucial virtue of free citizens - which a lot of Americans need to learn and which the Supreme Court's decision should help to cultivate.

How to spell anything

I, too, was shocked to learn that the vice president of the United States didn't know how to spell potato.

He was in front of a group of kids in a school and, mistakenly, advised a 12-year-old boy to put an 'e' at the end of potato.

I don't think that little slip-up will hurt the Quayle-Bush ticket (they've reversed it for now,) however, because the people who get most upset about misspelled words, besides teachers, are editors.

And most editors aren't Republicans, so that's that. But I happen to be one of the great spellers of all time, and if the vice president needs any help before holding a spelling bee with another group of kids, perhaps he might want to call me for advice.

Regardless of whether he calls me or not, on second thought, I'm going to try to tell Dan Quayle, and anybody else who can't spell, my secrets to Spelling Correctly:

SECRET #1: If you're not sure whether or not a word ends in "o" or "oe," it's best to go with just "o."

You don't spell stereo, cameo, gogo (as in the late dance), polio, portfolio, potato or tomato with an "e."

You don't spell buffalo with an "e" either. Off the top of my head one of the few words I can think of that end's in "oe" is canoe, and the "oe" is pronounced "oooo." So there.

Lewis Grizzard

SECRET #2: (Which rhymes with the end of canoe sounds like, in case you're still confused.) It's "i" before "e" following a "c." Like in receive. Or is the other way around?

SECRET #3: If you're not sure about a secret, just go past it as fast as you can and maybe nobody will notice.

SECRET #4: The way to remember how to spell Mississippi correctly is to memorize the following: "M-i-crooked-letter-crooked-letter-i-crooked-letter-crooked-letter-i-hump-back-hump-back-i."

SECRET #5: The way to remember how to spell Chicago is to memorize: "Chicken's in the car and the car won't go."

SECRET #6: My grandfather taught me secrets #4 and #5. Good spelling runs in the family.

SECRET #7: Never try to outspell anybody with a last name like Zyskowadawitz.

SECRET #8: If you're to spell the name of a city in China, but haven't got a clue, add a lot of "x's" and "ping's" in there. Even most editors don't know how to spell Xpingdingxing, where they make bicycle tire pumps.

SECRET #9: Ignore the British spelling of certain words. They might spell color as colour, for instance. Remember they also spell elevator as lift, too, and we might be doing the same thing if Paul Revere hadn't had a good horse. I mean, horse.

SECRET #10: The "g" in gnat is silent, but you have to put it there anyway. I don't know why exactly, but I also don't know why there's an "h" in rheumatism or why the "n" in Clemons stands for knowledge.

SECRET #11: If somebody asks you to spell a really long word like antidisestablishmentarianism, take your best shot, and if you miss it, like I probably did, ask them to spell a means of transportation that is spelled the same way backwards.

SECRET #12: Eskimos ride in them.

Warning about immigration is timely

Immigration policy, these days, is all but undiscussible. The only political bloc that has seemed concerned about it is the so-called "paleoconservatives," and when their spokesman Pat Buchanan raised the issue in his primary campaign against George Bush he was widely scolded as a racist for wondering whether a million Zulu immigrants to Virginia would adapt culturally as well as a million Englishmen.

The reason for the widespread indifference to the problem isn't hard to find. For one thing, Hispanic immigrants - by far the largest group in recent decades - were preceded here by earlier waves that acquired citizenship, entered our politics, and have worked hard to lower the remaining barriers against Hispanic immigration. The process is now self-replicating, and Hispanic voters constitute a bloc that no politician in many states dares to ignore.

Moreover, since Hispanics have thus far tended to vote Democratic, they have become one of that party's famous collection of "victimized" minorities, along with blacks, gays, American Indians and women, and a generous immigration policy has become a fixture in every Democratic national platform and a shibboleth in every liberal editorial office.

But Republicans and conservatives are far from innocent in this matter. Powerful economic interests have long opposed any serious attempt to block the illegal Hispanic immigrants who, for peanuts, do most of the stoop-labor on Southern and Western farmlands. And libertarian economists enthusiastically endorse, at least in theory, unfettered immigration across national borders as a necessary condition of global free trade.

So it is a matter of considerable importance that the June 22 issue of National Review, America's leading journal of conservative opinion, contains a powerful article by Peter Brimelow, a senior editor of Forbes, calling for a serious reconsideration of our current immigration policies.

Brimelow points out that American history records successive ebbs and flows in the immigration tide. We are currently in the midst of a huge inflow, triggered by the Immigration Act of 1965. Sen. Ted Kennedy pledged at the time that "our cities will not be flooded with a million immigrants annually. Under the proposed bill, the present level of immigration remains substantially the same....Secondly, the ethnic mix will not be upset....Contrary to the charges in some quarters, (the bill) will not inundate America with immigrants from any one country or area, or the most populated and deprived nations of Africa and Asia."

As Brimelow observes, "Every one of these assurances has proved false. Immigration levels did surge upward - they are now running at a million a year. Immigrants do come predominantly from one sort of area - 85 percent of the 1.8 million legal immigrants arriving in the United States between 1971 and 1990 were from the Third World, 44 percent from Latin America and the Caribbean, 36 percent from Asia....Above all, the American ethnic mix has been upset: In 1960 the U.S. population was 88.6 percent white; in 1990 it was only 75.6 percent white - a drop of 13 percentage points in 30 years."

Brimelow ranges authoritatively over the whole field, discussing just how "necessary" immigration is to the economy (Japan has done very nicely with almost none) and precisely how "beneficial" it is to American society (there are new "mafias" composed of Russian Jews, Hong Kong Chinese, Colombians and Iraqi Christian Chaldeans). Along the way he skewers such immigration enthusiasts as Julian Simon, Ben Wattenberg and Abe Rosenthal.

This is an emotional issue, and it is almost too late to act, thanks to the pressures of those already inside the gates. What's more, there must always (and rightly) be some immigration, and I myself would favor a continued warm welcome for immigrants from Asian countries where family values and the work ethic are strong.

But Peter Brimelow's warning is timely indeed.

Courtroom shooting suspect surrenders at TV station

By JAIME ARON
Associated Press Writer

FORT WORTH (AP) — A lawyer turned himself in at a TV station for shooting to death two attorneys in a courtroom, saying he had to do a "very horrible thing" to draw attention to the wrongs done him by the legal system.

George Lott, 45, said he was angry over his divorce case and a child-molesting charge brought against him by his ex-wife.

A prosecutor and an attorney were slain, and two judges and a prosecutor were wounded in the rampage Wednesday at the Tarrant County Courthouse.

"You have to do a very, very horrible thing to catch people's attention," Lott told WFAA in Dallas.

Police said Lott stood up in the spectators' section in an appellate courtroom and without a word opened fire, reloading once. He then fled, turning himself in several hours later, before police had named him as a suspect.

The suburban Arlington man was jailed on preliminary charges including murder and deadly assault on a court participant. The murder charges could bring the death penalty.

"This is a horrible thing I've done. I do expect and I do deserve to be killed for it," Lott said.

He told the TV station that he selected the courtroom where his own divorce case had been heard. But he did not know any of the victims, and the case being heard was unrelated to his divorce.

"Nobody has control over the judicial system. There are checks and balances for everybody but the judicial system. They check and balance themselves," he said. "That's great. However, it really doesn't do the job."

The deaths were the fourth and fifth fatal shootings at the courthouse since 1986. The courthouse has more than 30 metal detectors in storage but does not routinely use them, and some lawyers and judges questioned the need for them even after Wednesday's shooting.

"What're you going to do? You want to run and hide?" said Judge David Farris, who was on the bench when the gunman opened fire and escaped injury by diving beneath it. "We've got seven or eight doors to that one building. How are you going to block them off?"

Lott was registered as a lawyer in Texas in 1981 but became ineligible to practice in 1988, when he stopped paying state bar dues, said bar spokeswoman Marcy Goodfleisch. His current occupation was not immediately known.

Lott said he fired 17 shots, reloaded his 9mm pistol and "maybe went through three or four more after that."

Assistant Tarrant County District Attorney Chris Marshall, 41, and Dallas lawyer John Edwards, 33, were killed. Judges John Hill, 45, and Clyde Ashworth, 69, and assistant prosecutor Steve Conder, 27, were wounded.

Ashworth was listed in critical condition at Harris Methodist Hospital, Hill in good condition. Conder suffered a graze wound.

Lott complained about his divorce, which was presided over two years ago by Tarrant County Family Court Judge Maryellen Hicks.

He told WFAA he did the shooting because, "You can't come to people and say, 'Here's my evidence, here's the judge - Maryellen Hicks - fixed the case for her friend.'"

Ms. Hicks, who was given police

Dallas police arrest George Lott, right, a suspect in the mass shooting Wednesday.

Fire and emergency personnel remove one of the injured victims in Wednesday's multiple shootings at Fort Worth.

California IOUs: They're in the mail

States feel financial pinch

By JOHN HOWARD
Associated Press Writer

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — The IOUs are in the mail for thousands of Californians.

A legislative impasse left the recession-wracked state with no budget and no cash on the first day of the fiscal year, forcing California to pay its bills in IOUs instead of checks for the first time since the Depression.

If the budgetless state were a corporation, "the shareholders would throw out the board of directors and demand a change of management," said state Controller Gray Davis, who on Wednesday sent out the first batch of vouchers.

The Democrat-controlled Legislature and Republican Gov. Pete Wilson are at odds over how to deal with an immediate $6 billion shortage in his $56 billion spending plan.

If a budget is not signed, the nation's largest state eventually will have to cut services and close schools, libraries and parks.

"Today, the state of California is out of cash," Wilson said Wednesday. "California is facing the worst fiscal crisis since the Great Depression of the 1930s."

North Carolina, Illinois and Rhode Island also began the July-to-June fiscal year without budgets. Florida Gov. Lawton Chiles signed a $31.5 billion budget Wednesday, 17 1/2 hours into the new fiscal year; an executive order issued earlier kept state government running.

California, with 700,000 jobs lost since 1990 and an 8.7 percent unemployment rate, has about 1 million people out of work and the lowest growth in personal income since 1938.

About 13,000 IOUs were mailed Wednesday — including $4 million worth of personal income tax refunds. An additional 12,000 were to be mailed today and 24,000 on Friday. California last issued IOUs in 1936.

The "registered warrants" are numbered checks for state employees, vendors and others that can be cashed only with the permission of the state treasurer. The treasurer will periodically publish the numbers of the checks that can be redeemed as money flows into state coffers.

However, banks said they will honor the warrants as regular checks for at least 30 days.

"It's a little unnerving that they're going this long without a budget. It's their job to bring in a budget. If I don't do my job on time, my bosses are all over me," said Jeff Bishop, a worker in the controller's office.

Fellow employee Roger Fernstrom was not worried. "As long as banks accept the warrants," he said, "I don't see any problems."

The cash crisis also affects counties, said Karen Coker, spokeswoman for the counties' lobby in Sacramento.

County governments may use state IOUs to cover welfare checks on July 15 but may be forced to withhold public assistance benefits Aug. 1 because banks may not accept the IOUs then if there is still no budget.

Wilson wants to erase the deficit immediately with deep cuts, including $2.3 billion from education, but with no new taxes.

Democrats want to soften the cuts, particularly to schools, and raise new money. Their plan would require tax withholding from independent contractors and would make accounting changes in the state's Medi-Cal program.

The Democrats plan also would allow the state to retain billions of dollars in aid destined for local governments.

Elsewhere: — Illinois' proposed $28 billion budget was held up by a $700 million dispute over taxing hospitals and nursing homes.

— North Carolina enacted an emergency resolution that kept the state running while budget negotiations continued. Both legislative chambers have approved versions of an $8.2 billion budget, but talks deadlocked over a House proposal to give state workers a $600 raise this year.

— Passage of Rhode Island's proposed $1.5 billion budget was stalled in a dispute over garbage dumping fees and a proposed pipeline. However, Gov. Bruce G. Sundlun said the state had cash to operate 30 days without a budget.

— In Florida, the governor used line-item vetoes to strike $13.8 million in projects he said would benefit particular lawmakers' districts only.

— The Massachusetts Legislature approved a one-week budget so the state could keep running while the House and Senate work out a regular spending plan.

Judge likely to take evidence against Erdmann to grand jury

By CHIP BROWN
Associated Press Writer

LUBBOCK (AP) — The picture of indicted Lubbock pathologist Ralph Erdmann has emerged as a doctor without any sense of order. Investigators testified the 65-year-old doctor lost a crucial blood sample in the capital murder case of a man already executed. Erdmann documented scars on bodies, brain abnormalities and even teeth that medical experts now say were never on the bodies he examined. And Lubbock police detective Randy McGuire testified Erdmann's work may have been influenced by money his wife received for organizing bone and tissue donations from bodies on which the pathologist performed autopsies.

Tommy Turner, who was appointed prosecutor pro-tem for a three-day court of inquiry into Erdmann's troubled career that ended Wednesday, says such information will be enough to put the doctor behind bars. Erdmann's attorney says his client's character was mercilessly and unjustifiably assassinated. And District Judge John R. McFall says he will likely let a Lubbock County grand jury decide. A Hockley County grand jury indicted Erdmann in February, accusing him of falsifying an autopsy. The doctor has since been accused by Odessa police of losing a murder victim's head and performing tailor-made autopsies for prosecutors. Erdmann did not attend any of the hearing this week, and repeated phone calls to his Lubbock residence by The Associated Press went unanswered Wednesday. For three days, McFall was provided a glimpse of Erdmann's work under an obscure Texas criminal statute that allows district courts to hear evidence into probable cause of wrongdoing. In such a setting, defense attorneys are not allowed to put on witnesses and are given little warning about the evidence being presented by the state. Erdmann's attorney, Travis Shelton, a former Lubbock County district attorney, called the proceeding "abhorrent." "There was never any presumption of innocence," he said. "There was no opportunity to defend yourself." McFall was expected today to announce the evidence gathered in his court will go to a grand jury. Perhaps the most vivid testimony in the hearing, came from Lubbock police detective Doug Davenport, who testified Erdmann stormed into his office and shoved a set of tissue samples on his desk after the doctor's autopsy of a 19-year-old suicide victim was questioned. Erdmann adamantly claimed the tissues belonged to Lubbock resident Trent Joseph Schilling, who killed himself in August 1991, Davenport said. Lubbock pathologist David Hoblit testified the tissue samples did not belong to Schilling, but were simply random pieces of kidney, heart, spleen and liver. Hoblit later testified no autopsy was ever performed on Schilling.

"There is no way I can read what is going on in the mind of Dr. Erdmann," said Davenport, who is leading the Lubbock police investigation of the doctor. "But it sure is strange to have him come into my office and defend his autopsy, and then learn the tissue samples didn't even belong to the victim." That incident alone should bring charges of fabricating physical evidence against Erdmann, Turner said. Lubbock police detectives testified they have delved into an investigation of more than 100 questionable Erdmann autopsies. Turner says there is enough evidence to charge the doctor with tampering with evidence, tampering with governmental records and misuse of official information several times over.

Attorney Shelton blamed the Texas Legislature for passing a law allowing such an inquiry. "Any kind of evidence is admissible — hearsay, third-hand, fourth-hand speculation and pure guesswork," Shelton said. "A person can be forever destroyed without the safeguards of justice in place." "If a challenge is made to the constitutionality of this statute today, it could not stand muster." McFall agreed in part with Shelton but said Erdmann's rights were protected. "The inquiry is unique in that almost anything is admissible and that bothers me," McFall said. "But the final say comes with the grand jury, and the person's rights will of course be in tact."

Clinton promises key Hispanic appointments at Texas stopover

By KELLEY SHANNON
Associated Press Writer

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Hispanic political leaders are praising Democratic presidential candidate Bill Clinton for getting them involved in his campaign early in the election season. And Clinton is promising to appoint Hispanics to key federal posts. Clinton met with Hispanic leaders from several states Wednesday after a speech to the League of United Latin American Citizens. "I think the Hispanic voters of America are going to have a lot of influence on this election not only because of their numbers, but they are concentrated largely in 10 states," Clinton said. "In this sort of race, I think their influence is going to be very considerable." Clinton met privately with Hispanic congressional members, state officials and others for about 90 minutes at a San Antonio hotel. "It began cordial. It ended enthusiastic," former San Antonio mayor Henry Cisneros said. "This kind of coordination normally comes very late in the campaign." The Hispanic officials, including U.S. Rep. Bill Richardson, D-N.M.; U.S. Rep. Esteban Torres, D-Calif., and most of the Hispanic Texas state legislators, said Hispanics will be involved at the top level of the Clinton campaign. "The purpose of the meeting was to mobilize national hispanic support," Richardson said. In his speech to about 500 LULAC members, Clinton emphasized education and family values and said he would consider Hispanics for cabinet positions, White House jobs and judgeships, including possibly the Supreme Court. "The old adage, 'Mi casa, su casa' will be true when my house is the White House," Clinton said. LULAC, a Hispanic rights organization, does not make political endorsements. About 90 percent of its members are Democrats and about 10 percent are Republicans, said national league president Jose Velez. "I come here to pledge to you an administration that looks like America, that feels like America, that understands the pain and promise of this country and will involve you and all Americans in the struggle to make it better," Clinton said. Clinton touted his proposal to provide college loans to anyone who pays them back after graduation with a portion of income or community service. Clinton criticized what he said was the Bush administration's poor record on family issues. "Where is the day care? Where are the pre-school programs?" Clinton said. And he scolded the Bush administration for "lecturing to the Hispanic community about family values." He said working Hispanic families' incomes have decreased by 9 percent during the Reagan and Bush administrations and that the number of working Hispanics living in poverty has increased from 11 percent to 22 percent. Clinton did not mention likely independent candidate Ross Perot by name, but alluded to him. Clinton joked that the title of his campaign memoirs will be "The Billionaire, The Millionaire and Me." Clinton said he supports a free trade agreement with Mexico but believes it should include environmental and labor improvements in Mexico and should accompany a manufacturing initiative aimed at keeping jobs in the United States. So far, Clinton is the only presidential candidate to speak to the LULAC convention. League officials said Bush declined an invitation and that Perot has not confirmed whether he will attend. Velez, the national LULAC president, earlier said he had not decided whom he would support for president. He said whoever it is must address Hispanic issues such as education, housing, labor and health care "not with rhetoric but with substance."

Texas Gov. Ann Richards introduced Clinton and told LULAC members "discrimination is alive and well" under the Bush administration. Richards later said she had spoken with Clinton about his possible vice presidential running mate, but she would not elaborate. Clinton discussed his search for a running mate with Rep. Lee Hamilton of Indiana on Wednesday but said he doesn't expect to move on his vice presidential pick this week.

Kenya's cheetahs survive despite their inbreeding

By J.E. STEVENS
National Geographic

MASAI MARA, Kenya — The mother cheetah, like most other animals in the Masai Mara national game reserve, is so accustomed to tourist vehicles that she ignores them, even when they drive up close to her and her three cubs.

Unlike their more aggressive relatives, the leopards and lions, "cheetahs are very timid animals," says David E. Wildt, a scientist who has studied them in the Masai Mara, a 600-square-mile triangle on the southwest Kenyan border with Tanzania. "And they will habituate very easily to humans."

This can create problems. The mother cheetah, named Astra by humans who know her, must protect her cubs from onlookers at the same time she hunts for the day's meal. She will have to do it on her own. Male cheetahs don't help raise their offspring.

Despite the aggravations created by some 250,000 camera-toting tourists each year, cheetahs, renowned as the fastest land animals on Earth, are now thriving in the Masai Mara.

"We have plenty of cheetahs here," says Richard E. Leakey, director of the Kenya Wildlife Service.

But that may not be true elsewhere. Cheetahs are listed as an endangered species in other parts of Africa and in Iran, where only a handful survive.

Loss of genetic diversity among cheetahs is of particular concern to many scientists who have studied them. But opinions are divided.

It isn't a clear problem, says Jim Else, deputy director of scientific services for the Kenya Wildlife Service.

"Maybe they never had any variability. There's still a lot of guesswork."

Stephen J. O'Brien, chief of the National Cancer Institute's Laboratory of Viral Carcinogenesis in Frederick, Md., has studied cheetah genetics.

"Loss of genetic diversity is never going to be good," he says. "I would certainly differ with people who are not concerned."

Cheetahs have lost 99 percent of their biological diversity through inbreeding, threatening both high mortality of cubs and susceptibility to diseases because of lowered immune defenses, says O'Brien.

These problems are known to occur in captivity, says Wildt, head of the reproductive physiology program for the National Zoo in Washington, D.C.

However, he says, "Whether this has had any impact on the wild population is questionable."

Tim Caro, a zoologist at the University of California at Davis, who has conducted cheetah studies of his own, says that the loss of biological diversity hasn't slowed the propagation of cheetahs in the wild.

"Somehow," he says, "this species has circumvented the theoretical issues. They're not suffering from diseases. They are basically producing offspring at a high rate in places where there aren't lions or hyenas," the cheetah's two greatest animal predators.

Even so, suggestions have been made to introduce a subspecies of cheetahs from South Africa into the Masai Mara for the purpose of strengthening biological diversity. No such plan has been approved by the Kenyan government.

"We're just not at that stage yet where we have to introduce cheetahs from elsewhere," says Leakey.

Caro dismisses the introduction suggestion as a "hare-brained idea." Cheetahs are declining in western and northern Africa because of habitat destruction, he says.

In southern Africa, he says, cheetahs are being shot as vermin by farmers protecting goats and sheep from attack. The ecosystem has been knocked out of kilter by hunters' killing of predatory lions.

"Neither of these issues has anything to do with genetics," says Caro.

In the Masai Mara, protection of cheetahs sometimes takes a personal turn. For example, Dave Drummond, 60, is a self-proclaimed protector of cheetahs who makes his living from a small tent-camping safari business.

Drummond boasts of habituating many cheetahs in the game reserve. This has earned him the criticism of scientists and wildlife managers who oppose any type of habituation of cheetahs to humans. Cheetahs habituated to Drummond, they say, might approach someone else who would shoot them out of fear.

Drummond has no official status. He carries a letter from Leakey that designates him as a volunteer who can warn people not to pester the animals. This he eagerly does, and even his detractors agree that he benefits the cheetahs by buffering them from tourists.

"He's one of the few people who's taken the time to stop harassment of the animals," says Steve Turner, another safari operator. "He's one person who's prepared to do something for nothing."

Affairs with married men are not about sex at all

DEAR ABBY: Don't ever stop printing letters about how destructive "affairs" are to marriage.

I'm another woman who became sexually attracted to a married man. I was 30, attractive, and had a handsome, intelligent husband who adored me. I'll admit, he wasn't the greatest lover in the world, but instead of addressing my needs to him, I looked elsewhere.

I met a man 20 years my senior, and the sparks flew! Before I knew it, we were intimate. It wasn't love-making—it was cheap, unsatisfying sex on the floor of his office! I couldn't believe I was capable of such degrading, slutish behavior. It happened several times, and each time I felt worse about myself, so I finally ended the affair.

Almost immediately, I became attracted to another man closer to my age (also married) and the same feelings started up again. Fortunately, nothing happened, but I came close. I was so confused by then, I was disappointed that nothing had happened.

Finally, with the help of God and a good therapist, I was able to end my self-destructive behavior.

Abby, thanks for telling your readers to get professional help before they become powerless over their own behavior. Affairs outside of marriage are not about sex—they are escapes from a multitude of problems to which there are constructive solutions. Keep telling people to get counseling, Abby. I saved my life.

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

DEAR J.E.V.: It sounds like a great idea, but after checking out the cost of such a "monitoring device," the idea of talking to someone who is out of hearing range may not seem so traumatic.

***
Most teen-agers do not know the facts about drugs, AIDS, and how to prevent unwanted pregnancy. It's all in Abby's updated, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send a business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

DEAR ABBY: I was recently divorced and have moved to another state from where my family and ex-husband live.

After I moved, I got an unlisted telephone number. I gave this number to my two sisters and our mother, and asked them not to give the number to anyone else.

So far, I've changed my number three times, only to have one of my sisters or my mother give it to my ex-husband, who then calls to harass me!

I have explained my reasons for paying extra for an unlisted telephone number, but my wishes were ignored. My mother and sisters have my work number in case of emergency. Abby, would I be justified in changing my number again, and not giving it to anyone in my family?
FRAZZLED IN FLORIDA

DEAR FLORIDA: Not only would you be justified, you would be very wise.

DEAR ABBY: Now that I am retired and home all day, my wife and I chat frequently. Our house has several rooms and, as we roam about, one of us may continue talking while the other has moved out of hearing range. When this happens, it creates hard feelings, and sometimes anger.

What is the solution? I have read about a beeping device that police attach to the ankles of prisoners to monitor their movements. Perhaps a pair of such devices could solve the problem of letting a spouse know when one has moved out of hearing range. It would certainly reduce domestic friction.

Southwest Outdoors

By Mel Phillips

Checklists are vital to professionals, too

OK-OK. So I didn't have time to look at my trip checklist. Not to worry, after all I am a professional outdoor writer and recently placed fourth (out of 225 anglers) at a major bass tournament.

Checklists are for the occasional outdoorsman, right? W-R-O-N-G!! At least according to JAY FRIEMEL of Canyon, who was kind enough to share several copies of his checklist with me. His list includes the following: water wagon, depthfinder, motor, gas can, seat, flippers, waders, tackle boxes, poles, net coolers, food, rain coat, sun glasses, sunscreen, sleeping bag and clothes.

Why would Jay choose to share his checklist with me? Perhaps because I forgot item number six on his list during a recent trip to Lake McKenzie. Using a pair of swim fins to control a waterwagon is easy. Using no fins is quite impossible. But by sharing Jay's flippers, we were each able to barely control the waterwagons. When the wind reached about 30 mph, we decided to call it quits.

The fishing had been great but a quick look at my foot revealed a huge blister on my big toe. Serves me right because I failed to review my checklists. They were posted in my tool room, in my clothes bag and on the inside of the garage door. But I was in a hurry.

Moral of this story: (1) Checklists like all good advice are worthless if ignored. (2) On any windy day, one flipper beats the heck out of none. (3) Jay is a nice guy.

In the Summer, big bass feed at night. On Sunday morning, July 12, starting at midnight and ending at 8:00 a.m., Lake Baylor will be the site of a MOONLIGHT MADNESS Big Bass Tournament. Entry is limited to the first 100 anglers. Early registration if postmarked by Monday, July 6, is $50. If space is available, entry fee at the lake will be $60. Based on a full field, the winner makes $2,000, while second biggest bass takes home $1,000. Call (806)353-3654 for details.

During July and August, fun tournaments are scheduled for LAKE MEREDITH on the first Thursday and at LAKE GREENBELT on the third Thursday. KIDS UNDER 17 FISH FREE if accompanied by an adult entry. Based on 100 entries, winner earns $700. All top ten finishers win money or prizes. Registration opens at 4:30 p.m. and fishing is from 6-9 p.m. Entry fee is only $20 and entry forms are available at Anchor Marine, Billy's Ramp, Parker Boats, Top-O-the-Line Marine and at participating Wal-Mart and K-Mart stores.

See you at the lake.

WIMBLEDON

Stefan Edberg stumbles while making a return during his loss to Goran Ivanisevic at Wimbledon Wednesday.

Seles maneuvers into finals

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Monica Seles overcame nine-time champion Martina Navratilova in three sets today to reach the Wimbledon final after John McEnroe and Andre Agassi swept into the semifinals.

Seles kept on course for her third Grand Slam title of the year by beating Navratilova 6-2, 6-7 (7-3), 6-4. She will face the winner of the other semifinal between Steffi Graf and Gabriela Sabatini. Wimbledon is the only Grand Slam title to elude Seles.

McEnroe and Agassi joined Pete Sampras in the semis, marking the first time in 10 years three Americans have made the final four. McEnroe saved six set points in the second-set tiebreaker and went on to complete a 6-2, 7-6 (11-9), 6-3 victory over Guy Forget to reach his first Wimbledon semifinal since 1989.

"It's been a big hump to get here," McEnroe said.

Agassi finished a 4-6, 6-2, 6-2, 4-6, 6-3 win over three-time champion Boris Becker to reach the Wimbledon semifinals for the first time.

"It's probably one of the greatest achievements of my career for sure," Agassi said.

It will be the first time since 1988 that Becker will not play in the final. Two other champions, Stefan Edberg and Michael Stich, were eliminated Wednesday.

Agassi will face McEnroe in Friday's semifinals, with Sampras playing Goran Ivanisevic of Croatia.

The last time three Americans reached the semifinals was in 1982, with McEnroe, Tim Mayotte and Jimmy Connors.

"I think it's wonderful," McEnroe said. "Everybody's been talking about some kind of problems the Americans have been having...I don't think the Americans have anything to worry about."

Every men's champion since McEnroe last won the tournament in 1984 has lost this year: Becker, Edberg, Stich and Pat Cash. McEnroe beat Cash in the second round.

McEnroe and Forget had been tied at 5-5 in the second set when play was halted Wednesday.

Both held serve to set up the tiebreaker. Forget moved out to a 6-3 lead, giving him three set points. But play was delayed for several minutes as McEnroe argued over Forget's serve on the ninth point being ruled an ace. "The ball was a foot long!" he shouted.

McEnroe was looking dispirited when he walked back to the baseline to serve. But he came to life after hitting a backhand volley that hit the top of the net and dribbled over to save the first set point.

Dream Team qualifies for Olympics

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — No development on the planet could be less of a surprise than this one: The Dream Team has qualified for the Olympic Games.

Even though they were without three players because of injury and were playing for the fourth time in as many days, the United States squad romped over Argentina 128-87 on Wednesday night.

"We were a little short-handed so we were concerned about the guard situation but as it turned out it was not a problem," coach Chuck Daly said.

No problem. That's been the story line for the United States thus far in the Tournament of the Americas. The Dream Team's average margin of victory has been 56 points.

Even though John Stockton was out with a fractured right leg, Clyde Drexler took the night off with a sore right knee and Larry Bird missed his third straight game with a bad back, this was no contest.

Michael Jordan saw to that. He managed one of those hanging, sweeping dunks that seems to start 2 feet above the basket. He had a couple of spin moves for incredible layups.

"I played with great happiness against the monsters. We dreamed of playing against them. This is obviously the highlight of our careers."

—Argentina forward Hernan Montenegro after a 128-87 loss to Team USA

"I had some lanes open for myself and I had the urge to take advantage of them, so I went ahead," Jordan said.

Then there was his pass off the backboard to Chicago teammate Scottie Pippen for a slam dunk.

"It comes from playing together," Jordan said. "I knew he was there. We've done it a couple of times in practice, but never in a game."

Jordan finished with 24 points, his highest total thus far in the Olympic qualifying competition. And all that after playing 36 holes of golf for the second day in a row.

Still, this was the worst the Americans have performed thus far and the 41-point victory was the closest an opponent has come to the Dream Team.

"We're definitely tired," Charles Barkley said. "I don't think I've ever played four games in a row. It's hard."

Especially with nine players, Magic Johnson said.

"We couldn't do that pressure, pressure, pressure that we've been doing," he said.

Even though they weren't at their best, the Americans again left their opponents awestruck.

"I played with great happiness against the monsters," said forward Hernan Montenegro, who played at LSU and was drafted by Philadelphia. "We dreamed of playing against them. This obviously is the highlight of our careers."

Barkley continued his prolific performance with a 23-point effort. He leads the U.S. team with 73 points in four games. He said he's never had a better time than in the weeks since his trade from Philadelphia to Phoenix.

"This has been a great month for me, getting traded and then getting to play with this basketball team," he said. "It's like a dream."

Daly continues to experiment with the potent components of his basketball machine. He started the second half with both of his centers, Patrick Ewing and David Robinson, in the lineup. The tactic wasn't all that effective as the United States boosted its lead by only nine points over a 10-minute span.

But Daly indicated he might use it again.

"It's a team we thought about, a pressure team, a shot-blocking team," he said.

The United States still has two more games to play. The Americans face the winner of Thursday night's Argentina-Puerto Rico game in the semifinals Friday night.

Unless a miracle of almost Biblical proportions occurs, they'll play for the tournament championship on Sunday, where their likely opponent is Brazil, which is 4-0 in the tournament.

Drexler said he'll be playing again on Friday. Bird, though, remains a question mark. He said he is considering returning to Boston for treatment of his chronically sore back.

USA guard Michael Jordan pulls up on a fast break with teammate Charles Barkley (14) trailing Wednesday.

Stanford professor argues for open NFL market at trial

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — The NFL might be more competitive if it abandoned its current system of restricting player movement and opened the market, Stanford University economics professor says.

Roger Noll, a plaintiff's expert witness in the NFL antitrust trial, testified Wednesday that the NFL's monopoly hurts the competitive balance in pro football.

"There are many alternatives less restrictive than Plan B that would have no effect on competitive balance and may help it," Noll told the jury.

The Plan B system, which began in February 1989, allows each team to retain limited rights to 37 of their 45 players each season. A protected player is unable to offer his services to other teams without giving his old team the first chance to sign him or forcing his new club to compensate his old club if he goes elsewhere.

The unprotected players become Plan B free agents for two months, between Feb. 1 and April 1, after which their playing rights revert back to their original team.

The plaintiffs argue that Plan B unfairly blocks them from negotiating with other teams.

Noll said football would be helped by free agent rules such as those in major league baseball, where a player can become a free agent after six years of service if his contract is expired.

"The nature of restrictions in the players' market impact on the NFL have no legitimate basis in competitive balance," Noll said.

Noll testified that the NFL's monopoly on pro football in the United States has brought higher broadcast rights fees, higher ticket prices, fewer teams, fewer games on television, fewer jobs for players and less money for the top players.

Noll said ticket prices would not go up because of free agency.

"You don't find any correlation between when the (ticket) prices go up and when the salaries go up," he said. Ticket prices always rise even if player salaries do not, he added.

Many of the financial figures in the lawsuit are being made public for the first time, although the NFL is disputing the numbers and challenging their release to the jury. Cross examination of Noll is expected to begin today.

Among the figures uncovered by Noll in his research is that the league's reported $1.3 billion in revenues for 1990 is understated because of the way the owners do their books, he said.

Noll said the teams record certain money as operating costs to make themselves look less profitable.

San Antonio, Portland, Milwaukee work 3-way deal

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — At last week's NBA draft, Tracy Murray donned a Portland Trail Blazers cap and jokingly pretended to be their first-round pick Dave Johnson.

He should have kept the cap.

A week later, Murray found himself headed for the Trail Blazers in a three-team deal that sent Dale Ellis to San Antonio and Alaa Abdalnaby to Milwaukee.

"I've been so confused the last week or so, but I'm learning about the business real quick," Murray said after the deal was announced Wednesday.

The 6-foot-7 sharpshooter from UCLA was picked by San Antonio as the No. 18 selection in this year's draft. He averaged 21.4 points and shot 54 percent last season as a junior.

"The desire to acquire an outside shooter is what prompted the move," said Bucky Buckwalter, the Blazers' vice president for basketball operations.

"Tracy is a terrific perimeter shooter with a very bright future in the NBA," Buckwalter said. "Most observers feel that Tracy would have been a lottery pick in next year's draft had he not come out early this year."

Murray shot 50 percent from 3-point range (78 for 156) and 80 percent from the free-throw line last season.

"The bottom line on Tracy is he's a world-class shooter," said Brad Greenberg, the Blazers' player personnel director. "We thought he was the best shooter in college basketball."

The Blazers have room for an outside shooter after Danny Ainge, their top reserve guard, announced that he will sign with Phoenix.

Milwaukee's management had been talking to San Antonio about the No. 18 pick and Ellis for some time. The Blazers had suggested to Milwaukee officials that they would be interested in Murray if he was chosen in that spot, Greenberg said.

The information was conveyed to the Spurs, who went along with Milwaukee's wish.

Murray said he knew from the start that San Antonio would trade him but didn't know if he would wind up in Milwaukee or somewhere else. He said he was ecstatic to be acquired by the Blazers.

"I heard about Portland two days ago. I thought it was a trade rumor until it happened today," he said. "I was very happy when I heard. I wanted to yell."

Buckwalter said he sees Murray playing mostly at small forward but he could see some action at big guard.

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Athletics sink Mariners, 3-1

By The Associated Press

The most curious race in the American League this season? That's easy — Mark McGwire vs. Dennis Eckersley.

The two Oakland stars again increased their major league-leading totals Wednesday, with McGwire hitting his 27th home run and Eckersley earning his 28th save in a 3-1 victory over Seattle.

All season long, McGwire and Eckersley have been on a parallel. No telling which one will wind up with the higher number, but they're both on pace to break career highs — 49 homers for McGwire in 1987, 48 saves for Eckersley in 1990.

In other games, Minnesota defeated California 2-1, Toronto topped Texas 3-2 in 10 innings, Baltimore beat Milwaukee 7-4, New York rallied past Kansas City 7-6, Boston beat Detroit 6-4 and Chicago downed Cleveland 8-5.

McGwire began the three-game series at the Kingdome with 26 homers and Eckersley started with 25 saves. McGwire's two-run homer broke an eighth-inning tie that gave the A's a sweep.

"It was a fastball," McGwire said. "In fact, it was the first fastball I got over the plate in the whole series. I was kind of surprised it went out. People think the ball carries well here. It doesn't. There's a lot of dead air here."

Eckersley moved ahead of McGwire's total with saves in all three games. He has converted 28 straight save chances this season and 32 in a row over two years, both major league records.

The A's remained tied with Minnesota for first place in the AL West, one of two good division races. Oakland will be tested to remain on top for the next two weeks after putting Dave Stewart on the disabled list Tuesday and adding Jose Canseco to the DL on Wednesday.

Oakland and Seattle were tied at 1-1 in the eighth when Harold Baines singled with one out. Lance Blankenship went in as a pinch runner, and McGwire hit a 427-foot shot to center field against Mark Grant (0-1).

"Maybe he was worried about Lance," McGwire said. "I know he wanted to keep him at first."

Detroit's Dan Gladden eludes the tag of Boston catcher Tony Pena in Boston Wednesday.

Mike Moore (8-7) pitched well after going 0-4 with an 8.06 ERA in his previous five starts. But with two outs in the seventh, Jay Buhner hit his 10th home run, tying it at 1.

The game was the first for the Mariners under new Japanese-led ownership. The $106 million sale by Jeff Smulyan to The Baseball Club of Seattle was completed late Tuesday night and some of the new Mariners owners watched the game from Smulyan's old owner's box. John Ellis, chief executive officer, and Chuck Armstrong, club president, were in the Kingdome for the game.

Twins 2, Angels 1

Minnesota won its sixth straight game, all on the road, behind Willie Banks and four relievers. The Twins have won 13 of 15 and are 6-0 against California this season.

Banks (3-1) allowed one run on three hits in five innings. Rick Aguilera pitched the ninth for his 23rd save.

Jim Abbott (4-10) lost despite lowering his ERA to 2.93. He gave up eight hits in his fifth complete game, only one of them a victory.

Blue Jays 3, Rangers 2

Greg Myers doubled home the winning run in the 10th inning at SkyDome as Toronto and Texas finally played a game dominated by pitching.

The Rangers and Blue Jays have met five times this season and combined for 77 runs. Toronto won 11-4 Monday and Texas won 16-13 Tuesday in the highest-scoring game in Rangers' history.

Derek Bell, who made a running catch on Rafael Palmeiro's liner to left-center with the bases loaded to end the top of the 10th, opened the bottom half with a single. Myers followed with a double off Jeff Russell (2-3).

Texas starter Todd Burns retired 17 straight batters and allowed three hits in 7 1-3 innings. Russell relieved and gave up Devon White's tying triple in the eighth.

Orioles 7, Brewers 4

Bill Ripken went 4 for 4 with a homer and drove in three runs as Baltimore won at home. Brady Anderson and Sam Horn also homered for the Orioles.

Ripken had a two-run single in the fourth, helping Baltimore take a 6-0 lead against Bill Wegman (7-6). Ripken is 9 for 11 lifetime against Wegman.

Ben McDonald (8-5), who had been 0-3 with a 6.75 ERA in his previous five starts, allowed four runs on eight hits in six-plus innings. He has given up 101 hits this season, including 52 for extra bases, and a major league-leading 20 home runs.

Yankees 7, Royals 6

Pinch-hitter Matt Nokes' two-run homer in the seventh inning completed New York's rally from an early 6-0 deficit at Yankee Stadium.

Nokes connected for the second straight day, and his 10th home run of the season came against Tom Gordon (1-8). Greg Cadaret (4-6) was the winner and John Habyan pitched two innings for his second save.

Wally Joyner hit a three-run homer in the second inning that put Kansas City ahead 6-0 and finished Tim Leary. It was the first time Leary had pitched since the AL cleared him of cheating allegations filed by the Orioles.

Red Sox 6, Tigers 4

Tom Brunansky's double capped a five-run seventh inning that lifted Boston over Detroit at Fenway Park.

The Red Sox trailed 4-1 before Scott Cooper's RBI single off Bill Gullickson (9-5) and Jody Reed's sacrifice fly made it a one-run game.

With the bases loaded, John Kiely, the fourth pitcher of the inning, came in to face Brunansky, but the move backfired as Brunansky smacked a three-run double off the left-center field wall.

John Dopson (5-3) got the win, allowing four runs, one earned, in seven innings. Jeff Reardon worked the ninth for his 16th save.

White Sox 8, Indians 5

Craig Grebeck went 5 for 5 with three doubles, two RBIs and two runs scored as the White Sox won for the ninth time in 11 games.

Grebeck is hitting .462 during the 11-game span. The five-hit game was the first time he had more than three hits in a contest.

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Philadelphia rookie loses 10th straight

By The Associated Press

Rookie Kyle Abbott is closing in on a Philadelphia Phillies record. Unfortunately, it's a record for futility.

The winless pitcher lost his 10th straight game Wednesday night when the Montreal Expos beat the Phillies 6-3.

If Abbott loses his next two decisions, he will equal Ken Reynolds' 1972 team record for most consecutive losses at the start of a season.

"I'm still trying to stay positive and not think about the record," Abbott said after Wednesday night's loss.

But it's getting harder and harder to do.

Abbott worked six-plus innings against the Expos, giving up seven hits and six runs. He said he made some bad pitches in the first inning when the Expos took a 2-0 lead on Larry Walker's two-run single.

Elsewhere in the National League, it was Pittsburgh 1, St. Louis 0; Houston 3, Cincinnati 2; San Francisco 2, Atlanta 1; New York 6, Chicago 4 in 12 innings; and San Diego 6, Los Angeles 2. Expos 6, Phillies 3

Pirates 1, Cardinals 0

At St. Louis, Zane Smith pitched a five-hitter for his first win since May 9.

Smith (6-7) struck out one and walked one in his third shutout and fourth complete game this season. He had been winless in his nine previous starts.

Padres 6, Dodgers 2

At Los Angeles, Craig Lefferts

became the NL's third 10-game winner by limiting the Dodgers to two runs over 6 1-3 innings.

Every San Diego starter had at least one hit off Orel Hershiser (6-6), who gave up four runs and 13 hits in seven innings, the most hits he has ever allowed in a game.

Giants 2, Braves 1

At San Francisco, Bud Black (5-2) held Atlanta to five hits in 7 1-3 innings and got a season-high five strikeouts.

Terry Pendleton hit his 13th homer with two outs in the eighth, and Rod Beck finished with one-hit relief for his fifth save.

Mets 6, Cubs 4

At Chicago, Howard Johnson hit a go-ahead RBI single in the 12th inning and Junior Noboa added a sacrifice fly as New York stopped a three-game losing streak.

Lee Guetterman (1-0) pitched 1 2-3 innings for his first NL victory and Anthony Young got three outs for his first major-league save.

Astros 3, Reds 2

At Houston, Eric Anthony hit a leadoff homer in the ninth inning off Scott Bankhead (8-2) to give the Astros a three-game sweep.

Cincinnati starter Tom Browning injured his left leg in a sixth-inning collision with catcher Scott Servais and had to be assisted off the field.

Doug Jones (5-5) pitched two hitless innings for the victory.

Vincent questions Yankee testimonies on Howe case

NEW YORK (AP) — One day after testifying in the Steve Howe case, New York Yankee manager Buck Showalter and general manager Gene Michael found themselves back in commissioner Fay Vincent's office.

This time, they were defending themselves and being threatened with suspensions by Vincent.

Showalter and Michael were called in by Vincent on Wednesday because of their testimony the previous day in Howe's grievance. Vincent's spokesman, Rich Levin, said the commissioner was concerned that Yankees officials gave testimony at odds with baseball's drug policy.

"They took a stance contrary to baseball policy," Levin said. "We are in the process of getting transcripts from the hearing. What you have to remember is that baseball's drug policy is the Yankees' drug policy. The commissioner is looking into what was said."

As for Showalter, Levin said: "He has not been suspended. Not at this time. The commissioner will make that decision on Monday."

Levin said Vincent would review the testimony and meet with Showalter and Michael again on Monday.

Showalter managed to get back to Yankee Stadium just before the game with the Kansas City Royals, which the Yankees won 7-6, but did not appear in uniform on the bench until the second inning.

"It's a private matter and that's all I have to say about it," Showalter said. "It's behind closed doors and it will stay that way."

He said he wasn't upset about being torn away from his team two hours before a game.

"If the commissioner feels it's that important, then it's important to me," Showalter said.

Showalter's lawyer, Dominic F. Amorosa, said Vincent attempted to get his client to change his testimony about baseball's drug regulations. Amorosa said Showalter testified that he believed the ban may have been too harsh.

Scientists explore ancient campsite in Central Texas

By DICK STANLEY
Austin American-Statesman

AUSTIN (AP) — For almost a year, state archeologists sifted the rocky soil of an ancient campsite destined to be crossed by a highway. Finally, in late 1982, about 12 feet below the surface, they found human finger bones.

They soon uncovered something extraordinary about 10 miles northwest of Austin. It was the complete skeleton of an Ice Age woman, the oldest female human ever found in Texas — buried with simple ceremony between 8,000 and 11,000 B.C.

This month, scientists from the University of Texas at Austin began digging a deep pit in part of the site on the west bank of Brushy Creek, beside what is now four-lane Ranch Road 1431 in Williamson County.

This week, protected from the curious by a chain-link fence and guards, they begin a three-month examination of 20 feet of soil layers stretching back thousands of years, using techniques unavailable in 1982.

They've come back because, after almost a decade of analyzing the remains of the woman — who may have lived as long ago as 8,000 years before the building of the Egyptian pyramids — and Stone Age tools found near her grave, scholars have concluded the site may be critical to understanding the earliest inhabitants of the Americas.

"There's virtually the whole archeological record of Texas here — close to 11,000 years of continual occupation, which is real unusual," said Britt Bousman, a researcher at UT-Austin's Texas Archeological Research Laboratory.

Analysis of the artifacts, said Michael Collins, another lab archeologist, indicates the woman's culture may have been more sophisticated than previously thought, requiring some overhauling of ancient history.

Bousman, Collins and about 25 students and archeologists will, among other things, take geology samples and examine remains of plants and grasses for climate records. Using a new technique to determine the magnetic polarity of rocks, for instance, they will learn whether layers of burned stones existed naturally or were moved there for use.

"These are huge (cooking) hearths," said Bousman, pointing to a dark layer of burned rocks and soil about 6 feet below the surface. "There may have been large communal cooking or incipient earth ovens. At certain times there were large groups that camped here. Bison bones we've found may represent a butchering site."

In 1982, some people nicknamed the woman Leann, because of her grave's proximity to the town of Leander. To scholars worldwide, the spot is known as the Wilson-Leonard Site, after the former landowners' names. Scholars snub the name Leann in favor of the Wilson-Leonard Female.

Last year, the family of Will Wilson Sr., a former Texas Supreme Court justice and attorney general, deeded some of the 2.5 acre tract to the Archeological Conservancy, a preservation group in Santa Fe, N.M.

Some scholars think the campsite may contain evidence of the first settlers of the Americas, who contemporary scientific opinion maintains arrived from Asia over an ancient land bridge across the Bering Strait about 12,000 B.C.

Among those awaiting the latest results is Gentry Steele, a professor of anthropology at Texas A&M University. Steele has spent several years examining the skeleton in his lab in College Station, as he has most ancient human remains found in Texas.

"There are very few paleo-Indian sites of that antiquity containing human remains," Steele said. "And most are represented by a fragment of a bone here or a bone there. She's one of the 10 or 15 best in completeness."

Last fall, he and Oklahoma sculptor Betty Pat Gatliff, a police forensic artist, collaborated in creating a clay model of the woman's face for the Texas Committee for the Humanities.

Based on her skull measurements and cast in bronze, the bust is now the first thing visitors see in the McDannald Hall of the American Indian at the Houston Museum of Natural Science.

"Putting a face on the old bones gives you a unique insight into early populations," said museum curator Alisa Phelps. "They're not very different from the way we are."

At 5 feet 4 inches, the Ice Age woman was relatively tall among her peers, Steele said, and had a thin, sloping face and projecting teeth. The teeth were in good shape when she died, with modest wear and few cavities, he said.

"That could mean she's relatively young," Steele said. "Or it could be that her diet was largely plants. All we can say for sure is that she was a young, adult female, older than 18 but younger than 40."

A diet mainly of plants, Collins said, would alter current conceptions of these early peoples. They are thought to have been nomadic hunters and gatherers who depended mainly on a diet of meat from large animals such as mastodons and bison.

She was, in any case, a Homo sapiens, or intelligent human, like us, said Frank Weir, director of archeology for the Texas Department of Transportation. He supervised her discovery in 1982.

Evolution is thought to have culminated in Homo sapiens about 1.8 million years ago.

Scientists say the young woman lived and died near the end of the last Ice Age, when great sheets of arctic ice extended far to the south, over what is now Canada and much of the United States. But not as far south as Texas.

"It would have been cold with the winds off the ice to the north," Weir said. "It definitely would have affected atmospheric conditions here."

The cause of her death is unknown. She apparently was buried where she died — a common practice, Steele said — in the campsite near the confluence of Brushy Creek and Spanish Oak Creek. Scholars speculate it was the reliable water that attracted people there so often.

Buried with her were a fossilized shark tooth, a common trinket then — from when Texas was covered by ocean 90 million years ago — that may have been part of a necklace, and a stone tool she may have used for grinding.

Weir said she was found in the fetal position, her knees drawn up to her chest and her hands folded beneath her head as if she had laid down for a short nap.

"Hands folded across the chest is more common among North American Indians," Steele said.

Recalled Weir: "The grave was just big enough to hold the body. The tools they had to dig with were sharpened sticks."

He said they apparently marked her grave with a limestone boulder.

Today the grave is covered by the eastbound lanes of Ranch Road 1431, and scientists don't expect to find more.

They do expect, within a few more years, to be able to combine previous analyses with the new measurements of the site's archeology, geology and climatology into a big picture "to gain an understanding of what was going on out there," Collins said.

Wind and waves hinder cleanup of chemicals from derailed tank car

SUPERIOR, Wis. (AP) — Wind and waves hindered efforts early today to prevent toxic chemicals from a derailed tank car from floating down a river into a Lake Superior harbor.

Cleanup crews placed nine floating booms across the Nemadji River to corral thousands of gallons of a benzene mixture that leaked Tuesday. The spill forced the evacuation of about 22,500 people in two states and killed uncounted fish.

In the darkness, officials were unsure whether the choppy water had allowed any of the chemicals to get past the booms into the lake.

"There is definitely an odor there," said Dave Zeug, a district warden with the Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources. "We have no absolute knowledge it is in the lake yet."

About 30,000 gallons of the benzene mixture leaked from the tank car after it fell 80 feet into the river's ravine Tuesday south of Superior. The last of the chemical was pumped from the car late Wednesday.

A small toxic cloud formed as the car was raised from the river, but it dissipated quickly in the wind.

The cars was among 14 of a 57-car Burlington Northern freight train that jumped the tracks.

Thousands were evacuated Tuesday for several hours from Superior and neighboring Duluth, Minn.

About 15 families remained out of their homes today because one of the cars contained liquid propane, which is explosive.

A cleanup contractor planned to work through the night removing the propane and emptying a third car that contained butadiene, a highly reactive substance obtained from petroleum and used to make synthetic rubbers. Those cars also fell into the ravine but did not leak.

The number of fish killed was unknown. But officials said they didn't think the chemicals posed a major long-term threat to the environment.

Susan Coughlin, acting chairman of the National Transportation Safety Board, said investigators were unsure what caused the derailment but studied soil beside a trestle where reinforcement pilings were required last year.

The train was traveling at the 35 mph speed limit, she said.
