Top O' Texas Rodeo ready to rock 'n' roll

By MARK SPENCER
Sports Editor

Months of steady preparation left organizers with little to do Wednesday, the eve of the first go-round at Pampa's 46th annual Top O' Texas Rodeo that begins at 8 tonight.

"We're in great shape," rodeo president Floyd Sackett said during a break in Wednesday night's action at the Kid Pony Show. "We've had no problems whatsoever."

Most of the stock for tonight, Friday and Saturday lined the holding pens outside the Recreation Park arena by 8 p.m. Wednesday. Sackett said contractor Beutler and Gaylord Rodeo Co. of Elk City, Okla., planned to have all the stock unloaded by dark.

North of the arena, the pits for tonight's barbecue, which is free to all Thursday ticket holders at 5:30 p.m., were dug and wood was ready to be placed in for an all-night burning.

No problems were reported at the concession stands or ticket booths, either.

"The committees have done all the work and done it very well," Sackett said. "I'm just sitting back and watching. They're making me look good."

The top-notch group of cowboys scheduled for this weekend's rodeo were expected to start filtering into Pampa today.

One of the main attractions, the Professional Rodeo Cowboy Association's three-time Clown of the Year Butch Lehmkuhler of North Platte, Neb., arrived Tuesday.

"With the quality of stock here, it should be a great rodeo," Lehmkuhler said. "I'm looking forward to it, and the fans should be, too."

Scheduled to compete in the Wrangler Bullfights, which pit bull-fighting clowns one-on-one against fierce Mexican bulls, are Mike Johnson of Poplar Bluff, Mo., Greg Rumohr of Cleburne, and Gary Jones of Pasadena.

The only uncertainty about the weekend appears to be the weather.

But rodeo directors are optimistic about that as well. The forecast calls for gusty winds with temperatures around 70 degrees by rodeo time each night.

Show finale fast and furious

Rodeo stars of the future from throughout the Panhandle took to the arena Wednesday night in the final performance of the Top O' Texas Kid Pony Show.

Winners came from as far away as Liberal, Kan., to capture honors and prize money in more than a dozen fiercely-competitive events.

"I did pretty good ... decent anyway," said Matt Reeves of Pampa after a victorious whirlwind tour over the cloverleaf pattern in the boys barrel race (Group V).

Reeves squeaked past the teeter-tottering first barrel and blazed through the course looking like a young version of Gabby Hayes with his hat brim pushed upward by whipping winds.

Riding his sister's (Michel Reeves, a Pampa High School Rodeo Club up-and-comer) 7-year-old palomino mare Goldie, he recorded an 18.760-second ride, good enough for the win.

"She take's them close," said Reeves of the mare's ability to run barrels. "(You) just don't pull on her head."

Reeves, of the Kid Pony Show, said, "This is my first time in two years. I always have fun."

Tri-State High School Rodeo is in the plans of the youngster who enters Pampa High School as a freshman in the fall. He considers calf roping his best event.

Wheeler's Summer Leffew, following in the footsteps of a family rich in rodeo tradition, captured top honors in the girls barrel race (Group VI) with a 19.565-second run around the cans.

Riding her barrel horse Max, Leffew said the secret to success is "a good clean run and don't hit any barrels."

Although the Leffew family is known for its outstanding bull riders, the freckle-speckled lass admitted to riding the ornery animals "once in a while, but not very often." She said she'll stick with barrels and poles.

Pampan Farah Oxley finished second in the race, stopping the timer at 20.175 seconds.

"I came out too wide at my first barrel," she explained.

In all-around boy competition, Stormy Nettles of Liberal, Kan., took honors in group V and Kip Clayton of Canyon captured the title in group VI.

Clayton also won boys group VI ribbon roping. Nettles also won group V boys pole bending.

Amy Miller of Miami was group VI all-around girl winner and Sequin Downey of Amarillo topped the competition in group V.

Miller also won group VI goat tying and Downey captured first place in group V girls pole bending.

Layne McCasland of Wheeler scored a 74-point ride to win bull riding group V and Carlos Gonzalez of Pampa netted 51 points to take first place in bulls in group VI.

Julie Richardson turned in a fine performance taking first place with a quick 8.69-second score in group V goat unloading.

Pampa's Jeremy Winkler grabbed group VI boys barrel racing honors with a 20.671.

Dawn Lohberger of Sweetwater, Okla., ran the cloverleaf in 19.105 seconds for a victory in group V girls barrel racing.

ChyAnna Graves of Hedley stopped the timer at 23.423 seconds to win group VI girls pole bending.

Pampa's Matt Rhine took home first place in group V boys break-away roping with a superb 5.63-second latch.

Clinton selects Gore as running mate

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) - Bill Clinton offered the Democratic vice presidential nomination to Sen. Albert Gore Jr. early today and the Tennessee senator accepted, his spokeswoman said. It provided the Democrats a moderate, all-Southern ticket for the three-way race this fall.

Gore was flying to Little Rock for a noon announcement.

Clinton's choice of the Tennessee senator gives the Democrats a youthful ticket in the race against President Bush and independent Ross Perot.

The decision ends a suspenseful weeks-long head hunt that put a bevy of the party's rising stars on Clinton's short list. Clinton settled on Gore as his running mate during a late night session with aides at the governor's mansion in Little Rock, said a source close to the process.

At his home in Carthage, Tenn., a smiling Gore went for an early morning jog. He laughed but wouldn't respond to reporters who asked if he was leaving for Little Rock. Later, spokeswoman Marla Romash confirmed that Gore had accepted Clinton's invitation.

"The call came in between 11 and midnight last night ... direct from Gov. Clinton," she said. "Yes, he told Gov. Clinton he would accept."

Gore, 44, is known in the Senate for his work on the environment and arms control. An unsuccessful candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1988, Gore opted against making another run this year. He said he wanted to spend more time with his family.

The selection of Gore raised some immediate concern at the liberal end of the party. Jesse Jackson went on television before the announcement and said the addition of Gore made a "fairly narrow ticket," and he questioned whether two Southern moderates could inspire labor support.

Jackson - who hasn't even endorsed Clinton yet, let alone Gore

- told Fox Morning News that he had "deep concerns."

"It takes two wings to fly and here you have two of the same wing," Jackson said.

Gore gives the ticket a generational appeal, senior advisers said, and should help in Southern and border states that traditionally are Republican strongholds but that they believe will be competitive because of the likely independent Perot candidacy.

Four years ago, when his name figured in speculation about a vice presidential nomination, Gore called the job a "political dead end."

Among those present was Warren Christopher, the head of Clinton's search committee, who met earlier Wednesday with Gore in Tennessee to make sure he would accept the offer, according to two sources familiar with the process who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Clinton then placed a phone call to Tennessee, and Gore accepted the vice presidential slot, said the senior Clinton source.

Besides Gore, Clinton's short list of potential vice presidential candidates had included Bob Kerrey of Nebraska, Bob Graham of Florida, Harris Wofford of Pennsylvania and Jay Rockefeller of West Virginia, as well as Indiana Rep. Lee Hamilton. One by one, the also-rans weighed in with their support for the Clinton-Gore ticket.

Gore was with his family in Carthage, Tenn., on Wednesday. He refused to talk to reporters about the search for a Democratic vice presidential candidate.

One senior Clinton aide said that the Arkansas governor was impressed - and a bit surprised - at the immediate rapport he felt with Gore during their first meeting, held weeks ago.

"I don't think he thought this one would feel right, but he kept going back to Gore, saying, 'He's so smart. I feel so comfortable talking to him,'" the aide said.

Richards calls Clinton-Gore a 'dynamic duo'

AUSTIN (AP) - Bill Clinton's choice of Tennessee Sen. Al Gore for his vice presidential running mate will offer voters a strong ticket, Gov. Ann Richards said today.

"It is a dynamic duo," said Richards, who will chair the Democratic National Convention opening Monday in New York.

Richards said she believes a Clinton-Gore ticket will play well not only in their native South, but nationwide. That's especially important for Democrats who bolted the party in recent presidential elections, she said.

"My feeling for a long time is that the so-called 'Reagan Democrats' have been looking hard for a place to go. They are not particularly happy with the possibility of an independent. They're not happy at all with George Bush ... Someone of Al Gore's reputation, stature and background is going to be very tempting for them," she said.

Gore "was my first choice," said state Land Commissioner Garry Mauro, who heads Clinton's campaign in Texas. "It bodes very well for winning this election nationally, and he'll be particularly helpful in Texas."

In his 1988 presidential bid, Gore enjoyed support from a number of Texas Democrats, including then-Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby. Mauro said that campaign, while ultimately unsuccessful, impressed many Texans.

"Al Gore has strong personal ties to the business and political communities from '88," he said.

Mauro said Gore's strong environmental position will be a major asset against President Bush and independent Ross Perot.

"Perot's and Bush's positions on the environment are terrible," Mauro said. "One of the major issues in this campaign is just what kind of public policy this country is going to have in terms of protecting the environment and creating jobs."

"Al Gore is the most prominent proponent for a well thought-out environmental policy in America.

He will make the environmental issue a key."

Mauro also said he liked the combination of youth and new ideas the selection of Gore, 44, brings to the now all-moderate, all-Southern ticket.

He shrugged off any suggestion that the Clinton-Gore combination wasn't broad enough.

"If Ross Perot has taught this country anything, it should be that traditional political wisdom isn't what Americans want. Americans are sick and tired of politicians telling us what they have always told us. They want new ideas and a fundamentally different way of approaching things," Mauro said.

Arson arrest made in fireworks blaze

By BETH MILLER
Senior Staff Writer

The manager of a fireworks stand was arrested this morning and charged with arson in connection with a fire that destroyed the stand on June 27, said Pampa Fire Marshal Tom Adams.

Adams said the blaze at the fireworks stand in the 2300 block of West Alcock was reported to the fire department at 11:33 p.m. on June 27.

Arrested today on a warrant charging arson was Phillip Lang, 48, 108 S. Sumner. Arson is a second-degree felony punishable by a maximum $10,000 fine and 20 years in prison.

"Investigation into the fire revealed the fire to be an intentional set fire," said Assistant Fire Marshal Gary R. Stevens.

Adams said of the investigation and arrest, "We talked to a lot of people and got some tips. Everything he (Lang) told us didn't jive."

Lang originally had more than $5,000 worth of fireworks on consignment from Mr. W. and Firework Co., owned by Wayne Wildman of Somerset. Wildman has several firework stands in Pampa.

"It pretty well gutted the stand. They'll have to rebuild," Adams said.

Adams said he could not comment on a possible motive in the case.

Nobody was hurt in the blaze, which was put out by Pampa Fire Department in about 10 minutes. Three units and six firefighters responded to the fire.

On Wednesday, Precinct 1 Justice of the Peace Bob Muns issued a warrant for Lang's arrest. He was apprehended today at his residence and arrested by Adams and Stevens.

Lang was placed in Gray County Jail after being arraigned by Precinct 2 Justice of the Peace Margie Prestidge. Prestidge set bond at $10,000.

Longtime CBS newsmen Eric Sevareid dies

NEW YORK (AP) - Eric Sevareid, a newsmen whose globe-trotting assignments for CBS radio and TV ranged from the fall of France to Watergate and the Vietnam War, died today of cancer, CBS said. He was 79.

He died at his home in Washington at 3:45 a.m., said Tom Goodman, a network spokesman. Sevareid had undergone surgery for stomach cancer late last year. He was hospitalized again in January for therapy.

In his 29-year career at CBS, Sevareid had been a war correspondent, radio news broadcaster, television commentator and columnist. His sonorous voice became known to millions.

In 1940, on his first foreign assignment for CBS, Sevareid scored a huge scoop as the first newsmen to report that France was about to surrender to the Germans and seek an armistice.

In a 1991 Associated Press interview, he recalled the difficulties of getting that scoop on the air, communicating via short-wave radio to get the word to CBS in New York. "Sometimes, we had to go blind, like during that flight from Paris ...," he said. "I had no two-way communication with New York. I'd just go on a French short-wave transmission, 'Calling New York, calling New York,' hoping they'd be listening, and telling them I'd be talking at such and such a time and hoped they'd plug in the network. ... They did get it."

After the fall of France, he returned to London to broadcast, working with legendary newsmen Edward R. Murrow. He returned to the United States in October 1940 and assignment to CBS radio's Washington bureau.

He was sent to the China-Burma-India theater of operations in 1943. He then returned to the European theater, covering the Italian campaign and the first wave of American troops in Southern France.

"Only the soldier really lives the war," he broadcast from London toward the end of the war. "The journalist does not. He may share the soldier's outward life and dangers, but he cannot share his inner life because the same moral compulsion does not bear upon him."

After the war, Sevareid returned to the United States and covered the founding of the United Nations. He returned to the Washington bureau from 1946 to 1959, part of that time as chief correspondent.

Sevareid's televised political commentaries began in 1948, and became a mainstay of the network's national political coverage. He retired from CBS in 1977 when he reached the mandatory retirement age of 65. He stayed with CBS as a consultant.

Asked last year how his war experiences compared with those of reporters covering the Persian Gulf War on television, he replied: "It's a scramble. They're going to get some things wrong. But that's the way it is. It's not like composing a weekly essay on war and peace."

Sevareid was born Nov. 12, 1912, in Velva, N.D.

Correction
Tyler Hindman of Berger was the winner of calf riding (Group III) in Tuesday night's Kid Pony Show. Due to incorrect information provided to The Pampa News, the winner was incorrectly reported in Wednesday's edition.

The address of Ricardo Rickey Rodriguez, 17, who was arrested on two counts of burglary of a building Tuesday, was incorrectly reported in Wednesday's newspaper. The address should have been listed as 241 Miami. The sheriff's office transposed the numbers in the address in the arrest log.

The newspaper regrets any inconvenience the errors may have caused.

Three police officers hired

Pampa Police Department officials announce today the hiring of three new police officers and that a new chief of police is expected to be named at the City Commission meeting Tuesday.

City Manager Glen Hackler said today, "The hiring of additional police officers is pending the hiring of the new chief. Two of the three officers will start work next week."

The police department has been actively recruiting the police officers throughout the state, officials said.

All applicants have gone through an extensive hiring process, officials said. Recruitment is continuing and the department is continuing to receive numerous applications.

New officers that have been hired are Kyle Batten, Jesus Garcia and Tommy Pickering, officials said.

Batten has been serving as a reserve officer with the Levelland Police Department. Garcia has been serving as a patrol supervisor with the Littlefield Police Department. Pickering has eight years of law enforcement experience and is coming to Pampa from the Colleyville Police Department.

Police officers will undergo an extensive field training program for the first eight weeks of employment, police officials said.

They will be placed with a Field Training Officer (FTO) who has received certification from the Texas Commission on Law Enforcement Officer Standards and Education.

Upon successful completion of the field training program, each officer will remain on probation for one year.

The officers also have a variety of skills such as emergency medical technician (EMT), prehospital trauma life support certification, intubation operator certification, crime prevention training, and Field Training Officer certification, officials said.

U.N. compound hit by mortar; Croats moving toward capital

By DAVID CRARY
Associated Press Writer

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) - The United Nations compound was hit by three mortar rounds and a U.N. peacekeeper said today Croatian units are reported moving closer to the Serb-besieged capital.

In Paris, the French army said today it will send nine military helicopters and 144 more soldiers to protect Sarajevo.

European Community negotiator Lord Carrington left London today for talks in New York with U.N. Secretary General Boutros Boutros-Ghali, and said that the negotiating effort he leads is "a bit stuck."

Bosnia's president, Alija Izetbegovic, was meeting with President Bush at the European security summit in Helsinki, Finland to appeal for military intervention and arms to end the four-month civil war.

Washington opposes sending U.S. combat forces but has indicated it could provide air power to protect relief convoys.

Shelling rocked the center of the city overnight, and there were small arms clashes. But the fighting was not as intense as the previous night, when incoming and outgoing rounds fell by the minute.

U.N. spokesman Fred Eckhard said Bosnia's ethnic Croats are reported moving toward the city from their western Bosnian strongholds, a possible indication of a move to break the three-month Serb siege.

"If we are moving toward a wider military confrontation here, that would have serious implications for the relief operation and the peace process," Eckhard said.

It is not clear how closely the Croat militias are coordinating their push with the Muslim-led forces in the city.

Bosnian officials say more than 7,500 people have died in the fighting, which erupted after the country's majority ethnic Croats and Muslims voted for independence Feb. 29.

Ethnic Serbs oppose secession and, backed by Serb-led Yugoslav federal troops, have staked claim to two-thirds of the republic.

Eckhard said three vehicles in the U.N. compound were damaged by mortar overnight. He said the U.N. headquarters received a telephone call late Wednesday from a Serb militia officer saying his forces were coming under artillery fire.

The U.N. relayed to the Bosnian government the Serbs' request for the shelling to stop, but no response was received, and the Serbs then carried out their threat to retaliate, Eckhard said. The U.N. compound was hit during the shelling, although it may not have been the target.

U.N. observers were able to confirm that Serb positions had come under fire, but could not determine where that fire was coming from, he said.

Under the U.N.-brokered agreement that opened the airport to relief flights June 29, the warring parties agreed to bring their artillery under U.N. monitoring. The United Nations, which has about 1,200 peacekeepers deployed at the airport, says both sides appear to be violating the accord.

"The military situation is precarious," Eckhard said. "The relief operation we're carrying out is terribly fragile as a result."

In Paris, a French army statement said five PUMA transport helicopters and four Gazelle combat helicopters will be ferried to the Croatian port of Rijeka by July 19 and then flown to Sarajevo.

The helicopters, requested by the United Nations, are being sent to assure the continuing delivery of humanitarian aid.

Beginning July 23, France will send a contingent of 580 men to reinforce Sarajevo airport, joining 120 other Frenchmen, 400 Egyptians and 400 Ukrainians being sent to replace Canadian troops, the army said.

Bosnian and Serb militias also are battling for control of several strongholds in northern Bosnia, the Yugoslav news agency Tanjug reported.

Serb forces also took the city of Trebinje and regained control of a transmitter near Croat-held Mostar, according to a Serb news agency quoted by Tanjug. The reports could not be immediately verified.

Wednesday was the busiest day yet for the relief operation. Eighteen planes landed, bringing in more than 1,000 tons of food and medical supplies.

The armored convoys carrying the aid to distribution centers have come under almost daily sniper fire; and a group of Swedish drivers quit this week because of the danger.

Lottery's fourth millionaire to be picked today

FORT WORTH (AP) - The Texas Lottery will crown its fourth $1 million winner today at the Stockyards Coliseum in a drawing pitting mostly occasional lottery players.

Of the seven finalists vying for the grand prize, only three bought more than 30 tickets. Four competitors reached the $1 million dollar drawing having mailed in only one entry.

Two players will receive $10,000; two will be awarded $15,000; and one $25,000. The final two will take the stage and open safety vault doors to learn their fate.

One vault will contain $50,000 and the other has the $1 million grand prize.

The Internal Revenue Service will take 20 percent of the winnings, thus actually making the big winner $800,000 richer.

Here is a list of the finalists:
-David Cunningham, 38, of Livingston owns a computer store. He bought 10 to 15 lottery tickets and mailed in one entry. He will use his winnings to pay for surgery and bills for his wife and three children.

-Gary L. Davis, 39, is a facilities coordinator at Texas A&I. He lives in Kingsville with his wife, a school teacher. Davis bought 15 tickets and sent in one entry.

-Samuel A. Mayo, 45, is a Houston electrician. He is married and has two teen-age children. He bought 200 tickets and mailed in three entries.

-Eloy Morales, 62, of Hebronville is one of two grandfathers entered. He said his winnings would go toward his two children and five grandchildren. He bought 30 tickets and sent one entry.

-Michael M. Spring, 47, is divorced and has two children. The Missouri City maintenance mechanic mailed in two entries out of 25 tickets bought.

-Sing Sam Phanh, 23, is the youngest finalist and most aggressive player. The Irving jewelry importer bought 500 tickets in hopes of being able to open his own store. He mailed in one entry.

-Adolph G. Springmeyer, 54, is a Wichita Falls house painter. He is married and has two daughters. He spent $80 on tickets and sent in two entries.

The lottery plans weekly $1 million drawings until Sept. 3. The next drawing is set for July 16 in El Paso.

Viper's out for blood; cowboys out for bucks

The chute gates open. With all the piston-pounding force he can muster, Beutler and Gaylord Rodeo Co.'s Dodge Viper twists out, turns back and explodes.

This bucking bull is out for blood, hitting on all six cylinders and doing his very best to unload the cowboy on his back.

However, the cowboy knows this is not just an ordinary ride.

The cowboy is Anthony Dickerson of Red Oak and his ride tonight at the Top O' Texas Rodeo will be worth a $1,000 bonus if he can stay on a full eight seconds. The bonus is a result of the Dodge Truck Bulls Program.

Greg Dunnegan, from Wichita, Kan., also could collect a Dodge Truck bonus check. He drew Dodge Viper in the Saturday night performance of the Top O' Texas Rodeo.

If Dickerson fails to make a qualified ride tonight, the bonus will increase to $1,500. Dunnegan will be riding for that money and if he also fails to last the full eight seconds, the bonus will again increase by $500. If Dickerson wins the bonus it will start over at $1,000.

Dunnegan could be the first man to collect two checks from Dodge Trucks. He won a $5,000 bonus at the National Western Stock Show at Denver, Colo., in January when he rode Dodge Magnum, a bull owned by stock contractor Mike Cervi.

Dodge Viper's bonus was up to $11,000 until the Greeley (Colorado) Independence Stampede Rodeo June 30 through July 5. In the final Greeley rodeo performance, current world champion bull rider Tuff Hedeman of Bowie was the contestant to draw Viper.

"This is the fifth time I've drawn him (Dodge Viper)," Hedeman said. "I've ridden him twice and he's bucked me off twice. Today's ride will tell us who's ahead in the game." Hedeman rode him and pocketed $11,000 in Dodge Trucks bonus money.

This is the biggest bonus check won by a bull rider since the Dodge Truck Bulls Program started last October at the Prairie Circuit Finals where Dodge Viper made his debut.

A computer in Colorado Springs at the Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association drew from the competitors to see who would match their skills against Dodge Viper.

FEMA delivers aid checks to Fritch tornado victims

BORGER - Federal officials on Wednesday distributed disaster aid checks to eight families whose homes were destroyed by tornadoes in Fritch last month.

Additional checks are being mailed daily to those who cannot live in their home either because they were destroyed or badly damaged. These checks are sufficient to cover monthly rental payments for individuals while they repair or replace damaged housing, State officials said in a press release Wednesday.

The aid checks came six days after President Bush declared the Panhandle counties of Carson and Hutchinson disaster areas because of at least three twisters on June 27.

Fritch was hardest hit, and the Red Cross said 200 homes were destroyed. Hundreds of others suffered damage. Amazingly, no deaths were attributed to the tornadoes.

Federal Emergency Management Agency spokesman George Burgess said the eight families received checks to cover "several months rent." He said he didn't know the total amount of aid distributed.

As of Tuesday night, 305 families had applied with FEMA for aid, Burgess said.

The agency, which has set up a field office in nearby Borger, said other checks for temporary housing have been mailed and should get to victims within seven days.

"There has been a tremendous community response in the aftermath of this tragedy," said Alton Ray, Federal Coordinating Officer. "We hope that spirit will continue as we seek to find available rentals in the surrounding areas."

The Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) is looking for landlords who have available rental units in or near Fritch, Borger, and Pampa to rent to families who lost their homes in the tornado.

"We estimate that between 250 and 300 individuals and families are looking for places to live," said Ray. "We would like to help them locate housing by providing them a list of available rentals."

Anyone having rental property or who knows of available rentals can call 1-273-5003.

Senate committee meets to discuss early releases

AUSTIN (AP) - The chairman of a Senate committee looking into the parole of violent criminals today said the Texas parole system "is sick" and in need of sweeping changes.

The Senate Criminal Justice Committee hearing came amid growing concern about parole practices.

Gov. Ann Richards has asked Travis County prosecutors to investigate.

Testimony today focused on the release of Kenneth McDuff, a former death row inmate who was paroled in 1989. A key issue is how much authority the Texas Board of Pardons and Paroles has given its staff.

"The most important duty of government is to safeguard the very lives of its citizens," said Sen. Ted Lyon, D-Rockwall, chairman of the Criminal Justice Committee. "I can see no way that this duty was served by the release of Kenneth McDuff," he said.

McDuff, 46, last month was charged with capital murder in the deaths of Valencia Kay Joshua of Bryan and Melissa Northrup of Waco.

Woman sentenced in stabbing death

DALLAS (AP) - A jury has sentenced a woman to a 12-year prison term for a fatal stabbing after witnesses testified the high school dropout liked to settle disputes with a knife.

Jurors earlier Wednesday convicted Yvette Yvonne Goffney of voluntary manslaughter in the stabbing death of Glenda Jetton.

A witness testified Tuesday that she watched Ms. Goffney struggle with the victim Oct. 4 outside a southeast Dallas apartment when the defendant brandished a knife.

Police said Ms. Jetton, 33, was stabbed and slashed five times after she confronted Ms. Goffney and a group of people in the apartment complex's parking lot.

"Twelve years may not be enough for you," Judge Tom Price told the defendant during sentencing. "You're a dangerous little girl."

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Individuals must be given freedom

Two scourges of society, drunken driving and teen-age drug abuse, are on the decline. The common thread between these two success stories is not a massive public policy "war," but a more subtle shift in public attitude.

In both cases, the shine has gone off the activity. For kids, experimenting with drugs is no longer as cool as it used to be. And for the rest of us, getting drunk and then driving has become a social taboo.

A share of the credit on the drug abuse front must be given to groups such as the Partnership for a Drug-Free America. This organization has enlisted some of Madison Avenue's best talent for an ad campaign to discourage drug use among young people.

Among its best-known ads is one showing an egg and a hot frying pan. "This is your brain," says the ad, showing the egg. Then, as the egg hits the pan and begins to sizzle, it says, "This is your brain on drugs." Another shows a woman with a gun barrel up her nose and the simple caption, "Cocaine."

The ads have turned heads and changed minds. Since they began airing in April 1987, the attitude among young people toward drugs has noticeably changed. For example, one independent poll done for the Partnership for a Drug-Free America found that, in 1991, 7.8 percent of 13-year-olds had tried marijuana, compared to 16.3 percent in 1987.

In 1991, 47.6 percent of 17-year-olds had tried pot, compared to 57.6 percent four years before. The percent of 17-year-olds who believed marijuana is a health risk rose from 63 percent to 71 percent, and the percent who believed cocaine use was a risk rose from 62 percent to 69 percent.

Progress against drunken driving has been equally impressive. The Department of Transportation reported this week that highway fatalities related to drinking dropped 10 percent last year compared to 1990. The 19,900 deaths last year caused by drunken drivers was the lowest yearly total since 1982. Last year, 48 percent of all highway deaths were attributed to drinking, down from 57 percent 10 years ago.

Tougher laws against drunken driving deserve a slice of the credit, but so too does the change in public attitude toward drinking and driving. "Friends don't let friends drive drunk," goes the advertising slogan, and obviously more people are taking that advice. They realize that there is nothing funny or comical about a tipsy driver.

Smoking is another example. While still legal, cigarette use has been on the decline for three decades. Again, changing attitudes, not more restrictive laws, have been the main reason behind the decline.

The single most effective weapon against anti-social behavior is to change the hearts and minds of people. That will do more to discourage the targeted behavior than any sweeping government "war." It also sidesteps the danger to civil liberties and personal freedom inherent in any aggressive government campaign.

In the area of drug abuse, this means directing efforts at the abusers, not at the producers. Even in the area of drunken driving, the laws have been targeted at those individuals who use alcohol in a way that directly endangers others - not at all drinkers, or at the alcohol companies.

In a free society, individuals should be allowed the maximum freedom to direct their own lives, as long as they do not infringe on the basic rights of others. While we share the common goal of reducing drunken driving and drug abuse to zero, we must also be careful that we achieve that goal in a way that preserves the essential rights of all citizens.

Is there a right to burn society?

Burn, baby, burn.
The question follows: burn what? The American flag in public? A Ku Klux Klan cross? The Supreme court permits both, ruling that both are protected by the freedom of speech clause in the First Amendment.

The constitutionally arrogant decision a few days ago upheld the right to burn a cross, even though such a threatening action could well be considered what Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes called "a clear and present danger."

But the court insisted that the right to exercise one's freedom of expression could not be based on the value of the speech. By the Supreme Court's reasoning, Ku Klux Klansmen and their supporters have as much right to call for the extermination of all black people as rap singer Sister Souljah has to call for a week where blacks would only kill whites.

I was uncomfortable with the court's unanimous ruling, because this is not a court committed to the protection of civil rights or civil liberties. And there's a good reason why it's not.

As Finley Peter Dunne's sagacious wit, Mr. Dooley, accurately observed: "No matter what whether th' constitution follows th' flag or not, th' supreme court follows th' illicit return."

And that's exactly what this Rehnquist court did. Both Reagan and Bush have made a point of choosing judicial ideologues who would reverse the judicial activism tradition that was established by the liberal Warren court.

So, when the Supreme Court's most reactionary justice, Antonin Scalia, writes a majority opinion that is unanimously supported by the other eight, I feel very nervous.

Chuck Stone

An American flag burned in a public place threatens nobody. It may anger and incite, but nobody within the area of the symbolical incineration is physically threatened. On the other hand, the burning of a KKK cross on a black family's private lawn, which is what happened in the case the Supreme Court considered, is clearly an act announcing the intent to harm.

Most Americans don't accept the Supreme Court's blithe nonsense that all incinerations are equal under the first Amendment, especially where the incendiary rap videos of Sister Souljah and Ice-T are concerned.

In fact, a growing number of Americans are beginning to feel that the expression of ideas that cause a person or a group to feel physically threatened should have some constraint.

The trouble with that position is that it places a higher value on consensual speech (which won't incite any fear in anyone) over calls for radical change.

But when hatemongers freely exercise their right to spew venom, shouldn't the courts take judicial notice of the cause-and-effect reactions to such speech?

One of the two intellectual fathers of uncensored freedom of speech, John Stuart Mill, authoritatively answered that question: "Even opinions lose their immunity when the circumstances in which they are expressed are such as to constitute their expression as a positive instigation to some mischievous act."

Justice John Paul Stevens took essentially the same position in his concurring opinion to Justice Scalia's: "One need look no further than the recent social unrest in the nation's cities to see that race-based threats cause more harm to society and to individuals than other threats."

In a 1978 court ruling granting Nazis the right to march through the heavily Jewish community of Skokie, Ill., Justice Harry A. Blackmun expressed a similar sensitivity: "On the one hand, we have precious First Amendment rights vigorously asserted.... On the other hand, we are presented with evidence of a potentially explosive and dangerous situation, inflamed by unforgettable recollections of traumatic experiences in the Second World Conflict."

A Reaganized-Bush conservative court may endorse freedom of speech, but it does so in the content-blind conviction that if the subjugation of minorities increases, well...that's the way the First Amendment cookie crumbles.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Thursday, July 9, the 191st day of 1992. There are 175 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On July 9, 1850, the 12th president of the United States, Zachary Taylor, died at the White House, having served only one year and four months of his term. (Tests performed on Taylor's exhumed remains last year showed he had died of natural causes - and not poison, as a writer had speculated.)

On this date:

In 1755, British Gen. Edward Braddock was mortally wounded as his troops suffered a massive defeat near present-day Pittsburgh during the French and Indian War. One survivor was an aide to Braddock - Col. George Washington.

In 1776, the Declaration of Independence was read aloud to Gen. George Washington's troops in New York.

In 1816, Argentina declared its independence from Spain.

It's contest time again, jokers

It's time once again for the Lewis Grizzard Clean Joke Contest. This will be the second such event. The first, held some time in the '80s, I forget the exact year, was a resounding success.

I received over 5,000 jokes from all over the country, not to mention parts of New Jersey.

The joke I like the most went like this:

A lovely girl moved into a small town and told a local young man if he would take her to the drive-in theater the following Saturday night, she would show him a little glimpse of heaven, but he had to have protection.

The young man, anxious to practice safe sex as we all should, went to the local pharmacy Saturday morning and asked the pharmacist for a condom.

The pharmacist smiled knowingly and sold him one.

When the young man appeared at the front door of his date's home that evening, she invited him in to meet her parents, who were playing Monopoly.

The young man said, "I love to play Monopoly. Instead of going to the drive-in, let's stay and play Monopoly with your parents."

The young woman was puzzled indeed. After several hours the young man rose, said goodbye to everyone and walked to his car.

The young woman, quite angry, followed.

When they reached the car, she snapped, "Well, I didn't know you were such a fan of Monopoly."

Lewis Grizzard

"Yeah," the young man replied, "and I didn't know your daddy was a druggist."

I realize there is a sexual theme here, but it still qualifies as a clean joke since you don't have to say any really bad words to tell it.

I've decided to hold a second Lewis Grizzard Clean Joke contest for a couple of reasons.

1. I firmly believe a really good, clean joke is the best kind of joke, but few people ever tell me any really good, clean jokes.

People come up to me and say, "Here's a joke you can use in your routine," and the first three words would gag Eddie Murphy.

So I need some new really good, clean jokes.

2. We don't laugh nearly as much as we used to in this country because of the new sensitivity where too many people get their panties in a wad too often because they've forgotten how to laugh, especially at themselves.

Perhaps if I can get a lot of people to start thinking about clean jokes again, it will bring at least a little more humor to a world that sorely needs it.

Here are the contest rules:

1. If you are unable to type your joke, try your best to write legibly. I've gotten some great set-ups to jokes before and then couldn't make out the punchlines.

2. Nobody is going to make any money out of this except maybe me if I use your joke on an upcoming album and it sells. However, I will put your name as a contributor on the album cover.

3. I will use as many of the good jokes that will fit in a follow-up column and give you credit, if I happen to use one of yours.

4. The person who sends the joke that I select as the best one will receive a valuable premium, which I haven't decided upon yet, but it will be something you'll be able to wear, drink, eat, or hang on your wall.

Address your good, clean jokes to the Lewis Grizzard Clean Joke Contest, care of King Features Syndicate, 235 East 45th St., New York, N.Y. 10017.

And remember to laugh-once a day. It's better for you than any laxative known to man.

Watergate? Hey kids, listen up

For fear of boring my regular and remarkably forbearant readers, I was going to let the 20th anniversary of the Watergate burglary pass without comment. I was doing well until I saw the stories about all the young people who don't know what Watergate was and don't give a care. I wanted to box their ears, but decided it would be more felicitous to write about it.

It wasn't just the kids who provoked me, either. It was also a few of my colleagues who crassly opined that Watergate was but a blip on the screen of American history. "Watergate was a garish and occasionally very funny moment in American history," wrote Peter Jay in the Baltimore Sun, but "like Teapot Dome in the '20s and the shenanigans of Billie Sol Estes in the '60s, in the long run, it'll still remain a footnote."

It was also the culprits, now trying to revise the record and recondition their wretched reputations. Richard Nixon, the president who resigned in disgrace, now trying to portray Watergate as "myth" and himself as victim. His obdurate chief of staff, H.R. Haldeman, telling high school students that he was vilified by "grossly inaccurate reporting" and "improperly convicted" by a "so-called judge." The unrepentant conspirator and consummate flake G. Gordon Liddy, now a radio host drawing rave reviews as he revisits the sight of the notorious crime.

This is not the sort of stuff a Curmudgeon can ignore, especially not one who is dedicated to the noble task of insuring that Richard Nixon's sordid contribution to recent history remains unmodified in the public memory. Let the villains whine; if they draw breath, their infamies live.

So what is the meaning of the scandal that the fiends rewrite and the Philistines belittle? It was justice done and a lesson relearned - on both personal and collective levels.

I was there for the show and participated in it as an investigative reporter for syndicated columnist Jack Anderson. By the time of the break-in at the Watergate headquarters of the Democratic Party, we had already felt the sting of the Nixon administration's scorn for law, custom and propriety.

Anderson's tax returns had been audited. Our phone records for office and home had been secretly subpoenaed by the FBI at least twice. We had been tailed and spied upon by CIA agents. The most estimable of our tiny band of warriors, Les Whitten, had been arrested by the FBI and charged with "possession of stolen documents." (A grand jury refused to indict.)

Therein lies the personal meaning of Watergate: It was with a feeling of triumph and an overwhelming sense that sweet justice was at last being served that I witnessed Nixon's farewell soliloquy and abrupt departure on Aug. 9, 1974.

Thanks to bitter experience, it came as scant surprise as the Watergate scandal unfolded to see the Nixon administration accused of grievous crimes and misdemeanors: theft, flight to avoid prosecution, malicious mischief, extortion, embezzlement, forgery, campaign finance violations, contempt of Congress, contempt of court, perjury, conspiracy to commit crimes, wiretapping, bugging and on and on.

And therein lies the deeper meaning of Watergate: Ours is a nation of laws and no person - not even the president - is above them. Richard Nixon abused the constitution and wantonly violated the public trust. For this, he will be forever remembered as one of only two presidents to undergo formal impeachment proceedings, the only president ever to be named by a grand jury as an unindicted co-conspirator, the only president to resign his high office.

Every generation needs such a lesson. For my grandparents, it was Teapot Dome; for my parents, it was Joseph McCarthy; for me it was Watergate. For the kids who are now blissfully ignorant of that scandal, the lesson will probably come a few years after the turn of the century.

Here's hoping the good guys prevail.

Special counsel sought for U.S.-Iraq investigation

By JIM DRINKARD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democrats on the House Judiciary Committee today asked for the appointment of an independent counsel to look into whether Bush administration officials lied to Congress about U.S. dealings with Iraq before the Persian Gulf War.

Committee Chairman Jack Brooks, D-Texas, called a news conference to announce the move after a morning caucus of the panel's Democrats generated enough support to trigger the request to Attorney General William Barr.

An investigation could be loaded with election-year significance, focusing attention on President Bush's efforts to use U.S. loan guarantees and other rewards to moderate Baghdad's behavior.

There is growing evidence that the taxpayer-financed benefits for Iraq, far from encouraging moderation, helped Saddam Hussein build up his military and further Iraqi missile and nuclear weapons development — and that some in the administration knew it.

Barr has 90 days in which to decide whether to appoint an independent counsel, and has the final say in the decision, Democrats said they believe he is unlikely to decline the request, noting that such a move could prompt charges of a coverup.

The committee also wants the independent investigator to examine inconsistencies in congressional testimony by administration officials on U.S. policy toward Iraq prior to Saddam Hussein's invasion of Kuwait.

And the panel wants the probe to include whether the White House sought to block release of information to congressional investigators, and whether administration officials interfered in a criminal case involving U.S.-guaranteed commodity loans through the Atlanta branch of an Italian bank.

Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas, disclosed this week that a lawyer on the staff of White House counsel C. Boyden Gray had telephoned an assistant U.S. attorney working on the Atlanta case in 1989. A note made by a Treasury Department official said the prosecutor, Gail McKenzie, got the impression the White House was concerned about the case's "embarrassment level."

"The evidence that is out there clearly mandates an independent counsel," said Rep. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., chairman of the panel's crime subcommittee.

The independent counsel statute, which is due to expire in December, provides for the attorney general to ask a three-judge panel to appoint an investigator in cases where political conflicts of interest might be perceived if the Justice Department itself investigated.

To trigger a request to Barr, a majority of the Judiciary Committee's controlling Democrats had to sign the letter asking for such an appointment. A Democratic source said at least 17 of the panel's 21 Democrats had signed.

Bush gets bill increasing college loans for middle income families

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress is sending President Bush a higher-education bill aimed at making it easier for students and middle-income families to pay for college.

The House voted 419-7 on Wednesday to approve a compromise worked out earlier with the White House and congressional conferees. The Senate approved the compromise last week, and Bush is expected to sign it.

The bill extends the life of federal higher education programs and authorizes spending of $115 billion over five years.

"The bill opens up federal student aid programs to students from middle-income working families," said Rep. Pat Williams, D-Mont.

To make subsidized loans available to more students from such families, the bill would drop a family's equity in their home or farm and college savings accounts from the calculation of assets now used to determine student aid eligibility.

Income ceilings also would be raised for students seeking Pell Grants of up to $2,400 a year. Students from families of four with an annual income of up to $42,000 a year could now qualify for the grants. The present family income cutoff is $30,000.

The bill would require all lenders of federally guaranteed student loans to offer borrowers either graduated or income-sensitive repayment options.

Among other changes, the bill establishes a new unsubsidized loan program for students and families who now don't qualify because their incomes are too high.

The compromise that permitted passage involved establishment of a "direct loan" pilot program at 200 to 250 schools that eliminates banks and other intermediaries. The program was scaled back from 500 colleges and trade schools after the administration objected to the size and threatened Bush veto.

Congressional auditors have estimated the government could save nearly $1 billion a year by replacing the current guaranteed student loan system and its middlemen banks and security markets with direct loans.

Under the pilot program, the government would lend the money for college or trade schools directly to students, rather than pay a subsidy to the Student Loan Marketing Association and the banks to make the loans.

The association, known popularly as Sallie Mae, is a government chartered but privately owned institution that markets government-guaranteed student loans through banks, securities brokers and other financial institutions.

Rep. William Ford, D-Mich., chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee, blasted the administration for opposing the bill earlier and for proposing large cutbacks in the Pell Grant program benefiting the poor.

"Now at last, after having stood in the way for the entire process, the administration has concluded that this is a good bill," Ford said. He criticized Education Secretary Lamar Alexander in particular for issuing "a particularly ill-tempered and petulant veto threat."

Ford said that under the bill, 86 percent of new eligible borrowers will come from middle-income families earning more than $35,000 a year. Students from families of four with incomes up to $70,000 a year will be eligible to have the government pay part of their loan interest.

Voting against the bill were Republican Reps. Richard Arney and Tom DeLay of Texas, Dan Burton of Indiana, Philip Crane of Illinois, William Dannemeyer and John Doolittle of California and Bob Stump of Arizona.

Not voting were Reps. Gary Ackerman, D-N.Y.; Bill Alexander, D-Ark.; House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash.; Charles Hatcher, D-Ga.; Bill Hefner, D-N.C.; Norman Lent, R-N.Y.; Henry Hyde, R-Ill.; Tom Lewis, R-Fla.; and Bob Traxler, D-Mich.

O'Keefe: Navy must rid itself of 'arrogance'

By SUSANNE M. SCHAFER
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Navy's new acting secretary says the service, buffeted recently by a sex abuse scandal, must rid itself of "arrogance" and change its "cultural attitudes and perceptions."

Sean O'Keefe, in his first message to Navy commands worldwide, demanded that officers cooperate "fully and truthfully" with the Pentagon's investigation into the Tailhook sex abuse case.

The acting secretary asserted that "appropriate action will be taken without exception" when the results of the probe are revealed.

"Within the bounds of law, those whom the investigation identifies as being involved in criminal wrongdoing will be called upon to answer for their misdeeds," O'Keefe pledged Wednesday.

The probe stems from an incident at the Tailhook Association's annual meeting in Las Vegas, Nev., last September, where at least 26 women — half of them naval officers — were pushed through a gauntlet of drunken pilots, pawed at and in some cases disrobed.

The association, which sponsored the event, takes its name from the wire that snags planes as they land on a carrier's deck.

Meanwhile Wednesday, the Navy confirmed that a civilian agent for the Naval Investigative Service was disciplined after one of the women involved in the Tailhook incident complained that he had pressured her to date him.

The Washington Post reported in today's editions that the victim, Navy Lt. Paula Coughlin, also alleged that the agent, identified by the newspaper as Laney S. Spigener, had called her "Sweet Cakes" while she was reviewing photographs of Navy and Marine aviators in an effort to identify those who had assaulted her.

A Navy spokesman, Cmdr. Mark Van Dyke, said the NIS removed the agent from the case and reassigned him to other duties after Coughlin filed her complaint last November. The agent subsequently was suspended without pay for three days, Van Dyke said.

He said the agent made "no apparent attempt to demean, threaten or harass Lt. Coughlin. His conduct was considered to be a matter of poor judgment in that the agent attempted to establish a relationship deemed to be improper with a victim."

Derek Vander Schaaf, the Defense Department's inspector general, is looking into how senior and lower-level Navy officials responded to the assaults and whether they mishandled the service's subsequent investigations.

O'Keefe lashed out at "an instance of arrogance which cannot be tolerated" and said the service must "look within at the need to change cultural attitudes and perceptions in the Navy and Marine Corps."

During the Navy's own probes, some officers refused to allow their men to be photographed, while most interviewed said they saw little amiss at the event. That led to allegations of stonewalling and coverup.

O'Keefe pledged to follow through with all of the measures initiated by Undersecretary Daniel Howard, who last week ordered a one-day halt in Navy operations so all personnel could be instructed in rules against sexual harassment.

O'Keefe, the Pentagon's comptroller since 1989, took over the job Tuesday left vacant by H. Lawrence Garrett III, who resigned last month.

Garrett conceded a "leadership failure" had contributed to the sex abuse incidents at the Las Vegas gathering.

But O'Keefe lauded Garrett as "my friend" and a man who "abruptly brought to a close a chapter of honorable and dedicated public service."

"To address the issue of Tailhook directly, let the following points be clearly understood," O'Keefe wrote in his message. "The message is this: those who wear the uniform with pride will be treated with respect. Those who cannot will be driven from our ranks."

O'Keefe said he intends to separate himself from Vander Schaaf's investigation.

"I will not supervise, nor in any way involve myself in the investigation except to state (Defense) Secretary (Dick) Cheney's expectation and mine that every officer will cooperate fully and truthfully, without exception," he said.

Members of two West Texas crime families accused of operating a massive cocaine, heroin, and marijuana smuggling network are led into federal court Wednesday in Lubbock. More than 140 federal, state and local officers served 35 arrest warrants in a massive drug raid Wednesday aimed at disrupting the drug operations of the families.

Judge orders election for Baptist pastor who won't leave pulpit

HOUSTON (AP) — Members of a Baptist church will vote to decide if a controversial Baptist minister who has refused to leave his congregation should be fired.

State District Judge William Powell, who ordered the election, also denied a motion Wednesday that would have prevented the Rev. Robert L. White from acting as pastor until the July 26 election at the First Missionary Baptist Church.

Joe L. Hicks, a church deacon, told the judge relations between White and the congregation began deteriorating earlier this year because of the pastor's "lack of leadership." Hicks said when confronted with the problem, White refused to discuss it.

Man arrested in slayings of his wife and daughter

KAUFMAN (AP) — East Texas authorities and police in a Dallas suburb have arrested a 35-year-old man in the slayings of his wife and daughter.

Michael Lynn Sims of Mesquite was charged late Tuesday with two counts of capital murder, authorities said today.

Sims was held in Kaufman County Law Enforcement Center in lieu of bail on the charges, said Louise Harris, a spokesman for Sheriff Robert Harris.

She said a sheriff's tactical unit, aided by Mesquite police, arrested Sims without incident Tuesday.

CSCE seeks peacekeeping role in post-Cold War Europe

By DOUG MELLGREN
Associated Press Writer

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — President Bush and 50 other leaders met today to give their cumbersome Cold War-era alliance a new peacekeeping role in Europe, where nations cobbled together under communism are coming apart at the seams.

The violent breakup of Yugoslavia dominated opening speeches at the summit of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, or CSCE. The leaders are considering how to end conflict there and deal with the new Serb-led Yugoslav government.

"The cancer of ethnic hatred must be stopped," Dutch Prime Minister Ruud Lubbers said. He warned of a "danger of a return to the dark ages" in the truncated Balkan country and in former Soviet republics torn by warfare.

He and others also urged the West to open markets to formerly communist eastern European nations and help them into the European mainstream.

Bush planned to meet today with Alija Izetbegovic, president of Bosnia-Herzegovina, who is urging Western military intervention to end fighting in his former Yugoslav republic. Bush opposes sending U.S. combat forces to Bosnia, but has endorsed proposals for a more aggressive CSCE role.

"The spiral of destruction and death ... should be cut short immediately," declared Jancz Drnovsek, president of Slovenia. Slovenia broke away from Yugoslavia a year ago after brief fighting.

The CSCE hopes to fulfill a new peacekeeping mission in Europe, which has been swept by instability after the fall of communism and the Soviet Union. A declaration outlining its new purpose is expected to be adopted by consensus during the two-day conference beginning today.

The CSCE, which has no permanent staff, also plans to streamline decision-making and sponsor negotiations on arms control and disarmament so it can prevent conflicts from breaking out.

"For the first time in decades we are facing warfare in the CSCE region," said the final, 78-page document, "The Challenges of Change," approved by senior negotiators on Wednesday.

The CSCE suspended Yugoslavia from the 52-nation group for 100 days, a period Belgrade had asked for to try to resolve the conflict in Bosnia. It said Yugoslavia, which now includes only Serbia and Montenegro, would be expelled if it fails to help end the Bosnian war.

More than 7,500 people have died since Bosnia's majority Muslims and Croats voted for independence Feb. 29 — a move ethnic Serbs in the republic opposed. The West blames Serbia for fomenting the violence.

The 20-year-old CSCE — which includes all European nations, the United States and Canada — was formed to keep the peace between the East and West blocs during the Cold War and promote human rights.

Its new plan for peacekeeping allows the CSCE, which has no military arm, to draw on the troops and resources from NATO members and their former East Bloc enemies to monitor cease-fires, supervise troop withdrawals and ensure humanitarian aid reached refugees. Such missions would be decided on a case-by-case basis and in close cooperation with the United Nations.

It would not intervene to stop conflicts, however — ruling out immediate action in Bosnia. The North Atlantic Treaty Organization decided last month it would consider troops requests from the CSCE, but individual NATO members may decline to participate.

Bush and other representatives of the so-called Group of Seven industrialized nations came to Helsinki on Wednesday from a summit in Munich, Germany.

In Munich, the G-7 members — Germany, France, Britain, Canada, Italy, Japan and the United States — endorsed the use of a U.N. force if needed to back relief efforts in Yugoslavia.

Five computer hackers face tampering, fraud, conspiracy charges

NEW YORK (AP) — Five young "hackers" wrecked a local TV station's education program and left electronic graffiti on an NBC news show, according to a federal indictment charging them with breaking into computer systems.

The hackers also got 176 credit reports from the TRW credit information company, the indictment charges.

Wiretaps on computer-to-computer communications were used as evidence against the five, the first time wiretaps have been used that way, said U.S. Attorney Otto Obermaier.

The five, indicted Wednesday, did it to show off to their peers, to harass people they did not like, to obtain services without paying and to get information they could sell, Obermaier said.

They were part of a group of hackers, people adept at using computers to get into other computers or data systems, who called themselves MOD, which stood for "masters of disaster" or "masters of deception."

Obermaier said MOD's members include Julio "Outlaw" Fernandez, 18; John "Corrupt" Lee, 21; Mark "Phiber Optik" Abene, 20; Elias "Acid Phreak" Ladopolous, 22; and Paul "Scorpion" Stira, 22. All are from New York City.

The five are charged with computer tampering, computer fraud, wire fraud, illegal wiretapping and conspiracy. They will be arraigned in federal court July 16. Each count is punishable by up to five years in prison.

Lee denied the charges and will plead innocent, said his lawyer,

Charles A. Ross. Stira's lawyer, Marjorie J. Pearce, said he would plead innocent.

Abene denied any wrongdoing but refused further comment.

The other defendants could not be reached for comment.

On Nov. 28, 1989, MOD destroyed the information in WNET Channel 13's Learning Link computer in New York City.

Learning Link provided education and instructional material to hundreds of schools and teachers in New York, New Jersey and Connecticut.

Victims' families asked to sign letter on Libya sanctions

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A businessman with ties to Libya denied that he tried to bribe relatives of the victims of Pan Am Flight 103 into speaking out against U.N. sanctions against the country suspected of planning the bombing.

NBC on Wednesday reported that families had been approached.

The businessman, Henry Kartchner, and his representatives, Val Miller and C. McClain Haddow, confirmed they had contacted several families but denied offering them any money.

"I haven't offered them any compensation. I wouldn't offer them anything. I wouldn't try to buy someone off. I was trying to help them," Kartchner said Wednesday night from his home in Pasco, Wash.

Carole Johnson disagreed. Her daughter Beth Ann was among the 270 people killed in the 1988 crash over Lockerbie, Scotland.

Mrs. Johnson said Miller, a Washington attorney and political consultant, and Haddow, a lobbyist and former Reagan administration official, came to her house in Greensburg, 30 miles southeast of Pittsburgh, on June 30.

She said they implied that she and her husband, Glenn, would get $1 million if they signed a letter to Congress asking that the Libyan situation be resolved.

"They didn't really come right out and say that you're going to get a million dollars, but they did," Mrs. Johnson said. "It was implied."

Two Libyan intelligence agents have been indicted in the bombing of the New York-bound flight. The Libyan government has refused to surrender the suspects for trial in the United States but has offered to turn them over to the Arab League or the United Nations.

The U.N. Security Council imposed air travel, arms sale and diplomatic sanctions in April after Col. Moammar Gadhafi refused to surrender the men.

Miller, reached at his Reston, Va., home, said he and Haddow had met with several families and asked them "to write a letter to their congressman to speed a resolution of the issue."

Miller denied that either he or Haddow offered to pay the families $1 million. He said he and Haddow discussed the possibility of a $270 million victims' compensation fund but the families were told that was hypothetical.

Paul Hudson, president of Victims of Pan Am 103-Lockerbie, said members of the group met last week in Washington with Miller and Haddow. "I know of no direct offers of money, however," said Hudson, of Albany, N.Y., whose daughter Melina died in the bombing.

Mrs. Johnson said she equated the proposal to a ransom for forgiveness.

"I don't care if you're offering me a quarter of a million dollars or if you're offering me a million dollars. If giving me that money is supposed to make me say everything's all right, it's not," she said.

Kartchner said he had extensive food development projects in Libya before sanctions were imposed by the Reagan administration in the early 1980s.

"The Libyans have asked me if there wasn't something we could do to have a better relationship with the United States," he said.

Report: Shamir appealed to Bush for release of convicted Israeli spy

JERUSALEM (AP) — Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir has appealed to President Bush to free convicted spy Jonathan Pollard on humanitarian grounds, Israeli newspapers reported today.

Shamir's spokesman, Ehud Gol, said Shamir sent a message to Bush earlier this week but declined to say if it was about Pollard, who pleaded guilty in 1986 to supplying U.S. Navy intelligence reports to Israel.

The daily Maariv reported that Shamir, himself a former Israeli intelligence agent, made the appeal as a parting gesture. He will step down after victorious Labor party leader Yitzhak Rabin forms a cabinet.

Pollard, 36, a former civilian intelligence analyst, supplied Israel with U.S.-gathered information on Iraqi and Syrian efforts to develop nuclear, chemical and biological weapons. He admitted taking $50,000 from Israel.

He was sentenced to life in prison, and last March the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington rejected his appeal for a new trial.

More from less: Inexpensive furnishings make a home

By BARBARA MAYER
For AP Special Edition

In the world of glossy magazine pages, houses come with beautifully proportioned rooms loaded with architectural interest.

Real houses don't always have these details, and the decorating challenge is greater, as Wendy Masna and her husband discovered when they bought a modest 1950s split-level house in Greenwich, Conn.

Rooms were small and dark, and the surfaces, such as threadbare carpet and dull bathroom tile, were unattractive. But the seven-room, two-bath house was affordable and in a nice neighborhood.

Masna, a recent interior design graduate of Parsons School of Design in New York, set out to use what she learned in class by decorating her own home. "Balance, balance, balance," my teachers were always saying," she recalls.

Balance was what she needed in handling a few overscaled items of furniture and accessories along with mostly smaller pieces, blending them in keeping with room sizes. For example, there's a small dining table in the diminutive dining room, but the room is accented for importance by an outside planter with a tall palm.

In the master bedroom, which measures only 10 by 15 feet, Masna made room for a king-size bed. Instead of a full canopy, she substituted a length of white moire fabric draped over a metal armature originally designed to hold a small planter. It's a touch of grandeur that doesn't overwhelm the room. Small night tables — one is a removable breakfast tray on a stand and the other is a lace-covered fiberboard table — don't take up much room.

The Masnas started their decorating by making the house as light as possible. They picked up the carpeting and found a nice oak floor, which they had scraped and refinished. Floors are now bare except for a few small area rugs. The walls have been painted in light colors, and first-floor windows have been given simple treatments which are both inexpensive and make the most of natural light.

Masna placed inexpensive uplights in each corner of the living room for unobtrusive illumination and to create interesting shadows at night. She made the most of the narrow entry by hanging a flat mirror and a six-inch deep glass shelf on two oversize decorative brackets.

This room started to perk up as soon as she brought in a frankly fake fireplace which she found in a local antiques shop for under $100. The wood hearth, which may have been part of a stage set, is painted to resemble a marble fireplace with a wood mantel. Placed opposite the windows, it has become a focal point of the room.

To give the room visual height, she hung the curtain rod high and installed a wallpaper border with a motif that looks like cording right at the ceiling. The horizontal border provides an strong architectural feel to the room.

Over the sofa, she hung four framed botanical prints and two wooden whatnot shelves. On the mantelpiece, she grouped a collection of blue and white vases.

For the main bath, Masna chose a bright pink and white stripe wallpaper for the upper wall to minimize the importance of dated peach tile on the lower half. She covered an unattractive floor with sisal carpeting.

To update and brighten a family room which came with "knotty pine" fiberboard wall paneling, she painted the paneling white. An upright piano is also painted white and she purchased a white sofa for the room.

Using such ploys, the Masnas have a small house with great charm.

Designer Wendy Masna created this elegant living room with inexpensive details, like the fake fireplace and wall paper border that looks like molding. (AP photo)

Staffordshire china comes of age as a collectable

By BARBARA MAYER
For AP Special Edition

Blue and white Staffordshire china dating from the 19th century is so popular as a collectible these days that pieces are now difficult to locate.

"It used to be easy to find and relatively inexpensive," says Dora Landey of Lewisboro, N.Y.

But a tureen, underplate and ladle decorated with a historic place motif sold for a record price of about $35,000 several years ago at a New York City auction house, says Landey, an antiques dealer in Pound Ridge, N.Y.

Since her early collecting days in the 1970s, prices have appreciated five to six times.

Landey collected enough in the early years to decorate the main rooms of her early American farmhouse in Lewisboro, N.Y. Like others who were smitten 20 or more years ago with these distinctive pieces, she was ahead of the game.

"I chose it because I liked the colors of blue and white, and these were country pieces which went well with my house," she recalls. "And I just kept on buying. It was fun to find this stuff inexpensively at tag sales, small antiques shops and country antiques fairs."

Blue and white Staffordshire decorates the kitchen, dining room and living room and can even be found dressing up a guest bathroom and the master bedroom. In the dining room, the china stands upright on the open shelves of a Welsh dresser and marches across the top of a buffet-server. A small collection of blue and white china ladles rests on top of a rustic pine sideboard. Platters hang on the walls instead of pictures. Above kitchen cabinets, choice pieces are on display.

In the master bedroom, six different perforated trays, called mazarins, are arranged in a triangular pattern above the bed. The trays, which once kept the Sunday joint above its juices in a large platter, are now rare, she says. Too fragile to be used in the traditional fashion, they make an ideal wall arrangement. Next to the bed, a dried bouquet of blue and white flowers stands in a blue and white pitcher. A tray table with a blue and white tray stands next to an easy chair in the bedroom.

Landey mixes blue on blue ware made primarily for the American market and blue and white, which the English preferred. She finds this more decorative than arranging the two different colors separately. Blue and white fabrics cover the upholstered furniture and dining chairs.

Having bought her first blue and white Staffordshire in the mid

1970s, Landey didn't realize she'd latched onto an important collectible until 1980, when she found a small book which pictured some pieces like the ones she owns.

"Until then I had no idea books were written about it," she says.

The book's bibliography set Landey to researching about her favorite kind of china. She learned that it was collected around the turn of the century when people called it "old blue" and amassed it the way today they accumulate Fiesta ware.

She also discovered that the first blue and white Staffordshire in the late 18th century imitated hand-painted Chinese export dinnerware. The technological innovation that automated china decoration by the use of transfer patterns reduced prices and expanded the market.

Landey says top quality blue and white Staffordshire dates mostly from the 1790s to the 1840s. After 1848, as more companies entered the market, workmanship declined. Then in the 1850s, when American potteries were established, the demand for English blue and white Staffordshire in this country declined as Americans bought less expensive domestic wares of different designs.

"One place you see poor workmanship is in borders, which in some pieces are ungraceful where the transfer pattern was mismatched," she says.

Among the most sought-after pieces in the United States are those that picture famous American beauty spots, such as Lake George in New York State. Holloware (pitchers, coffee pots, teapots, sugar bowls and creamers) are among the scarcest shapes.

"Hold onto your Staffordshire blue and white," she says. "Or else sell it to me."

Antibiotics plus The Pill may surprise the patient

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Can you imagine my surprise when I read the letter in your column about the woman who became pregnant when she took antibiotics while she was on the pill? That's exactly what happened to me!

When my twin sons were 3 months old, I went back on the pill. A month later, my physician prescribed an antibiotic for an infection, and you guessed it — I got pregnant immediately.

Believe me, Abby, we were not ready emotionally, financially, or any other way to have another child. We were still in a state of confusion and had our hands full with the twins.

When I recovered from the shock, I asked my doctor why the pill didn't work, and he told me it must have been the antibiotic — then he added rather sheepishly, "That information was in the insert, which you should have read."

Well, of course I had not read the insert that came with the antibiotic. I doubt if many people would — unless they had been instructed to do so.

However, today we have a beautiful — and thank God, healthy — baby girl. She was an unwanted pregnancy, but she was definitely a very much wanted child. Now when someone asks me if she was an accident, I reply, "No, she was a beautiful surprise."

Doctors should tell their patients everything they need to know about the medications they're instructed to take, and not just assume that the patients are going to read the inserts that come with it.

DEAR DONNA: The fact that antibiotics nullify the effectiveness of birth control pills must be the best-kept secret in the science of pharmacology. Read on for one of the many letters I received with the identical theme:

Bad breath - an isolating problem

Everyone knows what bad breath causes — it causes people to back away from you! But there is more than one reason for bad breath.

Most of the time, bad breath is caused by bacteria breaking down food particles left in the mouth. The bacteria give off smelly gases as they digest the food. Brushing your teeth cleans away the food, the bac-

DEAR ABBY: Since I do not use birth control pills, I was very much surprised when I was informed that certain antibiotics, such as tetracycline, may cancel out the effectiveness of the pill.

I also wonder how many of your readers know that certain antibiotics, such as tetracycline, can cause serious birth defects if taken during pregnancy — especially during the first trimester?

Every woman, whether she is trying to get pregnant or not, should know which medications can affect her and a possible fetus.

Abby, please advise women to ask their physicians the following questions: (1) Will the medication you are prescribing for me cause any reaction to the medication I am presently taking? (Be sure to name all of them.)

(2) Will it be dangerous to a fetus if I should get pregnant while taking this medication?

Had I asked these questions, it may have saved the life of my first child. I was in my first month of pregnancy when my physician prescribed tetracycline for a sinus infection.

STILL ASKING QUESTIONS
IN MEDFORD, N.Y.

DEAR ASKING: Thank you for sharing some important information. Every physician worth his (or her) shingle will ask his (or her) patient which medications that patient is currently taking.

What teen-agers need to know about sex, drugs, AIDS, and getting along with their peers and parents is now in Abby's updated, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Bad breath can also be caused by what you eat. Coffee and garlic both leave a strong scent behind. Bad breath can sometimes be a sign of something wrong, like a stomach problem or decaying teeth.

Most of the time, though, bad breath is just embarrassing. But getting rid of ordinary bad breath is easy. Just crunch into an apple, chew on a sprig of parsley, or brush your teeth.

Black light helps catch just about everything

Most fishermen know that using a black light improves their night fishing. Using a black light will make any fluorescent line glow in the dark and appear to be about 1/8 inches thick. Tying knots in the black of night is a cinch. More importantly, "seeing" the subtle past of Mr. Bigmouth and Mr. Whiskers is a piece of cake. In short, using a black light will help you catch more fish at night.

Officials with the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department report a new use for black light. Just ask a couple of rascals from Broadus, Texas, who were sentenced in federal court to 10 days in jail, a $500 fine and three years probation.

These bad guys were illegally netting catfish using one inch hoop nets on Lake Sam Rayburn in East Texas. "We applied detection paste to their nets that day, and waited for them to come check the nets that night," said Game Warden Jerry McRae. "We stopped them as they were coming in and under the black light, the paste lit up like Christmas all over them, their boat, their paddles - everything." Big bass and bad guys - black light will catch them both.

PROBLEM: Local lakes are up because of the heavy rains, but anglers report some problems catching fish on the new shoreline. Initially the inundated grass, brush and trees were alive with baitfish feeding on insects. After just a couple of days, the newly flooded vegetation started to spoil, and the oxygen level in the shallow water was greatly reduced causing the gamefish to temporarily leave that area.

SOLUTION: Try fishing the old shoreline until you see the baitfish move into the new water. Warming - carp will continue to use the oxygen depleted water while bass, perch, and other gamefish continue to avoid the "new water."

Congratulations to DON MIDGETT for winning the July 2nd Fun Tournament at Lake Meredith. In a field of 29 anglers, Don's shad colored Bass Assassin caught the only keeper bass, weighing 1.64 pounds and took home first place money of $203. A drawing (yes, a random drawing) was held for second place and third place with BARRY LANE and his son Brandon each winning $50.

Next Fun Tournament will be Thursday evening, July 16, at LAKE GREENBELT. Registration at south ramp begins a 4:30 p.m., and tournament hours are 6:00 until 9:00 p.m. Entry fee is only $20, and KIDS 16 AND UNDER FISH FREE WITH AN ADULT CONTESTANT. PLAYA PETE predicts: "It will take more than just one keeper to win at Greenbelt."

ALL-STAR BALLOTING

'The Wiz' makes 10th team

NEW YORK (AP) - When the opening pitch is thrown at Tuesday's All-Star game, the starting lineups will have a 10-year wizard, a pair of repeating brothers and a trio of Padres.

Ozzie Smith of the St. Louis Cardinals was elected Wednesday to start his 10th straight All-Star game, the most consecutive starts since the voting was returned to fans in 1970.

"It's consistency to my craft and what I bring to it," Smith said. "I've tried to be as consistent as I possibly can, and I think that I've done that."

Smith beat Tony Fernandez of the San Diego Padres by 135,002 votes, breaking a tie with catchers Johnny Bench and Gary Carter for most consecutive elections.

"When you're noted mostly as a defensive player as I am, it's really special," Smith said.

While Fernandez didn't win, catcher Benito Santiago, first baseman Fred McGriff and outfielder Tony Gwynn of the Padres did. It's the first time since 1982 that the host has had as many as three elected starters. Montreal had Carter, Andre Dawson and Tim Lincecum 10 years ago.

"This is very exciting. My fans came through," said McGriff, who edged San Francisco's Will Clark by 16,163 votes in the closest race in either league. "Now I don't have to go home tonight and sweat it out to see if the manager will name me as a reserve."

On the other side of the field will be the brothers Alomar, second baseman Roberto of Toronto and catcher Sandy Jr. of Cleveland. They were re-elected, only the sixth time brothers were picked to start for one team.

"Hopefully we can do this every year," Roberto said. "It's a thrill for our whole family. Both of us will be playing to win because that's our style whether it's a regular-season game or the All-Star game."

Shortstop Cal Ripken Jr. of the Baltimore Orioles received the highest vote total at 2,699,733, the most since Carter got 2,785,407 with Montreal in 1982. It will be the eighth start for Ripken, who beat second-place Manuel Lee of Toronto by 2,312,212, the largest margin at any position.

"I think a lot had to do with last year and the fact that I performed well in the All-Star game," said Ripken, last year's All-Star MVP. "You get a lot of attention nationally when you perform well in that one game. It seems like a lot more people paid attention to me after that."

Second baseman Ryne Sandberg of the Chicago Cubs led the NL with 2,434,660, the second straight season he received the most votes in his league. Sandberg is an eight-time starter.

McGriff was one of four first-time NL starters, joining outfielders Barry Bonds and Andy Van Slyke of Pittsburgh and third baseman Terry Pendleton of Atlanta.

"It's an opportunity I've longed for since I was playing in Little League," Pendleton said. "It's something I wanted to achieve and I want to thank the fans, the Atlanta Braves and God."

Bonds returned last Saturday from a nearly three-week injury layoff resulting from a strained rib cage muscle, and said he won't miss the game.

"When you're voted in, you play," he said. "It's an honor."

Santiago, on the disabled list while recovering from a broken finger, is on a rehabilitation assignment in the minors.

"Last night was my first game back and I didn't have any problem with the finger, and so I think I'll be able to play," he said in Tucson, Ariz.

The American League lineup includes outfielders Kirby Puckett of Minnesota, Ken Griffey Jr. of Seattle and Jose Canseco of Oakland. The Athletics said Wednesday that Canseco wouldn't come off the disabled list until after the All-Star game, forcing the AL to replace him.

Mark McGwire of the A's is at first base for the fifth consecutive year and Wade Boggs of Boston is at third base for the eighth straight season.

Chicago Cubs' lawsuit is all business

CHICAGO (AP) - The Chicago Cubs are thinking about business, not baseball, in challenging baseball commissioner Fay Vincent's decision to ship them to the National League West, the team's attorney says.

"This is a business matter, not a baseball matter," attorney Geoffrey Anderson said Wednesday after a court hearing aimed at reversing Vincent's decision. "The real interest is whether (the Cubs) are better off business-wise in the western division."

But the Cubs, who haven't won a pennant since 1945, may be facing the longest lull of all in their lawsuit: All previous lawsuits against the commissioner have failed.

"Basically, we believe we have the authority to do this," said Joseph McEntee, an attorney for the commissioner.

During a hearing Wednesday, U.S. District Judge Suzanne Conlon gave Vincent until July 16 to file a response to the Cubs' lawsuit. The judge will schedule another hearing after the response is filed.

Anderson said Vincent's decision Monday to shift the Cubs and the Cardinals to the NL West and Atlanta and Cincinnati to the NL East was wrong and that the court ultimately would agree.

Vincent's office has contended the Cubs' parent company, Tribune Co., may be motivated in part by another of its holdings, superstation WGN-TV. The station broadcasts Cubs games and may be hurt by later starting times if the realignment takes place.

But Anderson said the Wrigley Field team has a longstanding interest in staying in the NL East, which predates the Tribune Co.'s 1981 purchase of the team.

"When the division alignment was made in 1968, the Cubs were very strongly in favor of being in the eastern division," Anderson said.

The National League's constitution requires a three-fourths majority approval on any realignment, but teams involved in the move have veto power. The Cubs voted against realignment, which would have scuttled the arrangement had Vincent not stepped in.

"The commissioner can no more order the Chicago Cubs to play in the western division of the National League than he could order them to play in the American League," the Cubs contend in their 26-page complaint.

Vincent stood by his decision. "The Cubs had threatened suit even before I made the decision," Vincent said. "I'm not surprised there is a suit."

The Cubs contend the Major League Agreement excludes the commissioner from deciding issues governed by the National League constitution.

Vincent argues that he has powers that override the league's constitution and that the commissioner can take action on any "act, transaction or practice" deemed not in baseball's best interests.

Olympics transform Barcelona into scenic city

BARCELONA, Spain (AP) - An Olympic village has replaced old factories. Garbage-strewn train yards have turned into sandy beaches. New highways have relieved inner-city traffic.

Barcelona has used the Summer Games as the centerpiece of an urban and economic transformation, changing in a few years from a city choked by industry to a community open to the sea.

The cost has been enormous - nearly $8 billion - and some residents fear they will be paying for the changes for decades. They also complain gentrification has made some neighborhoods too expensive for the average family.

But city planners say the benefits have been worth the cost.

When Barcelona was awarded the Summer Games six years ago, the city of 1.7 million people was mired in an economic slump and bleeding jobs. Its population had fallen by 42,000 since 1970 as industries collapsed or moved out.

Using the Olympics to overcome resistance from some residents, businessmen and political leaders, city officials began to redesign vast areas of Barcelona.

"By the year 2000 we wouldn't have finished all of this," said economist Ferran Brunet, who conducted an economic analysis of the Barcelona Olympics. "We would have been able to advance only very slowly, especially along the waterfront and with the highways."

The changes in Barcelona since 1986 have been striking:

- More than $2 billion in new suburban highways and tunnels have reduced downtown traffic by 15 percent.
- An investment of $920 million in Olympic-related telephone improvements has modernized a once-woeful system.
- The city has 25 percent more hotel rooms and greatly expanded office space. New twin 44-story towers, the tallest buildings in Spain, overshadow the Olympic village; one is a luxury hotel, the other is planned as a banking center.
- Five new beaches have been opened, stretching for 2 1/2 miles along the Mediterranean. Some of the land has been reclaimed from the sea.
- A new airport terminal was built for $240 million and remodeling the main international train station cost $22 million. The city's sewer system also was overhauled.

• The number of people receiving unemployment benefits dropped by more than 50,000 from November 1986 to October 1991, almost half the total figure.

But the biggest transformation has been a $1.8 billion redevelopment along the waterfront.

For decades, much of Barcelona was blocked from the sea by a decaying area of warehouses, factories and train yards. That area has been converted into the Olympic village.

• The 2,012 apartments, where athletes will be housed during the Summer Games, are being sold to Barcelona families for occupancy after the Olympics.

"The area upon which the village is built was formerly a wasteland. It was a no-man's land that cut the city off from that part of the coastline," proclaims a city promotional brochure. "The development has revitalized an area previously abandoned and avoided."

Total investment in Olympic-related projects has been $7.68 billion, with 43 percent of that coming from private sources. City, regional and national funds covered 57 percent of the cost.

That figure does not include an additional $1.48 billion spent to organize the Games themselves.

Brunet's economic analysis puts the total economic impact of the Games at $26 billion - higher than the annual Gross Domestic Product of many Latin American countries.

Those numbers also dwarf corresponding figures from the 1984 Summer Olympics in Los Angeles, which did much less stadium building and public redevelopment than Barcelona.

Total expenditures by the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee, a private corporation formed to run the 1984 Summer Games, were $546 million. No public funds were used.

The overall economic impact on Southern California was $3.29 billion - about an eighth of the Barcelona total.

At a time when most of the world was gripped by recession, the Barcelona economy thrived in the late 1980s and early 1990s. But that growth also had a downside:

- Consumer prices increased by 42 percent from 1985 to 1990.
- New housing prices shot up by 214 percent between 1986 and 1991, while the cost of used housing went up 130 percent.
- Construction costs went up by 62 percent from 1985 to 1990.
- Office rents quadrupled from 1986 to 1991, and a survey of 10 cities worldwide found Barcelona the most expensive for business travelers.
- "The Olympics are good on a tourist level, not so good on an economic level. They are unnecessary expenses," said Barcelona resident Monica Sierra. "The construction itself will make the city better, but the rise in prices has really affected the people and the quality of life has gone down."
- "Those who gain are the rich, because the average citizens cannot participate in the Olympics. There aren't tickets for them."
- Added David Murillo, public relations director of the Squash Barcelona sports club: "The Olympics are very good for Barcelona. But we are paying high taxes for the benefit of the rest of the world."

In addition to urban renewal and improvements in transportation and communications, the legacy of the Barcelona Olympics will include 13 new sports facilities - ranging from a renovated Olympic Stadium to the modern Palau Sant Jordi that will host gymnastics, volleyball and handball.

Milwaukee's Pat Listach shows the umpire where he tagged Texas' Dean Palmer during a steal attempt at second base Wednesday in Arlington.

Brewers beat Rangers with timely assistance from Texas shortstop

ARLINGTON (AP) - Texas Rangers shortstop Dickie Thon is helping the Milwaukee Brewers more than he's helping his own team.

An error by Thon helped Milwaukee score three unearned runs in the eighth inning and beat the Rangers 4-3 Wednesday night.

On Tuesday, Thon's error in the third inning led to two unearned runs and a 4-3 Brewers victory. The shortstop now has five errors in his last seven games.

"The last thing you want to do when you're making some errors is have another that makes you lose a game," Thon said. "It's a shame, because Guzie (Jose Guzman) pitched a great game and deserved to win."

After Jim Gantner started the rally with a one-out single, Thon committed his second error of the night, booting a grounder by Scott Fletcher.

Pat Listach singled in a run to make it 3-2, and Fletcher scored the tying run on Darryl Hamilton's groundout to short. Then Paul Molitor singled in the go-ahead run, extending his hitting streak to 10 games.

"This was definitely a game where you have to take advantage of the other team's mistakes," said Milwaukee manager Phil Garner. "We did something with those mistakes and that's what you have to do. It's a great way to finish the longest road trip of the year."

The Brewers went 7-6 on the road trip.

"We won some games the last couple of nights we shouldn't have," Molitor said. "The Rangers gave us some gifts."

Specifically, Thon. "Anytime you give a team four or five outs you ask for trouble," Molitor said. "The ground ball to Thon that he made the error on gave us the opportunity to win this game."

Guzman (7-7), who has lost four of his last five starts, pitched 7 2/3 innings. He allowed nine hits, but allowed only one earned run.

"I lost some concentration after the error, but what can I say?" Guzman said. "It could happen that someone hits a good ball and we make a great play. You can't blame the fielders."

Milwaukee starter Jaime Navarro had a two-hit shutout until the sixth, when Texas scored two runs on a sacrifice fly by Juan Gonzalez and an RBI single by Rafael Palmeiro.

NFL TRIAL

Upshaw says ex-Cowboy Schramm considered players to be 'like cattle'

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — After days of testimony concerning multi-million-dollar salaries at the NFL antitrust trial, former Raider guard Gene Upshaw's testimony concerning his first pro football contracts seemed out of place.

Upshaw, now director of the NFL Players Association, took the stand Wednesday morning after several tumultuous days of economic testimony when both the players and the owners accused the other side of being rich.

No one challenged Upshaw on his 1967 salary with Oakland. As a first-round draft choice, he received $17,000 for his rookie season.

The future Hall of Famer was paid $19,000 his second year and $21,000 in his third. His signing bonus was $30,000.

"That's what I thought was a tremendous amount of money," he said.

Upshaw said his salary suffered because of the merger of the NFL and the AFL shortly before he was drafted.

There was no competition for his services, as was the case with other players in the previous draft, he said.

Similarly, when the United States Football League folded in 1985, Upshaw said players suffered financially.

"When the USFL went out of business, it was a sad day for the NFL players, because the NFL was a monopoly again and salaries went down," Upshaw said.

Upshaw said he now makes $300,000 annually as head of the NFLPA, a position he has held since 1983.

The trial continued its pattern of constant stops and starts in testimony as both sides requested private conversations with Judge David Doty.

At one point, NFL lawyers moved for a mistrial — their third such attempt since proceedings began nearly four weeks ago — after Upshaw related a 1987 discussion he had with a representative of the NFL who told him that the players were like cattle.

Upshaw said then-Dallas Cowboys president Tex Schramm told him there would not be free agency in the NFL even if the players remained on teams for 30 years.

"He said the players are like cattle and the owners are ranchers and the owners can always get more cattle," Upshaw recalled.

After NFL attorneys protested, Doty ordered that Upshaw's comment be stricken from the record, saying it was potentially inflammatory to the jury. NFL attorneys then requested a mistrial, which the judge denied.

Later, the NFL released a copy of a 1987 story from Newsday in which the "cattle" and "ranchers" quote was attributed to Upshaw, not Schramm.

"Gene said it himself to the media," NFL spokesman Greg Aliello said.

Eight players are suing the NFL on antitrust grounds after the collapse of the 1987 negotiations.

A players' strike that year left the league without a collective bargaining agreement. Eventually the NFLPA abandoned its collective bargaining in favor of a court-oriented strategy.

Upshaw said he favored total free agency after a player's contract expired. NFL attorney Frank Rothman said that position was a change from Upshaw's 1981 testimony, when he said baseball's free agency system was not a goal for football players.

Upshaw also said NFL teams have free agency, but players do not. He cited the examples of teams in Oakland, Baltimore and St. Louis moving to other cities after their contracts ended.

Rothman countered that in the case of Oakland and St. Louis, the teams had to compensate the league after they moved.

General manager's future spins in New York

NEW YORK (AP) — The latest chapter in the New York Yankees' front office saga concerns the future of general manager Gene Michael.

Of course before that's settled, the future of George Steinbrenner must first be decided. It seems that's getting close, though.

Michael said Wednesday that he would need certain conditions met to stay on the job if Steinbrenner resumes operations of the team — but declined to say what those conditions would be.

Steinbrenner could be back at the helm of the Yankees after March 1, 1993, according to a published report.

Commissioner Fay Vincent is expected to announce the March 1 reinstatement soon, The Record of Hackensack (N.J.) reported in Wednesday's editions. On July 30, 1990, Steinbrenner agreed to what amounts to a permanent ban.

But Steinbrenner denied a report in The Record that he is plotting the firing of Michael or the hiring of Davey Johnson. The Record said the Yankees' owner has been laying the groundwork for changes within the team to be executed before his official return to power.

"That's totally untrue," Steinbrenner told the New York Daily News from Tampa, Fla. "Sure, I've spoken out publicly about Stick (Michael) and the fact that he spent too much money in some areas, in my opinion. But on merit, I think he's done an OK job. Regardless of what happens, I would always want Stick with the Yankees. He's family."

The Record reported that Steinbrenner has compiled a list of candidates for general manager to replace Michael. One is Johnson, the ex-manager of the New York Mets who met recently with general managing partner Joe Molloy, Steinbrenner's son-in-law.

But Molloy said Wednesday he met with Johnson about six weeks ago to discuss a scouting job. Molloy said Johnson had requested the meeting and the general manager's job was not discussed. The Daily News reported today that Steinbrenner said the meeting between Molloy and Johnson was unrelated to Michael's situation.

Michael said he has also met with Molloy.

"We've had discussions regarding a contract extension," Michael said. "I could stay on as general manager."

Michael, who says he enjoys scouting, also said he has discussions with Molloy concerning an extension for manager Buck Showalter.

Steinbrenner wanted to be reinstated at the end of the 1992 season, rather than early next year, the newspaper said, but decided pushing for the earlier date wasn't worth the risk of destroying any agreement with Vincent.

"Mr. Steinbrenner has no knowledge about his reinstatement," Steinbrenner spokesman Steve Mangione said.

Officials oppose Redskins relocation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Though the Washington Redskins may want to move to suburban Virginia, that doesn't mean officials there will welcome them with open arms.

Redskins owner Jack Kent Cooke and Virginia Gov. Douglas Wilder plan to hold a news conference today to reveal details on a proposed stadium for Alexandria, but they're likely to have a tough time convincing local politicians that the project is worth pursuing.

Last month, Cooke and Wilder signed an agreement to negotiate toward building a new stadium at a rail yard south of National Airport, with Cooke paying half of the $250 million construction costs and the state paying the rest for various road and transit improvements. Rep. James Moran, D-Va., whose district includes the 320-acre proposed stadium site, said Wednesday that Alexandria officials should develop the property in a way that generates more income for the city.

"That property should bring in $30 million per year in tax revenue, and this could be a net money-loser," said Moran, a former mayor of Alexandria. "With only 10 home dates a year, this is not economically viable."

Other officials were disturbed by Cooke's pending plans.

"We see this as an end run around our land-use goals and they have a hard sell ahead of them," mayor Patricia Ticer says. "It makes (us) angry because land use is a very important part of what we're about and protecting the quality of life in the city of Alexandria."

Dallas cuts Albritton after flunked physical

Safety played six games last season before fracturing arm

IRVING (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys waived eight-year veteran safety Vince Albritton on Wednesday after he failed his pre-season physical.

Albritton, 6-2 and 216 pounds, joined the Cowboys as a free agent in 1984 out of the University of Washington.

Last season, he was released on the final cutdown, then re-signed the following day after the roster was finalized.

He played six games last year, primarily on special teams, before fracturing his left forearm at Green Bay on Oct. 6. He was placed on injured reserve for the rest of the season.

He is a native of Oakland, Calif. Albritton has 286 career tackles, including 181 solo. He had one career interception and six recovered fumbles.

Columbia lands in Florida after two weeks away

By MARCIA DUNN
AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Columbia swept through a clear Florida sky and landed at Kennedy Space Center with seven astronauts today after being away two weeks on NASA's longest shuttle flight.

The spaceship, diverted to Florida because of bad weather at the main landing site in California, touched down at 7:43 a.m. It rolled to a stop on the concrete runway, slowed by a new red white and blue drag chute.

"Congratulations on the longest shuttle flight on record. Thanks for helping to pave the way to space station operations," Mission Control's Ken Reightler told the crew.

Columbia had begun its laboratory research mission just five miles away, 14 days ago. The shuttle traveled 5.76 million miles and circled the world 221 times.

NASA directed commander Richard N. Richards to Florida after monitoring the weather all night at Kennedy and at Edwards Air Force Base in California, the preferred landing site because of its wide-open spaces in the Mojave Desert.

Light rain had fallen overnight at Edwards and more was expected. Nevertheless, about 550 spectators gathered on the soggy desert lakebed; they left disappointed when Edwards was ruled out.

Columbia flew over San Antonio, Texas, and just north of Houston and New Orleans on the way to Kennedy. The shuttle crossed the Gulf of Mexico and then passed over central Florida just north of Tampa.

"Everybody ought to have a pretty good show then," Richards said before firing the twin braking rockets.

It was the first time that Columbia, NASA's oldest shuttle, landed at Kennedy. But it was the 10th time in 48 shuttle flights that a mission ended at the spaceport where it began.

NASA favors Edwards when the shuttle is loaded with extra weight, in this case the 22,200-pound laboratory in Columbia's cargo bay, and when the crew has spent this long in space. Columbia's total weight at landing was nearly 229,000 pounds.

Kennedy's single concrete runway simply offers less room to maneuver. But a new feature gave an extra margin of safety: the drag chute, which slows down the shuttle on the runway after it lands. It was only the second time a drag chute was used on a shuttle.

Columbia's record-breaking mission was extended to a full two weeks when the spaceship was forced to pass up two chances to land at Edwards on Wednesday because of rain. Longer flights are considered a preparation for eventual operation of a space station later in the decade.

Columbia could have stayed up until Saturday, given its fuel supply, or possibly Sunday "if we really had to do something drastic," said flight director Jeff Battle.

The shuttle's five-man, two-woman crew has been in orbit since June 25, eating mostly freeze-dried food and taking only sponge baths.

During the flight, the crew grew protein crystals for use in medical research; studied fire safety in space by lighting candles and igniting wiring insulation and polyurethane foam; jiggled drops of liquid with sound waves to see how fluids behave in space; and tested a new miniature space greenhouse.

The old shuttle record was 10 days and 21 hours, set by Columbia in 1990. But other astronauts have stayed in space far longer. Astronauts logged 84 days aboard Skylab in 1973-74. Russian cosmonauts spent a year in a space station.

NASA plans longer and longer shuttle flights to gain understanding of the effects of extended space travel and to prepare for the planned space station.

Mission Control's Ken Reightler on Wednesday urged the crew to "enjoy your day off." No experiments in the laboratory were unpacked and started up again.

The astronauts' agenda on their extra day in space included Earth observations, medical tests and relaxing.

Program scientist Roger Crouch said none of the experiments would be harmed by the extra time in orbit. One — protein crystal growth — might benefit by allowing crystals to grow even larger, researchers said.

Crystals grow bigger and better in space, free of Earth's damaging gravity. The crystals are used in designing drugs to combat AIDS, cancer, diabetes and other illnesses.

Strong aftershock hits Big Bear area

BIG BEAR LAKE, Calif. (AP) — A strong aftershock jolted this already quake-damaged San Bernardino Mountains resort, tearing homes off foundations, sparking fires and injuring at least 16 people, authorities said.

The earthquake centered near Big Bear Lake struck at 6:43 p.m. Wednesday and measured 5.4 on the Richter scale at the U.S. Geological Survey's National Earthquake Information Center in Golden, Colo.

The California Institute of Technology in Pasadena said it registered 5.3 and was centered six miles east of here.

Sixteen people were treated Wednesday at Big Bear Valley Community Hospital for such minor injuries as cuts and small fractures, said spokeswoman Marcia Garner. Paramedics tended to other minor injuries in the field, she said.

Last week, a 7.4 earthquake centered around nearby Yucca Valley, followed three hours later by a 6.5 aftershock here. One child was killed, hundreds of people were injured and there was more than $90 million in damage.

After Wednesday's aftershock, one resident of this town 70 miles east of Los Angeles said he has gotten used to the tremors.

"It makes it tough to sleep but we are becoming professional earthquake riders up here," Chuck Stewart said.

More than 100 people sought refuge in a Red Cross shelter at a local high school after the jolt. Many slept in tents, feeling safer outside than in the shelter or their homes.

"I'm sleeping outside tonight, and I've packed all my important things in the car," said resident Suzanne Blakeney.

The aftershock shifted at least two homes partially or completely off their foundations and caused fires in three homes, said San Bernardino County sheriff's Deputy Anthony Viola. The blazes were quickly extinguished.

The earthquake, followed by several smaller aftershocks, ruptured gas and water pipelines, downed power lines and jarred several mobile homes off their foundations, Viola said.

Hundreds of people lined up throughout the day Wednesday at disaster centers in Yucca Valley and Big Bear to apply for loans and grants for damage caused by last week's earthquake.

Earlier Wednesday, two small earthquakes struck coastal waters between Santa Catalina Island and the mainland.

The Richter scale is a gauge of the energy released by an earthquake, as measured by the ground motion recorded on a seismograph. A magnitude 6 quake can cause severe damage.

Airline's fare cut threatens recovery

DALLAS (AP) — Continental Airlines' decision to cut half its fares by an average of 25 percent starting today threatens a price hike other carriers had planned to help make up for losses incurred during a spring sale.

The Houston-based carrier said it could afford the sale because it had avoided the industry's 50 percent discount promotion in May and early June.

Continental said that strategy left it with seats it could sell for "lesser, but still valuable, discounts."

The nation's large carriers had planned to raise fares about 4 percent on Friday.

One analyst, Lee Howard, executive vice president of Washington-based Airline Economics Inc., said Continental's sale would thwart that plan.

"The question is whether (competitors) will follow it and they will because they have to," Howard said.

Representatives at American, America West, Delta, Northwest, Southwest, TWA and United said late Wednesday they were studying the fare cut and would respond today. A spokesman for USAir could not be reached.

Continental spokesman David Messing said the airline's plan does not necessarily "scuttle an increase."

"We have also filed for that same increase," Messing said. "There's no reason that the sale and the increase can't go on together."

Continental's sale ends July 17 and is good for travel between July 16 and Sept. 15. The lower prices apply only to travelers who are flying a round-trip and staying over a Saturday night. Tickets must be purchased at least seven days in advance.

The cuts average 25 percent but some fares will drop 30 percent or 35 percent. For instance, a trip between San Diego and New Orleans will cost $115 each way, compared to the current $180, a 35 percent reduction. A trip between Buffalo and Los Angeles, on the other hand, will cost 20 percent less; $175 each way from the current $220.

Continental is reorganizing under federal bankruptcy protection.

Analysts forecast second-quarter losses for most major airlines after the half-price sale. Braniff, which had been fighting bankruptcy for years, closed last week, blaming the sale for pushing it over the edge.

Fare wars and rising costs resulted in a $48.2 million net loss for financially-troubled Trans World Airlines in May, according to documents filed with the U.S. Trustee's Office. That brought the airline's loss for the first five months of the year to $125.5 million.
