Fighting effects of polio

By BETH MILLER
Senior Staff Writer

God grant me the serenity to accept the things I cannot change, courage to change the things I can and the wisdom to know the difference.

In 1956, life was great for 22-year-old Pampa native Betty Scott. She worked as a secretary. She was married to her high-school sweetheart, Donald Scott, who was in the Air Force, and they had two children, Brenda, 3, and Rick, 14 months.

The world was at their hand. But in October of that year, Betty came down with polio and it forever changed their lives.

"Back then, people would get it in the summertime. It didn't dawn on us what it was. I would just cry at the drop of a hat and I got a terrific pain down my neck and back and a headache. I thought I was going crazy," she recalled.

Her husband took her to the base hospital in Waco and they gave her a shot for a migraine headache. She stayed in bed for several days running a fever and one night she was going to get out of bed to go to the restroom and she could not get up.

Erdmann arraigned on 'falsifying' charges

LUBBOCK (AP) - Lubbock pathologist Ralph Erdmann has been arraigned on charges of falsifying the autopsy of a 14-year-old hit-and-run victim.

Erdmann, who was indicted in February by a Hockley County grand jury for falsifying the autopsy of a 41-year-old man, was arrested late Sunday night by Lubbock County Sheriff's deputies and arraigned on new charges in Dickens County by Magistrate David Hazlewood.

Erdmann is charged with tampering with a government record and theft in connection with his autopsy of 14-year-old Jesse Land of Spur. Erdmann was released from Lubbock County Jail after midnight today after posting $10,000 bond, $5,000 for each count.

"I'm just surprised that all this is happening," the doctor said when Hazlewood asked him if he understood the nature of the charges.

The Associated Press reported Friday that Erdmann had been charged in two sealed indictments returned by a Dickens County grand jury.

Houston police officer beaten

HOUSTON (AP) - A policewoman says she was stabbed with a screwdriver, slugged with her own gun and handcuffed after she refused to arrest a man so he could be fed in jail.

Deborah K. Logan, 33, was admitted Sunday to Hermann Hospital with a stab wound to her lower abdomen, bruises and cuts to the face and a head wound. A hospital spokesman said Ms. Logan was in stable condition.

She picked up a glass of water and dropped it.

"I couldn't breathe," Scott remembers.

She was taken to the hospital and began to relax, but again couldn't get out of bed to go to the restroom. "I hollered at the nurse. At that time, it dawned on me. I said, 'Do you think it could be polio?'"

A spinal tap was done on Scott and polio was confirmed. She was transported to a crippled children's hospital in Waco where there were iron lungs. "I was in there for seven months," she said of the iron lung, which she described as being a "round thing, about three feet in diameter and seven feet long with a little thing at the end where your head sticks out."

By that time, Scott could not move and for about six weeks she did not know anything.

"They weaned me to this chest respirator I wear now," she said. The polio paralyzed Scott's right diaphragm and her left one is not 100 percent active. She has no use of her right arm and it crippled her hands. She now wears a chest respirator 10 to 12 hours a day and will continue to do so for the rest of her life.

Democrats open convention in New York amid internal calm

By JOHN KING
AP Political Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - Democrats open Bill Clinton's crowning convention tonight minus their traditional internal warfare, hoping a unified front propels the Arkansas governor to a summer lead in this year's confounding three-way presidential race.

After a turbulent, triumphant primary season and weeks of buildup, Clinton's moment is at hand: Some 4,288 delegates will crowd Madison Square Garden beginning tonight for a four-day parley that will send him off to battle President Bush and Ross Perot.

For a party known best for its bitter feuds, all was remarkably calm.

Clinton's choice of Tennessee Sen. Al Gore as his running mate was panned by some liberals, but for the most part was cheered for its moderate, generational message. Jesse Jackson's endorsement was tepid, but delivered.

Jerry Brown was the sole Clinton primary rival withholding his backing, and Clinton held out hope the former California governor would join the fold.

"We have a winner," said party chairman Ronald Brown, who would be bringing down the gavel to open the festivities. "That winner is Bill Clinton. We need to get behind him and support him."

Clinton was practically out of sight on convention eve, attending church before returning to his hotel to work on his acceptance speech for Thursday. Today, he planned more speech work plus a morning visit to a century-old program that provides health care and other services to the poor.

Thanking Jackson for his endorsement, Clinton sounded the change theme that will echo throughout the convention hall this week.

"Reverend Jackson, Senator Gore and I share a common goal of rebuilding America and putting people first," Clinton said. "Together our message of real change will restore dignity and purpose for all the American people."

Gore was far more visible, making the round of the Sunday news shows before flying to the convention city, where he was warmly welcomed by his homestate delegation.

"We Americans are better than the Bush-Quayle administration says we are," Gore said. "We are going to do our very best, with your help, to offer the American people the best chance for positive, progressive, constructive change."

Outside, workers scrubbed the plaza around the historic entertainment hall, police paced everywhere and delegates enjoyed a little sight-seeing, shopping and partying before getting down to business.

Unimpressed by the hoopla was 67-year-old New Yorker Earl Sanford, watching the cleanup of his favorite park near the Garden.

"Company comes, you've gotta spruce up," said Sanford. "In a week it will go back to normal - everybody dog-eat-dog."

As always, there were protests. Both sides in the abortion debate were massing throughout the event, as were advocates for other causes ranging from better treatment of the homeless to better treatment of women in the military.

Bush and Perot were lying low during the Democrats' celebration, but Republicans had surrogates on hand for daily critiques of the competition.

"Despite his claim to the contrary, Bill Clinton is a failed governor of a small state," said GOP chairman Rich Bond in his opening salvo.

Cheering and placard waving becomes the order of business beginning tonight, but revelry was atop Sunday's agenda. There were parties and parties and parties, including 42 official delegation bashes.

Once called to order, there is little to debate, a drama shortage some delegates rue, though others praise as a chance to skip the fighting. The Clinton camp sees the shortage of sparks as an opportunity to focus on their candidate's message.

"It's one of the first conventions in modern times in which we are using it almost completely as a launching pad for the general election," said Clinton chief of staff Eli Segal.

As for Clinton, the delegates offered opinions that ranged from admiration to ambivalence, their comments underscoring the confusion found in polls of an electorate that is demanding change but appears uncertain where to find it.

"Perseverance," was the Clinton trait liked best by Connecticut's Barbara Gordon, a primary supporter of former Massachusetts Sen. Paul Tsongas whose convention vote will go to Clinton. "God almighty, he took so much and kept going."

Others, however, recalled the scars of the bruising primary battles.

"Many people don't trust him," said Stacy Myers of Massachusetts, a Clinton delegate.

The Gore selection had the Democratic faithful from many Republican-leaning states pondering a different question: Could the alliance of two Southern moderates put their states in Clinton's column come November?

"This is a ticket people can run with, rather than run away from," said Alabama Rep. Claude Harris.

Pro rodeo ends on high note

By J. ALAN BRZYS

The secret to an event's success often is to save the best for last.

In rodeo, it's impossible to know when the magic combination of contestant and draw might come together to bring the crowd to a fevered pitch.

The 46th annual Top O' Texas Rodeo's third and final performance Saturday night capped off a hugely successful week.

Greg Vance of Cleveland burst out of the chute on Beutler and Gaylord Rodeo Co.'s bull No. 93, managed to overcome a bucking combination of twists, turns and spins and was awarded 81 points by the Wrangler judges.

The 81 gave Vance first place in the event as he eclipsed a 78-point ride by Jed Dreher of Bedias earlier in the go-round.

Going into Saturday night action, reigning Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association (PRCA) world champion bull rider Tuff Hedeman of Bowie and J.W. Oelschlegler of Rosenberg led with scores of 76.

David Fournier of Decatur equaled the 76 Saturday going eight seconds on Beutler and Gaylord's Smokin Joe, a National Finals Rodeo bull.

In Saturday's barebacks, Jon Brockway of Mesquite recorded a 78 and Matt Fenhaus of Rapid City, S.D., notched a 74 to take the first and second spots for the week.

Jim Jensen also replaced earlier leaders in saddle broncs by riding Beutler and Gaylord's Locust for 78 points and top money in the event.

In exciting barrel racing competition, two Saturday night performers broke into the top three spots.

Standout Deb Mohon of Gladewater stopped the timer at 17.60 seconds for a solid first-place finish. Angie Clark of Colcord, Okla., finished third with a sparkling 17.92-second trip through the cloverleaf pattern.

No changes in the top three positions were recorded in either the calf roping or steer wrestling events.

Wrangler bullfight action was highly charged as Greg Rumohr of Cleburne and Gary Jones of Pasadena entered the arena tied for top money. After the dust settled, the three-night, cumulative score remained the same as both turned in 80-point performances. Mike Johnson of Poplar Bluff, Mo., finished third.

Greg Dunningan of Wichita, Kan., drew the Dodge Truck bounty bull - Beutler and Gaylord's Dodge Viper - in the Saturday night performance and was in line for a $1,500 check if he lasted the full eight seconds.

Dunningan, if successful, would have become the first man to collect two bonus checks from Dodge Trucks. He won a $5,000 bonus at the National Western Stock Show at Denver in January when he outlasted Mike Cervi's Dodge Magnum.

"No, I won't ride any different," said Dunningan in an interview shortly before the ride. "All I can do is try."

"The bull fit me well that time and I hope I do as well. I was lucky to draw two bounty bulls in one year."

The Kansas cowboy said, "I'd like to keep drawing these bonus bulls... I can use the money."

"I've seen the bull (Dodge Viper) two or three times. He doesn't have a set pattern. I talked with others who rode him and they never feel comfortable on him."

"He'll go one way and will try to jump out of it," said Dunningan. "It's pretty tough to set a game plan. I'll just go jump."

Near the end of the bull riding event, ProRodeo Hall of Fame announcer Clem McSpadden raised the crowd to a high level of anticipation by introducing Viper and Dunningan.

The gate swung open and the black bull exploded out of the chute. It twisted, turned and on the third or fourth jump, viciously threw Dunnegan off his back and nearly hung him up on the bull rope.

The bonus record remained intact and Dunningan had nothing to show for the ride but memories.

The annual Top O' Texas Rodeo finished with an extremely well-attended dance at the Clyde Carruth Pavilion featuring McBride & The Ride.

In amateur action, the Miami entry captured top honors in the team branding competition.

The Pampa Riders pony express team defeated a game Rolling Hills Turn 'Em Burn 'Em squad in the event held prior to the PRCA show Saturday night.

Here are final results from the Thursday, Friday and Saturday performances of the 46th annual Top O' Texas Rodeo.

'Too fat' insurance fraud case goes to trial

MIDLAND (AP) - Federal Judge Lucius Bunton said last spring what had been on many minds after state prosecutors charged a Who's Who list of El Pasoans with setting up a scam that bilked investors of $9.6 million.

Bunton quoted the "Too Fat Polka" when he reluctantly moved the case from state to federal court.

"I don't want her, you can have her, she's too fat for me," Bunton wrote.

The case is thick with a web of allegations and a long list of El Paso heavyweights as defendants. Jury selection is scheduled to begin Monday.

The trial will bring about two dozen lawyers to the courtroom for the defendants and more than 500 witnesses have been identified. The district attorneys office will only bring in two prosecutors. The prosecution already has cost taxpayers more than the $250,000 budgeted for it.

Assistant District Attorney Andrew Thomas said prosecutors have been tossing out some accusations and getting rid of certain defendants to thin the voluminous case.

"We're trying to throw away the need for the girdle," Thomas said.

But he wasn't sure Friday if he was succeeding. State attorneys had arrived at a Midland hotel with 130 boxes of documents, but had to reserve another suite next door for more boxes.

"We're getting a four-inch stack a day of new motions and have been for I don't know how long," Thomas said.

When an El Paso grand jury handed up its indictments last year, they named 11 El Pasoans and 19 businesses. The list now has been whittled to seven major defendants and 11 businesses. The original 32-page indictment is now about 13 pages.

It names such one-time El Paso movers and shakers as financier and former car dealer Maury Kemp, former El Paso Electric Co. chairman Evren Wall and former state GOP chairman Tad Smith. El Paso Electric also is named.

The accusations revolve around Kemp's failed First Service Life Insurance Co. and more than $9 million in annuities it sold. The company was based in the Cayman Islands and not registered in Texas, therefore the annuities - investments that earn interest that is periodically paid to buyers - were not insured.

When First Service Life went belly up, investors, many from Mexico, lost their money. The state alleges investors' money was diverted to risky ventures without investors' knowledge.

The defendants also are accused of conspiring to steal the stock of Triangle Electric Supply Co., an electronics components company in El Paso.

It alleges that in 1986, the law firm Kemp, Smith, Duncan & Hammond prepared documents that put $50 million made from the annuities sales into an escrow account under the name of El Paso Electric.

El Paso Electric is then accused of buying $70 million in First Service Life annuities secured by First Service's ownership in Triangle Electric and $57.2 million in escrow.

Finally the state says First Service Life agreed to siphon the money from other investors to pay El Paso Electric a higher interest rate than its annuities were yielding.

One of the defendants, Marvin Bones, has agreed to cooperate with the government in exchange for immunity. Bones was director in Kemp's First Service Life Insurance Co.

San Antonio congressman haunted by investigation

By KELLEY SHANNON
Associated Press Writer

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — For more than three years, a federal grand jury has examined documents and listened to witnesses about alleged influence-peddling in South Texas.

Last week, the jury produced its first indictment, charging prominent businessman M. Douglas Jaffe Jr., his company and two staff attorneys with federal election law violations.

Meanwhile, a central figure in the probe, U.S. Rep. Albert Bustamante of San Antonio, remains free of any charges. But the Democratic congressman claims the investigation has inflicted political wounds, tainting his name before the public even if he is never indicted.

"It's been 3 1/2 years of nothing but torture, and that's what they wanted. Or they wanted to embarrass us," Bustamante said Friday, shortly after his friend Jaffe turned himself in to federal authorities.

"They want us to spend money (on a legal defense)," Bustamante added.

Federal prosecutors did not return telephone calls from The Associated Press about the investigation.

Some Democrats reportedly have estimated the federal probe has cost $3 million to $5 million.

Bustamante, first elected to Congress in 1984, faces Republican challenger Henry Bonilla in November. And Bustamante contends the Republican Party is behind the federal investigation, which is being heard by a San Antonio grand jury and is led by Washington prosecutors.

Bustamante said most constituents he speaks with in the 29-county District 23 offer words of support. But he still believes the investigation is harmful.

The probe began as a look into the activities of Bustamante and his friend Eddie Garcia. According to the two men, the grand jury was examining Garcia's attempt to acquire a contract for a 7,000-seat bingo hall and bingo game on the Kickapoo Indian reservation near Eagle Pass, a border town in Bustamante's district.

Bustamante has said the investigation began as retaliation for his backing of Hispanic FBI agents, who successfully sued the agency for discrimination.

As the investigation has progressed, prosecutors have called dozens of witnesses and sought records appearing to deal with other matters. Last week, they requested and received some of Bustamante's campaign finance records.

Bustamante contends the federal prosecutors are trying to hurt him by taking aim at his friends and associates.

Jaffe, for instance, and his father, Morris D. Jaffe Sr., are friends of Bustamante's, the congressman says. The Jaffes have had ties with big-name Democrats and were friends and supporters of former U.S. House Speaker Jim Wright.

Bustamante said the indictment of Jaffe and the two women lawyers was "criminal."

"They wanted to embarrass them," he said. "I just feel bad for my friend and the two ladies."

M. Douglas Jaffe Jr., 41; his company Jaffe Group Inc.; and company attorneys Patricia Pozza, 41, and Mary Ella McBrearty, 39, were named in a three-count indictment issued Wednesday.

The government alleges Jaffe and Ms. Pozza conspired to break federal election laws that ban corporate contributions to federal campaigns.

The indictment claims Jaffe and Ms. Pozza solicited donations in 1988 from Jaffe Group employees for two political action committees that supported Democratic candidates and for the gubernatorial campaign of Jim Mattox, with the understanding the employees would be reimbursed with company bonuses.

Ms. McBrearty is accused of being one of the contributing employees. She, Jaffe, Ms. Pozza and the corporation also are accused of concealing the source of the donations.

The defendants have declined to comment on the case, but some of their lawyers are quick to cite politics as a factor in the charges.

Seagal Wheatley, who represents the Jaffe Group, said "it is a politically charged time of the year, and bizarre events such as this indictment against innocent people often occur."

Gerald Goldstein, who represents Ms. Pozza, also hinted that politics might be involved. He noted that foreign electronics giant Toshiba Corp. and some of its executives also were accused of violating federal election contribution laws and last month were allowed to pay about $18,000 in civil fines.

And Texas Democratic Party officials have questioned the election-year timing of the charges.

For Bustamante's opponent Bonilla, the San Antonio probe produces election-year rhetoric. But Bonilla says although he occasionally mentions the investigation and is asked about it by voters and the press, it is not his central campaign issue.

"The Justice Department investigation is just one piece of the big picture," Bonilla said.

He disputed Bustamante's claim that the Republican Party is behind the probe, calling it a "kind of a grasping-for-straws excuse." Bonilla said if the Republicans were going to pick out a Democrat to attack it wouldn't be Bustamante.

"He's a nobody," Bonilla said.

Bonilla said his campaign is receiving the maximum allowed contribution by the national Republican Party — $5,000 for the primary and $5,000 for the general election.

"I think we have an opportunity to really blow him out," Bonilla said. "We are not about to let this one get away."

As for Bustamante, the investigation amounts to a waiting game, which he says can hurt him even if he is never indicted.

"Still, my name is out there," he said.

Police arrest Axl Rose

NEW YORK (AP) — The law finally caught up with Axl Rose.

The lead singer of Guns N' Roses was arrested Sunday at Kennedy International Airport on year-old charges stemming from a riot at a St. Louis concert.

U.S. Customs agents detained Rose as he arrived on a flight from Paris with his girlfriend, model Stephanie Seymour, and her young son and a nanny, said Bryn Bridenthal, a spokeswoman for Rose.

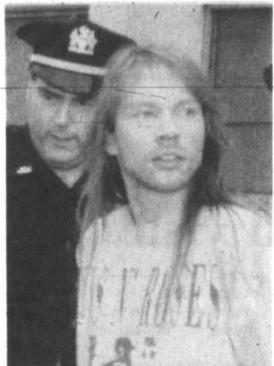

Rose already had told St. Louis authorities he would surrender this week to face four misdemeanor assault counts and one count of damage to property, Bridenthal said.

Rose, 30, of Los Angeles, was released on $100,000 bail after spending almost 11 hours in custody. Wearing a Guns N' Roses T-shirt, he left by limousine after his arraignment and sped off without speaking to reporters. About 60 fans had gathered.

"He was a perfect gentleman," said Rose's attorney, Gerald McMahon. "Axl wasn't mad. He was expecting it to happen eventually."

In a statement released by his publicist at Geffen Records, Rose said: "I can't believe how cool the New York police are; they don't hide behind their badges. ... They treat you like a human being."

About 40 concertgoers and 25 police officers were injured in the July 2, 1991, melee. It erupted after Rose leaped from the stage to take a camera from a fan, then angrily stormed off, abruptly ending the show.

Theater owners estimated the damage at between $200,000 and $300,000.

Rose has said that he jumped into the crowd to stop a fight and that the band was willing to go back on stage, but was told to leave. He said security was to blame for the riot.

For each assault charge, Rose faces a maximum fine of $1,000 and a one-year jail sentence. For the property damage charge, he faces a $500 fine and six months in jail.

Guns N' Roses' 1987 album "Appetite for Destruction" sold 12 million copies. Twin albums "Use Your Illusion I" and "Use Your Illusion II," released last year, to date have sold 17 million copies.

Scott

"I had to learn to breathe again," she said.

Her mother, the late Ruby Jones of Pampa came to care for Scott's two young children and her dad, the late J.B. Jones, came at Christmas that year.

After seven months in the iron lung, and gradually weaned to a respirator, Scott said she thought she was going to get to come home, even though she could not walk. She could stand if someone was on each side of her holding her up.

"I thought that was the best I was going to get. I was a pretty bitter person at that time. I thought the whole world had come to an end."

The doctor, however, sent her to a respiratory center in Houston. At the respiratory center, Scott quickly realized she was better off than some. There was one girl at the center who had been in an iron lung for five years. Another girl could not use her legs and was on a respirator all of the time.

"They were all in worse shape than I was," she said of the three girls she was to room with.

She was placed in an iron lung for two days and then transferred to a chest respirator, which she would take off when they had her practice her breathing and while testing her vital capacity (how much air she could take in with the biggest breath).

She was kept at the respiratory center only two weeks and thought she was again going to get to go home, but they sent her to a group-type home for polio victims who were getting ready to go back into the real world.

"My attitude had gotten better as far as the bitterness. It made me realize how lucky I was compared to those people. I hadn't had it near as long as they had. I realized I could get better."

She had therapy twice a day and ate in the dining room with 10 adults and 10 children who were at the home. She got a wheelchair with four little wheels which she could use her legs to push backwards.

"They had great people there and they helped you so much with your attitude and outlook and really got you ready for the outside."

Scott said that in each of the three areas they would go to in the home — physical therapy room, occupational therapy room and the living room — a slogan was hung.

That slogan was: God grant me the serenity to accept the things I cannot change, courage to change the things I can and the wisdom to know the difference.

She said she learned later that it was the prayer used by Alcoholics Anonymous. But she said that slogan taught her not to ponder on what she could not do well, but to focus on what she she could do.

"Of course, I still have my days," she said, and that slogan is placed on her refrigerator door as a reminder.

When she got out of the home after six months, she was able to walk pushing a wheelchair. She and the children returned to Pampa and her dad built on a bedroom and bath for her use.

"My little boy was just getting where he'd say a word or two. He got right in between my legs and wouldn't move. You don't think that was heartbreaking, not being able to pick up your kids."

She and the children stayed with her parents in Pampa for about a year and her husband got out of the Air Force and returned to Pampa. They bought a small home on Darby Street.

"I was getting where I could walk better and could get up out of a chair," the independent and strong-willed woman said.

She said she spent the majority of the time with her children and colored a lot with them, which helped her in therapy. Her husband liked to cook and helped in that area and her children helped with a lot of chores.

One of her husband's employers, the late E.J. Dunigan, learned about Scott's polio and anonymously donated money to the March of Dimes to be allocated for some house help for Scott.

The woman that Scott hired to help her did not always come to suit Scott, so she began trying to do more things herself. To clean the bathtub, she would sit on the edge of the tub and use her feet and a sponge to get the tub clean.

She said she also knew the anonymous donation was not going to last forever, so she began figuring out ways to get around the handicap which polio had left her with.

After several different jobs, her husband rejoined the Air Force in late 1961 and they were transferred to Plattsburgh, N.Y. They were later sent to El Paso and then to NASA at Houston where her husband became a training coordinator to astronauts.

Her husband was tragically killed in an automobile accident on Nov. 28, 1966.

Of her late husband, Donald, she says, "He was a very good person. I really contribute the biggest part of my becoming independent and self sufficient to him. Anything I accomplished, it tickled him to death."

After her husband's death she and the children, then ages 11 and 13, returned to Pampa and lived with Scott's parents. Scott was quite independent by that time and decided she would learn to drive a car again. She was able to pass her driver's license test and said she was so proud of that accomplishment.

"My kids grew up with me like this and I worried about that. I wanted to learn to accept this, but I didn't want my kids to be ashamed of me and they never were," she said.

Her daughter and son-in-law,

Brenda and Dan Tucker, live in Pampa with her granddaughter, 15-year-old Tracy Bruton. Her son, Rick, is a musician in Arkansas.

Scott, who graduated from Pampa High School in 1952, said she is thrilled that her granddaughter has been chosen for the PHS show choir. Scott was active in choir while in high school.

The March of Dimes and Air Force picked up the majority of her expenses when she first got polio and the March of Dimes continued to pay for the rental of her equipment until she got on Medicare.

In 1977 she moved to Dimmitt and began answering the phone to help out a company. Work was piling up in the office and so Scott said she asked the owner if he would like her to start doing some bookkeeping.

"I'm not real fast because I try to write real good. I used to be right-handed, but I had to switch."

She worked as a secretary/bookkeeper for three years at the Dimmitt company and gained more confidence in herself and her abilities.

Scott had also joined the Women of the Moose Lodge in 1976 in Pampa and when she returned to Pampa from Dimmitt, she got involved with the group. In 1981, she was elected senior regent. She set up the books for the group's bingo and the first game under the new state law was in February 1983.

All except for a year and a half, Scott has kept the books since that time, which are quite detailed for reporting to the state.

Working with the Women of the Moose and their bingo operation, with the majority of proceeds going to charity work, gives Scott a sense of well-being.

"It gives me a lot of self satisfaction knowing we're helping charity and helping a lot of unfortunate people."

There are a few things Scott still can't do, such as picking up a glass (she uses mugs), changing a light bulb in the ceiling, putting trash in the dumpster and putting a bottom sheet on the bed.

But she does not focus on what she can't do.

"You have to want to get better or you'll make yourself miserable and everyone around you," said Scott, who celebrated her 58th birthday Saturday.

Acupuncture patient reports relief from shoulder pain

Lee W. Warf of Amarillo has suffered from shoulder pain for a number of months and couldn't get relief through traditional medical treatment. After a number of acupuncture treatments, he reports that his condition has greatly improved.

For many people, acupuncture is a new weapon in the battle against pain. The treatment itself has been used in China for thousands of years, and has gained increasing popularity in this country. Many people, however, do not understand how it could work.

Dr. Edwin Wong, a certified acupuncture specialist of China Acupuncture Clinic, says that acupuncture, according to the prestigious World Health Organization, has been successfully used in the treatment of at least 47 different diseases, including migraine headaches, bursitis, osteoarthritis, trigeminal neuralgia, menstrual problems, sexual problems and others. The Chinese science of acupuncture has been a useful adjunct to model medical treatments and is being successfully utilized in an increasing number of cases. Acupuncture is also now utilized for weight control and to help people break the smoking habit. Smoking is particularly responsive to acupuncture. For many people, smoking is a habit. They want to quit, but can't. Acupuncture adjusts the nervous system, minimizes the post-quit symptoms such as anxiousness, restless or nervelessness. Acupuncture also changes cigarette taste, making cigarettes taste bad so people don't want to smoke again. Wong reported a more than 90 percent success rate for smoking cessation treatment.

In fact, the acupuncture treatment is a whole body treatment. Research shows that changes in physiology, physiopathology and biochemistry occur during treatment and these changes produce profound results including alleviation of pain.

Investigation has confirmed acupuncture's potential in the enhancement of immune function. Acupuncture also potentiates the ability of anti-infection, hence the power of preventing diseases. Besides, the decrease of immune function is often followed by aging process. In this way, acupuncture may be greatly helpful in the prevention of aging, thus to achieve longevity and health.

For a consultation and more information about acupuncture visit the China Acupuncture Clinic, located at 1700 N. Duncan or call them at 806-669-3253. Let this ancient Chinese medical science help you and your family free themselves from pain and other health problems.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Opinion

Bush's programs and blurred vision

President Bush seems isolated and insecure. In an interview with New York Times writers recently, the president was all over the map on every issue — assuming you can find the map. His 12-year isolation from the country he presumes to govern was evident in every utterance.

When asked why he should be elected to sit in the Oval Office for another four years, Bush came up with no compelling reason. "I'd like to see it ... in the first place, I'd like to see it set in an environment of world peace," he gave as his main reason.

But over the past four years Bush propped up Mikhail Gorbachev, the last Soviet dictator; appeased the communist regime in Beijing after it massacred hundreds of students in Tiananmen Square in 1989; first urged the Kurdish rebels to revolt, then, after the U.S. victory in the Gulf War, abandoned the Kurds to be massacred by Saddam Hussein; and failed to recognize independent Croatia and Slovenia last year when the ongoing massacres in Yugoslavia might have been precluded.

"Secondly," the president continued, "I think at home, changing, fundamentally revolutionizing education is critical." Sure, but the president seems to forget that education — or instruction, as it should be termed more accurately — is not the president's responsibility. Even taking the self-styled "education president" on his own terms, how has he done? There's only one achievement: As schools have continued collapsing, the choice-in-education movement, which Bush has backed only half heartedly, has advanced to the head of the class, especially in California.

Only when the writers brought up the economy did Bush discuss it, indicating its lack of importance on his own agenda. The cause of the anemic economy during almost the entire Bush regime? "A long recession with not enough investment and not enough ..." the president sputtered. Actually, people aren't investing because Bush's $166 billion tax increase, his 50 percent spending increase and his massive increases in regulations have taken away the money for investment.

Bush's attitude was shown most vividly as he talked about how to help America's cities.

He touted "this new program, 'Weed and Seed,' which I think has broad support. The name implies you weed out the criminals, you seed the areas. And there are some 40 different programs I think are connected with our weed-and-seed initiative that would help, from labor to health to certain education programs."

Imagine trying to coordinate 40 bureaucratic programs, involving thousands of government functionaries. No wonder the inner cities are in such a mess. The real "weeds" are these 40 programs! But that's how Bush thinks of the next four years he wants to impose on us, chanting his Washington Inside-the-Beltway mantra: programs, programs, programs, programs, programs, programs, programs, programs.

"Say — didn't I see one of those things advertised on late-night TV?"

End of term

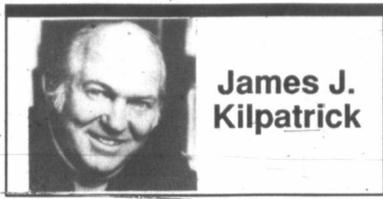

WASHINGTON - The Supreme Court folded up shop on June 29, leaving behind a remarkably unremarkable record for the 1991 term. Of the 108 opinions handed down, only one could be scored as much of a surprise. Otherwise it was mostly the same old fives and fours.

The surprise, at least to some observers, came on June 24 in a case involving prayers at public school commencements. It was a close call. In times past the court has found nothing unconstitutional in prayers by legislative chaplains. The court's own sessions are opened with a ritual invocation by the marshal. There was some speculation that justices Souter and Kennedy, and perhaps Justice O'Connor as well, would find nothing unconstitutional in the brief and non-sectarian prayers at the Providence, R.I., middle school.

As it turned out, Kennedy wrote a firm opinion finding that school officials were "pervasively" involved in a religious activity. Souter started everyone with his crisp assertion that the prayers were "flatly unconstitutional." O'Connor not only joined the court's opinion but also signed on to a concurring opinion by Justice Blackmun.

I thought the Providence case was wrongly decided. The facts were far removed from previous cases involving daily readings from the Bible or daily recitation of an official prayer. My guess was that a majority would regard the school ceremony as just that — a ceremony involving no real participation by a captive audience. I guessed wrong.

Since the term's end, much commentary has focused upon the supposed new triumvirate of Kennedy, O'Connor and Souter. It strikes me as a bit premature to see them as a controlling "moderate middle." The court divided 5-4 in 16 cases. If this is a new bloc, it is not yet a cohesive bloc.

The high court is a court in transition. The past six years have marked the retirement of Chief Justice Burger after 17 years on the bench, Justice Brennan (34 years), Justice Marshall (24 years) and Justice Powell (15 years). That adds up to 90 years of institutional memory and experience.

In their places we have Justices Kennedy, Scalia, Souter and Thomas. Scalia by this time has firmly established his position on the predictable right with Chief Justice Rehnquist, but the others cannot yet be tidily labeled.

The term reconfirmed a couple of eternal verities. The first is that justices will not stay tied to the philosophy of the presidents who appoint them. Witness Justice Souter. The second is that contrary to the pretty myth, ours is in truth a government of men and not of laws.

Justice Blackmun, the most untied justice in the court's history, gave the game away in the Pennsylvania abortion case. He expressed his fear that on his death or retirement, a right-to-life justice would be appointed in his stead. With such a replacement, the constitutional doctrines of Roe v. Wade would be swept away — not because the Constitution had changed, but because the judges had changed.

The term saw no records set. The 108 opinions in the term just ended compared to 118 a year ago. In this century the court's output has ranged from 65 opinions in 1953 to 230 in 1911. As a measure of the court's workload, the figures are meaningless. The justices spend as much time on the cases they decline as they spend on the cases they review.

One statistic is of continuing concern. Members of the court fritter away a vast deal of time and intellectual energy in writing dissenting and concurring opinions. Often their judgments are so splintered that lower court judges shake their heads in disbelief.

In one entirely typical case (it happened to involve the sentencing of juveniles), Justice Souter announced the judgement of the court. Six members agreed in part. Scalia filed an opinion concurring in part and concurring in the judgment. Thomas filed his own separate concurrence. O'Connor wrote a dissent in which Blackmun joined.

The court regularly serves up such scrambled eggs. The term saw 87 dissenting opinions and 70 concurring opinions. Justices Stevens and Blackmun felt such an irresistible urge to write that they churned out 91 opinions between them, but only 22 of these were opinions for the court.

All in all, a good term but not a great term. The court erected no landmarks, but it toppled none either. The country should contentedly settle for that.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Monday, July 13, the 195th day of 1992. There are 171 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On July 13, 1863, rioting against the Civil War military draft erupted in New York City. The violence resulted in the deaths of about 1,000 people over three days.

On this date:

In 1787, Congress enacted an ordinance governing the Northwest Territory.

In 1878, the Treaty of Berlin amended the terms of the Treaty of San Stefano, which had ended the Russo-Turkish War of 1877-78.

In 1960, Massachusetts Sen. John F. Kennedy won the Democratic presidential nomination at his party's convention in Los Angeles.

In 1967, 25 years ago, race-related rioting broke out in Newark, N.J. By the time the violence ended July 17, 27 people had been killed.

When you feel 'dizzy'

The mechanisms in your head that keep you forked-end down are very complex. Eyes, ears and neck muscles work together to keep you upright.

So it is that many disorders might cause you to feel dizzy. Of course, any dizziness that lasts for more than six weeks should be evaluated by a doctor. But most such disorders are nothing to worry about, and the most common one you can take care of yourself.

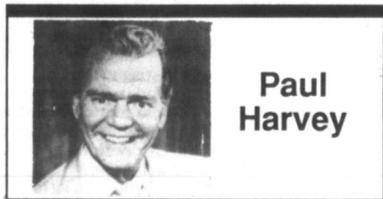

Benign Positional Vertigo is the fancy name for the dizziness you may feel when rolling over in bed or when abruptly getting up from a seated to a standing position.

It can be a scary experience to feel the world spinning. The dizziness might be accompanied by nausea.

You begin to imagine all sorts of frightening possibilities — brain tumor, stroke, "am I dying?"

Actually, the only real danger from Benign Positional Vertigo is that, arising abruptly, you might fall and hurt yourself.

Mayo Clinic, Scottsdale, sees hundreds of anxious patients — some of them airline pilots fearful their professional performance might be impaired.

Paul Harvey

Try this:

While sitting on the edge of a bed, sofa or couch, lie down with the left ear down and the feet up. Stay put for half a minute or so. Should dizziness occur remain in that position until it subsides.

Then sit up. If the dizziness returns, remain sitting until it subsides.

Then do the same thing again — this time lie with right ear down. Next, lie back with head back in a chin-up position. Legs may be flat or knees up if more comfortable — repeat the up-and-down-and-up exercise until the movement no longer results in dizziness.

This should relocate the calcium crystals in your ears. If not, repeat the exercise four or five times.

Do this three times a day, and Dr. Marion says the discomfort should take care of itself.

Dr. Marion would want me to repeat that dizziness may sometimes be a symptom of some other disorder — Meniere's Syndrome, for example.

Any imbalance that persists for more than six weeks deserves medical attention.

Benign Positional Vertigo you can treat yourself.

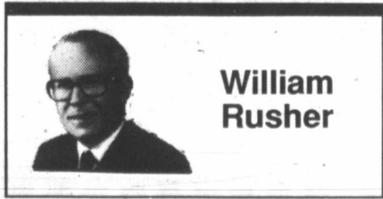

Did Bush assist the Iraqi military?

As Election Day draws closer, our Democrat-controlled Congress is losing what little resemblance it had to a normal legislative body. From the passage of a so-called "Freedom of Choice Act," which President Bush is sure to veto, to the cut-off of all funds for Vice President Quayle's Council on Competitiveness, Congress' actions have almost nothing to do with reality or country's needs, and absolutely everything to do with winning the election.

In this regard, one of the most important projects of the Democratic leadership is its effort to establish that the Bush administration was actually engaged in building Iraq up until shortly before Iraq's invasion of Kuwait. This is supposed to demonstrate the presence of inexcusable folly right in the heart of President Bush's field of alleged expertise: foreign affairs.

To this end, a House subcommittee has been taking evidence for months, and now (predictably) there are calls for a special council to be appointed to look into the subject in still greater depth. If one is designated, he will find no crimes; but his report won't be issued for a year or more, and meanwhile the Democrats can wave the question in voters' faces as a supposed "issue" from now till Election Day.

In attacking Mr. Bush's record on Iraq, the Democrats have more at stake than just a talking point. The president's performance in the Kuwait crisis and the subsequent Gulf War is sure to be regarded historically as the principal jewel in the crown of his administration, and knocking it loose is a major strategic objective of his foes. Moreover, most Democratic members of Congress are hopelessly compromised on the issue by their own votes to oppose military action against Iraq and stick instead to futile economic sanctions. To regain the moral high ground by condemning Mr. Bush's pre-war policy of friendliness toward Iraq is thus an objective of the very highest importance.

Like most Democratic ploys, this one counts on the American people being too stupid to understand the true situation. During almost the entire decade of the 1980s, Iraq was at war with its neighbor Iran. And it doesn't take a memory expert to recall that, during those same years, Iran was in the grip of the Ayatollah Khomeini, an elderly fanatic whose favorite term for the United States was "the great Satan."

In those circumstances the Reagan and Bush administrations took care (with little or no Democratic opposition, by the way) to remain on as good terms with Iraq as the situation permitted. While Iraq's war with Iran was on, this included aiding Iraq discreetly, mostly with intelligence information. Afterward Mr. Bush extended what he has called "the hand of friendship" to Saddam Hussein.

It is interesting to speculate what the congressional Democrats would be saying today if Mr. Bush had failed to do this. They would be charging that we gave Saddam Hussein "no choice" but to embark on a policy of aggression — we positively drove him to invade Kuwait. Many of the same hypocrites who are now condemning him for offering friendship to Iraq would be demanding a special prosecutor to find out why he didn't offer it.

Not all foreign policy initiatives succeed. There are independent countries out there, with their own interests and ambitions and not all of them are unqualified admirers of the United States. All that any American administration can do is try to get along with such countries as best it can. If the administration is Republican, and that policy of friendship fails with regard to some country, and America subsequently scores a magnificent military victory over that country, you can count on the very same Democratic politicians who opposed the war to complain to high heaven about the policy.

Comparing prices and products builds resourcefulness in young people

Learning to use time and knowledge to compare prices and products develops youth's resourcefulness. When shopping with your child, you have a great opportunity to develop their skill in finding the best buy for the money. Choose an item that is something they recognize, but not something they are trying to buy, such as milk or bread. Ask them to tell you which brand, or which size container is the best buy? They may have learned some buying skills at school. Let them show you what they know. Ask them to share how they made their choice.

Take a few minutes to show them the unit price label on the shelf. This helps them spot quickly which one costs the least per ounce or pound. Then ask them how much they think the family needs. Would one size be better than another for your family? Would one type be better than another for your family? Would one type be better for the use intended? Is there some other reason why the lowest price may not be the best buy? Share how sometimes our personal preference for a taste or texture of a food influences our choice about which one is the best buy. Some people prefer one brand or type of product over another and are willing to pay more for it.

Explain how the giant, economy size may not be the best buy if you need only half as much. Help them see that products that look alike may have different purposes, such as skim, low-fat, and homogenized milk. Show how other products that may look entirely different can be a better buy, such as non-fat dry milk for cooking; or, canned rather than fresh tomatoes for soups and sauces. If you are shopping for clothing, let them compare the cost of brand name items with the cost of similar items having a store or generic brand. Let them figure out whether it is more important to them to have more of the items (jeans, shirts, shoes) at a lower price, or fewer at a higher price. Which is more important to them and what trade-off are they willing to make to get what they want.

Next, choose an item on your list and give them the responsibility for finding the best buy. Build their confidence by showing them how much they saved the family by making the best buy.

Youth are drawn to advertisements and coupons. Resourceful youth are able to recognize when these sales tools are helpful to the consumer.

Think with your children about a family goal and start teaching them how they can help the family reach this goal. Teach them to be resourceful shoppers, spotting sales, advertisements and coupons for things the family will be buying. The money they help family save from sale prices and coupons can be added to family savings for the goal they've chosen.

Planning as a family, list the items you will buy this month in addition to your weekly food shopping list. Show your children how to check the expiration date for coupons and set up a box or envelope for them to store clipped coupons. Have a place for family members to place magazines and newspapers that are ready for clipping.

Set a time to share "shoppers' news" each day. This is a time for children to report on sales for the family to consider, if they have found something at a good price the family plans to buy. Most sales have cut-off dates. Check advertisements to decide why the sale price is being offered. Will it not likely be at this low price again soon? Is it something that is used frequently by stores to pull consumers into the store, hoping you will switch to a nicer, higher-priced product?

Use shoppers' news time to organize coupons clipped. Show your children how to organize coupons in the order that items are typically found in the stores where you shop, so price comparisons can be made easily at the store.

On shopping day, involve your children in locating the items that they have found sales ads or coupons for, and involve them in deciding if it truly is a good buy. Help them compare to see if the product price is lower than other options after the coupon is used, or does the coupon require them to buy a size or quantity the family does not need. Let them add up savings that come from their efforts, and record on a chart at home their contributions to the family's goals.

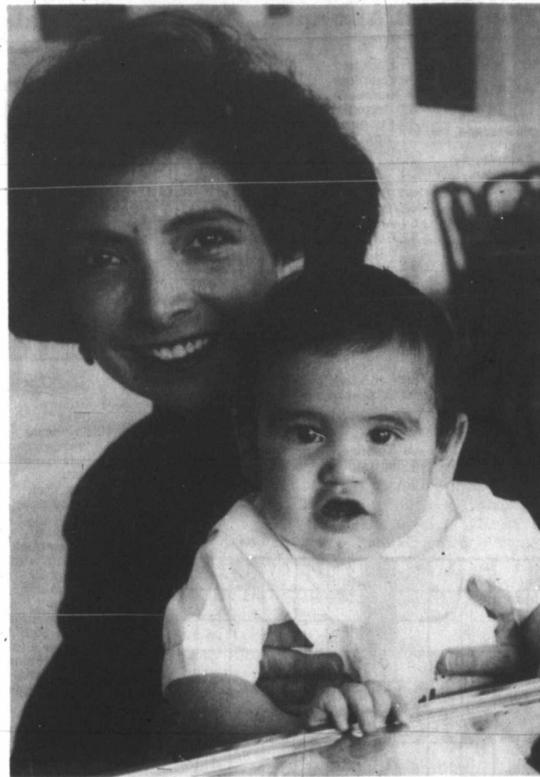

Resourceful youth develop skills in spotting money saving ads and coupons. They also are quick to recognize when these sales tools truly save them money and when ads might encourage someone to buy something they really did not need or plan to buy.

Life takes a new turn for Harmon family

Editor's note: Rachel Harmon is the daughter-in-law of Pampan Ruth Durkee and wife Pampan native David Harmon. After 19 years of childless marriage, the Harmon family began considering adoption agencies. Instead, David Harmon, Jr. was born on Oct. 1, 1991. This story recounts the change in Mrs. Harmon's life after her very pleasant surprise.

Rachel Harmon and nine-month old David. She put her career on the shelf to be a full-time mom.

Rachel Harmon has put away her education books and has taken up a different kind of reading - parenting books.

"Because I believe it's such a challenge, I want to know all I can about it," said Harmon, who retired from her nine-year position as Hardwick Elementary principal last week to become a full-time mom. "You go to school for a long time to prepare to be a principal. But other than just reading about it, I don't know how to be a parent."

Enduring a risky pregnancy, Harmon, 41, had her only child, David Jr., about eight months ago.

The decision to place a 20-year career on the shelf was difficult, acknowledged Harmon, but she felt it was her responsibility as a parent.

"There was a lot of emotion attached to it," she said of the decision. "I feel very responsible as a parent, and I can't give the responsibility of raising my child to someone else. These formative years are my job."

Harmon plans to return to education in about five years.

"That's my goal right now. But I don't know what I'm heading for," she added with a laugh.

Sam Ayers, Harmon's assistant principal for the past two years and her replacement, said the principal will be missed.

"That's a tough decision," Ayers said of Harmon's departure. "But it's one that I have a lot of respect for. It's something that she wants to do, and I think she'll do a wonderful job at it."

"She has always been very professional, organized and supportive of the faculty, students and parents. They definitely grew to love Rachel, and they will miss her."

Before coming to Hardwick Elementary, Harmon worked as a demonstration teacher for grades kindergarten through sixth. In that role, she trained teachers throughout the district. Harmon also taught five years at Mahon Elementary.

Letting go of her tie to the LISD will be tough, Harmon said, adding that she'll miss striving for goals in education.

"I feel like we've accomplished so much here," she said. "I'm leaving a wonderful school, wonderful parents and staff. For that reason, it's a very hard thing to do."

Irritated readers unleash pet language peeves

DEAR READERS: I recently wrote a column on the misuse of words, grammatical goofs and assorted speech irritants, and invited my readers to send me their pet peeves concerning same. Well, here's Collection No. 2:

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

The most annoying speech irritant is still all those "you knows?" and a close second is beginning every sentence with "basically." People who say, "I could care less" mean to convey that they care so little they could not care less - which is what they should have said in the first place.

Most people, even those in the jewelry business, pronounce "jewelry" as "jool-ree" instead of "jool-uh-ree." And many people in the real estate business pronounce "realtor" as "reel-a-tor"; it's "reel-tor," really it is!

If you think "epitome" means the ultimate, the tops or the height of - go stand in the corner. "Epitome" means a person or thing that is typical of, or possesses to a high degree the features of a whole class.

The word "arthritis" is correctly pronounced "arth-right-us" (three syllables); so why do so many people insist on pronouncing it "arthuritis"? The same for the word "athlete" - not "ath-a-leet."

My pet peeve is the lawyer or journalist who uses the word "gentleman" as follows: "According to the police report, a masked gentleman knocked the elderly woman to the ground and fled with her purse." (Some "gentleman"!)

The word "nauseous" is often misused, even by well-educated professionals, instead of the word "nauseated." Here's a way to remember the distinction: If you are nauseated, you are sick. If you are nauseous, you make other people sick.

Regardless of what you read in the ads, "Where it's at" is incorrect. "Where it is" is correct. Forget the "at."

Do you know what an asterisk is? Of course you do. It's the little star-like symbol used in print to indicate the omission of letters or words. (It looks like ".*.") But why do most people pronounce it "ass-trick"?

The confusion with "lie" and "lay" is still baffling to many. I explained that people lie down and chickens lay eggs. A reader now informs me, "People lay money on the counter, dogs lie by the fire, and magazines are found lying on the table. All last summer, I lay in my hammock and didn't produce a single egg."

Prominent newscasters have said "most unique" and "partially destroyed." "Unique" and "destroyed" are absolute terms and cannot be qualified, any more than "pregnant" or "dead."

Please do not confuse "momento" and "memento." A momento is a unit of time (Spanish: "uno momento"). A memento is a souvenir, a memory.

Finally, the misplaced "only" is a common gaffe. For example, the one-time popular song, "I Only Have Eyes for You" is meant to say, "I have eyes for you only." For a lover to croon, "I only have eyes for you" is to say: "I have no lips, no arms, or anything else - only eyes - for you," which would be a grave disappointment for both of them.

Never say, "It's a true fact." If it's a fact, it's true. Also, forget "old antique." If it's an antique - it's old.

In closing, for heaven's sake - never say, "for heaven's sake." Some people do, so for heaven's sake, watch your language. And, if you have a pet peeve I haven't mentioned, please send it to me.

DEAR ABBY: I want to warn your readers about telephone calls promising awards of money or trips. The caller will talk for some time to convince you that he is sincere, then he will ask you to send a certain amount of money.

I was a sucker to this scheme, which cost me $400. I was asked to send the money Federal Express. (I think they use Federal Express so they can't be charged with mail fraud.)

I asked the party to send the information to me in a certified letter and was told they didn't do business that way.

A SUCKER IN LOCKPORT, N.Y.

DEAR SUCKER: You are very hard on yourself to call yourself a sucker; but you are very generous to warn others.

DEAR ABBY: One more letter about how some people try to take advantage of teen-age baby sitters:

I baby-sat a lot when I was in junior high school. I never just sat; I always straightened up the place and did the dishes after I got the kids bathed and put to bed.

One Saturday night when I arrived to baby-sit, "Mrs. Doe" informed me that they and their out-of-town guests were going 60 miles east to ski. The last thing she said before leaving was, "It's going to take us an hour and a half to get there, so we will start paying you then."

Needless to say, that was the last time I baby-sat for that family. My parents told me I should have replied, "Please give me a call at my house when you get there, and I will go right over to your house and start watching your children."

GLENWOOD SPRINGS, COLO.

This one's for everybody, from teens to seniors! To purchase Abby's new booklet, "The Anger in All of Us and How to Deal With It," send a business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Anger Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Larry Laoretti raises his arms in victory.

U.S. SENIOR OPEN Laoretti posts runaway win

By BILL STIEG
Associated Press Writer

BETHLEHEM, Pa. (AP) — Add Larry Laoretti to the list of home-sprung heroes of golf.

What John Daly did for the "grip it and rip it" approach with his PGA title last year, Laoretti did for fat cigars and fast play Sunday with a runaway four-stroke victory in the U.S. Senior Open at Saucon Valley Country Club.

Laoretti, who has an endorsement deal with a tobacco company, puffed his way through seven stogies, three birdies and a final-round 68 that left the likes of Jack Nicklaus, Dave Stockton, Chi Chi Rodriguez and Gary Player gasping for breath.

"For the man to play 9-under is just phenomenal. It's just incredible scoring," said Player, the winner of nine majors, two Senior Opens and 16 senior tour events who finished five strokes back Sunday in a four-way tie for third.

Laoretti's biggest previous win? "Maybe a $5 Nassau somewhere," he said, though he had won a couple of local tournaments in 30 years as a club pro, and had three seconds on the Senior PGA Tour last year.

Laoretti is another everyman champion, the easygoing guy at the club who never takes the cigar out of his mouth and whose ball is in the air before his partner has even found the 150-yard marker.

"The more time I have to think about a shot, the worse I do," said Laoretti, 53, who was a club pro in New York and Florida before giving it all up three years ago to take a shot at the big senior money.

He'd won more than a half-million dollars in two seasons before Sunday's $130,000 check.

But he and his wife, Susan, their 2 1/2-year-old son, Lonnie, and caddie Bob O'Brien still go from tourney to tourney in a motor home. Their base for the past week: Site No. 43, Quaker Woods Campground.

There will be no change. "For me, traveling in a motor home is first class," Laoretti said. "We like it that way."

For a man who spends as much time over the ball as, well, a 2 1/2-year-old, the key to Laoretti's success Sunday was summed up in two ironic words: "Patience prevailed," he said.

His consistent driving and iron play led to 11 straight pars on the 6,700-yard, par-71 course. Then he hit an 8-iron to two feet on the par-5 12th for birdie to go 7-under. Playing partner Al Geiberger who was tied with Laoretti for the lead, bogeyed the hole for a two-stroke swing.

Laoretti added a 14-footer for birdie on No. 16, and the 20-footer on the 18th merely capped the day and gave Susan an excuse to run across the green and hug her husband, though a bemused Geiberger had yet to putt out.

Other contenders found different ways to fade or fall short. Runnerup Jim Colbert shot a 32 on the back for a 69 and 279 total, but a double-bogey from the trees on the par-4 No. 5 haunted him.

Nicklaus made a customary charge, shooting a 67, but took bogey-6 on No. 12 when his tee shot clipped some trees. He was in third at 280.

Dave Stockton, the leader after two rounds at 9-under before a disastrous 77 on Saturday, regained his putting touch Sunday but missed nine greens in a round of 70, finishing in the tie for third.

Geiberger followed his bogey at the 12th with another on the 13th and had a 72 to complete the group at 280.

As Geiberger pointed out on Saturday, there are different categories of players on the senior tour: superstars who attract television and big galleries and big purses; the steady pros like himself, Stockton and Colbert, and club pros finding new life.

"He's one of those Cinderella stories of the senior tour," Geiberger said.

Laoretti said he never tried to play on the PGA Tour. "I was a club pro and happy to be a club pro," he said. "But he also said: 'I've always regretted that I didn't go try.'"

Laoretti said he played in eight tour events and one U.S. Open, missing the cut at Winged Foot in 1974.

The years as a club pro, going through a divorce, working on his game in preparation for the senior tour while his wife supported them—all this helped lead to Sunday's triumph.

"He's a cool cucumber," said Susan Laoretti, 29, who met him when he gave her a golf lesson and caddied for him for a year and a half, even while eight months pregnant. "He never is uptight. He's really calm. He's truly a happy-go-lucky guy."

Said Geiberger: "He has no fear. He chomps that cigar, he comes up there, gets his yardage and whacks it."

"He can play faster than anyone I've ever seen. He's like an old gunslinger out there."

"You've got to hit it sooner or later," Laoretti said, "might as well hit it sooner."

And as for hitting the jackpot, better late than never.

Lino keeps overall lead in Tour de France race; Nevens wins eighth stage

KOBLENZ, Germany (AP) — Pascal Lino held onto the yellow jersey as the overall leader of the Tour de France on Sunday, but the French cyclist will be hard-pressed to stay there with a pivotal time trial next.

Most of the favored contenders for this year's championship kept one eye on the route and one on the challenges in the eighth stage, a 128-mile leg from Valkenburg, the Netherlands, to Koblenz. Jan Nevens of Belgium won it in 4 hours, 45 minutes, 23 seconds, with Jesper Skibby of Denmark .03 behind.

In the overall standings, Jens Heppner of Germany moved into second place, 2:51 behind Lino, and Skibby took over third, 2:54 behind.

The rest of the top 10 overall included Steve Bauer of Canada, 3:11 behind; Yvon Ledanois of France, 3:23; Claudio Chiappucci of Italy, 3:34; Stephen Roche of Ireland, 4:11; Richard Virenque of France, 4:15; Alberto Leanzabarmuta of Spain, 4:24; and Greg LeMond of the United States, 4:29.

LeMond, a three-time champion, world champion Gianni Bugno of Italy and defending champion Miguel Indurain finished in a pack about four minutes back. They are the favorites Monday, though, and Lino isn't given much hope of retaining his lead.

Lino lost more than six minutes to the leaders in each of the time trials last year, and he knows the leaderboard could change dramatically again.

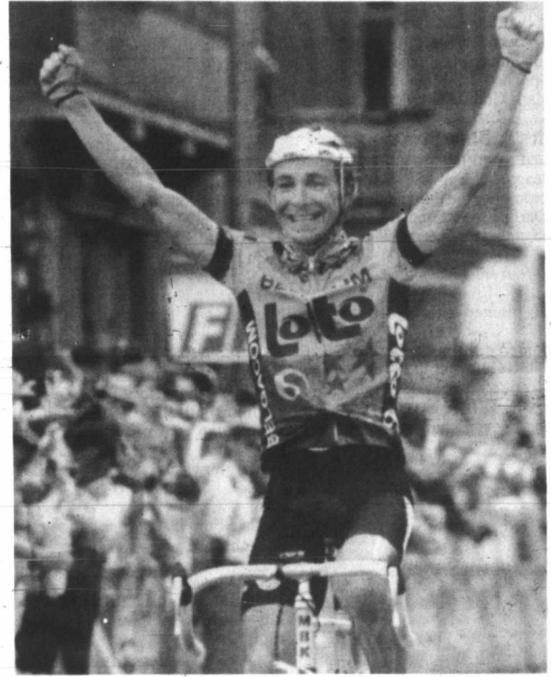

"We will all see everything clearer tomorrow night in Luxembourg," he said. The other individual time trial is scheduled for July 24, two days before the end of the race.

LeMond will start Monday 35 seconds ahead of No. 11 Bugno and 64 seconds ahead of No. 12 Indurain. The trio trails Lino by roughly 4 1/2 to 5 1/2 minutes, but figures to put a big dent in that, if not erase it completely.

Indurain won both individual time trials last year on his way to the title. LeMond was second and third in them, and Bugno was fifth and second.

Eric Breukink, who had to withdraw from last year's race when he and his PDM team all suddenly developed stomach problems, may also get into contention. Breukink won both time trials in 1990 and stands 20th this year, 6:29 back.

LeMond has history on his side. He has never finished worse than fifth in a time trial, and in 1989 he won them both, including perhaps the most dramatic in Tour history. That was when he overcame a 50-second deficit and beat Laurent Fignon by eight seconds in the closest Tour ever.

Belgium's Jan Nevens crosses the finish line in Koblenz, Germany to win the eighth stage of the Tour de France cycling race. The stage ran from Valkenburg, Netherlands, 128 miles to Koblenz. Pascal Lino of France retained the yellow jersey for the sixth straight day.

Fernandez wins Slims net crown

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Mary Joe Fernandez beat U.S. Olympic doubles partner Zina Garrison in straight sets Sunday to win the Virginia Slims Hall of Fame Invitational.

In the men's final, defending champion Bryan Shelton beat Alex Antonitsch 6-4, 6-4. Shelton used 11 aces to help win 83 percent of his first serves, becoming the tournament's first repeat champion since its inception in 1976.

The victory in the exhibition tournament was especially satisfying to Fernandez, hospitalized for heat exhaustion last year after losing in three sets to Rosalyn Fairbank-Nideffer.

"The weather was a lot easier," Fernandez said after beating Garrison 6-4, 6-4. "Always when you have a bad experience somewhere you're a little hesitant."

Fernandez, the world's seventh-ranked player, and 14th-ranked Garrison played two very different sets.

In the opener, each player held serve until Garrison was broken in the 10th game. Garrison saved one set point, but Fernandez rifled consecutive backhand passing shots to win the set.

After Fernandez held serve to go ahead 2-1 in the second set, the players traded seven consecutive service breaks. The last came in the 10th game when Garrison couldn't handle consecutive forehands to her backhand corner.

Blouser gives Braves power boost against Cubs

By The Associated Press

The Atlanta Braves got a power boost from an unlikely source.

Jeff Blouser, who entered the game with only 39 homers in his six-year career, blasted three homers in a 7-4 victory over the Chicago Cubs.

Blouser capped his amazing day with a three-run shot in the 10th inning.

He is the second major leaguer to hit three homers in a game this season — Juan Gonzalez of Texas did it against Minnesota on June 7 — and the first Brave to accomplish the feat since Jeff Treadway against Philadelphia on May 26, 1990.

What made Blouser's blast even more surprising was his recent slump. The light-hitting infielder was batting .163 (8 for 49) in his previous 23 games.

"I've not hit well this season," Blouser said. "But this is a nice way to go into the (All-Star) break. ... I guessed right a few times today."

Blouser, who had only four homers in the Braves' first 85 games this season, hit solo homers in the second and sixth innings before his game-winning blast off Paul Assenmacher (2-2).

"It was all Jeff Blouser today," Braves manager Bobby Cox said. "He played great in the field and he hit three home runs."

Elsewhere, it was Pittsburgh 7, Cincinnati 6 in 10 innings; Houston 3, New York 1; Los Angeles 9, St. Louis 0; San Francisco 4, Montreal 0, and San Diego 8, Philadelphia 2.

Braves 7, Cubs 4

At Chicago, the Braves completed a four-game sweep of the Cubs.

Terry Pendleton and Dave Justice opened the 10th with singles off Assenmacher, who then retired pinch-hitter Ron Gant and Damon Berryhill before giving up the homer to Blouser.

Kent Mercker (3-0), the fifth Atlanta reliever, worked two scoreless innings for the win. Alejandro Pena got the last three outs for his seventh save.

Rick Wilkins, who hit a two-run homer in the sixth, singled home a run for the Cubs in the seventh to tie it 4-4.

Cubs starter Frank Castillo went six innings, giving up four runs on six hits. Braves starter Mike Bielecki, who lasted only two innings after straining a back muscle, gave up one run on four hits.

Pirates 7, Reds 6

At Cincinnati, Barry Bonds tied it with a two-out, three-run triple in the ninth and Gary Redus won it with a two-run homer in the 10th.

Bonds tied the game 5-5 with a bases-loaded triple off Norm Charlton, the Reds' All-Star closer. Redus' game-winning homer, his first of the year, came off Tim Belcher (8-7).

The Pirates won the last three games in the four-game series between the NL's division leaders, leaving them with a split of the 12-game season series.

Bob Patterson (5-1) pitched a perfect ninth for Pittsburgh, but was replaced by Stan Belinda after giving up a leadoff single to Hal Morris in the 10th. Belinda gave up a sacrifice fly to Joe Oliver, but got the final three outs for his 13th save.

Dodgers 9, Cardinals 0

At Los Angeles, last-minute sub Mitch Webster drove in two runs and Kevin Gross pitched his second shutout as the Dodgers completed their longest homestand since moving to LA.

Webster filled in for slumping Darryl Strawberry, who came off the disabled list last Monday after missing 48 games with a herniated disk in his back. Webster's two RBIs were more than Strawberry has in 24 at-bats since his return.

The Dodgers finished the 18-day homestand with an 12-10 mark, leaving them 13 games behind division-leading Cincinnati. LA is entering the All-Star break in last place for the first time since 1986.

Gross (5-9) won for only the second time in his last eight starts. He gave up nine hits, struck out five and walked four.

Giants 4, Expos 0

At San Francisco, Billy Swift scattered seven hits over seven innings and won for the first time since May 7.

The Expos, shut out in their last two games, head into the All-Star break with a 20-inning scoreless drought and an injured star. Larry Walker, their All-Star outfielder, left the game in the third inning with a sore muscle in his left leg.

Chris James homered and doubled for the Giants, who have won seven of their last nine to pull within one victory of the .500 mark.

Swift (7-1) pitched out of trouble in the first, third and fourth as the Expos stranded six runners in the first four innings. The Giants turned four double plays behind the right-hander, who got 19 of 21 outs on groundballs.

Astros 3, Mets 1

At Houston, hot-hitting Ken Caminiti tripled in a run in the first inning and Butch Henry pitched seven strong innings for the Astros.

Caminiti is 9 for 24 (.375) in his last six games.

Henry (3-6) gave up one run on six hits, struck out six and walked one. Al Osuna pitched the eighth and Xavier Hernandez closed it out for his fourth save. Loser Sid Fernandez (7-8) went six innings, giving up three runs on four hits.

Houston took a 2-0 lead in the first on Caminiti's RBI triple and a sacrifice fly by Jeff Bagwell.

The Astros scored another run in the second when Luis Gonzalez tripled and came home on a sacrifice fly by Casey Candaele.

The Mets got their only run in the fourth when Eddie Murray hit his ninth home run of the season. It was Murray's 40th homer, tying him with Duke Snider for 23rd on the career list.

Padres 8, Phillies 2

At Jack Murphy Stadium, site of Tuesday's All-Star game, Gary Sheffield had three hits including his 18th homer, and Jerald Clark also connected as San Diego handed Philadelphia its eighth straight loss.

Munoz hits three-run homer to spark Twins past Orioles

By The Associated Press

Baltimore manager Johnny Oates wouldn't hesitate to do it again and again ... that is, intentionally walk Minnesota's Kent Hrbek in the first inning of a scoreless game with a runner on third, two outs and Bob Milacki pitching.

"I'd do it 100 times out of 100," Oates said Sunday after Pedro Munoz ruined the unconventional strategy, slamming a three-run homer that sparked the Twins to a 9-4 victory over the Orioles.

Hrbek has been walked intentionally in many different situations during his 11-year career, but he couldn't remember ever getting a free pass in the first inning. The reason? His .391 lifetime batting average against Milacki.

His .350 average against the Orioles this year also was a factor.

"When I got to first base, Randy Milligan told me, 'We've got to stop the bleeding sometime.' It surprised me," Hrbek said. "I guess they were just playing the percentages."

"What's the difference if it's the first or the seventh?" Oates said. "You've got a guy coming up behind him that you've gotten out all year, and there were two out."

In other American League games Sunday, the final day of play before the All-Star break, it was Oakland 8, Toronto 0; Boston 3, Chicago 0, Seattle 7, New York 6; Kansas City 5, Milwaukee 1; California 5, Detroit 4 in 10 innings, and Cleveland 6, Texas 3.

Munoz, who was hitting .222 with one RBI in 27 at-bats against Baltimore, crossed up Oates by slamming a 2-2 pitch into the left-field seats.

"The bottom line is Milacki made a bad pitch with two strikes," Oates said.

Brian Harper had two hits and two RBIs for the Twins, who are 13-3 over their last 16 games. The Orioles got a three-run homer from Leo Gomez.

Tom Edens (5-0) pitched 3 2-3 innings of one-hit ball in relief, and Mark Guthrie finished with 2 2-3 hitless innings.

Ron Darling pitched a two-hitter and Mark McGwire hit his major league-leading 28th home run as Oakland defeated Toronto for the third straight time.

The only hits off Darling were Candy Maldonado's single leading off the eighth and Manny Lee's single leading off the ninth.

Mike Bordick had four hits and scored three runs for the A's.

Darling (8-7) also pitched a two-hitter against Boston May 24.

McGwire, who homered in the seventh off Bob Macdonald, also doubled in a run in the second off Pat Hengen (5-1).

Red Sox 3, White Sox 0

Frank Viola pitched seven shutout innings and Tom Brunansky and Bob Zupic homered for Boston.

Viola (8-5) gave up three hits, struck out three, walked two and allowed only two runners past first base in seven innings.

Greg Harris allowed one hit over the last two innings for his first save of the season.

Brunansky, who hit a grand slam in Boston's 11-2 win Saturday, homered into the Red Sox bullpen in the second inning Sunday, his fifth homer of the season, off Wilson Alvarez (2-3).

Mariners 7, Yankees 6

Jay Buhner's three-run homer in the seventh inning led the Mariners.

Buhner's homer was his 15th of the season, third in the four-game series and eighth in his career against his former team.

Erik Hanson (7-11) was the winner, and Russ Swan pitched a hitless ninth for his fifth save.

Matt Nokes hit a two-run homer, his 12th, in the fifth, giving the Yankees a 5-4 lead. Dion James also homered for New York.

Buhner's homer, which followed singles by Edgar Martinez and Tino Martinez, came off Greg Cadaret (4-7).

Angels 5, Tigers 4 (10 innings)

Gary Gaetti's run-scoring single in the 10th inning gave the Angels the victory.

Junior Felix led off the 10th with a single off Mike Henneman (0-5) and stole second. With two outs, pinch-hitter John Morris was intentionally walked, but the strategy backfired when Gaetti bounced a single into left field and Felix beat Dan Gladden's throw to the plate.

Steve Frey (3-1) got the win with two innings of scoreless relief.

The Angels won despite their pitchers giving up a club record 13 walks.

Luis Sojo and Lee Stevens hit solo homers for the Angels. Detroit's Cecil Fielder hit a two-run homer, his 18th.

Royals 5, Brewers 1

Kevin Appier collected his 10th win of the season and Kevin McReynolds drove in two runs and scored one for Kansas City.

Appier (10-3) scattered six hits over five innings. Mike Boddicker permitted only one hit over the last four innings for his third save.

The Royals took a 4-0 lead against Bruce Ruffin (1-3) in the first. Brian McRae and Gregg Jefferies singled, George Brett walked and McReynolds hit a two-run single. Wally Joyner walked, loading the bases, and reliever James Austin walked Mike Macfarlane, forcing in Brett. McReynolds scored the final run on Curtis Wilkerson's fielder's choice.

Robin Yount's sacrifice fly in the first produced Milwaukee's only run. His 1,315th RBI broke a tie with Graig Nettles and Pete Rose for 51st on the all-time list.

Indians 6, Rangers 3

At Arlington Stadium, Mark Whiten had a three-run homer in the eighth inning as Cleveland beat Texas for the first time in seven games. The shot off Kenny Rogers (1-4) was Whiten's seventh of the year.

In the seventh inning, Whiten scored on a successful suicide squeeze by Sandy Alomar which put the Indians ahead 3-2.

Rafael Palmeiro was 5 for 5 with four singles and a triple for Texas, his fourth career five-hit game.

Steve Olin (3-3) worked two relief innings for the victory, while Eric Plunk got the final out for his second save.

Albert Belle added his 19th homer, a two-run shot in the fourth inning.

Texas second baseman Jeff Frye completes a double play throw to first base as Cleveland's Mark Whiten slides into Frye in second inning action Sunday night. Cleveland won, 6-3.

Soccer-style crowd problems hit Formula One auto racing

SILVERSTONE, England (AP) - Nigel Mansell raced across the finish line at 130 mph with hundreds of flag-waving fans were already on the track celebrating his victory.

Out on the circuit, other cars still in the race had to dodge fans who had spilled onto the track.

It wasn't Monza or Mexico City. This was Silverstone, England as soccer-style crowd problems hit Formula One auto racing.

The Brits had something big to celebrate: Nigel Mansell's victory in their own Grand Prix and the likelihood he will finally win the Formula One driving title after years of trying.

The crowd broke through security to run onto the track and ignored several announcements to clear the circuit while the other cars came speeding through.

Some 150,000 fans turned up to watch Mansell race away from his rivals for his seventh victory in nine races this season.

He refused to criticize the fans even though they risked injury or even death by running onto the track with the race for the minor placings still in progress.

"I did a fastest lap three laps from home just for the fans. I wondered whether to do it and then thought what the hell, let's really give it the big one."

"We were anxious about the fans at the end but we were going very slowly. I have not seen anything like this. As I International Automobile Federation came through Becketts (corner) I couldn't believe my eyes," said Mansell, who won by 39 seconds.

"I have never seen a British crowd so enthusiastic. I am not going to criticize them."

"That was the most incredible experience of a lifetime," the 38-year-old Englishman said.

Mansell even joked that the fans helped him along.

"Every time I got into the straight, my engine picked up 300 revs because the fans were blowing when I came to them. When the opposition came they blew the other way to slow them down."

Officials of Silverstone and of the International Automobile Federation (FISA), auto racing's world governing body, said they would investigate the track invasion.

"We were taken back by their reckless-ness," Silverstone spokeswoman Karina Phillips said. "The security stewarts were there in an instant but the force of the crowd was massive."

"We were not going to stop them coming onto the track because it's part of the fun, but their enthusiasm carried them away. Obviously we will look into it," Phillips said.

FISA president Max Mosley said his organization is "awaiting a report from our officials relating to this. When we have that we will give it our attention."

Mansell is heavily favored to become Britain's first Formula One champion since James Hunt in 1976.

Women's accomplishments bring attention, says Richards

By MICHELLE MITTELSTADT
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Texas Gov. Ann Richards said Sunday the spotlight is on women politicians this year because of what they do on the job — not just their victories at the ballot box.

The Democratic National Convention, which opens today with Gov. Bill Clinton of Arkansas all but assured of the presidential nomination, has a strong female presence this year.

Richards is chairwoman of the convention. Former Texas Congresswoman Barbara Jordan is one of three keynote speakers and many women will appear on the podium at Madison Square Garden during the four-day event. Tuesday night's session will be "kind of like women's bowling night," Richards said.

"I think that my success and the success of a lot of women in politics is as a result of our success in governing, more than winning," Richards told reporters. "We have shown that we are competent and can do a good job if we are given the opportunity."

The increased attention translates into greater national recognition, more chances to network and raise campaign funds, and an opportunity to bring more young women into politics, Richards said.

"There are going to be a lot of young women who are watching those television sets and they are going to see those leaders and they are going to say 'If she can do that, I can do that too,'" the governor said.

But Richards said, "Frankly this year I think it was very difficult to choose a woman as a vice presidential candidate."

Potential female vice presidential candidates such as Maryland Sen. Barbara Mikulski and Colorado Rep. Pat Schroeder are up for reelection and couldn't run for vice president without abandoning their current races, Richards said.

And, presumptive Democratic nominee Clinton needed to balance the ticket with someone experienced in foreign policy and Washington, she said.

The news conference came in the middle of a busy day for Richards, who pre-taped several interviews to appear on today's network morning news shows.

Sunday night, Richards hosted one of the most exclusive parties held during this festive convention week. The "Texas All-Star Gala" at Supper Club drew political luminaries from New York Gov. Mario Cuomo to Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt and Hillary Clinton, the nominee's wife.

Pope in hospital for diagnostic tests

ROME (AP) — Pope John Paul II was in the hospital for tests and possible surgery for an intestinal problem that could be related to his shooting 11 years ago.

After an overnight fast, diagnostic tests were expected to begin today, said staff at the Gemelli Clinic. Gemelli is the same Catholic hospital where the pope had been rushed for surgery when shot in the abdomen by a Turkish gunman in St. Peter's Square on May 13, 1981.

The 72-year-old pontiff announced the hospitalization himself, during his traditional Sunday appearance at a window of the Apostolic Palace overlooking the square. The announcement was seen as a way to dispel alarm and any air of secrecy over the health problem.

"I would like to tell you something confidentially. This evening I'm going to Gemelli Clinic for some diagnostic tests. I ask your prayers so that the Lord is near to me with his help and with his support," the pope said to the surprise of the tourists and pilgrims crowding the square.

Papal spokesman Joaquin Navarro said that if tests showed a need for surgery, the operation would be done while the pope was in the hospital, two miles north of the Vatican.

"I'm optimistic, but I'm speaking as the spokesman for the Holy See and not as his doctor," said Navarro, who holds a medical degree.

Navarro said it would likely be two or three days before a decision is reached on how to treat what he called a "dysfunction," or ailment, in the small intestine which possibly might be related to the old bullet wound.

The pope had been set to start a 10-day vacation in the Italian Alps on Wednesday, but that will have to be put off for now, Navarro said.

Hospital spokesman Giuseppe Pallanch said the pope would have a private room and a study, and two rooms would be used by the pope's Polish secretary and other staff. The Polish nuns who cook for him would also be in the hospital, Pallanch said.

Nurses snapping photographs, visiting relatives and some patients — including one in a wheelchair and another with an intravenous needle in his arm — welcomed the pope when his black Mercedes convertible rolled up in front of the hospital Sunday evening.

Except for the 1981 gunshot wound and a subsequent infection and followup surgery, the pope has enjoyed remarkably good health and stamina in his nearly 14-year-old papacy.

He is still planning long trips. On Saturday he announced that "God willing" he was going to the Baltics in 1993.

His daily agenda is thick with appointments and his pace is almost as fast as it was when the cardinal from Krakow, Poland, ascended to the papacy in 1978 at age 58. He has since visited 104 countries.

PRI admits defeat in Mexican state election

CHIHUAHUA, Mexico (AP) — For the first time in its 63-year history as Mexico's ruling party, the PRI today admitted defeat without a fight in gubernatorial elections in Mexico's largest, richest state.

Supporters of the main opposition party were in the streets overnight celebrating the victory of their candidate, Francisco Barrio, who claimed the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party cheated him of victory six years ago.

The results "don't favor us. If the tendency persists, we accept defeat," Mario Tarango Ramirez, PRI's Chihuahua state president, told reporters. "We would look bad to nitpick and fight for something we didn't win."

However, in the Pacific state of Michoacan, the PRI was ahead in early official returns in that gubernatorial race. But the opposition accused the PRI of widespread fraud.

The PRI has been in power since 1929, winning virtually all national and state elections, often through electoral fraud. Under President Carlos Salinas de Gortari, who came to power in 1988, it has accepted defeats in governor's races in Baja California and Guanajuato — but hotly contested the results in both states.

Salinas has sought to modernize Mexico and clean up its image abroad, now that his administration is negotiating a free trade agreement with Canada and the United States.

Initial official results in Chihuahua were expected later today, with final results on Wednesday. But unofficial results announced early today by the PRI showed that with 1,524 polling stations counted of a total of 3,095, the main opposition National Action Party, or PAN, had 161,148 votes while the PRI had 151,700.

"If this is the opinion of the voters, then it's the Chihuahuans who decide," Tarango said.

Results announced earlier by the PAN showed Barrio won 60 percent of the vote over PRI candidate Jesus Macias, based on returns from about 700 polling stations in the conservative state bordering Texas.

"This is a triumph for the people of Chihuahua," Barrio told reporters early today as thousands of his supporters poured into the streets of this state capital to celebrate victory.

"Even though the results aren't final, I can definitely say that the victory was ours," he said. "I hope we can establish cordial, respectful relations but I don't know if (the PRI) is ready to become an opposition party."

CORONADO HOSPITAL
HARVEY O. EDWARDS, M.D.

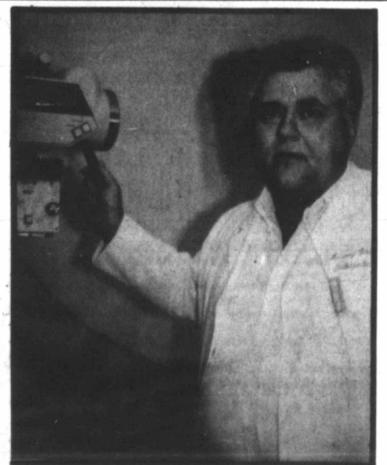

Orthopedics

The goal of the orthopedic physician is to bring about the greatest improvement for the patient with the least intervention. Dr. Edwards, a board-certified orthopedist, says that many conditions that orthopedic surgeons treat are never or rarely treated surgically. Sometimes medication, physical therapy, or rest is all that is needed. Non-surgical treatment is always the first choice when the patient's condition permits.

However, some problems require surgical intervention. One type of surgery that has prolonged the useful life and brought pain relief to millions of people is joint replacement. According to Dr. Edwards, the technique was first introduced in the late 1950s and improving technology has brought increasingly satisfactory results over the years. "With the high tech equipment, the physical therapy and occupational therapy departments, and the new inpatient rehabilitation unit at Coronado Hospital, we're able to provide excellent care for patients who need joint replacements," Dr. Edwards said.

Patients wishing to make an appointment with Dr. Edwards should call 806-665-0054.
