Pampa's passion is dolls

By ANGELA LEGGETT
Staff Writer

This woman loves her dolls more than little girls do.

Doris Gage takes the love that she shares with her family and orphans and contributes it to the dolls that she collects.

"I always wanted a doll, all my life," she said before she became the owner of nearly 200 dolls.

"Coming from a large family, we were tickled to get fruits and nuts for the holidays," she said about her childhood days. "That was our celebration."

Receiving gifts, especially treasured dolls, was something she never experienced until she was an adult, Doris said.

She and her husband Lyle are longtime Pampa residents.

Doris is from a family of 10 and she has a twin brother. She has also borne and raised three children and a foster son from the age of 13.

But her doll collecting began one day when her friend Annie Aull, also a doll collector, gave her a doll.

"She (Aull) was tired of listening to her say she wanted one," Misty Townson said. "My grandmother wanted her to know that she had better watch what she wished for, or it just might come true."

Doris recalled her childhood days when she always wanted a doll.

"When I heard a song about a young girl looking in a window, who wanted a doll, I just about cried because I knew what she was thinking," she said.

"We started keeping foster kids when our kids were in their teens," Doris said. "We didn't have trouble with any of them."

"I fostered nearly 200 children, now I am getting a doll for each child and I don't have to get up with them," she said.

The Gages opened their home to foster children for the High Plains Children Home and Family Services in Amarillo and the Department of Human Services in Pampa.

"Once I had a baby boy whose mom overdosed and she'd leave him in his crib for a week at a time. He would no longer be able to cry," she said.

As foster parents, there were more joys for the Gages than disappointments, however.

One holiday, Doris received more children than she thought possible.

"I got six foster kids on Mother's Day," she said. "They were from ages 3 to 11 and all from one family. They stayed with us while they were waiting for relatives."

"The first thing I did was worm and de-flea them," she said, referring to the foster children. "Then I washed their hair and sewed clothes for them. We also received clothes from friends."

"It only took one (doll)," Lyle said.

That's how the collection of nearly 200 dolls got started almost eight years ago.

"Annie gave me the biggest part (of my dolls)," Doris said.

The collection spills over into every room of the Gage's home, along with their pharmacy.

"We live in a big two-story house," she said, "with plenty of rooms to put the dolls in."

"I get most of them through the mail," she said.

"When I see one that I just can't live without..." she said, her voice drifting off.

"She better not order any more," Lyle said. "We are out of room."

"He doesn't really mean that," Doris was quick to say. "He likes them as much as I do."

"He has a large collection of elephants, some are on tables and statues," she added. "He has been doing it a long time. Longer than me."

Doris is drawn to the dolls by their facial expressions.

"I really like the baby dolls and moms with babies," she said. "The first one I ordered was a mother holding a baby, 'Mother's Love,' because I fostered children and I love them, young and old."

Like with any collection, Doris' comes with favorites.

"I got money from royalties. So, when we went to Branson, Mo., my husband told me to spend it, otherwise I knew it would just be gone. I bought a grandmother and grandfather doll who sit in wooden rockers."

The two sit about a foot and a half tall and contain every detail imaginable.

"I'm real fond of Grandpa, she looks like my grandma on my mother's side," Doris said.

Grandma and Grandpa come stuffed with beads. Some of their details include wire glasses, teeth, plaid shirts, and matching black, rubber shoes.

Grandpa sits with his legs crossed, holding a hand-carved fiddle in his hands with a cane sitting on the back of his rocker.

Grandma wears a skirt with wrinkled hose like socks, holding her handkerchief, wearing a hair net and reading the Bible.

Their hands have 14 karat gold rings to match and grandma's hands have purple streaks as veins," Doris said.

A recent gift she treasures is a thin doll on a stand with a tag attached to her wrist that says "Peggy Sue."

The tag attached to her wrist does not have to be read to know her name. It is clear by the way that she is dressed that she stepped out of the 1950s.

"My doll comes complete with a gray skirt, like the one I made my daughter when she was little," Doris said. "Even the men who come in the store remember the doll. Customers often say, 'Do you mind if we look?' or 'Are they for sale?'" she said.

"My daughter also had shoes like the doll and she means a whole lot," she said.

The doll looks like she belongs on the dance floor in 1950, complete with bobby socks, saddle oxfords, a record in her hand, pony tail, buttons on her fuzzy pink sweater and a white collar sticking out of the sweater.

Dolls, not unlike the numerous children the Gages fostered, come in all sizes, colors and shapes.

Doris' collection includes dolls from the size of 1 inch to the size of a 3-year-old child.

She has purchased approximately half of her dolls, mostly through mail orders, but has also received many as gifts.

"Almost everyone knows I collect them," she said. "Every doll I see, I want. I never get tired of them."

She could not decide which was her favorite, she replied, "Oh, all of them."

Her collection includes a variety of famous names including Shirley Temple, Princess Diana, son William, and Maggie and Giggles, cartoon characters.

She also has a Japanese doll, Chen from China, and a Bell of a Masquerade Ball.

"I have an Eskimo doll on its way and a Chinese girl coming in the mail from a friend of mine," she said.

Arabs show willingness to continue peace talks

By KARIN LAUB
Associated Press Writer

JERUSALEM (AP) - Palestinians today told U.S. Secretary of State James A. Baker III they were encouraged by Israeli moves to curb settlement construction, and were ready to resume peace talks by early August.

But the Palestinians added they were awaiting more concrete action from Israeli to improve the atmosphere for negotiations.

Palestinian leaders appeared to have softened their position on the settlement issue, moving away from threats to pull out of negotiations if the construction of Jewish settlements didn't come to a halt.

"We did not say we want to see a total settlement freeze before we negotiate," Hanan Ashrawi, spokeswoman of the Palestinian delegation, said at a news conference that followed her meeting with Baker.

"But we maintain our position that settlement activities and the peace process are incompatible, and we expressed this very clearly in the hope that Secretary Baker would also relay this to the Israeli side," she said.

Mrs. Ashrawi, in a telephone interview Sunday with The Associated Press, had suggested the Palestinians might pull out of the talks over the settlement issue.

She also had told the AP that her delegation would ask the United States not to give Israel $10 billion in loan guarantees unless settlement construction is stopped. At the news conference, she said she did not get such a commitment from Baker, but indicated she did not press the point.

The new Israeli Cabinet on Sunday announced a partial freeze on settlement building.

Today, Mrs. Ashrawi said the Palestinians were committed to the negotiations, and were ready to resume talks by early August.

The next round of autonomy talks between Israel and the Palestinians is to be held in Rome, and Baker is trying to get an agreement on the date.

Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, whose Labor party recently beat the hard-line Likud in parliamentary elections, has called for accelerated talks with the Palestinians.

Rabin is headed to Egypt on Tuesday to discuss the peace process with President Hosni Mubarak. Israel and Egypt signed the only peace treaty between the Jewish state and one of its Arab neighbors 13 years ago.

Mrs. Ashrawi said it was up to Israel to offer confidence-building measures, such as releasing political prisoners or easing conditions in Israeli jails, to improve conditions for talks.

The news conference was disrupted when four Jewish extremists, including one armed with a sub-machine gun, shouted outside the building "There is no Palestine."

The armed demonstrator, Tiran Pollack of the anti-Arab Kach movement, repeatedly pointed his gun at unarmed Palestinian bodyguards who pushed and shoved him until border police took him away for questioning.

Five Palestinians, including Mrs. Ashrawi, had met with Baker for more than three hours at the U.S. Consulate in west Jerusalem.

Baker departed without speaking to reporters and then held two meetings with Rabin and Foreign Minister Shimon Peres.

Peres called the luncheon meeting "a businesslike session" at which they discussed how to proceed in Arab-Israeli peace talks.

Baker had praised Israel's first steps toward curbing construction and appealed to Arabs to match the Israeli moves.

Czech president officially resigns

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) - President Vaclav Havel, the dissident playwright who led Czechoslovakia's peaceful revolt against communism, formally resigned today as the federation moves toward disintegration.

"The Czech and Slovak federal republic does not have a president anymore," said state radio. The report said the presidential flag had been lowered over Prague castle, seat of the presidency.

Havel announced his resignation plans Friday, moments after the parliament of the poorer eastern republic of Slovakia declared sovereignty. The move was the latest step toward what has become an almost certain division of the country into separate Czech and Slovak states.

Train ride offers new insight on railroad crossing dangers

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
News Editor

The scream of a train's whistle jerked my mind from its reverie. Heart pounding, I glanced to my right and was blinded by the bright light of a train as it bore down upon my car.

Pushing hard on the accelerator, I sped off the railroad tracks seconds before the train passed behind my car.

"Where were the warning lights?" I wondered, glancing up into the rear view mirror.

The lights were there, flashing bright red in the night. I could also see headlights from a line of cars waiting at the crossing in the gaps between the rail cars passing by.

The fault was mine, not the train's. My mind preoccupied, I had driven heedlessly through a railroad crossing. I hadn't even noticed the flashing red lights signalling the approach of a train.

I was lucky. In 1991, 602 persons around the nation weren't so lucky. They died in collisions with trains. More than 2,000 were injured.

Texas' grade crossing collision figures are the highest in the nation, according to Signal, a publication of the Texas Operation Lifesaver Program formed to educate the public and reduce train accidents.

The majority of these accidents are caused by drivers who - like myself - disregarded grade crossing warning signs and signals.

I wasn't paying attention. Some drivers deliberately try to "beat the train." Either way, in a battle between a 1/2-ton to one-ton vehicle and a 4,000-ton train, it won't be the train who's the loser.

To help promote awareness of grade crossing safety, Santa Fe officially recently offered local media and law enforcement personnel a ride on the train from Amarillo to Pampa.

Pampa Police Officers Jess Wallace and Lynn Brown, along with myself, were among those who took advantage of the offer.

We all had train stories. Wallace recalled starting across the tracks after a train had passed by. Just then, the gates went back down for another train coming, trapping his vehicle on the tracks. He was able to pull away in time, but adds, "It was the first time I ever told my wife to 'Shut up!'"

Pampa school board to meet Tuesday

Pampa Independent School District members will meet in regular session at 6 p.m. Tuesday in the Carver Center conference room, 321 W. Albert.

Adoption of Texas Association of School Boards Policy Update 41 will be under consideration. Items included in the update are board members' authority, compensation, expenses, duties and safety.

Other topics to be discussed are budget amendment #6, cash receipts and expenditures for June 1992, the monthly budget, investment and tax collection report.

Bids of fuel, cafeteria and maintenance are scheduled to be presented.

Sale of delinquent tax property at 524 N. Davis is among the items listed on the agenda.

Superintendent's report will also be given.

Minutes from the last regular meeting on June 23 and a special meeting July 6 will be presented for approval.

Crime Stoppers

Sometime between May 31 and June 3, 1992 an unknown person or persons shot 10 to 22 bullets into a building located at 2530 Royal Road.

This resulted in approximately $5,000 in damage to several vintage automobiles parked inside the building. Also several animals in the Horse Alley area have been shot senselessly and left for dead.

Crime Stoppers wants any information you may have leading to the arrest and indictment of the person or persons responsible for this crime or any felony crime or narcotics trafficking in Pampa or Gray County.

We have many unsolved burglaries, thefts, vandalisms, and people who deal in stolen property and narcotics on a daily basis. If you have information that would solve one of these crimes you could be up to $1,000 richer in a CRIME STOPPERS REWARD.

The Board of Directors of Crimes Stoppers wants to remind the citizens of Pampa and Gray County that Crime Stoppers works for everyone in the community. Remember when you call Crime Stoppers 669-2222 you don't have to testify in court, and we don't want your name, all we want is your information. Crime doesn't pay but Crime Stoppers does up to $1,000 in cash.

Heavy bombing ends cease-fire

By JOHN DANISZEWSKI
Associated Press Writer

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Heavy mortar and artillery fire ripped through Sarajevo overnight, causing an unknown number of casualties and tearing apart a cease-fire only hours after it came into effect.

A reporter for Bosnian radio said there were at least five dead in the renewed attacks. Explosions echoed against the mountain valley walls throughout the night and into the early morning.

But residents emerged in the bright sunlight today to go to work and tote buckets of water back to their homes from tanker trucks. The war has severely damaged the water supply network in much of the city.

The attacks came after Serbia's new prime minister, Milan Panic, visited the capital on Sunday to talk peace, only to find what he said was Bosnian officials' unwillingness to accept their share of blame for the war.

"There have been a series of violations of the cease-fire" that took effect at 6 p.m. (noon EDT) Sunday, U.N. spokesman Mik Magnusson said after a noisy night of mortar and artillery bombardment and heavy machine gun fire.

Sporadic gunfire broke out immediately after the deadline, and the first serious violation using heavy weapons began at 7:40 p.m. (1:40 p.m. EDT), Magnusson said.

Bosnian Serbs backed by the Yugoslav army have been waging a campaign to grab territory in Bosnia since the republic's majority Croats and Muslims voted for independence in February from Serb-dominated Yugoslavia. Bosnia puts the number of dead in the fighting at 7,500, but unofficial estimates say the number is closer to 40,000.

More than 1.3 million refugees have fled the bloodshed, the largest number of displaced persons in Europe since World War II. The U.N. imposed trade and diplomatic sanctions on Yugoslavia in May to punish it for its role in the war.

The cease-fire, mediated by the European Community in London, had called for the three warring sides to lay down their guns and let the United Nations monitor their heavy weapons. It was to have lasted 14 days.

Earlier cease-fires have collapsed just as quickly.

European Community foreign ministers were preparing to meet today to discuss more aid for Bosnian refugees and ways to increase pressure on the warring factions.

An international aid airlift to Sarajevo has not stopped despite the continued fighting. On Sunday, a Saudi Arabian air force plane flew 12 tons of food to Sarajevo as the first phase of a relief program for Bosnia's Muslims.

Prior to the cease-fire deadline, about 10 mortar shells exploded near U.N. headquarters, and about six hit the suburb of Dobrinja, the site of the 1984 Olympic village.

In Sarajevo, Yugoslav Prime Minister Milan Panic met for two hours with Bosnia's Muslim president, Alija Izetbegovic. After the meeting Panic said he was frustrated by Bosnia's Muslim president, Alija Izetbegovic's assessment of the war.

"I am a little tired of him not accepting that all three sides are guilty," Panic was quoted as telling reporters who accompanied him from Belgrade, the Yugoslav capital. But he promised to give Izetbegovic more time.

A Sarajevo radio report monitored by the British Broadcasting Corp. on Sunday quoted Izetbegovic as saying he was skeptical whether Panic "can ensure the cease-fire or not."

The Serb-born California businessman became Yugoslavia's prime minister last week, and has promised to do his utmost to help end the fighting.

But the country's real power broker is considered to be Slobodan Milosevic, the president of Serbia, which dominates the new Yugoslav federation. Milosevic has been condemned at home and abroad for escalating the fighting in Bosnia.

Five members of family die in wreck on rain-slick highway

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP) — Five members of a family, representing four generations, were killed in a wreck on a rain-slick highway while on their way to a wedding.

The family's minivan slid into the opposite lane of U.S. 75 early Saturday near Topeka and was struck broadside by an oncoming car, the Kansas Highway Patrol said.

Troopers said the victims ranged in age from 5 to 79 and included a woman, her daughter, granddaughter and two great-grandchildren.

A relative said they were on their way to a wedding in Mayetta.

Three people in the other car were hospitalized with broken bones. Trooper Rudy Gonzalez said they had been on their way to a demolition derby in Ottawa.

Volunteers search for ways to harness Perot's political push

By EVAN RAMSTAD
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Leaders of Ross Perot ballot drives in 40 states left two days of meetings with the presidential un-candidate confused and still searching for ways to harness the political energy he inspired in thousands.

The activists decided Sunday not to immediately form a national organization or an information clearinghouse for the grassroots effort, which Perot abandoned Thursday by declaring he would not be a candidate.

Perot met with the volunteers twice during the weekend after saying during an appearance Friday on CNN's "Larry King Live" program that he would "support them any way I can or play any role they want me to."

He spent much of a nearly three-hour session Sunday explaining that his offer did not include reconsidering a race for the White House, participants said.

"It was a downer," said Cliff Arnebeck, a Perot organizer from Columbus, Ohio.

Several other volunteers dejectedly left after Perot departed the session, refusing to talk with reporters. Others said they would try to stick together and planned to draft Perot for president.

"I think there's an amazing of support out there for Mr. Perot and his effort, his effort being bigger than Mr. Perot and bigger than any one of us," said Orson Swindle, the coordinator from Honolulu, Hawaii, who was designated spokesman for the group.

Perot evaded reporters at both sessions.

The volunteer leaders agreed to continue working on a state level and stay in touch with each other by telephone and facsimile while trying to organize nationally.

"We mainly talked about talking to one another," Swindle said.

Perot promised financial help to organizations in states that have not yet put his name on the Election Day ballot, a move that leaves open the possibility of entering the race later.

"There is a lot of leverage by him being on the ballot to influence the national agenda," said John Bishop, Perot coordinator in Santa Fe, N.M.

But the 24 states where Perot has qualified for the ballot will have to do their own fund-raising, the volunteers said.

There was confusion whether or how an issues platform could be developed.

For instance, Bishop said Perot planned to publish a book about the issues research done by his now-fired professional staff. But Swindle said there was no discussion of such a book.

Another volunteer leader, Donna Gilbert of Fairbanks, Alaska, said the group talked about supporting a line-item veto, a balanced budget and steps to encourage voting.

"The people are the power here. Now you have to keep them moving," she said.

Perot told them he would reduce the national office of his never-declared campaign and end the phone bank that had been the movement's central communication tool and symbol for the past four months.

Meanwhile, the veteran political strategists who spent the last six weeks working for Perot — Hamilton Jordan and Ed Rollins — divided on the future cohesiveness of the volunteers.

"Here you have millions of people who are saying to both parties, 'We do not like the status quo. You are working on the margins of our economic future, and that is not acceptable,'" Jordan said on ABC-TV's "This Week With David Brinkley" program.

He said the volunteer-driven phenomenon is "going to be a part of the political future of our country for the next decade."

But Rollins, who quit the campaign Wednesday, said on ABC: "My sense is the big movement is going to die."

Crossings

Brown told of a time he was riding a motorcycle when he stopped at a crossing. The train was also stopped right before the intersection. Brown waited for a long time, but eventually became impatient when the train didn't move. He decided to ride around the barrier and cross the track anyway.

He didn't realize that there was a train coming on another set of tracks.

Obviously, he got across before the train hit him. Otherwise he wouldn't have been here to tell the tale. Probably, they would have had a hard time finding enough of him to bury. But he says he learned an invaluable lesson from the experience.

"From now on, I either go another way or I wait until the end of time," he said.

Tips for safe crossings

By following these tips, motorists can avoid accidents at train crossings.

- Expect a train on any track at any time. Most trains do not travel on a regular schedule.

- Avoid getting trapped on a crossing. Never drive onto a crossing until you are sure you can clear the tracks. Once you've started across the tracks, keep going.

- Never drive around the gates. If the gates are down, stop and stay in place. Do not cross the tracks until the gates are raised and the lights have stopped flashing.

- Watch out for the second train. When at a multiple-track crossing and the last car of the train passes the crossing, do not proceed until sure there are no other trains coming on another

- Never face a train. Enough said.

- Watch for vehicles that must stop at highway-rail grade crossings. Be prepared to stop when following buses or trucks that must stop at railroad crossings.

- Don't misjudge the train's speed and distance. Because of the large size of a train, it appears to be moving much slower than it is. Stop and wait for the train to pass.

time, they'll look at you and try to beat you."

"Tell them about the whistle boards," prods Fangoio, busy with running the train's engines.

Howell points out small signs bearing a single "W" before each crossing. He explains these signs tell the engineer when to start blowing the train whistle to signal it is coming through a crossing. The engineers must continue to blow the whistle until the train is through the crossing, he said.

Laws require the railroad companies to put up advance warning signs, mark the pavement, place flashing light signals and gates — one or all of these — at railroad crossings to warn motorists of the dangers.

Yet, accidents continue to happen. Many of them due to the following reasons:

- Persons trying to race the train and beat it across the crossing;
- Not watching for vehicles that must stop at crossings — motorcycles, school buses and commercial buses, and trucks carrying hazardous materials; and
- misjudging the train's speed and distance.

"A lot of people think the train can just stop," Howell said. "But it can't. There's no way it can stop just like that."

He tells of times when helplessly he watched as trains plowed through semi-tractor trailer rigs stuck on the tracks, cutting the trucks in half, of finding out miles away from an accident site that an accident had even occurred.

"Sometimes a car will ram into the middle of the train and we won't even know it until somebody stops us way down the tracks and tells us we've hit someone," Howell said.

He explained that a train such as the one we were traveling in, going 70 miles an hour, would take a mile to one and a half miles before it could come to a complete stop. A smaller train going 30 miles an hour would travel more than a half mile before it could stop.

The chance of saving a few seconds of time at a railroad crossing isn't worth the risk. It can mean the difference between a few seconds and a lifetime.

Clinton utilizes spotlight, defines presidential race

WEIRTON, W.Va. (AP) — Bill Clinton looked over at the bust of John F. Kennedy and couldn't resist.

"In 1960, that man right there, John Kennedy, came to West Virginia and said, 'It's time to change,'" Clinton said Sunday. With running mate Al Gore nodding at his side, Clinton went on: "That's what we say to you — it's time to change."

The Kennedy comparison was no accident.

As the Democrats' fresh-faced presidential ticket weaves through blue-collar towns on a 1,000-mile bus tour, Clinton and Gore are trying to sustain the momentum they gained with last week's convention by presenting themselves as energetic, homespun agents of change.

Mindful of the summertime mistakes of Michael Dukakis four years ago, Clinton and Gore are campaigning at a busy pace — today's stops are in Ohio and Kentucky — as they try to define themselves to voters, before Republicans can do it for them.

"In the weeks and months ahead, America will be put to the test," Clinton told the overflow crowd at Weirton's Thomas E. Millspore Community Center, a campaign stop for John Kennedy in 1960 and brother Robert in 1968.

"Al Gore and I will tell you to work for the future," the Arkansas governor said. President Bush and Republicans, Clinton said, "are going to tell you we're too liberal and too young and too this and too that. I'll tell you what, we're too much for the American people for their tastes."

Halfway through their New York to St. Louis "crusade for change," as Clinton likes to call it, the reception has been enthusiastic.

People have lined streets for miles to wave at the bus caravan, waited for hours in rain, often squealing and screaming as if at a rock concert.

"I haven't seen a surge like this since 1960," said Pennsylvania Sen. Harris Wofford, who worked for Kennedy then. "It's the same sense of hope and the same type of discontent in the country."

The trip, planned before Ross Perot announced he would not run, is mostly through blue-collar Democratic strongholds where Clinton wanted not only to shore up his support but also persuade independent-minded Reagan Democrats to come home.

Along the way, Gore has played a major role in presenting the campaign's argument that the ticket of young, Southern moderates represents a new day for the Democratic Party and that Bush cannot credibly campaign as an advocate of change.

"What is their plan? What is their program?" he asked at a town meeting Sunday in Wheeling. "They say they're in favor of change, so vote for more of the same. It just doesn't make sense."

Gore also reminds audiences that after unemployment rose for a second consecutive month, Bush strategists were quoted as predicting the president would need an "even meaner campaign" to win.

Four years ago, Dukakis left his convention with a big lead in the polls but then spent most of the next two months in Massachusetts while Republicans painted him as a tax-and-spend, soft-on-crime liberal. By the time Dukakis fired back, it was too late.

GOP stresses campaign change

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republicans will go to the voters with their own message of change as President Bush seeks re-election, says the president's campaign chairman.

Robert Teeter says a cut in federal spending to reduce the budget deficit will be a priority and that changes in welfare policy are also needed.

"We have got to make some fundamental changes in this country in order to compete in this rapidly emerging world economy," Teeter said Sunday on CBS' "Face the Nation."

Teeter said the GOP would also stress the need to "restore the kind of traditional American values that held the society together for 200 years and that have been weakened in the last 15, 20, 30 years in this country."

He said that while Bush has "had some great and historic accomplishments" — many of them in international affairs — he wants to tackle the faltering economy in his second term.

who doesn't recognize the world is now changing economically as rapidly as it has politically and the real key to our prosperity here at home is going to be our ability to open markets and succeed in competing in that world," Teeter said.

Teeter said the GOP wasn't planning a replay of "any previous campaign," in answer to a question about whether negative advertising similar to that used against Michael Dukakis would be starting up.

However, he said the GOP would try to "sharpen the difference and the contrasts" between the two candidates.

"And in this case, I think it'll be easy. There are very big differences and very big contrast," he said.

Dolls

"I have an Eskimo doll on its way and a Chinese girl coming in the mail from a friend of mine," she said.

She has dolls made of special molds. There are clown and mop dolls. Some are made of vinyl, porcelain, rubber, cloth or are carved out of wood.

"Tiny Tears sheds real tears and there is 'Little Angel', a Precious Moments doll," she said. "This old fashion doll has jointed knees and she sits," Doris demonstrated.

She has a Madam Alexander 1957 doll. Her husband gave her an Ashton-Drake doll and she has Franklin Heirloom dolls.

"My most valuable one is probably the oldest one," Doris said. "His name is Jason and I paid $65 for him, but I've seen him sold for $13,000 at auctions."

He is German, made by Arma and Marseilla, and has tiny details including teeth.

"Mildred Yates (a friend) made the doll's clothes and restored it," she said. "The doll has its original hair."

She has a Lullaby rocking baby and a doll that giggles.

"When you move her hands," Doris demonstrated, "she giggles and I giggle with her," she said giggling.

Then she showed one that cries when it hears a voice.

Doris' dolls do not all sit on shelves.

"I have table and chairs, a small china set," she said. "They have tea parties."

She has swings, walkers, a stroller, wicker basket, crib, cradle, little school desk, and tricycle, all of various sizes for her dolls.

Her collection has expanded to include calendars and thank-you notes with dolls' pictures on them.

"I'd like one book that tells all about when they were made, who and everything," she said. "They do have such a thing. It is really large."

On the back of the doll's neck, she explained, they have numbers which correspond to the facts about them in this book.

Doris has sewn dolls called "Sugar Britches" for two of her grandchildren.

"They like them because they have my name on the back of their necks," she said. She has also made five fine porcelain dolls which she has given away.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

The current Supreme Court's apparent inability to make a clear-cut decision on a controversial topic extended from the abortion decision to the arena of property rights.

The question before the Court seemed remarkably simple: If governments impose regulations that lower or eliminate the economic value of private property, does that constitute a "taking" that requires just compensation be paid to the property owner?

To that, the justices bravely replied "Yes and no." Or, more precisely, to paraphrase the majority opinion (written by the Hon. Justice Caspar Milquetoast): "Sometimes yes and sometimes no." By a 6-3 vote, the justices said South Carolina may have to reimburse a property owner if it is determined that state regulations rendered his property worthless.

In the case before the Supreme Court, a South Carolina man was appealing a state regulation that he could not build houses or any structures on two beachfront lots that he had purchased two years earlier for $975,000. The state environmental commission, concerned about beachfront erosion, declared a need for a sort of buffer zone between the ocean and man and imposed the ban on building. The property owner was understandably peeved and sought reimbursement from the state for his loss.

No way, the state told the property owner. Since they did not take physical ownership of the property they didn't take anything from him. Under their thinking, a transfer of a deed is necessary to trigger the Fifth Amendment stipulation that "nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation."

But property owners know that taking away the value of a property means the property has been taken from you — even if you still hold the deed. After all, the deed to worthless property is a worthless piece of paper.

The concept behind the amendment, called eminent domain, wasn't intended for casual land grabs, but for cases of compelling public need, such as sites needed to build a road or public building thought to be necessary for the common good.

Proponents of environmental regulations say the Constitution does not specify payments for the cost of regulatory burdens, but it is inconceivable that the founding fathers ever dreamed of unelected bureaucrats imposing so many rules for the use of private property.

The coastal zoning rules amount to nothing more than new type of public structure. If buffer zones are needed, the Constitution allows government to create them, but seems to say you must pay for them.

The Court agreed with that in most cases (citing a nuclear power plant located on an earthquake fault line as an exception) but only if the economic loss is total. Partial losses, or partial takings, do not need to be reimbursed.

With that sort of logic, the next time a thief breaks into a jewelry store, he should be careful to leave something behind. After all, if he didn't take everything of value, he must not have taken anything.

Such a muddled decision makes it hard for property owners to know if they really own anything and for governments to know if their ever increasing load of regulations require compensation.

Berry's World

Nobody here but us dinosaurs

NEW YORK — Saul Pett, one of the all-time great reporters for The Associated Press, came up with a memorable lead 12 years ago. The Democrats had convened for the predictable renomination of Carter and Mondale.

On the second day, an inspired Pett began his story: "At the Democratic National Convention, tension does not mount tonight."

Tension has not mounted for years at a Democratic convention. The last time the jaded press had much fun was at Miami Beach in 1972. There we picked up a rumor about midnight that some female delegates were skinny-dipping in Pier Park, down at the end of Collins Avenue. Was it true? Tension mounted.

This promised a better story than anything we were getting from George McGovern, so about 10 of us, as I recall, marched down to the park to do our reportorial duty. Somebody had to do it. By the time we got there, the skinny-dippers had vanished, but a sickly sweet smell of something lingered in the summer air.

"What stinks?" I asked. My younger colleagues gazed at me in disbelief. I was 51 years old and never before had smelled marijuana.

This year's convention in New York offers no tension and no such novel delivery from innocence. Barbara Jordan and Bill Bradley spoke this week. She is one of the country's great orators, though it is hard to remember anything great she ever said. It's her delivery that counts. Bradley's delivery is not as widely acclaimed.

Many delegates, and many reporters as well, won't arrive until late. Their hope is to cut down their hotel bills, which promise to be mountainous. The city imposes a heavy tax on tourists and restaurants, and nothing around her is cheap. The Garden has to deal with 10 different labor unions. All of them want to lay the same cables or tote the same equipment.

A few of us grizzled veterans recently sat around yacking of conventions we had known. This is my 19th, going back to the conventions of 1952. The Democrats met that summer in Chicago, and we had a glorious time.

There was plenty of tension then. Sen. Blair Moody of Michigan had sponsored a motion requiring every state delegation to pledge that it would put the Democratic candidates on the state ballot. You might not regard this as very much to ask, but the convention was in an uproar over civil rights.

It was a question of honor. Delegates from Virginia, Louisiana and South Carolina felt their honor had been impugned. Nothing ignites a Southern fuse more quickly. They were ready to fire upon Fort Sumter. They would secede before they took the Moody pledge!

I had taxied out to the stockyards with Bill Tuck, former governor of Virginia and chairman of the state delegation. His excellency had two hollow legs. Anticipating combat, he had filled both of them to the brim. On the way out, he regaled me — and fascinated the cab driver — by delivering the speech he would make if Virginia Democrats were treated like pariahs, like pariahs; suh! They would never submit to tyranny! They would depart the political home of their fathers.

It was the grandest oration ever undelivered, for when it came time to debate the motion to expel Virginia, a couple of Virginia newsmen, seated on the floor, somehow tripped Bill as he staggered to his feet. The fallen statesman had the svelte figure of a beer barrel. He was unable to arise. Gov. John Battle spoke instead, to such emotional effect that Virginia's delegates were permitted to remain. What a night!

We recalled the convention of '56, when we were back in Chicago for the second time around with Adlai Stevenson. The only tension that mounted came with the wide-open choice of a running mate. Among those nominated was Sen. Albert A. Gore of Tennessee, father of this year's vice presidential candidate. He got 178 votes before yielding to Sen. Estes Kefauver.

The greatest tensions mounted, of course, at the wild convention of 1968. This was my first whiff of tear gas. Twelve thousand cops, 15,000 troops, barbed wire, pandemonium, and Eugene McCarthy weeping.

Ah, them were the days! Now political conventions have gone the way of the dinosaurs. Here in New York, our only worry going into the convention was whether the balloons would drop on schedule Thursday night. They wouldn't drop for Carter in the Garden in 1980. It was a bad omen of worse luck to come.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Monday, July 20, the 202nd day of 1992. There are 164 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:
Fifty years ago, on July 20, 1942, the first detachment of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps — later known as WACs — began basic training at Fort Des Moines, Iowa.

On this date:
In 1881, Sioux Indian leader Sitting Bull, a fugitive since the Battle of the Little Big Horn, surrendered to federal troops.

In 1917, 75 years ago, the draft lottery in World War I went into operation.

In 1969, Apollo 11 astronauts Neil Armstrong and Edwin "Buzz" Aldrin became the first men to walk on the moon, after their lunar module separated from the command module and landed on the lunar surface.

In 1984, Vanessa Williams, Miss America 1984, was asked by pageant officials to resign because of nude photographs of her that turned up in Penthouse magazine. (Williams relinquished her title three days later.)

Better than welfare

Pokey Pete of Cedar Falls, Iowa, noting that our government has spent $900 billion on poor people with almost no demonstrable improvement in their condition, remarked, "I get the highest rate of return on my investments in the Salvation Army."

Sen. David Boren (D-Okla.) says our present welfare system robs recipients of self-esteem, leaves them with no motive to achieve.

He says we got a much better return on our comparatively nominal investment in the WPA.
For those too young to remember, under President Franklin Roosevelt in the 1930s our nation provided work for the out-of-work.

With the Works Progress Administration (WPA) and the Civilian Conservation Corps (CCC), unemployed Americans were employed building more than 650,000 miles of roads, highways and sidewalks.

Eight million WPA workers built 125,000 public buildings, including 39,000 schools, 124 bridges, 8,000 parks and 18,000 playgrounds.

Also they served more than a billion meals to hungry schoolchildren and sewed more than 382 million garments for needy people.

Paul Harvey

And for all this we spent, in today's dollars, less than one-tenth what welfare handouts have cost.

Sen. Boren considers it a "disgrace" that we allow today's generation of slum kids to drop out of school and onto the streets.

Today we have children needing care, roads needing repair, bridges that need to be constructed — yet we pay the unemployed poor to remain unemployed and poor.

Sen. Boren and Sen. Harris Wofford (D-Pa.) and some others — Republicans and Democrats — are proposing work opportunities similar to the CCC and the WPA.

They suggest a Community SPA, a CWPA, allowing all welfare recipients with the exception of mothers with very young children to enroll in education and training programs and to require that they accept any available job in a sponsored project.

Many young men, never employed and presently falling through the cracks in the current system, would also be eligible to participate.

A separate Youth Community Corps would enable students from seventh to 12th grade to work up to 250 hours a year in community service projects. A second youth division would create camps or dormitory units for young people working on reforestation or as auxiliary police in public parks or in low-income housing construction.

Those still in school would do such work summers, mothers would work year-round.

As you can see, Sen. Boren and friends have thought this out in some detail.

Sen. Boren says, "We worked our way out of the crisis of the '30s; we can work our way out of our present crisis, also."

A political tragedy begins to unfold

It is time for the American people to begin bracing themselves for a political tragedy that is about to unfold before their eyes. Lawrence Walsh, the special counsel for the Iran-Contra affair, is preparing to crown his lackluster record by indicting former President Ronald Reagan for perjury. His hope is to put Mr. Reagan in prison.

The specific charge will be that Mr. Reagan testified falsely concerning when he first learned about the (allegedly illegal) sale of weapons to Iran. The evidence, insofar as there is any, is contained in the handwritten notes of former Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger.

Weinberger has resolutely refused to change his own interpretation of the notes, and thereby become a witness against his former boss, despite Walsh's offers of a lesser charge if he would do so. Walsh has retaliated by indicting Weinberger for perjury, as a prelude to proceeding against Mr. Reagan.

The indictment of Mr. Reagan, in the midst of this year's presidential election campaign, will of course constitute a major political development. That is hardly surprising, for the whole treatment of the Iran-Contra affair as a legal issue, rather than as the policy dispute it really was, has been a savage abuse of legal process for partisan political purposes. But I call this development a tragedy because the legal process has now acquired a life of its own, and is reaching out to destroy a man who is greatly loved, and will continue to be loved, by many millions of Americans, as well as by other millions all over the world.

The roots of the tragedy, like the roots of so many other messes America is in today, are to be found in the American voters' vicious habit, during the past half-century, of electing a president of one party and a Congress of the other. Inevitably, Democratic Congresses began intruding in foreign policy areas that Republican presidents regarded as historically their exclusive turf.

By the time Ronald Reagan became president, the conflict was well established. Congress passed laws seeking to limit what the executive branch could do in the field of foreign policy without its prior consent. Mr. Reagan's response was to conduct much necessarily secret diplomacy through the National Security Council, appointed by and beholden only to him, relying on his constitutional prerogative to conduct the nation's foreign affairs.

A great many people will doubt that Mr. Reagan's denial to Congress that he knew of the arms sales on a given date, even if false, was unlawful at all, let alone grounds for prosecuting him. But many of his longtime foes will take a thin-lipped pleasure in insisting that "cover-ups" must be punished, whatever the cost.

I suspect, though, that a good many Democratic politicians are going to feel vaguely uneasy about this turn of events. They will sense that the prosecution of Ronald Reagan, on what constitutes at best a highly debatable technicality, runs counter to the American people's instinctive sense of fairness.

And they will remember one other thing, which is rarely noted: In the battle between Republican presidents and Democratic Congresses, the Democratic victories have all been legal ones, designed to reverse or diminish the effect of Republican victories won at the ballot box.

Thus, the Watergate controversy succeeded in ousting Richard Nixon, who had defeated George McGovern 49 states to one. The Iran-Contra affair was supposed to do as much for the immensely popular Ronald Reagan — and is still being used in a last-ditch effort to destroy him. The so-called "October surprise" investigation, still being quietly pursued by the congressional Democrats, is an effort to repeal, symbolically, Mr. Reagan's 1980 triumph.

If you can't beat your foes at the ballot box, you can always try to destroy them afterward.

Outdoor furniture can take the heat

Today's outdoor furniture is tough, but it still needs regular care to look its best year after year. Washing outdoor furniture frequently is one of the best ways to preserve it. When dirt and the residue from air-borne pollutants are allowed to set, metals corrode and become pitted, while plastics and fabrics lose their color.

Outdoor furniture should be washed at the beginning of each outdoor season. First, dust each item, then wash it in a solution of mild detergent and water. Dry thoroughly. Make certain all nuts, bolts and screws are tight. Missing, broken or rusted fasteners should be replaced with rust-proof ones made of aluminum, galvanized steel or stainless steel. Next, lubricate all hinges and wheels with a silicone lubricant. Oil should be avoided because it tends to cake and attract dirt.

From this point on, the care that the garden furniture needs depends upon its material.

Aluminum furniture resists rust but has to be safeguarded against a type of pitting that gives the metal a dull patina. Frequent washing helps prevent this condition if the metal is in good shape or has an enameled or baked-on finish. If the metal is already in poor condition, however, more than a washing is needed to revive it. In such a case, rub each piece briskly with a steel wool, soap scouring pad. If that proves insufficient, try a #00 steel wool pad soaked in kerosene or paint thinner.

Once the metal is smooth again, wash it in a mild detergent and water solution. Rinse and dry thoroughly. Protect the rejuvenated finish with a light application of automobile wax, then buff to remove excess. Ideally, aluminum should be washed and waxed every few months.

Plastic resin is extremely durable and weather resistant. It can withstand the elements, the stress of ordinary use and the extra wear that outdoor furniture suffers. In addition, resin furniture can be easily stored because the pieces usually break down or stack to take up less storage space. This popular furniture maintains its sleek clean look for years with minimum care. Most soils and stains can be cleaned off with a non-abrasive all-purpose cleaner, a glass cleaner or a cleaner-polish, following package directions. Or, wipe the surface with a sponge or cloth dipped in solution of hand dishwashing detergent and warm water. Rinse thoroughly and dry with a clean soft cloth.

Redwood furniture is attractive and weather resistant in that it is not likely to rot and warp. It can split, however, and will almost surely turn grey within a year if not cared for properly. Commercial brands of redwood stain and sealer are available to help prevent this condition. To apply the sealer, first wash the furniture and replace any fasteners that are starting to rust, as they will eventually stain the wood. Then, lightly sand all exposed parts with #150 or #180 grit paper. Dust and wipe with a rag that has been moistened in paint thinner. The final step to this preservation is to apply one or two coats of water repellent sealer specially made for redwood.

Wicker furniture is weather-resistant, but it can dry out in the sun. Keep it in the shade and soak it in water once a year to put moisture back into its fibers.

Undamaged wickers simply has to be washed and refinished periodically to keep it in good condition. Vacuum the furniture first. Then, wipe it down with a rag soaked in mild detergent and warm water solution. Use an old toothbrush to remove stubborn dirt. An ice pick can be used to remove paint that has lodged into the weave.

If mildew is a problem, wash the furniture with a solution of 3/4 cup chlorine bleach and one quart water. Since the bleach may lighten the wicker, apply it to the entire piece of furniture. Wear gloves when working with bleach and protect your clothing from splashes and spills.

Wicker furniture with a natural finish that has dulled can be restored by applying lemon oil furniture polish. Scratches can be minimized with products specially formulated for this purpose.

Wrought iron can look good for years if it is touched up whenever bare metal is exposed. Use a rust-resistant metal primer on these spots to prevent rust from spreading under the paint.

The freckled shouldn't worry about changing spots

DEAR ABBY: After reading the letter from "Spotted," the freckled high school girl, I had to write. Being a 41-year-old woman with freckles, and having been the object of comments about my freckles over the years, I think you failed to give "Spotted" the advice she sought.

She didn't ask for the best cover-up makeup to hide her freckles; she wanted help in letting people know that their inconsiderate comments were uncalled for.

Can you imagine how "Spotted" must feel after reading your reply? At age 17, to be destined to a lifetime of purchasing creams to cover her beautiful freckles would add up to several thousands of dollars. (Maybe you could have suggested plastic surgery, or dermabrasion?)

Abby, please reconsider your reply in how to respond to insensitive remarks about freckles. I learned to appreciate my specialness due to the support and love of my parents and grandparents who said, "Your freckles are angel's kisses, and God must love you very much to have given you so many freckles."

Even at age 41, I continue to get unwanted advice on how to hide my freckles.

CATHERINE DYBALL,
CORCORAN, MINN.

DEAR CATHERINE: It's wonderful that you have grown to appreciate your "specialness" — and can now regard your freckles as "angel's kisses." But the 17-year-old girl who wrote to say that her freckles had caused her "plenty of stress" needed a solution to her problem — not a pep talk on how to learn to live with it.

Dear Abby Abigail Van Buren

I routinely urge people to learn to live with things they cannot change, but freckles that are regarded as "not so cute" on a 17-year-old girl can easily be concealed by Covermark or Dermablend — which I recommended. I have already heard from grateful Dear Abby readers, thanking me for informing them about products they did not know existed.

Here's another reader who has learned to live with freckles:

DEAR ABBY: Everyone with freckles has had at one time or another some comment made about him or her that has been unpleasant. (I remember being asked if I had stood behind a rusty screen door when it was raining.) But not all the comments were bad. My freckles have been called "cinnamon sprinkles" — which is my personal favorite because that's what my husband calls them.

What "Spotted On Long Island" really needs to do is either learn to accept the comments graciously, or to ignore them, since she will probably be faced with hearing various comments about her freckles all her life. (At least, I have for these past 40 years.)

Anyway, there are far worse things in life to have, like a personality that compels one to make comments about other people's physical features.

SPRINKLED IN KANSAS CITY
DEAR SPRINKLED: I have had letters from men who tell me they think freckles are cute and sexy on a woman. And the combination of freckles and flaming red hair is a genuine turn-on in Dublin, Ireland.

P.S.: When my twin sister and I were about 6 years old, we memorized a song titled "Freckles." We learned the lyrics from a 78 rpm phonograph record our parents played over and over again. I think the flip side was "Rockabye Baby" with the vocal by Al Jolson.

Orthopedics

The goal of the orthopedic physician is to bring about the greatest improvement for the patient with the least intervention. Dr. Edwards, a board-certified orthopedist, says that many conditions that orthopedic surgeons treat are never or rarely treated surgically. Sometimes medication, physical therapy, or rest is all that is needed. Non-surgical treatment is always the first choice when the patient's condition permits.

However, some problems require surgical intervention. One type of surgery that has prolonged the useful life and brought pain relief to millions of people is joint replacement. According to Dr. Edwards, the technique was first introduced in the late 1950s and improving technology has brought increasingly satisfactory results over the years. "With the high tech equipment, the physical therapy and occupational therapy departments, and the new inpatient rehabilitation unit at Coronado Hospital, we're able to provide excellent care for patients who need joint replacements," Dr. Edwards said.

Patients wishing to make an appointment with Dr. Edwards should call 806-665-0054.

Faldo claims third British Open championship

Englishman wins by single stroke over America's Cook

By STEVE WILSTEIN
AP Sports Writer

GULLANE, Scotland (AP) - Nick Faldo stood in the thin rain on Muirfield's 17th green, putting for the eagle he thought he needed to win the British Open, when he heard the groans and roars rolling down the hill from 18.

No sound could have been sweeter. Faldo and everyone else knew it meant he was about to capture his third Open and his fifth major title Sunday, defining him as the finest golfer of his generation the day after he turned 35.

It meant that the Englishman soon would win by a single stroke over John Cook, shooting a 73 to the American's 70 in a gut-wrenching round for both players that left the winner trembling in tears and the runnerup numb.

Cook had stood in virtually the same spot as Faldo minutes earlier, putting for an eagle that could have clinched the championship. Cook had rallied from four strokes back at the start of the day, scrambled in the rain and wind, the alternating gloom and sunshine, to catch Faldo and pass him.

By the time Cook reached the 17th tee and Faldo went to the 16th, Cook had taken a one-stroke lead with his three birdies and Faldo's three bogeys since the turn.

An eagle on 17 would have given Cook a three-stroke lead, and for the briefest moment he thought he had it, jumping as the ball rolled true to the cup, then cringing as it veered just a bit and went past a few feet.

The miss hurt, but it wasn't fatal. All he had to do now was knock it down for a birdie that would put tremendous pressure on Faldo. Instead, Cook stabbed the putt and himself as the ball spun around the lip of the cup and out.

"I didn't fat-hook it or anything, but obviously it wasn't very good," said Cook, who finally sank the ball from 2 feet, again lipping the cup but at least getting it in. Before he left the green, he cast one last contemptuous glance at the hole.

Faldo now had his chance and he didn't waste it. He hit a 4-iron on his second shot beautifully up the middle of the 17th fairway, watched it bounce 25 yards in front of the green and scoot up pin-high 20 feet left of the flag — almost the identical spot as Cook's ball.

The clamoring of the crowd swelled as the ball neared the hole. Britons and Scots had bet $3 million on Faldo with the legal bookmakers and had made him an incredible 1-6 odds-on favorite the final day. When he marched to the green, shouts of "Go, Nick," "Get 'em, Nick" greeted his every step.

Faldo studied the green from every direction, crouching behind his ball, opposite it on the other side of the hole, sideways to it. A helicopter buzzed overhead, breaking the utter silence, then drifted away.

But just as he finally stood over the ball to putt, the bellowing from the crowd at 18 made him back off the ball.

The noise meant Cook had bogeyed the 18th, hitting a 2-iron wide right on his second shot, then two-putting from 8 feet. It seemed like a rerun of 17, a nightmare repeated, when his putt for par lipped the cup and spun out.

"I was alive, then I was dead, then I was really alive, then I was pretty much dead," Cook said impassively afterward, as if the strain of the round had drained him of all emotions.

Five hundred yards down the hill, Faldo knew immediately what it meant to him. He didn't need the eagle, after all. All he needed was a simple two putts from 20 feet for a birdie, then a par on 18 to win. But Faldo wanted more.

"I was really hoping to eagle the 17th," he said. "That's been in my mind all week. In practice I played it two days on the trot and I eagled it twice. I was playing for that to happen."

He crouched behind his ball again, bowed his head, then moved toward it with confidence, rapping it with the toe of his putter to take a full swing without sending it too far. The ball settled on the wet grass inches from the hole for an easy tap-in, and Faldo's victory was all but wrapped up.

There were even similarities to his first title at Muirfield in 1987, when he won courtesy of Paul Azinger's bogey-bogey finish.

"I said, 'Well, just hole this, and it's over and done with and it's yours,'" he said. He did it and it was.

Faldo didn't squander that final lead or lengthen the drama. He drove safely onto the fairway and hit a 3-iron to the back fringe, 15 feet from the pin. He putted to a foot, tapped it in, then unabashedly sobbed as he released his pent-up emotions.

His 2-over 73, his first round over par, gave him a 272 total, one of the lowest in British Open history.

Unlike other champions who strolled in triumph up the 18th fairway, knowing they had locked up the lead, Faldo said he couldn't quite revel in the moment.

"No, unfortunately. I really wanted to," he said. "But I had to just grind like hell, thinking I'm on the back of the green. I'd hate to see this sullied. I wanted just a 3 footer. My legs were gone on that one-footer."

He had said after his second round that he never wanted to be called "Mechanical Man" again. He kiddingly called himself "Monsieur Naturel," and now he really seemed so touchingly human.

His voice trembled and the tears filled his eyes as he described his round just after coming off the course before receiving the silver claret jug and the $190,000 winner's share.

He spoke almost in awe of the experience, how he had told himself to "play the best four holes of your life" after bogeying the 14th, how he had produced "the best half shot of my life, a little 5-iron down the hill" to make par on 16, and how he had counted on heroics at 17.

"I was really hoping and praying for 17 to come to the rescue," he said.

"It's gone from almost a disaster to the absolute ultimate at the Open. I don't really know what it means right now, to be honest. I'm gone. I am actually shocked. I just think the horrible pressure of it, you know, having a four-shot lead and if it had all ended up wrong, I've lost, what the hell would that have meant to me?"

"I think it would have made it very bleak. You'd need a very big plaster to patch up that one. After that, I would have become a fishing pro. I think. There's no pressure dragging out trout, is there?"

At the award ceremony, he thanked "everybody who kept shouting to me and telling me to keep going. Boy, do I thank you. I owe you a big scotch somewhere. Maybe with the help of Johnny Walker I can send a bottle of whiskey to every pub in Scotland. That would be a good start."

Then Faldo, of all people, broke into song. Noting that so many people had written to him telling him his putting was all wrong, that TV commentators were saying what he should and shouldn't do, he recalled the Frank Sinatra tune and croaked, "I did it m-y-y-y w-a-y-y."

Hampsten wins toughest stage of Tour de France; LeMond drops out of race

L'ALPE D'HUEZ, France (AP) - It was a day of extremes for the American cyclists.

One — Andy Hampsten — won the toughest stage of the Tour de France. The other — three-time champion Greg LeMond — dropped out of the race for the first time.

"There are always first times for everything in life," LeMond said. "All the riders pass through things like that."

LeMond stopped about 61 miles into the 113-mile leg that began in Sestriere, Italy. He dismounted at a food station for the riders at St. Jean de Maurienne, leaving a race in which he had trailed the leaders by about 30 minutes.

"I never recovered from the time trial," LeMond said. "At Mulhouse, I had to go into my reserves. As a cyclist, there is always a hope to sleep quietly one night, to recuperate, to get back to your level."

"Unfortunately, the Tour de France is too difficult for that. It's an event that it's difficult to get back to 100 percent quickly."

LeMond finished third in 1984, his first try, and moved up a spot in 1985. He became the first and only American to win the Tour in 1986, then won again in 1989 and 1990 after missing two years after being shot in a hunting accident in April 1987. He was seventh in 1991 after leading at midpoint.

While LeMond was reaching the top of his sport, Hampsten was having ups and downs.

In 1986, he finished fourth, but helped LeMond in the mountains because they were on the same French team at the time.

Hampsten also won the Tour of Switzerland twice and won the Tour of Italy in 1988, something LeMond has never done.

However, over the past two years he could never put everything together. Perhaps this is his year.

Hampsten, 30, of Boulder, Colo., won Sunday's stage that was marked by three climbs too hard to rate on a scale of steepness and difficulty. While the other contenders were watching each other, Hampsten broke away with a group of five about midway through the race.

Hampsten moved away from the lead group up the final mountain of six miles with 22 hairpin turns. He wound up 8:01 behind Spain's Miguel Indurain overall, jumping from eighth position.

"I have always dreamed of the Alpe d'Huez stage. It's the best that exists in my eyes," Hampsten said. "There are two good stages on the route this year: the two high mountain stages. I profited from them yesterday."

Hampsten came in fifth on Saturday.

Indurain solidified his position as the favorite of the Tour. He held onto a 1-minute, 42-second lead over Claudio Chiappucci of Italy.

With a week left in the Tour and mostly flatlands coming up, it would be difficult to dislodge Indurain from the top spot.

Chiappucci, who won Saturday's stage, and Indurain were fifth and sixth Sunday, 3:15 behind Hampsten.

LeMond's troubles started on Saturday. He finished more than 49 minutes behind Chiappucci to plummet from fifth to 41st, 50:53 behind Indurain.

Then it got worse on Sunday. LeMond may leave this year's Tour, but he is not ready to quit the sport.

"I am not ready to leave the Tour de France because of this loss. I have no doubt about my physical and mental capabilities. The future is bright for me," he said.

Graf sparks Germany to Federation Cup crown

FRANKFURT, Germany (AP) - Steffi Graf was back this year, and it made the difference.

Fresh from winning her fourth Wimbledon singles title, Graf returned to the team and on Sunday lifted Germany over defending champion Spain for its second Federation Cup title.

Graf beat Arantxa Sanchez Vicario 6-4, 6-2 in the second singles to clinch the victory. Anke Huber, the 17-year-old rising star, also had a big role in winning the title when she beat higher-ranked Conchita Martinez 6-3, 6-7, 6-1 in the opening singles.

Graf led Germany to its first title in 1987. But then, like many other top players, skipped the event for several years. Last year, she joined the team, but was forced to withdraw with an injury.

"I am much happier for the victory this time because we played at home," Graf said.

Graf, ranked second in the world, did not lose a single set during the week-long tournament, the women's equivalent of the Davis Cup. Huber also did her share, winning all four of her singles matches on the road to the final.

As in previous matches here, Graf was in devastating form against Sanchez, raising her career record against the world's fifth-ranked player to 15-2.

"For me, everything was super today," Graf said.

The Spaniard, one of the most accomplished clay court players, dropped her first service game to fall behind 2-0. She immediately broke back to level the score.

Graf gained another break to go up 5-3, but a double-fault and a forehand into the net allowed Sanchez to save the set. Serving to level the score, the Spaniard fell behind 30-40, and a cross-court winner by Graf gave the set to the German.

The second set went with serve until the sixth game.

Making a rare venture to the net, Graf scored on a blistering volley into the corner. When Sanchez rushed to the net on the next point, Graf passed her to gain two break points. A backhand into the net by the Spaniard gave Graf the vital break and a 4-2 lead.

Graf held her serve and gained two match points as Sanchez served to stay in the contest. Another unreturnable cross-court winner by Graf converted the first match point and gave her the victory after 57 minutes of play.

"She played very well and she won today, but this doesn't make her automatically the top favorite for the Olympics," Sanchez said.

Immediately after the final, both teams turned their attention to the Summer Games in Barcelona. Sanchez's hometown where Graf will be defending her gold medal.

"There are several favorites in Barcelona, and before their home fans, the Spanish team will be difficult to beat," Graf said.

Huber battled for two hours and 19 minutes in the hot midday sun to overcome Martinez, who is ranked eighth in the world, two places above the German.

The German broke Martinez in the opening game to go ahead. Martinez saved three set points before dropping serve again as Huber took the first set.

Each player lost serve four times in the second set, Martinez wasting a chance to win it when she was broken in the 12th game.

But the Spaniard rolled through the tiebreaker without losing a point.

"It was a critical moment, but I managed to keep my game together," Huber said.

The 17-year-old German had too much power for Martinez in the decisive set. She broke Martinez twice for a 4-1 lead, held for 5-1 and, after wasting two match points on the Spaniard's serve, Huber clinched the victory with a soft volley that Martinez could not reach.

Orioles clip Rangers in 10th

ARLINGTON (AP) - Baltimore manager Johnny Oates has an odd problem: He can't get enough work for his bullpen because his starters are so effective.

Relievers Todd Frowirth, Pat Clements and Gregg Olson held Texas to one hit the final four innings and Cal Ripken's sacrifice fly in the 10th lifted Baltimore to a 3-2 victory.

"The bullpen, after sitting for quite a while, got the job done," said Oates, who's seen his staff hold Texas to just two runs in 28 innings. "Clements, this was his first time out in nine days. And Olson, it was his first time in 10 days."

"You get itchy wondering what they'll do."

Toby Harrah doesn't have that problem. The Texas manager can probably be certain his bullpen will give up a few runs and probably blow a lead. They've lost a league-leading 18 times this season, including Sunday night against Baltimore.

After starter Todd Burns left with a four-hitter and a 2-0 lead in the eighth, three relievers — Kenny Rogers, Jeff Russell and Terry Mathews — quickly gave it all back.

"That was a tough one, a real tough one," Harrah said. "Burns pitched his tail off. He's pitched good every time out and he's done all we can ask. We had fresh arms in the bullpen."

Rogers, a left-hander, gave up a single to Brady Anderson in the eighth, and on came Russell, who allowed a run-scoring hit to Ripken. Then third baseman Dean Palmer mishandled Glen Davis' grounder which tied the game and was Russell's seventh blown save of the season.

Mathews (1-4), who's allowed 63 base-runners in 33 innings this season, came on in the 10th inning and finished off Texas. He gave up a single to Anderson, and another to Mike Devereaux which sent Anderson to third. Ripken followed with a flyball to right for the winning run.

It was the third straight game Texas couldn't touch Baltimore's pitching. On Friday night, Mike Mussina had a one-hit shutout, while Saturday featured Ben McDonald's two-hit blanking.

On Sunday night, starter Arthur

Rhodes no-hit the Rangers through five innings before allowing two hits and two runs in the sixth.

Things were so bad for Texas, which was just .070 (6 for 86) in the three games, that its first run off Baltimore pitching came on a balk by Rhodes.

Rafael Palmeiro led off the sixth with a single and moved to third on Ruben Sierra's double. Facing Juan Gonzalez, Rhodes wiped his brow while on the rubber for a balk. Gonzalez followed with a sacrifice fly to put the Rangers up 2-0.

"I'm not surprised at our pitching in the series but you don't come in expecting to throw a one-, a two- and a three-hitter," Oates said.

Anderson said even Rhodes' shaky start when he walked the first two batters in the first and second innings lifted the team when the Rangers were denied a single run.

"It's great to get pitching like this," Anderson said. "Arthur has been erratic but he proved something when he walked the first two guys and came back to strike out 3-4-5."

Rhodes, who had five walks and five strikeouts in six innings, walked the first two batters in both the first and second innings. In the first, the left-hander came back to strike out Palmeiro, Sierra and Gomez; the next inning, he got three straight fly outs.

"We ran into some tough arms," Harrah said. "This road trip's coming up at the right time. We need a change of scenery."

Notes: Palmer drew four walks Sunday, tying a club record. Richie Zisk had the team's last four-walk contest. ... Texas had never been held to as few as six hits in three games. The previous low was seven in June 1978. ... Frowirth has pitched eight scoreless innings in four appearances against Texas this season with a win and a save. ... Olson has allowed only one earned run in 22 innings over 20 games lifetime with a 3-0 record and 10 saves against the Rangers.

Orioles' hurler Arthur Rhodes held the Rangers hitless through five innings Sunday night.

Braves slip by Astros on Belliard's RBI single

HOUSTON (AP) - Rafael Belliard's run-scoring single in the 10th inning gave the Atlanta Braves a 3-2 victory against the Houston Astros on Sunday for a four-game sweep and their ninth straight victory.

The nine wins in a row are a season high for the Braves, who remained one game behind first-place Cincinnati in the NL West. Atlanta has won 11 straight games at the Astrodome, the most ever by a Houston opponent.

The Braves have won nine in a row for the first time since May 31-June 7, 1984.

Mark Lemke led off the 10th with a single off reliever Xavier Hernandez (5-1). Deion Sanders pinch ran for Lemke and moved to second when pinch-hitter Lonnie Smith was hit by a pitch. Sanders advanced to third on a grounder by Otis Nixon and scored on Belliard's single to right.

Marvin Freeman (3-3) pitched one inning for the victory and Alejandro Pena retired the side in the 10th inning for his 10th save, catching a popup at the plate to end the game when catcher Greg Olson lost the ball in the dome.

The Astros tied the score 2-2 in the eighth off starter Charlie Liebrandt on Casey Candaele's double down the left-field line off the glove of third baseman Terry Pendleton.

Pitcher Butch Henry crossed up the Braves' infield, expecting a bunt, with a single to center moving Candaele to third. Candaele scored on a double-play grounder by Craig Biggio.

The Astros broke a 20-inning scoreless streak in the second inning off Liebrandt, (8-3), on a solo homer by Pete Incaviglia, his ninth.

The Braves tied the score in the fourth inning off Henry. With two outs, Ron Gant singled and scored on a double to left-center by David Justice off the glove of Incaviglia.

The Braves took a 2-1 lead in the seventh on a leadoff double by Brian Hunter, Olson's grounder and Lemke's sacrifice fly.

Pampa girls capture state softball crown

MIDLAND - The Pampa Lady Harvesters brought home the first-place trophy in the United Girls Softball Association Championships.

Jessica Whitney scored on a bases loaded walk to Jamie Cenicerros to give Pampa a 5-4 win in extra innings over San Angelo in the championship finals Saturday.

San Angelo was unbeaten with a 5-0 record going into the finals against Pampa, which finished with a 5-1 mark.

Pampa scored the first run of the game in the second inning. Veronica Santacruz led off with a single to left and Whitney drew a walk, bringing Rhonda Been to the plate. A deep drive to right was caught by Narsha Benne while Santacruz tagged up at second and moved to third on the play. Amy Trusty singled to right, scoring Santacruz to give Pampa a 1-0 lead.

The Lady Harvesters put together three runs in the third inning for a 4-0 lead.

Jennifer Kidd led off the bottom of the third with a walk and moved to second on a deep sacrifice fly to left by Meredith Horton. Misty Plunk then doubled, putting Kidd at third. Lorrie Fulton doubles deep to left center, scoring both Kidd and Plunk. Kristen Becker sent a fly ball deep to right for the second out, but Fulton moved to third. Santacruz followed with a single to bring in Fulton for a 4-0 Pampa lead.

Becker pitched shutout ball for the Lady Harvesters until the seventh when San Angelo cut Pampa's lead to 4-2.

After Karen Pittori grounded out to Horton for the first out, Sara Huff lifted a short fly to left that fell in front of a charging Jennifer Kidd. Gidget Tate doubled to left, putting runners on second and third. Becker then struck out Dee Higdon for the second out, but Stacy Prior, with a 2-2 count, hit a two-run single to right. Ricci Dickson had a count of three balls and two strikes when she drilled a home run over the center field fence to tie the score at 4-4.

The score remained tied until Pampa's turn at bat in the bottom of the ninth. Santacruz led off with a single, but Whitney hit one back to the pitcher, who trapped Santacruz going to third for the first out. Home run threat Rhonda Been stepped in, but went down swinging on a 2-2 count. Trusty hit a liner to shortstop Monica Torrez, which she couldn't handle, moving Whitney to second. Michelle Casados was hit by a wild pitch that loaded the bases. Cenicerros, Pampa's youngest player, came up and she worked pitcher Tate to a 3-1 count before walking to bring home the winning run.

Becker was named the tournament's Most Valuable Player while three of her teammates — Lorrie Fulton, Rhonda Been and Meredith Horton — made the all-tournament team.

Bird, Stockton close to being healthy as U.S. cagers practice in Monte Carlo MONTE CARLO, Monaco (AP) - Having training camp at one of Europe's swankiest tourist havens is a vacation for most of the U.S. basketball team. For Larry Bird and John Stockton, it's just another step on the rehab road.

Because of injuries, Bird and Stockton each played just one full game and part of another at the Tournament of the Americas, which ended two weeks ago in Portland.

Both players are close to being ready to play again, but neither took part in Sunday's scrimmage at Monte Carlo's Stade Louis II arena.

"I'm trying to get to Barcelona healthy," said Bird, who has been slowed for months by a stiff back. "I did some running and shooting, but I didn't scrimmage with the team."

Stockton, who cracked a bone in his right leg on June 29, said he has no timetable for returning, although Team USA coach Chuck Daly said doctors told him last Friday that Stockton needed another week of recovery.

The U.S. team has an exhibition game scheduled for Tuesday night against the French national team, which did not make the final eight of Europe's Olympic qualifying tournament. The Dream Team's first Olympic game is Sunday against Angola.

Stockton said he has not tried to run on the injured leg except in a swimming pool. He rode a stationary bike while the team scrimmaged Sunday.

"I could probably run, but I don't want to do anything that backs up my recovery a week," said Stockton, who was injured in the Dream Team's second game at the Portland tournament. "I've been walking up steps, running in the pool, swimming and biking. I know I can't get in game shape without playing, so I know I'm not ready to play 40 minutes. But I also know I'm not needed for that long."

Bird said he would like to play Tuesday, but isn't sure if he will because "the main goal is to get to Barcelona."

Bird worked out at a Boston Celtics rookie-free agent camp last week, but admitted, "I didn't push it too hard. I knew I had a long, hard flight ahead of me, so I took my time. I just wanted to get a little practice in."

While Bird and Stockton plan to take it easy on the court this week in an effort to be ready for the Olympics, that didn't stop them from being a part of the team's family spirit in Monte Carlo.

Stockton brought his wife and three children while Bird was accompanied by his wife and infant son on Saturday's charter from Newark, N.J., to Nice, France.

The charter flight included 11 of the players' children, including three infants. When Bird walked into the team's hotel, he was carrying his infant son and his wife was carrying Bird's back brace.

Monaco, whose economy is almost completely based on gambling casinos and tourism, was chosen as an attractive vacation spot that also would allow the players to practice together and get used to the six-hour time differential between Barcelona and the U.S. East Coast.

"It was important that we came over here early to get acclimated," Daly said. "We wanted to make the site as attractive as we could. We could have made the Olympic preparations like a Marine training camp, but it just wasn't necessary because all these guys are professionals."

Although the players are still suffering from jet lag, Daly said he wanted a quick workout to get their focus back on basketball.

"We got back into the swim of things by getting wet again," Daly said. "Guys have a tendency to drift when they're off two weeks. So they needed to come in here and work up a sweat. When you're off and back home with your families, you don't stay physically and mentally involved."

Michael Jordan, who brought both of his preschool children to Monaco, said he is trying to stay as relaxed as possible.

Former Dallas quarterback Roger Staubach talks to Troy Aikman (right) at the Cowboys' training camp in Austin Sunday.

Rookie defender shines in 'Pokes scrimmage

By The Associated Press

When the Dallas Cowboys lost Jack Del Rio to the Minnesota Vikings via Plan B free agency, there was concern they would be hurting at middle linebacker in 1992.

After Sunday's performance by rookie Robert Jones of East Carolina, coach Jimmy Johnson isn't worrying one bit.

Jones, the Cowboys' second pick in the first round of the NFL draft, impressed Johnson and the 7,500 fans at St. Edward's University in Austin, Texas, watching the annual Blue-White scrimmage.

Jones returned an intercepted pass 58 yards for a touchdown off Troy Aikman. And he made several other plays that had Johnson in a buoyant mood after the 60-play scrimmage.

"You can see why we drafted him in the first round," Johnson said. "He made plays a normal player couldn't make. He made a great tackle on a screen pass and made a tremendous play on a sideline sweep. The only way you make those plays is if you have instincts and speed."

And Johnson can't wait to set his linebackers on the rest of the NFL.

"I'm just ecstatic about our linebacking corps. It confirms what I thought earlier," Johnson said. "We'll have the best set of linebackers this year that we've ever had."

Linebacker Maurice Crum returned a Steve Beuerlein interception 50 yards for a touchdown in the second defensive touchdown of the day.

Jones came into camp listed as the starting linebacker but said he doesn't expect anyone to hand him the job.

"It's not up to me to say that I start," he said. "It was an exciting day. I showed the fans and the coaches that I can play the pass."

On offense, Tony Jordan scored on a 3-yard run, Darryl Johnston scored from a yard out and Kelvin Martin caught a 62-yard scoring pass from Beuerlein.

Beuerlein, who led the Cowboys to five victories after Aikman got hurt last year, hit 8 of 12 passes for 169 yards. Aikman was 10 of 18 for 81 yards.

Warren Moon, attempting to resolve a dispute over bonus money from 1990, officially became a hold-out when he failed to report to Houston's camp by the deadline.

The conflict arose over the computation of the bonus. The Oilers paid the four-time Pro Bowl quarterback $1.5 million, but Moon and his agent Leigh Steinberg, claimed the figure should be about $2.3 million.

Also failing to report were Pro Bowl performers cornerback Cris Dishman, defense end William Fuller and guard Mike Munchak.

Safety Dana Hall, San Francisco's top draft choice, was signed to a three-year contract worth $2.7 million. Earlier, the club signed second-round pick Amp Lee, a running back, and ninth-round pick Darian Hagan, a receiver.

The club has 10 unsigned veterans, including all-pro receiver Jerry Rice.

"We're very, very happy and I know the coach (George Seifert) has been very anxious to get Dana into camp," 49ers president Carmen Polycy said.

Hall, who helped shut down Desmond Howard in Washington's Rose Bowl victory over Michigan, is projected as the starter at free safety.

Right guard Dwayne White has been told by coach Bruce Coslet to lose weight.

The 315-pound, 6-foot-2 offensive lineman, who reported to camp about 20 pounds over his ideal playing weight, was given a more modest 10 pounds to lose or be subjected to a fine. White's deadline was not revealed.

"He's overweight. If he doesn't hit our target weight by a certain point, I'll start fining him," Coslet said. "He can't play at the weight he is now. If we had to go in the fourth quarter against Miami, he couldn't finish the game."

Steelers

Defensive end Aaron Jones is back with Pittsburgh only because coach Chuck Noll isn't.

Jones, one of a recent run of disappointing Steelers first-round draft choices, said he asked to be traded after last season and returned when Noll resigned.

A year later, killer's crimes haunt families of victims

By MICHELLE WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer

MILWAUKEE (AP) — A year after the discovery of severed heads and body parts in Jeffrey Dahmer's apartment, the victims' families say their suffering hasn't ended.

"Every time you think you've got it under control, something else happens," said Stanley Miller, an uncle of victim Ernest Miller.

The unwelcome reminders come in many forms: books, serial killer trading cards, a comic book depicting Dahmer's crimes.

"They reduced them (the victims) down to comic characters," Miller said. "You can only take so much."

On the night of July 22, 1991, a handcuffed man escaped from Dahmer's apartment and led police back there. Inside the stench-filled rooms they found the remains of 11 males — painted human skulls, preserved genitals in a closet, severed heads and body parts in the freezer and torsos disintegrating in an acid-filled vat.

The next day, Dahmer — whose lawyer contended the killer had an uncontrollable desire for sex with corpses and feared being alone — admitted to killing 17 boys and men.

He told police he had sex with corpses. He said he photographed the bodies as he cut them up, acidified some bones and flushed the remains down the toilet. He tried to create zombie-like sex slaves out of some of his victims by drilling holes in their heads.

Most of the victims were black. Many were homosexual.

The former chocolate factory worker was found sane by a jury on Feb. 15 and sentenced to 15 consecutive life terms for murders committed during 1989-91. Dahmer, 32, also was sentenced to life in prison for killing a hitchhiker in his boyhood home of Bath, Ohio, in 1978. He wasn't charged in one Milwaukee case because of a lack of evidence.

Even some of the jurors found their lives altered by Dahmer's crimes.

Lori Sundt, a 32-year-old telephone operator, doesn't think about the trial very often, but the grisly details sometimes flash through her mind.

"I have problems with cooking," Mrs. Sundt said. "At times while I'm processing the beef and getting it ready to marinate, it crosses my mind — the dismemberment and how he dressed the body and took the meat off the bones."

For the victims' families, the pain is less forgiving. Some still attend weekly counseling meetings, and a group organized a vigil this month in remembrance of the discovery of Dahmer's crimes.

"You have some good days and some bad days," said Shirley Hughes, whose 31-year-old son, Anthony, was one of Dahmer's victims.

"You just wake one day and you might feel fine," she said. "Later on in the day something might come through your mind and just click and you think you're just going to lose it and you're just going to die."

Firefighters winning against wildfires

ALPINE, Calif. (AP) — Firefighters said they had the upper hand today as they battled four fires that burned more than 2,500 parched acres in Southern California. A 6,300-acre blaze in Idaho was contained.

Seven firefighters were injured in California, none seriously, authorities said. No injuries were reported in Idaho.

A fire that burned 1,550 acres of brush in the Cleveland National Forest, about 30 miles east of San Diego, was 90 percent contained Sunday and firefighters expected to have it fully encircled by this evening, said Audrey Hagen, spokeswoman for the California Department of Forestry.

Nearly 600 firefighters were battling the blaze, which burned through the sparsely populated area of Hidden Glen, near the town of Alpine, without damaging any homes, Capt. Michael Paulette of the California Department of Forestry said today.

The West was bracing for a busy fire season after a rainy spring ended a six-year drought that killed off much of the chaparral. The underbrush was renewed by the rains, then dried to tinder in the summer heat.

The Cleveland National Forest fire was started Saturday by an illegal campfire. Several homes were evacuated Saturday, but most residents had returned by Sunday.

Humidity rose and the winds calmed Sunday, aiding firefighters, Mrs. Hagen said. Planes bombarded the flames with water and fire retardant.

Three other fires were reported Sunday in San Diego and San Bernardino counties. Their cause wasn't known, Paulette said.

Two, accounting for 175 acres, were contained Sunday. The third, which consumed 830 acres of brush and forced the brief evacuation of two campgrounds and scattered ranch homes 60 miles east of San Diego, was expected to be under control by nightfall, Paulette said.

In Idaho, the fire 40 miles north of Boise was contained by more than 700 firefighters who cut and shoveled a line around it. Arnold Hartigan, a fire information officer, said it should be controlled by tonight, but a shift in the weather could stir it up again.

The blaze, reported Friday, was apparently caused by sparks from a car being towed by a recreational vehicle along the highway, said Forest Service spokesman Greg Spanberg.

Experts attack U.S. for restricting entry to people with AIDS virus

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands (AP) — Experts at an international AIDS conference denounced restrictions on AIDS-infected people trying to enter the United States and appealed for global cooperation to fight the disease.

More than 10,000 scientists, policy-makers, activists and AIDS-infected patients have gathered this week for the eighth International Conference on AIDS.

Hundreds of whistle-blowing demonstrators tried unsuccessfully to get into the meeting, which began Sunday, and some ransacked the booth of a pharmaceutical firm that sells a drug that treats AIDS-related blindness.

AIDS and gay rights activists dumped 40 cardboard coffins in front of the U.S. and other consulates to protest visa restrictions against people infected with the AIDS virus.

In Boston on Sunday, about 150 demonstrators from across the Northeast attacked U.S. policy toward AIDS-infected visitors.

The international conference, originally planned for Boston, was switched to Amsterdam because the United States restricts entry to people infected with the virus that causes AIDS.

"Let us raise our voices again today and say this unsound policy must change," Dr. Harvey Fineberg, dean of the Harvard School of Public Health, declared in Amsterdam on Sunday.

"It must change and we must not relent until this wrong is made right," Fineberg said.

U.S. immigration rules do not completely bar the entry of AIDS-infected people, but restrict them to a 30-day stay to conduct business, see relatives, obtain medical treatment or attend scientific or medical conferences.

Tomas Fabregas, a Spanish AIDS patient who has lived in the United States since 1979, told the conference he plans to challenge the American policy when he returns to California on Saturday.

"I will be arriving in San Francisco at 4:50 in the afternoon, and I defy George Bush to prevent me from returning to my home. ... I am vulnerable, but I am not weak," Fabregas said to a loud round of applause.

The AIDS activists in Boston hoisted a slogan-covered coffin as they marched on the federal building to protest the U.S. visa policy. Some handed out condoms to tourists in the city's center.

In May 1991, the World Health Organization predicted that up to 40 million people will be infected with the AIDS virus by the end of the century. Ten million people were likely to develop the disease by the year 2000, 90 percent of them from developing countries, the U.N. agency said.

A recent report has suggested that a new, undetectable strain of the disease may have emerged.

At least 11 people, including six Americans, have developed AIDS without testing positive for the AIDS virus, Newsweek reported in its July 27 issue.

Several policy-makers told the conference that the only effective strategy to stem the spread of AIDS is to consider AIDS a social and political problem, not just a medical one.

"The old vision of AIDS has really become a straitjacket," said Dr. Jonathan Mann, chairman of the conference.

Mann and other leaders said the disease is spreading out of control because thousands of people do not have access to proper health care or drugs, or are afraid to demand that their partners use condoms.

"While we know what needs to be done, our vulnerability to AIDS is being increased by societal inequity, discrimination and indifference, undermining what power we already have through knowledge," said Dr. Eka Esu-Williams, president of the Society for Women and AIDS in Africa.

As the conference opened, security guards prevented hundreds of demonstrators from entering the convention hall. They blew whistles and banged drums but could not be heard inside the main auditorium.

Richard Rochon, representing ACT-UP Boston, an AIDS activist group, appealed for a worldwide boycott on most drugs made by Astra Pharmaceutical Products, whose Foscavir is widely used to prevent AIDS-related blindness.

Rochon said the drug, which costs $58 a day, is overpriced.

Sarah Martin-Munley, a company research official, said Astra gives the drug free to those who cannot afford it if their physicians ask for it.

Demonstrators wrecked the company's exhibition booth, pasting it with stickers and throwing out papers.

Reports: 'Murphy Brown' to seek revenge against Quayle

NEW YORK (AP) — Coming this fall to a television screen near you: Dan Quayle vs. Murphy Brown, Part II.

The fictional TV journalist will respond to the vice president's criticism of her decision to bear a child out of wedlock in the season premiere of her CBS-TV show, two newspapers reported today.

Diane English, the show's creator, told The New York Times that Quayle will "absolutely be mentioned by name."

But no one connected with "Murphy Brown" would tell the Times or The Miami Herald what the show would say about Quayle.

The vice president provoked a national uproar last May by saying that Brown, played by Candice Bergen on the comedy series, "mocks the importance of fathers" because she chose unwed motherhood and bore a child in the show's concluding episode last spring.

English, who created "Murphy

Brown" and resigned as the show's executive producer after last season, said the hour-long rebuttal episode would be titled "Murphy's Revenge."

Quayle's press secretary, David Beckwith, told the Times the vice president had not attacked single mothers.

"The genius of the Hollywood elite," Beckwith said, "is to twist what he said to try to get people to believe their version of what he said."

Tests show pre-cancerous cells in Pope's colon

ROME (AP) — Tests on the colon tumor removed from Pope John Paul II last week confirmed it was benign, but a small group of cells was starting to show signs of becoming cancerous, the Vatican said today.

However, papal spokesman Joaquin Navarro said that "not one cancerous cell" was found by doctors.

Biopsies made before and during surgery found the tumor to be benign, but doctors also conducted further tests to corroborate the initial findings.

In the results released today, the Vatican said that doctors found one small portion of "proliferating cells which were losing their benign characteristics to take on those of a malign degeneration."

The Vatican added that those cells showed no "invasive behavior."

Malignant tumors are called invasive because they grow in an uncontrolled way, spreading to other parts of the body.

Navarro said it was not a precancerous condition, but that it was a "situation of risk" that was overcome by the surgery.

The medical report was given as the 72-year-old pope continued what doctors called an excellent recovery from surgery five days ago.

"The pope is doing well," said Francesco Crucitti, the pope's surgeon, after visiting his patient at Gemelli hospital. Crucitti lead the medical team that removed the tumor.

Crucitti said the pope, who has been nourished intravenously, drank tea for the first time today.

Italian state television had reported that the pope took liquids for the first time Sunday, but that report was apparently premature.

Navarro said that when he saw John Paul this morning the pope immediately expressed his indignation over the assassination of an anti-Mafia crusader in Sicily, calling it "an insult to Italy."

The Vatican sent telegrams to the archbishop and mayor of Palermo, Sicily, and the president of Italy, saying the pope was praying for the victims.

Paolo Borsellino was killed in Palermo by a car bomb Sunday. Borsellino had inherited the mantle of Giovanni Falcone, Italy's top Mafia prosecutor, who was slain on May 23 by a bomb. The Mafia was blamed for both deaths.
