Love that pickin'

By CHERYL BERZANSKIS
Lifestyles Editor

MOBEETIE - Toes were tapping and hands clapping under the elms at the Old Mobeetie Jail Friday night as string musicians, singers and cloggers purveyed traditional American music to an appreciative crowd.

Fans sitting in customized lawn chairs or on quilts gathered at the Old Mobeetie Bluegrass Festival to hear bands comprised of musicians of all ages.

Organizer Brian Vining of the Panhandle Bluegrass and Old Tyme Music Association, was delighted with the turnout for the 13th annual festival. The camping area around the jail was trailer-to-trailer with bluegrass fans. It filled up by Wednesday, he said.

While most came to listen and relax or reminisce about bygone days when bluegrass music held sway, among the close-packed camping trailers, shade-tree musicians discovered new friends and renewed acquaintances with those of like mind. The air was filled with the strains of old favorites played on non-electric instruments.

"Oh, a 100 years from now I won't be cryin'; Oh, a 100 years from now I won't be blue..."

Cecil Patterson, Edmond, Okla.; Junior Blankenship, Borger; Garry Nance, Pampa; Kenneth Roberts, Oklahoma City; and Ray Cargo, Amarillo, circled their chairs and made sweet music together.

The musicians have been friends for several years.

"We pick every chance we get," Nance said.

Under a tent, Jim Miller, Garland; Harvey Stephens, Wylie; Hal Blackwell, Mountain View, Okla.; and Rick Dyson, Sayre, Okla. "found" each other. Their 20-minute long acquaintance didn't stop them from picking, singing and joking together like old friends.

A non-musician in attendance was Audrey Taylor of Plainview. Taylor said that she and her husband have been coming to Old Mobeetie for several years.

"He's really into bluegrass," she explained.

"You don't meet any nicer people than in bluegrass," she said. "They are friendly and cordial. The music is just out of this world."

Banjo player Randy Houk of Amarillo, came hoping to "jam" with fellow musicians and find old friends whom he knew before moving to Wichita, Kan. years earlier. He found his old friends. They "jammed."

Love of bluegrass music is not confined to adults.

Twelve-year old Sterling Schmidt of Crawford, Okla. brought his dobro. He and his dad, Neal Schmidt, were looking to pick and sing with other musicians. Sterling got his first fiddle in 1984 and in 1991 got "serious" about his music.

He is the heir of family musical tradition as Neal Schmidt explained - "When I grew up...my dad sang in church and at a lot of funerals. I've been an entertainer all my life."

Schmidt said he plays six instruments. The father and son, like others, found congenial companionship for some shade-tree pickin'.

Festival music-making continued on Saturday afternoon and evening and through this morning. An auction to benefit the scholarship fund of the association was set for Saturday morning.

Bush weighs options

Expects answer from Iraq today

By MERRILL HARTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Bush and top aides discussed Saturday how to confront Saddam Hussein's "broad pattern of defiance" of post-Gulf War cease-fire resolutions requiring inspection of Iraq's war-making machine. No options were foreclosed, the White House said.

Bush "considered this new record of non-compliance" in a meeting at Camp David, Md., with the heads of the national security establishment, said press secretary Marlin Fitzwater.

The White House is staying in close touch with countries that joined the United States in the Operation Desert Storm alliance that ousted Saddam's troops from Kuwait in February of last year, Fitzwater said in a statement. "No options have been ruled out."

The two-hour meeting at Bush's secluded retreat in Maryland's Catoctin Mountains was reminiscent of a series of high-level sessions in the summer of 1990 after the invasion of Kuwait. The president has canceled a planned weekend visit to his Maine vacation home to focus attention of Iraq.

Among those at the Bush meeting were Vice President Dan Quayle, Defense Secretary Dick Cheney, Deputy Secretary of State Lawrence Eagleburger, National Security Adviser Brent Scowcroft and Gen. Colin Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Secretary of State James A. Baker III, talking to reporters in Manila, dismissed reports that Iraq was offering concessions to avert a Persian Gulf showdown.

"This is just another example of Iraq's cheat-and-retreat approach," Baker said of reports Iraq was trying to smooth over its crisis-engendering dispute with the United Nations over access to ballistic missile documents.

The high-level strategy session at Camp David took place as a top U.N. official and the Iraqi ambassador held talks in New York. The aim of the New York talks was to reach an accord on U.N. demands that its inspectors be allowed to search the Iraqi Agriculture Ministry for weapons-related materials.

Abdal-Amir al-Anbari, Iraq's ambassador to the United Nations, said "there is no deadline" for agreement.

However, Rolf Ekeus, the U.N. official in charge of dismantling Iraq's weapons of mass destruction, said he expected a final response from Baghdad by today.

"Time is against us. Every hour that goes is making things worse," said Ekeus, expressing concern that the Iraq was removing or destroying materials the inspectors wanted to see.

"We have always said that this is a distinct possibility: that what is in the building will be moved," Ekeus said.

Saddam's defiance of a U.N. resolution requiring such international inspections rights, and increasing talk of reprisal, has created a virtual crisis atmosphere.

"It's going to be bombs away" if Saddam ignores these threats, declared Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole.

Fitzwater's statement said that Bush and his advisers discussed "Iraq's non-compliance with U.N. resolutions."

"Saddam Hussein has demonstrated a broad pattern of defiance and noncompliance with U.N. requirements," it said. "The president today considered this new record of non-compliance, the U.N. resolutions and their requirements and the full range of options for enforcing full compliance with the resolutions."

Bush, questioned by reporters during a campaign visit to Ohio Friday, insisted there was "no time frame" for any U.S. response to Saddam and said he wanted to be sure that all options were reviewed thoroughly.

Deputy press secretary Laura Melillo said Saturday that the White House was monitoring the U.N. talks closely and said "the president will, of course, receive updates."

Dole, interviewed on CNN's "Evans and Novak," said he wouldn't be surprised if there were a "surgical strike" against Iraq.

But he said that Bush doesn't want "to get bogged down anywhere" and said that any reprisal against Saddam would be carried out "in concert with our allies."

"I think the president doesn't want to do it," Dole said. "But he doesn't have any choice. I think if Saddam Hussein doesn't get the message this time, he's further out of business."

Undersecretary of Defense Paul Wolfowitz said that in addition to Saddam's refusal to grant access to the Agriculture Ministry, U.S. officials have been concerned about his "intensive counter-insurgency" campaign of air strikes against Shiites in southern Iraq.

Senior golfers to hit fairway

By MARK SPENCER
Sports Editor

Pampa welcomes one of its grandest summer traditions today as 160 senior golfers begin registering for the 58th Annual Tri-State Senior Golf Association Tournament at the Pampa Country Club.

The tournament is the oldest known senior's tournament in the country and is being held for the 22nd consecutive year in Pampa. This year's tournament reached its 160-player limit several months ago.

"You could say it's found a home here," Floyd Sackett, Tri-State secretary, said. "The golfers like the way they're treated here. They love to come back."

The numbers support Sackett's statement as about 120 golfers entered in the event are making return visits.

Leading the pack of entrants from eight states is Jake Broyles of Lamesa who has won the tournament the past three years and five times overall.

"I've fallen in love with that course," Broyles said about his victories at the tournament. "I really can't explain the success I've had on it. Last year, I wasn't playing well at all before I came, and I ended up winning it. There's no explanation for it. None at all."

But more than winning has been bringing Broyles and the other seniors back each year.

"The people of Pampa put on a fine show for us," said Broyles, who plays in about 20 tournaments a year. "It's one of my favorite tournaments all year because it's more like a vacation for my wife and I. We really look forward to it."

Broyles and the other golfers will compete in a tournament that varies somewhat from the one used in past years.

For starters, the Championship flight of 32 players will play 54 holes of stroke play Wednesday through Friday.

After 18 holes, the 16 highest scoring players will be grouped into the President's flight. As in the Championship flight, the winner will be determined by the low total of the 54 holes during the three days of golf.

The other flights will have 16-player groups that will compete in a match play format Wednesday and Thursday. On Friday, each golfer will play medal play in four groups of four within each flight.

A player will be assigned to a group in accordance to his record in Wednesday's and Thursday's play. Four trophies will be awarded to each flight.

Awards will also be presented to the oldest golfer, the golfer who shoots closest to his age and other categories the Tri-State Association has established.

"It's really a very unique format," Sackett said. "There's a chance for nearly a quarter of the golfers here to win something."

Off the course, the Tri-State Association has scheduled several dinners, bridge sessions and social activities for the golfers and their wives throughout the week.

Foremost of those will be the presentation of the Colonel Bogey Award at a banquet on Thursday at M.K. Brown Auditorium. The award is given to the Tri-State member who has demonstrated a special willingness to help keep the Tri-State Association and golf strong during the past year.

Pampan dies in roll over Saturday

AMARILLO - A 25-year-old Pampa man was killed in a one-vehicle rollover south of Amarillo on Saturday morning, according to the Texas Department of Public Safety.

Jimmy Leos, a student at West Texas State University, was pronounced dead at the scene by Randall County Justice of the Peace E. Jay Hail.

Leos was a passenger in the 1991 Ford pickup driven by Michael John McCoy, 25, of Amarillo, a DPS spokeswoman said Saturday. The accident occurred at 7:10 a.m. Saturday, 3 of a mile north of Rockwell Road on the southbound service road of Interstate 27.

The DPS said the vehicle was traveling southbound on the service road when it ran off the roadway to the right. The driver overcorrected and the vehicle rolled 2 1/2 times, coming to a rest on the pickup's right side on the service road.

Leos, who the DPS said was not wearing a seatbelt, was ejected from the pickup and the pickup ran over him.

McCoy, who the DPS said was wearing a seatbelt, was listed in satisfactory condition with bruises, lacerations and a head injury at Northwest Texas Hospital in Amarillo.

Trooper Richard Diegelman of Canyon investigated the accident. Funeral arrangements for Leos are by Carmichael-Whitley Funeral Directors of Pampa. - Beth Miller

Officials name Sanders Rufe Jordan Unit warden

A 16-year Texas prison system veteran has been named as the first warden at the Rufe Jordan Unit in Pampa, state prison officials said.

Darwin Sanders, who now serves as assistant warden at the William P. Clements Jr. Unit in Amarillo was promoted Friday to serve as the Pampa prison warden.

The promotion of Sanders, 45, will be effective Aug. 1. He was promoted by James Collins, director of the Texas Department of Criminal Justice in Huntsville.

The medium-security, 1,000-bed Rufe Jordan Unit is targeted to open Nov. 1.

Sanders started his career with Texas prisons as a correctional officer at the Ramsey 1 Unit in Rosharon, south of Houston. He worked his way up the prison system to assistant director of the northern region at the Beto 1 Unit in Palestine and was named assistant warden in January 1990.

He has been the assistant warden at the Clements Unit since April 1990.

Boy finds frog with seven! legs

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) - Michael Leonetti's new pet would make a gourmet's mouth water: a frog with seven legs.

Michael, 11, discovered the frog Monday at the Des Moines Water Works Park where he was fishing for tadpoles with a friend.

"I didn't believe him," said his mother, Terri Leonetti. "I said there's no way."

The Science Center of Iowa said frogs are able to reproduce injured limbs. Bonnie Callan, life science curator at the center, said she believes one of the frog's legs was cut as it matured from a tadpole.

"As it was growing, each part of the leg-forming tissue that was slashed would grow into its own leg," she said.

Callan, who had never seen a frog with so many legs, wants to put Michael's pet on public display next week.

Board sets tougher parole rules for capital murderers

AMARILLO(AP) — The parole of convicted killer Kenneth McDuff and others has prompted tentative approval of a tougher review rule, the head of the state board says.

The new rule could require a unanimous vote by the parole panel before inmates convicted of capital murder be paroled.

The Texas Board of Criminal Justice voted Friday for the change. However, a public hearing on the matter before final approval is required.

Also, the Texas Board of Pardons and Paroles has final authority on implementing the change.

"The actual rule says that the full parole board must do an administrative review, and it could require that all 18 members vote for a release if it wants to," said Selden Hale, an Amarillo attorney who heads the board.

"And we are going to leave it up to the parole board with their own rule-making authority to decide how that will work," he said.

Justice board members said the Texas Legislature and courts will also likely have input. Hale stressed that prison board members want the full parole panel to conduct reviews rather than the three-member system used now.

Three members of the parole board currently review inmates' cases, with one member interviewing the parole candidate and the other two studying his or her file.

It then takes two votes for an inmate to be paroled, Hale said.

This month, legislative panels have been investigating state parole and the role played by consultants.

"This (new plan) is a reaction to some parole board members being wrong, in hindsight," said Hale.

In 1968, McDuff had been sentenced to death for the 1966 murder of one of three slain Tarrant County teen-agers. But his sentence was commuted to life when the U.S. Supreme Court found in 1972 that the death penalty, as then applied, unconstitutional.

McDuff's release from prison was granted by parole board members in 1989. But the agency's staff revoked his parole in September 1990 after he was accused of threats against a teen-ager.

McDuff's parole was reinstated by a staff attorney months later. The 46-year-old man has since been indicted on capital murder charges in the deaths of two women.

Also, McDuff is a suspect in the deaths and disappearances of a number of other women in Central Texas.

The parole board's chairman, Jack Kyle, said earlier this month that all future decisions about revoking or reinstating an inmate's parole will be made by the parole board.

Also Friday, the prison board approved a $1.17 billion budget for the next fiscal year, which begins Sept. 1. However, board members expect a $125 million shortfall because of payments to county jails to house state inmates.

White Deer rodeo entrants post faster, better times second night

WHITE DEER — If it was a movie sequel one might title it Faster Times and Better Rides at White Deer Rodeo.

More than a few entrants in Friday night's performance of the 33rd annual White Deer Amateur Rodeo bested top-three scores posted the previous night in the three-go-round affair.

Sponsored by the White Deer Riding Club, the second performance of the Texas Cowboys Rodeo Association (TCRA)-approved rodeo provided thrills and spills in the rough stock and timed events.

All three top spots in steer wrestling were topped as Delbert Davis of Hereford grounded his steer in a lightning-quick 3.3 seconds. Tom Felhauer of Hereford captured second place with a 4.0 time and Pampa's Jim Boy Hash stopped and dropped his draw in 4.3 seconds.

Troy Johnson of Nazareth arrested first place in calf roping by stopping the timer at 12.14 seconds.

In breakaway roping, Lari Dee Guy of Abilene slipped into third place by latching her calf in 5.993 seconds.

Wheeler's Kathy Hill maintained a strangle hold on the top spot in barrel racing, but Sabrina Devers of Booker moved up to second place and Monica Collins of Leedy, Okla., climbed to third.

In bull riding, Amarillo's Dusty Harris held the lead with 73 points. Miami's Don Ray Howard impressed the crowd and tallied 71 points Friday night on McCloy Rodeo Co.'s Slam Dunk to grab second place.

Otey McCloy of Lickin, Mo., made the buzzer aboard McCloy's Turn Me Loose and earned 70 points to garner top saddle bronc honors after two performances.

White Deer's Shawn Thompson remained on top in the bareback event with a 70-point score.

The duo of Bruce Potter and Clayton Ward continued to lead team roping with a 5.59-second run.

The Pampa team of Mike Dorsey, Joe Coutts and Jimmy Baggett showed how double mugging is accomplished by roping and tying its steer in 35.9 seconds. In second place with a 52.19-second time is the Morse team of Marty McCloy, Robbie Salzbrenner and Charlie Kiser.

Here are the standings after Thursday and Friday night performances (results of the Saturday night performance were not available by press time):

Barebacks: 1. Shawn Thompson, White Deer, 70 points; 2/3/4. (split) Cole Tindel of Allison, Craig Cooper of Gruver and Chris Stanford of Verhalen, 69.

Breakaway roping: 1. Kody Newman, Lubbock, 3.809 seconds; 2. Desha Russell, Shamrock, 4.795; 3. Lari Dee Guy, Abilene, 5.993.

Infant formed in mother's abdomen born healthy

BRYAN (AP) — A 7-pound, 3-ounce baby girl was reported in good condition Saturday after being removed from her mother's abdomen in a rare delivery doctors say beat medical odds of better than 150,000 to one.

Alice Banks, 41, said only divine intervention could explain why her daughter, Paris Lavern, survived.

"Satan's been trying to take this baby since I got pregnant," she told the Bryan-College Station Eagle. "I kept calling on Jesus so Satan couldn't touch her."

Dr. J.T.L. McNew, who delivered the baby on Wednesday, said prayers were as good an explanation as any.

"We doctors can't take any credit for getting her to the point where she was ready to deliver," McNew said.

Ms. Banks, a convenience store clerk with two other children aged 15 and 17, thought her third pregnancy felt different, but credited it to aging.

"It seemed different," she said from her room at St. Joseph's Hospital Saturday. "But after 15 years, you get used to anything. I just thought it was part of the pregnancy. But I was constantly in pain, throughout the whole pregnancy."

When she visited an obstetrician for a routine appointment last week, an ultrasound examination showed that the child was breech and a Caesarean section was quickly scheduled.

In a Caesarean section using general anesthetic, the doctor's principal concern is removing the child in less than five minutes, McNew said. He initially dismissed the collapsed uterus he found as a benign fibroid tumor.

"It didn't dawn on me until I delivered the baby," McNew said. "I grabbed the hind legs and pulled it out. Then I said to myself, 'Hey, I didn't pull this out of a uterus.'"

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Opinion

Break the chain

A teen-aged girl has a baby out of wedlock. The father of the child is a high school dropout without a job. They should be the target of welfare reform efforts. That's because most welfare recipients are short-timers.

These individuals usually seek assistance because of an unfortunate circumstance such as a divorce, the death of a spouse, or a temporary disability. The short-timers stay on the public dole only until they can get back on their feet. They are not a problem.

The real drain on the welfare system is the long-term recipient, like our teen-aged mother. While long-termers constitute a minority of the welfare case load, they account for the biggest expense. If they somehow can be weaned from welfare dependency, tremendous savings are to be had. But how to do this? Through upward mobility.

Census Bureau poverty data bear this out. A family with two parents, both high school graduates, with one or both working full-time, year-round has a better than 95 percent probability of not being poor. The key to attacking poverty then is to encourage poor young men and women to get their diplomas, get married, stay married and get jobs.

Unfortunately, the existing welfare system provides insufficient incentives for education or marriage or work - the keys to escaping poverty. Instead, much of the $210 billion a year that all governments spend on welfare goes to treating symptoms of poverty.

The problem of welfare is not that government is spending too little. It's that government is spending unwisely.

Now at least a few of the nation's governors have gotten the drift. They recognize the formula for upward mobility and they are trying to bring reform to the failing welfare system.

In California, for instance, Gov. Pete Wilson is backing an initiative that, among other things, would pare cash benefits by 15 percent after six months for families in which an able-bodied parent is not working. The Wilson reform also would provide an additional $50 monthly stipend for teen-age welfare moms who stay in school.

In Wisconsin, Gov. Tommy Thompson has initiated a plan that rewards teen-age welfare mothers who marry.

Neither the Wilson nor Thompson reforms incorporate the entire formula for escaping poverty and welfare. But at least they address certain elements of the formula.

Other states should build on the reforms that governors like Wilson and Thompson have undertaken. Once one state builds all the elements of upward mobility into its welfare system, we may finally see the beginning of the end of the wasteful welfare state.

Berry's World

TOP 27% INCOMERS AGAINST CLINTON

Politically incorrect truth

Let's start off with an update on the sex equality front. Women make up 30 percent of naval non-combat crews. Despite strict rules against "fraternization," about 16 percent of the 8,600 Navy women on ship duty get pregnant each year.

Crybaby Rep. Patricia Schroeder excuses this by explaining that Navy women feel they have "to have sex or you get labeled as a lesbian. So women are damned if they do and damned if they don't." It gets worse.

Elaine Donnelly, member of the Presidential Commission on the Assignment of Women in the Armed Forces, reports on some shocking "gender norming." At West Point, the M-14 rifle spring has been modified to make it easier for women. Army fitness standards call for 80 push-ups for men and 56 for women; men ages 17 to 25 must run two miles in 27 minutes and 55 seconds; women are given 22 minutes and 14 seconds; Marine men must climb 20 feet of rope in 30 seconds; women are given 50 seconds.

Despite critical physical and psychological differences between men and women, radical feminists want women in combat roles in the military. Successful mission completion, or life and death for hundreds of soldiers, can come down to whether you're meaner and can move faster carrying heavy loads than the enemy.

Then there's the politically incorrect question asked by Elizabeth Wright, in Issues & Views

Walter Williams

(Spring 1992): "Ever since we blacks derailed our own entrepreneurial progress, a segment of our community has complained about those who come to our desolate neighborhoods and open the much needed businesses we neglect to create. Through the '60s, the complaint was against white merchants, principally Jewish retailers. Today, ...the anger is focused on Koreans and other Asians. As refugees flee the turmoil of Eastern Europe, will these blacks soon be whining about the 'invasion' of enterprising immigrants from Croatia or Bosnia and Herzegovina?"

The answer to Wright's question was supplied by black businessman S.B. Fuller (of Fullerbrush fame) who during his life was boycotted and excoriated by the NAACP. "Since the Negro does not supply the demand in his own community, the white man must come in ... Then the Negro thinks that there is a racial barrier that keeps him from making progress. The Negro must pool his capital in order to help himself. He must establish retail sales organizations throughout his community and also he must go into light manufacturing where retail selling has already produced an outlet for the products light manufacturing can produce. This will enable him to solve his own problems." Now maybe we can explain the successful entrepreneurship of the Koreans, Vietnamese and Cambodians; they've been heeding the words of S.B. Fuller.

Finally, there's the politically incorrect Robert's law, arrogantly named after Center of Strategic and International Studies' economist Paul Craig Roberts: "Whenever economic policy is driven by envy, ruin results." Roberts gives numerous examples of his law in the March 1992 issue of National Review. The 1986 Tax Reform Act lengthened depreciation schedules (19 to 31 years), took away deductions to "passive investors" and raised the capital gains tax by 40 percent. This was sold to Americans as "get the rich," and it would raise revenues by $30 billion, not to mention being "a down payment of the deficit." We didn't collect one thin dime of that predicted $30 billion. Instead, it destroyed the real estate industry. Since real estate loans comprise the largest part of savings and loan portfolios, it wrecked many S&Ls, causing us to shell out about $300 billion in bailout money. Congressmen have really come to trust American innocence and stupidity.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Sunday, July 26, the 208th day of 1992. There are 158 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:
On July 26, 1947, President Harry S. Truman signed the National Security Act, which created the Department of Defense, the National Security Council, the Central Intelligence Agency and the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

On this date:
In 1775, Benjamin Franklin became Postmaster-General.

In 1908, U.S. Attorney General Charles J. Bonaparte issued an order creating an investigative agency within the Department of Justice that was a forerunner of the FBI.

In 1945, Winston Churchill resigned as Britain's prime minister after his Conservatives were soundly defeated in elections by the Labor Party. Clement Attlee became the new prime minister.

In 1952, 40 years ago, Argentina's first lady, Eva Peron, died in Buenos Aires at age 33.

In 1952, Adlai E. Stevenson was nominated for president by the Democratic National Convention in Chicago; later that day, John J. Sparkman was nominated for vice president.

Do Clinton and Gore fit the mold?

It has long been my conclusion that if you happen to be a Straight Southern White Male (SSWM), as I happen to be, you're in a mess in the politically correct '90s.

Most of us are automatically branded as racist, sexist, anti-gay and it is often said that we drink beer and listen to Willie Nelson albums and sip expensive white wine while listening to Mozart's Opus No. 28 in G-flat out, Asia Minor.

None of that is necessarily so, except for the part about the beer and the Willie Nelson albums.

Willie singing the phone book would, in fact, be a symphony, and most wines are overpriced and overrated, and who among us would remember to bring a corkscrew to a stockcar race?

But look at this, will you:

The 1992 Democratic presidential ticket has two Straight (I assume) White Southern Males on it. Pass the butter beans.

Two good ol' boys (a term northerners, especially women with hyphenated last names who hate college football and pickup trucks, came up with) bidding for the White House.

But do Bill Clinton and Al Gore really fit the SSWM mold here?

I once saw Al Gore cooking barbecue in Memphis. But how many of we SSWM's have a wife named "Tipper"? We marry women named "Bonnie Lou Ann Sue," "Dorris," and "Joe Betty Mavis."

Lewis Grizzard

Bill Clinton's wife is named "Hillary." Hillary? Once Prince Charles gets rid of Lady Di, he'll probably marry somebody named Hillary.

And both these guys went to Ivy League schools. Most little boys who grow up in Arkansas, as did Bill Clinton, want to go to the University of Arkansas, wear a silly hat and scream "Soooooie! Pig!" when the Razorbacks score a touchdown.

Al Gore didn't go to the University of Tennessee, either, where the mascot is a blue tick hound named "Smokey" and the band never stops playing "Rocky Top" form the opening kickoff to the final whistle.

What they do at Yale, where Bill Clinton went to school, is sing "Boola, Boola," which is translated loosely into Northern way as, "How 'bout them dawgs!"

Does either of these guys own a pickup truck and have a dog named "Tater" or "Rattler" or "Biscuit eater" that crawls under the truck in order to sleep in the shade and emerges with oil on its back?

Does either one of these guys know all the words to even one country music song? Does either one of these guys know King Richard Petty is going to retire this year from the stock car circuit, or care?

Can they try their mouths to blow gnats off their face, or do they try to swat them off with their hands?

Would either ask Congress to pass legislation outlawing instant grits? Do they say "wrestling" or "rasslin'?"

Did they have a problem pronouncing "Shiite" during the Gulf War? Do Hillary and Tipper still fry chicken, or serve it baked under some god-awful sauce? Do they still cook at all?

Before I make up my mind whether Bill Clinton and Al Gore are true SSWM's, I want answers to these questions.

If I don't get them I'll probably vote for Ross Perot. At least "he sounds" like he's from around here someplace.

Could this be the Democrats' hour?

So now the ambitious young man from Hope, Ark., has received the nomination of the Democratic Party for the office of president of the United States. Whatever else Bill Clinton's victory signifies, it is testimony to the value of a lifelong fixity of purpose.

We know that, as a very young man, Clinton set his sights on a political career, probably including a bid for the presidency. No doubt if he had known that that bid would occur after America shifted sharply to the right during the 1980s, he would have served his promised stretch in the ROTC after all, rather than merely use the deferment to avoid service in Vietnam. But he eventually perceived which way the wind was blowing, and went so far as to accept the chairmanship of the Democratic Leadership Council, a group of influential Democrats formed to urge the party back from the left, toward center.

Clinton has received deserved credit for coming forward with a good many relatively specific proposals for changes in federal policies - on health, education, the environment, mass transit and so on. What is lacking, though - and predictably, for after all this is the hard part - is where all the money is going to come from. For the cost will be hundreds of billions of dollars.

Clinton has two principal techniques for evading that question.

William Rusher

Get a copy of the convention speech and count how many times Clinton uses the word "spend" as a proposal for federal action. I venture to guess, not once. Then count the number of times he uses the word "invest" as a painless synonym for "spend." You will find it again and again.

For example, that long-since-exploded Democratic "solution" for the problem of the urban underclass - namely, throwing huge sums of money at it - reappears in the updated Clinton version as "investing in the human resources of our urban population" or some close variant thereof. What you "spend," you see, is spent; what you "invest" returns (one hopes) with interest. Or so Clinton would have us believe.

Clinton's only direct explanation for where those hundreds of billions will come from is the oldest blunderbuss in the whole armory of class warfare: He will increase the taxes of "the rich," who must be made to pay "their fair share."

Just what the rich's fair share might be, Clinton doesn't say. Should the top 1 percent of taxpayers pay (for example) a quarter of all federal income taxes? Should the top 10 percent pay a full half? That's no solution: They both do, already. How much harder can President Clinton's tax collectors squeeze them before they start looking for offshore loopholes?

On the Sunday before the convention opened, I saw its chair, Texas Gov. Ann Richards, and the vice presidential candidate, Sen. Al Gore, respond to the questions of talk-show reporters on this issue. It was comical to behold.

Ms. Richards, I thought, handled the question better: Ignoring the problem of how much could be raised, she opined that rich people would go along quite amiably with the increase (as if that were the problem), and cited some allegedly parallel experience in Texas as evidence.

Sen. Gore never answered the question at all. He simply took off into the wild blue yonder, pointing with pride and viewing with alarm, and wound up with a plea for the oncoming generations of America's young.

He may have been right at that. If Clinton wins and "invests" even a fraction of the hundreds of billions he has promised, America's young are going to need all the help they can get.

Clinton hits West Coast

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — Campaigning as though it were October, Bill Clinton pushed a break-neck pace Saturday as he opened his presidential run on the West Coast with a favored method for gathering votes — a roundtable on economic policy.

"I want this to be an aggressive campaign," Clinton said heading to Washington state for a 20-hour day packed with events in Spokane and Seattle.

"We have a lot of American people to reach. There's 100 days left in this election. That's an eternity," Clinton said, asked why he was keeping such a frenetic schedule even though polls showed him coming out of the Democratic National Convention with a huge lead over President Bush.

"As far as I'm concerned, the polls are insignificant," the Arkansas governor said. "I'm running as if this ticket has still got a case to make to the American people and a lot of hard work to do."

Clinton started his day with a roundtable discussion with about 20 voters in Spokane — Republican and Democrat alike — who had read his economic plan. They asked him about education, health care, high unemployment, taxes and other issues.

Clinton, grilled about what he would do to help Native Americans who endure unemployment rates as high as 70 percent, pledged to provide extra tax incentives to companies that invest in poverty-stricken areas, whether urban or rural.

In addition, Clinton said, government dollars would be targeted toward job-creating public works projects and job training in those areas, he said. About $20 billion a year in defense-savings would be used for job creation, he said.

Contrasting himself with President Bush, Clinton said defense savings are going to occur "no matter who the president is."

"The real question ought to be ... what are we going to do with the money?" Clinton said, complaining that past savings have been "consumed almost entirely by the S&L debacle and rising health care costs."

One man compared Clinton's promised $20 billion a year to the Depression-era Works Project

Administration. Clinton said states would have the power to use the money in different ways, instead calling it a "WPA sort of state by state."

He warned that his plan to rein in health care costs — a crucial part to making his economic projections come true — might be painful.

"There will be some losers. You may know some clerical workers in hospitals who won't have their jobs anymore," Clinton said.

His other scheduled stops in Washington state included his other favorite ways of greeting voters — rallies and a televised town meeting in Seattle that was also being broadcast in Portland, Ore., late Saturday night.

The candidate had given himself just one day's respite, with a day off Friday, after a grueling two-week haul that included the convention and his campaign's six-day buscapade from New York to Missouri.

In part, the campaign hopes to avoid the Democrats' mistake of 1988, when nominee Michael Dukakis, also enjoying a nice bounce out of the convention, took it easy in the late summer, and his lead evaporated.

At the Little Rock airport before heading to Spokane, Clinton passed up a chance to attack Bush for telling hecklers at an MIA meeting to "shut up" on Friday.

"I have a lot of sympathy with those people," Clinton said. "Whatever the truth is, they feel that their government, for years and years and years, has sort of stonewalled this issue."

Clinton, though not mentioning Bush, said the government needed to reassure the families of servicemen missing in Southeast Asia that everything possible was being done.

Clinton said he agrees with plans to hit Iraq with air strikes unless Iraq lets U.N. inspectors search for weapons of mass destruction.

"I have no quarrel with what is being done at this time," Clinton said, but added he didn't want to comment in detail until Iraq answered the ultimatum. "Let's see how they respond," he said.

Distractions block Bush's tries to counter Clinton

BROOKVILLE, Ohio (AP) — President Bush hit the campaign trail Friday with a simple goal: follow Bill Clinton into Ohio and Missouri and counter the Democrat's newfound popularity with a blast at Congress and focus on family values.

But by the time he made it to the microphone the battle was lost. Again.

First, Bush was heckled at a morning event of POW-MIA families, to the point of shouting "Please shut up and sit down" at a man in the audience.

Then, as Bush tried to regroup in the fall battleground of Ohio, his spokesman stole the story before Bush could speak by announcing that Bush was scuttling plans to spend the weekend in Maine because of the latest confrontation with Iraq.

"We can't get our message out," grumbled a senior campaign aide. "Lately, nothing is going right around here."

Other aides were less pessimistic, insisting that even though the national media focus would be on Bush's morning outburst and the Iraq showdown, local media in Ohio and Missouri would cover the Bush events in which he promoted the family values theme.

Still, they conceded it has been tough going of late as the Bush camp tries to shake its lethargy and chip away at the 20-point-plus lead Clinton has amassed since his convention.

"First Quayle gets swamped by his own story and now Bush," said the campaign aide, who requested anonymity. "Not our week, no."

Like Bush, Quayle headed out last week to counter a Clinton visit, in his case to Indiana and Kentucky. Like Bush, Quayle's goal was to promote the GOP's focus on family values. Instead, he spent the day explaining his comment that he would support his daughter if she chose to have an abortion, insisting it did not run counter to his anti-abortion views.

Also, persistent rumors about Bush dumping Quayle, which the president and vice president say are untrue, and that Secretary of State James A. Baker III will soon take the campaign helm, which appear to be true, have obscured Bush's attempts to make his case for reelection.

"What we need around here more than anything is discipline, message discipline," said the campaign aide.

Bush advisers are counting on a turnaround in the three weeks leading up to the Republican convention, as the campaign spends some of its remaining primary warchest on a national advertising buy likely to run 10 days to two weeks, including during the Olympics.

Those ads are designed to reinforce Bush's record and accomplishments, with the theme mirroring the message Bush brought to Brookville on Friday only to have it overshadowed.

"Since I have become president, we have changed the world, and now we want to use that leadership to make things better in the United States of America."

The incumbent is wrestling to be perceived as the candidate of change with a fresh-faced Democratic ticket of Clinton and Al Gore that has frustrated Republicans somewhat by their aggressive early focus on three themes Bush strategists say must be Bush's anchors: family values, law-and-order and the economy.

"So far, give them points for getting ahead of the curve," a White House official traveling with Bush said. "They are being very aggressive but their records don't match the rhetoric."

This aide compares the coming campaign script to an old-style movie: a rural town that never has a doctor suddenly gets one and falls in love with him, only to immediately hate him when the first patient dies on the operating table. "But when they find out it was the nurse's fault all along, they swing back and love the doctor again."

In the aide's mind, Bush is the doctor; Congress the nurse.

Indeed, as Bush tries to convince voters that after eight years as vice president and four as president he best represents change, he is turning more and more to blaming Congress as the true obstacle.

"If you want to help me move this economy forward, change the control of the United States Congress," he said in Brookville. "What's wrong with limiting the terms of some of these old geezers that have been there forever?"

The Bush campaign's troubles have alarmed Republicans on Capitol Hill and in key fall states who worry not only about the president but also the potential drag on other candidates if Bush doesn't shake his summer doldrums.

"Out here it's in the wonder stage now, not quite at the worry point," said Donald Sanders, an attorney and GOP activist in Columbia, Mo. "There's certainly a lot of talk about it."

Still, Bush strategists say the alarm is misguided, that Clinton's convention bounce will disappear when Republicans get their turn in mid-August.

"We know exactly what we're doing," said Bush strategist Charles Black. "We have a very specific plan. We know what we want to do every day and we will do it."

Italy sends 7,000 troops against the Mafia

ROME (AP) — The Italian government said Saturday it is sending 7,000 soldiers to Sicily to crack down on the Mafia, the most drastic step taken against domestic disorder since World War II.

Since the country's top anti-Mafia fighter was assassinated a week ago, there have been reports that organized crime bosses are flaunting their power in Sicily.

Defense Minister Salvo Ando, in a blunt admission of the gravity of the crime menace, told reporters the government needs to "regain its authority" over the island.

First troops began arriving in Palermo, the Mafia's main stronghold, late Saturday afternoon within hours of the government's decision. The 615 paratroopers flew from Pisa.

Officials said the full contingent of soldiers would be in place by Aug. 7.

The Italian news agency AGI said the navy was patrolling the waters off Sicily. Palermo Mayor Aldo Rizzo warned against a "militarization" of his city.

"You can't fight the Mafia with the army, since it is a hidden enemy," Rizzo said, arguing that better investigative work is needed to halt organized crime.

The government action followed the assassination on July 19 of Italy's top anti-Mafia fighter, Judge Paolo Borsellino, and five of his police bodyguards in a car-bombing in Palermo.

Borsellino's friend Giovanni Falcone, another leading Mafia prosecutor, was killed on May 23 in a bombing on a highway outside Palermo.

Sen. Fabio Fabbri, a Cabinet undersecretary, said the deployment was aimed at "affirming government rule and taking away control of the island from the Mafia."

The government has called out the military on several occasions since World War II, including in 1980 when soldiers protected the Rome-Florence train line after a terrorist bombing in Bologna. Soldiers also set up roadblocks around Rome after the 1978 kidnapping of former Premier Aldo Moro.

But the latest deployment is the first time in the postwar era that troops have been used in a large-scale crackdown on the Sicilian Mafia. In an extraordinary move, the soldiers are being designated as "public security agents," giving them the power to stop suspects and carry out searches.

Study claims consumers pose major environmental threat

By DAVID BRISCOE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The richest fifth of the world is ruining the planet by consuming too much, says a Worldwatch Institute study that blames the "consumer class" for ozone-depleting chemicals, greenhouse gases and acid rain.

The study released Saturday concludes that rampant consumption is responsible for more environmental damage than any cause except rapid population growth.

The study — entitled "How Much is Enough?" — comes down particularly hard on the global spread of shopping malls.

It recommends curbs on advertising and longer vacations rather than higher wages in the world's most affluent societies. And it deplors the yearnings in poorer countries to adopt the consumer lifestyle.

It says the world's consumer class is responsible for releasing virtually all ozone-depleting chemicals, two-thirds of greenhouse gases and pollutants that cause acid rain and similarly large shares of everything from pesticides to radioactive waste.

Author Alan Durning, in the book-length report, attacked the construction of a giant shopping mall and indoor amusement park in Bloomington, Minn. The complex to be called "The Mall of America" is projected to attract more visitors than Mecca or the Vatican, he said.

"All of the United States seems to be remaking itself in the image of the mall," writes author Alan Durning. He said the boom in consumerism is also taking place in Europe, Japan and other rich countries, with the wealthy class in poor countries following right along.

The report says the United States has more shopping centers than high schools, with 2,000 added each year.

In addition to the spread of malls, the study blames the worldwide availability of television, government subsidies to environmentally harmful industries and the widespread belief that ever-increasing consumption is the only way to create jobs.

"Over a few short generations, we in the affluent fifth of humanity have become car drivers, television watchers, junk-food eaters, mall shoppers and throw-away buyers," said Durning, a Worldwatch senior researcher. Worldwatch is a privately funded non-profit organization that studies a wide range of social issues.

"For the last 40 years, buying more goods, acquiring more 'things,' has been the over-riding goal of people in western industrial countries," Durning said in the study. "At the same time, the poorest one fifth of the world has had but one goal: surviving the next day."

The study also concludes that the consumer life-style doesn't make people feel better about their lives, citing sociological research. Surveys show that the number of Americans claiming to be "very happy" has remained at about one-third since 1957, although personal consumption has doubled since then.

The report also cites studies showing that Americans visit their neighbors less, have fewer family conversations and even eat less together as a family than they did in 1950.

And what about all those modern appliances that are supposed to make life so much better?

The study says most of the time saved by Americans, at least, seems to be used up watching television.

"Until now the unstated goal of international development has been to lift everyone into the consumer class," Durning writes. "Yet the global environment cannot support one billion of us living like American consumers, much less a future population of ten billion."

Fired admiral denies wrongdoing, says he was victim of sex scandal

By BILL KACZOR
Associated Press Writer

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — The admiral who designed the Navy's ethics training denied Saturday that he protected a homosexual staffer and said he was fired because of the public outcry caused by the Navy's Tailhook sex scandal.

"We are literally wounding the very leadership that is at the very heart of everything our military stands for," Vice Adm. Jack Fetterman said. "I think the country should be very concerned about that."

Fetterman, 59, was removed as chief of naval education and training and resigned his 37-year military career at a reduced rank, Navy officials said Friday.

He allegedly protected an aide on his staff who was accused of making homosexual advances toward other enlisted men, the Navy said.

Fetterman was investigated after someone called the Pentagon's complaint hot line anonymously.

Fetterman said the Navy has been gripped by a "climate of suspicion and innuendo" because of the Tailhook scandal and that retirement would allow him to speak out.

The Navy is investigating complaints that some 70 aviators fondled and stripped clothing from 26 women, many of them fellow officers, during a convention last year in Las Vegas of the Tailhook Association, a group of current and retired Navy aviators. Navy Secretary H. Lawrence Garrett resigned as a result of the incident.

Fetterman, as well as Garrett and Adm. Frank Kelso, were present at the convention but said they saw no sexual harassment.

The "core values" training Fetterman ordered was little more than an idea until the Tailhook scandal. The training is designed to instill honesty and patriotism and to counteract sexual harassment, racism, fraud, spouse abuse and other violence.

"Those values are as strong right now as they ever have been," Fetterman said. "I don't stand guilty of interrupting those values in any way, shape or form."

Fetterman said he didn't think the Navy went after him because he was at the Tailhook convention, but because of the atmosphere it had created.

He said he resigned because as a commander he was accountable for the actions of a subordinate officer who handled the case against his aide. His resignation includes the demotion to two-star rear admiral.

Investigators never concluded that Fetterman's aide was homosexual, but did recommend that he be disciplined for making unlawful contacts with other enlisted men.

But the aide's commanding officer rejected that recommendation and issued a lesser punishment, which Fetterman approved.

Fetterman was transferred to the staff of Adm. Frank Kelso, chief of naval operations in Washington. Rear Adm. Louise Wilmot assumed control of his old command.

The naval education and training command, based at Pensacola Naval Air Station, is the nation's largest on-shore command.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

By Danny Balnum

Brunch frittata starts with mushrooms sizzling in a large skillet. When they're golden, add beaten eggs and sliced green onions. When the eggs are nearly set, place slices of Swiss cheese on top and broil until the cheese melts and bubbles.

In hot, humid weather, the smartest place to store baking powder and soda is the refrigerator. The air is usually drier there, and the cold will help retard deterioration.

Thread fresh vegetables - red and yellow peppers and inch-thick rounds of corn - onto a skewer. Brush with melted butter seasoned with cumin, red pepper flakes and cilantro, then grill about 15 minutes, basting with butter mixture. Brush with more butter to serve.

Who says salad has to be cold? Place assorted greens in a large salad bowl and sprinkle with crumbled goat cheese. Cut boneless chicken breast into strips and saute in olive oil with walnuts and shallots. Add chicken to salad, then heat and whisk dressing in the same pan.

Just ask the happy eaters who have made us so popular.

Hospital names social services coordinator

Ann Craig has been named the new social services/discharge planning coordinator at Coronado Hospital.
 Craig, a 1980 graduate of Pampa High School, has a bachelor of science degree in social work from West Texas State University. She spent 18 months working in the Pampa office of the Department of Human Services in child protection.
 Craig succeeds Lori Sailor who was the hospital's social worker for two years.
 Craig's job is designed to help patients resolve personal, emotional, and social problems that may interfere with their access to or maximum use of medical facilities.

"As a social worker, I am trained to assess the patient's needs, and to try to work through the problems of finding various types of help for them," she said.
 The discharge planner at the hospital helps families and patients find the correct kind of care the patient needs when patients leave the hospital.
 "That may be as simple as finding a hospital bed or ordering oxygen, or it may be as complicated as helping the family choose a nursing home," Craig said.

 Changes in Medicare funding in the last few years has mandated the discharge planning function.
 "Medicare is very strict about how long they will pay for a patient to stay in the hospital. We try to be sure the patient knows all the services that are available: durable medical equipment, home health nursing agencies; or nursing homes," she said.

Environmental seminars offered

U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development has proposed new rules and guidelines requiring an environmental assessment on all newly constructed properties.
 Growing awareness among consumers has greatly increased the demand for environmental assessments on residential properties. And now issues like lead and radon are standard testing procedures in many real estate transactions.
 Environmental Assessment Association trains real estate professionals to search, understand and report on a wide spectrum of environmental problems. One-day seminars are now being offered around the country enti-

led "Environmental Inspections for Real Estate Transactions."
 Current seminars offer individuals the opportunity to inspect properties for possible environmental hazards, prepare inspection reports, understand environmental data, and expand business opportunities.
 Environmental Assessment Association offers two designations for qualified individuals: CEI - certified environmental inspector and CES - certified environmental specialist.

Minding your own Business

By Don Taylor

Cows, customers and culls, Part II

In my last column we drew an analogy between culling poorly producing cows from a dairy herd and running a profitable business. The point we made was that some customers may not be worth keeping. Most businesses have customers who consume too much time, cost too much money and may lower worker morale.

I am aware that customer culling is a departure from the conventional "all customers are good customers" wisdom. However, it is critical to recognize that not all cows are good cows and not all customers are good customers. With selective culling, you will have more time to spend on developing quality customers and providing good service to them.

The first step is to analyze your records to determine which customers are profitable. Try to find out what products or services they buy, what volume they purchase and with what frequency.

Cull or Change
Careful analysis can identify customers that are robbing much needed profit. For example, Joe is in the fuel delivery business. One of his steady customers is a retired farmer who lives 20 miles out of town. This farmer orders 100 gallons of fuel for delivery about every 3 months. He has been a customer for five years and he always pays for the fuel on delivery. Joe feels that this is a good, steady account.

By analyzing his records Joe knows that he averages 20 cents per gallon in gross profit on the fuel. The delivery truck costs about $1 per mile to operate and it can deliver 500 gallons each trip. The driver's wages and benefits cost Joe about $10 per hour and it takes one hour to make the delivery.

Therefore each 100 gallon delivery earns Joe $20 in gross margin. (20 cents times 100 gallons.) However, his direct costs are $50 per delivery. (40 miles times $1 per mile plus $10 for the driver.) Should Joe keep his contract?

The records show that Joe is losing $30 on each delivery. That adds up to a total loss of $120 per year. It would appear that Joe should cull this customer. However, there may be a better way. Joe might offer a small discount to encourage the farmer to purchase all 400 gallons at one time. One delivery would still cost $50, but the gross profit from a 400 gallon sale would equal $80. If Joe offered a two-cent per gallon discount, the annual profit would be $22 as opposed to a $120 loss.

Out of Balance
Ralph owns a small front-end alignment and repair shop. Business has been a little slow so he offered a $10 wheel balance special to attract new business. The $10 just covered his direct costs on a one-time balance.

The day after Ralph's newspaper ad ran he began to receive calls and make appointments. That afternoon an elderly woman came by and Ralph agreed to work her appointment in.

Her tires were nearly new and the balance was pretty good. He added one small weight and moved another slightly to make the balance perfect. He thanked her and sent her on her way.

Two days later the woman returned to complain about her wheel balance. Ralph checked each tire and everything was still perfect. Together they road tested the car and the customer said, "feel that," "feel that," but Ralph could feel no vibration.

The customer came back the following day. The balance was still perfect but the customer "felt something." Ralph decided enough was enough. He apologized for not fixing the problem and cheerfully refunded the customer's money. Ralph couldn't afford this customer.

Next week we will point out more potential culls. Don't miss Cows, Customers and Culls Part III.

Hospital joins health care network

Coronado Hospital has joined the Health & Sciences Television Network, according to Bob Jones, director of nursing.

The network is a subsidiary of Dallas-based Westcott Communications. It is a National Satellite Television Network bringing training, education, news and information on issues relating to the health care industry.

"We're excited about the quality of training that we will be able to give our employees with this system," Jones said. He noted that the satellite equipment was installed at the hospital last week.

Westcott currently delivers training, information and news to other industries such as 4,000 law enforcement agencies, 2,000 fire departments, 2,000 private security agencies, and 4,000 auto dealers worldwide.

Jeweler files Chapter 11 reorganization plan

DALLAS (AP) - Zale Corp., the nation's largest jeweler, said it would consolidate its subsidiaries as part of the bankruptcy reorganization plan filed last week.

Several groups joined the Dallas-based jeweler, which sought Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection in January, in filing the plan with U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Steven Felsenthal.

"We wanted to move as quickly as possible to implement a plan that would allow Zale Corporation to emerge strong and return to profitability," said Andreas Ludwig, the company's chief financial officer.

The proposed plan would consolidate all of the jeweler's subsidiaries, including Gordon Jewelry Corp. and Zale Credit Corp.

That would maximize the recovery to all classes of creditors, said Michael Rosenthal, an attorney for the Zale Corporation Official Credit

SUMMER OLYMPICS

Dream Team to highlight first full day

BARCELONA, Spain (AP) — Not yet and maybe never to be challenged on the court, the U.S. men's basketball team was nevertheless on the defensive on the eve of today's debut of NBA players in the Olympics.

Is it in the spirit of the Olympics to send the Dream Team, the stars of stars who collectively averaged more than 250 points last season, against just plain stars from other countries?

Is it sporting for them to shun the camaraderie of their fellow athletes in the Olympic village for the privacy of a luxurious hotel where they occupy all but a few of the 90 rooms?

Are they here in the spirit of Olympic competition or are they here out of revenge for six years of losses in international play by college players?

In Barcelona less than a day, and the Americans adopted a siege mentality Saturday, ready to take on the world and confident they have more than enough weapons to do the job.

"A lot of those foreign guys don't like us because we're the glamour boys," Charles Barkley said at a news conference attended by hundreds of members of the media. "Some of these teams — Lithuania, Croatia, Germany, Spain — they'll give us a good game."

Pause.
"For a half."
"Other teams have been sending

"Other teams have been sending their pros for years. Now they can take their whipping and go home."

—Team USA forward Charles Barkley their pros for years," Barkley added. "Now they can take their whipping and go home."

Answering charges that the team should have stayed at the athletes village, coach Chuck Daly said it was mobbed by hero-worshipping Olympic athletes during a visit Friday.

"The stampede in the village when we got there was frightening," Daly said. "Even the people giving us accreditation were asking for autographs. Being with this team is like traveling with 12 rock stars."

Observers said the players were followed into the small accreditation office by a group of athletes clamoring for pictures or autographs. Many who were couldn't get in tried to peek into the windows and snap pictures.

For their part, the players shrug off their celebrity.

"We gave up our summer because we wanted to be here," team captain Magic Johnson said. "Only four of us have been in the Olympics before and they wanted to come back again. We feel we share the Olympic spirit like any other athletes. We're just like anybody else. We're trying to have fun and win a gold medal."

As for Friday's mob scene, Johnson said, "We'll be going to the village, we just won't be staying there. But if what happened yesterday happens again, we may have to pull back a little bit, because it got crazy."

Point guard John Stockton, who is not expected to play in Sunday's opener against Angola because he is still recovering from a cracked bone in his right leg, said the scene wasn't surprising.

"We are received differently than other athletes," Stockton said. "For us to be at our best, we need to be outside the village. The Olympic spirit is to go out and beat the other teams, not live with them."

Barkley, whose outspokenness had some of his teammates shaking their heads and hiding their faces,

"All of these athletes are afraid to fail. We feel we can't go home if we do. Even in a small hometown like mine...I wouldn't be able to go home."

—Team USA forward Karl Malone heard one questioner say Michael Jordan has been called a god and retorted, "We've got God on our team. We shouldn't have to stay in the village."

David Robinson, the only Dream Team member who was on the teams that lost to Brazil in the 1987 Pan American Games and to the Soviet Union in the 1988 Olympics, said a gold medal — not revenge — is his motivation this year.

Barkley mischievously contradicted his teammate.

"There's a little revenge factor here," Barkley said. "David just can't admit it because he's a Christian."

Angola, the African continental champion, isn't expected to give much of a battle to the first Olympic team of NBA stars. Angola doesn't have a starter taller than 6-6; the Americans average 6-8.

An international vote allowed professionals into the Games for the first time, clearing the way for the superstar squad of 11 NBA players and college player of the year Christian Laettner. Laettner, who will join the pros this year after leading Duke to two college championships, played on three teams that failed at international events.

Croatia, with top European star Toni Kukoc and New Jersey Nets sharpshooter Drazen Petrovic, is a strong medal favorite. The Croats will get their chance Monday, but after qualifying in the European zone, they virtually conceded defeat to the Americans.

Pointing to his teammates, Karl Malone said, "All of these athletes are afraid to fail. We feel like we can't go home if we do. Even in a small hometown like mine in Sumnerfield, Louisiana, I wouldn't be able to go home."

Jordan responded to criticism about the team's Olympic spirit by saying he regards a gold medal as more important than an NBA championship, which he has done the last two years with the Chicago Bulls.

"Anytime you can represent your country, it magnifies everything," said Jordan, a member of the gold medal 1984 team in Los Angeles. "When you play in the NBA, you represent your city. Here, you're representing your country. Winning a gold medal is the highest accolade I can receive."

Bambino Tournament organizers revamp ballpark

By L.D. STRATE
Sports writer

One of most informed sources on the upcoming Southwest Regional Bambino Tournament is Pampa attorney John Warner.

That's because the longtime Optimist Club coach is serving as the tournament's publicity director, and he's eager for the tournament to get started.

"I'm excited about it," said Warner. "Out of 12,000 Bambino teams, we're one of eight teams that are just a tournament away from the World Series. That's really something."

Opening day ceremonies begin at 11 a.m. Saturday at Optimist Park followed by tournament play in the 11- to 12-year-old division throughout the week.

A Pampa all-star team, managed by Ronnie Haynes, will represent West Texas in the eight-team tournament. Don Whitney and Tim Hill will serve as coaches.

Other teams will come from South Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Louisiana.

"The state tournaments were decided by Saturday and we should know the names of the other teams the early part of this week," Warner said.

Tournament director Truman Lowrance is hoping to have the ballpark ready for play tonight.

"Everything's going super great. It's a lot of work, but it's also been fun," Lowrance said.

Lowrance and his volunteer workers had to completely remodel the field to meet national Bambino specifications.

"Everything is brand new, bleachers included," said Lowrance, an Optimist baseball coach for about 20 years. "We tore everything down and started from scratch, but we've got one good-looking ballpark."

When four sections of portable bleachers are installed, there will be seating available for 1,400 to 1,500 people, Lowrance said.

"Instead of having just bleachers behind the back stop, they'll be running down both foul lines," Lowrance said. "It's going to be pretty impressive. This tournament is going to be a big deal for both Pampa and the Optimist Club."

In fact, this week is going to be declared Pampa Bambino Week by mayor Richard Peet Tuesday.

When the teams arrive Friday, each player will receive a gift bag from the Pampa Chamber of Commerce. Later that evening the players will also be treated to a banquet, starting at 7 p.m. in M.K. Brown Auditorium. Pampa native John Jenkins, now the University of Houston head football coach, is scheduled to speak.

The players will be staying with families from Pampa. Organizers said Saturday they had good response, but they were still in need of six more host families to be able to fully accommodate the visiting players. Besides the Pampa tournament, other regional tournaments are being held in Longview, Wash.; Clovis, Calif.; Hokes Bluff, Ala.; Zanesville, Ohio; Waite Park,

Minn.; Newark, Delaware and South

Meriden, Conn. "The Babe Ruth program is very well-run. I went to a regional tournament two years ago in Fort Smith (Arkansas) and they brought in their umpires from other states," Warner said. "It's great to be a part of it."

The eight regional winners advance to the Bambino World Series Aug. 15-22 in Alachua, Fla.

The Bambino leagues were started nation-wide in 1982 and the program was adopted by the Pampa Optimist Club in 1987. The last time Pampa hosted a regional tournament was in 1981 when the Southwest Regional Babe Ruth Tournament for 13-year olds was held at Optimist Park.

Houston Astros owner Drayton McLane, after finalizing his purchase of the team, signs a pennant before Friday's game in Houston.

Fatigued owner rejoices in timely sale of Astros

HOUSTON (AP) — It was easy to tell who was entering and who was exiting as the owner of the Houston Astros.

"Here's an opportunity to get involved with something that has a noble purpose to it, to bring direction, attitude, encouragement and strategy and move forward," Texas businessman Drayton McLane Jr. said.

He's the buyer who calls himself a cheerleader.

"My objective is to get out of Houston," John J. McMullen said.

He's the subdued seller with lost dreams.

After 14 years of battles with Houston fans and media, McMullen agreed to sell the Astros and the Astrodome lease to McLane for a reported $115 million.

McMullen took a final bow Friday by introducing the new owner, and taking one last chance to trumpet his accomplishments with the Astros.

There were a few smiles and jokes about his "absentee ownership."

His voice also quivered several times.

"The most pleasant ones (memories) go back to the great series of the 1980s," McMullen said, referring to the Astros' divisional titles. "But they also break your heart (when they lost)."

"That's why I'm never going to die of a bad stomach or a broken heart."

McMullen said the death of minority owner Vivian Smith, whose statue stands in front of the Astrodome, started him thinking about selling. Another miserable time was a 1981 uprising with minority owners that ended up in court.

And then he was gone, much later than many fans wanted.

They never forgave him for firing former general manager Tal Smith and letting Nolan Ryan skip to the Texas Rangers; and they never gave him enough credit for rescuing the Astros from receivership and refurbishing the Astrodome.

Indurain puts choke hold on Tour de France title

NANTERRE, France (AP) — Unless defending champion Miguel Indurain falls down, there won't be any way to keep him from winning the Tour de France.

Despite finishing 7 1/2 minutes behind Peter de Clercq of Belgium on Saturday in the penultimate of 21 stages that comprise the world's premier cycling event, Indurain maintained his overall lead of 4:35. On Sunday, he should make his way to the Champs Elysees without a serious challenge.

"On Sunday, I'm going to try most of all not to fall," the Spaniard said.

Should that happen, the crown undoubtedly would fall to Claudio Chiappucci. He leads fellow Italian Gianni Bugno by 6:14 entering the 81-mile final stage from suburban LaDefense to the streets of Paris.

"The Tour's been tough, people constantly attacking and keeping up the pace," Indurain said. "I think I worked the hardest and have underscored my victory last year."

He also has destroyed the opposition, winning five consecutive individual time trials and outclimbing the field in mountains that took their toll on former champions. Among those left in the wake by Indurain — who has worn the leader's yellow jersey for eight days — was American Greg LeMond.

A three-time champion, LeMond fell far behind in the Alps and quit last Sunday.

De Clercq, 26, posted the first stage victory of his Tour career, pulling away from a pack of eight about 50 miles from the end of the 138-mile leg over basically flat roads stretching from Blois to Nanterre, just west of Paris.

Inkster makes move at Open

OAKMONT, Pa. (AP) — Juli Inkster closed within a stroke of leader Pamela Wright today in the storm-delayed completion of the second round in the U.S. Women's Open.

Inkster faced a 12-foot birdie putt on the 17th hole at the Oakmont Country Club course when she and 41 others returned this morning to complete play.

She rolled it through the dew of a misty morning and into the cup to go two under par for the tournament, then nearly made a 15-foot birdie putt on the 18th for that would have tied her for the halfway lead.

Inkster finished 3-under-par 68 for the round spread over two days on the longest, most difficult course the women have encountered. She stood at 140, two under par for 36 holes.

Wright — the 1989 Rookie of the Year on the LPGA Tour but not yet a tournament winner — got up and down from three of Oakmont's fearsome bunkers in a round of 69 completed a few minutes before the sirens sounded late Friday afternoon, warning players and spectators to seek shelter in the face of an approaching storm.

Inkster and Patty Sheehan were one under par, Inkster through 16 holes and Sheehan through 14, when play was suspended overnight for the second time in as many days. Sheehan, the only other player under par, completed a round of 72 this morning to stand at 141.

Dawn Coe and Donna Andrews at 142. Coe shot 71 and Andrews slipped to 73.

The group at 143 included Jane Gaddes, Alice Ritzman and Gail Graham. Ritzman had a second-round 69, Gaddes a 70 and Graham a 71.

While she held the overnight lead, Wright said she's trying very hard not to think about winning the tournament.

"It's far too early to get caught up in leading the Open; too early to think, 'Oh, my God, I'm leading.'"

"That sort of thing can kill you."

"I'm just playing and having fun," said Wright, who went to school at Arizona State but still lists her home as Abovne, Scotland, where her father, Innes, is a golf pro and her mother, Janette, played in four Curtis Cup matches for Great Britain between 1954-60.

While it may be too soon for Wright to be thinking about winning, it's too late for 1986 champion Laura Davies of England and LPGA champ Beth Daniel. They were cut after totaling 155 for two rounds.

Nancy Lopez, chasing the one major title that has eluded her, birdied the last hole for a 76 that enabled her to meet the cut score of 151.

Maltbie, Faxon tie in New England

SUTTON, Mass. (AP) — Brad Faxon and Roger Maltbie turned the $1 million New England Classic into a gallery love-fest Saturday as Faxon, the home-town favorite, and Maltbie, the former champ, played to a tie for the lead.

Paired together in the final group, Faxon, 30, and Maltbie, 41, drew a Palmeresque gallery as they mixed fine shot-making and deadly putting with some adventures in the forests over the 7,110-yard par 71 Pleasant Valley Country Club course.

"Hey Roger, don't lose your check this time," fans hollered, referring to his win here 17 years ago when he misplaced his $40,000 winner's check.

"Attaboy, Brad," Faxon partisans shouted from a gallery sprinkled with friends and relatives of the Rhode Island native.

Maltbie made two bogies over the last five holes to lose sole possession of the lead. He led by as many as four during the third round, but was in the enviable position of being able to call his two-under 69 his worst round of the week.

Faxon came from two shots behind to shoot four-under 67 and tie Maltbie at 13 under for the tournament.

If anything, Faxon had to calm himself down amid his raucous supporters.

"You've got to guard against being too pumped up," Faxon said. "On the back nine today I took some extra time with the shots...I had a good time, today. They're not just pulling for one guy."

Maltbie said the crowds have been good to him this week but added that, "if I hit it up there 15 feet and Brad hits it up there 15 feet, Brad's the one who's going to get the cheer."

Both Maltbie and Faxon said that if the sunny, calm weather continues, it will take a round of about 67 to win Sunday. After three rounds there were 15 players within five shots of the leaders.

Aside from first-tee jitters and the occasional shot over water out of a divot, Maltbie said that at his age there's no pressure, just fun, being in the lead.

"What's important to me is to take the chewing gum and bailing wire and hold it together," Maltbie said. "I want to play the best I can and if someone else plays better, God bless them."

Texas stays in first at high school rodeo

SHAWNEE, Okla. — Texas remained in first place in team standings through Friday at the National High School Finals Rodeo.

Several cowboys and cowgirls from the Texas Panhandle, who regularly compete in Tri-State High School Rodeo Association action, qualified for the national competition and turned in excellent performances in the rodeo's second go-round.

Chasity Rickman of Hereford placed second in goat tying, halting the timer at 8.547 seconds.

Mark Eakin of the Spearman/Sinnett High School Rodeo Club turned in the second fastest time in calf roping — 10.234 seconds — to rank fourth in the calf roping overall standings with a total time of 21.77 seconds.

Lorissa Edmondson of Hub City recorded a quick, 2.754-second run in breakaway roping for a fourth place finish in the event.

Mavs' Harper wants trade
DALLAS (AP) — Derek Harper has asked the Dallas Mavericks to trade him to one of four or five teams before the start of the coming season, his agent says.

Attorney George Andrews, Harper's agent, left open the possibility he will advise Harper to decline to report to training camp on Oct. 9 if the team fails to do so.

Privately, Harper has expressed a strong desire to play for a team that can contend for an NBA championship. Two of the teams said to be on Harper's list are the New York Knicks, who last month acquired his former backcourt mate, Rolando Blackman, and the world champion Chicago Bulls.

Rick Sund, the Mavericks' vice president for basketball operations, has maintained a policy of not publicly discussing trade talks.

But Sund conceded he has "had some real good talks with Derek about our rebuilding situation."

"Derek is a class act, and I would never go public with what was discussed," Sund said.

Actor Newman crashes
LAKEVILLE, Conn. (AP) — Actor Paul Newman walked unhurt from his car after crashing Saturday during the SCCA Pro Racing World Challenge on Saturday.

Newman was running second 12 laps into the race when his left rear tire went in the dirt. Newman lost control, the car spun and the back of his car rammed a tire barrier, track officials said.

Track officials said Newman was examined by medical staff but was not injured.

Newman qualified for the pole position, the first of his career, in qualifying Friday with a time of 57.914 seconds on the 1.53-mile track, but had to forfeit the spot for changing a tire after qualifying. Sports Car Club of America rules require competitors to race on the same tires they used in qualifying.

Irvan takes Fram 500K
TALLADEGA, Ala. (AP) — Ernie Irvan passed Dale Earnhardt three turns from the end and held on Saturday to win the Fram Filters 500K, the first Busch Grand National stock car race at Talladega Superspeedway and the fastest in series history.

Earnhardt, who started from the pole, was at or near the lead throughout the 117-lap race. He appeared to be in control until the first turn of the last lap on the 2.66-mile oval.

Rangers outlast Orioles, 10-8

BALTIMORE (AP) — Brian Downing had four hits and drove in three runs, and the Texas Rangers used a seven-run sixth inning to outlast the Baltimore Orioles 10-8 Saturday.

The Rangers managed only one hit off Rick Sutcliffe (10-10) until the sixth, when they sent 11 batters to the plate to take an 8-0 lead. Rafael Palmeiro and Downing each hit two-run doubles in the inning.

It was Sutcliffe's fifth attempt at his 150th major-league victory. He is 0-4 with a 5.35 ERA in July.

Baltimore battled back, but Jeff Russell struggled to get the final four outs for his 25th save. Starter Bobby Witt (9-7) allowed four runs in 5 2-3 innings to earn his first victory in more than five weeks.

Russell loaded the bases in the ninth and forced in a run with a two-out walk to Mark McLemore. But Brady Anderson lined out to center for the final out.

Sutcliffe had retired 10 straight until Downing opened the sixth with a single. Jeff Husoh singled and Palmeiro hit a double to make it 3-0. After a groundout and an intentional walk, Juan Gonzalez drove in a run with a single.

Alan Mills replaced Sutcliffe and got the second out, but Geno Petralli hit an RBI single, Jeff Frye walked and Downing capped the inning with a double that made it 8-0.

Baltimore closed to 8-4 in the bottom of the inning. After a run scored on a throwing error, Leo Gomez hit an RBI single and McLemore delivered a pinch two-run triple.

Texas' Dean Palmer ended an 0-for-21 skid with a solo homer in the eighth before Downing singled in a run for a 10-4 lead.

Today's woman is different from her grandmother, maybe even her mother. She is less willing to let creeping years take a toll on her appearance or hamper her activities. Instead, good health through physical exercise and nutrition, and an array of beauty products have become part of the modern woman's arsenal against age.

Today we meet two Pampans who refuse to let age slow them down. They were willing to share their beauty secrets and life philosophies which make them...

Fifty and Fabulous!

Pat Johnson

By CHERYL BERZANSKIS
Lifestyles Editor

Pat Johnson's motto came from a Mae West saying: "Old Man Age will make a hag out of you if you don't show him who's boss." And, indeed, the Clarendon College teacher is showing Old Man Age who is boss - she is!

The attractive brunette was willing to share some of her beauty tips with readers of The Pampa News.

Keeping her trim figure and good health begins with three-times weekly water aerobics. Then, there are twice weekly walks at Pampy Youth and Community Center. To these she adds daily floor exercises to strengthen her lower back.

Beginning 10 or 12 years ago, she said, she began to do aerobic exercises and kept them up for about four years. As she became aware of information about the strain that aerobics places on joints and spine, she traded them for water aerobics.

"Get in and stay in a habit of fitness," she advises. "I've made water aerobics a part of my life. I arranged my schedule at school so I'd be off for aerobics."

Johnson is an "expert" dieter. Home meals include fruits and vegetables, low-fat fish and chicken.

"We love broccoli. We eat it many times every day, either in salads, raw or cooked," she said. She aims to drink eight glasses of water each day. She and her husband, Bob Johnson, buy apples by the crate so that fruit is available for snack food.

One beauty secret, and perhaps the main one, Johnson said, is her much loved hot tub.

"Sometimes when I come in from school - teaching at the college - my neck or leg might be hurting and I can get in that hot tub and relax, just forget everything," she said.

She doesn't rely only good nutrition and exercise for her appearance. Her beauty regimen includes an exfoliating mask twice weekly and daily applications of a moisturizer. Johnson also avoids the sun.

"When I learned that the sun ages us as well as causes cancer, I began to shun it altogether," she said. Johnson uses a make-up containing sunscreen and avoids cigarette smoke like the plague.

Hair, she said is another story.

"I guess my biggest problem really is my hair. I have fine hair," Johnson said.

Yes, she admitted to coloring it.

"Some people may gray gracefully and enjoy that but I'm not ready for that," she said.

Clothing selections are tailored and in colors that she knows to be flattering. Johnson is a "winter" (for those who've had their colors done) and wears lots of black, white and brights. She has never liked short skirts.

"I've always stuck with a length that I thought was becoming. It's more flattering."

She eschews jeans, but likes tailored slacks. Because of difficulties with her lower back, she opts for lower heeled shoes.

"Thank goodness more manufacturers are making more sensible shoes for the younger women and more mature women," she said.

Maintaining interest in the world around is very important to Johnson. To that end, she sings alto in the choir of the First United Methodist Church, is active in Altrusa Club and recently finished her 12th year teaching word processing, business communication and typing at Clarendon College - Pampa Center.

"Even when I decide to retire I plan to keep busy in something," she explained.

Keeping up one's physical appearance, she said, is a never ending battle. Johnson said she gets tired of it sometimes and thinks she will stop her beauty and exercise routines. Instead, though, she harks back to Mae West's saying, and decides to keep on.

Lifestyles

Jeane Roper

Jeane Roper

By CHERYL BERZANSKIS
Lifestyles Editor

Jeane Roper is director of the Gray County Community Supervision and Correction Department. This "50 and fabulous" woman, who feels like she is 30, thinks that someday she might even try bungee jumping. It is her attitude that keeps her young, she said.

"Number one, I think, attitude probably plays a bigger part than anything. Happiness is a frame of mind. I grew up in a happy home. I have two handsome sons who treat me like papa and the kids. I have two beautiful blond haired, green eyed daughters-in-law and three grandchildren. My faith in God is probably why I have a positive attitude toward living - toward my family, my job. I love people," she said.

She attends to her physical fitness with three times weekly trips to the Pampa Youth and Community Center. Each time she swims one mile in the pool. Active pursuit of swimming began in 1988 when a friend coached and encouraged her. On the off days, she exercises at home.

When asked about her diet, Roper replied with a laugh, "I eat everything on earth."

It has been her good fortune in life to be able to eat a wide variety of foods, including sweets, without weight gain.

She said that she loves fruit in season and raw vegetables, but eats little meat. She supplements her diet with vitamins and calcium.

"I'm just fortunate that I like those things that are good for me," she said.

After her morning swim, Roper described her breakfast. It sounded like a prodigious amount of food.

"I am a person that has to eat three meals a day. I usually eat three slices of bacon. In the winter, I have a half grapefruit with toast and jelly. In the summer, I have bacon, toast and jelly, but have an in-season fruit."

When not swimming, her breakfast is cereal with fruit. She is not a coffee drinker, but takes hot Earl Grey tea with sugar.

For supper, she said, she will fry skinless chicken, add tomato slices, cantaloupe, a roll and potato chips.

"I love potato chips, especially barbecue potato chips," she said.

Candy, especially bite-size Snickers, is on hand in her home all the time.

"Diet has never been a problem for me. I just eat whatever I want to," she explained.

Roper said that as a child, her parents took a very casual attitude toward illness. She said she rarely visited a doctor and has lived in excellent health.

Roper characterized herself as a "high energy" person.

"You can see me any day swimming or walking. When I dance, I like to dance every dance. I don't like to sit down at all," she said.

Skin care involves thorough make-up removal, and careful cleansing. She uses a hydrating cream at night and a moisturizer in the morning. Roper maintains a year round body tan by pool-side sunbathing or using the PYCC tanning beds. She avoids tanning her face but uses a self-tanning cream with moisturizer.

Hair care must be simple to fit her lifestyle, Roper said.

"I swim so much, I shampoo every other day. I try to keep a style that's not too difficult. I keep a medium length and get it cut every six weeks. I get it frosted about every six months - a blond lightener, not a gray," she said. "I try to let my hair dry naturally so the blow dryer will not take shine out or make it dry."

Roper likes to shop end-of-season sales for her clothing, always keeping in mind what she already owns. Sale shopping is the way she stretches her clothing dollar. Occasionally, she buys the "just right" outfit on impulse, but that is not her habit.

"I love to shop. I love clothes. I love to model, usually for Hi-Land Fashions. I try to buy clothes on sale in the fall," Roper said. "But I spend too much on clothes anyway."

Because of her job, she makes clothing selections with courtroom appearances in mind. Dressing professionally is important to Roper.

Roper's mother, whom she described as being her "very best friend" until her death last year, had a saying: "You never feel any older. People's attitude tends to change toward us (as we age)." Roper thinks that is probably true.

Ceremonial dances planned

The Adobe Walls Indian Dancers will appear in summer ceremonials at 8 p.m. on July 30 and 31, and Aug. 1 at the Fritch Fortness amphitheater.

The program is a two hour celebration of Plains and Pueblo dance, art and culture. The shows are an education outreach program of the Hutchinson County Museum.

The Adobe Walls dancers are area young people who have an interest in Indian lore and are led by Ed Benz, Seth Cunningham and Paxton Farbo who first started the group in 1983. Benz is director of the Hutchinson County Museum. The dance group is Boy Scout explorer post 565, and includes about 20 girls and boys.

Dances include the Hopi rain dance which requires the dancers to dance with live bull snakes in their mouths to put them in touch with the earth and rain. Although the Hopi Indians also used rattlesnakes, Benz said, "That's a little too authentic for these guys and gals!"

Another dance is the Pueblo Comanche dance based on an historical event where the Zuni and Comanche Indians battled.

A new dance will be added this year. The flaming hoop dance will be performed by brothers Chris and Shawn Holcomb.

The dancers create their costumes complete with bead and feather work. The shows are sponsored by the Magic Plains Arts Council and are part of the annual Summer Lyceum series of four events scheduled at the amphitheater this summer.

Tickets are available at the Hutchinson County Museum in Borger, the Lake Meredith Aquatic Museum in Fritch or from the Adobe Walls Dancers. For more information contact the museums at 273-6121 or 857-2458.

Save water, save money

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — A simple way for families to help the environment and cut household costs is by saving water.

About half of America's homes have plumbing leaks, many due to worn-out washers and faulty tank valves, according to Roto-Rooter Corp.

The company's plumbing specialists say a family of four can save as much as 32,000 gallons of water per year by installing low-flow shower heads, toilet flush reducers and faucet aerators.

To check leaking toilets, they recommend adding a few drops of food coloring to the tank. If there is a leak, color will appear in the bowl within 30 minutes.

Other water-saving tips: short-circuit showers, brushing teeth without the faucet running.

Intriguing parallels connect presidents Kennedy, Lincoln

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Here are more facts about U.S. presidents; I don't recall having seen this piece elsewhere. It was published in the Oakland, Neb., newspaper some years ago:

— President Lincoln and President Kennedy were both deeply concerned with civil rights.

— Lincoln was elected president in 1860; Kennedy was elected president in 1960.

— Both Lincoln and Kennedy were assassinated in the presence of their wives.

— Their successors were both named Johnson. (Lincoln's successor was Andrew Johnson; Kennedy's was Lyndon B. Johnson.) Both successors were Democrats as well as Southerners, and both had served as U.S. senators. Andrew Johnson was born in 1808, and Lyndon Johnson was born in 1908.

— Lincoln's assassin, John Wilkes Booth, was born in 1839. Kennedy's assassin, Lee Harvey Oswald, was born in 1939.

— The wives of both Kennedy and Lincoln lost children through death while residing in the White House.

— President Kennedy had a secretary whose last name was Lincoln. And President Lincoln had a secretary whose last name was Kennedy.

W.W.H., BLOOMINGTON, MINN.

DEAR W.W.H.: Thanks for sending it. It has been published many times over the years. The version you sent, however, contains an error: John Wilkes Booth, according to the sources I consulted, was born in 1838, not 1839.

DEAR ABBY: One of your readers recently pointed out an inaccuracy in a prior letter: David Rice Atchison was not president of the United States for one day. The delay between the end of the term of one president and the swearing in of his successor was of no consequence.

It was correctly observed that the successor automatically became president immediately upon expiration of the prior term.

The same reader went on to say that Secretary of State Dean Rusk did not become president for the 90 minutes between the death of President Kennedy and the swearing in of then-Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson. This statement implies that the secretary of state is next in line to be president after the vice president.

It should be noted that federal law provides that the speaker of the House of Representatives becomes president if neither the president nor vice president is serving. When Kennedy was assassinated, the speaker of the House was John W. McCormack of Massachusetts.

GARY L. CORLEW, CREST HILL, ILL.

DEAR MR. CORLEW: Thank you for pointing out the correct chain of command. Apparently, then-Secretary of State Alexander Haig was also of the opinion that he was next in line for the presidency when he, upon hearing that President Reagan had been shot, rushed to the microphone and announced, "I'm in charge here!"

DEAR ABBY: The letter concerning how uninformed some people are about geography brought back a humorous memory from my Army days.

While I was stationed in Germany, a fellow soldier mentioned that she had just seen a map of Europe, and never realized that Germany was so close to Europe!

I laughingly repeated her remark to another soldier, and added: "That's like saying, 'I never realized Egypt was so close to Africa.'"

She replied — in all seriousness: "That's right. People don't realize how close they really are!"

KAREN REID, LIVING CLOSE TO THE UNITED STATES IN LONGMONT, COLO.

To order, send a long (business-size), self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, IL 61064. (Postage is included.)

Mr. and Mrs. Adrian Maggard
Dorothy Torres

Torres - Maggard

Dorothy Torres, Enid, Okla., became the bride of Adrian Maggard, Kermit, on June 20 at the First Pentecostal Holiness Church, Pampa. Rev. Albert Maggard, father of the groom and pastor of the church, officiated.

The bride is the daughter of Bill Jones, Willard, Mo. and Mary Vaughn, Springfield, Mo.

The groom is the son of Rev. Albert and Mary Maggard, Pampa. Sandy Unruh, Enid, Okla., served as maid of honor. Lorinda Bowen, Enid, Okla., was the bridesmaid. Daughter of the bride, Ashleigh Torres, Enid, Okla., was flower girl.

Standing as best man was Keith Fisher, brother-in-law of the groom, Pampa. Mike Reeder, Phoenix, Ariz., was groomsman. Brandon Bowen, Enid, Okla., was ring bearer.

Serving as ushers were Larry Roachelle, Dallas, and Paul Jenkins, Pampa, both cousins of the groom.

Lighting candles were Vanessa Dawn Fisher, niece of the groom, Pampa, and Christina Smith, daughter of the bride, Enid, Okla.

Guests were registered by Melinda Jenkins, all of Pampa.

Mary Maggard, mother of the groom, provided piano and organ music. Susan Fisher, sister of the groom, provided vocal music for the wedding.

Following the ceremony, the couple was honored with a reception in the fellowship hall of the church. Guests were served by Sherry Hahn, Susie Ferguson and Melinda Jenkins, all of Pampa.

The bride was employed by the U.S. government in Venezuela and at Dillard's Department Store in Enid, Okla.

The groom is a 1979 graduate of Pampa High School. He recently graduated magna cum laude with a bachelor's degree in business administration from Phillips University, Enid, Okla. He is a computer analyst for Sid Richardson Oil Company of Midland.

They plan to make their home in Kermit.

Pampans honored by loving friends at special times

The mid-summer calendar leaves no room for the blahs usually lurking around. Senior golfers from states around arrive today to spend several days here. The Renaissance brought lots of visitors. In a few days more than 400 Bambino baseball players, moms, siblings and coaches will arrive for an eight day stay. Do your part in making the out-of-towners feel welcome. For recent happenings around town, do read on.

Ten hostesses honored Kathy Smith last weekend with a bridal shower in the home of Ruby Adcock. All of the many guests found their way to the new sun room Bob finished din time for the party. For the centerpiece Lynn Kurtz painted a tree branch and tied small kitchen appliances to the branches with ribbon bows in the bride's chosen colors of mauve and rose. Kathy, daughter of Melvin and Kay, will be married to Dan Langdon on Aug. 1 in her grandmother's backyard in Erick, Okla. Sounds like strong family ties, huh? Kathy and Dan are students at OCU in the Oklahoma City area.

Cappie Thut, who will soon move to Tyler, was the honoree of a large farewell reception last Monday evening at Mary Ellen and Harvester Church of Christ. The elegant table was set with silver appointments over a cutwork cloth. Bill Waters, emcee, paid tribute to Cappie with lots of neat, well deserved compliments and presented her with a Bible. She received a basket of cards and notes to pore over in her new home. Cappie recently sold the house she and Charlie built in the late '40's. Tylerites are in for a delightful experience in knowing their newest resident. Good wishes, Cappie!

Four members of Xi Beta Chi chapter of Beta Sigma Phi enjoyed an evening of swimming at Sandy Clark's house recently. Attending were Jo Puckett, Helen McGill and Sue Garner.

A warm Pampa "Welcome!!!" to Jim Anderson, recently named manager of Wal-Mart. Jim spent the last seven years in Dumas as manager and promises to stay longer than all of the previous managers lumped together. He is a Miami native with family members still there. His wife, Glynda, who with their three daughters is still in Dumas until their house is sold, will teach reading at Pampa Middle School. Alexis is a freshman at West Texas, Lisa a high school sophomore, and Amanda is a sixth grader. All five enjoy snow and water skiing. Alexis and Lisa enjoy playing the piano and all sports while Amanda is a gymnast, who is more than anxious to be part of the Pampa gymnastics program. Jim is a Lion and the family's church preference is First Christian Church.

Peeking at Pampa By Katie

They are anxious to take an active part in community life and hope to be in Pampa a long time.

The correct pronunciation of Chau-tau-qua follows: Sha-taw-kwa with the "a" as in along, the second "a" as in the "o" or order, and KWA - not GWA. Simply stated, Chautauqua is a community learning experience in a community gathering. It's not too early to plan to attend Chautauqua on Labor Day in Central Park.

Libby Glaeser has thoroughly enjoyed having her beautiful young granddaughter Amber Glaeser here for a two-week visit.

Frankie Fletcher and family of Wheeler visited Jack and Wanda Mitchell last weekend.

Art Garner and family from Wewoka, Okla. visited Dean and Debbie Whaley. Art, a state patrolman, didn't hesitate to tease Dean with some of his experiences. P.S. The two families are close friends.

It goes without saying that Dona

Cornutt and her granddaughter Sara Cornutt of Dallas had grandmother-granddaughter fun last week.

A number of Pampans ambled over to Groom for the filming of a movie. Sharon James took a group of 4-H'ers to appear in the tent scenes with some monetary rewards. Melvin Wills found a big, shiny diamond ring and turned it in with no expectation of a reward. But, he did get a reward: a trip of his choosing anywhere in the U.S. He chose to visit his son Floyd Dale, who is in the service.

Sponsors for a mission trip of Central Baptist youth at Colorado Springs were: Zan Walker, Carol and Bill Fulcher, I.B. Rushing, Joyce Field, Marilyn Shelton, Dwight and Linda Crocker, Duane and Deva Wampler, Lisa McNeely and Jason Hunwick.

Rick and Amy Parnell and Ryan vacationed in Eagle Nest, N.M.

Jo Puckett, her daughter Bobbie Russell and her two children Brian and Brody spent a few days in Dallas visiting Jo's sons Jeff and Kirk Jacobs and daughter and husband Jana and James Hunter. The took in Six Flags, shopped, swam and enjoyed a family barbecue.

A recent visitor in the home of Dr. V.J. Mohan's home was Shanta's brother P.K. Jawahar from India. His American friends call him "Joe."

Don and Edna Hickman are enjoying their new-to-them home.

For several Christmases the family of Betty Griffith at the Schneider House cooked Christmas dinner and brought for the residents. Betty, who had done so much for her fellow residents, died recently and her family asked to carry on the tradition and insisted that contributions be made in her memory rather than sending flowers. That's the way Betty would have wanted it. Isn't that a sweet tribute?

At the monthly membership luncheon of the Pampa Chamber of Commerce, Kirk Folkner of Amarillo explained in detail the workings of High Ground of the Texas Association for Economic Development, and how businesses are attracted to an area. Virginia DeWitt spotlighted Jones Everett Machine Co. from its beginning in Ardmore, Okla., in 1902 to its establishment in Pampa in 1926 and all the way to 1992. She traced the business and personal accomplishments of JEMCO's president Clifford Jones, which included designing and building of several airplanes and boats and the construction of two gravity machines for NASA.

Tula and Brother Lewis Ellis visited his mother and two sisters in Warner, Okla., and her mother and two sisters in Irving for a week. Then they took 14 year-old grandson, Joey, of Amarillo, and spent a week vacationing at Eagle Nest, N.M. A shopping trip to Taos was a highlight of the week.

Jack and June Thacker, vacationing at Eagle Nest, visited the Elises.

Leola and Marvin Moxon entertained their nephew and wife, Vernon and JoAnn Chapman of Drummond, Okla. last week. Granddaughter Lisa and husband Larry Blandford, of Denver, spent a week visiting relatives in Lefors and took daughter, Jessica, home with them after a months visit. Leah Coleman, granddaughter, from Altus, Okla. is visiting her Lefors family.

Craig Seeley and his mother, Patricia, attended the rodeo days in Dumas where Craig won second place in riding barrels.

Kaylene Buehrer of Sequim spent a week with her grandmother, Geneva Lisenbee.

Lester K. Michael made a fast trip to Wichita Falls on business last Saturday.

Friends of Ell Hesse regret her fall and broken hip. Her daughters, Mary Harlan of White Deer, and JoAnn Chambless and husband, Morris, of Ardmore, are attending her. We wish her a speedy recovery.

Mary Alice Stroebel had a wonderful birthday she will never forget. Her grandson, Hoyt Hammer, presented her with a ticket to see Luciano Pavarotti in concert in Dallas. Mary has always been a fan of Pavarotti and enjoyed this trip so much.

Ron and Taci Fernuik have a new baby girl, Robin, born July 17. Baby Robin has three brothers and two sisters. Taci's mom has been visiting the family.

Lynnie Voyles and Ashley visited Pampa on July 12.

Dovey Massie and Vera Plunk are busy as can be with last minute plans for the fall/back to school fashion show sponsored by the Pampa Area Literacy Council, set for 11 a.m., Saturday at the Pampa Country Club.

Be kind and helpful to any strangers you see in Pampa for the next two weeks. Chances are they are here because of the Senior Golf Tournament or the Bambino Regional Baseball Tournament. Make Pampa a friendly city. See you next week, Katie.

Grant challenge issued to Scouts

Golden Spread Boy Scout Council President Bill Esler announced that Sybil Harrington has issued a matching donation challenge to area residents with proceeds to benefit the council. According to a press release from the Golden Spread Council, Harrington will donate $100,000 to endow the Boy Scout service center if her gift is matched by other donors.

"When the Don and Sybil Harrington Scout Service Center was completed in 1989 no funds were left to assure for the on-going care and maintenance," said Esler. "It is our hope that others will help meet this most generous and very needed offer," Esler states. "As we all know every home or building requires continuing maintenance. Even though the service center is still relatively new, it has already required plumbing and electrical repairs. In addition we need to seal-coat the parking lot, replace trees and shrubs killed last winter and address a number of other maintenance needs," he said.

"Our council has reduced its operating budget to a level below actual expenditures since 1988 and without this special gift facility maintenance needs cannot be financed. Matching gifts from all who respond to this challenge will be placed in a service center endowment fund with only the interest income to be used annually for building and grounds up-keep," Esler stated.

Cholesterol Discovery Passes Mom's Test

WASHINGTON -- The mother of a research scientist recently lowered her cholesterol more than 20% without changing her eating habits.

After a visit to her doctor, a Florida woman learned that her cholesterol level was an elevated 308 and she was encouraged to change her eating habits. When she returned 10 weeks later, the doctor was astounded that her cholesterol level had dropped to 243. Asked if she achieved the amazing results just by dieting she replied, "No I didn't diet at all, in fact I ate the things I shouldn't eat like bacon, sausage and ice cream. The only thing I did different was take some tablets my son gave me."

The woman's son is Dr. William Morris, director of research and development at National Dietary Research, an organization that seeks nutritional solutions to health problems. Dr. Morris admits that the tablets called Vancol 5000 were designed as a dietary supplement to be used with a low fat diet plan. "She just wanted to put the tablets to the test," says Dr. Morris. "Of course I was pleased with the results she achieved, but now were working on reducing some of the fat in her diet to lower her cholesterol even further."

Vancol 5000 is a chewable food tablet that contains extracts from foods known to lower cholesterol. According to the exclusive distributor for Vancol 5000, inquiries about the new discovery are being received from all over the country and has peaked the interest of doctors used to prescribing expensive cholesterol lowering drugs. A 30 day supply of the Vancol 5000 Cholesterol Lowering Plan is only $29.98.

Nashville sound: They don't throw beer cans at Travis Tritt anymore

By JOE EDWARDS
Associated Press Writer

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Halfway through his hard-driving country-rock concert, Travis Tritt calls a halt to the frenzy on stage created by the reverberat-ing electric guitars and booming drums.

The screaming fans in his predominantly young audience calm down as he pulls up a stool and begins playing an acoustic guitar.

He gazes out on the 10,000 people in the audience and thinks back to four years ago when things were different.

"I was lucky to draw 25 people on a Saturday night," Tritt says later. "I've played in places where if they don't like your song, they throw beer cans at you."

Those dues-paying days in American Legion halls around Atlanta are gone but not forgotten as Tritt emerges as one of country music's young guns. His hit record with the memorable title, "Here's a Quarter (Call Someone Who Cares)," earned him two Grammy nominations this year, and in the spring, he served as co-host of the Academy of Country Music Awards Show.

And an additional hit song, "Bible Belt," was featured in the hit comedy "My Cousin Vinny."

Tritt, 29, sips a beer while sitting at a small table in a front room at the Music Row office of his publicist. He mulls over his fast-breaking career as he sits near a life-size cutout of another country star, Randy Travis, who was at the same stage of his career just four years ago.

Tritt has recorded two LPs that sold 1 million copies, helping him to become the youngest regular performer on the Grand Ole Opry.

Last fall the Country Music Association voted him the winner of the Horizon Award as most promising performer. It's an honor won in previous years by Garth Brooks, Clint Black and Travis.

It's clear that Tritt made a wise move six years ago when he quit his $400-a-week job as an assistant manager for a Marietta, Ga., company that distributed heating and air-conditioning equipment.

Tritt wanted to concentrate on singing. He eventually earned a recording contract with Warner Bros. and his honky-tonk style carried him to the top of the country charts and helped him become a major concert draw.

His lyrical themes are similar to those of another Dixie dynamo, Hank Williams Jr. Tritt often sings about carefree Southern life, the joy of driving pickup trucks and so forth. And he sings and writes about heartache, too. He composed "Here's a Quarter (Call Someone Who Cares)" as a joke about being divorced twice by age 26.

"So many people grasped the whole idea," he said. "Everybody wanted to tell their boss, their wife, their boyfriend, their girlfriend, 'Here's a quarter ...'"

He has become a box-office baron, performing more than 200 concerts in the past year. An estimated 75 percent of his turnout is females under age 25.

A May show in Murfreesboro, Tenn., outdrew one by rap star Hammer in the same arena the night before.

Many of his concerts have been with another young and magnetic country performer, Marty Stuart.

They have called their performances "the no hats tour" — a gentle poke at such country stars as Brooks, Black and others who wear cowboy hats.

Tritt and Stuart don't. Tritt offers three reasons why he doesn't: "First, I never thought I looked good in one. Second, I've got all my hair. Third, we wanted to look a little bit different."

Their duet record, "This One's Gonna Hurt You," developed into a summer hit. Among Tritt's earlier hits are: "Nothing Short of Dying," "Anymore," "Help Me Hold On," "I'm Gonna Be Somebody," "Drift Off to Dream," "The Whiskey Ain't Workin'."

"I like a song that stirs your emotions — makes you laugh, cry, mad, reflect, get up and do something," he says.

With his neatly trimmed beard, shoulder-length hair and black leather attire, Tritt is regarded as one of country music's sex symbols.

"I've never thought of myself that way," he says. "I was reclusive, more of an introvert in school."

Travis Tritt paid his dues as a poorly paid nightclub singer in the Atlanta area before realizing success.

Lamb lives the dream

NEW YORK (AP) — His first name is Wally, not be confused with Walter. His last name is Lamb, not be mistaken with Mitty. Wally Lamb is living the dream, not just dreaming it.

Lamb is a bearded, soft-spoken 41-year-old high school teacher from Willimantic, Conn., and his first novel, "She's Come Undone," is out this month amid much fanfare in the publishing industry and in Hollywood.

"It hasn't sunk in yet," he said. "I still think this is a fantasy." "She's Come Undone" is a gritty, black-humored, coming-of-age story with a twist. It's about a woman, about the inside of a woman's head. But it was written by a man.

The story follows Dolores Price from 1956 to 1989, tracing her tumultuous life and struggles with obesity, bulimia, rape and abortion. The character's experiences are detailed graphically, emotionally — and convincingly.

"I had two older sisters and they loomed large in my childhood," said Lamb, who's married and the father of two young sons. "I had a very female-centered childhood."

The story begins the day a TV set is delivered to Dolores' house. The impact of television on baby boomers colors the novel. Lamb still remembers the day his family got a television and how it changed their lives.

On Memorial Day, a month before the publication of "She's Come Undone," Lamb cleaned out his parents' attic. In an eerie coincidence, he found the old Emerson black-and-white set that helped inspire the novel.

Lamb's no different from the legions of people who think they have it in them to write a novel — except that he did it. And he's no different from those who manage to get a first novel published — except he got paid in six figures.

"I didn't have any thoughts about writing fiction," said Lamb, who has taught writing for 20 years at his alma mater, Norwich Free Academy.

"But I started in the summer of 1981. I can pinpoint the day. It was the day my son was born. I was in the delivery room all day. I suddenly started hearing this wiseguy teen-ager voice in my head. It was like what happens with dreams. If you don't write them down fast, they disappear."

Lamb wrote his novel and got it published the old-fashioned way. Unlike one-time first novelists like Jay McInerney, who was mentored by Raymond Carver, or Tama Janowitz, who hung out with Andy Warhol, Lamb had no connections.

He laughs out loud at the very thought. "I'm fairly ignorant of the business end of writing and literary tradition," he said. "I kind of stumbled and fumbled."

Even though he's met with actress Marilu Henner, who was interested in the book as a film project for herself, and is featured in an upcoming spread in People magazine, Lamb revels in smaller victories.

"I hardly ever come to Manhattan but this last time I hailed a cab and it actually pulled over," he said. "It was a real triumph."

Lamb has spent almost his entire life in the area where he lives today. He calls it "the humble part of Connecticut."

"I was always very envious of people who live those lives," said Lamb, referring to more adventurous souls.

Lamb said he's so "insular and non-worldly" that he had an anxiety attack while crossing into Vermont en route to begin a graduate program in writing.

"I saw the sign saying Vermont and almost turned back," he said.

Fortunately, for Lamb, he pressed on. At Vermont College, he showed some of his short stories to "some woman in Coke-bottle glasses who said this is a novel. If I'd known then what was in store for me, I would have run screaming."

Does single European market mean a homogenized culture?

By TED GOLDMAN
Associated Press Writer

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — In pursuing their goal of a single, borderless market, European Community bureaucrats churn out regulations on everything from fruit juice to animal rights, touching nearly every aspect of life.

They insist the regulations are necessary if the single market is to take effect in January, as scheduled.

Critics warn that, in their zeal, the bureaucrats may create a bland, standardized Europe, the rich regional diversity of its 338 million citizens sacrificed on the altar of harmony.

Thousands of directives try to describe such simple objects as jam, fruit juice and cotton thread precisely. Among them is a 52-word definition of the "foodstuff which is produced by the honey bee."

"Sometimes these Eurocrats may be a little too quick to regulate," said Finn Laursen, a professor at the European Institute of Public Administration in Maastricht, Netherlands.

European Community officials scoff at the misgivings. "That's a lot of rubbish," said Etienne Reuter, an adviser to Jean Dondelinger, the commissioner of cultural affairs. "One of our goals is to preserve the wealth of diversity in Europe."

The EC has doubled in membership since its founding in 1952 as a tariff-free coal and steel zone for six West European countries. Its ambitions have grown even faster, and the Eurocrats now issue regulations on many health and social issues.

At a meeting in Maastricht in December, EC leaders signed a treaty on European Union that commits members to a shared monetary policy and single currency by 1999. The agreement also envisions a joint foreign and security policy, and eventually, a common defense.

For now, the significant date is Jan. 1, when borders between all 12 member states will disappear, allowing people and products to move freely within the community with no customs controls. The members are Belgium, Britain, Denmark, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal and Spain.

To accomplish the single market, the EC has been harmonizing standards for myriad products — making it possible for consumers in Portugal, for example, to know the quality of the Greek chocolate bar they are eating.

Supporters say such attention to detail may improve quality and health standards. But it also may kill off regional products and customs that fall outside the guidelines.

The European Commission, the community's executive agency, already has ordered much lower tar levels for cigarettes, ignoring the preference in such countries as Denmark for strong-tasting, high-tar varieties.

"I think it's reaching the point where it's unsatisfying to smoke because the taste has more or less disappeared," said Karl Johan Levisen, a spokesman for Scandinavian Tobacco Co. in Copenhagen. He said the EC has no business regulating Danish tastes.

French farmers were up in arms earlier this year over a regulation setting minimum bacteria levels for cheese made with raw milk. They say it threatens such classic cheeses as brie and Camembert.

Even Prince Charles of Britain entered the fray, declaring excessive bureaucratic regulation to be spreading like "uncontrollable bacteria."

French cheese is not the first product to feel the power of the bureaucrats. Other symbols of national culture that have come under attack include sausages and prawn-flavored potato chips, or crisps, in Britain and home-brewed wine in Spain.

Commission officials deny malicious intent. "The idea that we here in Brussels are working so that special national products will not be allowed is nonsense," said Martin Bangemann, who is overseeing the single-market plan.

Many analysts feel the greatest threat to European diversity is not the community itself, but the large trans-European companies it fosters.

As companies expand their markets, they must appeal to a broader common denominator, blending differences in one big melting pot, said Eric Corijn, a Belgian philosopher who studies the EC's impact on daily life.

"Diversity is not a product of market forces," he said. "The result of pure market laws is a flattening out of diversity."

One custom under threat, Corijn said, is the revered siesta in Spain, where stores and companies take a three-hour break for lunch and reopen from 5 to 8 p.m.

"International firms want homogenization," he said. "The German manager wants to be able to call his Spanish colleague at work and find him there, not taking a siesta. The southern way of life, culturally, is under great pressure."

Corijn believes even bullfighting may disappear as the European Commission takes an increasingly strong stand on animal rights.

Fears of a homogenized Europe have prompted a strong reaction in the other direction, analysts say.

Regional and provincial governments are gaining power. There is renewed interest among the Irish, Basques and others in their own cultures and languages.

The EC has a special division for the community's 50 regions, many of which straddle national borders, and the commission has backed away from its earlier regulatory mania. When possible, it leaves decisions to local, regional or national governments.

"In the beginning, the EC was promoting unification and harmonization," said Jean-Claude Burgelman, chairman of the Center for the Study of New Media and Information Technology in Brussels. "Now, even they acknowledge there's no such thing as one European culture."

Not even die-hard Eurocrats talk about the United States of Europe anymore.

"Homogenization would be a crime against nature," said Willy De Clercq, a self-described "Eurofanatic" and former commissioner of foreign affairs.

Burgelman summed up with an example: "They tried for 50 years to make a common Yugoslav identity. Now they're starting to realize you can't."

Jan Wustenberghs of the Belgian Standard Institute looks over some of the many files compiled in Belgium alone for drawing up standards for products ranging from washing machines to plastic tubes as part of the European Community's single market. The deadline for achieving the borderless community of European nations is Jan. 1.

Standard-setters look at everything

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — It is a world filled with strange acronyms, white-coated technicians study everything from the sudsing quality of laundry detergent to the molecular structure of a steel beam.

One of them is Alan Bryden of the French National Testing Laboratory in Paris, one of hundreds of labs that test products against European Community specifications.

Without common European standards, how will consumers in Britain know how well a Greek washing machine washes? How can Danish engineers calculate the strength of German steel?

"If a company wants to export something to another country, and that country has different standards for that product, then that's a barrier to trade," said Stewart Sanson, spokesman for the European Committee for Standardization.

On a recent day, Bryden tested a diaper's power of absorption, using what he called "standard pee ... a liquid which reproduces the characteristics of human urine."

For testing a washer, there is, of course, standard dirt. "We take square pieces of linen dirtied in a standard way by standard stains — chocolate, ink, blood and egg yolk — and put them in a washing machine," Bryden explained.

But will electrical plugs ever be the same?

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Among the great annoyances for travelers in Europe are electrical sockets, plugs and voltages that change at almost every border.

Razors and other small items have a Europlug that fits any socket in the European Community, but large appliances such as washing machines and televisions still require bulky transformers or complicated adapters.

In putting Europe onto a standard system, "you are speaking about astronomical figures," said Joseph Kestens, whose agency writes electrical regulations.

As an example, he offered Belgium, where the average home has 18 outlets and 30 plugs. That means nearly 100 million plugs to change.

East Texas family yields to lure of dark forest, bayou

By RICHARD STEWART
Houston Chronicle

KOUNTZE (AP) — Even when James Overstreet lived in the Houston suburbs, assembling computers for AT&T in Katy, he was a country man under the skin, a Big Thicket man yearning to go home.

The lure was strong. Overstreet's people — going all the way back to the 1840s — lived in that massive, crepuscular forest north and east of Houston, and Overstreet had grown up there.

Thus, it was hardly surprising when the communications giant closed its local plant in 1987 that Overstreet packed up his wife, Nelda, and returned.

"I feel at home here," Overstreet said. "No other place in the country has this combination of life."

As a young man, Overstreet left the woods for lucrative work in Houston. Like other youngsters around Kountze, he said, he "wanted to find out what was on the other side of Pine Island Bayou."

His wife noted with some irony: "I married a woodsman, and he took me off to the city."

They bought a house in Galena Park and reared a daughter, but, Mrs. Overstreet recalled: "We never spent a weekend in Houston."

Today, Overstreet, a sinewy 48-year-old who hides his bald pate beneath a gimme cap, pilots a tour boat, leading wide-eyed city slickers through the moss-draped bayous of his beloved Thicket.

Thrice daily he makes the run up the Neches River from near Evadale, following the old steamboat routes past beaver-gnawed trees and silvery sandbars.

Added to those are once-a-month moonlight cruises and special tours for photographers, fishermen or wildlife lovers.

That's his living — his wife is a teacher at Silsbee High School — but his commitment to the swamps and woods is still more profound.

He's a student of the Thicket — but his knowledge is born of quiet understanding, not books.

Asked if he's a botanist, he laconically responded: "No, but I'm a good Baptist."

When AT&T shut down its Katy plant, the Overstreets had the option of relocating to Parsippany, N.J. The decision was obvious.

"He wouldn't have lasted long in New Jersey," Mrs. Overstreet said.

Unlike most children of the late 20th century, Overstreet and his wife never had lost touch with the old ways.

Years before the move, the couple had acquired 100 acres on the Hardin-Tyler county line. Through careful questioning of Overstreet's father, Clyde — born in 1911 — they retrieved vestiges of a simpler life.

"I wanted my dad to teach me all the things he'd learned from the old-timers," Overstreet said.

"I told him, 'Dad, I want you to show me all the old ways of doing things that your father taught you.'"

They butchered a hog, boiling tubs of water in the yard to help scrape the hair off. Then they cooked up chitterlings over an outdoor fire in a big iron kettle and rendered out 5 gallons of lard.

"We didn't ruin our health by eating any of the lard," Mrs. Overstreet said. Some went to friends, some to make soap, some was left to go rancid.

They split logs into rails, using a mallet and wooden wedges made from the iron-hard wood of a persimmon tree.

The elder Overstreet taught his son to dry the inside of a raw cowhide with alum and scrape and work it until it was pliable.

"Now, if you want to put a hide bottom on a chair, you put a fresh green hide on there and let it dry out hard and tight," Overstreet said.

The most pressing challenge, though, came in the construction of their own home.

The first Overstreets in Texas, arriving from Alabama, likely built shelters from pine trees, using only the simplest of tools.

Today's Overstreets bought a do-it-yourself carpentry manual. Their home at the end of a back road is an unpretentious affair. A wood-frame structure, it has two bedrooms and wraparound porches — observation decks from which to watch cavorting raccoons.

It's based on an adaptation of plans for a child's playhouse. It's contemporary enough to have air conditioning but rustic enough to rely on wood-burning stoves for heat.

Mrs. Overstreet drew the plans — she now uses them as a teaching aid in her geometry classes — and supervised the building.

Diplomats get down to earth in Castro's farm program

SMILE OF VICTORY, Cuba (AP) — Cuba's ambassador to Brazil has temporarily swapped his mansion for a top bunk in a room he shares with seven other white-collar workers-turned-field hands.

Cuba's deputy trade representative has left his office for two weeks to clear weeds from sweet potato fields at this model agricultural farm 25 miles southwest of Havana.

Other government diplomats have been transferred to state farms for two years — and some maybe permanently — following Fidel Castro's push to feed his people in Cuba's toughest year since the 1959 revolution.

It's not known how willingly such officials have gone back to the land; the officials interviewed all asserted they were happy, but dissent is discouraged in Cuba.

Until recent years, Communist officials relied on food imports and neglected most farm production other than sugar, said Eugenio R. Balari, president of a government institute that monitors internal demand.

Nowadays, Cuba's shortage-stricken society has no other choice — and white-collar workers are joining the farmers. Balari said Cuba has broken with tradition this year to try to squeeze out a major summer harvest of corn, green beans, yucca, eggplant and bananas to supplement carrots and potatoes already picked.

Even at the Smile of Victory farm, a favorite of Castro's in one of Cuba's most fertile plains, workers must increase yields with less fertilizer and less mechanized equipment.

On a government-organized tour Thursday, farmhand-officials proudly showed new irrigation techniques and alternative methods intended to get around the fuel shortage, such as using Brahmin bulls to plow canefields.

Dressed in a plain white T-shirt, jeans and sandals after picking bananas all morning, Ambassador Jorge

Belanos Suarez compared his digs in Brazil — five bedrooms and a pool — with his austere bunkhouse at the farm. Belanos said the one week of manual labor has helped clear his mind of diplomatic work but added: "It's very intense."

Raul Taladrid, a government trade vice-minister, stopped weeding the green-and-purple sweet potato plants to declare: "I'm a city boy all the way."

Taladrid, 55, took off his work gloves to show hands stained by the copper soil. He carried a small hoe, a tin cup at his waist for water, and wore a baseball cap as protection against the midday Caribbean sun.

A veteran of two other two-week farm stints last year, Taladrid had positive words for the food, the videos — the farmhands watched "The Return of Jack the Ripper" the night before — and "a little rum that some boys brought along."

Increasing numbers of government officials are in for longer stays.

Omar Torres, a former diplomat in the African nations of Cape Verde and Equatorial Guinea, has been serving as the farm's chief of production for the past 20 months. He's been separated from his family for 12-day work stretches.

Torres, 39, estimated that more than a third of Foreign Ministry workers have been retrained for other areas, including agriculture, following the Cold War.

Other ministries are trying to push highly educated employees back into the fields with ideological appeals to save the revolution. The government uses more visceral tactics with youth, promoting the farms' hearty food and occasional coed bunkhouses.

Torres' stint ends in September, but with the uncertainty that clouds so much of Cuba these days, he said he does know what his next assignment will be.

Agriculture Department spent $750,000 to spruce up offices, documents show

By JENNIFER DIXON
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Agriculture Department recently spent $750,000 renovating the offices of several top employees — installing two kitchenettes, hanging new drapes and building scalloped and arched cornices above the windows, USDA documents show.

Some of the money also went to pay overtime for the construction workers called to move offices from one end of USDA's Administration Building to another, according to documents obtained by The Associated Press under the Freedom of Information Act.

A USDA spokesman said the renovations were the first of their kind since 1972 and that the wiring and telephone lines desperately needed upgrading.

But consumer and farm activists questioned Agriculture Secretary Edward Madigan's timing, saying it is inappropriate to spend such sums when one in 10 Americans is on food stamps and many family farmers are struggling to keep their land.

USDA's documents show Madigan had a shower installed in his suite, but his spokesman said the secretary paid the $3,660 bill with his own money. The price tag for the rest of the renovations in Madigan's offices came to $20,521.

The renovations began in October, several months after Madigan took over as secretary, and most were finished by March.

Madigan's press secretary, Roger Runnigen — whose own suite of offices cost $43,085 to fix up — says the renovation plans had been on the books since the early 1980s.

The building's central section, which houses the secretary's offices, is 60 years old, while the east and west wings are 90 years old, Runnigen said.

"We have cracked and deteriorating pipes, air conditioning units that were in poor condition that allowed humidity to creep in and deteriorate walls," Runnigen said. "There were cracked walls. Those things had to be done. ... The drapes were more than 20 years old, in most cases, and some of them were moldy from the lack of humidity control."

Secondly, he said, the renovations allowed various administrators to move their scattered staffs into the same area.

Sen. Tom Daschle, D-S.D., blasted the spending and said, "The only thing that ought to be remodeled in the Department of Agriculture is their farm policy."

"If they were as determined to get a decent price as they are fancy offices, we'd have happy farmers instead of happy bureaucrats," he said.

Katherine Ozer, director of the National Family Farm Coalition, also criticized the spending at a time "when other important programs are being eliminated, postponed or ignored on the basis of the budget."

"Madigan says increasing spending on welfare programs is no way to promote a vibrant farm economy. But how is spending $750,000 on major renovations of offices that didn't need it ... going to contribute to a vibrant farm economy?" said Rod Leonard, executive director of the Community Nutrition Institute, who worked for USDA in the 1960s and regularly visits the building.

"Tell that to the farmers who are losing their farms because of foreclosure," said Leonard.

Women emerge as political power during 20th century

By JOHN BARBOUR
AP Newsfeatures Writer

The small voices crying in the political wilderness after the birth of the 20th century have swelled into a roar that this election season promises to redefine the nation's governmental, social and legislative agendas.

American women voters are mounting a charge on the bastions of political power, mobilized by such concerns as abortion, sexual harassment, pay inequities, education and health insurance.

Even before the November national voting rolls around, some male defenders of the fortress have fallen, while others have belatedly embraced these "female issues."

A hundred years from now, historians may concoct a thousand theories as to how it happened. Someone will say the dishwasher freed the woman from the kitchen. Others will say higher education or Susan B. Anthony or Betty Friedan or consciousness-raising.

Still others may list as the single most important event the Senate Judiciary Committee hearings in 1992 at which Professor Anita Hill leveled charges of sexual harassment against Judge Clarence Thomas, the Supreme Court nominee.

But there will be no denying that the 20th century has been the century of the woman's emergence as a political factor in the United States.

The question, however, will remain: Why did it take so long?

It was in 1920 that the American woman was granted the right to vote. Then came 72 years of housewifery, stymied careers, stifled desires, whimpers from the corner of the social and political closet.

But not anymore.

Today, encouraged by their pivotal strength in presidential polls, women are voting more as a bloc, ready to do what old Sam Gompers once recommended for labor: reward friends, punish enemies.

They currently hold two of 100 Senate seats, 29 of 435 House seats, three of 50 governorships. No one can guess what their growing political strength will win them this time around.

But the numbers command respect.

There are 18 women running for the U.S. Senate, more than 155 for the House of Representatives, seven for governorships. Ten years ago there were three for the Senate, none successful; 55 for the House, 21 successful.

That year was 1982, the same year that the Equal Rights Amendment was allowed to die for lack of interest, three states short of ratification. It was reintroduced the next year, and women began to find their political voice.

"What's happened since the 19th Amendment was added to the Constitution is that women have been struggling against the legal, social and cultural obstacles which made it difficult for them to be prominent political actors," says Professor James Foster, political scientist at Oregon State University. "Now we're beginning to see that work begin to bear fruit."

"These women running this year have spent decades of their lives working through the male ranks, essentially doing their apprenticeships, learning the political ropes, and now they are saying, 'It's our turn.'"

Professor Herma Kay Hill of the Bolt School of Law at the University of California-Berkeley says, "People are aware that something new is going on. For the first time I don't think you see women running as individual candidates. You see a movement that is garnering support."

The 19th Amendment did not spark women's emergence as a political animal.

Students of women's history concede that suffrage seemed ineffective because women would vote the same way men did, and indeed they did in the first presidential elections after the 19th Amendment passed.

But now women are responding, not as singular citizens, but as a bloc with its own agenda.

They are dissecting American society and finding it wanting. So-called women's issues are on the tips of their tongues.

"More women are speaking out for day care for children, health care, divorce law reform, abortion, all the things women have been involved in," says Foster. "I think we will see the gradual emergence of women's concerns to the forefront of American politics."

The breach between men and women rises from old assumptions that have become ingrained in society, that women are physically weaker than men, that they were born to be the nurturers of society, the bearers of children, the caretakers of the aged and the sick.

In early Western society, single women had more rights than married women. When a woman married, as English common law suggested, the husband and wife became as one, and that one was the husband.

Abigail Adams, brilliant and outspoken, outlined female frustration in a letter to her husband, John Adams, second president of the United States:

"While you are proclaiming peace and good will to men, emancipating all nations, you insist upon retaining absolute power over wives."

That sums up the basic attitude that the 20th-century woman inherited and fought against.

Women historians point out that that marital violence is still legal in some states. In the old days such laws said a woman could be beaten with a stick provided it was no thicker than a man's thumb — the so-called "rule of thumb."

One of the reasons the women's vote has been difficult to mobilize, says political scientist Foster, is not necessarily men per se, but "a particular set of values and assumptions we label male," instituted by males long since dead as a way of perpetuating male dominance. The problem is that most present-day males — and females — bought the idea even though they wondered why.

Male values are considered positive in the political field, female values are not, and the trouble is they have become ingrained "and taken for granted as socialized sex roles."

What surprises Foster is that for the last 72 years women accepted the idea that they "need to be the angels in the house, they need to be the power behind the throne, they need to be the bearers and rearers of children, and that's where they believe their power lies."

He cites a book by Christine Luker of the University of California-Berkeley, "Abortion And The Politics Of Motherhood," which says that the bottom-line difference between pro-choice women and anti-abortion women is the differences in what they conceive a woman to be:

"What it means to be a woman, what it means to be a mother, what it means to be part of a family, what it means to be part of a society."

And women pass that concept on to their daughters. "But what has changed is that there is a growing group of women who have the skills and conviction that in addition to rearing children who will run the world, women themselves can run the world," Foster says.

That is little changed from what Betty Friedan wrote in 1962 in "The Feminine Mystique" of disquieted American women suffering from "the problem with no name."

"It is no longer possible today to blame the problem on loss of femininity, to say that education and independence and equality with men have made American women unfeminine," she wrote. "I have heard so many women try to deny this dissatisfied voice within themselves because it does not fit the pretty picture of femininity the experts have given them. ..."

"If I am right, the problem that has no name stirring in the minds of so many American women today is not a matter of loss of femininity or too much education, or the demands of domesticity. ... It may well be the key to our future as a nation and a culture. We can no longer ignore that voice within women that say, 'I want something more than my husband and my children and my home.'"

Recently, New York Gov. Mario Cuomo said he admired the success the United States has had as a nation, considering that it did so with one arm tied behind its back, that arm being women and minorities.

British Museum deciphers Chichimec manuscripts

LONDON (AP) — New insights into the ancient Chichimec civilization in Mexico have been discovered in manuscript fragments assembled in the British Museum.

Gordon Brotherston, a professor at Essex University, said the manuscripts push back the origins of the Chichimec civilization from the 11th century A.D., as archaeologists previously believed, to the seventh or eighth century.

"It's important for Mexican history because the Chichimecs were not regarded as a cultured people, and they tend to get a bit suppressed by the Aztecs," Brotherston said.

The discovery helps to clarify the relationship between the Chichimecs and the Toltecs who followed them, and who were in turn displaced by the Aztecs.

The Aztec empire was overthrown within two years of the Spanish invasion of 1519.

Indications of the Chichimec historic period appear in similar documents in other institutions but specialists were reluctant to decode them, considering the information "a fanciful casting back," Brotherston said.

"But a reference to 28 successive generations before the 16th century in the British Museum document puts the Chichimec period about the seventh century A.D.," he said.

The museum acquired the manuscripts at the turn of the century from a British collector who is believed to have bought them from a Mexican soldier, who perhaps took them as loot from an Indian village.

Brotherston said the significance of the manuscripts went unrecognized because they were in 14 fragments, encased in glass frames edged with black leather. "I worked on them 15 years ago when they were under glass but gave it up because it was so awkward," said Brotherston, who described himself as an expert on scripts and texts.

Three of the fragments were put together to make a single document, eight feet long and 18 inches wide; six of the other 11 fragments made a smaller document. They are written on paper made from tree bark, Brotherston said.

The documents are in a form of pictorial writing and illustrate names, words or ideas. The images include warriors, bows and arrows, scenes of fighting, priests, nobles, ancestors, footprints and ropes.

The main document was written in the 16th century, some years after the Spanish conquest, and includes passages written in European Latin script from the Indian Nahuatl language, which is still spoken in Mexico.

"There was some interchange of language because the Spanish learned Nahuatl in order to more effectively undermine the Indians' religion, and the Indians explained their drawings to them in Nahuatl," Brotherston said.

He said the main document describes a settlement founded at a place called Itzquintepec, about 150 miles northeast of present-day Mexico City, by two Chichimec leaders.

One was called Tzinauotl, meaning The Water Monster Who Drowns You, and the other was Tsitsiquil, roughly translated as The Ripper.

Brotherston, 52, has been studying Nahuatl for more than 20 years since spending a year at the Ibero-American Institute in West Berlin in 1970.

The Chichimec manuscripts will be on show through Sept. 6 at the British Museum.

Book takes different look at Civil War

WASHINGTON (AP) — Blue and black clouds brood darkly over Malvern Hill near Richmond, Va. A cannon glows deep red in that place where 5,400 Civil War soldiers died defending the Confederacy.

These somber images, captured through the lens of photographer Sam Abell, join others, light and dark, stormy and deceptively placid, in the new National Geographic Society book "The Blue and The Gray."

Abell, who spent the last four years photographing the battlefields of the nation's bloodiest conflict, reports that the landscape is not heroic. But heroic deeds echo through his photos of those places.

The new book will be available Friday as part of a multifaceted National Geographic Society look at the Civil War.

Writer Thomas B. Allen lets the men who were there tell their own stories.

"Writing about war, to me, means writing about soldiers, the ones who fire the guns," Allen said.

He looks at the battle of Antietam through the eyes of Thomas Galwey of the 8th Ohio Infantry.

Back and forth, Union and Confederate soldiers battled over the field of green corn until "it looked as if it had been struck by a storm of bloody hail."

Going into the battle, Galwey noticed that the grass around him seemed to be moving. But when he told another soldier that it must be crickets, the man laughed, and Galwey then saw the grass was moving because so many spent bullets were dropping around them.

Abell's look at the scene of that battle near Sharpsburg, Md., where nearly 23,000 Americans were killed or wounded, caught first light of morning flashing off the star on a memorial to soldiers of the 128th Pennsylvania, a five-week old unit that stood up well to fire.

And viewing the battlefield from above, Abell found the plowed furrows of a farm field flowing around stony outcrops upon which stand memorials to those who fought and died.

Malvern Hill, scene of the Civil War's Seven Days' battles, outside Richmond, Va., is shown in this photograph by Sam Abell. Abell has spent the last four years returning to the scenes of America's bloodiest war and his photos are included in the book The Blue and the Gray, being issued by the National Geographic Society as a part of a multi-faceted look at the Civil War.

It had been farmland back in September 1862 when the war came to Antietam Creek, Allen notes.

The volume includes both Abell's current photos and visual images of the carnage taken at the time of the battle.

The fields where hundreds of thousands died are not landscapes of heroic size and scope, Abell explained at a press preview of the new book. So the 25-year

National Geographic photographer said he tried to use light and weather to dramatize the land and what happened there.

A pale, narrow line of distant lightning divides a photo of the flat green battlefield at Manassas, Va. On the right, there is open land as might have been seen by soldiers at the war's first battle. Just to the left, stands the statue of Confederate hero Stonewall Jackson.

In another Abell look at Manassas, a large dogwood spreads wide its pale white blossoms, nearly obscuring the dark forms of cannon lurking beneath. Sharp contrasts of sunshine and shadow mark Abell's scenes of Chancellorsville shot from above. One image shows a line of artillery in a clearing on a ridge; the second, a small, walled cemetery, shaded by a few trees.

A log snag stretches into the river and skinny trees reach upwards in the morning mist, obscuring nearly two-thirds of a photo taken at Pittsburg Landing, Tenn., a haunting image of the spot known as Shiloh — a place where nearly 20,000 Americans fell.

Amtrak shows interest in old train stations

NEW YORK (AP) — For years, the grand old stations built in the glory days of railroading were regarded as fossils of the age of the iron horse. Now, Amtrak is bringing them back to life.

In cities across the country, the national passenger railroad — often with help from developers and community groups — is restoring historic stations to their former glory rather than abandoning them for new buildings.

And in some cases, Amtrak is even closing the buildings it built in the past two decades and returning to the old. The railroad's aim: to cut costs and attract more passengers.

Washington's Union Station reopened in 1988 as a combination shopping mall and railroad depot. For years, its spectacular concourse had sat crumbling and empty while passengers used a cramped and harshly lit room behind it.

In Cincinnati, Amtrak has moved back into the Union Terminal that it abandoned 20 years ago for a cinderblock building on the edge of town. Similar moves are being considered in Richmond, Va., and Jacksonville, Fla.

And in New York, where the grandest old station of all — Pennsylvania Station — was torn down nearly 30 years ago, Amtrak is hoping to revive some of its former glory by moving into a colonnaded post office across the street.

"What was considered ugly and Victorian 20 years ago is now becoming beautiful again," said Scott Leonard, assistant director of the National Association of Railroad Passengers, a Washington-based lobbying group.

But Amtrak officials say beauty is only one of the things they are seeking by their renewed interest in old stations.

They're also looking for downtown locations where passengers can connect to local buses and subways; buildings that can handle today's larger number of rail passengers; and, in many cases, ones that will be cheaper to operate.

That in itself is quite a turnaround from Amtrak's early years, when the railroad couldn't afford the huge, underused and poorly maintained stations it inherited from private railroads, said Don Pross, Amtrak's director of real estate development.

"These huge behemoths became horribly uneconomical," Pross said by telephone from Amtrak's headquarters in Washington. "What made sense for us was to abandon that huge facility and build a smaller facility."

Now, Amtrak often works with private developers who install shops or other amenities in a station and take on most of the cost of renovating and maintaining it.

In Washington, for example, Amtrak paid only $70 million of the $160 million cost of renovating Union Station. Much of the rest was paid by a developer, which installed a shopping mall in the station's concourse and waiting room.

The shopping mall quickly became one of Washington's most popular, and rail ridership increased by 12 percent to 20 percent after the renovation, said Luba Drahosz, Amtrak's manager of facilities and capital planning.

Cincinnati Union Terminal, an Art Deco structure often cited as among America's most beautiful train stations, was the first to be abandoned by Amtrak, in 1972.

It reopened about a year ago as the home of the Cincinnati Historical Society and the city's natural history museum. Amtrak moved its trains back into a corner of the building about four months ago.

Drahosz said it was too early to tell whether the change had affected ridership. Cincinnati is visited by only six Amtrak trains a week, and they generally stop in the middle of the night.

"It is a much more welcoming building and a much cleaner building," said Lois Smith, manager of tourism information for the Cincinnati Convention and Visitors Bureau. "But I don't think the station itself is going to increase travel by rail, even though it's a nicer place."

Amtrak is now looking for developers for the station it wants to open in New York's General Post Office after the Postal Service's new general mail facility opens a few blocks away in 1993.

Walesa's silent courier remains mystery to all

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Who is that stern, bearded figure shadowing President Lech Walesa at every public appearance? He was Walesa's chauffeur; now he is Poland's secretary of state, and maybe there is more to his story.

To hear defectors from Walesa's camp tell it, Mieczyslaw Wachowski is uncouth and arrogant, a cunning plotter who manipulates Walesa as "the dark mirror of the president's soul." Some even claim he is a Communist stooge, virtually ruling Poland from two steps behind the president.

Wachowski says nothing. He refuses to grant interviews, doesn't return phone calls and won't answer questions submitted in writing. The president's office will not provide the secretary of state's resume or comment on his role.

Walesa has been forced to defend him publicly and promise to produce him for journalists — someday. Meanwhile, Wachowski has become among the most scorned individuals in Poland's tumultuous political life, and among the most powerful.

Critics deride the 41-year-old as a man without a past, but it is just his past that has class-conscious Poles sniffing with distaste.

A Marine Academy dropout, Wachowski was working at Baltic port construction sites when he met Walesa, himself a former shipyard electrician, and became his driver during the start of the Solidarity trade union movement in the early 1980s.

He vanished from Walesa's group for seven years, working as a tire-recapper and at a local utility, according to a passport application unearthed by "Nie," the satirical weekly.

Shortly before the November 1990 presidential election, Wachowski reappeared beside Walesa and followed him into the presidential palace. Aides who had stuck with Walesa through the 1980s complained privately of being muscled aside by Wachowski as he moved into power.

As secretary of state, Wachowski oversees military and security matters, joins Walesa on state visits and controls access to the president.

"The very fact that an almost completely unknown person with a strange biography, and without any political or professional qualifications is ... one of the most influential people in the country is alarming at the least," former Secretary of State Jaroslaw Kaczynski, a former Walesa champion, told Jaroslaw Kurski, the president's unauthorized biographer.

"His role in the state is enormous ... He is dangerous and capable of virtually anything," added Lech Kaczynski, Jaroslaw's brother and another ex-Walesa aide.

Snobbery has certainly fueled such speculation, as has Poles' love of intrigue. Perhaps, some theories say, Wachowski holds discrediting information on Walesa.

Yet, his odd presence in Walesa's inner circle, which he shares only with the president's chaplain and press spokesman, shows how Walesa has become increasingly isolated after three years of political quarreling following the fall of Communist rule.

Walesa has characterized the factional fights as creative destruction; his critics say he simply is vain and loathe to tolerate dissent. In April, the Gazeta Wyborcza newspaper, edited by the president's former confidant Adam Michnik, printed a humiliating description of a supposedly erratic, lethargic Walesa hiding behind Wachowski.

"Walesa surrounded himself with yes-men ... His loneliness is tinged with defeat," Arkadiusz Rybicki, Walesa's political adviser for five years, was quoted saying.

"I think he (Wachowski) satisfies Walesa's psychological needs due to his spectacular devotion and uncritical subservience," said Lech Kaczynski.

Wachowski was a target in Walesa's recent battle with right-wing politicians who claimed Communist police agents had infiltrated the presidential chancellery and compromised Walesa himself.

And when Walesa in June picked 32-year-old Waldemar Pawlak from the once Communist-allied Peasant Party to be Poland's prime minister, critics charged Pawlak would have been the figurehead leader of a neo-Communist government under Wachowski's sway. Pawlak failed to form a government and resigned within a month.

Kaczynski, the former secretary of state, had earlier characterized Wachowski as a viper in the palace, trying "to petrify the Communist network of influence in the national power structure."

Wachowski also has been accused of scheming with army officers by controlling promotions and of encouraging Walesa to send a letter congratulating the plotters in last year's abortive Soviet coup.

Walesa and his silent courier seem undeterred by such insinuations as they ride out Poland's political storms together.

Challenged by journalists to defend Wachowski, Walesa said his chief of staff absorbs blows intended for him.

Names in the News

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Bruce Springsteen returned to his native New Jersey for the start of his first U.S. tour in four years — and was briefly booed when he referred to his adopted home of Los Angeles.

The crowd was on its feet during much of Thursday's four-hour concert at Brendan Byrne Arena. But when the Boss introduced "My Home Town" by saying he wrote it in Los Angeles, the audience's familiar shouts of "Brrruuce" turned to boos.

"Get the hostility out now, I can take it," said Springsteen, who rose to fame playing in bars along the New Jersey shore with the E Street Band.

Springsteen, 42, now lives in Southern California — and except for keyboardist Roy Bittan — has replaced the band named for a street in the New Jersey shore town of Belmar.

He ran through decades worth of music, from "Born to Run" to "Glory Days" and "Lucky Town." Springsteen performs in five other cities over the next five weeks. More concerts are expected to be added.
